L. ed. 1152, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 506; Haley v. Kilpatrick, 44 C. C. A. 102, 104 Fed. 647; Hickman v. Ft. Scott, 141 U. S. 416, 35 L. ed. 775, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 9; Kershaw Oil Mill v. National Bank, 126 C. C. A. 559, 209 Fed. 835; Leese v. Clark, 20 Cal. 388; Linkous v. Virginian R. Co. 155 C. C. A. 504, 242 Fed. 916; Mathews v. Columbia Nat. Bank, 40 C. C. A. 444, 100 Fed. 397; Messenger v. Anderson, 96 C. C. A. 445, 171 Fed. 785, 85 C. C. A. 468, 158 Fed. 252, 225 U. S. 436, 56 L. ed. 1152, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 739; Montana Min. Co. v. St. Louis Min. & Mill. Co. 78 C. C. A. 33, 147 Fed. 897; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Hill, 55 C. C. A. 536, 118 Fed. 708; Mutual Reserve Fund L. Asso. v. Ferrenbach, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1163, 75 C. C. A. 304, 144 Fed. 342; National Bank of Commerce v. United States, 140 C. C. A. 219, 224 Fed. 681; New Orleans v. Citizens' Bank, 167 U. S. 371, 42 L. ed. 202, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905; Northern P. R. Co. v. Ellis, 144 U. S. 458, 464, 36 L. ed. 504, 506, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 724; Olsen v. North Pacific Lumber Co. 55 C. C. A. 665, 119 Fed. 77; Old Dominion Copper Min. & Smelting Co. v. Lewisohn, 195 Fed. 641, 120 C. C. A. 392, 202 Fed. 179; Panama R. Co. v. Napier Shipping Co. 166 U. S. 280, 41 L. ed. 1004, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 572; Roberts v. Cooper, 20 How. 467, 15 L. ed. 969; Roth v. Mutual Reserve L. Ins. Co. 89 C. C. A. 262, 162 Fed. 282; Sibbald v. United States, 12 Pet. 488, 9 L. ed. 1167; Wayne County v. Kennicott, 94 U. S. 498, 24 L. ed. 260; Straus v. American Publishers' Asso. 119 C. C. A. 544, 201 Fed. 306; Smith v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 127 C. C. A. 146, 210 Fed. 414, 138 C. C. A. 215, 222 Fed. 667; Standard Sewing Mach. Co. v. Leslie, 55 C. C. A. 323, 118 Fed. 557; Thatcher v. Gottlieb, 8 C. C. A. 334, 19 U. S. App. 469, 59 Fed. 872; Fletcher v. Hickman, 125

C. C. A. 346, 208 Fed. 118; Thompson v. Maxwell Land Grant & R. Co. 168 U. S. 451, 42 L. ed. 539, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 121; United States v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 191 U. S. 84, 48 L. ed. 106, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 33; Re Waterloo Organ Co. 83 C. C. A. 481, 154 Fed. 657; Elliott, App. Proc. p. 490, § 578; Wells, Res Judicata & Stare Decisis, p. 569, § 613.

Rogers, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action against a corporation manufacturing automobiles, and which sold one of its cars to a retail dealer, who resold to the plaintiff. The car was defective, and, while being used by plaintiff, broke down and overturned, seriously injuring the plaintiff, who brought this action to recover damages in the sum of $40,000.

The action was commenced in the supreme court of the state of New York in 1910, and was regularly removed to the United States court for the northern district of New York, where it was tried and judgment obtained in plaintiff's favor in the amount of $8,000. The judgment was brought to this court on writ of error covering some 500 pages. This court reversed the judgment upon the ground that, as no contractual relation existed between plaintiff and defendant, there could be no recovery. L.R.A.1915E, 287, 137 C. C. A. 279, 221 Fed. 801, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 581.

The action was tried again before the court, and without a jury this time, and judgment was entered dismissing the complaint. The trial court found as a fact that the injuries were occasioned by the negligence of defendant, and that plaintiff was free from any contributory negligence, and that the damages amounted to $10,000. The dismissal of the complaint was based on the decision of this court upon the former writ of error, when we held that no contractual relation existed.

The plaintiff, in February, 1909, purchased from the Utica Motor Car Company a Cadillac touring car manufactured by the Cadillac Motor Car Company, a foreign corporation, organized under the laws of the state of Michigan, and having its principal office in Detroit. The Utica Motor Car Company is a dealer in motor cars, and purchased to resell. It was the original vendee or immediate buyer, and plaintiff is the subvendee of the car.

The plaintiff, who was an experienced driver of automobiles, stored the automobile in question for some months. But, after some little previous use of it, he was, on July 31, 1909, driving it on a main public highway and one in good condition at the time. The car was running between 12 and 15 miles an hour, when the front right wheel of the car suddenly and without any notice broke down, and the car turned over on the plaintiff, and, as the trial court found, "cut, mangled, and seriously and permanently injured him." The court also found that plaintiff had not recovered from the injuries which resulted from the accident, and that he never would recover. The finding is that "his face and ear and eye are distorted, and the sight of his one eye is partially destroyed and so injured as to affect the sight of the other; plaintiff's shoulder and ribs were broken; his mouth and face were paralyzed; he cannot work his jaws at all, cannot smile, whistle, nor spit, nor control his lips at all; some of the nerves of his throat are paralyzed; he cannot speak clearly or distinctly; his right ear was torn out and the inner ear fractured. The plaintiff to the present time has been in part unable to do work or to look after his business to any extent; and he never will be able to look after his said business, or to conduct and manage any business. That prior to the time of the said accident plaintiff was in good health, free from pain and suffering, and of the age of forty-four years."

The court has also found as a fact that this automobile was manufactured, assembled, and put on the market by the defendant with a weak, inadequate and defective wheel thereon, and that this defective condition was the proximate cause of the accident, and that the car, when defendant put it on the market, was dangerous to human life and unsafe for use, and that defendant ought to have known it, and, had it exercised ordinary care, would have known it.

The defendant did not manufacture the wheels, but purchased them of another company. The court found that defendant carelessly and negligently failed and omitted to use reasonable inspection and tests to discover the real condition and weakness of the wheels. There were other findings, some of which will be considered in a subsequent part of this opinion.

The amended complaint upon which the present action was tried is the same as that upon which the former action was tried. Nothing has been added to it, and nothing has been subtracted from it. The basis of the action is negligence.<sup>1</sup>

The amended complaint does not contain any allegation of deceit or fraud, and those words are not to be found anywhere therein. There are no allegations that any representations were fraudulently or deceitfully made. The only allegation as to any representation is found in the following: "It [defendant] had represented and declared to such ultimate purchaser, who relied thereon, that the machine was capable of enduring such use and operation, its wheels were the best obtainable, and equal to those of the highest priced cars, made from well-seasoned second-growth hickory, with steel hubs, the spokes special strength, wide spokes of ample dimensions to secure great strength."

The complainant goes on to say that, if the wheels were not as represented, the car would be a deadly instrument. Then it alleges that defendant "carelessly and negligently omitted and failed to" use a reasonable inspection to discover the real condition of the wheels. There is no allegation that any representation was made with a fraudulent intent, and fraudulent intent is, in most jurisdictions, an essential element in every actionable fraud.

As the cause of action stated in <sup>1</sup>"That the defendant, well knowing the premises, and that the said motor vehicle was to be used by the purchaser thereof for the purposes hereinbefore alleged, and to carry passengers, and to run at a considerable speed, wrongfully, negligently, and carelessly put in spokes in the said wheel and in the hub thereof made out of dead, dozy, and rotten timber, which was unfit for that purpose, and was not strong, and was liable to break; that the defendant also wrongfully, negligently, and carelessly bored through five of the ten spokes in said wheel, and put bolts through the same, so that the strength of the same was almost entirely destroyed, and were wholly unable to stand the strain or load which the same were designed to stand and hold, and broke as hereinbefore alleged, and caused said accident, and all through the wrongful, negligent, and careless acts of the defendant.

"That the defendant further negligently painted the said spokes of the said wheel over, and the hub in which the same went, and varnished the same, and thereby concealed from the plaintiff and the purchaser of the said vehicle the condition of the said spokes, and the fact that the said spokes were nearly cut off by the said bolts and were defective, so that this plaintiff was entirely ignorant of the condition of the said wheel and the spokes and the hub thereof, and did not know that the same was constructed of said improper material and timber, and that the strength and efficiency of the same were weakened by the said bolts passing through the said spokes; that the said wheel was constructed negligently, without any notice to this plaintiff, and by reason thereof the said accident was caused, and this plaintiff injured as herein alleged, all through the said wrongful and negligent acts of the defendant, and all to the great damage of this plaintiff in the sum of $40,000. . . ."

And, after stating the representations the defendant was alleged to have made as to the wheels it used in its cars, the amended complaint concludes: "Nevertheless, defendant carelessly and negligently omitted and failed to use reasonable inspection and tests to discover the real condition and weakness of said wheels and the several parts of each of them."

the pleadings is the defendant's negligence, and not defendant's fraud,

Pleading—theory of case—judgment must follow complaint.

whatever judgment is entered must conform to the cause of action stated in the plaintiff's pleadings.

It must conform, not only to the proofs, but to the issues tendered by the pleadings. When a complaint tenders one cause of action, judgment cannot go upon another and different cause of action. But, whatever the cause of action is, it cannot be denied that it is the identical cause of action that was here, and upon which this court passed, when the case was here before; and so far as the evidence or proof in the record is concerned that is in no respect different.

When the second trial was begun, it was stipulated that the testimony introduced by the plaintiff on the first trial should be considered in evidence as the plaintiff's case on the second trial, and that no other testimony should be introduced, except that the plaintiff might introduce the testimony of one additional witness, who was specified, to establish the same facts which that witness had testified to in another case. As matter of fact, however, no such testimony was introduced. The defendant was content to have the case disposed of upon the testimony presented by the plaintiff, and no testimony for defendant is found in the record.

The first time the case was tried by a jury, and the second time, as already stated, by the court. So that we have before us now certain findings of fact which were not in the record when the case was here before. Some of these findings are without warrant, there being nothing in the record to support them; as, for example: "Nevertheless defendant carelessly and negligently failed and omitted to use reasonable inspection and tests to discover the real condition and weakness of the wheels on said machine as herein-after described, and the several parts of each of them, and to conceal any defects in the spokes of the wheels in the said machine so purchased by the plaintiff it painted and varnished the same, so that the defective condition thereof and that the spokes in said wheels were rotten and dozy could not be seen nor determined by the plaintiff or other purchaser by any reasonable inspection."

There is no evidence that the spokes were painted and varnished with intent to conceal their defective condition. That they were painted and varnished the evidence showed, but it did not show the intent. There is evidence showing that paint hardens the surface of hickory spokes and gives them a glossy appearance.

Counsel in the argument to this court put stress upon certain representations made by defendants in their catalogues and literature in reference to the wheels with which their cars are equipped, to the effect, as found by the trial judge, that such wheels were the best obtainable, and equal to those used on the highest priced cars; that they were of the artillery type, made from well-seasoned second-growth hickory, with steel hubs and spokes of ample dimensions to insure great strength. And the judge has found the plaintiff purchased his car relying upon the representations. But this finding clearly cannot change the issue made by the pleadings, which we have already considered.

The question presented, and which this court decided on the former appeal, was whether defendant owed a duty of care to the plaintiff, who was not the immediate purchaser of the car, but a subvendee. This court then held that, as there was no contractual relation between plaintiff and defendant, there could be no recovery. This court, in an opinion written by Judge Ward and concurred in by Judge Lacombe (L.R.A.1915E, 287, 137 C. C. A. 279, 221 Fed. 801, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 581), stated the law governing the liability of manufacturers as follows: "One who manufactures articles inherently dangerous, e. g., poisons, dynamite, gunpowder, torpedoes, bottles of water under gas pressure, is liable in tort to third parties whom they injure, unless he prove that he has exercised reasonable care with reference to the article manufactured. . . . On the other hand, one who manufactures articles dangerous only if defectively made or installed, e. g., tables, chairs, pictures or mirrors hung on the walls, carriages, automobiles, and so on, is not liable to third parties for injuries caused by them, except in case of wilful injury or fraud."

Judge Coxe filed a vigorous dissenting opinion, in the course of which he said: "The principles of law invoked by the defendant had their origin many years ago, when such a delicately organized machine as the modern automobile was unknown. Rules applicable to stagecoaches and farm implements become archaic, when applied to a machine which is capable of running with safety at the rate of 50 miles an hour. I think the law as it exists to-day makes the manufacturer liable if he sells such a machine under a direct or implied warranty that he has made, or thoroughly inspected, every part of the machine, and it goes to pieces because of rotten material in one of its most vital parts, which the manufacturer never examined or tested in any way. If, however, the law be insufficient to provide a remedy for such negligence, it is time that the law should be changed. 'New occasions teach new duties,' situations never dreamed of twenty years ago are now of almost daily occurrence."

Since this court decided this case, when it was here before, the New York court of appeals has decided MacPherson v. Buick Motor Co. 217 N. Y. 382, L.R.A.1916F, 696, 111 N. E. 1050, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 440, 13 N. C. C. A. 1029 (1916). That court affirmed the court below in holding, in a case similar in its facts to the instant case, that the manufacturer of an automobile is not at liberty to put his product on the market without subjecting its component parts to ordinary and simple tests, and is not absolved from the duty of inspection because it buys the wheels from a reputable manufacturer. The court held the manufacturer's liability was not confined to the immediate purchaser, but extended to third persons not in contractual relations with it. In the course of its opinion the court, Judge Cardozo, writing, said: "Beyond all question, the nature of an automobile gives warning of probable danger if its construction is defective. This automobile was designed to go 50 miles an hour. Unless its wheels were sound and strong, injury was almost certain. It was as much a thing of danger as a defective engine for a railroad. The defendant knew the danger. It knew, also, that the car would be used by persons other than the buyer. This was apparent from its size; there were seats for three persons. It was apparent, also, from the fact that the buyer was a dealer in cars, who bought to resell. The maker of this car supplied it for the use of purchasers from the dealer just as plainly as the contractor in Devlin v. Smith [89 N. Y. 470, 42 Am. Rep. 311] supplied the scaffold for use by the servants of the owner. The dealer was indeed the one person of whom it might be said with some approach to certainty that by him the car would not be used. Yet the defendant would have us say that he was the one person whom it was under a legal duty to protect. The law does not lead us to so inconsequent a conclusion. Precedents drawn from the days of travel by stagecoach do not fit the conditions of travel to-day. The principle that the danger must be imminent does not change, but the things subject to the principle do change. They are whatever the needs of life in a developing civilization require them to be."

In the Buick Case the court reviewed the authorities at great length, and reached its conclusion in a well-reasoned and discriminating opinion. Its conclusion upon the law is the reverse of that which this court reached in its former decision. The question we must now decide is whether we shall consider the matter as settled as between these parties, or whether we may still look into the matter to ascertain whether an erroneous doctrine was laid down in our former decision, which we are at liberty to correct, now that the same suit is here again on a second writ of error.

The answer to be given to the question is somewhat the more difficult because the court as now constituted differs in its membership from the court as it was constituted when the former opinion was rendered; two of the judges who were on the bench at that time having retired. The question now here is exactly the same question which Judges Lacombe, Coxe, and Ward passed upon.

It has been said that whatever is once established between the same parties in the same case continues to be the law of the case, whether correct on general principles or not, so long as the facts on which such decision was predicated continue to be the facts in the case. Gee v. Williamson, 1 Port. (Ala.) 313, 27 Am. Dec. 628. And it has been a maxim of the law that it is the duty of a judge to keep the scales of justice even and steady, and not let them waver with every new judge's opinion. Broom's Legal Maxims, 7th ed. 147. His duty is to expound the law as he finds it has been decided, and not as he may wish it to be. In Parsons v. Gingell, 4 C. B. 560, 136 Eng. Reprint, 626, 16 L. J. C. P. N. S. 227, 11 Jur. 437, Coltman, J., said: "It is not our province to invent rules. It is our duty to discover and be guided by the rules that guided our predecessors."

In Thompson v. Maxwell Land Grant & R. Co. 168 U. S. 451, 456, 42 L. ed. 539, 541, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 123, Mr. Justice Brewer, speaking for the court, said: "It is the settled law of this court, as of others, that whatever has been decided on one appeal or writ of error cannot be re-examined on a second appeal or writ of error brought in the same suit. The first decision has become the settled law of the case."

The court, long before this decision was rendered, had announced the same doctrine. In Himely v. Rose, 5 Cranch, 313, 3 L. ed. 111 (1809), the Supreme Court reversed a decree of a circuit court, and the cause was remanded, with directions to enter a final decree conformable to the Supreme Court's opinion. From a decree then entered by the circuit court an appeal was taken. On the argument Chief Justice Marshall declared that "nothing is before this court but what is subsequent to the mandate," and he begins the opinion of the court by saying: "A decree having been formerly rendered in this cause, the court is now to determine whether that decree has been executed according to its true intent and meaning."

In Browder v. M'Arthur, 7 Wheat. 58, 5 L. ed. 397 (1822), the court denied an application for a rehearing upon the merits, made after the cause had been remitted to the court below to carry into effect the decree of the Supreme Court according to its mandate. The court declared the application came too late, and it stated that a subsequent appeal for supposed error in carrying into effect the mandate brought up only the proceedings subsequent to the mandate, and did not authorize an inquiry into the merits of the original decree. In Roberts v. Cooper, 20 How. 467, 15 L. ed. 969 (1857), Mr. Justice Grier declared that the court could not "be compelled, on a second writ of error in the same case, to review our own decision on the first." And he added: "To allow a second writ of error or appeal to a court of last resort on the same questions which were open to dispute on the first would lead to endless litigation. . . . There would be no end to a suit if every obstinate litigant could, by repeated appeals, compel a court to listen to criticisms on their opinions, or speculate on chances from changes in its members."

And see The Santa Maria, 10 Wheat. 431, 442, 6 L. ed. 359, 361; Corning v. Troy Iron & Nail Factory, 15 How. 451, 466, 14 L. ed. 768, 774; Sizer v. Many, 16 How. 98, 103, 14 L. ed. 861, 862; Sibbald v. United States, 12 Pet. 488, 492, 9 L. ed. 1167, 1169; Tyler v. Magwire, 17 Wall. 253, 284, 21 L. ed. 576, 583; Wayne County v. Kennicott, 94 U. S. 498, 24 L. ed. 260; Clark v. Keith, 106 U. S. 464, 27 L. ed. 302, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 568; Guarantee Co. of N. A. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 59 C. C. A. 376, 124 Fed. 170; The New York, 44 C. C. A. 38, 104 Fed. 561; United Press Asso. v. National Newspapers' Asso. 165 C. C. A. 572, 254 Fed. 284.

In Ellison v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 87 Ga. 691, 13 S. E. 809, 14 Am. Neg. Cas. 167, Chief Justice Bleckley, speaking for the court, said: "Some courts live by correcting the errors of others and adhering to their own." And he declared that, when the court was satisfied that it had fallen into a great error, "the maxim for a Supreme Court, supreme in the majesty of duty as well as in the majesty of power, is not 'stare decisis,' but 'fiat justitia ruat cælum.'"

In Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Merrill, 65 Kan. 436, 70 Pac. 358, 93 Am. St. Rep. 287, 59 L.R.A. 711, the court, on a second writ of error, overruled its earlier opinion on the first writ of error, saying: "Counsel for defendant in error have invoked the rule stare decisis, and insist that the former decision must govern on the second appeal. This would come to us with more force, if we were not now considering the same case, with the same parties before the court. If an erroneous decision has been made, it ought to be corrected speedily, especially when it can be done before the litigation in which the error has been committed has terminated finally. We are fully satisfied that the rule of the former case is shattered by the pressing weight of opposing authority, and that reason is against it."

In Baker v. Lorillard, 4 N. Y. 257, 261 (1850), Judge Harris, speaking for the New York court of appeals, said: "It [the court] may, and undoubtedly ought, when satisfied that either itself, or its predecessor, has fallen into a mistake, to overrule its own error. I go farther, and hold it to be the duty of every judge and every court to examine its own decisions and the decisions of other courts without fear, and to revise them without reluctance. But when a question has been well considered and deliberately determined, whatever might have been the views of the court before which the question is again brought, had it been res nova, it is not at liberty to disturb or unsettle such decision, unless impelled by 'the most cogent reasons.' 'I cannot legislate,' said Lord Kenyon, 'but by my industry I can discover what my predecessors have done, and I will tread in their footsteps.'"

In Cluff v. Day, 141 N. Y. 580, 36 N. E. 182 (1894), the court, after expressing the opinion that to permit the parties to an action to reopen a discussion on the law or the facts, once deliberately determined by the court of last resort, on a subsequent appeal in the same case on a suggestion of error in the former decision, would encourage litigation and diminish respect for judicial tribunals, went on to say: "There is no iron rule which precludes a court from correcting a manifest error in its former judgment, or which requires it to adhere to an unsound declaration of the law. It may, for cogent reasons, reverse or qualify a prior decision, even in the same case. But the cases in which this will be done are exceptional, and the power should be sparingly exercised. Where by inadvertence a settled principle of law is supposed to have been overlooked, or a rule of property violated, the court affords by its rules an opportunity to have its attention again called to the matter before final judgment is entered. If the party against whom the judgment is rendered omits to avail himself of this opportunity, or if, having applied for a reargument, the application is denied, and the case goes to a new trial on the law as declared, the circumstances must be very unusual which would justify the court in reversing its decision on a second appeal in the same case and upon the same facts. The decision is a precedent upon the point of law involved which the court may or may not follow in cases subsequently arising, but in the particular case it is 'more than authority—it is a final adjudication' between the parties."

The fact that the action is the same action, and the litigation has not yet terminated, and the further fact that the original error, if error was committed, was the error of a divided and not a unanimous court, are circumstances which are entitled to consideration.

There are other cases, some of them cited below, in which the courts have declined on a second appeal or writ of error to be bound by a decision rendered upon the first appeal, and have declared that the rule is not inexorable and without exception that a decision on the first appeal is in all cases to be adhered to. Bomar v. Parker, 68 Tex. 435, 4 S. W. 599; Bird v. Sellers, 122 Mo. 23, 26 S. W. 668; Chambers v. Smith, 30 Mo. 156, 158; Barton v. Thompson, 56 Iowa, 571, 41 Am. Rep. 119, 9 N. W. 899.

In 2 Van Fleet's Former Adjudication, § 664, the doctrine is stated as follows: "If a cause is reversed in a higher court, the lower one is bound to proceed in accordance with the opinion sent down. The parties are compelled to retry the case on the new rules laid down, and to shape their respective causes of action or defense accordingly. Having done so, and in many cases having irretrievably changed their positions, it would work injustice to overturn these rules on a second appeal, and these again on a third, and so on ad infinitum. The suit might never end. Besides, it would be very undignified, and tend to bring the courts into merited disrespect, if the lower court should be compelled to retrace its steps on one appeal, and then to trace them back again on a second, and so on. Hence, with a few exceptions, it is a rule that a matter decided on appeal becomes in effect res judicata in that cause; or, as it is frequently expressed, it becomes the 'law of the case' in all its subsequent proceedings. . . . The rule under consideration is not a cast-iron one, nor strictly one of res judicata, but simply one of expediency, which is not to be lightly disregarded."

The writer then quotes the extract already quoted from the New York court of appeals that the rule is not an iron rule which precludes the court from correcting a manifest error, or which requires the court to adhere to an unsound statement of the law, and declares his approval of the statement.

In Wells on Res Adjudicata & Stare Decisis, § 624, the author, referring to the doctrine of stare decisis, declares that the rule must not be so rigidly pressed as to shield error needlessly, adding: "And although prior decisions are not lightly to be departed from, yet any error may be corrected when no substantial injury is to be expected from the change, or when the evils of adherence are manifestly greater than those of departure. It must, of course, be clear that there is an error, and, as we have seen, it is not sufficient that a present court would have decided the matter differently, if it were res integra. But where this is clear, and a plain rule of law is manifestly violated, and especially if the rule established is mischievous, rather than beneficial to the community at large, in its practical operations, or to a particular class of the community, as, for example, the holders of commercial paper, it should be abrogated without delay."

We recognize the full force and effect of the doctrine of stare decisis, and the general rule that on a second appeal matters disposed of on the first appeal ordinarily will not be again considered. It is, like the rule of res judicata, not a mere rule of practice inherited from a more technical time than ours. It is a rule "of public policy and of private peace," and is to be cordially regarded and followed in all proper cases. Hart Steel Co. v. Railroad Supply Co. 244 U. S. 294, 298, 61 L. ed. 1148, 1152, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 506. But the rule is not an inexorable one, and should not be adhered to in a case in which the court has committed an error which results in injustice, and at the same time lays down a principle of law for future guidance which is unsound and contrary to the interests of society. We are satisfied that the present case falls under the exception to which we have referred. We shall not consider at length the reasons which have satisfied us that a serious mistake was made in the first decision. The reasons may be found in the opinion in the Buick Case, to which we have already referred, and which render it unnecessary to traverse the ground anew. We cannot believe that the liability of a manufacturer of automobiles has any analogy to the liability of a manufacturer of "tables, chairs, pictures, or mirrors hung on walls." The analogy is rather that of a manufacturer of unwholesome food or of a poisonous drug. It is every bit as dangerous to put upon the market an automobile with rotten spokes as it is to send out to the trade rotten foodstuffs. The liability of a manufacturer of food products was considered by this court at length in Ketterer v. Armour & Co. L.R.A. 1918D, 798, 160 C. C. A. 111, 247 Fed. 921 (1917). In that case we

Appeal—ruling on first appeal—law of case.

Negligence—duty of manufacturer of automobile to consumer.

laid down the rule that one who puts on the market an imminently dangerous article owes a public duty to all who may use it to exercise care in proportion to the peril involved, and we declared that the liability does not grow out of contract, but out of the duty which the law imposes to use due care in doing acts which in their nature are dangerous to the lives of others.

The judgment is reversed.

Ward, Circuit Judge, dissenting:

The opinion of the court concedes that the record on this appeal is the same as that on the former appeal. If the question then decided were raised between different parties, we should be affected only by the rule of stare decisis, and might overrule our former decision on the law; but between the same parties our former decision makes the law of the case, and is in this respect res judicata. I refer, among other opinions of the Supreme Court, to Wayne County v. Kennicott, 94 U. S. 498, 24 L. ed. 260; Clark v. Keith, 106 U. S. 464, 27 L. ed. 302, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 568; Thompson v. Maxwell Land Grant & R. Co. 168 U. S. 451, 42 L. ed. 539, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 121. We have so understood the law in this circuit (Development Co. of America v. King, 96 C. C. A. 139, 170 Fed. 923), and it has been so declared in the following circuit courts of appeals: fourth circuit, Linkous v. Virginian R. Co. 155 C. C. A. 504, 242 Fed. 916; fifth circuit, Woodruff v. Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. 137 C. C. A. 567, 222 Fed. 30; McClellan v. Rose, 137 C. C. A. 519, 222 Fed. 67, certiorari refused in 241 U. S. 668, 60 L. ed. 1229, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 552; seventh circuit, Standard Sewing Mach. Co. v. Leslie, 55 C. C. A. 323, 118 Fed. 557; eighth circuit, United Press Asso. v. National Newspaper Asso. 165 C. C. A. 572, 254 Fed. 284; ninth circuit, Mathews v. Columbia Nat. Bank, 40 C. C. A. 444, 100 Fed. 393; National Bank v. United States, 140 C. C. A. 219, 224 Fed. 679.

I think the opinion of the court is a departure from a wise and salutary rule which requires us to affirm the final judgment in this case, and therefore dissent.

ANNOTATION.

Erroneous decision as law of the case on a subsequent appeal.

The present annotation is supplemental to that appended to United States Annuity & L. Ins. Co. v. Peak, 1 A.L.R. 1267.

As is stated in the earlier annotation, many courts have insisted and still insist, that the doctrine or principle of "the law of the case" is sound and should be applied in all cases, although the former decision is clearly erroneous. Such, for instance, is the decision in Deke v. Huenkemeier (1919) 289 Ill. 148, 124 N. E. 381, it having been held that a final judgment affirmed on appeal is the law of the case on an appeal in a subsequent proceeding between the same parties, even though the former decision was erroneous. And see Chipman v. American Fork City (1919) — Utah, —, 179 Pac. 742, wherein the court, on a second appeal of the case, said that "being now bound to yield to the doctrine of the law of the case as that law is declared on the former appeal, it is immaterial what the view of the writer or the other members of the court would be" respecting a point now raised, but which had been decided on such former appeal.

However, as is also stated in the parent annotation, there has been a considerable tendency, and probably a growing one, to make an exception to the general rule that matters decided on one appeal cannot be considered on a subsequent appeal in the same case, where it clearly appears that the former decision was erroneous. This view is taken in the reported case JOHNSON v. CADILLAC MOTOR CAR CO. ante, 1023, wherein it was squarely held that the general rule is not an inexorable one, and should not be adhered to where the former decision results in injustice, and at the same time lays down a principle of law for future guidance which is unsound and contrary to the interests of society. And in Hoagland v. Kansas City R. Co. (1919) — Mo. App. —, 209 S. W. 569, the court stated the rule and recognized the exception thereto in the following terms: "While the decision rendered on the former appeal is not res judicata, in the sense that we are precluded from again investigating the soundness of the conclusions reached therein, yet, unless it is made to appear that such conclusions are erroneous, the former decision becomes the law of the case and will not be reopened."

And in Stratton v. Bankers Life Co. (1918) 102 Neb. 755, 1 A.L.R. 1671, 169 N. W. 722, the court recognized the general rule to be that questions once determined in an appellate court will not ordinarily be examined there on a second appeal in the same case, but held that there are exceptions to the rule, and that the case under consideration was within the exception, the former decision having been manifestly outside of the pleadings and proof as well as contrary to law and to the rules of equity.

So in Chase v. United States (1919) 261 Fed. 833, the court recognized the rule that an appellate court by a former decision does not preclude itself from doing justice between the parties on a subsequent appeal if it should be convinced that its former decision was erroneous.

And in Smith v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. (1919) — Colo. —, 180 Pac. 683, it was held that an exception to the general "law of the case" rule should be made where, subsequent to the decision on the former appeal, the appellate court in another case has laid down a different rule, especially where, as in the present case, the erroneous decision vested no property or contract right in the winning litigant.

And that, where two views which are in direct conflict are adopted on an appeal, neither is the law of the case on a subsequent appeal so that a re-examination of the question is necessary, see Re Walker (1919) — Cal. —, 181 Pac. 792. G. J. C.

MARION HALL, Plff. in Err.,

v.

STATE OF FLORIDA.

Florida Supreme Court—November 13, 1919.

(— Fla. —, 83 So. 513.)

Homicide — intoxication — effect on degrees.

1. Intoxication as an excuse for the commission of murder in the first degree does not apply to murder in the other degrees.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1052.]

Appeal — refusal to excuse juror — peremptory challenge.

2. If, in the examination of jurors upon their voir dire in a criminal case, it appears that a certain juror is unqualified, but the court refuses to sustain the defendant's challenge for cause, who afterwards excuses the juror by a peremptory challenge, the court's ruling will not be regarded as harmful error.

[See 16 R. C. L. 291-293.]

— ruling on qualification of juror.

3. The question of the qualification of a venireman is a judicial one, and is addressed to the court's discretion; any alleged error in the court's ruling upon a juror's qualification, therefore, should be made affirmatively to appear, and that it was harmful to the defendant, to constitute reversible error.

[See 16 R. C. L. 289.]

Evidence — photograph of place of crime.

4. The admission in evidence of a photograph of a house at which a homicide was committed, and a photograph of the interior of the room in which it was committed, which photograph showed white spots, indicating the places upon the floor where the persons fell who were shot, is not erroneous, where such photographs do not themselves constitute a picture version or interpretation of the character of the actual occurrence.

[See 10 R. C. L. 992, 1153.]

— statement by accused.

5. It is not error for the court in the trial of a criminal cause to admit in evidence the defendant's voluntary and noncommittal account or statement to the sheriff of the transaction upon which the charge against the defendant rests.

[See 1 R. C. L. 472.]

— nonexpert opinion as to sanity.

6. Where, in a prosecution for murder, the sanity of the defendant at the time of the alleged crime is a material issue, it is proper to receive in evidence the opinions of nonexpert witnesses as to the defendant's mental condition when such opinions are based upon facts, circumstances, and transactions in the defendant's life observed and noted by the witnesses, who should detail such facts, circumstances, and transactions in their testimony.

[See 11 R. C. L. 601.]

Appeal — admission of opinion as to sanity.

7. Where nonexpert witnesses are offered in behalf of defendant as to his mental condition, and such witnesses can recall no facts in the defendant's life tending to show insanity, but are permitted to express their opinions concerning his insanity, the court's action in allowing such evidence to be introduced at defendant's request will not constitute reversible error, where he instructs the jury that it is admitted "for what it is worth."

Criminal law — instruction — doubt as to evidence.

8. A charge, requested by defendant, which conveys the idea that if the jury, considering any portion of the evidence necessary to a conviction, entertain a reasonable doubt as to its verity, they should acquit him, is erroneous.

[See 8 R. C. L. 219.]

Definition — reasonable doubt.

9. The "reasonable doubt" which the law provides shall acquit a defendant is one that arises in the minds of the jury after considering, comparing, and weighing all the evidence in the case.

[See 8 R. C. L. 221.]

Appeal — refusal of instruction.

10. Where the court charges the jury correctly upon reasonable doubt and presumption of innocence, it is not error to refuse an instruction in behalf of the defendant that he is presumed to be innocent, and that presumption goes to the jury as independent evidence.

— duplicate instructions.

11. It is not error for the trial court to refuse requested instructions which are substantially covered by charges which the court has given.

[See 14 R. C. L. 751.]

Criminal law — segregation of jury as to doubt.

12. A requested instruction which conveys the idea that the rule of reasonable doubt applies to each individual juror, and segregates the jury as a body into individual parts, and requires each one to be free from reasonable doubt before the jury can return a verdict, is erroneous.

Homicide — irresistible impulse as defense.

13. In a prosecution of a person for murder where the sanity of the accused at the time of the commission of the alleged offense is a material issue, the doctrine of irresistible impulse or moral insanity is not recognized in this state as a defense.

[See 13 R. C. L. 710.]

— drunkenness as defense.

14. Drunkenness as an excuse for the commission of an unlawful act is no defense, and mitigates no degree of unlawful homicide, except murder in the first degree, where drunkenness may be so complete as to eliminate the possibility of entertaining a premeditated design to kill, unless, as a result of drunkenness, there is a fixed or settled frenzy or insanity, either permanent or intermittent.

[See 13 R. C. L. 719.]

Trial — instruction featuring particular witness.

15. A requested instruction, which is designed to direct the jury's attention to any particular witness or set of witnesses, segregate them from the entire body of witnesses, or to separate any fact from all the material facts sought to be established, and give such witness or witnesses or fact undue prominence or importance, either for the purpose of disparaging the witnesses or strengthening the testimony, is erroneous.

[See 14 R. C. L. 733, 780.]

— bias of witness — effect.

16. A requested instruction, which directed the jury when a state witness exhibited bias or ill will towards the defendant, or gave evidence that the jury did not believe, they should nevertheless weigh the evidence of such witness in the light of such bias or ill will, was correctly refused.

[See 14 R. C. L. 736.]

— effect of intoxication.

17. An instruction which directed the jury to acquit the defendant if the jury did not believe that the defendant had understanding or intelligence to commit murder, by reason of being intoxicated, was properly refused.

[See 13 R. C. L. 715 et seq.]

Evidence — sufficiency.

18. Evidence examined, and found sufficient to support the verdict.

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Walton County (Campbell, J.) to review a judgment convicting defendant of murder. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Sollie & Sollie and Daniel Campbell & Son, for plaintiff in error:

The ruling of the court in allowing the white spots in the photograph to go to the jury as evidence was erroneous.

Hampton v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 120 N. C. 534, 35 L.R.A. 808, 27 S. E. 96, 2 Am. Neg Rep. 444; Adams v. State, 28 Fla. 511, 10 So. 106; Ortiz v. State, 30 Fla. 256, 11 So. 611; Fore v. State, 75 Miss. 727, 23 So. 710.

The verdict of the jury in a criminal case cannot legally be rested or predicated upon a reasonable doubt arising out of a portion only of the evidence, and the verdict must rest and be predicated upon the entire evidence.

Bryant v. State, 34 Fla. 291, 16 So. 177; Ernest v. State, 20 Fla. 383; Lovett v. State, 30 Fla. 142, 17 L.R.A. 705, 11 So. 550.

If a certain number of facts are necessary to make out the crime charged, and the jury do not, upon all the evidence, believe any one of such necessary facts beyond a reasonable doubt, the defendant must be acquitted.

Gavin v. State, 42 Fla. 553, 29 So. 405; Wharton, Homicide, §§ 646-650; Com. v. McKie, 1 Gray, 61, 61 Am. Dec. 410; Com. v. Kimball, 24 Pick. 366; State v. Taylor, Houst. Crim. Rep. (Del.) 436.

When the proof shows such condition of fixed insanity or delirium tremens brought about by long-continued drinking as to disable the drinker to execute the mental functions necessary to the commission of the crime, he may be acquitted.

Cochran v. State, 65 Fla. 91, 61 So. 187.

Insanity which destroys knowledge of right and wrong, as applied to the act in question, or which produces an irresistible impulse, as a direct product of a disease, under duress of which the act is committed, prevents a defendant so afflicted from being responsible for the deed or act committed.

Parrish v. State, 139 Ala. 16, 36 So. 1012; Osborne v. State, 140 Ala. 84, 37 So. 105; Granberry v. State, 182 Ala. 4, 62 So. 52; James v. State, 193 Ala. 55, 69 So. 569, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 119; State v. Felter, 25 Iowa, 82; Parsons v. State, 81 Ala. 577, 60 Am. Rep. 193, 2 So. 854, 7 Am. Crim. Rep. 266; Smith v. Com. 1 Duv. (Ky.) 231; Flanagan v. State, 103 Ga. 619, 30 S. E. 550, 11 Am. Crim. Rep. 525; State v. Lyons, 113 La. 998, 37 So. 890.

Bearing upon the measure of proof necessary to conviction, the special charges requested by defendant are each material in the highest possible degree, and the refusal of each of them was hurtful error.

Howell v. State, 10 Ala. App. 1, 64 So. 522; Yarbrough v. State, 105 Ala. 43, 16 So. 758, 10 Am. Crim. Rep. 57; McCoy v. State, 170 Ala. 10, 54 So. 428; Bones v. State, 117 Ala. 138, 23 So. 138; Sherrill v. State, 138 Ala. 3, 25 So. 129; Griffin v. State, 150 Ala. 49, 43 So. 197; Garrett v. State, 97 Ala. 18, 14 So. 327; Bryant v. State, 116 Ala. 445, 23 So. 40; Howard v. State, 108 Ala. 571, 18 So. 813; Bell v. State, 115 Ala. 25, 22 So. 526; Henderson v. State, 120 Ala. 360, 25 So. 236; 3 Greenl. Ev. § 29; McCoggle v. State, 41 Fla. 525, 26 So. 734.

A man cannot be convicted of crime if, upon all the evidence, he is probably not guilty.

Bain v. State, 74 Ala. 38; Cohen v.

State, 50 Ala. 108; Mims v. State, 141 Ala. 93, 37 So. 354.

Messrs. Van C. Swearingen, Attorney General, and D. Stuart Gillis, Assistant Attorney General, for the State:

Overruling a challenge to a juror for cause is not ground for reversal, he having been excused on a peremptory challenge, and it not appearing that the party exhausted his peremptory challenges.

Green v. State, 40 Fla. 191, 23 So. 851; Mathis v. State, 45 Fla. 46, 34 So. 287; Peadon v. State, 46 Fla. 124, 35 So. 204; Colson v. State, 51 Fla. 19, 40 So. 183; Ford v. State, 44 Fla. 421, 33 So. 301; Leaptrot v. State, 51 Fla. 57, 40 So. 616; Stokes v. State, 54 Fla. 109, 44 So. 759; M'Rae v. State, 62 Fla. 74, 57 So. 348.

The photographs in question were admissible.

2 Wharton, Crim. Ev. § 518-j; People v. Mahatch, 148 Cal. 200, 82 Pac. 780.

Technical errors in the admission or rejection of testimony will not cause a reversal where the supposed errors are harmless.

Rhodes v. State, 65 Fla. 541, 62 So. 653; Wallace v. State, 41 Fla. 547, 26 So. 713; Wilson v. State, 47 Fla. 118, 36 So. 580.

It was within the province of the court to determine whether or not the witness had detailed such facts and circumstances within his knowledge and observation as would entitle his conclusions as to the sanity or insanity of defendant to admission; and it is immaterial that the court assigned, if he did, an erroneous reason for his ruling.

Jones v. State, 35 Fla. 289, 17 So. 284; Dibble v. Truluck, 11 Fla. 135; Smith v. Croom, 7 Fla. 180; McLeod v. Dell, 9 Fla. 427; Hoopes v. Crane, 56 Fla. 395, 47 So. 992; Murrell v. Peterson, 57 Fla. 480, 49 So. 31; Armstrong v. State, 30 Fla. 170, 17 L.R.A. 484, 11 So. 618; Scott v. State, 64 Fla. 490, 60 So. 356; Robinson v. L'Engle, 13 Fla. 482; Smith v. State, 65 Fla. 56, 61 So. 120; Thomas v. State, 47 Fla. 99, 36 So. 161.

Where the judge in his general charge has correctly given the law of reasonable doubt, it is not error to refuse to give instructions defining such doubt in other language and forms of statement of the law.

Cook v. State, 46 Fla. 20, 35 So. 665;

Dixon v. State, 13 Fla. 636; Sylvester v. State, 46 Fla. 166, 35 So. 142.

To refuse requested instructions when the same points are covered by other instructions given is not error.

Gilbert v. State, 61 Fla. 25, 55 So. 464; Peeler v. State, 64 Fla. 385, 59 So. 899; Bennett v. State, 65 Fla. 84, 61 So. 127; Owens v. State, 65 Fla. 483, 62 So. 651; Johnston v. State, 65 Fla. 492, 62 So. 655; Padgett v. State, 64 Fla. 389, 59 So. 946, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 897.

Charges already substantially covered are correctly refused.

Sherman v. State, 17 Fla. 888; Pinson v. State, 28 Fla. 735, 9 So. 706; Maloy v. State, 52 Fla. 101, 41 So. 791; Smith v. State, 57 Fla. 24, 48 So. 744; Sylvester v. State, 46 Fla. 166, 35 So. 142; Bass v. State, 58 Fla. 1, 50 So. 531; Green v. State, 43 Fla. 556, 30 So. 656.

Instructions so involved as to be calculated to confuse the jury should be refused.

Cochran v. State, 65 Fla. 91, 61 So. 187; Cook v. State, 46 Fla. 20, 35 So. 665; McCoggle v. State, 41 Fla. 525, 26 So. 734.

The court had sufficiently charged the jury as to reasonable doubt.

Baker v. State, 51 Fla. 1, 40 So. 673; Lovett v. State, 30 Fla. 142, 17 L.R.A. 705, 11 So. 550; Brown v. State, 46 Fla. 159, 35 So. 82.

The issues were fairly submitted to the jury, which found defendant guilty of murder.

Holland v. State, 12 Fla. 117; Olds v. State, 44 Fla. 452, 33 So. 296; Barnhill v. State, 56 Fla. 39, 48 So. 251; Cook v. State, supra; Rivers v. State, — Fla. —, 78 So. 343.

Ellis, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in error was convicted of the murder of Arnold Mitchell in the circuit court for Walton county during January of 1919, and sentenced to suffer the penalty of death. He seeks here a reversal of the judgment on writ of error.

There are over 133 assignments of error, numbered from 1 to 131, two numbers, 87 and 106, being repeated. Many of the assignments of error are duplications. Assignments from 7 to 58 are repeated in assignments numbered from 62 to 111, which attack the court's refusal to give certain requested instructions to the jury. Assignments numbered from 118 to 131 attack the charge given by the court. Other assignments of error attack the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict and the court's rulings in the admission and rejection of evidence.

The facts in the case are few. The circumstances of the homicide, which were exceptionally harsh to the point of brutality, are practically undisputed in any detail. The defense was that the defendant was under the influence of alcohol or some intoxicating liquor to that degree where it could legally be said that he was insane, and therefore irresponsible for his act, or was incapable of entertaining a premeditated design to take the life of the deceased or any person, and therefore could not be guilty of murder in the first degree.

On the night of December 25, 1918, Charlie Carter, father-in-law to the deceased, who was living with him at the time, gave a party at his home, at which many people in the neighborhood attended. Dancing was continued late into the night. It was observed that whisky, in bottles, large and small, was plentiful, and that the defendant drank some of it, although the matter of his soberness or intoxication was disputed. Some time during the late evening the defendant, who had been dancing with a certain lady guest, left the room during the dance and his place was taken by Alvin Miller for the remainder of that dance, or set, as it was called. Soon another set was begun, and the defendant returned to the room and claimed the lady with whom he had been dancing for a partner. It was explained to him that the set which was on when he left had been finished, and the one now on was a new one. This explanation seemed not to please the defendant, who appeared to entertain the idea that his dignity, gallantry, or bravery was impugned. He directed his resentment toward Arnold Mitchell, who had invited the lady to dance with him and whose invitation had been accepted. This lady, observing the displeased and resentful man, sought to pacify his feelings and restore his composure by offering to dance with him, and turned from Arnold Mitchell with that purpose. This action seemed to have the contrary effect, for the defendant immediately drew his revolver, and, after shooting down Charlie Carter, the host of the evening, who seemed to be in the way of defendant's anger, he caught the deceased in the collar with one hand, fired the pistol into his body, and, while the victim was on the floor, his head being supported by his wife, the defendant walked around the body and fired several more bullets into it, remarking as he left the room, "By God, I reckon you will dance now," or, "I guess, by God, you are dead now." Just before the defendant fired the first time he said, "Arnold Mitchell, G—d—— you; I am going to kill you."

There was much evidence as to the defendant's habits of drink, but as to his intoxication on the night of the homicide the evidence was conflicting. The evidence of the man's insanity was sought to be established by witnesses in the neighborhood and vicinity, who had known him for years and observed his conduct. These witnesses said in substance that the defendant had drunk whisky since he was about fifteen years old; that of late years he had consumed more than usual; that when he was not drinking "he didn't act so curious;" that since he had been drinking so heavily of late "he acted like a different man;" that as the years went on the defendant's habit of drinking intoxicating liquors became "worse and worse;" and he acted "less like a man in his mind." One witness, Sell Knowling, who was first cousin to the defendant and who was with him a great deal, a kind of companion, or comrade, said that the defendant was a "pretty heavy drinker;" that he had had the habit of drinking about "five or six years;" that sometime before

"Mitchell was killed he (defendant) had been worse than he had been before;" that the defendant's "conduct had changed from what it had been in other years after he got to drinking so heavily. It had changed a little bit; I mean by that his ways and acting. He acted a little different from what he used to. There was a little difference in his ways and acting from what it used to be. He acted like he had less sense, less sense than he used to have." The witness said that in his opinion the defendant's "mind was bad." The defendant drank some whisky that night he danced, but "staggered like a drunken man." Other witnesses saw the defendant at the dance, but could not tell from his conduct and manner whether he was drunk or not. The court permitted witnesses to state whether in their opinion the defendant was or was not of sound mind. Some of these witnesses, a brother, an uncle, a friend, his mother, testified that the defendant in their opinion was of unsound mind. A physician, answering a hypothetical question, said the killing of Mitchell was "evidence of insanity;" "that the man (defendant) was probably insane." He afterwards qualified the statement, when all the facts were embraced in the question, to the extent of saying that the conduct of defendant showed "temper;" that he could not say conclusively that the defendant was insane. Other witnesses who saw the defendant at the dance, the night of the homicide, who have known him for years, observed his conduct, and knew many of his ways and habits, said that he was not drunk the night of the dance; that if he was, they could not tell it; that he was quiet, did not stagger, and talked rationally; that the defendant himself had, since the homicide, said he was not drunk that night and knew what he was doing.

The jury decided with all the evidence before it that the defendant, on the night of the homicide, when he killed the deceased, was not insane; that he committed the act from a premeditated design to take the life of Arnold Mitchell and was guilty of murder in the first degree. After a careful review of the evidence and consideration of its probative force and bearing upon the unfortunate affair of that night in December, we are satisfied that the verdict was amply sustained by the evidence.

The first assignment of error attacks the ruling of the court in overruling the defendant's challenge for cause of the juror Hinzie. The record does not show that a juror by such name was either examined or sat upon the jury. A juror named Heinsley upon his voir dire said that he was not related to either the defendant or deceased; if he was taken as a juror would render a fair and impartial verdict according to the testimony; had formed no opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused; that he had heard and read about the homicide, but what he had read and heard "would not weigh" with him in considering the evidence; although it had made an impression upon his mind, which, however, would not "weigh with him" at all after hearing the evidence; that as a juror he would have to "exert his will power to overcome" that opinion or impression he had from reading and hearing about the case. The defendant's challenge for cause was overruled. It appears that this man did not serve as a juror in the case. The defendant challenged him peremptorily. It also appears from the record that the defendant did not exhaust all his peremptory challenges. Even if the venireman was unqualified to serve

Appeal—refusal to excuse juror —peremptory challenge.

as a juror and the challenge for cause should have been sustained, it appears that he did not serve, and the defendant's peremptory challenges had not been exhausted, so there was no harmful error, and the assignment should fail. Mathis v. State, 45 Fla. 46, 34 So. 287; Denham v. State, 22 Fla. 664; Lambright v. State, 34 Fla. 564, 16 So.

582, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 383; Peadon v. State, 46 Fla. 124, 35 So. 204; Colson v. State, 51 Fla. 19, 40 So. 183; Melbourne v. State, 51 Fla. 69, 40 So. 189.

The question of the qualification of a venireman is a judicial one, and is addressed to the court's discretion; <sup>—ruling on qualification of juror.</sup> any error, therefore, should be made affirmatively to appear, and that it was harmful to the defendant.

A photographer on January 15th, following the homicide, made two photographs, one of the Carter house and the other of the room in the house where the homicide occurred. When the latter picture was taken, someone placed on the floor of the room two pieces of paper; one to indicate where Mr. Carter fell when he was shot, and the other to indicate where the deceased fell. It is not clear what purpose was served in introducing this evidence, as there was no dispute as to the house or room in which the alleged crime occurred, no denial in the evidence that the defendant did the shooting, nor that Carter the host was shot and fell upon the floor and that Arnold Mitchell was killed. After these photographs were admitted in evidence and it was explained by the witness what the white spots in the photograph were caused by, the defendant's counsel objected to "so much of the pictures as contained said white spots, and moved the court to strike the testimony about the papers being placed where the bodies lay, and to exclude from the jury the white spots in the pictures as parts of the evidence." There was no ruling upon this motion; consequently no exception. The objection to the evidence was not made until the photographs had been admitted. The motion to strike the testimony about the papers being placed where the bodies lay was a little indefinite, and might have been granted, but how the white spots in the pictures could be excluded without excluding the photographs is not clear. However, no error is made to appear, as the bill of exceptions does not show that any ruling was made on the motion. If the evidence was permitted to stand, it could have worked no injury to the defendant, in view of the nature of the case, the character of the defense. The photographs were introduced as mere representations of the place where the alleged crime was committed; not a representation of the act itself. And as there was no dispute between the parties as to the place where the homicide occurred, and who committed it, and upon whom it was committed, the photographs appear to have been unnecessary, but harmless. The fact that placing the pieces of paper on the floor to represent the spots where the two wounded men were lying after the shots were fired made the photographs a kind of tableau picture, yet they were not subject to the criticism that anyone's version, theory, or interpretation of the character of the act was thus sought to photograph of place of crime.

Evidence—

be brought before the jury as a photographic view of the actual occurrence. We think the assignment of error based upon the defendant's motion to strike the testimony and exclude the white spots from the pictures is without merit, and must fail.

The sheriff of Walton county testified that on the morning of December 26th, the defendant came to him in company with another and told him, the sheriff, "that there was some shooting out at Mr. Carter's." The defendant's counsel moved the court to exclude that statement from the evidence. The motion was overruled, and that action of the court —statement by accused.

is assigned as the third error. There was no error in this ruling. Every word a defendant utters before or after arrest is not a confession of guilt. Sometimes the statements are self-exculpatory and many times noncommittal. The statement that there had been some shooting at Mr. Carter's certainly inculpated no one, and appeared to be entirely voluntary, as the defendant seemed to have come to the sheriff of his own volition, merely to tell him of the fact.

The assignment of error is not sustained. The character of the defendant's statement to the sheriff does not support the theory upon which the argument is made in support of the assignment.

During the progress of the trial the defendant's counsel introduced several witnesses, some of whom were relatives, others acquaintances and friends of the defendant, and sought by such witnesses to ascertain whether the defendant was sane or insane at the time he killed the deceased. This information was to be based on the opinion of the several witnesses, who, knowing the defendant as a boy and later as a man, had observed his conduct, watched his career, observed his manners, and noticed his bearing and conversation, and were supposed to speak with a reasonable degree of scientific accuracy as to his mental condition at the time he killed the deceased. At first the offer to supply this kind of evidence upon the question of the defendant's sanity was declined by the court, but later the court revised its ruling and permitted defendant's counsel to recall his witnesses and obtain their views as to the soundness of defendant's mind. The defendant's counsel then recalled James Hall, a brother of defendant, Henry Knowling, an uncle, William Crowder, and Mrs. Colvin, defendant's mother. These witnesses all testified that, in their opinion, the defendant was of "unsound mind," or "not in his right mind," or "not right at times." The court stated that the witnesses should detail all the facts they knew concerning the defendant and what they had observed with reference to his conduct. The first witness examined after the announcement of this rule stated that he could not point out any acts now, but the witness was permitted nevertheless to give his opinion that his brother was of unsound mind. After that, no further attention was paid to the rule announced by the court. Witnesses were permitted to testify that in their judgment the defendant was not in his "right mind" or of "unsound mind," because he did not "seem to be just like he ought to be;" that he made a trade once that was not profitable to him; he talked "foolish at times when he was sober as well as when he was drunk;" "he looked different out of his eyes," and such matters. These statements were permitted to go to the jury, at the defendant's request, as the basis of the witnesses' judgments and opinions concerning his insanity. Counsel for the defendant say that the "inquiry of defendant's sanity or not shows up in shreds and bits scattered through pages and pages of the record, each shred or bit being so connected with the context to which it belongs, and to the matter immediately preceding and following it, that it is wholly impracticable for [them] to separate these shreds and bits in [their] brief and present them in ordered form."

We appreciate the difficulty under which counsel labored in the effort to show error in the court's ruling prejudicial to the defendant in this evidence, for it was admitted seemingly under no rule, but merely upon defendant's request. We are unable to discover in the judge's rulings that he "reluctantly admitted in evidence" that which he had previously through error excluded. The interpretation which counsel place upon the court's words when he announced that the testimony of these witnesses concerning the defendant's sanity should be admitted for what it was worth is not justified by any conduct or word of the court during the progress of the trial. By that expression there was no encroachment by the judge upon the province of the jury, nor do we perceive in it any effort to influence their minds against the reliability of such testimony. Counsel complain that the court first ruled that the testimony of the nonexpert witnesses should not be admitted, and then changed his ruling by allowing such testimony to go to the jury "for what it was worth." The record shows that the first witness placed upon the stand in defendant's behalf was a first cousin, a young man about twenty years old, who testified that defendant drank heavily in recent months; the witness drank with him. In answer to a leading question propounded by defendant's counsel, he said that recently there had been something apparently wrong with defendant's mind. The court stated that the "witness [should] tell the acts that [defendant] had done, but he can't testify that [defendant's] mind was wrong. He is not an expert."

The witness then said: "I have been in the presence of this man when he was drunk with recent years a right smart. I don't know how much he remains drunk as an ordinary thing. A pretty good percentage of all his time. I saw him while he was drunk and while he was sober. I know his conduct and how he appeared when he was drunk. I think from his conduct and manner that he has become heavily addicted to drink."

He was then asked by defendant's counsel the following question: "Was he of sound or unsound mind, sane or insane, for several months before the killing?"

The state attorney objected to this question, and the objection was sustained. The witness was then asked: "Was that man since his habit of heavy drinking—has he been sane or has he been as you have testified—was he, in your judgment, sane or insane?"

The court sustained an objection to this question and defendant's counsel excepted. Later during the trial, the court announced of its own motion that the defendant might recall the witnesses which the court had refused to allow counsel to examine concerning the sanity or insanity of the defendant. Then followed the testimony referred to above. The court, however, first announced the rule under which the opinion of the witnesses should be received. That rule was in conformity with the rule announced in Armstrong v. State, 30 Fla. 170, 17 L.R.A. 484, 11 So. 618, referred to in the brief of counsel for plaintiff in error. Whatever may have been the reason for not insisting upon the rule, the fact is, it appeared not to have been observed, and the opinions of the defendant's relations and

—nonexpert opinion as to sanity.

Appeal—admission of opinion as to
sanity.

friends concerning his sanity were permitted to go to the jury, as the court said, for what they were worth. Such opinions were not based upon any facts within the knowledge of the witnesses, but opinions based on vague, indefinite, obscure notions about defendant's abnormality. Such evidence was permitted, however, to be given. It was undoubtedly favorable to defendant. He could not have been injured by it unless, on account of its complete transparency and inherent defects, it reacted upon the jurors' minds in a way not expected by counsel. But defendant is not in a position to complain that evidence admitted at his request against the rule turns out to his disadvantage. On the subject of the rule announced by the court under which nonexpert opinion is admissible concerning insanity, see Leaptrot v. State, 51 Fla. 57, 40 So. 616; Davis v. State, 44 Fla. 32, 32 So. 822; Scott v. State, 64 Fla. 490, 60 So. 355.

Assignments of error numbered 4, 5, and 6, based upon the rulings above referred to, are not sustained.

Counsel for plaintiff in error discuss together assignments of error numbered 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 19. The same order is followed in the able brief of the assistant attorney general, who calls attention to the rule, often referred to by this court, that, where several assignments of error are grouped in the brief of plaintiff in error, and one assignment fails, they all fail. See Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Whitney, 65 Fla. 72, 61 So. 179, 3 N. C. C. A. 812. Two of the counsel for plaintiff in error, however, who are practitioners from an adjoining state, express in their brief some apprehension of inadvertent departure from our rules. We are not disposed in this case to apply with very strict fidelity to practice the several rules adopted for the convenience of the court and bar, for several reasons. The case is one of extreme gravity; counsel for plaintiff in error have labored diligently to present their client's case to this court in all its phases, and some of the counsel, at least, labor under the disadvantage of imperfect acquaintance with our rules of practice.

The assignments of error referred to above are based upon the refusal of the court to give certain special instructions requested by the defendant and numbered, respectively, 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 13. The refusal of the court to give these instructions constitutes some of the grounds of the motion for a new trial, and is again assigned as error under other and differently numbered assignments. Such duplications in the assignment of errors frequently occur, and render the consideration of the case here very tedious, even difficult, and the transcript and briefs unnecessarily large and expensive. The instructions above referred to, which were refused by the court, are upon the same subject; that is to say, they involve one principle only. They express the idea that, where one is tried upon a criminal charge, and any portion of the evidence which is necessary to a conviction is not believed by the jury beyond a reasonable doubt, the defendant is entitled to an acquittal.

This instruction, in substance, was disapproved in the case of Cook v. State, 46 Fla. 20, 35 So. 665; Bryant v. State, 34 Fla. 291, 16 So. 177; Ernest

Criminal law—
instruction—
doubt as to
evidence.

v. State, 20 Fla. 383; Lovett v. State, 30 Fla. 142, 17 L.R.A. 705, 11 So. 550. The trial court correctly and fully instructed the jury upon the law of a reasonable doubt, and explained that such doubt might arise upon a full and fair consideration of all the evidence. The requested instructions were not only properly refused, because the court had instructed the jury upon the subject of a reasonable doubt, and was not required to repeat the same principle of law in different form and couched in different phraseology, but the requested instructions were misleading, if not insidious. Although this court had said that a reasonable doubt cannot arise from considering "a part or parcel" of the testimony, these instructions seem reasonable doubt.

Definition—

to advise the jury that it might consider any portion of the evidence upon any material question involved, and if the portion so considered was not believed to be true beyond a reasonable doubt, the defendant should be acquitted. It often occurs that several witnesses are called to establish one or more essential elements of the crime charged, the testimony of each witness is a "portion" of the evidence, the jury may not believe a certain witness, they may doubt his veracity, and yet believe what others have testified to on the same point; yet, under the rule announced in the requested instructions, the defendant should be acquitted, notwithstanding the jury, upon consideration of all the evidence, would entertain no reasonable doubt of guilt. As the court said in the Bryant Case, 34 Fla. 296, 16 So. 177: "The reasonable doubt which the law requires shall acquit the defendant is one that arises in" the minds of the jury "after . . . consideration, comparing, and weighing of all the testimony in the case."

If it is objected that the construction here placed upon the requested charges is too narrow, that the word "portion" must be taken to mean all the evidence which may bear directly or indirectly upon any material element of the crime charged, then the charges are in substance not different from the court's general charge upon the subject of a reasonable doubt.

The principle announced in the case of Gavin v. State, 42 Fla. 553, 29 So. 405, that proof beyond a reasonable doubt must be had as to all facts necessary to make out the case of the prosecution, in a criminal case, does not afford any argument in support of the requested charges, which deal not with any essential fact to be proved, but with any portion of the evidence as to such fact.

After considering all the evidence in the case, if the jury has a reasonable doubt as to the existence of any fact necessary to constitute guilt on defendant's part, there should be an acquittal. But this is not the meaning of either one of the eight charges requested. The able discussion of these charges by counsel for plaintiff in error fails to convince us that the court departed from any sound rule or denied the defendant any right in this particular. The fact that it required ten pages of counsel's brief, practically without citations of authority to take up space, in which to explain the phraseology of these requested charges, is in itself almost sufficient proof of the involved and entangling terms in which they are framed.

The charges deal with the phrase "any portion of the evidence." This court in the Gavin Case uses the phrase "facts necessary to make out the case." The brief of counsel would make no distinction or difference in the meaning of the two phrases, because counsel say that the words "material and necessary to a conviction" are coupled with the words "any portion of the evidence," so that consideration of all the evidence is essential to determine which parts of it are essential to conviction. But when would two men upon any jury place precisely the same valuation upon the testimony of any witness, either as to probative value or materiality, especially if the case should happen to be one of circumstantial evidence? To send the jury upon a quest for those portions of the evidence material and essential to conviction would involve them in more difficulties than should be saddled upon man, who, as a juror, is required to consider and compare all the evidence and arrive at a conclusion that satisfies his conscience under the rule of reasonable doubt, regardless of the processes of reason or lack of it by which others arrive at their conclusions. If all men reasoned alike, the necessity for twelve jurors in a murder case would not be apparent.

Requested instruction No. 4 was refused, and complaint is made of that ruling under the tenth assignment of error. The charge declared that the law presumes the defendant to be innocent, that the presumption goes to the jury as independent evidence,

Appeal—refusal of
instruction.

and there can be no conviction until the presumption is overcome by proof beyond a reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt, and unless it is so overcome he must be acquitted. The court instructed the jury that the defendant was presumed to be innocent until his guilt was proven beyond a reasonable doubt, and that the burden of proof was upon the state to prove his guilt and every material fact necessary to constitute the offense beyond a reasonable doubt. There is no difference in substance, so far as language is concerned, between the two charges, further than in one case the jury are told that the presumption of innocence is one of law and comes to them as independent evidence. In effect, however, the instruction given by the court is the same. The jury knows that the court gives them the law in charge. Therefore, under the charge as given, they knew that the presumption of innocence was one of law, that they were required by law to consider, and that before a conviction could be had the presumption of innocence had to be overcome by proof of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Counsel seems to contend that there are two stages in the process of conviction, viz.: First, where presumption of innocence is overcome; second, where proof of guilt beyond reasonable doubt is established. The argument is more specious than sound. The defendant is either guilty or not guilty. There is no middle ground or "twilight zone" known to the criminal law. The state must establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt or fail in the prosecution; in which case the defendant is innocent in law. If there could be such a state of case where the jury would say that the evidence removes the presumption of innocence, but fails to show guilt, the defendant would still, in law, be presumed to be innocent and entitled to acquittal. This, in substance, is what the court charged the jury. We think there is no merit in this assignment of error.

The next assignment of error discussed is No. 42. It rests upon the refusal of the court to give an instruction similar in all respects to the one just discussed.

—duplicate
instructions.

It is a little fuller, in that it contains more words, but no more meaning.

Assignments of error numbered 15, 29, 30, 45, 46, 49, 50, 54, 55, and 56, are discussed together. These assignments attack the rulings of the court in which it refused certain requested instructions in defendant's behalf. These assignments are repeated in those numbered 70, 84, 85, 99, 100, 103, 104, 107, 108, 109. These requested instructions were designed, not only to emphasize the thought to the jury that the verdict should be unanimous, but to segregate the jury into twelve parts and confine the doctrine of reasonable doubt to each part; that there could be no verdict of guilty unless each juror believed the defendant to be guilty beyond a reasonable doubt; that if any one or more of the jurors had such doubt after considering all the evidence, the defendant could not be found guilty. At the request of defendant's counsel, the court gave the following charge: "It is the duty of the jurors severally and separately and jointly to weigh and consider the evidence and determine whether or not in their joint and several minds they believe from the evidence that defendant is guilty, and there can be no conviction until the entire jury believe from the entire evidence and beyond a reasonable doubt that he is guilty."

Counsel in their brief say that they are "impressed" that this charge, in substance, covers those which were requested and refused upon this subject, but they do not concede it. We think it does. The law does not require the court to repeat its charges. When a proposition of law is embraced in a charge which clearly conveys the thought to the minds of the jury, it is not error for the court to refuse other instructions, embracing in substance the same thought, but in different phraseology. See Pinson v. State, 28 Fla. 735, 9 So. 706; Smith v. State, 57 Fla. 24, 48 So. 744; Green v. State, 43 Fla. 556, 30 So. 656; Higginbotham v. State, 42 Fla. 573, 89 Am. St. Rep. 237, 29 So. 410; Graham v. State, 72 Fla. 510, 73 So. 594; Hawthorne v. State, 72 Fla. 524, 73 So. 590; Fine v. State, 70 Fla. 412, 70 So. 379.

The principle announced in the requested instructions, however, was disapproved in the case of Boyd v. State, 33 Fla. 316, 14 So. 836; Barker v. State, 40 Fla. 178, 24 So. 69; Ayers v. State, 62 Fla. 14, 57 So. 349.

To attempt to confine the doctrine of reasonable doubt to individual jurors, or that segregates the jury as a body into individual members, and requiring each of such members to be free from reasonable doubt before they can return a verdict, is error. Such is the language of the headnote in the case last cited. This very thing the refused instructions undertook to do; and, though the court did give an instruction, the effect of which would be that which this court has disapproved, the instruction was given at defendant's request, for his benefit, and he cannot now complain.

Assignment of error numbered 16 is based upon the court's refusal to give charge numbered 10, requested by defendant. This assignment is also covered by No. 71. The requested instruction is upon the subject of the "diseased mind" of the defendant, which it was contended at the trial was caused by the habit of drinking alcoholic liquors. The instruction is not clear, and is calculated to mislead. It advises the jury that although they may not be satisfied from the evidence that the defendant was of "diseased mind from the habit of drinking alcoholic liquors" when he killed Mitchell, if he killed him, yet if, from the evidence, the jury believed defendant was drunk to such an extent as to "disable him to exercise those mental faculties which must be exercised to render one guilty of murder in either degree," the jury could only convict of manslaughter, and could not convict of manslaughter unless they believed him guilty of that offense.

It is conceded that the instruction is "involved." It is not only involved in the sense that it is complicated and entangled in confusing and misleading words, but if it bears the interpretation contended for by counsel for plaintiff in error, the law was correctly and fully given by the court in other charges.

We have examined carefully all the charges given by the court, as well as those requested by the defendant's counsel and refused, which cover the subject of drunkenness and insanity, and we are of the opinion that the court, by charges appropriate to the evidence, submitted to the jury for their determination the question whether the accused, at the time of the unlaw-

Criminal law—
segregation of jury as to doubt.

ful act with which he was charged, had a sufficient degree of reason to know that he was doing an act that was wrong. See Cochran v. State, 65 Fla. 91, 61 So. 187; Davis v. State, 44 Fla. 32, 32 So. 822; Copeland v. State, 41 Fla. 320, 26 So. 319.

In the Davis Case, supra, this court adopted the rule laid down in M'Naghten's Case, 10 Clark & F. 200, text, pp. 209-211, 8 Eng. Reprint, 718, 8 Scott, N. R. 595, 1 Car. & K. 130, note, as to insanity as a defense to crime. If the accused at the time the act in question was committed had the use of his understanding so as to know that he was doing a wrong act, he was in a sound state of mind. The idea is also expressed in these words in the Davis Case: "If the accused was conscious that the act was one which he ought not to do, and if that act was at the same time contrary to the law of the land, he is punishable."

The court said the question should be left to the jury whether the party accused had a sufficient degree of reason to know that he was doing an act that was wrong. The "irresistible impulse" or "moral insanity"

Homicide—irresistible impulse as defense.

doctrine is not recognized in this state as an excuse for an unlawful act. See

Cochran v. State, supra.

In the case last cited, this court, speaking through Mr. Justice Whitfield upon the subject of drunkenness as excusing the commission of an unlawful act or relieving from its consequences, said: "Intoxication does not excuse or mitigate any degree of unlawful homicide, except murder in the first degree, unless as a result of such intoxication there be a fixed or settled frenzy or insanity, either permanent or intermittent." . . . If excessive and long-continued use of intoxicants produces a mental condition of insanity, permanent or intermittent, which insane condition exists when an unlawful act is committed, such insane mental condition may be of a nature that would relieve the person so affected from the consequences of the act that would otherwise be criminal and punishable."

In the case of Garner v. State, 28 Fla. 113, 29 Am. St. Rep. 232, 9 So. 835, it was said that voluntary intoxication is a matter for consideration with reference to the ability of the accused to form or entertain a particular or specific intent essential to an offense. That as between murder in any degree below the first and manslaughter, voluntary intoxication plays no part. "The only purpose," said the court, "for which it is admissible, is to show an absence of a premeditated design to kill, or that the killing was not murder in the first degree; and the only effect of proof of intoxication rendering the accused incapable of forming or entertaining such design will be to reduce the killing to murder of the second or third degree, according to the circumstances."

We will briefly review the charges given by the court to the jury in this case, to the end that it may be shown that the law on the subject of intoxication as an excuse for the commission of an unlawful act was fully given in charge to the jury.

The court charged the jury fully upon the subject of a premeditated design as an element in the crime of murder in the first degree, and that, before there could be a conviction of the defendant, the jury had to find beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant killed the deceased from a premeditated design to take his life; that if the defendant unlawfully killed the deceased, and at the time was under the influence of liquor voluntarily taken by him, his intoxication would be no excuse for committing the act, unless such intoxication deprived the defendant, at the time of the killing, of the mental capacity to form a premeditated design or malicious purpose to kill, in which case the defendant may be found guilty of murder in the second degree or manslaughter. The court said that voluntary intoxication, not resulting in a fixed or settled frenzy or insanity, either permanent or intermittent, does not excuse or mitigate any degree of unlawful homicide below murder in the first degree. "While the mental effects of a mere intoxication may not excuse the commission of an unlawful act or relieve from its consequences, yet, if excessive and long-continued use of intoxicants produces a mental condition of insanity, permanent or intermittent, and that such insane condition exists when an unlawful act is committed, such insane mental condition may be of a nature that would relieve the person so affected from the consequences of the act that would otherwise be criminal and punishable. Therefore, gentlemen of the jury, should you find from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant shot and killed Arnold Mitchell, if he did kill him, was at the time in such a state of fixed or settled frenzy or mental insanity induced by antecedent and long-continued use of intoxicating drinks or liquors, and not produced by the immediate effects of intoxicating drinks, as not to have been conscious of what he is doing, or that the act was wrong, you will find the defendant not guilty."

At the request of the defendant the court instructed the jury that if the defendant was drunk when he committed the homicide, so that he was unable to entertain the "purposes or designs or to exercise the mental faculties necessary for the commission of the crime of murder in the first degree, then the jury could not convict him of murder in that degree." They were also instructed that voluntary drunkenness on the defendant's part at the time of the killing would excuse him from the charge of murder in the first degree if he was incapable of exercising his mental faculties, which must be exercised to commit murder in that degree; also that, before the jury could find the defendant guilty, they must believe beyond a reasonable doubt that he possessed a mind sufficiently free from disease to enable him, at the time of the killing, to exercise the mental function, which must be exercised in the perpetration of murder in one of its degrees or manslaughter.

Charges were requested by defendant, embracing the same view of the law upon the subject of intoxication as an excuse for the commission of a crime requiring a certain or specific intent, and enlarging the doctrine as announced by this court to the point where they were <sup>—drunkenness as defense.</sup> without merit, in that they declared the doctrine of irresistible impulse, which has been shown to have been condemned by this court. These charges were made the subjects of assignments of error numbered 16, 18, 23, 31, 33, 44, 47, and 59. Assignment of error numbered 17 is abandoned. These assignments are also covered by those numbered 71, 72, 73, 78, 86, 87b, 98, 101. No error is made to appear by these assignments, and they are not sustained. The learned counsel for the plaintiff in error urge us to reverse the decisions of this court, in which it was announced that the doctrine of "irresistible impulse" or "moral insanity" was not recognized in this state as an excuse for an unlawful act.

The question as to what degree of irresponsibility should constitute incapacity to commit a criminal act was fully discussed in the case of Davis v. State, 44 Fla. 32, 32 So. 822. It was there pointed out that, in the absence of a statute defining such degree of irresponsibility, the common-law rule should govern. In 1903 the Davis Case was followed on this question in Williams v. State, 45 Fla. 128, 34 So. 279, and again in 1913 in Cochran v. State, 65 Fla. 91, 61 So. 187. The question seems to have first engaged the attention of this court in 1899, where, in Copeland v. State, 41 Fla. 320, 26 So. 319, the doctrine in the M'Naghten Case, supra, was first referred to as announcing the correct rule. For nearly twenty years the doctrine of "moral insanity" has been expressly repudiated in this state, and in the meantime legislatures have assembled and adjourned without enacting that doctrine into law. If it is true that there can be such a condition of mental irresponsibility on the part of any person that he or she may be fully conscious of the nature and character of the act intended to be committed, and know that it is a wrong act, and deliberately, from a premeditated design to kill, commit the act, and yet be said to be irresponsible because impelled by a so-called "irresistible impulse" to commit the act, that condition has never commended itself to the common sense of the legislature, and as such doctrine was not the rule at common law, it is not the rule in this state. We deem it unnecessary to discuss the merits of the doctrine, if it possesses any. We prefer to leave the matter to legislative action, both as to the degree of mental irresponsibility that should operate as an excuse for committing an unlawful act, and the method of proof of the existence of such mental condition. Human life is not held at the mercy of the unreasonable fears or cowardice of persons; neither should it be held at the caprice of those individuals who move among their fellows unrestrained, attend public places and social functions, but who claim immunity from punishment for violation of law upon the ground that they are so constituted that when they want to do a thing they just can't help doing it. It is possible that science may discover such a mental condition and the means of proving it. When it does, and the legislature enacts that such mental condition should excuse one from committing crime, such as murder, rape, arson, burglary, larceny, etc., then the courts will avail themselves of "every advance in science" to discover the truth in the case presented.

Assignments of error numbered 20, 24, 25, and 38 attack the ruling of the court in refusing instructions numbered 14, 18, 19, and 32. The above assignments are also duplicated by those numbered 75, 79, 80, and 92. Some of these charges express the idea that the jury are the judges of the weight of evidence and credibility of the witnesses. In so far the charges were correct, and were fully covered by the general charge. Some of them, notably the fourteenth and eighteenth, directed special attention to the state's witnesses in connection with the duty of the jury to reject such evidence as they deemed unworthy of belief. In this particular the requested instructions were wrong. It is improper to segregate any witness from the entire body of witnesses, or any fact from all the material facts sought to be established, and, by calling special attention to him or it, give him undue prominence, or the fact undue importance, either for the purpose of strengthening the testimony of the witness or disparaging it. Nor should this be done with reference to any class of witnesses. A witness is no more a liar because he is called by the state than when he is called by the defense, and there is no greater reason for cautioning the jury to disregard the evidence of state witnesses when they speak falsely than to disregard that of the defendant's witnesses for the same reason. Charge numbered 19, in phraseology slightly different from that used by the court, dealt with the question of a reasonable doubt and the jury's duty in the matter of weighing the evidence. In the discharge of this duty they were instructed to use common sense. Although the court did not tell the jury in those words that, in the performance of their function, they should use that very desirable degree of sense, we think that the failure to do so on request was not reversible error. In the thirty-second charge requested, the jury were directed to give to the "defense in this case and the evidence which tends to support them, if any of it tends to support them, a charitable, as distinguished from an unfriendly, view and consideration, and not captiously to reject either." If it was intended by this charge to direct the jury's attention to the witnesses for the defense, and ask for them charitable consideration of their testimony, the charge was both unjust to the defendant and unfair to the witnesses, in so far as such direction might imply that, without the exercise of that virtue by the jury, the disingenuous character of their testimony might be apparent. We find no error in these assignments, and the same are not sustained.

Trial—instruction featuring particular witness.

Assignments numbered 21, 26, 27, 32, 43, 48, 51, 52, 53, and 60 are next considered. These raise the question of the correctness of the court's refusal to give requested instructions numbered 15, 20, 21, 26, 37, 42, 45, 46, 47, and No. (c). The same questions are also presented by assignments numbered 76, 81, 82, 87, 97, 102, 105, 106, 106b. These requested instructions dealt with the subject of reasonable doubt, which was fully covered by the court in its general charge, and they sought to apply an abridged interpretation of the rule in cases of circumstantial evidence, which was not applicable to the facts in this case. Some of them seemed to place the burden upon defendant of establishing his innocence by putting the affirmative side of the rule of reasonable doubt, as, for instance: "No. 47. If every aspect of the evidence when duly weighed and considered supports a reasonable supposition that defendant is innocent, he must be acquitted;" which, we think, would have constituted error to have given. The court charged the jury fully on the subject of a reasonable doubt. The defendant got the full benefit of his right to have the jury informed upon this subject. He also had full benefit of the law of presumption of innocence. The charges requested could have produced no other effect than to confuse, perplex, and obscure the true principle or law, so clearly expressed by the court in its general charge, couched in language often approved by this court. See Brown v. State, 46 Fla. 159, 35 So. 82; Baker v. State, 51 Fla. 1, 40 So. 673; Lovett v. State, 30 Fla. 142, 17 L.R.A. 705, 11 So. 550; McCoggle v. State, 41 Fla. 525, 26 So. 734; Cook v. State, 46 Fla. 20, 35 So. 665; Bass v. State, 58 Fla. 1, 50 So. 531.

The refusal to give the sixteenth instruction requested is made the basis of the twenty-second and seventy-seventh assignments of error. The instruction directed the jury that when a state witness exhibited bias or ill will toward the defendant, or gave evidence which the jury did not believe, it was nevertheless their duty to "weigh the evidence of such witness in the light of such bias or ill will, and accord it such weight or credibility as they think it entitled to," etc. In many typewritten pages of high-sounding phrases and "learned talk" counsel undertake to demonstrate the correctness of the above charge from a standpoint of logic and the "canons and recognized forms of thought and reasoning." We think the charge is bad, because if the jury does not believe the testimony of a witness because of his ill will or bias, or for other reason, then the jury is not required for any reason to give such testimony any credibility or weigh it at all. The court fully and correctly charged the jury as to its duty and privileges in the matter of weighing evidence and estimating the credibility of witnesses. There was no error in refusing this charge.

The twenty-eighth and eighty-eighth assignments of error are based upon the court's refusal to give instruction numbered 22, as requested by the defendant. This instruction directed the jury to acquit the defendant of murder, if they were reasonably satisfied that he did not have "understanding or intelligence to commit murder," by reason of being intoxicated. There are many reasons why this instruction was bad. In the first place, murder is divided into three degrees, and the charge takes no account of voluntary intoxication. In the second place, if the principle announced was correct, it would not be required of defendant to satisfy the jury that he was in such mental condition; it would be sufficient for acquittal if the evidence raised in the jury's minds a reasonable doubt as to the defendant's ability to entertain the necessary intent or design. There was no error in refusing this instruction.

—bias of witness
—effect.

The thirty-fourth, thirty-fifth, and eighty-ninth assignments of error are based upon charges numbered 28 and 29, requested by the defendant and refused. In the case of charge numbered 28, counsel admits that it is "universally condemned by the decisions of the Florida courts," but that the state of Alabama holds differently. As to the twenty-ninth requested instruction, counsel admit that it was substantially covered by the general charge. So there was no error in refusing these two instructions. The twenty-eighth charge sought to apply the doctrine of intoxication as an excuse for committing murder in the first degree to murder in all its degrees, and the twenty-ninth charge was upon the subject of a reasonable doubt.

Homicide—
intoxication—effect on degree.

Requested instruction numbered 33 is made the basis of the thirty-ninth and ninety-third assignments of error. This charge informed the jury that they could not find the defendant guilty of murder or manslaughter unless they believed from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that he was guilty. The general charge covered the proposition.

Assignments of error numbered 36 and 90 attack the court's refusal to give charge numbered 30. In the brief, however, counsel discuss requested instruction numbered 34, the refusal to give which is made the basis of assignments numbered 40 and 100. There was no error in the refusal to give either charge. No. 34 required acquittal if there was a probability of innocence, and No. 30 directed the jury to consider the good character of defendant for peace and quiet with all the other evidence, and, if there was a reasonable doubt of his guilt, to acquit him. The defendant's reputation for peace and quiet was not attacked nor put in issue. He was not even a witness in his own behalf, but the court's charge was full upon the law of presumption of innocence, reasonable doubt, and self-defense, although the latter charge was not applicable to the evidence.

The forty-first assignment of error and the ninety-fifth attack the court's ruling in refusing the thirty-fifth requested instruction. This was an instruction upon the subject of manslaughter which was fully covered in the general charge.

The fifty-seventh and one hundred and tenth assignments of error attack the refusal to give requested instruction numbered 64. This charge directed the jury to acquit the defendant if they believed that his mind, at the time of the killing of Mitchell, was in a state of settled frenzy or insanity, either permanent or intermittent, as distinguished from voluntary intoxication, and to such an extent as to dethrone reason and subdue his will and disable him from exercising the mental functions necessary to constitute murder in either degree of manslaughter. The court refused the charge upon the ground that it was covered in the general charge. Under assignment of error numbered 16, as discussed in this opinion, the charge there quoted, which was given by the court, we think fully states the law upon the subject. But other instructions, given at defendant's request, covered the same proposition of law, and those charges given by the court were even more favorable to the defendant than the one requested.

Under the fifty-eighth and one hundred and eleventh assignments of error counsel for defendant insist that the court should have instructed the jury to acquit him. It is argued that there was no proof of venue. This position is without merit. There was evidence that the crime was committed at the home of Charlie Carter, and that he lived in Walton county. A picture of the house was made and identified by witnesses as the home of Carter and the place where the crime was committed.

The 112th, 113th, 114th, 115th, 116th, and 117th assignments of error raise the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict. Although the bill of exceptions in this case does not conform to the rule, which requires a certificate that it contains all this evidence, and in fact purports to set forth only in substance the testimony of the witnesses, and by reason of such defect in the bill of exceptions the assignments of error based upon the contention that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict would have to fail, we have, nevertheless, in view of the consideration heretofore mentioned, sufficiency. examined the evidence as shown by the bill of exceptions, and we are of the opinion that is amply sustains the verdict.

Evidence—

The assignments of error numbered 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, and 131 challenge the correctness of the court's charge to the jury in many particulars. It would be of no benefit to set out in this opinion the court's charge in full, nor to answer the criticisms of counsel. Arguments have been made in support of what to us appear impossible positions. For instance, complaint is made that the court erred in directing the jury that, if they believed from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was guilty of murder in the first degree, they should find him guilty. Other equally clear and perfectly correct and sound propositions of law are attacked and made the subject of assignments of error, and many pages of the brief devoted to their support. We have carefully examined the instructions given by the court upon its own motion, and, at the request of defendant's counsel, we have also examined the instruction requested and refused, and we have found no reversible error in any particular in the trial of this case. The record shows that the defendant was represented by able and resourceful counsel; that the jury was composed of fair and impartial men; that the judge was liberal in his rulings both in the admission and rejection of evidence and the instructions to the jury. The trial was without prejudicial error to the defendant in any of its phases, and the court's rulings were in no instance subject to the criticism that the strict rule of the law was invoked against the defendant. We have discovered no error in the record, so the judgment is affirmed.

Browne, Ch. J., and Taylor, Whitfield, and West, JJ., concur.

Browne, Ch. J., concurring:

I concur in the decision and opinion in this case, but wish to call attention to a remark by the court which, under a different condition of facts, would, in my opinion, be harmful error.

In the examination of one of the witnesses who gave his opinion as to the mental condition of the prisoner, this question was asked: "In your judgment, are you prepared to say that your brother was of unsound mind?"

In ruling upon an objection to this question, the court said: "Well, the value of it is for the jury, to judge from the nature and the conduct; you can let it go to the jury for what it is worth."

The use of expressions of this character by a trial judge in admitting testimony—"it can go to the jury for what it is worth"—is not to be commended. If the testimony is proper to be considered by the jury, it should not go to them discredited by a slighting remark from the trial judge as to what it is worth. All testimony goes to the jury "for what it is worth," and trial judges should not select portions and submit them to the jury with this or similar discrediting remarks.

Mr. Justice Ellis has fully discussed the testimony of the witnesses relating to the sanity of the defendant, and this court holds that the testimony was not properly admitted; but, as it was permitted to go to the jury at the defendant's request, and was favorable to him, no harm was done the prisoner in this instance by the judge's remark.

ANNOTATION.

Drunkenness as affecting existence of elements essential to murder in second degree.

- I. Introduction, 1052.
- II. View that drunkenness is immaterial, 1053.
- III. Cases holding that drunkenness may negative existence of essential elements, 1057.

I. Introduction.

The present annotation includes cases of voluntary intoxication only. It does not include cases dealing merely with such questions as the effect of drunkenness on provocation or self-defense, but treats rather of such effect independent of specific defenses. In other words, as is indicated in the title, the annotation purports to deal only with the effect of drunkenness on what are or may be the essential elements of second degree murder, such as malice and intent.

The question as to what degree of drunkenness is sufficient to constitute a defense on a prosecution for homicide is not considered in the annotation, it being assumed that the intoxication is such as might at least reduce murder from the first to the second degree.

Cases decided under the common law, which did not divide murder into degrees, or under statutes not creating degrees of murder, are obviously, from the title of the present annotation, not within its scope. Broad statements are sometimes made as to the effect of drunkenness to reduce homicide from murder to manslaughter; but these cases, of course, where there are no statutory degrees of murder, are not in point in the present annotation. Attention may, however, profitably be called in this connection to the fact that a general rule on the question, where there are no statutory degrees of murder, can scarcely be laid down, because, if murder generally is defined by statute, the conclusion depends on the particular statute, and different results have been reached in different jurisdictions. Thus, there are decisions in some states, independent of statutory degrees of murder, to the effect that murder cannot be reduced to manslaughter by showing that the perpetrator was drunk. See Rafferty v. People (1872) 66 Ill. 118; People v. Rogers (1858) 18 N. Y. 9, 72 Am. Dec. 484; Harris v. State (1914) 74 Tex. Crim. Rep. 652, 169 S. W. 657; and Truett v. State (1914) 74 Tex. Crim. Rep. 284, 168 S. W. 523 (decided after amendment of law consolidating first and second degree murder).

Under the Oklahoma statute, however, defining homicide as murder "when perpetrated without authority of law and with a premeditated design to effect the death of the person killed, or of any other human being," it is held that one who commits a homicide while so drunk as to be incapable of forming a premeditated design to kill, if he had formed no purpose to commit the crime prior to the time he became intoxicated, is not guilty of murder, but is guilty of manslaughter in the first degree. Morris v. Territory (1909) 1 Okla. Crim. Rep. 617, 99 Pac. 760, 101 Pac. 111; Updike v. State (1913) 9 Okla. Crim. Rep. 124, 130 Pac. 1107; Cheadle v. State (1915) 11 Okla. Crim. Rep. 566, L.R.A.1915E, 1031, 149 Pac. 919; Perryman v. State (1916) 12 Okla. Crim. Rep. 500, 159 Pac. 937; Beshirs v. State (1918) 14

Okla. Crim. Rep. 578, 174 Pac. 577; Tubby v. State (1919) 15 Okla. Crim. Rep. 496, 178 Pac. 491; Chambers v. State (1919) — Okla. Crim. Rep. —, 182 Pac. 714; Collier v. State (1920) — Okla. Crim. Rep. —, 186 Pac. 963. It is so held notwithstanding a statute in that state providing that no act committed by a person while in a state of voluntary intoxication shall be deemed the less criminal by reason of his having been in such condition.

And in Kentucky it has been held that evidence of drunkenness of the accused, in connection with other circumstances, is admissible as tending to show lack of malice, and so to reduce a homicide to manslaughter. Shannahan v. Com. (1871) 8 Bush (Ky.) 463, 8 Am. Rep. 465, overruling Blimm v. Com. (1870) 7 Bush (Ky.) 820, and Smith v. Com. (1864) 1 Duv. (Ky.) 224; Nichols v. Com. (1875) 11 Bush (Ky.) 575; Buckhannon v. Com. (1887) 86 Ky. 110, 5 S. W. 358 (the court saying that, as a deliberate intent to take life is an essential element of murder, drunkenness may be proved as bearing upon its existence or nonexistence); Wilkerson v. Com. (1888) 88 Ky. 29, 9 S. W. 836 (the court saying that evidence of intoxication is admissible as bearing on the existence or nonexistence of that deliberate intent essential to the crime of murder); Madison v. Com. (1891) 13 Ky. L. Rep. 313, 17 S. W. 164; Rogers v. Com. (1894) 96 Ky. 24, 27 S. W. 813; Bishop v. Com. (1901) 109 Ky. 553, 60 S. W. 190.

The cases cited above in jurisdictions where murder is not divided into degrees, or was not at the time of the decision, or, at least, where no reference is made to any statutory degrees of murder, are referred to merely for illustrative purposes, to show that different decisions have been reached in different states, and that the question depends largely on the statutory definition of murder.

While the holding or assumption in the case as to the elements or ingredients of murder in the second degree must be taken in consideration in determining the effect of the decision on the question under consideration, the note, of course, is not concerned with the correctness or incorrectness of the holding or assumption in that regard.

II. View that drunkenness is immaterial.

The rule is well settled that drunkenness does not excuse a homicide. It is also well settled that drunkenness may be such as to reduce a homicide from first to second degree murder, because it may negative the existence of some of those elements essential to first degree murder. The question then arises whether drunkenness may be a defense to murder in the second degree and reduce the homicide to manslaughter, or some other criminal offense below murder. And this would seem to depend on the essentials under the statute defining second degree murder. It is said in 21 Cyc. 712, that at common law and under many statutes a homicide may be malicious, and hence be murder, although there was no actual design to take life. Malice, of course, may be implied under the common law. And many of the statutes defining second degree murder do not require a specific intent to kill. Eliminating such elements as provocation and self-defense, the rule appears to be that where implied malice is sufficient to constitute murder in the second degree, and a specific intent to kill is not required, the voluntary drunkenness of the accused at the time of committing the homicide is immaterial so far as that degree is concerned, and will not reduce the crime to manslaughter, or other crime of a lower degree than murder.

Arkansas.—Byrd v. State (1905) 76 Ark. 286, 88 S. W. 974; Henslee v. State (1910) 97 Ark. 103, 133 S. W. 172; see also Chowning v. State (1909) 91 Ark. 503, 121 S. W. 735, 18 Ann. Cas. 529 (distinguishing effect of drunkenness where crime is assault to kill and where it is second degree murder, on ground that in former intent is necessary).

California. — People v. Nichol (1867) 34 Cal. 211; People v. Langton (1885) 67 Cal. 427, 7 Pac. 843, 7 Am. Crim. Rep. 439; see also People v. Conte (1912) 17 Cal. App. 788, 122 Pac. 457 (where the court said that intoxication could at most have reduced the offense to second degree murder); and People v. Belencia (1863) 21 Cal. 544, which quotes the rule.

Connecticut. — State v. Johnson (1874) 41 Conn. 584.

Florida.—Garner v. State (1891) 28 Fla. 113, 29 Am. St. Rep. 232, 9 So. 835; Thomas v. State (1904) 47 Fla. 99, 36 So. 161; HALL v. STATE (reported herewith) ante, 1034.

Iowa.—State v. Wilson (1913) 166 Iowa, 309, 144 N. W. 47, 147 N. W. 739, citing State v. Dorland (1897) 103 Iowa, 169, 72 N. W. 492, as expressly recognizing the rule that, as bearing on second degree murder and manslaughter, intoxication is not material.

New Jersey. — Wilson v. State (1897) 60 N. J. L. 171, 37 Atl. 954, 38 Atl. 428.

New Mexico. — State v. Cooley (1914) 19 N. M. 91, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 230, 140 Pac. 1111.

Oregon.—State v. Weaver (1899) 35 Or. 415, 58 Pac. 109; State v. Trapp (1910) 56 Or. 588, 109 Pac. 1094; State v. Morris (1917) 83 Or. 429, 163 Pac. 567.

Pennsylvania. — Com. v. M'Fall (1794) Addison, 255; Com. v. Perrier (1858) 3 Phila. 229; Com. v. Crozier (1867) 1 Brewst. 349; Com. v. Platt (1876) 11 Phila. 415; Com. v. Baker (1876) 11 Phila. 631; see also, as implying rule, Jones v. Com. (1874) 75 Pa. 403, 1 Am. Crim. Rep. 262; Com. v. Cleary (1890) 135 Pa. 64, 8 L.R.A. 301, 19 Atl. 1017, later appeal in (1892) 148 Pa. 26, 23 Atl. 1110, and Com. v. Detweiler (1910) 229 Pa. 304, 78 Atl. 271.

Tennessee.—Pirtle v. State (1849) 9 Humph. 663; Haile v. State (1850) 11 Humph. 154; Norfleet v. State (1857) 4 Sneed, 340; Atkins v. State (1907) 119 Tenn. 458, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1031, 105 S. W. 353; see also, as implying rule, Cartwright v. State (1881) 8 Lea, 376.

Texas.—Colbath v. State (1878) 4 Tex. App. 76; Brown v. State (1878) 4 Tex. App. 275; McCarty v. State (1878) 4 Tex. App. 461; Gaitan v. State (1882) 11 Tex. App. 544; Hous- ton v. State (1883) 26 Tex. App. 657, 14 S. W. 352; Clore v. State (1888) 26 Tex. App. 624, 10 S. W. 242; Evers v. State (1892) 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 318, 18 L.R.A. 421, 37 Am. St. Rep. 811, 20 S. W. 744; Hernandez v. State (1893) 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 271, 22 S. W. 972; Tippett v. State (1897) 37 Tex. Crim. Rep. 186, 39 S. W. 120; Lyles v. State (1912) 64 Tex. Crim. Rep. 621, 142 S. W. 592.

Virginia.—Boswell v. Com. (1871) 20 Gratt. 860 (approving rule); Willis v. Com. (1879) 32 Gratt. 929.

West Virginia.—State v. Robinson (1882) 20 W. Va. 713, 43 Am. Rep. 799.

Wyoming. — Gustavenson v. State (1902) 10 Wyo. 300, 68 Pac. 1006.

Proof of intoxication alone is no defense to the charge of murder in the second degree. State v. Trapp (Or.) supra. And it was held in this case that, where the conviction was of murder in the second degree, rulings of the trial court and instructions regarding the degree of intoxication of the accused, or its effect on his mind, were not prejudicial, there being no evidence tending to show insanity or any other condition than voluntary, immediate drunkenness.

Drunkenness cannot be taken into consideration in determining whether a party is guilty of murder in the second degree. Haile v. State (1850) 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 154.

Intoxication is a mere circumstance to be considered in determining whether premeditation is present or absent; what constitutes murder in the second degree by a sober man is equally murder in the second degree if committed by a drunken man. Gustavenson v. State (Wyo.) supra. And the court said this is so even when the intoxication is so extreme as to make a person unconscious of what he is doing, or to create a temporary insanity.

And in Wilson v. State (N. J.) supra, the court said that what constitutes murder in the second degree by a sober man is equally murder in the second degree if committed by a drunken man.

Also in Byrd v. State (1905) 76 Ark. 286, 88 S. W. 974, supra, the court said: "No specific intent to kill is necessary to constitute the crime of murder in the second degree under our statute, and the law is that 'the intention to drink may fully supply the plea of malice aforethought;' so that, if one voluntarily becomes too drunk to know what he is about, and then, without provocation, assaults and beats another to death, he commits murder, the same as if he was sober."

The rule was laid down in Thomas v. State (1904) 47 Fla. 99, 36 So. 161, that voluntary intoxication, not resulting in a fixed or settled frenzy or insanity, either permanent or intermittent, does not excuse or mitigate any degree of unlawful homicide below murder in the first degree.

And that the view that intoxication may negative the commission of murder in the first degree does not apply to murder in the other degrees, see the reported case (HALL v. STATE, ante, 1034).

It was said in Tippett v. State (1897) 37 Tex. Crim. Rep. 186, 39 S. W. 120, that all the authorities concur in holding that drunkenness produced by the recent use of intoxicating liquors is no defense to murder in the second degree.

"If anything is well settled in the law, it is that drunkenness is no defense for crime unless intent or knowledge is an essential element of the offense charged, and not then unless the accused was so drunk as to be incapable of entertaining the requisite intent or of possessing the requisite knowledge. . . . At the common law, degrees of murder were not recognized, and a specific intent to kill was not essential. Any killing with malice, either express or implied, without justification or excuse, was murder, and voluntary intoxication, however excessive, did not constitute a defense, nor did it excuse or mitigate the offense. . . . The unexplained killing of a human being with a deadly weapon is presumed to have been with malice and is murder in the second degree under the statutes of this state, and the burden of proof is on the state to raise the offense to murder in the first degree. . . . To accomplish this, deliberation and premeditation with a specific intention to kill must be established. This being shown, intoxication furnishes no defense, but it may be proven as bearing on whether the accused in fact acted with deliberation, premeditation, or intent to kill. . . . As neither the specific intent to kill nor premeditation and deliberation are essential to constitute murder in the second degree or manslaughter, the court did not err in omitting reference to these offenses in the instructions given." State v. Wilson (1913) 166 Iowa, 309, 144 N. W. 47.

"While temporary insanity produced by the recent use of intoxicating liquors may be considered in passing on whether one is guilty of murder in the first or second degree, yet it cannot be considered in fixing the grade of offense in any other instance." Lyles v. State (1912) 64 Tex. Crim. Rep. 621, 142 S. W. 592. And it was said that the trial court did not err in instructing the jury that temporary insanity produced by intoxicants might be considered in determining the punishment, but could not be considered in determining whether or not the defendant was guilty of murder in the second degree, assault to murder, or aggravated assault.

Voluntary drunkenness even to the extent of stupefaction or unconsciousness is not a defense to murder in the second degree. Com. v. Platt (1876) 11 Phila. (Pa.) 415.

The rule has been said in some cases to be that, as between murder in the second degree and manslaughter, the drunkenness of the defendant can form no legitimate subject of inquiry. People v. Nichol (1867) 34 Cal. 211; People v. Langton (1885) 67 Cal. 427, 7 Pac. 843, 7 Am. Crim. Rep. 439; Wilson v. State (1897) 60 N. J. L. 171, 37 Atl. 954, 38 Atl. 428; State v. Cooley (1914) 19 N. M. 91, 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 230, 140 Pac. 1111; Pirtle v. State (1849) 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 663; Atkins v. State (1907) 119 Tenn. 458, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1031, 105 S. W. 353; Boswell v. Com. (1871) 20 Gratt. (Va.) 860 (approving rule); State v.

Robinson (1882) 20 W. Va. 713, 43 Am. Rep. 799; see also People v. Belencia (1863) 21 Cal. 544, which quotes the rule.

In State v. Cooley (1914) 19 N. M. 91, 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 230, 140 Pac. 1111, supra, the court, after laying down the rule that between the two offenses, murder in the second degree and voluntary manslaughter, the drunkenness of the offender forms no legitimate matter of inquiry, said that if the killing was unlawful and voluntary, and without deliberate premeditation, the offense was murder in the second degree, malice being implied, unless the provocation were of such a character as would reduce the crime to voluntary manslaughter, for which offense a drunken man was equally responsible as a sober one.

Also in State v. Robinson (1882) 20 W. Va. 713, 43 Am. Rep. 799, supra, the court said: "We think we are fully authorized under the authorities to say that drunkenness is no excuse for crime; at common law the implied malice from his act would doom him to the scaffold, although he was too drunk, when he committed the deed, to harbor express malice. Now the only change made in the stringent rule of the common law is, that where, under a statute, in order to constitute murder in the first degree, deliberation and premeditation are required, upon the question of whether there was on the part of the prisoner deliberation and premeditation, the jury may consider the fact that he was intoxicated at the time of the killing. The change goes no further. Upon the question of whether the prisoner is guilty of murder in the second degree or manslaughter, the jury are not permitted to consider the drunkenness of the prisoner at all."

And in the syllabus by the court in Garner v. State (1891) 28 Fla. 113, 29 Am. St. Rep. 232, 9 So. 835, it is held that as between murder in any degree below the first and manslaughter, intoxication plays no part; that the only purpose for which it is admissible is to show an absence of a premeditated design to kill, or that the killing was not murder in the first degree; and that the only effect of proof of intoxication rendering the accused incapable of forming or entertaining such design is to reduce the killing to murder of the second or third degree, according to the circumstances.

In State v. Johnson (1874) 41 Conn. 584, the court said that murder in the second degree rested on implied malice; that malice may be implied from the circumstances of the homicide; and if a drunken man take the life of another, unaccompanied with circumstances of provocation or justification, the jury is warranted in finding the existence of malice, although no express malice is proved; that intoxication, which is itself a crime against society, combines with the act of killing, and the evil intent to take life which necessarily accompanies it, and altogether affords sufficient grounds for implying malice; and that intoxication, therefore, so far from disproving malice, is itself a circumstance from which malice may be implied.

Since intoxication does not of itself, as matter of law, reduce the homicide from murder in the first to the second degree, it will not, of course, as matter of law, reduce it to manslaughter. State v. Johnson (1873) 40 Conn. 136.

Drunkenness is not a defense to manslaughter where this crime involves no specific intent. Laws v. State (1905) 144 Ala. 118, 42 So. 40. The court said that the most that could be claimed was that the fact of excessive drunkenness was sometimes admissible to reduce the grade of the crime when the question of intent, malice, or premeditation was involved; that as manslaughter did not involve a specific intent, drunkenness was no defense, and all the charges predicated the defendant's acquittal upon his drunken condition were properly refused.

State v. Powell (1844) 1 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 38, does not seem to be in accord with the authorities cited under III, infra, where a specific intent to kill was necessary, the court instructing the jury that, to constitute murder in the second degree, there must be an actual intention to kill, and that the intoxication of the accused could not be taken into consideration by the jury for the purpose of determining whether he intended to kill the deceased.

III. Cases holding that drunkenness may negative existence of essential elements.

If a specific intent to take life is required to constitute murder even in the second degree, drunkenness of the accused may be such as to reduce the crime from murder to manslaughter. Thus, there are a number of Alabama cases which apparently assume that an intention to take life is essential to murder even in the second degree, but not setting out the statute, to the effect that drunkenness on the part of the accused at the time of committing the homicide may reduce the offense from murder to manslaughter, if it is shown to have been so excessive as to render him incapable of forming the design to take life. Williams v. State (1886) 81 Ala. 1, 60 Am. Rep. 133, 1 So. 179, 7 Am. Crim. Rep. 443; Morrison v. State (1887) 84 Ala. 405, 4 So. 402; Cleveland v. State (1888) 86 Ala. 1, 5 So. 426; King v. State (1890) 90 Ala. 612, 8 So. 856; Springfield v. State (1892) 96 Ala. 81, 38 Am. St. Rep. 85, 11 So. 250; Heninburg v. State (1907) 151 Ala. 26, 43 So. 959; Hill v. State (1913) 9 Ala. App. 7, 64 So. 163.

It was said in Morrison v. State (1887) 84 Ala. 405, 4 So. 402, supra, that "the theory on which drunkenness may sometimes reduce a homicide from murder to manslaughter is, that it may so cloud the mind, so obscure the reasoning powers, as to satisfy the jury that the perpetrator could not have formed the design to take life. This, it is said, repels the idea that there was a preconceived purpose to kill. The drunkenness, however, to produce this mitigating effect, must be such as to render the accused incapable of forming or entertaining a specific intention; of premeditation, or deliberation."

In Heninburg v. State (1907) 151 Ala. 26, 43 So. 959, supra, the court stated that the law was too well settled to admit of question that drunkenness may never excuse or justify homicide; yet, when it exists to the degree that it renders the person incapable of entertaining malice or of forming an intent to kill, it may reduce the homicide from murder to manslaughter

And in State v. Corrivau (1904) 93 Minn. 38, 100 N. W. 688, the court approved instructions that if the defendant was so intoxicated at the time of the killing as to be incapable of entertaining a premeditated design to effect the death of the deceased, he could not be convicted of murder in the first degree; and that if he was so intoxicated that he was incapable of entertaining any design to kill the deceased, he could not be convicted of murder in the second degree, and that such a finding would reduce the offense to first degree manslaughter. The court said these instructions were in strict accord with the provisions of the Penal Code that whenever the actual existence of any particular purpose, motive, or intent is a necessary element to constitute a particular degree of crime, the jury may take into consideration the fact that the accused was intoxicated at the time in determining the purpose, motive, or intent with which he committed the act.

In Smith v. State (1876) 4 Neb. 277, the court held that requested instructions should have been given to the effect that if the jury believed that, at the time of the killing, the accused was intoxicated, they might consider this fact to rebut the idea that it was done in the cool and deliberate state of mind necessary to constitute first degree murder; and that unless they were satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the accused, at the time of the killing, was in such a state of mind that he could form an intention maliciously to kill, and did form such intention, they could not convict him of a higher crime than manslaughter.

The rule that where intent to kill is an essential ingredient in second degree murder the intoxication of the accused may be such as to reduce the homicide to a lower degree is implied in Davis v. State (1874) 25 Ohio St. 369, where the court approved instructions to the effect that drunkenness not amounting to insanity is of little weight as applicable to the crime of murder in the second degree, unless it exists to an extent which shows that the accused was, at the time, incapable of forming a purpose, or that he did not intend the act he did, or unless it caused or was connected with a sudden quarrel, so as to make the act manslaughter. The court cited as holding substantially to this effect the case of Nichols v. State (1858) 8 Ohio St. 435. In the latter case it was said that both in first and second degree murder, as defined by the statute of that state, the intent to kill is an essential ingredient of the crime; that the killing must be "purposely" done.

And the use of the word "purposely" in the Kansas statute defining second degree murder has been held to imply the existence of an intention to cause death; hence, if drunkenness is so extreme as to prevent the existence of an intention to kill, it may reduce a homicide from murder to manslaughter. State v. Rumble (1909) 81 Kan. 16, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 376, 105 Pac. 1. The court said: "If a person is too drunk to form an intent to kill, he cannot be guilty of any offense for the commission of which such intent is necessary. . . . At common law murder may be committed without any actual design to take life . . . and therefore drunkenness can be no defense to that charge. . . . Under some statutes which divide murder into degrees, an involuntary homicide may be murder in the second degree. . . . But in State v. Young (1895) 55 Kan. 355, 40 Pac. 659, it was held, following the Ohio decisions, that the use of the word 'purposely' in defining second degree murder implies the existence of an intention to cause death; and this is the interpretation elsewhere placed upon that language. . . . It necessarily follows that drunkenness so extreme as to prevent the forming of a purpose to kill might, under our statute, reduce what would have been murder at the common law to manslaughter, and in a proper case instructions to that effect should be given. . . . It is to be borne in mind, however, that 'the fact of intoxication, no matter how complete and overpowering, is not conclusive evidence of the absence of an intent to take life.'" And the court referred to the doctrine as stated in another case in the same state that "for a person to be too drunk to entertain an intent to kill, it would seem that he would have to be too drunk to entertain an intent to shoot."

R. E. H.

BIDWELL COAL COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

FLORA DAVIDSON.

Iowa Supreme Court—November 15, 1919.

(— Iowa, —, 174 N. W. 592.)

Workmen's compensation — who is employee — shot firer in mine.

1. A shot firer in a mine, who under agreement between the miners and the owner may be designated and discharged by the miners, and who is paid by deductions from the ton rate allowed the miners for doing the work, is an employee of the owner so as to be entitled, in case of injury, to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1064.]

— liberal construction of statute.

2. A workmen's compensation act is to be liberally construed so as to bring alleged injuries within its spirit rather than within its letter.

— finding of commissioners — how far binding on court.

3. A finding of the commissioners that an injured person was not an employee of the one from whom compensation is sought under the Workmen's Compensation Act, being jurisdictional, is not binding on the court on appeal.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Wapello County (Vermillion, J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought, under the Workmen's Compensation Act, to recover compensation for injury, resulting in death of her husband, while in the employ of defendant. Affirmed.

Statement by Gaynor, J.:

Action to recover compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act. The commissioner refused to allow compensation on the theory that the deceased was not an employee of the company at the time he received his injuries. On appeal to the district court a different conclusion was reached. Appeal was taken to this court from the action of the district court, and this is affirmed.

Messrs. Stipp, Perry, Bannister, & Starzinger, for appellant:

The finding of facts made by the board of arbitration and industrial commissioner are final and cannot be appealed from.

Griffith v. Cole Bros. 183 Iowa, 415, L.R.A.1918F, 923, 165 N. W. 577, 15 N. C. C. A. 674; Pace v. Appanoose County, — Iowa, —, 168 N. W. 916, 17 N. C. C. A. 682; Munn v. Industrial Board, 274 Ill. 70, 113 N. E. 110, 12 N. C. C. A. 652; Pigeon's Case, 216 Mass. 51, 102 N. E. 982, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 737, 4 N. C. C. A. 516; La Veck v. Parke, D. & Co. 190 Mich. 604, L.R.A.1916D, 1277, 157 N. W. 72; Dale v. Saunders Bros. 218 N. Y. 59, 112 N. E. 571, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 703; Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 807, 159 Pac. 721.

Under the Compensation Act, the defendant company is obligated to pay compensation only to its own employees.

Pace v. Appanoose County, — Iowa, —, 168 N. W. 916, 17 N. C. C. A. 682.

Whether Davidson was the employee of appellant depends on some or all of the following four facts: (1) Who selected or hired him as shot firer. (2) Who paid him as shot firer. (3) Who had power to discharge him as shot firer. (4) Who controlled him as to the details of the manner in which he did his work.

1 Labatt, Mast. & S. pp. 56, 60, 66, 68; Brown v. Industrial Acci. Commission, 174 Cal. 457, 163 Pac. 664; Pace v. Appanoose County, — Iowa, —, 168 N. W. 916, 17 N. C. C. A. 682.

Messrs. John T. Clarkson, Fred C. Huebner, and John W. Lewis, for appellee:

In construing a statute, the rule is to liberally construe the act so as to bring the case within the spirit rather than the letter of the law.

Rural Independent School Dist. v. New Independent School Dist. 120 Iowa, 119, 94 N. W. 284.

The Compensation Law should be liberally construed.

Brien v. Wisconsin Pub. Service Co. 166 Wis. 24, 163 N. W. 182; Rish v. Iowa Portland Cement Co. — Iowa, —, 170 N. W. 532; State ex rel. Virginia & R. Lake Co. v. District Ct. 128 Minn. 43, 150 N. W. 211, 7 N. C. C. A. 1076.

Benjamin Davidson was an employee of the defendant company at the time he sustained the injury which caused his death.

Hitchcock v. Arctic Creamery Co. 170 Iowa, 368, 150 N. W. 727; Aga v. Harbach, 127 Iowa, 144, 109 Am. St. Rep. 377, 102 N. W. 838, 4 Ann. Cas. 441, 18 Am. Neg. Rep. 71; Princeton Coal Min. Co. v. Downer, 48 Ind. App. 136, 93 N. E. 1009; McAllister v. National Fire-Proofing Co. Ohio Ind. Comm. Dec. No. 83, Aug. 31, 1914; Employers' Indemnity Co. v. Kelly Coal Co. 156 Ky. 74, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 850, 160 S. W. 914; Interstate Coal Co. v. Trivett, 155 Ky. 795, 160 S. W. 731; Curvin v. Grimes, 132 Ky. 555, 116 S. W. 725; Harris v. McNamara, 97 Ala. 181, 12 So. 103; Potorff v. Fidelity Coal Min. Co. 86 Kan. 774, 122 Pac. 120; M'Cready v. Dunlop, 2 F. 1027, 37 Scot. L. R. 779, 8 Scot. L. T. 91; State ex rel. Virginia & R. Lake Co. v. District Ct. 128 Minn. 43, 150 N. W. 211, 7 N. C. C. A. 1076; Yolo Water & Power Co. v. Industrial Acci. Commission, 35 Cal. App. 14, 168 Pac. 1146; State ex rel. Nienaber v. District Ct. 138 Minn. 416, L.R.A.1918F, 200, 165 N. W. 268; Brown v. Industrial Acci. Commission, 174 Cal. 457, 163 Pac. 664; Claremont Country Club v. Industrial Acci. Commission, 174 Cal. 395, L.R.A.1918F, 177, 163 Pac. 209; Tuttle v. Embury-Martin Lumber Co. 192 Mich. 385, 158 N. W. 875, Ann. Cas. 1918C, 664; Winn v. Anthon, 179 Iowa, 620, 161 N. W. 642; De Noyer v.

Cavanaugh, 221 N. Y. 273, 116 N. E. 992; White v. George A. Fuller Co. 226 Mass. 1, 114 N. E. 829.

The court may determine whether or not the board of arbitration or Iowa industrial commissioner arrived at the correct conclusion after applying the law to the facts.

Columbia School Supply Co. v. Lewis, 68 Ind. App. 386, 115 N. E. 103; Northwestern Iron Co. v. Industrial Commission, 154 Wis. 97, L.R.A.1916A, 369, 142 N. W. 271, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 877.

Gaynor, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case arises under the Workmen's Compensation Act (Code Supp. 1913, §§ 2477m to 2477m51). The plaintiff is the widow of one Ben Davidson. She claims that her husband was killed while in the employ of the defendant company. She claims, and the fact appears to be, that the defendant company is a corporation organized under the laws of this state and engaged in the business of mining, selling, and shipping coal, and was so engaged on and prior to the date on which Ben Davidson sustained the injuries that caused his death. Defendant company has a large number of men employed in its mine whose regular work is the mining of coal. The mining is not done by picks. Holes are drilled in the solid face. These holes are charged with powder and tamped, leaving a fuse extending from the mouth of the hole back to the charge. These fuses are lighted and followed by a blast which loosens the coal preparatory to being loaded in the mine car. After the blast the coal is gathered and loaded into cars by the miners. We need not enter into any detailed statement of this work. The drilling of the holes, charging the same with powder, tamping and placing the fuse, and loading the coal are all necessary to the work of securing the coal for the market, for which the company agrees to pay a stipulated sum per ton. After the holes are prepared by the miner in charge of the work, they are examined by what is called a shot examiner, for the purpose of ascertaining whether they are of the proper depth and properly located so that they can be discharged with safety, not only to the operator's property, but to the miners as well. The statute requires the company to furnish the examiner, and he must be qualified for that purpose. The shot may be fired by the miner in charge of the work, or by a shot firer selected for that purpose. After the holes have been prepared and examined by the examiner, the miner or the shot firer lights the fuse, to the end that the coal may be blasted from the face of the mine.

It is conceded that the examiner is employed and paid by the company. He is under the control and direction of the company. The contention here is that the shot firer is not an employee of the company, but is selected and controlled and paid by the miners themselves, and that it is his duty, as firer, to do that part of the work which the miner himself might do, and which it was his duty to do in the absence of a shot firer. It appears that prior to the time Ben Davidson was killed, one Medford had been employed by this company as shot examiner, and had been designated by the miners as the proper person to act in the capacity of shot firer, and acted in both capacities up to a certain date, when he left. Thereupon, with the knowledge and consent of both parties (the miners and the company), Ben Davidson took his place and acted in the capacity of shot examiner and shot firer. We do not find in the record any evidence of any specific employment of Davidson as shot firer. He acted as shot examiner with the knowledge and consent of the company. It was the duty of the company to furnish a shot examiner. The company accepted him to perform that work and discharge that duty. As said before, though there was no specific evidence that Davidson was employed by anyone as shot firer, he discharged that duty with the full knowledge of the company, and was discharging that duty at the time he was killed, and, we take it, was killed while discharging the duty of shot firer. The work of shot examiner precedes that of the shot firer and takes some time. After the work of examining is completed by the shot examiner, the shot firer follows, lighting each fuse as the same is prepared for that purpose. Where the same person acts as shot examiner and shot firer, he first proceeds with the examination, and when that is completed, and after the miners have all left, lights the fuses to blast the coal from the solid. Davidson had only been working about two days when he was injured. He had been a miner before that time, and had worked in this same mine. He was discharging this double duty, and had completed his work as examiner before he began the firing. He had already fired some of the shots in the mine when the explosion occurred which caused his death.

The following stipulation was entered into between the parties at the time of the submission of the cause to the industrial commissioner:

"(1) Benjamin Davidson sustained an injury which caused his death in the defendant coal company's mine, which occurred on or about September 6, 1916.

"(2) That the defendant company owned and operated the mine in or near the village of Bidwell, Wapello county, Iowa, being the mine in which Benjamin Davidson sustained the injury which caused his death.

"(3) That the defendant company was operating under the Workmen's Compensation Law, on and prior to September 6, 1916.

"(4) That Benjamin Davidson came to his death on said date in said mine in the course of, and growing out of, his employment of shooting down coal.

"(5) That Flora Davidson is the surviving widow of Benjamin Davidson, and is the dependent of decedent, Benjamin Davidson.

"(6) That exhibit A is the agreement between the miners and coal operators of Iowa, being an agreement between the members of the Coal Operators' Association on one part, and the members of District 13, U. M. W. of A., on the other part.

"(7) That Benjamin Davidson was a member of local union No. 3,039 in good standing, at Bidwell, Iowa, which local union was a constituent part of District 13, U. M. W. of A., under which agreement the said Benjamin Davidson, as a member of said local union, was working on September 6, 1916.

"(8) That on the said date, to wit, September 6, 1916, the Bidwell Coal Company was a member of the Iowa Coal Operators' Association and working under said agreement."

Under this stipulation but one question remains open for consideration: Was Ben Davidson an employee of the defendant company at the time he received his injuries?

At the time he received his injuries, he was acting in the capacity of shot firer. The exhibit A referred to in the stipulation is what is known as the "Des Moines Agreement," an agreement between the coal operators and coal miners, which contains, among other things, the following: "Whenever a majority of miners in any mine so decide, they may employ a shot firer for said mine, and whenever satisfactory arrangements can be made between the miners and the shot examiner for the same person to act as shot examiner and shot firer, the same may be done."

As said before, the state law requires the coal company to employ a shot examiner, but it does not require them to employ a shot firer. At least, this duty is not imposed by the statute. It grew to be a custom in mines to select as shot firer the one appointed by the company as shot examiner. A shot examiner was required to have a certificate of qualification, and we take it that it was thought to be safer for all that a qualified man should act in the dual capacity. But this was not imperative. The miners had a right, under this agreement, to designate and select any other person as shot firer if they so wished. While it does not appear affirmatively in this case that the miners selected Davidson, yet he was acting as shot firer with the knowledge and consent of the miners and the operators. He had succeeded to the work of Medford both as shot firer and shot examiner, and was discharging this double duty. It appears that the miners have not only the right to select the shot firer, but have the right also to discharge him. On complaint to the state inspector, however, the company may secure his removal if he is shown not to be qualified or competent for the work. Davidson was paid by the company as shot examiner. He was paid as shot firer in the following way: It was assumed, and probably is true, that the duty of firing the shot rested on the miner, and was included in the work necessary to be done in mining the coal, for which the operator allowed so much per ton. Both parties, assuming, however, that it would be better to have one person do the firing than to have each miner discharge his own shot, entered into an agreement by which the company deducted from the amount allowed per ton a certain sum to be, and which was, paid to the local union to compensate the shot firer for his work. This was paid by it to the shot firer. That is, the company did not pay to the miner the full sum per ton which the agreement called for, because of the fact that the miner did not discharge his own shots, and another was employed, by mutual consent, to do that work which the miner ordinarily was called upon to do, in order to earn the sum allowed for mining a ton. The company therefore deducted from the sum per ton allowed for the completed work a sufficient amount to meet the demands of the shot firer. What is the situation then?

This company was engaged in mining coal for the market. Its business was to get this coal out of the ground and upon the market. To this end it employed men to bring the coal from the ground that the company might place it upon the market. Every act in the mine in the way of getting this coal to the surface of the ground was done in the service of the company, and to effectuate the purpose for which the company was organized, and to make profitable to the company the work it had undertaken. The boring of these holes in the face of the mine, preparing the blast, and tamping the hole were all work done in furtherance of that purpose. The examining and the firing were all done with one end in view, to wit, to secure coal for the market. Had the miner who bored the hole, charged it with powder, and tamped it, lit the fuse to the blast, he would be clearly in the line of his employment, and clearly working as an employee in the service of the company. If he was injured or killed while so engaged, compensation should be made under the Workmen's Compensation Act. However, the company delegated to the miners the right to select one man to discharge this specific duty. This duty, when discharged, was discharged in the interests of the company. The agreement between the company and the miners was that the miners might designate or select a person to do this firing instead of doing it themselves. The company was not willing, however, to pay the miner the full amount per ton which he was entitled to under his contract, unless he did the firing which was a part of that work. It was not willing to pay the miner the full price for mining a ton while another was employed and paid for doing a part of the work. So it was agreed that the company should deduct a sum per ton from what it had agreed to pay per ton for the completed work, and pay this to the one who did this part of the work. The miners and the company agreed that this sum should be paid by the company to the man who did this particular work for the company.

So we find that the shot firer was in fact paid by the company. In the bookkeeping of the company it would appear that the full sum per ton agreed to be paid was allowed to the miner for mining the coal, and that the miner, out of this sum, paid the shot firer. That, however, is a mere matter of housekeeping. The real purpose and intent of the agreement was that the miner should not receive the full price per ton for mining, while another was doing part of the work essential to be done in order to procure the ton for which the compensation was allowable; that the company should pay to the one who did part of the work a portion of the sum which it had agreed to pay per ton for mining the coal.

It is next contended that the deceased was not an employee of the defendant for the reason that he was not under the control of the company; that he was employed by, and the power to discharge him rested in, the miners themselves, and not in the company.

It is true, as a general proposition, and we think the record shows it was so understood in conferences between the miners and the company, that the management of the mine and the direction of the mine are vested exclusively in the operators of the mine, and that the miners have no right to abridge this right. The selection of a shot firer was given by the company to the miners in the mine, and it is said that whenever a majority of the miners in any mine decide to do so, they may select the shot firers for the mine. That is, the company, having authority to select its own employees, delegated to the miners the right to select certain persons to do certain work in the mine. The work to be done in the mine was for the use and benefit of the mine owners. The power to select the workmen rests originally and primarily in the owners. They may delegate that right to select to another. The selection made under this delegated power is the selection of the mine operators themselves. Ordinarily, the mine owners have a right to control the action of their employees and discharge them if thought proper. The law gives them this right. They may delegate to the miners themselves a right to select the shot firer. The miners are peculiarly interested in this selection. They are in a position to judge of the character of the man employed. Their work and their personal safety are involved in the selection. They designate a person. The person designated is satisfactory to the operators of the mine, and they consent that the person selected perform this work in the mine. The work is performed for the company, in the interests of the company, and for the advancement of the very purpose for which the company is organized. The company may delegate the right to supervise the person selected, and the right to discharge him whenever his conduct imperils the safety of the miners. In this, too, the miners act under delegated power from the owner. When the company delegates this power to the miners and they act, make the selection, the act of selecting becomes the act of the mine owners themselves. We think here the most that can be said of the arrangement between the miners and the operators was that the operators had delegated this right to the miners.

This thing is clear: This man was working in the mine, doing work for the company in the mine, with the knowledge and consent of the company, and for the purpose of more effectually carrying on the work in which the operators were engaged. He was engaged at the time he was injured in performing an indispensable part of the mining operations carried on in the mine. He was doing a part of the business of mining for which miners were directly employed. The appellant knew that he was doing this work for them. If he had been employed directly by the company as shot firer, the liability of the company would be apparent under the Workmen's Compensation Act. The fact that they had delegated to the miners the right to select him to do this particular work, indispensable to a proper carrying on of the work, does not change the relationship.

The statute is to be liberally construed so as to get it within the spirit, rather than with-

Workmen's Compensation —liberal construction of statute.

in the letter of the law. See Brien v. Wisconsin Pub. Service Co. 166 Wis.

24, 163 N. W. 182.

In construing the provisions of the Compensation Law the court is bound, not to a narrow, technical construction, but rather to a broad and liberal construction to make effectual the very purposes for which the law was passed. Rish v. Iowa Portland Cement Co. — Iowa, —, 170 N. W. 532; State ex rel. Virginia & R. Lake Co. 128 Minn. 43, 150 N. W. 211, 7 N. C. C. A. 1076.

We think § 2477m16, Supplement Code 1913, is peculiarly applicable to the facts of this case. As bearing upon this question, see Aga v. Harbach, 127 Iowa, 144, 109 Am. St. Rep. 377, 102 N. W. 833, 4 Ann. Cas. 441; Hitchcock v. Arctic Creamery Co. 170 Iowa, 368, 150 N. W. 727.

We reach the conclusion, therefore, that Ben Davidson was an employee of the defendant company at the time he received his injuries; that this fact brought

—who is employee—shot
firer in mine.

the case within the purview of the Workmen's Compensation Act, and that the commissioner erred in finding to the contrary.

It is argued in this case that we are bound by the fact finding of the board of arbitration, and the finding of the commissioner on review.

It is true as to disputed facts which do not go to the jurisdiction we are bound by the finding of the commissioner, but where the only question presented is whether or not the jurisdictional fact exists, entitling the person to be heard before the

—finding of commissioners
—how far binding on court.

commissioner, we have a right to review the action of the commissioner even to the extent of finding the fact to be other than the commissioner found it. Upon this point see Griffith v. Cole Bros. 183 Iowa, 415, L.R.A.1918F, 923, 165 N. W. 577, 15 N. C. C. A. 674, and cases therein cited.

The district court from which appeal was taken found as a matter of fact that the deceased was an employee of the defendant at the time he received his injuries. It is stipulated in the agreement, hereinbefore set out, that the injury grew out of and was received in the course of his employment. We agree with the District Court in its finding. Its action is therefore affirmed.

Ladd, Ch. J., and Weaver and Stevens, JJ., concur.

ANNOTATION.

Workmen's compensation: workman representing employees, or public.

As indicated by the title, this note deals with the question whether a workman selected or paid by other employees, or who represents the public, as, for example, one serving as an inspector in a packing house in pursuance of a statute, is an employee of the owner of the plant within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Acts.

Such a situation obviously gives rise to ground for argument in the negative, and no doubt cases may arise in the future where negative decisions will be justified. In considering the question, however, the legislature's purpose in enacting the Workmen's Compensation Acts should be borne in mind, and a liberal construction in accord with such purpose should be given to them.

It will be observed that in the reported case (BIDWELL COAL CO. v. DAVIDSON, ante, 1058) a short firer in a mine, who under an agreement between the miners and the mine owners could be designated and discharged by the miners, and who was paid by a deduction from the ton rate allowed to the miners for doing the work, on the theory that the shot firing was a part of the miners' work, was held an employee of the mine owner within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act. It appears in the case that the mine owner was required by statute to employ a qualified shot examiner, and that in pursuance of a custom the shot examiner was also the shot firer. This fact was apparently considered by the court in reaching its conclusion.

There is as yet little authority on the question under annotation, but one other case bearing thereon having been disclosed.

In Simpson v. Ebbw Vale Steel, Iron, & Coal Co. [1905] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 453, one appointed manager of a mine, in pursuance of an act providing that "every mine shall be under a manager who shall be responsible for the control, management, and direction of the mine," who received a salary of $400 per year, and house rent and coal, and was required to do no manual labor, was held not a "workman" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, so that no recovery could be had thereunder for his death, which occurred while he was in the mine in the capacity of manager for the purpose of inspecting a fall of the roof in one of the workings. Discussing the meaning of "workman," as used in the act, Collins, M.R., said: "Where then is the limit to be drawn? In my opinion it should be so drawn as to embrace the classes whose remuneration can properly be described as wages. The popular meaning must be given to a definition where we are confronted with such an expression as 'wages,' and we must interpret the act as applying to persons whom ex hypothesi the legislature regards as not being in a position to protect themselves. None of these considerations apply to the case of a person holding the position of a certificated manager of a colliery, who comes within a very different category from that of an ordinary workman. I do not say that a person in the position of the deceased is absolutely excluded from the possibility of coming within the act, for it is possible that such a man might in fact work as a workman, though I do not know that such a contingency is at all probable; there might, however, be facts in a particular case from which the conclusion might be drawn that, although the man was a certificated manager, he was also a workman. So far as the facts have been found in the present case, the learned county judge has found that he was not a workman, and the highest at which the appellant's case can be put is that there might be evidence that he was, although there is strong evidence that he was not. The county court judge was not bound to come to a conclusion contrary to common sense, and there was abundant evidence that the deceased was not within what the act intended by the word 'workman.' It is impossible to lay down any absolute line, or to say that a judge must direct himself as to the line within which a man is a workman, so as to debar him from finding that, although the employment comes within the terms of the definition clause, the man is not to be taken as a workman when all the circumstances of the case are considered."

J. T. W.

ROBERT R. KEININGHAM, Appt.,

v.

JOHN D. BLAKE, Local Registrar of Vital Statistics.

Maryland Court of Appeals — December 9, 1919.

(— Md. —, 109 Atl. 65.)

Physician — right of osteopath to furnish birth and death certificates.

1. An osteopath is not a physician entitled to register with the registrar of vital statistics and to furnish him certificates of birth and death, where the statute relating to osteopathy provides that it shall not authorize an officer to accept from the osteopathic practitioner any birth or death certificate.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1070.]

Constitutional law — presumption in favor of constitutionality of statute.

2. All reasonable presumptions must be made in favor of the constitutionality of a provision of a health law denying osteopaths the right to furnish birth and death certificates, which physicians are permitted to do.

[See 6 R. C. L. 97 et seq.]

— classification — osteopath and physician.

3. A separate classification of osteopaths and regular physicians is not so unreasonable as to be unconstitutional.

[See 6 R. C. L. 378.]

— denial of right to osteopath.

4. No constitutional right of osteopaths is infringed by denying them the right to furnish birth and death certificates, when providing for licensing them as practitioners of osteopathy.

Health — collection of vital certificates — denial of right to furnish.

5. The legislature may determine the method to be employed in obtaining vital statistics for the use of the public, and no one can complain of being denied constitutional rights because he is not authorized to furnish them.

APPEAL by petitioner from an order of the Superior Court of Baltimore City (Bond, J.) dismissing a petition for a writ of mandamus to compel respondent to register him as a physician entitled to file certificates of births and deaths. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Baum & Sykes, for appellant:

Both the legal and popular meaning of the word "physician" includes an osteopath.

Harrison v. State, 102 Ala. 170, 15 So. 563; People ex rel. Gage v. Siman, 278 Ill. 256, 115 N. E. 817; Bragg v. State, 134 Ala. 173, 58 L.R.A. 925, 32 So. 767; State v. Schmidt, 138 Wis. 53, 119 N. W. 647; State v. Yates, 145 Iowa, 332, 124 N. W. 174; People v. Allcutt, 117 App. Div. 546, 102 N. Y. Supp. 678; State v. Beck, 21 R. I. 288, 45 L.R.A. 269, 43 Atl. 366; Whitlock v. Com. 89 Va. 337, 15 S. E. 893; Richardson v. State, 47 Ark. 562, 2 S. W. 187; People v. Gordon, 194 Ill. 560, 88 Am. St. Rep. 165, 62 N. E. 858, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 540; State v. Zechman, 157 Iowa, 158, 138 N. W. 387; State v. Miller, 146 Iowa, 521, 124 N. W. 167; Com. v. Zimmerman, 221 Mass. 184, 108 N. E. 893, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 858; Medical Examiners v. Freenor, 47 Utah, 430, 154 Pac. 941, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 1156; State Medical Examiners v. Terrill, 48 Utah, 647, 161 Pac. 451, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 1117; State v. Wilhite, 132 Iowa, 226, 109 N. W. 730, 11 Ann. Cas. 180; Little v. State, 60 Neb. 749, 51 L.R.A. 717, 84 N. W. 248, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 549; Bibber v. Simpson, 59 Me. 181; Harvey v. State, 96 Neb. 786, 148 N. W. 924; State v. Smith, 233 Mo. 260, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 179, 135 S. W. 465; Ex parte Collins, 57 Tex. Crim. Rep. 2, 121 S. W. 501; Com. v. Jewelle, 199 Mass. 558, 85 N. E. 858.

Correctly construed, the word "physician," in the sections of the law relating to vital statistics and the health ordinances of the city of Baltimore, includes an osteopath.

Allegany County v. State Lunacy Commission, 127 Md. 161, 96 Atl. 260; Phillips v. Baltimore, 110 Md. 431, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 711, 72 Atl. 902; People ex rel. Redman v. Wren, 5 Ill. 269; Cutty v. Carson, 125 Md. 25, 93 Atl. 302; Brenner v. Brenner, 127 Md. 189, 96 Atl. 287; Baltimore v. Williams, 129 Md. 290, 99 Atl. 362; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Branson, 128 Md. 678, 98 Atl. 225; Brager v. Bigham, 127 Md. 148, 96 Atl. 277; People ex rel. Gage v. Siman, 278 Ill. 256, 115 N. E. 817.

If the word "physician" in the sections of article 43 means only an allopath, homeopath or eclectic, and not an osteopath, then to that extent those sections are in contravention of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States and article 2 of the Constitution of the state of Maryland, and therefore invalid.

Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Missouri v. Lewis (Bowman v. Lewis) 101 U. S. 22, 25 L. ed. 989; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 31, 28 L. ed. 923, 924; Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 733, 24 L. ed. 565, 572; Harding v. People, 160 Ill. 459, 32 L.R.A. 445, 52 Am. St. Rep. 344, 43 N. E. 624; Bailey v. People, 190 Ill. 28, 54 L.R.A. 838, 83 Am. St. Rep. 116, 60 N. E. 98; Bragg v. State, 134 Ala. 165, 58 L.R.A. 925, 32 So. 767; State v. Heath, 125 Iowa, 585, 101 N. W. 429.

If § 301 of article 43 was intended to deny osteopaths the same rights and privileges as other physicians, in the matter of making and filing birth and death certificates, it is in contravention of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States and article 2 of the Constitution of the state of Maryland.

Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 128, 32 L. ed. 623, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 231; State v. Fisher, 52 Mo. 174; State v. Rice, 115 Md. 317, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 344, 80 Atl. 1026, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1247; People v. Ringe, 197 N. Y. 143, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 528, 90 N. E. 451, 18 Ann. Cas. 474.

Messrs. Roland R. Marchant and Robert F. Leach, Jr., for appellee.

Urner, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant is duly licensed and registered under the laws of Maryland for the practice of osteopathy. In his pending petition for mandamus he claims the right to be registered with the registrar of vital statistics of Baltimore city as a physician entitled to file certificates of births and deaths, notwithstanding the provision of the statute relating to osteopathy that nothing therein contained shall authorize any state or municipal officer "to accept from any osteopathic practitioner any birth or death certificate." Code, art. 43, § 301. The question to be determined is whether that provision is constitutional.

The argument on behalf of the appellant was largely directed to the support of the contention that osteopaths are physicians, and as such are required and entitled to register with the local registrar of vital statistics, and to furnish him certificates of birth and death, under statutory provisions by which "physicians" are charged with such duties. Code, art. 43, §§ 12, 14, 21. The express terms of the statute dispose of this contention. It is not material in this case to inquire whether osteopaths are to be regarded as physicians within the accepted meaning of that term. There are numerous cases dealing with questions as to whether various regulations of the practice of physicians apply to osteopaths. A collection of such cases may be found in a note to People v. Cole in L.R.A.1917C, 822. The subject is well discussed and cases are cited in 21 R. C. L. 370, 371. A very recent case not included in the citations just given is that of People ex rel. Gage v. Siman, 278 Ill. 256, 115 N. E. 817. The decisions on the subject are mainly based on the definitions or apparent purpose of the particular statutes under consideration. In the Code provisions with which we are here concerned, there is no definition of the term "physician," except in so far as may be implied from the requirement that any person desiring to "practise medicine or surgery" in this state "shall be duly registered as a physician or surgeon." Code, art. 43, § 122. But "osteopathy" is defined to be "a system of treatment based on the theory that diseases are chiefly due to deranged mechanism of the bones, nerves, blood vessels, and other tissues, and can be remedied by manipulations of these parts," and it is provided that the license issued to a practitioner of osteopathy "shall authorize the holder thereof to practise by manipulations only," and that nothing in the act relating to such license "shall be construed as affecting the so-called practice of medicine." Code, art. 43, §§ 300, 302. A definite distinction is thus made between licensed practitioners of osteopathy and those licensed to practise medicine or surgery. But conclusive indication of the legislative intent, upon the subject of the present inquiry, is given by the section already referred to, prohibiting the acceptance of birth or death certificates from "any osteopathic practitioner." The purpose of the existing law to exclude osteopaths

Physician—
right of osteopath to furnish birth and death
certificates.

from the classification of physicians, so far as the giving of such certificates is concerned, is too clearly and positively expressed to leave any room for doubt on that subject.

The vital question in the case is whether the prohibition against the acceptance of birth or death certificates from licensed osteopaths is a violation of any of their constitutional rights. It is contended that this provision is a denial of the equal protection of the law to those practising osteopathy, and is therefore in contravention of the 14th Amendment of the Federal Constitution.

The enactment in question forms part of the Code article entitled "Health," and its relation to that subject is obvious. It is therefore within the scope of the police power of the state, and should be sustained as an exercise of that power unless the discrimination it makes can be held to be plainly arbitrary and without any perceptible relation to the objects sought to be accomplished. All reasonable presumptions must be made in favor of the validity of the provision. The judgment of the legislature that such a regulation is proper and desirable should be respected and enforced by the courts if there is any rational theory upon which it can be supported.

Constitutional law—presumption in favor of constitutionality of statute.

The separate classification, for licensing purposes, of practitioners of medicine and surgery and those practising by manipulation only, cannot be held to be unreasonable. Practitioners of the former class were licensed in this state many years before such a provision was made as to osteopaths. The methods of treatment and the prescribed qualifications differ in important particulars for the two classes of practitioners, and the differences by which they are actually distinguished suggest an adequate reason for their separate classification by statute.

—classification
—osteopath and physician.

Prior to the enactment in 1914 (Laws 1914, chap. 786) of the provisions relating to osteopathy, it seems clear that no practitioner of that form of treatment, unless he was qualified and licensed as a practitioner of medicine and surgery, could have found any basis for the contention that he was entitled to be registered by the registrar of vital statistics to furnish the birth and death certificates for which the pre-existing statutes provided. It was certainly competent at that time for the legislature to direct that the certificates of birth and death, from which the vital statistics of the state were to be obtained, should be furnished primarily by duly licensed medical practitioners. It did in effect so provide, with supplemental directions that, if a death occurs without medical attendance, the certificate shall be prepared by the health officer, or local registrar, and that, in the case of a birth when no physician is in attendance, the birth certificate shall be made out by the midwife, if one is present, otherwise the father, coroner, householder, keeper of an institution, officer of a ship, or conductor of a train, in which a birth occurs, is charged with the duty of reporting the facts to the local registrar, who must thereupon make an investigation and prepare the certificate of birth in due form. Midwives are required to be examined, registered, and licensed. Code, art. 43, §§ 69-88. If the legislature had determined not to regulate the practice of osteopathy, it is clear that the appellant could not have claimed the right as an unlicensed physician to give the certificates of birth and death which the statute designs to have furnished. Not having been licensed as a practitioner of medicine or surgery, under the terms of the statute, but having procured a license which limits his practice to treatment by manipulations only, under provisions of law which exclude him from the class of practitioners from whom birth and death certificates may be accepted, the question is whether he can justly complain that he has thereby been subjected to an arbitrary and unconstitutional discrimination.

The certificates of birth and death to which the statute refers are required to contain such "items of information as the state registrar of vital statistics shall deem important or necessary," in addition to such facts as the date and place of a birth or death, the name, sex, and color of a child reported born, the name, age, color, occupation, condition, and birthplace of a person reported to have died, the cause of death, duration of illness, and the name and address of the attending physician. It was the evident theory of the legislature that some of the information which the law directed, or the state registrar of vital statistics might deem necessary, to be included in the birth or death certificates, could be furnished more satisfactorily by a physician having the qualifications demanding by the statute of practitioners of medicine and surgery than by those who were licensed to practice osteopathy exclusively. As to the real necessity for making such a distinction, this court has no right to decide. The only inquiry we are authorized to make is whether the action of the legislature in restricting the means and agencies by which vital statistics are to be obtained is clearly unreasonable.

In the case of Watson v. State, 105 Md. 650, 66 Atl. 635, where the decision sustained the validity of an act which required licenses to be procured by practitioners of medicine or surgery, but which exempted certain classes of physicians and surgeons, and chiropodists, midwives, and masseurs, or other "manual manipulators who use no other means," the opinion of the Supreme Court in Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 294, 42 L. ed. 1043, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594, discussing the constitutional provision as to the equal protection of the laws, was quoted in part as follows: "This rule prescribes no rigid equality, and permits to the wisdom and discretion of the legislature a wide latitude so far as the interference of this court is concerned. . . . Equality of operation does not mean indiscriminate operation on persons, merely as such, but on persons according to their relations. . . . Hardships, impolicy, or injustice of state laws is not necessarily an objection to their constitutional validity."

The decision in Watson v. State was affirmed by the Supreme Court in 218 U. S. 173, 54 L. ed. 987, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 644. In holding that none of the exemptions complained of rendered the act invalid, the Supreme Court said: "Before a law of this kind can be declared violative of the 14th Amendment as an unreasonable classification of the subjects of such legislation because of the omission of certain classes, the court must be able to say that there is 'no fair reason for the law that would not require with equal force its extension to others whom it leaves untouched.' Such was the expression of this court in Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. May, 194 U. S. 269, 48 L. ed. 972, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 638, quoted with approval in Williams v. Arkansas, 217 U. S. 79, 54 L. ed. 673, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493, 18 Ann. Cas. 865. . . . The selection of the exempted classes was within the legislative power, subject only to the restriction that it be not arbitrary or oppressive, and apply equally to all persons similarly situated."

—denial of right to osteopath.

In our opinion the discrimination we are considering in the present case is not so clearly arbitrary as to justify the court in declaring it void. It relates solely to the collection of vital statistics. The legislature has the undoubted right to determine as to the methods to be employed in obtaining such information for the use of the public. Its designation of certain agencies for that purpose, in the statute under consideration, is not such an obvious abuse of its discretion as to authorize the court to substitute its own for the legislative judgment and to refuse to recognize the provision as a valid enactment:

Health—collection of vital certificates—denial of right to furnish.

The order dismissing the petition for mandamus will be affirmed.

Order affirmed with costs.

ANNOTATION.

Who is a physician or surgeon within statute in relation to vital statistics.

No definite rule can be laid down to determine who is a physician or surgeon within the meaning of statutes in relation to vital statistics, since this question depends, to a great extent, upon the statutory law of the different states.

Osteopaths.

The rule as to osteopaths, in so far as a rule can be laid down in view of the statutory nature of the subject, and the small number of cases found, seems to be that a duly licensed and registered osteopath is a physician within the meaning of that term as used in vital statistics statutes, unless expressly excluded by the statute. People ex rel. Gage v. Siman (1917) 278 Ill. 256, 115 N. E. 817; Re Opinion of Justices (1919) — R. I. —, 107 Atl. 102; KEININGHAM v. BLAKE (reported herewith) ante, 1066.

Thus, it was held in People ex rel. Gage v. Siman (Ill.) supra, that one who practices osteopathy, pursuant to the certificate of the state board of health authorizing him to treat human ailments without the use of medicine and without performing surgical operations, is a physician entitled to registration under an act to provide for the registration of births and deaths.

The court said: "That the relator was engaged in practising medicine is settled by § 7 of the Act to Regulate the Practice of Medicine in the State of Illinois (Hurd's Stat. 1916, p. 1701), and the case of People v. Gordon (1902) 194 Ill. 560, 88 Am. St. Rep. 165, 62 N. E. 858, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 540. Though the osteopathic physician does not use medicine or perform surgical operations he does treat and operate on patients for physical ailments, and but for his certificate from the state board of health would be liable to the penalty prescribed for practising medicine without a license. A physician is one versed in or practising the art of medicine, and the term is not limited to the disciples of any particular school. The term 'medicine' is not limited to substances supposed to possess curative or remedial properties, but has also the meaning of the healing act,—the science of preserving health and treating disease for the purpose of cure,—whether such treatment involves the use of medical substances or not. In common acceptance, anyone whose occupation is the treatment of diseases for the purpose of curing them is a physician, and this is the sense in which the term is used in the Medical Practice Act. The term is not used in any different sense in § 15 of the Vital Statistics Act, which requires every physician, midwife, undertaker, and sexton to register his or her name, address, and occupation with the local registrar of the vital statistics registration district in which he resides." It was further held in this case that a provision of the Medical Practice Act, declaring that only those who were authorized to practise medicine and surgery in all their branches shall call or advertise themselves as physicians or doctors, did not sustain the position that only persons licensed to practise medicine and surgery in all their branches were authorized to issue certificates of death, upon the ground that such provision did not declare that persons treating physical ailments without the use of medicine, and without performing surgical operations, were not physicians, but only that they should not call themselves physicians or advertise themselves as such.

In Re Opinion of Justices (1919) — R. I. —, 107 Atl. 102, the justices of the supreme court, upon the receipt from the governor of a request for their opinion, answered in the affirmative the following question: "Are the persons who have received certificates to practise osteopathy from the state board of health under chapter 1058 of the Public Laws of 1914, and who have registered, under chapter 198 of the General Laws in the town clerk's office of the city or town in which they reside, their authority for so practising, legally entitled to sign death certificates in those cases where they were last in attendance professionally upon the deceased?" The justices in giving the reason for their answer said: "Section 7, chap. 121, of the General Laws 1909, as amended by § 2, chap. 575, Public Laws 1910, provides that in case of death the undertaker or embalmer who has charge of the body shall file with the town clerk or registrar a certificate of death prepared in accordance with § 3 of this chapter. This section also provides that the medical certificate, which is a required part of the death certificate, shall state the cause of death in detail as specified in the statute, and that 'the medical certificate shall be made and signed by the physician, if any, last in attendance on the deceased. But whenever the body of a person is lying dead in any town or city, who has been unattended in his or her last sickness, by a physician registered to practise in this state, the town or city clerk, or in the city of Providence the city registrar, shall call upon a registered physician, or the medical examiner of the district in which the remains are lying to inquire into and to certify as to the cause and manner of death. . . . Is a registered practitioner of osteopathy a 'physician registered to practise' in this state within the fair meaning of these words in this section? We think that he is. There is no express and specific requirement in chapter 1058 which requires an osteopath to register his certificate. The obligation to register is imposed by § 2, chap. 198, which is general in its terms, and applies to all persons who practise medicine or surgery. The person registering under this section is required to subscribe and verify by oath an affidavit of his age, address, etc., and 'the school or system of medicine to which he or she proposes to belong.' Section 1 of chapter 198 provides as follows: 'It shall be the duty of each town and city clerk to purchase a book of suitable size, to be known as the "medical register" of each city or town, and to set apart one full page for the registration of each physician.' The recognition in the sections referred to of the practitioner of osteopathy as a physician is clear and unmistakable. The osteopath is required to register, and by § 1 he is to be registered as a physician in the 'medical register.' All physicians get their authority to sign medical certificates in cases of death by the provisions of chapter 198, of which chapter 1058 is now a part. As the osteopaths are now authorized to practise medicine in a particular way, as they are required to be registered in the medical register and are subject to the disciplinary control of the board of health by the same general provisions of chapter 193 as all doctors of medicine, so called, we think that the word 'physician' in § 2, chap. 575, should properly be construed in its broader meaning to include osteopaths, and that as used in this part of the statutes it is not to be confined to its limited meaning of doctor of medicine."

But in the reported case (KEININGHAM v. BLAKE, ante, 1066) osteopaths were held not to have the right to be registered with the city registrar of vital statistics as physicians entitled to file certificates of births and deaths, because of the express provision in the statute that nothing therein contained shall authorize any state or municipal officer "to accept from any osteopathic practitioner any birth or death certificate."

Christian Scientists.

A Christian Scientist is not a physician within the meaning of a statute requiring the report of contagious diseases to the board of health, and making a violation thereof a misdemeanor. The court said: "There is no doubt whatever that defendant was not a physician. The statute itself upon which the city relies to sustain the conviction demonstrates this. The statute is under the significant heading of 'Medicine and Surgery,' and in the body thereof it refers to and contemplates 'persons practising medicine and surgery.' Rev. Stat. 1899, §§ 8507, 8517. It regulates the practice of medicine and surgery by requiring persons who engage in practice to have diplomas and to obtain certificates from the board of health. The words 'medicine and surgery,' and 'practising medicine and surgery,' being in a penal statute, must be taken to have a meaning in their ordinary sense. Medicine, in its ordinary sense, as applied to human ailments, means something which is administered, either internally or externally, in the treatment of disease, or the relief of sickness. It may be applied externally, and it need not necessarily be a substance which may be seen and handled. It may consist of electricity conveyed by instruments or the human hand. And he whose profession it is to prescribe and administer this, after diagnosing the complaint, is a physician as commonly and ordinarily understood. Thus the statute will include what is known as 'a medical clairvoyant' who visits sick patients, examines their condition, determines the nature of the disease, and prescribes the remedies deemed most appropriate. Bibber v. Simpson (1871) 59 Me. 181; Nelson v. Harrington (1888) 72 Wis. 591, 1 L.R.A. 719, 7 Am. St. Rep. 900, 40 N. W. 228. And so one is practising surgery who professes and practises bone-setting in dislocations and fractures, reducing sprains, swellings, and contraction of the sinews by friction and fomentation. Hewitt v. Charier (1835) 16 Pick. (Mass.) 353." The contention was made in this case that the lawmaking power, as it frequently does, had stepped in and given to the word "physician" a broader meaning than it would have without such aid in that, at another place in the same statute, it described those who should be regarded as practising medicine, by providing that any person should be regarded as practising medicine, within the meaning of such statute, who should profess publicly to be a physician and to prescribe for the sick, or who should append to his name the letters "M. D." The court, in overruling this contention, said: "This section does not bear out the city's contention. It does not pretend to enlarge the ordinary meaning understood by the use of the word 'physician.' The entire article lays down qualifications and makes regulations for all those 'practising medicine and surgery.' And by the section just quoted it declares that all those shall be regarded as practising medicine who shall publicly profess to be physicians and prescribe for the sick; that is to say, physicians practising and prescribing medicine for the sick. In a broad sense there may be 'a physician for the soul,' but surely the statute does not include those prescribing moral doctrine for the morally infirm. The statute evidently does not intend, by that section, to make anyone a practitioner of medicine who is not such practitioner, or who does not pretend to be such. Its only object is to prevent the escape of those actually practising medicine (whether skilled physicians or fraudulent pretenders) by declaring they shall be considered as so doing if they publicly announce or 'profess' that they are physicians, or append 'M. D.' to their names." Kansas City v. Baird (1902) 92 Mo. App. 204. G. V. I.

HORACE F. TILTON, Exr., etc., of Thomas H. Daniels, Deceased,
v.

WALTER H. DANIELS.

New Hampshire Supreme Court—February 3, 1920.

(— N. H. —, 109 Atl. 145.)

Wills — witness — official certifying to signatures.

1. A justice of the peace certifying upon a will the verity of the signatures thereto becomes a witness to the will.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1075.]

— attestation — what is.

2. The attestation of a will consists in the witness seeing that those things exist and are done which the statute requires.

Evidence — intent in signing will — effect.

3. Testimony of the justice of the peace who certified upon a will the verity of the signatures, that he did not sign as a witness, is not conclusive of that fact.

[See 10 R. C. L. 946, 947.]

TRANSFER by the Superior Court for Grafton County (Sawyer, J.) for the opinion of the Supreme Court of an appeal from a decree of the Probate Court, allowing the will of Thomas H. Daniels, deceased. Appeal dismissed.

The document in question was signed as follows:

Thomas H. Daniels.

Witnesses:

Wilmer C. Cox,

Amos Blake.

Signed before me.

John R. Connor, Just. of Peace.

Connor testified that he did not understand that he was to sign as a witness, but simply as a justice of the peace which he did.

Messrs. Kenson E. Dearborn, Alvin F. Wentworth, and Walter M. Flint, for plaintiff:

The only evidence the will itself need bear of a proper attestation is the signatures of the witnesses.

8 A.L.R.—68.

40 Cyc. 1125; Mead v. Presbyterian Church, 229 Ill. 526, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 255, 82 N. E. 371, 11 Ann. Cas. 426; Ela v. Edwards, 16 Gray, 91; Osborn v. Cook, 11 Cush. 532, 59 Am. Dec. 155; Forsaith v. Clark, 21 N. H. 409.

Witnesses are not all required to subscribe at the same time.

Smith (N. H.) 448; 40 Cyc. 1128.

An acknowledgment of a previous signature by a testator is a sufficient execution.

Lord v. Lord, 58 N. H. 9, 42 Am. Rep. 565; Chase v. Kittredge, 11 Allen, 49, 87 Am. Dec. 687.

The witnesses need not know that the instrument they were attesting was a will.

Osborn v. Cook, 11 Cush. 532, 59 Am. Dec. 155; Welch v. Adams, 63 N. H. 347, 56 Am. Rep. 521, 1 Atl. 1; Swinb. Wills, 27; Re Clafin, 75 Vt. 19, 58 L.R.A. 261, 52 Atl. 1053; Keely v. Moore, 196 U. S. 38, 49 L. ed. 376, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169; Adams v. Norris, 23 How. 353, 16 L. ed. 539; Re Hull, 117 Iowa, 738, 89 N. W. 979.

When a testator is not prevented by physical infirmities from seeing and hearing what goes on around him, his will is attested in his presence if he understands and is conscious of what the witnesses are doing when they write their names, and can, if he is so disposed, readily change his position so that he can see and hear what they do and say.

Healey v. Bartlett, 73 N. H. 110, 59 Atl. 617, 6 Ann. Cas. 413.

Mr. Thomas F. Clifford, for defendant:

A will must be "attested and subscribed by three or more creditable witnesses."

Hodgman v. Kittredge, 67 N. H. 254, 68 Am. St. Rep. 661, 32 Atl. 158.

A will must be executed in accordance with the statutory requirements; otherwise, it is entirely void.

40 Cyc. 1097, 1098.

The request to sign must be shown either by the attestation clause or by other evidence.

Re McMulin, 6 Dem. 847; Lockwood v. Lockwood, 51 Hun, 337, 2 L.R.A. 425, 3 N. Y. Supp. 887.

There being no conflict of evidence, and there being no competent evidence from which a jury of impartial and reasonable men could find that Thomas H. Daniels ever requested John R. Connor to sign as a witness, the court correctly directed a verdict for the appellant.

Paphro D. Pike Co. v. Baty, 69 N. H. 453, 43 Atl. 623; Perry v. Hardy, 71 N. H. 151, 51 Atl. 644.

Peaslee, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The contestant bases his claim to have the will disallowed upon the proposition that Connor did not sign as a witness. No other objection is suggested, and, unless this is well taken, the exception to the ruling directing a verdict for him must be sustained.

In order that a will be duly authenticated, two things are required.

It must be both "attested and subscribed." Pub. Stat. chap. 186, § 2. Attestation "consists in the witnesses seeing that those things exist <sup>Wills—</sup> and are done which <sup>attestation—</sup> what is. the statute requires." Nunn v. Ehlert, 218 Mass. 475, L.R.A. 1915B, 87, 106 N. E. 165. "Attestation is the act of the senses; subscription is the act of the hand; the one is mental; the other mechanical." Swift v. Wiley, 1 B. Mon. 114, 117. To attest the signature means to take note mentally that the signature exists as a fact. If this is done, and the attester also subscribes his name, the statute is complied with. The essential thing is that "by the signature he meant to affirm that the deceased executed the will in his presence." Griffiths v. Griffiths, L. R. 2 Prob. & Div. 300, 304, 41 L. J. Prob. N. S. 14, 25 L. T. N. S. 574, 20 Week. Rep. 192. In this case Connor was requested to and did take note of the signature. At the testator's request, he was sworn by Connor to the truth of the asserted verity of the signature, and Connor certified that fact upon the will.

"The only object the testator could have had in acknowledging his signature, declaring his will, and asking a certificate was to get Beam as a witness to those facts. They may have ascribed to the certificate of a justice an evidentiary force and dignity not accorded it by the law, but this mistake cannot impair the force which the law accords to attesting signatures, without regard to the station of the signer. The testator, in asking for Beam's certificate, sought to make him a witness to the facts he had acknowledged and declared, and perhaps believed that the official form of attestation would import such indisputable verity as would dispense with further testimony from the witness. While this effect cannot be accorded to it, we can see no reason, in law or justice, why the effect of an ordinary attestation should be denied to it. Whether testifying through his certificate or as a witness in a probate proceeding, Beam was asked to bear witness to the fact that the writing had been subscribed by, and was the will of, the testator. That is the ordinary office of a witness, and as such Beam signed the will." Payne v. Payne, 54 Ark. 415, 16 S. W. 1.

The authorities are uniform.

—witness—official certifying to signatures.

Such an execution makes the official a witness to the will.

Keely v. Moore, 196

U. S. 38, 49 L. ed. 376, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169; Adams v. Norris, 23 How. 353, 16 L. ed. 539; Murray v. Murphy, 39 Miss. 214; Re Hull, 117 Iowa, 738, 89 N. W. 979; Bolton v. Bolton, 107 Miss. 84, 64 So. 967; 1 Schouler, Wills, § 344.

It is argued that, since Connor testified that he was not asked to sign as a witness, and that he did not undertake to sign as one, therefore it cannot be found that he did so. The conclusion drawn is based upon an erroneous idea of the nature of the question involved. There is no dispute as to the language of the request, nor as to the mental attitude of the testator and of Connor. The question whether this request, the state of mind of the testator evidenced thereby, and the resulting understanding and signing on the part of Connor constitute a request for and an execution of the act of an attesting witness, is one of law. It was Connor's opinion that intent in signing will—effect.

Evidence—

they did not. Accordingly he testified that he was not requested to sign as a witness, and did not do so. But that is merely his conclusion touching the law. In his view it was necessary that the request to sign as a witness be made eo nomine; and, as it was not so made, he concluded that he was not requested so to act. And so of his act subscribing his name as a justice of the peace. His view of the law was that signing in that capacity did not include individual action. He thought that the certificate of attestation by John R. Connor, justice of the peace, was a thing entirely separable from his subscribing as an individual. His testimony that he did not sign as an individual, i. e., as a "witness," is merely a denial of the law. It is not evidence which varies or contradicts the facts to which he also testifies.

The occurrences between the testator and Connor include every safeguard intended to be provided by the statute. Connor was fully informed and took note of the fact that the paper in question had been signed; and his signature affixed thereto identified the paper. If technical reasons could be assigned for holding that there was not a compliance with the statute, they would not be entitled to prevail against the practical reasons for the opposite result. The motion to direct a verdict for the appellant should have been denied.

In accordance with the stipulation made at the trial, the order is, appeal dismissed.

All concur.

ANNOTATION.

Wills: character as witness of one who signed will for another purpose.

- I. Officer attaching official certificate, 1075.
- II. Person who writes testator's name and attests the signature by his own, 1078.
- III. Miscellaneous, 1079.
- IV. Conclusion, 1080.

I. Officer attaching official certificate.

In a number of cases in which an officer authorized to take acknowledgments has attached his official certificate to a will, in accordance with the request of the testator, the officer has been regarded as a witness, the certificate being regarded as superfluous. Thus, in Payne v. Payne (1891) 54 Ark. 415, 16 S. W. 1, a will was held sufficiently attested where, after it had been signed by the testator and one witness, it was taken by the testator to a justice of the peace, who was asked by the testator to put his certificate as a justice of the peace to it, and who thereupon signed and certified the will in his official character. The court stated that the form in which the will was attested was immaterial; that "the question is, Did the testator acknowledge the signature, declare the writing to be his will, and request Beam to sign it as a witness to those facts? and, if so, did Beam sign it in evidence thereof? The evidence shows, as applying to this question, a literal compliance with the law in every respect except that the testator asked Beam to put his official certificate to the will, instead of formally asking him to sign it as a witness. Was this substantially a request of Beam to sign the will as a witness? He could not make the certificate to the will without signing it, and, in response to the request to make his certificate, did sign it in the presence of the testator. The only object the testator could have had in acknowledging his signature, declaring his will, and asking a certificate was to get Beam as a witness to those facts. They may have ascribed to the certificate of a justice an evidentiary force and dignity not accorded it by the law, but this mistake cannot impair the force which the law accords to attesting signatures, without regard to the station of the signer. The testator, in asking for Beam's certificate, sought to make him a witness to the fact he had acknowledged and declared, and perhaps believed that the official form of attestation would import such indisputable verity as would dispense with further testimony from the witness. While this effect cannot be accorded to it, we can see no reason in law or justice why the effect of an ordinary attestation should be denied to it. Whether testifying through his certificate, or as a witness in a probate proceeding, Beam was asked to bear witness of the fact that the writing had been subscribed by and was the will of the testator." In Adams v. Norris (1860) 23 How. (U. S.) 353, 16

L. ed. 539, a will signed by the testator, whose signature was followed by the signatures of an officer and witnesses in the following form: "Before me, in the absence of the two alcaldes, Roberto T. Ridley, sindico. Witnesses: Nathan Spear. Guillermo Hinckley," was held to be witnessed by the sindico. The court states that it did not appear that a sindico was charged with any function in the preparation or execution of testaments, by the law or custom of the state in which the will was executed, and further, that it did not appear that the sindico in the instance at bar expected to give any sanction to the instrument by his official character; that he attested the execution of the will; and that his description of himself which he affixed to his signature should not detract from the efficacy of that attestation.

See the reported case (TILTON v. DANIELS, ante, 1073).

In Gump v. Gowans (1907) 226 Ill. 635, 117 Am. St. Rep. 275, 80 N. E. 1086, where it was sought to probate, as a will, a deed which was acknowledged before a notary public, who affixed his signature to the certificate of acknowledgment, the court states that perhaps the certificates which show that the maker acknowledged to the notary that she signed the instrument would be sufficient to make him a subscribing witness; but the instrument was denied probate as a will because there was no other competent witness.

The intent with which the testator and official taking the acknowledgment acted is not emphasized in the foregoing cases. It has been expressly held, in the case of a will executed in a foreign country, that, although the acknowledgment was probably prepared under the belief that such an acknowledgment was necessary, where the facts necessary to a valid attestation were present, the official might be regarded as a witness. Keely v. Moore (1904) 196 U. S. 38, 49 L. ed. 376, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169. In this case it is stated that the certificate of the officer was probably prepared under the belief that wills, like deeds, made in a foreign country, must be executed and acknowledged before some foreign official, or before a secretary of legation or consular officer of the United States. The certificate in question was to the effect that the testator attended before the vice consul taking the acknowledgment, upon the day following the date of the will, acknowledged it to be his last will and testament, and that the signature was genuine. The court states that if the words "vice consul of the United States of America," which were added to the consul's signature, were omitted, there would be no failure to comply with the statute relating to attestation, unless in the omission to certify that the vice consul attested and subscribed in the presence of the testator. It is stated that the jury might properly draw the conclusion that it was signed in the testator's presence, as this would be the usual course of business, and the presumption would be that the vice consul conformed to it and to his duty as a certifying officer. Under these circumstances, the court states that "as such certificate was unofficial and contributes nothing, as such, to the validity of the will, it can only be looked upon as the affirmation of an ordinary witness to the facts therein stated. No particular form of attestation was necessary, as appears to be the case in England and in several states of the United States; and if the certificate of Cooksey [the vice consul] had been written at the foot of the will and signed by himself and by the two witnesses . . . it would have been a sufficient attestation. How, then, can it be regarded as insufficient when an attestation in one form is signed by two witnesses, and an attestation in another form by a third? Bearing in mind that the certificate, if given any force at all, must be considered an attestation, we do not think that the fact that it may have been written and signed under a mistaken impression as to its necessity and purpose vitiates it as an attestation. What use was intended to be made of it is immaterial, if it were useless for any purpose as an official certificate. The facts certified are appropriate to the attestation of the instrument, and, if true, we see no reason for holding it to be invalid as an attestation because it was signed under the impression that it was necessary for some possible purpose as a certificate."

In other cases the intent with which the official acted is held to be the determining factor. If the officer intended to act as a witness, and added the certificate of acknowledgment in the belief that it would give greater validity to his attestation, the officer has been held to be a sufficient witness. Murray v. Murphy (1860) 39 Miss. 214; Bolton v. Bolton (1914) 107 Miss. 84, 64 So. 967. A request by the testator to a county clerk, to whom the testator had taken his will after it had been signed by testator and other witnesses, "to authenticate it," was treated as a request to witness it, and the attestation by the clerk was held sufficient, although the clerk took the testator's acknowledgment of his signature to the paper, and attached a certificate of acknowledgment, and signed the same with his official signature. Franks v. Chapman (1885) 64 Tex. 159. In Murray v. Murphy (Miss.) supra, it appeared that the testator published and declared the paper to be his last will and testament in the presence of each and all of the witnesses, and each and all of the witnesses subscribed their names thereto as witnesses in the presence of the testator and of each other; that the witness, who was an officer entitled to take acknowledgments, signed his name in his official capacity because he and the other witnesses believed that greater validity would be given to his signature by prefixing thereto his official certificate, but he intended thereby to be an attesting witness to the will. In holding him to be a sufficient attesting witness, the court states that the certificate was intended and signed by him as an attestation to the execution of the will; that though the certificate is useless his signature as a subscribing witness, which was the essential thing and that which was intended, is valid; that the superfluous certificate cannot invalidate the regular signature. In this case the certificate of acknowledgment was on the reverse side of the page on which the will was written. The court states that as to the place of signature of the attesting witnesses all that was necessary for that purpose was that the witnesses should sign their names upon the paper in the presence of the testator, in testimony of the fact that it was the paper signed and published by him as his will. In Bolton v. Bolton (Miss.) supra, the testator, the person who wrote the will, and the officer entitled to take acknowledgments were present when the will was executed. The officer was about to sign his name as an attesting witness, when the testator said to him, "I would rather you take my acknowledgment to it because I think it is better;" whereupon, the officer took from his pocket a blank printed acknowledgment, took the testator's acknowledgment, and filled out and signed the blank. There was some dispute as to whether or not it was attached to the will at that time; according to the officer, it was not physically connected with the will; according to the other witness an effort was made to paste it to the will, but, the paste being defective, the effort resulted in a failure, and afterwards it was attached to the will with mucilage. In sustaining the validity of the officer's attestation, the court stated that the will was signed by the testator in his presence, and "there can be no question that his taking the acknowledgment and attaching his signature thereto was for the purpose of evidencing the fact that he had witnessed the execution of the will by the testator." As to the separation of the sheets, the court stated it not to be necessary for the signature of the attesting witness to be on the same sheet with the signature of the testator; that if the sheets were, after the execution, pasted together, there could be no doubt that the attestation of the officer would have been sufficient; that the same result must follow when the testator himself, knowing what the officer's signature was intended to be, handed the papers to the scrivener, folded together, as his completed will.

But where the officer taking the acknowledgment was not asked to witness the execution, and did not affix the acknowledgment with the knowledge of the testator that he was signing as a witness, it has been denied that he may be treated as a witness. Hull v. Hull (1902) 117 Iowa, 738, 89 N. W. 979. The court says that "it seems to be settled that if the testator asks a person who is competent to be a witness, but also is competent to take acknowledgments, to attest the will, and the person thus requested, instead of attesting the will in the usual way as a witness, affixes his certificate of acknowledgment thereto, the will is nevertheless sufficiently witnessed by him. The important fact is whether he signed as witness, under circumstances rendering his attestation proper. . . . But the difficulty about treating Smith as a witness is that it does not clearly appear that he was asked to witness the execution of the will, or that he affixed the acknowledgment with the knowledge of the testatrix that he was signing it as a witness."

II. Person who writes testator's name and attests the signature by his own.

Where a person who signs the testator's name merely writes his name under that of the testator, to evidence that it has been signed in this manner, the courts are not agreed whether such person can be regarded as a witness. A will signed by the testator, "per H. M. M.," was held not to be sufficiently witnessed by H. M. M., the court stating that a mere inspection of the paper demonstrated that he did not sign as a subscribing witness, but only as the amanuensis of the testator in signing the testator's name to the instrument. Burton v. Brown (1898) — Miss. —, 25 So. 61. The writer of a will, who signed testator's name "by . . ." (the scrivener's name), is not a sufficient witness to the will. Peake v. Jenkins (1885) 80 Va. 293. The court stated that while the statute required no form or particular place on the paper for subscribing witnesses to sign, yet the witnesses, to attest a will not wholly written and signed by the testator, must sign the paper as witnesses. Speaking of the fact of the particular case, the court stated that the signature of the scrivener was a special attestation by her to the one fact of her signing the testatrix's name for her.

But it has been held, where the law requires that where another person signs the testator's name by his direction the will is invalid unless such person shall also write his own name as witness, that there is a sufficient attestation where the testator's signature was followed by the words: "By [the name of the person signing testator's name]. In his presence, and at his request," although such person did not sign at another place. Abraham v. Wilkins (1856) 17 Ark. 292. The court says that this person subscribed his own name, and clearly indicated that he signed the name of the testator, at testator's request, and that he wrote his own name immediately under that of the testator, "but there is no good reason why it should not be as valid as if he had written it in the margin on the left. The statute does not point out the particular place on the paper where the name shall be signed. He does not expressly state that he signed it as a witness, but in doing the act he placed himself in the attitude of a witness to the fact."

In Pollock v. Glassell (1846) 2 Gratt. (Va.) 439, a will was held sufficiently attested where the person who wrote the paper wrote at the foot of it the words, "written by S. S. Ashton for," intending to add the name of the testatrix if the latter should be unable to authenticate the paper by her own signature; but when this was mentioned to the testatrix she did sign her name to it herself, and when she was about to do so the draftsman of the will struck out with a pen the word "for," which at first followed her own name and was intended to precede that of the testatrix if it were found necessary that the latter should be written by the draftsman. The testatrix requested another person to witness the paper, which was accordingly done, and then requested S. S. Ashton to do so, but she thought, and told the deceased, that it was not necessary for her to sign it again, as her name was already there in the manner above stated. The court refers to the provision of the statute requiring wills to "be attested by two or more credible witnesses, subscribing their names in his or her presence," and, after reviewing the facts as above stated, says: "I cannot doubt, therefore, that the attestation by Miss S. S. Ashton of the paper 'F' is sufficient under the statute. It is not to be presumed that she placed her name there merely to attest the circumstance that the paper was written by her; a fact utterly insignificant in respect to the legal authentication of the instrument. Her subscription alone was a sufficient attestation, and the memorandum does not disprove it was so intended. At most it can only call for explanation, and that given by her testimony is completely satisfactory."

III. Miscellaneous.

A will was admitted to probate as being duly attested, in Griffiths v. Griffiths (1871) L. R. 2 Prob. & Div. (Eng.) 300, where one of the witnesses signed after the abbreviation, "Exceptrs.," in accordance with the request of the testator that he sign as executor. The court states that the question resolves itself into one of fact, namely, "Did he sign as an executor only, or as a witness also?" In holding that the person thus signing was a sufficient witness, the court further states: "It may have very well been that Homer was called upon to sign as witness as well as executor, and that he considered he signed in both characters. Homer himself gave evidence that the testator asked him to sign as executor. In cross-examination, he said the testator's words were: 'He asked me to sign.' The court is of opinion that Homer did not sign exclusively as executor, but that by his signature he meant to affirm that the deceased executed the will in his presence."

The fact that the scrivener of a will, who was named therein as executor, necessarily wrote his own name in the course of preparing the will, cannot be regarded as making him a witness, although the writing was done in the presence of the testator who afterwards signed the will in the presence of the scrivener, where the testator did not look upon or consider him as a subscribing witness to the will but called others to perform that function. Snelgrove v. Snelgrove (1812) 4 S. C. Eq. 4 (Desauss.) 274. The court, after stating that the subscribing witnesses to a will are placed about the testator as guardians to prevent imposition, and to secure to the public the due execution of one of the most important acts of a man's life, often performed in extremis, continues: "I cannot consider the accidental circumstance which placed Mr. Cleary's name in his own handwriting on the face of the will, as executor, in the presence of the testator, and the accidental circumstance of the testator's afterwards signing in his presence, as constituting him a subscribing and attesting witness."

The probate of a will was refused in Wilson's Goods (1866) L. R. 1 Prob. Div. (Eng.) 269, where it was signed at the bottom of the first page by the testator, and immediately below this by one witness following the word "witness;" on the next page, under a memorandum relative to some leasehold houses, appeared the names of three other persons to whom the leasehold property was appointed as trustees in the will. In denying that the persons whose names appeared under the leasehold memorandum could be regarded as witnesses, it is stated that "if these names appeared at the top of the page it might have been supposed that they were put there for the purpose of attesting the will. But we find this memorandum, and these names written under it, very probably because they are to become trustees of the property to which the memorandum relates. They probably signed for the purpose of giving their assent to the acceptance of the trust; but whatever may have been their motive for attesting the memorandum, it does not appear that they were placed there in order to attest the deceased's signature to the will."

The signing of a will by a wife with the name of her husband, as requested by the testator, does not make the wife a sufficient witness to the will. Re Jones (1918) 101 Wash. 128, 172 Pac. 206. The court states that the wife did not sign as a witness, and did not intend to do so; was never even requested to sign as a witness, but was requested to sign for her husband and in his name. This is held not to be sufficient to make the wife a witness.

One who at the request of the testator, and in his presence, signed his name as a witness to a will, but failed to write his place of residence as required by law, because after some conversation with the testator he supposed the testator would have the will redrawn, and the witness did not regard it as an executed will, was held to be a sufficient witness in Lyman v. Phillips (1883) 3 Dem. (N. Y.) 459.

The fact that the scrivener who wrote the will at the request of the testator saw him sign and acknowledge it as his last will and codicil, and saw the subscribing witnesses sign the same as witnesses in the presence of each other and of the testator, does not make the scrivener a sufficient witness. Dunlap v. Dunlap (1812) 4 S. C. Eq. (4 Desauss.) 305.

IV. Conclusion.

From the foregoing cases a tendency appears to hold one who signs for some other purpose a sufficient witness, where the person thus signing possessed the necessary qualifications for a witness, and would have been a sufficient witness if he had signed in that capacity. It cannot be denied that this is not a strict compliance with the statute. The position of the Iowa court in Hull v. Hull (1902) 117 Iowa, 738, 89 N. W. 979, supra, is, without doubt, the logical position upon this question. The signing must be with the intent that the person should act as a witness, or the person thus signing cannot logically be regarded as a witness. It will be observed that in some of the foregoing cases an intent to act as a witness is imputed to the person, although such an intent is directly contrary to the evidence and to inferences arising from the form in which the signing was done. Practical considerations, however, support the tendency to regard such signers as sufficient witnesses, notwithstanding there is not a strict compliance with the statutes, and these considerations have, without doubt, been the determinative element with the courts. W. A. E.

J. S. WYNNE et al.

v.

GREENLEAF JOHNSON LUMBER COMPANY, Appt.

North Carolina Supreme Court — March 17, 1920.

(— N. C. —, 102 S. E. 403.)

Arbitration — violation of agreement — making witness drunk.

1. Intentionally getting drunk a material witness for the adversary in an arbitration proceeding, for the purpose of preventing him from testifying, is such a breach of the arbitration agreement as to justify its revocation by the adversary.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1082.]

Appeal — conclusiveness of referee's finding of fact. proved by the trial judge, is conclusive on appeal.

2. A referee's finding of fact, ap- [See 2 R. C. L. 210.]

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Franklin County (Guion, J.) confirming a report of the referee in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for cutting timber under contract size, and for the negligent burning of his lands, after revocation of a common-law arbitration agreement. Affirmed.

Statement by Clark, Ch. J.:

This was an action for damages for cutting timber under contract size and negligent burning of lands of plaintiffs, submitted to R. B. White, referee. No exceptions were taken to his findings of fact or conclusions of law, with the single exception of his findings and conclusions as to the breach of the agreement to arbitrate by plaintiffs, and consequent damage to the defendant. The judgment of the referee was confirmed, and the defendant appealed.

Messrs. William H. Ruffin, Thomas W. Ruffin, and W. H. Yarborough, for appellant:

It must be shown by competent evidence that there was an intention of the party to influence or improperly obtain the award; and that the award had been, or would have been, affected by such conduct.

3 Cyc. 746, and note 42; Eaton v. Eaton, 43 N. C. (8 Ired. Eq.) 107;

Mangum v. Mangum, 151 N. C. 270, 65 S. E. 1004.

Withdrawal from arbitration leaves the party liable to answer in such damages as occurred thereby.

Carpenter v. Tucker, 98 N. C. 316, 3 S. E. 831; Williams v. Branning Mfg. Co. 153 N. C. 7, 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 679, 138 Am. St. Rep. 637, 68 S. E. 902, 21 Ann. Cas. 954.

Messrs. Jones & Bailey and Benjamin T. Holden, for appellees:

Where a party takes a fraudulent advantage of the other party, the award will be set aside.

2 R. C. L. p. 391; Chambers v. Crook, 42 Ala. 171, 94 Am. Dec. 637; Emerson v. Udall, 13 Vt. 477, 37 Am. Dec. 604.

Clark, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only question presented is as to the right of the plaintiffs to revoke the contract of arbitration.

The referee found as facts upon the testimony, which, being approved by the judge, are conclusive on appeal, that "on October 3, 1916, the parties entered into written agreement to arbitrate, arbitrators were selected, and a hearing set at Vaughn. Witnesses for Wood came to Vaughn on defendant's train. As the train was leaving Wood, defendant's superintendent, Hayes, caused inquiry to be made for whisky, giving as his reason that he wished to get one Denton, a witness for plaintiffs and a passenger on the train, drunk so that he could not testify. Upon learning that another passenger had a pint of whisky in his bag back at the station, he had the train stopped and backed half a mile to the station. The whisky was procured. Most of it was given to Denton, who became drunk. Denton was a material witness for the plaintiffs."

The plaintiffs not long after gave notice of their revocation of the arbitration, and brought this action.

The defendant breached the contract of arbitration by this action of its superintendent, and we agree with the counsel for the plaintiffs that they might well have insisted upon the recovery of $500 liquidated damages on account thereof. They chose rather to proceed to assert their original rights in this action. Mr. R. B. White the referee, we think, stated the law tersely and correctly as follows, in his report, which the judge approved: "An agreement to submit a controversy to arbitration by necessary implication carries with it the condition that neither party will attempt by any unfair or fraudulent means to affect the award which is to be made. The condition is concurrent and vital. A breach of such condition by one party to the agreement justifies a revocation by the other. Intentionally getting a material witness drunk for the purpose of keeping him from testifying in behalf of the other party is such a breach, and your referee is of the opinion that the defendant should recover nothing on his counterclaim."

In 2 R. C. L., p. 391, it is said: "It has been held that where a party takes a fraudulent advantage of the other party, the award will be set aside. Chambers v. Crook, 42 Ala. 171, 94 Am. Dec. 637; Emerson v. Udall, 13 Vt. 477, 37 Am. Dec. 604."

In 5 C. J. 61, it is said, in summing up the authorities cited: "If the party revoking the submission has sufficient cause to do so, he, of course, incurs no liability for damages."

The conduct of the defendant's superintendent, for which the defendant company is responsible, was so clearly reprehensible and contrary to good faith and public policy that the action of the referee and of the court needs no citation of authorities in approval.

It may be proper to add in the language of Lord Erskine, when at the bar: "Morality may come in the cold abstract from the pulpit, but men smart practically under its lessons when we lawyers are the teachers."

Affirmed.

ANNOTATION.

Improper attempt by influencing or by attempting to influence decision as ground for revocation of arbitration, or for avoidance of award thereunder.

- I. Introductory, 1083.
- II. Equity and law, 1083.
- III. Fraudulent concealment of facts, 1087.
- IV. Perjury of party, 1088.

- V. Ex parte communications with arbitrator, 1088.
- VI. Attorney drafting award, 1089.
- VII. Miscellaneous, 1090.

Appeal—conclusiveness of referee's finding of fact.

Arbitration—violation of agreement—making witness drunk.

I. Introductory.

It may be said briefly as to the statutes that it was provided by the Statute of 9 & 10 Wm. III. chap. 15, that any arbitration or umpirage procured by corruption or undue means shall be void, and set aside by any court of law or equity, so as such corruption or undue practice be complained of in the court where the rule is made for such arbitration, before the last day of the next term after such arbitration made and published to the parties. The Statute 52 & 53 Vict. chap. 49, § 11 (2), declares that where "an arbitration or award has been improperly procured, the court may set the award aside." There are many other statutes on the subject in the United States and Canada, in some of which is the expression "undue means," probably taken from the Statute of Wm. III.

The cases on the subject of attack on awards for fraud or unfairness of a party often do not show whether the arbitration was one at common law or under statutes, or whether the attack was made at law or in equity, or whether the relief was provided for by statute.

This annotation excludes cases of fraud in procuring the agreement to arbitrate, or in the submission to arbitration. Cases of entertainment of arbitrators are also excluded.

II. Equity and law.

Equity will relieve against an award obtained by fraud or unfair means.

England. — Norgate v. Ponder (1627) Nelson, 6, 21 Eng. Reprint, 775; South Sea Co. v. Bumstead (1734) 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 80, 22 Eng. Reprint, 70; Medcalfe v. Medcalfe (1737) 1 Atk. 63, 26 Eng. Reprint, 42; Burton v. Ellington (1791) 3 Bro. Ch. 196, 29 Eng. Reprint, 487; Gartside v. Gartside (1796) 3 Anstr. 735, 145 Eng. Reprint, 1023; Charter v. Trevelyan (1844) 11 Clark & F. 715, 8 Eng. Reprint, 1274.

Alabama. — Chambers v. Crook (1868) 42 Ala. 171, 94 Am. Dec. 637.

Connecticut. — Bulkley v. Starr (1807) 2 Day, 552.

Florida. — Johnson v. Wells (1916) 72 Fla. 290, 73 So. 188 (obiter).

Illinois. — Spurck v. Crook (1858) 19 Ill. 414 (obiter); Catlett v. Dougherty (1885) 114 Ill. 568, 2 N. E. 669; Woods v. Roberts (1900) 185 Ill. 489, 57 N. E. 426; Stufflebeam v. Allen (1913) 184 Ill. App. 133.

Maryland. — Sisk v. Garey (1867) 27 Md. 401.

Michigan. — Beam v. Macomber (1876) 33 Mich. 127; Hewitt v. Reed City (1900) 124 Mich. 6, 50 L.R.A. 128, 83 Am. St. Rep. 309, 82 N. W. 616.

New Hampshire. — Craft v. Thompson (1852) 51 N. H. 536.

North Carolina. — Eaton v. Eaton (1851) 43 N. C. (8 Ired. Eq.) 102.

Oregon. — Fire Asso. v. Allesina (1907) 49 Or. 316, 89 Pac. 960.

Pennsylvania. — Hartup v. Pittsburgh (1889) 131 Pa. 535, 19 Atl. 507 (obiter).

Vermont. — Cutting v. Carter (1836) 29 Vt. 72.

West Virginia. — Dickinson v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1874) 7 W. Va. 390.

Canada. — Wilson v. Richardson (1851) 2 Grant, Ch. 448.

In Norgate v. Ponder (1627) Nelson, 6, 21 Eng. Reprint, 775, it is reported that "an award was obtained by fraud, by which the arbitrators did award that one of the parties to the submission should seal and deliver a bond to the other after general releases first given. All which was done pursuant to the award, and upon a bill to be relieved it was decreed that the bond to stand to the award, and the arbitration itself, and the releases, and the other bond executed by the parties should be brought into court and canceled."

Where a submission to arbitration was made a rule of the court of exchequer, and an award made, it was held that one of the parties might bring a bill to open the matter on the ground that the other party wilfully misrepresented facts to the arbitrator, and that the plaintiff had not till lately discovered the fraud. Gartside v. Gartside (1796) 3 Anstr. 735, 145 Eng. Reprint, 1023.

"A bill in chancery to set aside an award is not demurrable for want of equity, which alleges that the award was obtained by the fraud of one of the parties to the arbitration, who was complainant's copartner in business, and the fraud was committed by the defendant, complainant's copartner, by making false entries in the books of the copartnership, to which complainant did not have access, and was ignorant of the existence of the fraud, and that the books containing the fraudulent entries were submitted to the arbitrators by the defendant, and the award was based largely upon such false entries, which were against complainant's interest." Johnson v. Wells (1916) 72 Fla. 290, 73 So. 188, where, however, the award was sustained.

Bringing forward before the arbitrators a paid claim will cause the award to be set aside in equity. Woods v. Roberts (1900) 185 Ill. 489, 57 N. E. 426 (where the arbitration agreement also was set aside).

Equity will give relief in case of an award, where the agent of one of the parties deceived the arbitrators in matters of fact. Eaton v. Eaton (1851) 43 N. C. (8 Ired. Eq.) 102.

"A court of equity will, and should, set aside and annul an award for fraud or imposition on the part of the party attempting to set up an award, by means of which the arbitrators were deceived." Dickinson v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1874) 7 W. Va. 390.

Equity will set aside an award unfairly obtained. Medcalfe v. Medcalfe (1737) 1 Atk. 63, 26 Eng. Reprint, 42.

An award having been obtained against the estate of the decedent, there being no personal property, the administrator brought a proceeding to sell the real estate to satisfy the award. It was held that an heir might attack therein the award as fraudulently obtained, as what would be good ground for a bill in equity is good ground for a civil action under the Code. Conway v. Duncan (1875) 28 Ohio St. 102.

In an action to recover upon a fire insurance policy for loss by fire, and also to set aside a certain appraisalment or award of damages made by appraisers under the policy, the court, in affirming a judgment for the plaintiff, said: "A rule which seems to be reasonable, and one well settled by authorities, is that a party to an arbitration, who by his own acts either attempts to corrupt or improperly influence one or more of the arbitrators to make an award in his favor, cannot be heard to say that such act or acts on his part were ineffectual to accomplish the purpose designed." Insurance Co. of N. A. v. Hegewald (1903) 161 Ind. 631, 66 N. E. 902.

The two following cases may be here referred to, although they seem to involve fraud in inducing the agreement rather than in procuring the award:

In an arbitration between partners, one of them, in the presence of the arbitrators, falsely representing the debtor to be solvent, induced the other to take as cash a certain claim, and, he consenting, the arbitrators made up their award accordingly. It was held that the award would be corrected in equity in this particular, it being considered that this part of the award, "being procured by fraud," was not binding on the defrauded party. Brown v. Harklerode (1846) 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 18.

An award between two brothers was set aside in equity for fraud, where one of them induced the other to suppress two items under a threat that otherwise he would prosecute their aged father for perjury, there being no foundation for the charge of perjury. Mathews v. Mathews (1870) 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 669.

It has been held in Vermont that equity will set aside an award for a party's fraudulent concealment of a fact (Cutting v. Carter (1856) 29 Vt. 72, infra, III.), but not for perjury by a party (French v. Raymond (1909) 82 Vt. 156, 137 Am. St. Rep. 994, 72 Atl. 324, infra, IV.).

The court's views of what constitutes fraud in Emerson v. Udall (1841) 13 Vt. 477, 37 Am. Dec. 604, seem perhaps to be affected by the doubt as to the jurisdiction of equity. The court there said: "It is very certain that the mere fact that the party offered, and prevailed before the arbitrators upon, a groundless claim, is no ground for charging him with fraud. This he might have done with perfect innocence and sincerity. It is necessary something more should be shown. And I feel very confident that the fact that the party making the claim considered it one of doubtful equity, or even that he might honestly have believed that the claim was not well founded, either in law or equity, if all the facts known to him were fairly laid before the arbitrators, and they allowed the claim, is no such fraud as will justify a court of equity in interfering. The party must, either by suggestion of falsehood or the suppression of truth, have presented to the arbitrators a state of facts in regard to the merits of the claim, which were factitious, and which the party at the time believed to be such. And it is questionable even how far such a case will justify a court of equity in setting aside the award. Some cases of good authority seems to justify such a course. It is certain nothing short of this would justify it."

In Auriol v. Smith (1823) Turn. & R. 121, 37 Eng. Reprint, 1041, it was held that where accounts between trustee and cestui que trust are referred to arbitration, and the award is made a rule of a court of law under the Statute 9 & 10 Wm. III., though there be fraudulent misrepresentation by the trustee to the arbitrators as to particular items of the account, a bill cannot be maintained by the cestuis que trustent, after the time limited by the statute has elapsed, to set aside the award as to the items impeached, leaving it to stand as to the remaining items, the award upon the face of it being entire.

In Elliott v. Adams (1846) 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 103, it was held that a party cannot resort to chancery to set aside an award made pursuant to a statute authorizing the submission to be made a rule of court, on the ground that the award was procured by fraud, when the question has been heard and determined in a court of law, "and discloses no facts pertaining to the question of fraud of which the complainant might not, by due diligence.

have availed himself on the trial in that court. The jurisdiction in the case for granting relief was as extensive, on the law side of the court, as is that of a court of equity on the same subject. Under such circumstances, no principle is better settled than that equity will not interfere with a judgment at law."

In French v. Raymond (1910) 83 Vt. 265, 75 Atl. 267, it was held that a bill to set aside an award because the defendant fraudulently induced a material witness for the plaintiff to leave the state is demurrable, where it does not show "diligence on the part of the orator in respect of the matter complained of, for that it does not show when he first learned of [the witness's] absence, nor that he took any measures to protect his interests by applying to the arbitrators for a continuance, or otherwise, nor show that the defendant did anything to prevent his exercising diligence in this regard."

Relief at law.

It is not, of course, intended to take up the general subject of relief from awards at law. The modern cases on the subject of relief from awards on account of the fraud or unfairness of the party have little discussion on the subject of relief at law.

It was a general rule of the old practice that fraud in procuring an award could not be asserted at law. Blagrove v. Bristol Waterworks Co. (1856) 1 Hurlst. & N. 369, 156 Eng. Reprint, 1245, 26 L. J. Exch. N. S. 57; White Water Valley Canal Co. v. Henderson (1851) 3 Ind. 3; Finley v. Finley (1848) 11 Mo. 624 (obiter); Pickering v. Pickering (1849) 19 N. H. 389; Elkins v. Page (1864) 45 N. H. 310; Devereux v. Burgwin (1850) 33 N. C. (11 Ired. L.) 490.

An award cannot be impeached in a court of law by proving that it was procured to be made unfairly and by the exertion of undue influence. Devereux v. Burgwin (N. C.) supra.

A common-law award cannot be impeached in an action at law, for unfairness in obtaining it. Finley v. Finley (1848) 11 Mo. 624 (obiter).

In White Water Valley Canal Co. v.

Henderson (1851) 3 Ind. 3, it was held that a collateral action at law to enforce an award, under a special statutory arbitration for damages for taking lands for a canal, cannot be opposed for the fraudulent concealment by the plaintiff of evidence in the arbitration; the remedy was by bill in chancery to set the award aside.

"That the award was procured by the false and fraudulent testimony of the plaintiff cannot be determined by a jury, or raised by the pleadings in a suit at law," on the submission bond. Elkins v. Page (1864) 45 N. H. 310.

Where, as a defense to an action, the defendant pleaded an arbitration and award, and the plaintiff replied "that the award alleged was made upon false and corrupt testimony, procured and laid before the arbitrators by the defendant," the court said that the replication was "bad. There is no allegation of any fraud, corruption, misbehavior, or even mistake in the referees. It is alleged, generally, that the award was based upon false and corrupt testimony, procured and laid before the arbitrators. To try the issue presented by the replication would be to inquire whether the referees arrived at just conclusions upon the testimony. The question whether any portion of it was false is involved in those passed upon and settled by the tribunal chosen by the parties, and to determine it now would be to try the case over again. This cannot be done. Nothing is better settled than that an award made upon a full hearing of the parties, where no mistake or misconduct is imputed to the referees, is forever conclusive upon the parties, and the matter cannot be re-examined in any other tribunal. If there is an exception it must be on the ground of newly discovered evidence, which is not alleged in the present case, and the remedy, if any, must be by petition for a new trial." Pickering v. Pickering (1849) 19 N. H. 389.

In Bradford v. Woollam (1864) 10 Jur. N. S. (Eng.) 206, 33 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 129, 9 L. T. N. S. 731, 12 Week. Rep. 384, where the ground of the decision apparently is that the relief was asked for after the time provided in the statute, upon motion for payment of an award made in June, the defendant in January next alleged, against a rule to show cause why he should not pay, that the plaintiff had since been committed for perjury on the hearing of the reference, but the court ruled that they could only look to what appeared on the face of the award.

It was held in Burroughs v. David (1878) 7 Iowa, 154, that in an action at law on an arbitration bond the defendant could not show that the plaintiffs procured the award by fraudulent representations and by fraudulent concealments, where the agreement was that all parties should make a full and perfect statement.

In Blagrove v. Bristol Waterworks Co. (1856) 1 Hurlst. & N. 369, 156 Eng. Reprint, 1245, 26 L. J. Exch. N. S. 57, it was held that it was no cause of action that the defendant procured an award by fraud; the plaintiff should have moved the court to set the award aside.

In Emerson v. Udall (1836) 8 Vt. 357, it was held that in an action at law an award cannot be defended against by simply showing "that the claim was unfounded, and that it is fairly inferable from the evidence exhibited that the party was cognizant of the fact."

In a few cases relief was allowed at law.

Thus, in holding that it might be shown at law that one of the parties had been guilty of fraud in procuring the award, in inducing false testimony, the court said: "Hardin, by his counsel, objects to the award being attacked in a court of law. But we hold that the judgment of a court in this state may be vacated for fraud, at law, and of course an award of arbitrators may be." Hardin v. Brown (1859) 27 Ga. 314.

In Strong v. Strong (1852) 9 Cush. (Mass.) 560, where the facts are not clearly reported, but it is suggested that ex parte representations were received from a party, the court, in advising a new trial in an action on a bond to perform an award, held that "the exercise of undue or improper influence, applied by one of the parties to one or more of the arbitrators, by separate conference, or other ways of approach, is a lawful defense to an action on the award."

In Neal v. Shields (1830) 2 Penr. & W. (Pa.) 300, in debt on an award, it was said, obiter, that fraud or imposition upon the arbitrators by the plaintiff might be shown. It does not appear whether this was an arbitration at common law or under the Pennsylvania statute.

It will be seen that it is held in the reported case (WYNNE v. GREENLEAF JOHNSON LUMBER Co. ante, 1081) that, where to an action for damages the defendant pleaded an agreement to arbitrate and its breach by the plaintiff, the plaintiff might show that the defendant breached the agreement by getting a witness for the plaintiff drunk. (This was an agreement at common law.)

III. Fraudulent concealment of facts.

Fraudulent concealment of matters from the arbitrators is ground for avoiding the award. South Sea Co. v. Bumstead (1784) 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 80, 22 Eng. Reprint, 70 (in equity); Charter v. Trevelyan (1844) 11 Clark & F. 715, 8 Eng. Reprint, 1274 (in equity); Beam v. Macomber (1876) 33 Mich. 127 (in equity); Cutting v. Carter (1856) 29 Vt. 72 (in equity); Wilson v. Richardson (1851) 2 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 448 (in equity).

It is good cause in equity to disregard an award that the other party withheld papers. Burton v. Ellington (1791) 3 Bro. Ch. 196, 29 Eng. Reprint, 487.

On a bill to set aside an award on the ground that the defendant had concealed certain matters from the arbitrators, the court said and held: "It is a rule, and so are the express words of the statute, that awards made between parties shall not be set aside but for corruption or partiality in the arbitrators; but there are other reasons equally mischievous and proper to be relieved against in this court; as where there are fraud and concealment in either of the parties." South Sea Co. v. Bumstead (Eng.) supra.

An arbitration between a solicitor and his client will not be binding upon the client, when it is shown in equity that in the arbitration the solicitor concealed a material fact. Charter v. Trevelyan (1844) 1 Clark & F. 715, 8 Eng. Reprint, 1274.

If one of two partners, on an award between them, conceals an item, equity will correct the award. Beam v. Macomber (1876) 33 Mich. 127.

Equity will set aside an award for fraudulent concealment of a fact by a party, which affects the amount of the award. Cutting v. Carter (1856) 29 Vt. 72.

In Green v. Citizens Ins. Co. (1890) 18 Can. S. C. 338, it was held that it was a good ground, under the Canadian statute, for remitting an award to the arbitrators, that in an insurance matter the insured made fraudulent concealment of saved property.

In Hickman v. Lawson (1860) 8 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 386, where an award was set aside on an application for that purpose, a party in making a representation suppressed a fact, but there were other grounds.

Reference may be made here to the following case, although it seems that the fraud was directed towards the agreement of the parties, and not to the procurement of the award: It was held (obiter) in Stockton Combined Harvester & Agri. Works v. Glen's Falls Ins. Co. (1893) 98 Cal. 557, 33 Pac. 633, in an action on a promise to pay an award, that, where by fraudulent concealment one party induced the other to consent to an award of a certain amount without determination of facts by the arbitrators, the award would be set aside.

But in an action to recover the amount of a statutory award for land taken, which was claimed by the defendant to be in a public street, the court said: "None of the authorities that we have been able to find go to the extent that either courts of equity or courts of law will intervene to relieve those who have failed to relieve themselves. There is no evidence that the plaintiff had any more knowledge of the street than the defendant had. The means of information were the same for both, and both parties might equally avail themselves of it; but having failed to do so heretofore, it is too late now." Valle v. North Missouri R. Co. (1866) 37 Mo. 445.

IV. Perjury of party.

Relief will be granted in equity against an award obtained by the perjury of a party. Chambers v. Crook (1868) 42 Ala. 171, 94 Am. Dec. 637 (collection of a judgment enjoined); Bulkley v. Starr (1807) 2 Day (Conn.) 552 (award set aside); Stufflebeam v. Allen (1913) 184 Ill. App. 133 (award corrected); Craft v. Thompson (1872) 51 N. H. 536 (award set aside); Fire Asso. of Phila. v. Allesina (1907) 49 Or. 316, 89 Pac. 960.

"An award based on the fraud or false testimony of the prevailing party will be set aside in equity, in a suit instituted for that purpose, and he will be enjoined from maintaining an action thereon." Fire Asso. v. Allesina (Or.) supra.

But on the contrary, in French v. Raymond (1909) 82 Vt. 156, 137 Am. St. Rep. 994, 72 Atl. 324, it was held that equity would not set an award aside for perjury by a party in testifying before the arbitrators. The court said: "It makes no difference whether the perjury is suborned by the successful party or not, unless you call the subornation the fraud, and not the introduction of the perjured testimony, or whether the successful party himself commits it, in which case it is clearly intrinsic and direct; for when a matter has been actually tried and determined by a tribunal of competent jurisdiction, both parties having been fully heard, as here, a court of equity will not, according to most of the cases, reopen the controversy because of perjury, and throw the whole matter at large again, for that would be sowing dragon's teeth, and disregarding the maxims that 'it is for the public good that litigation should end,' and that 'a man shall not be twice vexed for the same thing,' which maxims are the very foundation of the law of this subject."

See also, as to asserting perjury in a suit at law, cases cited supra, II.

In Williams v. Danziger (1879) 91

Pa. 232, it was held that an agreement that an arbitration should be "final and without exception or appeal" precludes a party from claiming that the award was procured by the false testimony of the other party.

V. Ex parte communications with arbitrators.

The reader will understand that it is not intended here to take up the general question as to the effect of ex parte communications with arbitrators, but only to refer to those cases where the communication was on the suggestion of the party making it, and with an apparent intent to gain an unfair advantage.

Where one of the parties communicates with the arbitrator privately, the award will usually be set aside.

Georgia.—Wilkins v. Van Winkle (1887) 78 Ga. 557, 3 S. E. 761.

Illinois.—Spurck v. Crook (1858) 19 Ill. 415 (obiter); Catlett v. Dougherty (1885) 114 Ill. 568, 2 N. E. 669 (in equity).

Kentucky. — Campbell v. Walker (1907) 32 Ky. L. Rep. 327, 105 S. W. 959 (obiter).

Maryland.—Sisk v. Garey (1867) 27 Md. 407 (in equity).

Michigan. — Hewitt v. Reed City (1900) 124 Mich. 6, 50 L.R.A. 128, 83 Am. St. Rep. 309, 82 N. W. 616.

Pennsylvania. — Trump v. Straw (1852) 1 Pearson, 29.

Virginia.—Jenkins v. Liston (1856) 13 Gratt. 535 (in equity).

Canada. — Van Egmond v. Jones (1835) 4 U. C. Q. B. O. S. 119; Williams v. Roblin (1858) 2 Ont. Pr. Rep. 234; Race v. Anderson (1886) 14 Ont. App. Rep. 213. See also Strong v. Strong (1852) 9 Cush. (Mass.) 560, supra, II.

In a suit in equity to enjoin an action upon a bond given to secure the performance of an award, and to set aside the award, it was held that it was sufficient to enjoin the suit at law and to set aside the award that one of the real parties in interest made a statement to one of the arbitrators, "in the absence of his adverse party to the arbitration, evidently designed and having a tendency to improperly affect his decision as an arbitrator," and that it was unimportant whether the arbitrator was actually influenced or not. Catlett v. Dougherty (1885) (Ill.) supra.

Submission of authorities to an arbitrator after close of the testimony, where it is expressly agreed that neither party is to be represented by counsel, is a violation of the spirit of the submission which will avoid the award. Hewitt v. Reed City (Mich.) supra.

In Trump v. Straw (Pa.) supra, an award was set aside as procured by undue influence of counsel, who suggested, after the award was made out, that it was too low to carry costs, and it was then increased; this was held to be "undue means" under the Statute of 1836, which provided that an award was subject to exception for "corruption or undue means in procuring it."

On a bill to enforce an award it was held that "an award cannot be sustained if made in favor of a party who has secretly offered evidence which has been received by the arbitrators whilst acting in their capacity as such. Nor will the case be withdrawn from the operation of the general rule by proof that the award would have been the same without such proof." Jenkins v. Liston (Va.) supra.

In Race v. Anderson (1886) 14 Ont. App. Rep. 213, an award was set aside on account of a statement and affidavit sent by one party to the arbitrator after he had written out his decision, but before he had signed it.

But where a party was asked by the arbitrator for a statement, and to send his opponent a copy, and he omitted to send the copy, the court declined to set aside the award where there was no substantial difference between his statement and answers already made in the presence of the other party. Campbell v. Walker (1907) 32 Ky. L. Rep. 327, 105 S. W. 959.

And when to an action for work and labor the defendant pleaded an award, and the plaintiff replied that the arbitrators met, the defendant being present but not the plaintiff, and that the defendant "induced the arbitrators to make said award by making false representations to them as to the work to be done by the" defendant, the reply was held bad on demurrer, as it did not appear that the plaintiff was prevented from attending upon the arbitrators by any inducement of the arbitrators or the defendant. "Under such circumstances, he cannot avoid the award upon the assumption that his adversary took a false view of the matters in controversy or misrepresented the facts; he should have been present and have shown the arbitrators that the statements of his adversary were not true." Norton v. Browne (1883) 89 Ind. 333.

It was held that it was no objection to an award that a letter was written by a party to one of the three arbitrators, which was received by him after the case was decided, though before the signing of the award, which was afterwards signed as decided, and before the other two arbitrators knew of the letter. Johnson v. Holyoke Water Power Co. (1871) 107 Mass. 472, where Gray, J., said: "We have no doubt that any communication made by one party to a submission, without the knowledge of the other, while the arbitrators have the case under consideration, attempting to influence them in his own favor, or to prejudice them against the other party, will avoid the award, if seasonably objected to by the latter; because the court cannot know that it did not affect the minds of the arbitrators, and must protect the innocent party from the possibility of being injured by the unlawful attempt of the other party. If such an attempt is made before the award is returned or published, it is ordinarily impossible to ascertain that it did not have any effect."

VI. Attorney drafting award.

An award should not be set aside merely because it was prepared by the attorney for one of the parties. Fetherstone v. Cooper (1803) 9 Ves. Jr. 68, 32 Eng. Reprint, 526 (on bill to set aside); Underwood v. Bedford & C. R. Co. (1861) 11 C. B. N. S. 442, 142 Eng. Reprint, 868 (on motion); Steere v. Brownell (1885) 113 Ill. 415 (bill to set aside); Brown v. Ewing (1792) 1 N. J. L. 144, 1 Am. Dec. 195 (on motion, obiter). See also Behren v. Bremer (1854) 3 C. L. R. (Can.) 40, as set out in Re Zuber (1911) 25 Ont. L. Rep. 252, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1002.

That one of the attorneys drew up the award on the instruction of the arbitrators is no ground to set it aside. Ex parte Milner (1875) 16 N. B. 96.

In an action upon an award, the court said: "After the award was agreed upon, we think there was no impropriety in employing the attorney of the prevailing party to draw it up." Kane v. Fond du Lac (1876) 40 Wis. 495.

That the formal parts of the award were drawn up by the solicitor of one of the parties after the written result had been handed by the arbitrator to the official reporter is no objection to the award. Re Armstrong (1905) 6 Ont. Week. Rep. 104.

An award should not be set aside because a solicitor, before the hearings began, drafted a form with the amount left blank and handed it to one of the arbitrators. Re Zuber (1911) 25 Ont. L. Rep. 252, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1002 (on an application to set aside the award, apparently under the Canadian statute).

However, in Dickinson v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (1874) 7 W. Va. 390, it was said and held: "Though the simple fact that Rucker (one of the parties) wrote the award in the absence of the company, its agent, or attorney may not of itself be sufficient to make it invalid, still it may be considered unexplained, as affording just ground for suspicion and criticism. But, Rucker having written the award, and so written it as that it is materially erroneous and deceptive in his favor, for the arbitrators to sign, and they did sign it as written, the award may be held invalid in a court of equity, under the circumstances appearing in this case."

In Burton v. Knight (1705) 2 Vern. 514, 23 Eng. Reprint, 929, where an award drawn by an attorney for one of the parties was set aside in chancery, there were other acts on which the decision was particularly based.

VII. Miscellaneous.

It was held in Whiteley v. Roberts [1891] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 558, 60 L. J. Ch. N. S. 149, 64 L. T. N. S. 81, 39 Week. Rep. 248, that an admission by the arbitrator that he was bribed is not admissible against the successful party on a motion to set aside the award.

In Chicester v. M'Intire (1430) 4 Bligh, N. R. 78, 5 Eng. Reprint, 28, 1 Dowl. & C. 460, 6 Eng. Reprint, 597, the court declined to decree a specific performance of an award, partly, it seems, because one of the arbitrators conferred with the wife of one of the parties; but the case is obscurely reported.

In Worley v. Moore (1881) 77 Ind. 567, an action to recover money paid upon a settlement for fraud and mistake, the defendant alleged that the payment was by land appraised by arbitrators, one of whom the plaintiff bribed, whereby the land was undervalued. The court said: "It is argued that the answer shows an arbitration, and that, as the only fraudulent act charged is the bribery of the third person, there was therefore no injury to the appellant, because a majority of the arbitrators were uncorrupted. This is a doctrine we cannot approve. The appellant had a right to the judgment of disinterested and honest men, and in bribing one of them to make a false valuation the appellee invaded the rights of his adversary. He cannot be allowed to take advantage of his corrupt and fraudulent act."

In Reager v. Pennsylvania Co. (1916) 169 Ky. 479, 184 S. W. 395, the court said obiter: "Fraud used by one of the parties in securing an award will vitiate the decision."

It was held in Widder v. Buffalo & L. H. R. Co. (1868) 27 U. C. Q. B. 425, that the making by a party of a claim bad in law is not a fraud such as will be a defense to an award. B. B. B.

CLINTON A. CURTIS et al.
v.

I. R. CURTIS, Impleaded, etc., Appt.

West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals — October 28, 1919.

(— W. Va. —, 100 S. E. 856.)

Witness — heir of incompetent — attack on deed.

1. One who would inherit an interest in land, in case a deed, which is attacked upon the ground of lack of capacity of the grantor, is set aside, is incompetent to testify as to the mental capacity of the grantor in such deed, and this disqualification extends to the wife or husband of such person.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1097.]

— testimony by grantee — effect.

2. Where, however, the grantee in such deed testifies as to the mental capacity of the grantor therein, those seeking to overthrow the same become competent witnesses upon that question under the exception contained in § 28 of chapter 130 (§ 4879) of the Code of 1913.

Deed — incompetent grantor — setting aside.

3. Proof that the grantor in a deed was feeble, both in body and mind, reposed great confidence and trust in her son, the grantee therein, who acted as her agent under a power of attorney giving him full authority to manage, dispose of, and convey her estate, that he procured his attorney to prepare the deed conveying all of the grantor's estate to him for an insubstantial consideration, to the exclusion of another son and a daughter, who were left entirely unprovided for, and which deed was executed while the grantor was living with the grantee in his home, without any independent advice being obtained by the grantor or any opportunity for obtaining such advice establishes prima facie the charge of undue influence by the son; and, where such prima facie case is not overthrown by clear evidence that the grantor was of sound mind and acted independently and upon her own judgment in executing such deed the same will be set aside.

[See 4 R. C. L. 504; 14 R. C. L. 598.]

Headnotes by RITZ, J.

APPEAL by defendant I. R. Curtis from a decree of the Circuit Court for Upshur County in favor of plaintiffs in a suit to cancel a deed. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. H. Roy Waugh, for appellant:
Testimony of witnesses bearing upon the mental capacity of Mrs. Smith was not competent or admissible.

Kilgore v. Hanley, 27 W. Va. 451; Kerr v. Lunsford, 31 W. Va. 659, 2 L.R.A. 668, 8 S. E. 493; Freeman v. Freeman, 71 W. Va. 303, 76 S. E. 657; Holcomb v. Holcomb, 95 N. Y. 316.

Katherine E. Smith was not mentally incompetent.

Buckey v. Buckey, 38 W. Va. 168, 18 S. E. 383; Delaplain v. Grubb, 44 W. Va. 612, 67 Am. St. Rep. 788, 30 S. E.

201; Smith v. Smith, 48 W. Va. 51, 35 S. E. 876; Black v. Post, 67 W. Va. 252, 67 S. E. 1072; Teter v. Teter, 59 W. Va. 449, 53 S. E. 779; Woodville v. Woodville, 63 W. Va. 286, 60 S. E. 140; White v. Mooney, 73 W. Va. 304, 80 S. E. 844; Orum v. Rose, 74 W. Va. 164, 81 S. E. 719; Barnett v. Great-house, 77 W. Va. 514, 88 S. E. 1013.

Evidence of physicians as to testamentary capacity is entitled to greater weight than that of nonprofessional persons, if they have had personal knowledge of the person whose mental capacity is in question.

Jarrett v. Jarrett, 11 W. Va. 584; Ward v. Brown, 53 W. Va. 227, 44 S. E. 488.

Mr. C. N. Pew also for appellant.

Messrs. Young & McWhorter for appellees.

Ritz, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiffs, Clinton A. Curtis and Mollie E. McNemar, and the defendant, I. R. Curtis, are children of Katherine E. Smith, who was twice married, her first husband being Isom Curtis, the father of the plaintiffs and the above-named defendant. After the marriage of Mrs. Smith to her last husband she resided with him on a farm in Upshur county until the spring of 1912, when their house was destroyed by fire. They then, for something like a year, lived with various of the children of Mr. Smith by his first wife. Early in the year 1913 they acquired a house in the town of Buckhannon, in what is known as the Liggett addition, which was conveyed to Mrs. Smith, although paid for by her husband, in consideration that she release her contingent right of dower in some other lands owned by him. The Smiths continued to reside at this place until the death of the husband in the latter part of July, 1915. At that time it is conceded by all parties that Mrs. Smith was in a very feeble physical condition, and it is contended by the plaintiffs that her mental faculties were very much impaired, if not entirely destroyed. After the funeral of Mr. Smith, and on the same day, the plaintiffs say that at the instance of their brother, I. R. Curtis, they entered into an arrangement for taking care of their mother. According to their contention it was agreed among them that her mental and physical condition was such that she was not able to take care of herself or of her property, and they agreed that she should live with that one of her children whom she might select, and that such one should receive reasonable compensation for caring for her out of her property, and at her death what remained should be divided equally among them. She was allowed to remain at her home for a few days after her husband's death, in charge of Mr. and Mrs. Queen, who were employed for the purpose of caring for her. She was then removed to the home of her daughter, Mrs. McNemar, in Lewis county, where she remained until about the 25th of September, 1915. At that time she was taken back to Buckhannon and placed in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Queen, where she remained until about the 3d of October, when she was taken to the home of I. R. Curtis, also in the town of Buckhannon, where she remained until her death on the 19th of December, 1915. On the 30th day of July, 1915, the defendant, I. R. Curtis, procured from his mother a power of attorney, authorizing him to transact her business, sue for, and recover any moneys that might be due her from anyone, collect the same, to compound or compromise for the same and give discharges therefor, make settlement of her interest in the estate of her late husband Phillip Smith, and also of her interest in the estate of her deceased father, Randolph Jackson, to sign any bond, deed, obligation, contract, or other paper, to indorse promissory notes and renew the same from time to time, to draw any money she might have out of any banks, to sell or lease any part or parts of her real estate, and to make all necessary deeds of conveyance, with all necessary covenants of warranty and assurances of title, and sign, seal, and acknowledge the same, and to do all other acts and things in relation to all or any part of her affairs that she might do herself. This power of attorney he had recorded in the office of the clerk of the county court of Upshur county. On the 17th day of November, 1915, a deed was executed by Mrs. Smith, conveying to I. R. Curtis all of her real estate, consisting of her house and lot in the town of Buckhannon, and her interest in her father's farm in Lewis county. This deed was also placed upon the record on the same day that it was executed and acknowledged, but the plaintiffs say that they had no actual knowledge of it until after the death of their mother in December. Shortly after their mother's death they instituted this suit for the purpose of setting aside and canceling said deed, upon the ground that it was in violation of the agreement had between the plaintiffs and the defendant, I. R. Curtis, in regard to taking care of their mother, and the division of the property, and upon the further ground that she was without capacity to make such deed at the time she made the same, and that it was procured from her by undue and fraudulent influence. Much evidence was taken upon the question of the capacity of the grantor to make this deed, and to show the relationship of the various parties to the transaction. The circuit court entered a decree canceling the deed, holding that Mrs. Smith did not have capacity to execute the same, and that it was procured from her by the undue influence of the grantee. From this decree this appeal is prosecuted.

In support of the allegations of their bill that their mother did not have capacity to make the deed sought to be overthrown, both of the plaintiffs, as well as their respective spouses, testify as to the mental capacity of Mrs. Smith. There was no objection made to their testimony in this regard at the time it was introduced, nor was it objected to for this reason at any time in the lower court, but it is now for the first time suggested that they were not competent to testify as to the mental capacity of the grantor in that deed, for the reason that it would be in effect testifying to personal communications with the deceased grantor. It is well settled in this jurisdiction that the one claiming under a deceased person cannot, in a suit affecting his estate, give his opinion as to the mental capacity of such deceased person, as such opinion must be based upon communications had with the deceased. Impressions or conclusions reached by the witness as to the sanity or insanity of a deceased party must be arrived at from observations of the conduct of, or from communications had with, such deceased person, and in either event they fall within the inhibition of the statute. Trowbridge v. Stone, 42 W. Va. 454, 26 S. E. 363; Freeman v. Freeman, 71 W. Va. 303, 76 S. E. 657. And it is likewise true that where a witness is disqualified to testify as to such personal communications, his spouse is under like disability. Freeman v. Freeman, supra; Kilgore v. Hanley, 27 W. Va. 451.

Witness—heir of incompetent—attack on deed.

But the plaintiffs say that, while these witnesses were not competent to testify at the time their evidence was taken, they became competent before any objection was made thereto, or before their evidence was ever read by the chancellor, because the defendant and his wife who are under the same disability, testified as to the mental condition of Mrs. Smith. It is quite true that the defendant and his wife both testify at length as to the mental capacity of the grantor in the deed, and give their opinions in regard thereto. It is insisted that this was testifying in regard to the same communications or transactions to which the testimony of the plaintiffs was directed. It may be said that the observations of the grantor by the witnesses extend practically over the same period of time, they were of the same general character, and the opinions formed are conclusions reached from the same communications or transactions with the deceased party, and if one of the parties

—testimony by grantee—effect.

testifies in regard to such communications or transactions, under the exception contained in § 23 of chapter 130 (§ 4879) of the Code, the other interested party is authorized to give his version of the transactions or communications. This was the conclusion reached by this court in the case of Wooldridge v. Wooldridge, 69 W. Va. 554, 558, 72 S. E. 654, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 653. Our conclusion, therefore, is that, while the plaintiffs and their spouses were not competent witnesses at the time their testimony was taken, still, by the action of the defendant in introducing himself and his wife to testify in regard to the mental condition of his mother, he made this evidence competent, and he cannot now complain that it was considered by the chancellor in reaching his conclusion.

As before stated, much evidence is taken by the parties to this suit to establish the mental condition of the grantor in the deed. A number of the children of Phillip Smith, the second husband of Mrs. Smith, were introduced. They had had long acquaintance with Mrs. Smith, and were nearly of the same age, Phillip Smith being many years older than his wife; it appearing that he was past the age of ninety years when he died, while his wife was only about sixty-eight. These children testify that they had known Mrs. Smith for many, many years; that in the year 1912, when the house in which the Smiths lived was destroyed by fire, Mrs. Smith suffered from a severe shock of some kind, which seemed to very seriously depress her; that her physical and mental condition continued to grow worse from that day until the day of her death. They testify that during the last illness of their father they were at the house of the Smiths frequently, some of them almost constantly for quite a while; that Mrs. Smith was at that time in a very deplorable physical and mental condition; that she did not appreciate the gravity of her husband's illness, and did not understand that he had died. It is insisted that these witnesses were biased and prejudiced against the defendant, I. R. Curtis, and that little credence should be given to their testimony. After a careful perusal of the record we cannot see any justification for this conclusion. They certainly had the means of knowledge, and we see nothing in the record to indicate that their testimony was fabricated because of ill feeling toward the defendant. They had frequent communications with Mrs. Smith after her husband's death, up until the time she died, and they are all of the opinion that for a considerable time before her death her mental condition was such that she did not know what she was doing. Other witnesses are introduced who also testify in the same way. Mr. and Mrs. Queen, who were at the house of Mr. and Mrs. Smith before Mr. Smith's death and who nursed both of them during that time, and stayed there with Mrs. Smith for a short time after the funeral of Mr. Smith, and at whose house Mrs. Smith stayed after her return from her daughter's in Lewis county in the fall of 1915, testify as to her condition during the time they were at the Smith residence with her and during the time she was at their house in the fall of 1915. They testify that she was incapable of understanding what she was doing during that time. They say that at the time the power of attorney was executed she did not realize what she had done, and that after her son had procured her signature to this paper she inquired of them at frequent intervals what it was that she had executed. They say that while she was at their house she thought she was at her own residence, and called attention to the fact that some trees that were formerly in her yard were not there now; that she frequently did not recognize her close friends and associates of long standing. It is also testified by witnesses that on some occasions she did not recognize her own children. Two physicians testify on behalf of the plaintiffs, one who attended Mrs. Smith while she was at her daughter's in Lewis county, and the other who attended her for some time at Buckhannon. The first of these only saw her on two or three occasions, but he attended her professionally at those times, and says that he found her suffering from paralysis, that she was mentally incapacitated, and that there was in his judgment no possibility of her improving, but that he was reasonably certain that she would continue to grow worse until her death. The other physician saw her on many more occasions, and his conclusion was about the same. However, two physicians testify on behalf of the defendant, and their opportunities were equally as good as those of the physicians above mentioned. One of these only saw her, however, on one occasion, and that was on the very day she executed the deed. He says that he was present for about thirty minutes, and went there for the purpose of making an examination; that she answered his questions intelligently, and he saw nothing to indicate that there was anything wrong with her mind; that in his judgment she was suffering from locomotor ataxia, which disease does not necessarily affect the mind. The other physician who testified for the defendant had attended Mrs. Smith from a short time before her husband's death until her death, with the exception of the time that she was in Lewis county, at her daughter's. He testifies that he saw her on many occasions during that time, and that he believes she was suffering from locomotor ataxia, which does not necessarily affect the mind until shortly before death, and that he did not believe that Mrs. Smith's mind was seriously affected until three or four days before she died, although he admits that during all of the time she was weak, both in body and mind. Other witnesses testify that they had seen Mrs. Smith both before and after her husband's death, on various occasions; that she always knew them, conversed with them intelligently, and seemed to clearly understand what she was doing.

That her mind was affected there is no doubt. Whether it was affected to the extent that the disposition she made of her property under the circumstances thereof was not in fact her own act is the question we have here. The defendant, I. R. Curtis, was intrusted by her with the full management of all of her property by the power of attorney before referred to. This conferred upon him large powers, even to the extent of selling and conveying any of her estate. It shows that she had the utmost confidence in him. In fact it may be said that it is strong evidence that he exercised a controlling influence with her, even at that time. It is also worthy of remark that at the time he procured this power of attorney he said nothing about it to either his brother or sister, and they had no knowledge of it until after their mother's death. He contends, of course, that he believed his mother was entirely capable of conducting her own affairs, and that he only took this power of attorney from her for the reason that she was physically weak and unable to get around to look after her business, but why did he incorporate in it authority to sell and convey her real estate if she was entirely competent for the purpose of making a deed? It would have required no physical exertion upon her part to have done this. Then, too, he lived many miles away in another part of the state, and if his mother's convenience was his only motive, this would have been better served by conferring the power upon his brother who lived in the same town with the mother. There is another significant fact in connection with this power of attorney, and that is this recital in it: "I am doing this because I am physically unable to look after these matters, but yet of sound mind." Both of the plaintiffs and the wife of Clinton A. Curtis all testify that on the day of Phillip Smith's funeral they and the defendant, I. R. Curtis, agreed among themselves that Mrs. Smith was mentally incapable of transacting her business; that this was I. R. Curtis's own suggestion, and that they assented to it because it was a fact. They introduced two letters written by the defendant, I. R. Curtis, on the 31st of August, 1915, one to his sister, and the other to his brother. In the letter to his sister he insists on their getting together and agreeing on how his mother shall be taken care of, and insists that his sister be compensated for her care and attention to her, and also states that anything that is left of the mother's estate after they have provided for her they will divide equally among themselves. He also makes the suggestion in this letter that there is no necessity of worrying their mother about it, for she in all her suffering cannot have a clear conception of what she wants, but that he is sure she will want all of her children to share equally. Substantially the same statements are made in the letter written on the same day to his brother. These letters, it is urged, are inconsistent with the statement that he believed his mother's mental condition was sound, and that she was competent to take care of her affairs. Pursuant to these letters, he did come to the home of his sister in Lewis county where his mother was then staying, and removed her to Buckhannon. He claims that he did this because his mother desired it, she complaining that her daughter's children disturbed her. The defendant then kept her at his house in Buckhannon until she died in December. It appears that on the 15th of November he had the deed prepared which is sought to be set aside in this case. He says that he did it at the repeated solicitations of his mother. It conveys all of her property to him, in consideration that he support and maintain her during her life. It was reasonably certain that she could live but a short time. This is shown clearly by the medical testimony, and while he says that he was reluctant to have his mother execute this deed, it does not appear that he ever suggested that she consult with her other children in regard to it, or in fact with anyone else, nor is there any evidence that she ever did consult with anyone else in regard to it. At the time the deed was acknowledged it was not read over to her, the defendant making the statement that he had read it to her the day before, and she knew what was in it. The officer who took the acknowledgment, and the witness who was present and witnessed her mark, say that she assented to this statement, and when she was asked if she acknowledged the deed expressed herself in the affirmative, and that this was all that passed at the time of the execution of the paper. It is rather significant that on this very day, not only the doctor who had been attending her, but another doctor who had never seen her before, and who was never called to attend her afterward, called to examine her just a short time after she executed the deed. While the defendant placed this deed on record on the same day that it was procured, he never said a word to his brother about it, although they lived right in the same town, and saw each other practically every day, nor did he ever mention the matter to his sister. Mrs. Smith, it cannot be doubted, reposed the utmost confidence in her son, the defendant. She was feeble, not only in body, but in mind. He acted as her agent. Under the power of attorney which she had given him he was her other self, and we do not hesitate to say that a deed executed by her, conveying to him all of her estate, practically without consideration, without any advice or consultation from anyone else, is prima facie evidence of undue influence in the procurement of it. Sperry v. Johnson, 80 W. Va. 142, 92 S. E. 574; Turner v. Hinchman, 72 W. Va. 384, 79 S. E. 18; Samuel v. Marshall, 3 Leigh, 567; Hartman v. Strickler, 82 Va. 225; Whitelaw v. Sims, 90 Va. 588, 19 S. E. 113; Leonard v. Burtle, 226 Ill. 422, 80 N. E. 992; Re Hess, 48 Minn. 504, 51 N. W. 614, 31 Am. St. Rep. 665, and note at page 670, etc.; Underhill, Wills, § 137. This prima facie case is not

Deed-Incompetent grantor
-setting aside.

Our conclusion, therefore, is to affirm the decree complained of, and remand the cause for the purpose of taking the accounts prayed for in the bill.

or disqualifying interested parties from testifying adversely to the interest of the representative of a deceased person. These statutes vary considerably in form, and the construction so far as concerns the question under consideration, is greatly influenced by the view of the court as to whether the statute should be construed strictly or liberally. In the majority of the jurisdictions passing upon the question, the statute construed in effect disqualified witnesses from testifying as to transactions or communications with a deceased person. In these jurisdictions the courts are not in harmony as to whether or not this form of statute disqualifies a person, interested in the proceeding in which his testimony is offered, from testifying in regard to his opinion of the mental capacity of the deceased. In several jurisdictions, after having given the matter very able consideration, the conclusion has been reached that testimony as to the mental capacity of a deceased person does not relate to a transaction or communication with him, and hence a witness is not disqualified from testifying as to the mental condition of a deceased person by a statute in this form; and, since usually to render such testimony of any value it is essential that the witness testify as to matters within his observation upon which he bases his opinion, the witness is not disqualified from testifying as to these matters.

Alabama.—Davis v. Tarver (1880) 65 Ala. 98.

Georgia.—Cato v. Hunt (1900) 112 Ga. 139, 37 S. E. 183; Harris v. Whitney (1901) 112 Ga. 633, 37 S. E. 883.

Iowa.—Severin v. Zack (1880) 55 Iowa, 28, 7 N. W. 404; Denning v. Butcher (1894) 91 Iowa, 425, 59 N. W. 69; Re Evans (1901) 114 Iowa, 240, 86 N. W. 283.

Kansas.—Grimshaw v. Kent (1908) 67 Kan. 463, 73 Pac. 92; Harper v. Harper (1911) 83 Kan. 761, 113 Pac. 300; Brown v. Brown (1915) 96 Kan. 510, 152 Pac. 646.

Kentucky.—Williams v. Williams (1890) 90 Ky. 28, 13 S. W. 250.

Minnesota.—Chapel v. Chapel (1917) 137 Minn. 420, 163 N. W. 771; Wheeler v. McKeon (1917) 137 Minn. 92, 1 A.L.R. 1514, 162 N. W. 1070.

Missouri.—Yant v. Charles (1920) — Mo. —, 219 S. W. 512.

North Carolina.—Ducker v. Whitson (1893) 112 N. C. 44, 16 S. E. 854; Re Stocks (1918) 175 N. C. 224, 95 S. E. 360; Bissett v. Bailey (1918) 176 N. C. 48, 96 S. E. 648; Plemmons v. Murphey (1918) 176 N. C. 671, 97 S. E. 648.

South Dakota.—Re Golder (1916) 37 S. D. 397, 158 N. W. 734.

Wisconsin.—Schultz v. Culbertson (1905) 125 Wis. 169, 103 N. W. 234.

Nova Scotia.—Re Farquharson (1900) 33 N. S. 261.

Upon this point in Denning v. Butcher (1894) 91 Iowa, 425, 59 N. W. 69, supra, the court said: "It is claimed that the observation of the witness as to the deceased was a personal transaction; that is, if she noticed his demeanor, or his gait, or his expression, or anything else about his appearance, it was a personal transaction. Such a holding would be giving the statute an interpretation wholly unwarranted by its language, and do violence to the meaning of the words used therein. A 'personal transaction' means the doing or performing of some business between parties, or the management of any affair. To be a personal transaction, in such a case, the matter testified about must have involved some act by or between two parties, or some act by one party for the benefit or to the detriment of another, and which said other was in some way interested in. It is clear that the witness in this case did not testify to any transaction had with the decedent. Her opinion was based upon what she saw; the conversations she heard between Butcher and others."

An interesting point in this connection, suggested by Gwinn v. Hobbs (1917) — Ind. App. —, 118 N. E. 155, is as to the effect to be given to the testimony of the witness as to the matters which he relies upon as the basis for his opinion of the mental capacity of the deceased. May such matters be considered by the jury as affirmative evidence bearing upon the issue of mental competency? The case referred to holds that such testimony must not be considered as independent proof upon the issue of competency, but only as bearing upon the weight to be attached to the opinion of the witness upon this issue.

It may be observed that, in the majority of the cases heretofore cited, the testimony as to the conduct of deceased was received as bearing upon the qualification of the witness to express an opinion, and upon the value of that opinion. They do not, affirmatively at least, indicate that the testimony may be used for any other purpose.

2. Evidence of conversation with or statement by deceased.

In the application of the majority rule the important question is as to what constitutes a transaction or communication with the deceased so as to render the testimony inadmissible. Many of the cases, relying on the majority rule, hold that the statute does not apply to conversations with or statements by the deceased, upon which the witness relies as the basis for his opinion as to the deceased's mental capacity, and that hence evidence thereof may be given. Cato v. Hunt (1900) 112 Ga. 189, 37 S. E. 183; Denning v. Butcher (1894) 91 Iowa, 425, 59 N. W. 69, compare with Iowa cases, infra; Williams v. Williams (1890) 90 Ky. 28, 13 S. W. 250. But see Bannon v. P. Bannon Sewer Pipe Co. (1919) 136 Ky. 556, 119 S. W. 1170, 124 S. W. 843; Chapel v. Chapel (1917) 137 Minn. 420, 163 N. W. 771; Wheeler v. McKeon (1917) 137 Minn. 92, 1 A.L.R. 1514, 162 N. W. 1070; Plemmons v. Murphey (1918) 176 N. C. 671, 97 S. E. 648; Bissett v. Bailey (1918) 176 N. C. 43, 96 S. E. 648; Schultz v. Culbertson (1905) 125 Wis. 169, 103 N. W. 234; Re Farquharson (1900) 33 N. S. 261.

In Re Golder (1916) 37 S. D. 397, 158 N. W. 734, supra, involving a will contest proceeding, it is held that the proponents may testify as to the physical appearance, actions, and statements of the testator, bearing upon his mental capacity, notwithstanding the statute which disqualifies interested witnesses from testifying as to any transaction whatever with, or statement by, the testator or intestate. The court said: "Such testimony was offered on the ground that it tended to show testator's mental capacity, and would establish facts upon which expert evidence might be based. It is too apparent to need discussion that the trial court erred in excluding the testimony of proponents as to the physical appearance and acts of the testator. By no possible stretch can the words 'transaction' or 'statement' be held to include physical appearance and acts. The primary purpose in the enactment of this statute was to remove the common-law disability resulting from a witness's interest in the outcome of an action, or his relationship to a party thereto. The enacting section is sweeping in its terms and, standing alone, would remove all disabilities. The proviso introduces certain exceptions. Such proviso should be construed strictly, and takes no case out of the enacting clause which does not fall fairly within its terms; and those who set up such exception must establish it as being within the words, as well as within the reason thereof."

Denning v. Butcher (1894) 91 Iowa, 425, 59 N. W. 69, supra, also involved a contest over the probate of a will, and it was held that a legatee was not disqualified to testify with regard to his opinion as to the mental capacity of the deceased, since the opinion, based upon the conduct and statements of the deceased, was not a transaction or communication with the decedent.

In Chapel v. Chapel (1917) 137 Minn. 420, 163 N. W. 771, a will contest proceeding, a witness was held not disqualified from testifying as to the mental capacity of the testatrix, although interested in the event of the action. It was further held that, in order to lay the foundation for such testimony, the witness might testify as to conversations with, and conduct of, the deceased.

In Re Farquharson (1900) 33 N. S. 261, supra, involving a will contest proceeding, in holding that the statute disqualifying an interested witness from testifying as to dealings, transactions, and agreements with the deceased does not disqualify an interested witness from testifying as to the mental capacity of the deceased, the court said that the statute applies only to dealings, transactions, and agreements with the deceased, and has no application to the question of testamentary capacity.

In Cato v. Hunt (1900) 112 Ga. 189, 37 S. E. 183, supra, in considering the effect of a statute which renders witnesses incompetent to testify to any transaction or communication with the deceased, upon the qualification of an interested witness in an action to set aside a deed executed by the decedent in his lifetime on the ground of undue influence and mental incapacity, it was held that the wife of the grantee was a competent witness to the fact that she had seen the decedent daily, and had had frequent conversations with him for several months prior to the making of the deed, and that in her judgment he was fully capable of making the contract. The court said that the purpose of this testimony was not to prove "any personal transaction or communication with the deceased grantor, but to show his mental condition. It was simply the opinion of the witness as to his sanity and mental capacity, based upon the facts recited. Mrs. Cato does not appear to have been offered to show the terms or the execution of the deed, or to testify as to what influence was brought to bear upon the deceased by her. Her evidence was simply as to her opportunity for observing the deceased, and as to the impression made upon her by his conduct and conversation. Had the grantor been in life, and brought this action to set aside the deed on the ground of fraud and undue influence, he could not have denied her statement as to the opinion she had formed as to his mental capacity."

In Plemmons v. Murphey (1918) 176 N. C. 671, 97 S. E. 648, supra, a proceeding to set aside deeds to some of the children of the deceased, it is held that other heirs may testify as to the mental condition of the deceased, and they may state the reason for their opinions, even though this may involve personal transactions and communications with the deceased.

And in Bissett v. Bailey (1918) 176 N. C. 43, 96 S. E. 648, on the same ground, it is held that a wife may testify to the mental capacity of her deceased husband, and as to communications and conversations with the deceased upon which her opinion is founded (setting aside of deeds).

In Wheeler v. McKeon (1917) 137 Minn. 92, 1 A.L.R. 1514, 162 N. W. 1070, supra, the question arose under a statute which forbids parties to the action, or persons interested in the event thereof, from testifying concerning any conversation with or admission of a deceased person. In a proceeding involving an attack upon the validity of a conveyance of real estate by a person since deceased, it was held that the heirs of the decedent might testify with regard to conversations with the decedent which indicated the loss of memory, a wandering mind, and delusions.

In Schultz v. Culbertson (1905) 125 Wis. 169, 103 N. W. 234, supra, it is held that a widow may testify to acts, conduct, or conversations of the deceased within her observation not participated in or influenced by her, and, after narrating such acts, conduct, or conversation, she may testify to her impression as to the decedent's mental competency derived therefrom (validity of a contract made by the decedent in his lifetime).

In Iowa, the rule is that a witness is qualified to testify with regard to the mental competency of a deceased person, providing the testimony is based upon the observation of the witness and statements made by the decedent, or conversation by him overheard by the witness, but not directed to the witness personally. This rule is based upon the composite result of several Iowa decisions, rather than upon any particular one.

In Denning v. Butcher (1894) 91 Iowa, 425, 59 N. W. 69, it is held that in a will contest proceeding an interested witness may testify as to the mental competency of the deceased, and as the basis for the witness's opinion he may testify as to his observations of the acts, conduct, and appearance of the deceased, and conversations of deceased which he overheard. The court said: "It is clear that the witness did not testify to any transaction had with the deceased. Her opinion was based upon what she saw; the conversations she heard between Butcher and others." In Re Goldthorp (1895) 94 Iowa, 336, 58 Am. St. Rep. 400, 62 N. E. 845, it is held that an interested witness in a will contest is disqualified to testify with regard to the mental competency of the testator, where the witness's opinion is based upon conversations with the deceased. In this case the court denied the contention that as the witness must show to the court that he was qualified to give an opinion as to the mental condition of the deceased before he would be permitted to express his opinion, and as testimony tending to show qualification is preliminary, only, to the main issue, the witness should be permitted to testify to conversations had with the deceased. The court pointed out that the evidence showed that the opinion which the witness formed as to deceased's mental condition was largely, if not wholly, based upon conversations. And these conversations, though not in and of themselves a transaction or communications had with decedent, were nevertheless the result, outgrowth, or conclusion arrived at from a consideration of prohibited testimony.

In Re Van Houten (1910) 147 Iowa, 725, 140 Am. St. Rep. 340, 124 N. W. 886, a will contest, an interested witness was held to be disqualified to testify with regard to the mental competency of the decedent, where the testimony was based upon a certain transaction between the deceased and a third person, in which the witness took part. The testimony related to the conversation of the deceased at that time. The court, in holding the evidence incompetent, said that the witness was a factor in that transaction, and clearly within the prohibition of the statute. The case of Hayes v. Snader (1918) 182 Iowa, 443, 165 N. W. 1041, is not within the scope of the note. The point involved here, however, was discussed by the court as follows: "This court is certainly not committed to the doctrine that this statute excludes the use of 'every means by which one person can derive any impression or information from the conduct or language of another.' One means of deriving such impression or information from the conduct or language of another is to hear what he says to a third person. But we have held that such testimony is not excluded by this statute (Campbell v. Collins (1907) 138 Iowa, 152, 110 N. W. 435; Re Goldthorp (Iowa) supra) in which last case we expressly rule also that it is permitted to receive testimony describing the condition of the testator, though that testimony is based on observation, excluding only that which is based both upon such observation and statements made by the decedent to the witness. To a certainty, testifying to facts upon which an inference in favor of the claimant may arise is based on the fact that some means has been employed whereby the witness has derived some impression or information from the conduct or language of the decedent. But that this is so does not shut out testimony upon which such inference can be built."

In some jurisdictions, the courts, while sustaining the right of an interested witness to testify as to his opinion with regard to the mental capacity of a deceased person, hold that a witness cannot testify as to conversations with or statements by the deceased, and apparently that his opinion cannot be based upon such conversation or statements. Brown v. Brown (1915) 96 Kan. 510, 152 Pac. 646; Bannon v. P. Bannon Sewer Pipe Co. (1909) 136 Ky. 556, 119 S. W. 1170, 124 S. W. 843; Leahy v. Timon (1919) — Tex. —, 215 S. W. 951.

In Re Goldthorp (1895) 94 Iowa, 336, 58 Am. St. Rep. 400, 62 N. W. 845, in holding, in a proceeding for the probate of a will, that an interested witness was competent to testify to the mental condition of the decedent in so far as the testimony was based upon his observations of the decedent, his appearance, conduct, manners, and habits, nevertheless held that the witness was disqualified to testify as to the mental capacity of the deceased, where the basis of his opinion was conversations with the decedent. It is said that the witness cannot testify as to such conversations, and cannot base his opinion thereon. In answering the contention that an opinion, although based upon conversations with the deceased, was not a transaction or communication, the court said: "Though not in and of itself 'a transaction or communication' had with decedent, yet, if it is in fact but the result, the outgrowth, and the conclusion arrived at from a consideration of prohibited testimony, it is not easy to see upon what ground, in view of the provisions of the statute, the qualification can be shown to give the opinion, or the opinion itself be stated, under the circumstances herein disclosed. It is said that the decedent, if living, could not dispute the testimony of contestant as to his opinion of her soundness of mind; that the testimony proposed is for the purpose of proving a fact distinct from anything said or done, independent of any information received from the language employed. The position does not seem to us tenable. The opinion, in such a case, where it is based upon the conversations, is dependent upon the facts from which it is deduced,—the conversations. Without the conversations there could be no ground for the opinion. How, then, can the opinion be said to be a fact distinct from and independent of the conversations? Now, clearly, if decedent was alive, she could by her testimony controvert and gainsay the conversations. She might testify that no conversations took place. Where, then, under the facts shown in this record, would be the basis for the opinion?" But see Iowa cases, supra.

In Brown v. Brown (Kan.) supra, it was held that the party interested in the outcome of the suit might testify as to the mental condition of the grantor in a deed involved in a proceeding to set it aside on the ground of the grantor's mental incapacity. It was, however, held that the witness could not testify to conversations had with the grantor. The court said that "the language of the statute is explicit, and does not admit of an exception based upon the purpose for which the communication was offered."

The rule in Texas on this point is not entirely clear. One of the first cases considering the matter is Martin v. McAdams (1894) 87 Tex. 225, 27 S. W. 255. This case involved the qualification of heirs or devisees to testify in a proceeding to probate a will, as to the handwriting of the testator. The court held that opinion evidence of the devisees as to the handwriting of the signature of the deceased attached to the will was admissible. In so holding very significant language was used. The court said on the point: "We may concede that the witnesses whose testimony was excluded in this case were so related to the issue to be tried as to exclude them from testifying as to any transaction with or statement by the deceased whose will was sought to be established; and yet we have the question whether the testimony offered was of such a nature as to fall within the terms of the statute. Testimony to the opinion of the witness that a certain paper, which is offered as a will, is in the handwriting of the alleged testator, is not testimony as to any statement by him; nor do we think that it is testimony as to any transaction with him."

It will be noted that the court thus clearly draws the line that is drawn by this note in considering the question as to opinion evidence of the mental capacity of the testator, this note also being based on the assumption that the witness whose testimony is offered is so related to the issue to be tried as to exclude him from testifying to any transaction with the deceased. Since, however, the case itself involves opinion evidence as to handwriting instead of mental capacity, it is not strictly within the scope of the note.

In several later Texas civil appeals cases other language used by the court in the Martin Case was seized upon to sustain the holding that a proceeding to contest a will was not such a proceeding as to bring the case within the statute, nor was the making of a will a transaction by the deceased with any of the heirs or legatees so as to bring the case within the statute; and upon this assumption as to the holding in the Martin Case, these later Texas civil appeals cases held that in a proceeding to probate a will, although one of the issues was undue influence, testimony of heirs, devisees, or legatees was nevertheless admissible. Among these cases reference may be made to Simon v. Middleton (1908) 51 Tex. Civ. App. 543, 12 S. W. 441, Grelle v. Grelle (1918) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 206 S. W. 114, and Byrnes v. Curtain (1919) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 208 S. W. 405. Since these cases all held that a proceeding to probate a will was not within the statute so as to disqualify a witness who was an heir or legatee, they are not strictly within the scope of the note, and, as already stated, one of the issues presented in each of these cases was that of undue influence.

In the later Texas decision of Leahy v. Timon (1919) — Tex. —, 215 S. W. 951, the question was presented as to the effect of the statute to disqualify an heir or devisee to testify as to the mental capacity of the testator, in a proceeding to contest the validity of the latter's will. In this case one of the issues presented was undue influence, and the testimony of the witness as to the mental competency of the deceased was based upon conversations had with the latter. It is held that the witnesses were disqualified to testify as to the mental capacity of the deceased. The opinion is of considerable length, and is devoted very largely to combating the doctrine that a proceeding to probate a will is not within the disqualifying provisions of the statute, and that devisees, legatees, or heirs are not parties thereto, within such provision. The opinion seems to blend the question of whether the heir or devisee of the testator is a party to the making of the decedent's will so as to be disqualified under the terms of the statute, with the question here under consideration as to the effect of the fact that the testimony relates to opinion evidence of the witness. And the court also seems, in a measure at least, to consider together the two issues as to the mental competency of the deceased as affecting the validity of the will, and the question of undue influence in securing the will as affecting its validity. Upon this point the court expresses the opinion that the action is confessedly by heirs of the deceased, and continues: "It seems to us that it plainly arose out of a transaction with the decedent; for, under the view most favorable to plaintiffs in error, which is that their action arose from the making of the will, and that the making of the will involved a transaction between only Mrs. Timon and the two disinterested attesting witnesses, it cannot be denied that plaintiffs in error's action arose from a transaction with the decedent." After thus apparently holding that the heirs, devisees, and legatees are sufficiently parties to the making of the will so that it is a transaction with the deceased, the court apparently assumes that that disposes of the entire question presented in the case, and does not, apparently, pass upon the point as to whether or not the testimony is admissible because it relates to opinion evidence as to mental capacity. The decision, even to this extent, however, is placed in doubt by the language used by the court immediately following that already quoted, as follows: "However, it may well be doubted whether so much of plaintiffs in error's action as seeks to set aside the will as procured by undue influence can be properly said to arise from the transaction to which only the decedent and the subscribing witnesses to the will were parties. At least, that part of the action would seem founded to a considerable extent on a transaction of the party exercising the undue influence, with the decedent, and such party was one of the defendants herein." The court expressly overruled or disapproved of the cases heretofore mentioned, being Simon v. Middleton, Grelle v. Grelle, and Byrnes v. Curtin (Tex.) supra. If the doctrine of Leahy v. Timon is limited to cases involving the admissibility of testimony of the mental competency of the testator, the case is not necessarily in conflict with Martin v. McAdams, already referred to. Indeed, the court expressly says that it does not think the decision in Martin v. McAdams is in conflict with the present decision, nor with the previous decisions of the supreme court. Upon this point the court said: "The questions we have considered depend entirely on the relation of the parties—witnesses to the issue tendered; that is to say, on whether they were parties and witnesses in a suit which is an action arising out of a transaction with the decedent, in the light of the issues tendered. Such questions were excluded from consideration before the court made the pronouncements in Martin v. McAdams, claimed to require the admission of the excluded testimony.<sup>24</sup>

The Turner Case makes no reference to Smith v. Guerre (1913) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 159 S. W. 417, which holds that a widow may testify to statements of her deceased husband, to show his mental incapacity, in an action to set aside a contract made by him.

In a Texas civil appeals decision decided subsequently to the Timon Case, being Nimitz v. Holland (1919) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 217 S. W. 244, hereinafter referred to more at length, it is held that the Timon Case does not disqualify an heir, devisee, or legatee from testifying as a witness with regard to the mental competency of the deceased, in a will contest proceeding, where the opinion of the witness is not based upon conversations or transactions with the deceased.

3. Acts, conduct, or appearance of deceased.

Apparently all of the cases applying the majority rule are agreed that interested witnesses testifying to the mental capacity of the deceased may give evidence of their observations as to his appearance, acts, or conduct, upon which they rely as the basis for their opinion as to the deceased's mental capacity. Severin v. Zack (1880) 55 Iowa, 28, 7 N. W. 404; Grimshaw v. Kent (1903) 67 Kan. 463, 73 Pac. 92; Bannon v. P. Bannon Sewer Pipe Co. (1909) 136 Ky. 556, 119 S. W. 1170, 124 S. W. 843; Ducker v. Whitson (1893) 112 N. C. 44, 16 S. E. 854.

In Ducker v. Whitson (N. C.) supra, an action to enforce notes against the estate of a deceased person, executed by him in his lifetime to certain of his heirs and payable out of his estate after his death, it is held that one of these heirs is not disqualified as a witness to the effect that she had lived with the deceased all of her life, and had seen him make contracts and manage his affairs, and that she based her knowledge on her observation; that she saw him when he returned after executing the notes in question, and his mind was bright, and that in her opinion he had mental capacity sufficient to make the contract.

Grimshaw v. Kent (1903) 67 Kan. 463, 73 Pac. 92, supra, involved a suit attacking the validity of a contract between the decedent and a daughter and her husband. It appeared that decedent had lived with these parties for some time prior to the execution of the contract, and it was held that the daughter was not disqualified by the statute from testifying as to the mental capacity of the deceased, based upon her observance of his conduct during this time. The court said that such evidence did not place before the jury any transaction or communications with the deceased, but that it apprised the jury of the mental condition of the deceased at and before the time of the execution of the contract; and, having been shown to have sustained a close and intimate relation with the deceased, the witnesses were competent to express an opinion as to her mental condition.

Severin v. Zack (Iowa) supra, involved a contest over the probate of a will. The proponent in the proceeding was held not disqualified as a witness to the fact that, about the time of the execution of the will in question, he observed no difference in the testator's mental condition. The court said that this testimony did not relate to a personal transaction or communication between the witness and the testator.

A case decided subsequently to Leahy v. Timon (1919) — Tex. —, 215 S. W. 951, supra, and which construes this case, is Nimitz v. Holland (1919) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 217 S. W. 244. In this case the distinction is drawn between the qualifications of an interested witness to testify in a will contest proceeding as to the mental competency of the testator where the witness's opinion is based upon the acts and conduct of the deceased, and where it is based upon his statements and conversations with him. The court recognizes that under the rule in Leahy v. Timon the witness is disqualified under the latter circumstances, but holds that the witness is not disqualified where his opinion is based upon the acts and conduct of the deceased. The court said: "We are of the opinion that an interested witness in such a suit may testify that, independently of any statements made by the testatrix, or transactions with her, but merely from observation of the decedent's acts, conduct, and physical and mental condition, the witness is of the opinion that the testatrix was sane or insane at the time of the execution of the will; and we will, as briefly as may be, give the reasons for our holding. In the discussion it will be premitted that a nonexpert witness will not be allowed to testify as to the sanity or insanity of a person without detailing the facts underlying the opinion. The statute precludes the interested party from testifying only as to 'any transaction with or statement by the testator.' It may be conceded that such transactions or statements are not limited to transactions by the testator with the witness, or statements made by the testator to the witness, but include any transaction with, or statement by, the testator, no matter with whom had or to whom made. But this hypothesis does not foreclose the question before us. If the opinion sought to be elicited from Mrs. Nimitz and the other appellants was not founded upon any statements by, or transactions with, the testatrix, the statute does not exclude such opinion, nor testimony of the facts upon which the opinion was based. The facts to which Mrs. Nimitz testified regarding her mother's physical condition during her last illness, including her involuntary expressions of pain and suffering, and her acts and conduct tending to show mental trouble, were not, in the main, either statements by, or transactions with, her mother, but were facts of which the witness claimed to have knowledge, based solely upon observation. They were chiefly acts, conduct, and conditions uninfluenced by, and not participated in by the witness, as were doubtless also many of the facts intimately within her knowledge, through a lifelong acquaintance with her mother, which the witness did not undertake to detail. As to such facts, and an opinion based thereon, we do not think they can fairly be regarded as transactions with or statements by the decedent. They were facts ascertainable from observation alone, and we think Mrs. Nimitz showed herself competent to testify as to the mental condition of the decedent, in so far as her testimony was based upon her observation of decedent, her appearance, conduct, manner, and habits."

In Williams v. Williams (1890) 90 Ky. 28, 13 S. W. 250, supra, involving the probate of a will, the circuit court held that the parties interested may testify as to the conduct of and conversation with the decedent, as bearing upon his mental condition, since the statute does not apply to actions of this character.

In a later decision by that court, however, in Bannon v. P. Bannon Sewer Pipe Co. (1919) 186 Ky. 556, 119 S. W. 1170, 124 S. W. 848, which involved the validity of an assignment of stock by a person since deceased, it was held upon a rehearing that while evidence with regard to the mental capacity of the deceased was admissible, although the witness was interested in the suit, yet such witness was not competent to testify with regard to conversations with or statements of the deceased. In so holding the court drew no distinction between a will contest proceeding and an action of the character before it. Indeed, upon this point, it said: "There can certainly be no reason for applying a different rule of evidence in the trial of the case, where the question is one of capacity in one to make a contract or execute the power of attorney, from that which is applied in the case where the question is one of capacity to execute a will. Evidence that would be competent in the one case would certainly be competent in the other."

4. As to condition at time of particular transaction involved.

Davis v. Tarver (1880) 65 Ala. 98, supra, involved a proceeding in probate court for a license to sell real estate of the deceased to pay his debts, which was contested by the heirs on the ground of the invalidity of the principal debt. The claimant was held entitled to testify to his opinion of the general mental condition of the deceased, but not as to his mental condition on the date on which the note in question was executed. In this state the statute provides that neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to transactions with or statements by the deceased person. As to the effect of this statute upon the question under consideration, the court said: "Under the statute, there can be no exclusion of any witness because he is a party to, or interested in the issue tried, with this exception: that neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with, or statement by, any deceased person whose estate is interested in the result of the suit. The exception is intended to secure mutuality in the operation of the statute, and to protect the dead, who cannot be heard in explanation or contradiction, from being affected by the evidence of the living with whom they may have had dealings. It is directed to the exclusion of particular evidence, rather than to the competency of the witness. The evidence excluded must be of transactions with, or statements by, a deceased person whose estate is interested in the result of the suit. Any party may testify to any material relevant fact, if it does not fall within this species of evidence. . . . It is apparent that the contention in the present case was narrowed to the inquiry whether, on the day when the note was executed by the intestate, he was of sufficient understanding to enter into a contract. The appellant could, doubtless, have testified that in his opinion the intestate was generally of a sufficient understanding to act with discretion in the ordinary affairs of life. His personal relation to the intestate, his long acquaintance with him, and the opportunities he had of observing and knowing his habits, temper, character, and capacity, would have authorized an inquiry into the opinion he had formed as to the soundness and degree of the understanding of the intestate. This opinion would have been formed on facts independent of and distinct from the conduct, acts, or declarations of the intestate when the note was executed. But it was not the opinion of the appellant as to the general sanity of the intestate which was sought to be elicited. Having testified as to his general sanity, he is asked if he knew the condition of the mind of the intestate on the day the note was executed. Answering that question affirmatively, he is asked what then was the condition of his mind. His opinion or knowledge of the mental condition of the intestate must have been derived, in part or wholly, from his conduct and declarations on that day, and from his freedom from or subjection to the influence of the disease with which he was afflicted. . . . It is these acts and declarations the statute prohibits the living party from testifying to, when the estate of a decedent is interested. The prohibition cannot be avoided by any general form of question, nor by covering up evidence of them under the expression of an opinion founded upon them. They are excluded by the terms of the exception, and its policy will be defeated, if evidence of them, in whatever form it may be presented, is not excluded."

b. Minority rule.

In some jurisdictions, statutes substantially similar in language to those referred to in the preceding cases are held to disqualify interested parties from testifying as to the mental capacity of a deceased person, in actions in which his representative, assignee, or grantee is a party in interest.

Mississippi.—Cooper v. Bell (1917) 114 Miss. 766, 75 So. 767.

New York.—Holcomb v. Holcomb (1884) 95 N. Y. 316; Re Eysaman (1889) 113 N. Y. 62, 3 L.R.A. 599, 20 N. E. 613; Holland v. Holland (1904) 98 App. Div. 866, 90 N. Y. Supp. 208; Re McCarthy (1891) 59 Hun, 626, 38 N. Y. S. R. 124, 14 N. Y. Supp. 2; Smith v. Meaghan (1886) 40 Hun, 404; Re Bartholick (1891) 35 N. Y. S. R. 730, 12 N. Y. Supp. 640.

West Virginia.—Trowbridge v. Stone (1896) 42 W. Va. 454, 26 S. E.

363; CURTIS v. CURTIS (reported herewith) ante, 1091.

In Re Eysaman (1889) 113 N. Y. 62, 3 L.R.A. 599, 20 N. E. 613, supra, a will contest proceeding, the legatee therein was held disqualified as a witness to testify with regard to his observation of the acts, conduct, and conversation of the deceased at about the time of the execution of the will, and bearing upon his mental capacity.

And in Holcomb v. Holcomb (1884) 95 N. Y. 316, supra, also a will contest proceeding, the heirs were held disqualified to testify as to acts, conduct, and statements of their ancestor, tending to show his mental incapacity, although they took no part in the conversation testified to.

And in Re McCarthy (1891) 59 Hun, 626, 38 N. Y. S. R. 124, 14 N. Y. Supp. 2, supra, also a will contest proceeding, an heir at law of the testator was held disqualified to testify as to the appearance of the testator on the day the will was made.

And in a proceeding to set aside a deed executed by a person since deceased, on the ground of his mental incapacity, his heir was held disqualified to testify upon that point. Smith v. Meaghan (1886) 40 Hun (N. Y.) 401.

In Steele v. Ward (1883) 30 Hun (N. Y.) 555, however, on the ground that the testimony relating to the mental capacity of a testator was not a personal transaction or communication, within the statutory prohibition, a witness interested in the will contest proceeding was held not disqualified to testify in this regard.

In Holcomb v. Holcomb (1884) 95 N. Y. 316, involving an action to set aside an assignment of a bond and mortgage by a deceased person in his lifetime, it was held that an interested witness was disqualified to testify with regard to matters tending to show the mental capacity of the decedent. After pointing out that the witness was interested in the event of the action, and that the title of the defendant would be affected by their testimony, the court said that it should be borne in mind that the validity of an assignment depends upon the mental condition of the assignor when it is executed. "The words of exclusion are as comprehensive as language can express: Transactions and communications embrace every variety of affairs which can form the subject of negotiation, interviews, or actions between two persons, and include every method by which one person can derive impressions or information from the conduct, condition, or language of another. The statute is a beneficial one, and ought not to be limited or narrowed by construction. Although it must appear that the interview or transaction sought to be excluded was a personal one, it need not have been private or confined to the witness and deceased. If they participated, it does not change its character because others were present. A contrary rule would defeat the reasonable intent of the statute that a surviving party should be excluded, as one interested, from maintaining by his testimony an issue which in any degree involved a communication or transaction between himself and a deceased person."

In Freeman v. Freeman (1912) 71 W. Va. 303, 76 S. E. 657, it is held that the testimony of the husband of the contestant in a proceeding to probate a will, relating to the mental condition of the testator, is a personal transaction or communication within the statute. The court said that the purpose of the disqualifying statute was to prevent a person having an interest to be affected by the suit, from giving testimony concerning the words or actions of the decedent, which he, if living, would contradict, against those who claim under the decedent. "Death having sealed the lips of one, the law closes the mouth of the other. Therefore, the words 'transactions or communications,' as used in the statute, should be given a liberal construction. To limit their meaning so as to include only individual conversations and direct personal dealings between the witness and deceased would be too narrow a construction, and would result in defeating the purpose of the statute in many cases. The words of the statute include personal contact with, and observations of deceased's conduct, upon which an opinion of his mental condition could be formed. The opinion of a nonexpert could be formed in no other way."

In Trowbridge v. Stone (1896) 42 W. Va. 454, 26 S. E. 363, supra, this rule is applied to testimony with reference to the mental capacity of the deceased person as bearing upon her ability to earn her own substance in an action in which her guardian sought to charge her estate for board and clothing.

In Anderson v. Cranmer (1877) 11 W. Va. 562, in holding that the cestui que trust in a trust deed was incompetent to testify as to any communication or conversation had with the deceased, and that this disqualified him from testifying as to the mental competency of the deceased, the court said: "The making of the deed of trust is itself a transaction, and he cannot be permitted to testify one word as to its execution. It seems to me it follows as a matter of course, if he could not be permitted to testify as to the conduct and conversation of the deceased at the time the deed was executed, he could not be permitted to give his opinion of the sanity of the grantor at the time the deed was executed, based upon such conduct and conversation. For if he was permitted to give his mere opinion as to the sanity of the grantor, the other party would certainly have the right to show, on cross-examination, upon what facts that opinion was based, and would thus be compelled to have the very testimony before the court or jury that the statute excludes, or be denied his right of cross-examination. The mere opinion of a witness to the sanity of a party is entitled to little or no regard, unless reasons be given which would warrant the opinion. He could not speak at all as a witness in his own behalf as to the execution of the deed; and he surely could not give his opinion of the grantor's condition of mind, made up from the transaction itself. His opinion as to the sanity of the grantor, drawn from any transaction or conversation had personally with him at the time of the execution of the deed, or at any other time, was clearly inadmissible."

II. Statutes disqualifying interested parties.

In Indiana, the statute disqualifies parties to a suit from testifying to matters which occurred prior to the death of the ancestor. Under this statute it has been held that parties interested in the outcome of a will contest proceeding are not disqualified as witnesses, with regard to the mental condition of the testator. Lamb v. Lamb (1886) 105 Ind. 456, 5 N. E. 171. And the rule also applies to proceedings involving the validity of other instruments executed by the decedent in his lifetime. Keys v. McDowell (1913) 54 Ind. App. 263, 100 N. E. 385; Gwinn v. Hobbs (1917) — Ind. App. —, 118 N. E. 155.

In Lamb v. Lamb (Ind.) supra, the court said that "the question of the soundness or unsoundness of mind is fully open to investigation by both parties, and it is not a question upon which one party can speak of matters of which only he and the dead had knowledge. The question in such a case is essentially unlike a question that arises in cases where the issue is as to the execution of a contract, a deed, or the like, for, in such cases, the matter cannot be generally known, and if the party should say what was not true, it would be impossible to contradict him; while, in such a case as this, the mental capacity of the testator may be proved or disproved by witnesses who knew him, whether parties or not, so that the subject is fully open to investigation. The purpose of the statute was to prevent undue advantage as against those whose interests would be unjustly prejudiced by permitting parties to testify as to matters which they assume were known only to them and the deceased, or as to matters which, from their nature, could only have been known to them and the dead. It was not intended to exclude parties from testifying in cases where the subject is one of which the knowledge that the parties profess to have is not hidden from all other living persons. There is nothing in the spirit of the statute, and certainly nothing in the letter, which excludes parties from testifying respecting matters open to the observation of all the friends and acquaintances of the deceased. Such a matter is the mental capacity of the testator, whose will is contested."

In Burkhart v. Gladish (1890) 123 Ind. 337, 24 N. E. 118, the court said: "It would, perhaps, be impossible to fix any exact rule which would be an inflexible guide in all cases, but, in giving the facts upon which the witness bases his opinion, it cannot be doubted that he should be permitted to state every fact which could be reasonably made the foundation of an opinion as to the mental condition of the testator. If not permitted to state all the facts, it is evident that the rule which permits parties to testify as to the mental condition of the testator would be of little value, as the court or jury would be without the means of weighing such opinions. Under such a rule the court did not err in permitting the parties to this suit to testify to the conduct and conversations of the testator in his family. Such testimony does not fall within the limitation suggested by the court in Lamb v. Lamb (Ind.) supra, relating to the execution of a will. The daily conduct and conversation of the testator are supposed to be open equally to all the members of the family—the appellants as well as the appellees."

In Gwinn v. Hobbs (1917) — Ind. App. —, 118 N. E. 155, supra, the court said that the interested parties might testify not only as to the mental capacity of the deceased, but also as to matters which occurred prior to his death as a foundation for their opinion. It was, however, held that this testimony could not be construed as tending to establish any such matters as substantive facts, to be given weight in determining the issue of mental capacity.

Generally, the specific question under consideration has not been raised with reference to statutes which disqualify as witnesses the parties to suits or proceedings, where one of the parties is deceased. The question has generally been disposed of on the broader ground that a will contest was not a suit or proceeding in which one of the parties is dead. It is obvious that under such a holding the particular fact or issue sought to be established by the testimony is not of great importance, although it is at least possible that the court might distinguish a case involving the issue of the execution of the will by the deceased.

Thus, in Foster v. Dickerson (1891). 64 Vt. 233, 24 Atl. 253, involving a will contest proceeding, it is held that a legatee under the will is not disqualified from testifying as to the mental capacity of the testator, by the statutory provision disqualifying interested witnesses where one of the original parties to the contract is dead. The decision, however, is not based upon the fact that the issue was the mental competency of the deceased, but rather upon the ground that the testatrix, by her legal representatives, was not a party to the proceedings, or in any way interested therein.

So, in Seaton v. Lee (1906) 221 Ill. 282, 77 N. E. 446, it is held that a statute disqualifying a party or person interested in the event of a suit from testifying, where the adverse party sues or defends as the personal representative, etc., does not disqualify a devisee under the testator's will from testifying in a proceeding by the devisees to set aside a deed by the testator to one of his heirs, and the witness may testify as to the mental condition of the decedent, since a grantee cannot claim to be defending the suit as heir or devisee of the decedent. And in Allen v. North (1915) 271 Ill. 190, 110 N. E. 1027, applying this statute to a will contest proceeding, it is held that a daughter and legatee of the deceased is a competent witness as to his mental condition, where her interest was to have the will set aside, since under the circumstances the witness was adverse in interest to the contestant.

However, in Brace v. Black (1888) 125 Ill. 33, 17 N. E. 66, it is held that, in a proceeding by a bill in equity to contest the validity of a will, the adverse parties defend as legatees, and the object of the suit is not merely to adjust the rights between the heirs at law, but it is to take the estate from the legatees, some of whom are not heirs at law, and vest it in the heirs at law; hence the legatees are adverse parties, and disqualified as witnesses with regard to the mental capacity of the decedent.

III. Statutes disqualifying interested parties from testifying as to claim against the estate.

In Cooper v. Bell (1917) 114 Miss. 766, 75 So. 767, it is held that the statutory provision that a person shall not testify as a witness to establish his own claim or defense against the estate of a deceased person, which originated in his lifetime, disqualifies an interested witness from testifying in a will contest proceeding as to the mental competency of the testator.

This decision is based on the ground that a proceeding of this character constitutes a claim against the estate of the decedent within this statutory prohibition. In this regard the court follows Whitehead v. Kirk (1913) 104 Miss. 776, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 187, 61 So. 737, 62 So. 432, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1051, which also involved the question of the testamentary capacity of the testator in a will contest proceeding, it being held that a wife is disqualified as a witness to give evidence relative to acts committed by decedent in her presence when they were alone, such as his habits of intoxication, his hearing voices and communications with spirits of the dead, his mutterings and outcries when asleep, delusions, insults to her, and attempts to take her life.
A. G. S.

CONTINENTAL CASUALTY COMPANY

v.

A. J. PILLSBURY et al., as the Industrial Accident Commission of the State of California.

California Supreme Court (In Banc) — October 8, 1919.

(— Cal. —, 184 Pac. 658.)

Workmen's compensation — legal liability for support — decree for separate maintenance.

A man against whom a decree has been entered for separate maintenance of his wife is legally liable for her support, within the meaning of a Workmen's Compensation Act raising a conclusive presumption of entire dependence for support in favor of the wife, for whose support the husband is legally liable.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1113.]

APPLICATION for a writ of review to review an order of the Industrial Accident Commission awarding compensation, under the Workmen's Compensation Act, to the widow of a deceased workman. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Devlin & Devlin, for petitioner:

There can be no award in favor of a wife where she is living separate and apart from her husband at the time of his death, under a decree of maintenance or divorce.

Byrnes v. Byrnes, 126 App. Div. 619, 111 N. Y. Supp. 72; People ex rel. Pub- lic Charities & C. Comrs. v. Cullen, 153 N. Y. 629, 44 L.R.A. 420, 47 N. E. 894; Chapman v. Parsons, 66 W. Va. 307, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1015, 135 Am. St. Rep. 1033, 66 S. E. 461, 19 Ann. Cas. 453; Bennett v. O'Fallon, 2 Mo. 69, 22 Am. Dec. 440; Crittenden v. Schermerhorn, 39 Mich. 661, 33 Am. Rep. 440; Manby v. Scott, 1 Sid. 109, 82 Eng.

(— Cal. —, 184 Pac. 658.)

Reprint, 1000, 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 12th ed. 436; 14 Cyc. 729; 1 R. C. L. p. 868; 9 R. C. L. p. 488; Knagge v. Pfeiffer, 8 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 122, 5 Ohio L. J. 794; Rogers v. Vines, 28 N. C. (6 Ired. L.) 293; 1 Bl. Com. 441; Johnson v. Johnson, 33 Cal. App. 93, 164 Pac. 121; Fischli v. Fischli, 1 Blackf. 360, 12 Am. Dec. 251; Galland v. Galland, 38 Cal. 265; 2 Nelson, Div. & Sep. § 1000; Harding v. Harding, 198 U. S. 317, 49 L. ed. 1066, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679; Holleron v. Hill, 2 Cal. Ind. Acci. Dec. 269; McKee v. Cunningham, 2 Cal. App. 684, 84 Pac. 260; Perry v. Industrial Acci. Commission, 176 Cal. 706, 169 Pac. 353; Mitchell v. Critcheon, 2 Cal. Ind. Acci. Dec. 931; Gillespie v. Pacific Gas & E. Co. 4 Cal. Ind. Acci. Dec. 279.

A wife who is living separate and apart from her husband at the time of his death, and is maintaining herself by labor and contributions from other sources than her husband, is not "wholly dependent" upon such husband.

Nelson's Case, 217 Mass. 467, 105 N. E. 357, 5 N. C. C. A. 694; Finn v. Detroit, Mt. C. & M. C. R. Co. 190 Mich. 112, L.R.A.1916C, 1142, 155 N. W. 721, 13 N. C. C. A. 187; McMullin v. McMullin, 140 Cal. 112, 73 Pac. 808; Borden v. Borden, 166 Cal. 469, 137 Pac. 27; Lewis v. Lewis, 167 Cal. 732, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 675, 141 Pac. 367; Perry v. Industrial Acci. Commission, 176 Cal. 706, 169 Pac. 393; Gillespie v. Pacific Gas & E. Co. 4 Cal. Ind. Acci. Dec. 279; Sweet v. Sherwood Ice Co. 40 R. I. 203, 100 Atl. 316; Gallagher's Case, 219 Mass. 140, 106 N. E. 558; New Monckton Collieries v. Keeling [1911] A. C. 648, 80 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1205, 105 L. T. N. S. 337, 27 Times L. R. 551, 55 Sol. Jo. 687, 4 B. W. C. C. 332, 6 N. C. C. A. 240; Avery v. Pacific Gas & E. Co. 2 Cal. Ind. Acci. Dec. 348; Rossi v. Standard Oil Co. 2 Cal. Ind. Acci. Dec. 339; Gorski's Case, 227 Mass. 456, 116 N. E. 811; Bentley's Case, 217 Mass. 79, 104 N. E. 432, 4 N. C. C. A. 559.

The evidence does not justify the findings of fact.

Walker v. Industrial Acci. Commission, 177 Cal. 737, L.R.A.1918F, 212, 171 Pac. 954; Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 180, 149 Pac. 35, 9 N. C. C. A. 466; Employers Assur. Corp. v. Industrial Acci. Commission, 170 Cal. 800, 151 Pac. 423; Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 686, 151 Pac. 398, 10 N. C. C. A. 1.

Mr. A. E. Graupner, for respondents:

The deceased employee was legally liable for the support of his wife at the time of his death.

Hagle v. Hagle, 74 Cal. 608, 16 Pac. 518; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 31 Colo. 209, 72 Pac. 1054; Galland v. Galland, 38 Cal. 265; Benton v. Benton, 122 Cal. 395, 55 Pac. 152; Graves v. Graves, 36 Iowa, 310, 14 Am. Rep. 525; Finn v. Finn, 62 Iowa, 482, 17 N. W. 739; Farber v. Farber, 64 Iowa, 362, 20 N. W. 472; Platner v. Platner, 66 Iowa, 378, 23 N. W. 764; Simpson v. Simpson, 91 Iowa, 235, 59 N. W. 22; Russell v. Russell, 150 Iowa, 137, 129 N. W. 835; Hardy v. Hardy, 97 Cal. 125, 31 Pac. 906; Johnson v. Johnson, 33 Cal. App. 93, 164 Pac. 421; H. G. Goelitz Co. v. Industrial Bd. 278 Ill. 164, 115 N. E. 855; Dunbar v. Charleston & W. C. R. Co. 186 Fed. 175; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Murray, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 99 S. W. 144; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Jones, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 60 S. W. 978.

Ida M. Cox was actually dependent upon the deceased employee, her husband, at the time of his death.

State ex rel. London & L. Indemnity Co. v. District Ct. 139 Minn. 409, 166 N. W. 772; State ex rel. G. J. Grant Constr. Co. v. District Ct. 137 Minn. 283, 163 N. W. 509; American Mill Co. v. Industrial Bd. 279 Ill. 560, 117 N. E. 147; Commonwealth Edison Co. v. Industrial Bd. 277 Ill. 74, 115 N. E. 158; H. G. Goelitz Co. v. Industrial Bd. 278 Ill. 164, 115 N. E. 855.

The evidence justifies the findings and award.

Walker v. Industrial Acci. Commission, 177 Cal. 737, L.R.A.1918F, 212, 171 Pac. 954.

Olney, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

One Cox was killed while in the employ of the Sacramento Northern Railroad. No question is made but that the accident resulting in his death occurred under such circumstances that his dependents, if he had any, are entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, Stat. 1917, p. 831. He left a wife, and she petitioned the Commission for such compensation, and it was awarded her as wholly dependent upon him. The insurance carrier for the employer thereupon petitioned for and secured an alternative writ from this court to review the award. The sole question is as to whether the decedent's wife was wholly dependent upon him within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act.

The material provisions of the act are the following portions of § 14: "(a) The following shall be conclusively presumed to be wholly dependent for support upon a deceased employee: (1) A wife upon a husband with whom she was living at the time of his death, or for whose support such husband was legally liable at the time of his death. . . .

(b) In all other cases, questions of entire or partial dependency and questions as to who constitute dependents and the extent of their dependency shall be determined in accordance with the fact, as the fact may be at the time of the injury of the employee."

The wife was not living with the decedent at the time of his death. In order to support the award of the Commission, it must therefore appear, either that the decedent was legally liable for her support, or that she was in fact wholly dependent upon him. The Commission found in favor of the wife on both these issues. As we are of the opinion that the award must be sus-

Workmen's compensation—
legal liability for support—decree for separate maintenance.

tained upon the first ground, that is, that her husband at the time of his death was legally liable for her support, there is no necessity for considering the second.

The facts upon the first issue are that the decedent deserted his wife in 1911, and never lived with her afterwards. No proceedings for a divorce were ever brought, but in 1912 his wife filed in Iowa a suit for separate maintenance and secured a decree awarding her such maintenance in the sum of $50 a month. This decree remained in effect until the decedent's death. Pursuant to the decree the decedent sent his wife money from time to time, the amounts averaging about $20 or $25 a month. The position of the insurance carrier is that, by reason of the existence of this maintenance decree, the husband was not legally liable for his wife's support. The mere statement of this position is well nigh enough of an answer to it. It is rather difficult to see what the maintenance decree means if it does not mean that the husband is legally liable for his wife's support.

The contention of the insurance company is that, when the act speaks of the husband being legally liable for the wife's support, "the liability therein referred to must necessarily mean the common-law liability defined by §§ 174 and 175 of the Civil Code, and cannot mean liability to the wife." (The italics are ours.)

Section 175 has nothing to do with the case. It provides that when a wife abandons her husband, or lives apart from him by agreement, he is not liable for her support. Here the wife had not abandoned her husband, nor was she living apart from him by agreement.

Section 174 provides that, if the husband neglects to make adequate provision for the support of his wife, any other person may furnish her with necessities and recover the reasonable value thereof from the husband. The point is made that by the maintenance decree the husband was relieved from liability to third persons under this section. It is immaterial whether he was or not. The compensation provided by the act is for the benefit of the wife, not for that of her creditors, or of those who may supply her with necessities. It is true that the liability of the husband to persons supplying the wife with necessities where he neglects to provide for her is an incident of the obligation which rests upon him to support her. But it is only an incident, not the main obligation. The incident may be removed, and the main obligation remain wholly unaffected.

There are cited in petitioner's behalf authorities to the effect that, when there has been a divorce a mensa et thoro with a decree of maintenance to the wife, the common-law obligation of the husband is supplanted by the obligation of the decree, and the husband's responsibility is measured by the decree. This is true in the sense that the husband's obligation, previously indefinite as to the amount of support or the manner in which it should be provided, is by such a decree made certain, by requiring that the obligation be met by paying a certain amount of money, and paying it to the wife. Thereafter the husband's obligation is measured by the decree, but the fundamental obligation continues. The decree is, in fact, a judicial determination of the fact that the obligation exists, although the parties are separated. That an action for maintenance is but an action to enforce the husband's duty to support his wife was decided in Galland v. Galland, 38 Cal. 265.

(— Cal. —, 184 Pac. 658.)

It follows that at the time of the decedent's death he was legally liable for the support of his wife, and the action of the Commission in making its award upon that basis was correct.

The award is affirmed.

We concur: Angellotti, Ch. J.; Shaw, J.; Wilbur, J.; Melvin, J.; Lennon, J.; Lawlor, J.

ANNOTATION.

Workmen's compensation: effect of divorce on right of spouse or child to compensation.

Right of spouse.

The effect of a divorce upon the right of a spouse to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Acts depends upon the phraseology of the particular act and the circumstances of the case.

It will be observed that in the reported case (CONTINENTAL CASUALTY CO. v. PILLSBURY, ante, 1110) it is held that a man against whom a decree had been entered for the separate maintenance of his wife was legally liable for her support within the meaning of § 14 of the California Workmen's Compensation Act, providing that a wife shall be conclusively presumed to be wholly dependent for support on her husband, where she is living with him at the time of his death, or the husband is legally liable for her support at that time, and that in all other cases the question of dependency shall be determined in accordance with the facts. The court holds § 175 of the Civil Code, providing that when a wife abandons her husband, or is living apart from him by agreement, he shall not be liable for her support, not applicable to the case, since the wife was not living apart from her husband by agreement.

In another California case, decided at about the same time, London Guaranty & Acci. Co. v. Industrial Acci. Commission (1913) — Cal. —, 184 Pac. 864, the wife was held to have been living apart from her husband by agreement within the meaning of § 175, so that he was not personally liable for her support, where, at the time the husband was injured, she had obtained an interlocutory decree of divorce which made no provision for alimony or maintenance, and the decree had become final in the sense that no appeal could be taken therefrom; and it was accordingly held that the wife was not entitled to any award of compensation under § 14 of the Workmen's Compensation Act.

In another California case, Perry v. Industrial Acci. Commission (1917) 176 Cal. 706, 169 Pac. 353, under the provision of the Compensation Act relative to a conclusive presumption of dependency, it was held that a finding that a wife was not dependent upon her husband was supported by the evidence, there being testimony that she had received and sought nothing from him in years, and that a few weeks before his death she had obtained an interlocutory decree of divorce from him without any award of alimony.

In Sweet v. Sherwood Ice Co. (1917) 40 R. I. 208, 100 Atl. 316, it was held that a wife could not be presumed to be a dependent under a section of the Rhode Island Workmen's Compensation Act providing that "the following persons shall be conclusively presumed to be wholly dependent for support upon a deceased employee: a wife upon a husband with whom she lives or upon whom she is dependent at the time of his death,"—where it appeared that she was not living with her husband at the time of his injury, and had not done so for some time; and that an interlocutory decree had been granted her upon the ground of nonsupport, at which trial she testified that her husband had done nothing for her support for two years, and that she had supported herself by her own labors, and the parties had continued to live apart, and she had supported herself after obtaining the divorce.

It was further held in this case that, there being no presumption, the question of dependency was one of fact on the evidence, in accordance with a further provision of the act that "in all other cases questions of entire or partial dependency shall be determined in accordance with the fact as the fact may have been at the time of the injury," and the court's finding in the case that the wife was neither wholly nor partially dependent on the husband was held conclusive.

It was contended in the case that, the husband being under a direct legal obligation to support his wife, the existence of such obligation must have an important bearing in determining the question of dependency, but the court refused to sanction this argument and adopted the reasoning of an English case, in which it was stated that the fact that the husband was liable in law was not sufficient to maintain an action for compensation; that the obligation or liability to support is not the same as actual support; that money coming to a widow under the Workmen's Compensation Act is not a present in consideration of her status, but a payment by a third person to compensate her as a dependent for her actual pecuniary loss by her husband's death.

In Hall v. Industrial Commission (1917) 165 Wis. 364, L.R.A.1917D, 829, 162 N. W. 312, 16 N. C. C. A. 77, it was held that a marriage, valid where entered into, but in violation of the statute of the state of domicile of the parties, prohibiting remarriage of a divorced person within a specified time after the entry of a decree, would not be recognized in a third state, whose statute also prohibited such marriage, and it was held that an allowance of compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act to a woman who attempted such a marriage, on account of the death of the man she attempted to marry, was properly refused. It may be observed that the refusal of the court to recognize the marriage in the circumstances is opposed to many cases, not within the scope of this note because not involving workmen's compensation acts.

It appears in State ex rel. G. J. Grant Constr. Co. v. District Ct. (1917) 137 Minn. 283, 163 N. W. 509, that the parties had brought suits for divorce, but with what result is not shown. In that case the wife, although living apart from her husband, was held entitled to the presumption of dependency provided by the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Right of child.

The effect of the entry of a decree of divorce upon the right of children of the parties to compensation under workmen's compensation acts depends upon the particular provisions of the act involved, and the facts of the case.

In Schwartz v. Gerding (1918) — Ind. App. —, 121 N. E. 89, a clause of the Indiana Compensation Act involved provided: "The following persons shall be conclusively presumed to be wholly dependent for support upon a deceased employee: (a) A wife upon a husband with whom she lives at the time of his death. . . . (c) A boy under the age of eighteen, or a girl under the age of eighteen upon the parent with whom he or she is living at the time of the death of such parent, there being no surviving dependent parent. . . . In all other cases questions of dependency, in whole or in part, shall be determined in accordance with the fact, as the fact may be at the time of the injury.

In this case, the deceased workman had remarried after a divorce had been granted, giving the custody of his daughter to her aunt, and ordering him to pay a certain sum per month toward the support of his daughter, but he had never contributed anything toward her support, and was living with his second wife when he was killed. It was held that the child was not conclusively presumed to be wholly dependent, as she was not living with her father, but that the question of dependency was, under the act, one of fact, and the finding of the industrial board that the widow was entitled to the full award was affirmed. The court said: "While it may be conceded, as contended by appellant, that there was a legal as well as a moral obligation resting upon decedent to support his daughter, yet the question of dependency, in cases such as this, is not to be determined upon such obligations, although they are to be taken into consideration when the question of dependency is to be determined as a matter of fact. Also, the fact that decedent was ordered, in the divorce proceeding referred to, to pay $8 per month for the support of his child, may be taken into account to determine the existence of the ultimate fact of dependency. Likewise, whether there is any probability that such order would be discharged, either voluntarily or by proper legal proceedings, or the probability that the daughter would ever seek to enforce her rights under the order if the requirements thereof were not voluntarily complied with, are matters which would be proper for the industrial board to consider, in connection with all other competent evidence, to aid them in determining the question of fact whether or not appellant, at the time of her father's injury, resulting in his death, depended upon his wages for her support, in whole or in part. All these matters the record shows were duly considered by the industrial board, which resulted in a finding against appellant, and, as there is evidence which would lead reasonable men to conclude as did the industrial board, we are not at liberty to disturb such conclusion."

In State Industrial Acci. Commission v. Downton (1919) — Md. —, 109 Atl. 63, where a wife of an employee had secured a decree of divorce, providing for no permanent alimony, but giving her the custody of their two children, and the husband, except for a brief time, made no provision for their support, and had only given the children clothing and small sums amounting to about $10, it was held, in a proceeding for compensation on behalf of the children, that the case was one of partial, and not total, dependency under the Maryland Workmen's Compensation Act, a section of which, although it provided that "the following persons (evidently including children) shall be presumed to be wholly dependent for support upon a deceased employee," concluded with the words, "living with or dependent upon the parent at the time of the injury or death."

In Ninneman v. Industrial Commission (1920) — Wis. —, 176 N. W. 909, a divorce decree awarding the care, custody, maintenance and education of a boy nine years old to his mother, and directing his father, the deceased employee, to pay $10 a month to the mother "as and for the support, maintenance and education" of the boy, was held not to charge the full support and maintenance of the boy upon his father within the meaning of a subdivision of the Workmen's Compensation Act providing that a child under eighteen years should be conclusively presumed to be solely and wholly dependent for support upon the parent with whom he is living, and that in case of divorce the charging of the full support and maintenance of a child upon one of the divorced parents should be held to constitute a living with the parent so charged, and the commission's finding that the boy was only partially dependent upon his father was affirmed.

In Robert Sherer & Co. v. Industrial Acci. Commission (1920) — Cal. —, 188 Pac. 798, where compensation was sought on behalf of the minor daughter of an employee, who, in divorce proceedings awarding the child's custody to the wife, had been ordered to pay $20 per month for the child's support, it was held competent for the Commission to determine as a matter of fact that the father was "legally liable" for the maintenance of the child, it having found upon competent evidence that the sum ordered paid was sufficient for the child's entire support, and accordingly to hold that the child was "wholly dependent" upon the deceased employee within the meaning of § 14 of the California Workmen's Compensation Act. From the dissenting opinion it appears that the award upheld by the majority of the court exceeded the maximum payable under the divorce decree during the child's minority. It also appears that the dissenting judge took the position that the words "legally liable," as used in the Compensation Act, referred exclusively and only to a complete liability, that is, a liability for the expenses and costs of all necessities required for the support of the child, and did not cover or include a limited liability, such as that of the deceased, which was merely the payment of $20 a month for his daughter's support.

J. T. W.

WILLIAM ESKEW, Appt.,

v.

H. FRIEDBERG et al., Doing Business under the Firm Name of Friedberg & Company.

Kentucky Court of Appeals — December 19, 1919.

(— Ky. —, 216 S. W. 1076.)

Principal and agent — purchase of tobacco — liability for shrinkage.

1. One contracting to purchase tobacco for another is not responsible for the shrinkage in weight of the tobacco bought, because of its drying out after the purchase was made.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1120.]

Appeal — excessive verdict — reversal.

2. A recovery of damages cannot be sustained if, accepting the evidence of plaintiff upon every point, the amount proven is materially less than the verdict returned.

[See 2 R. C. L. 199-201.]

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Common Pleas Branch, First Division, of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County, in favor of plaintiffs, in an action brought to recover damages for breach of a contract for the purchase of tobacco. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Burnett, Batson, & Cary and Union W. Youngblood, for appellant:

It was error for the trial court to permit under its instructions a recovery in excess of the maximum damage deducible from the evidence, and the judgment appealed from, being grossly in excess of the maximum amount which could have been awarded under the evidence, must be reversed.

Louisville R. Co. v. Schwemmer, 181 Ky. 641, 205 S. W. 685.

Mr. A. J. Carroll for appellees.

Sampson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On November 25, 1916, Eskew entered into a written contract with H. Friedberg & Company, of Owensboro, Kentucky, whereby Friedberg & Company agreed to take over all tobacco bought by Eskew in Spencer and Warrick counties, Indiana, for the season 1916—17, "paying him 75 cents per 100 pounds above the actual cost price." The written contract reads as follows:

Louisville, Ky., Nov. 25, 1916.

This contract entered into by and between H. Friedberg & Company, of Owensboro, Kentucky, parties of the first part, and William Eskew, of Booneville, Indiana, party of the second part, to wit: H. Friedberg & Company, agree to take over all contracts for tobacco bought by William Eskew in Spencer and Warrick counties, Indiana, season 1916—17, paying 75 cents per hundred above the actual contract price. William Eskew agrees to put tobacco on wagons at his factory in Booneville, in case he is unable to secure the farmers' warehouse in Booneville; in case he does secure the Farmers' Warehouse, the tobacco is to be put f. o. b. cars Booneville, Indiana.

H. Friedberg & Company agree that William Eskew shall continue buying tobacco in the country and not to exceed an average price of $7 per 100 pounds until further notice.

H. Friedberg & Company agree that William Eskew shall pay for tobacco to the growers with drafts furnished by them.

William Eskew agrees to furnish H. Friedberg & Company with a copy of all contracts made by him with the growers, or shall hereafter make.

[Signed] H. Friedberg & Co.,
By H. Friedberg.
William Eskew.

Friedberg & Company was a partnership composed of H. Friedberg, Labin Phelps, and J. C. Bright, engaged in buying, handling, and selling tobacco. Eskew was an experienced tobacco man and an expert in buying tobacco from producers.

The 75 cents mentioned in the written contract as going to Eskew was to be his commission for buying. Although Eskew had contracted for considerable tobacco before the making of this contract, he immediately, upon entering into the written contract, began to make contracts for the purchase of other tobacco and to pay for tobacco already contracted for by him, with drafts drawn on Friedberg & Company. Very soon the price of tobacco began to rise, and it was found necessary to pay more than 7 cents per pound as stipulated in the written contract, and Friedberg & Company agreed for Eskew to pay either 7½ cents or 8 cents per pound for tobacco on an average, but this price was soon found to be insufficient to induce the farmers to turn in their crops, and Eskew was allowed to pay even more,—but just how much more is involved in doubt,—in order to obtain tobacco. At any rate, on January 3d the parties to the written contract entered into a verbal agreement whereby, as Friedberg & Company contend, they were to have all of the tobacco purchased by Eskew in the counties named during the entire season, paying him cost and $1.10 commission, and Friedberg & Company were to bear the expenses of insurance, storage, etc. Eskew contends that he made no such verbal agreement, but says he did agree to continue to buy tobacco for Friedberg & Company, but reserved the right to purchase tobacco on his own account as and when he could not buy tobacco at the price fixed by Friedberg & Company. He says that in buying tobacco he found it necessary to pay more than 8 cents, which Friedberg & Company fixed as the limit, and that such tobacco was purchased on his own account and for his own use and benefit, and not for Friedberg & Company. The company, however, asserts that it would not have employed Eskew to buy tobacco for it and allowed him the privilege to buy for his own account, at the same time, even at a higher price than the limit fixed by it. At any rate, Eskew bought about 5,000,000 pounds of tobacco during the season, of which he delivered to Friedberg & Company 257,658 pounds as claimed by them. The balance he sold upon his own account at a profit greater than his commission. Eskew contends that he delivered to Friedberg & Company 276,172 pounds, or at least all of the tobacco which was sold to him at that weight, but that from the time he purchased it, in the early part of the season, it shrunk and became lighter, as is the nature of tobacco, until it weighed less than at the time he purchased and received it, and that he delivered every pound of the identical tobacco of which plaintiffs complain. Friedberg & Company contend that they had all of the tobacco sold to a named concern at the price of $10.84 per 100 pounds, which they insist would have netted them a handsome profit.

After the season closed and a settlement had been made between Friedberg & Company and Eskew, this suit was instituted March 19, 1917, to recover of Eskew on three items: (1) The failure of Eskew to deliver 18,514 pounds of tobacco purchased by him for the company at a cost of $1,616.52, and paid for with its funds, and which the company claims to have resold for a gross sum of $2,036.54, or a profit of $420.02 and which tobacco Eskew claims to have delivered to the company; (2) the failure of Eskew to deliver to the company 226,300 pounds of tobacco which he purchased during the season with his own money, but at a time when the company contends he was their agent and purchasing exclusively for them, whereby the company lost $7,513.16 in profits from a resale which they had effected; (3) Eskew substituted 38,000 pounds of lugs, an inferior grade of tobacco, for a corresponding amount of leaf tobacco, whereby the company lost the sum of $1,127.78. Their first contention, however, is that Eskew purchased about 276,172 pounds of tobacco for them and paid for the same with drafts on the company, and of which amount Eskew only delivered to them 257,658 pounds, thus withholding 18,514 pounds which he should have delivered. Eskew answers this contention by saying that he did purchase the 276,172 pounds for which Friedberg & Company furnished the money to pay, and that he delivered every pound of this to the company, and that the 18,514 pounds discrepancy, if it existed, was the result of shrinkage; that is to say, the tobacco, when he purchased it for Friedberg & Company and weighed it, weighed 276,172 pounds, but on account of drying out it weighed only 257,658 pounds when it was received by the company at Louisville, but that the company was to bear all shrinkage, and therefore he says he is not responsible for the 18,514 pounds discrepancy. The company admits that it was to bear the shrinkage, but it says that the shrinkage in any event would not have amounted to 18,514 pounds; that a shrinkage of tobacco from that district would have amounted to only about one pound per hundred upon such a purchase. Proof was introduced upon this question, and one expert, claiming to have traded in tobacco in this district for a number of years and to have kept close account upon the shrinkage, stated that the shrinkage for that season amounted to only .0195 per cent.

A trial was had before a jury, and a verdict returned in favor of Friedberg & Company for $1,700 on the first item last discussed, and $6,000 upon the second item, which is the failure of Eskew to deliver to Friedberg & Company 226,300 pounds of tobacco which they claim he purchased under his contract with them, and which he refused to deliver, but sold on his own account; the total verdict being $7,700 in favor of Friedberg & Company.

There are no difficult questions of law involved in this case, but there are numerous questions of fact, many of them involved in great doubt. The evidence for the company does not show with clearness exactly what the tobacco cost Eskew at Booneville, and as the company had agreed to pay him cost plus a commission, it is necessary to know the cost before an intelligent conclusion can be reached. Taking all of the evidence for the company and disregarding wholly the evidence for Eskew, we are unable to figure plaintiff's loss at any sum approximating the verdict of $7,700. Indeed, on the first item, failure of Eskew to deliver 18,514 pounds of tobacco paid for by drafts on the company, the utmost sum from the evidence appears to be about $1,400, while on the second item, where the verdict of $6,000 was returned, we figure the company was not entitled to recover more than about $2,200. If we accept the evidence of Eskew and his witnesses, the tobacco cost Eskew in Booneville a little more than $9 per 100 pounds on an average. To this must be added $1.10 on the 100 pounds, which would make it cost a little more than $10.10 per 100 pounds to Friedberg & Company. If they had the tobacco sold at $10.84 per 100 pounds, as appears from the evidence, then their loss was about 74 cents on the 100 pounds and on 226,000 pounds their loss would have been $1,672.40, and no more, assuming the cost figures to be correct. Friedberg, Phelps, Bright, and their witnesses are very indefinite on the subject of the cost of this tobacco. In all, the testimony for the plaintiffs is entirely too indefinite and uncertain to sustain a verdict to $6,000 on the second item, or $1,700 on the first item.

The instructions are complained of and are subject to some criticism, being much longer than were necessary, but upon the whole seem fairly to present the question of fact to the jury.

Upon another trial, after the introduction of such competent evidence as the parties may wish to offer on the subject of the verbal contract made January 3, 1917, the plaintiff should show with some certainty the actual cost of the tobacco to Eskew in Booneville and the amount of insurance, storage, and other expenses which the company agreed to bear. Of course, Eskew may show this also, and from this evidence the jury will determine (1) whether there was such a verbal contract and its contents, and, if it should decide that the verbal agreement bound Eskew to purchase tobacco only for the company, and not on his own account, (2) it will then be the duty of the jury to find the cost of the tobacco to Eskew in Booneville, together with such other expense as the company was to stand, and to this add the commission, $1.10 on the 100 pounds, which Eskew was to receive, and take this sum from the proven price at which the company was selling the tobacco; and the difference will be the measure of damages to which the plaintiff is entitled. In the event the jury should conclude from the evidence, as contended by Eskew, that he was to buy only such tobacco for the company as he could obtain at the price fixed by the company, and that he had the right to purchase tobacco on his own account at a higher price, and that he did so purchase all or some material part of the tobacco which he resold, then the company is not entitled to recover anything of Eskew on this item to that extent; nor is it entitled to recover of him on item 1, if the jury should believe from the evidence that Eskew delivered to the company all of the tobacco which he purchased on its account and for which it paid and which it now claims is short 18,514 pounds, if the shortage is the result of shrinkage or other natural loss, and not the result of Eskew's failure to deliver some part of the tobacco for which the company paid.

This case comes within the rule,

Principal and agent—purchase of tobacco—liability for shrinkage.

several times adhered to by this court, that a recovery in damages cannot be sustained if, accepting the evidence of the plaintiff upon every point, the amount proven is materially less than the verdict returned.

Appeal—excessive verdict—
reversal.

Louisville R. Co. v. Schwemmer, 181 Ky. 641, 205 S.W. 685.

As the amount of the verdict in this case is greatly in excess of the highest sum proven, the judgment entered thereon must be reversed for a new trial consistent with this opinion.

ANNOTATION.

Liability of agent for shrinkage or shortage in commodity purchased for principal.

In the reported case (ESKEW v. FRIEDBERG, ante, 1116) it is held that an agent employed to purchase and ship tobacco is not liable to his principal for a shortage between the amount purchased and that received by the principal, where that shortage is the result of shrinkage or other natural loss, and not the result of the agent's failure to deliver some part of the tobacco for which the principal paid.

But few decisions have considered the liability of an agent for a shortage in a commodity purchased for his principal, and none of these consider a situation similar to that involved in the reported case. The case most similar is Gilchrist v. Brooklyn Grocer's Mfg. Asso. (1873) 66 Barb. (N. Y.) 390. In that case a person for whose account potatoes were purchased and shipped by an agent claimed that there was a shortage in quantity. The court defined the duty of the agent as follows: "By his agreement, the plaintiff was to purchase potatoes for the defendant at their market value; and even if this agreement expressly, or by implication, included the duty of the oversight in shipping them off by canal boats, still his duty as agent demanded nothing more of him than the exercise of reasonable skill and ordinary diligence in its performance; and if he performed his duty in this manner, his only liability to the defendant was that occasioned by a want of that reasonable skill, or for ordinary negligence. The agreement of the defendant was 'to reimburse the plaintiff such sum as he should pay for potatoes, for defendant.' If, in doing this, the defendant was even defrauded; if still he acted with reasonable skill and ordinary diligence, the loss, if any, was that of the defendant. If there happened afterwards to be found short measure, deficiency in quantity as compared with plaintiff's bill, or if a quality of potatoes was purchased inferior to his instructions, in that respect given, the liability of the plaintiff must still depend upon the question whether or not he had performed his agency with reasonable skill and ordinary diligence."

The decision in McBrady v. Monarch Elevator Co. (1910) 113 Minn. 104, 129 N. W. 163, turned entirely on an interpretation of the contract of agency. It appeared that the plaintiff had been in the employ of the defendant in charge of its grain elevator. It was his duty to buy grain from the farmers, store it in the elevator, and ship it out in car lots, according to the directions of the defendant. The court did not discuss the legal rules of liability, but held that the contract of the parties was that the agent was responsible for differences in gross weight of grain received and grain shipped, but was not responsible for loss by dockage. The result of the decision was to hold him responsible for all shortages as shown by differences in gross weights, less averages as shown in the same way.

In R. C. Stone Mill Co. v. McWilliams (1906) 121 Mo. App. 319, 98 S. W. 828, the decision was apparently affected largely by the fact that the principal, in order to sustain an attachment, sued for embezzlement. It appeared that the parties entered into an agreement whereby the defendants were to buy wheat for the plaintiff and ship as directed. Subsequently a settlement was had, and there was found to be a shortage between the amount claimed to have been shipped by the defendants and the amount actually received by the plaintiff. On the trial the court instructed the jury that the defendants did not have to account for the shortage, if there was any, but the burden was on the plaintiff to show by a preponderance of the evidence that there was a shortage of wheat, and that the defendants converted the same feloniously, wilfully, and unlawfully. The court held that this instruction was correct, saying: "The charge was that defendants had been guilty of embezzlement. The instruction announced the proposition that they were not required to account for the shortage to clear themselves of the charge, but, admitting there was a shortage, still the burden was on plaintiff to show the shortage went into defendants' pockets with the guilty intent of converting it to their own use. We see nothing wrong in this. Defendants were not called upon to show their innocence of the charge. Mere shortage in the wheat did not prove them guilty of having embezzled it. To authorize a conviction, it was essential to show not only a shortage, but also that the shortage resulted from a wilful and felonious conversion of the wheat by defendants to their own use, and the onus was on plaintiff to prove these essential facts to entitle it to a verdict." E. C. B.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Appt.,

v.

UNITED STATES STEEL CORPORATION et al.

United States Supreme Court — March 1, 1920.

(251 U. S. 417, 64 L. ed. —, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 292.)

Monopoly — size of corporation — unexerted powers.

1. The mere size of a corporation, or the existence of unexerted power unlawfully to restrain competition, does not of itself make such a corporation a violator of the Sherman Anti-trust Act.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1140.]

— under Anti-trust Act — dissolution — past and present corporate powers and acts.

2. A court, when asked to dissolve a corporation as an alleged violator of the Sherman Anti-trust Act, should consider, not what the corporation had power to do or did, but what it now has power to do and is doing.

[See 19 R. C. L. 91.]

— expectation or realization.

3. The Sherman Anti-trust Act is directed against monopoly; not against an expectation of it, but against its realization.

[See 19 R. C. L. 54, 55.]

— steel trust — past practices — dissolution — public interest.

4. A holding corporation which by its formation united under one control competing companies in the steel industry, but which did not achieve monopoly, and only attempted to fix prices through occasional appeals to and confederation with competitors, whatever there was of wrongful intent not having been executed, and whatever there was of evil effect having been discontinued before suit was brought, should not be dissolved nor be separated from some of its subsidiaries at the suit of the government, asserting violations of the Sherman Anti-trust Act,—especially where the court cannot see that the public interest will be served by yielding to the government's demand, and does see in so yielding a risk of injury to the public interest, including a material disturbance of, and, perhaps, serious detriment to, the foreign trade.

(Mr. Justice Day, Mr. Justice Pitney, and Mr. Justice Clarke, dissent.)
8 A.L.R.—71.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the District Court of the United States for the District of New Jersey dismissing a bill filed to dissolve the defendant corporations as alleged violators of the Sherman Anti-trust Act. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. T. W. Gregory, Attorney General, John W. Davis, G. Carroll Todd, Henry E. Colton, and Robert Szold, for appellant:

It has never been doubted that combinations of this type, embracing a dominant proportion of those engaged in a particular industry and formed for the express purpose of suppressing competition between them, are combinations in restraint of trade.

Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 44 L. ed. 136, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96; Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 375, 394, 49 L. ed. 518, 523, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 276; Dr. Miles Medical Co. v. John D. Park & Sons Co. 220 U. S. 373, 408, 55 L. ed. 502, 518, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 376.

Nor is it material, their purpose and effect being what they were, that the combinations here assailed were created in corporate form instead of by loose agreement.

United States v. American Tobacco Co. 221 U. S. 106, 176, 181, 55 L. ed. 663, 692, 694, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 632.

Where corporations simply exchange their plants and businesses for stock in a consolidated corporation, the resulting combination is in no respect different in principle from a combination in the form of trust which the statute specifically prohibits.

Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U. S. 197, 326, 327, 48 L. ed. 679, 695, 696, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 436; United States v. Reading Co. 226 U. S. 324, 352-363, 57 L. ed. 243, 252-256, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 90, 183 Fed. 470; Patterson v. United States, 138 C. C. A. 123, 222 Fed. 619; Noyes, Intercorporate Relations, § 354; Eddy, Combinations, § 622.

The purposes of illegal combinations are seldom capable of proof by direct testimony, but must be inferred from circumstances.

Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Asso. v. United States, 234 U. S. 600, 612, 58 L. ed. 1490, 1499, L.R.A. 1915A, 788, 84 Sup. Ct. Rep. 951; Reilly v. United States, 46 C. C. A. 25, 106 Fed. 896; United States v. Sacia, 2 Fed. 757; Reg. v. Murphy, 8 Car. & P. 297.

The union of so many previously independent business units, controlling so great a proportion of the entire industry, approximately half, with the next largest competitor controlling less than 6 per cent, are factors from which this court has repeatedly inferred the existence of a specific intent to suppress competition.

Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, 75, 55 L. ed. 619, 650, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 834, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 502, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734; United States v. Terminal R. Asso. 224 U. S. 383, 394, 56 L. ed. 810, 813, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 507; United States v. Reading, 226 U. S. 324, 370, 57 L. ed. 243, 259, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 90; United States v. Patten, 226 U. S. 525, 543, 57 L. ed. 333, 341, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 325, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 141.

In three leading cases in this court the holding company, as a means of combining able competitors, has been adjudged illegal.

Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U. S. 197, 48 L. ed. 679, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 436; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, 55 L. ed. 619, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 834, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 502, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734; Temple Iron Co. v. United States, 226 U. S. 324, 57 L. ed. 243, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 90, 183 Fed. 427.

A transaction which the law prohibits is not made lawful by an innocent motive or purpose.

United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. 166 U. S. 290, 341, 41 L. ed. 1007, 1027, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 540; Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 234, 243, 44 L. ed. 136, 145, 148, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96; Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 375, 396, 49 L. ed. 518, 524, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 276.

A contract or combination by its own inherent nature or effect, without more, may restrain trade within the purview of the statute.

United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. supra; United States v. Joint Traffic Asso. 171 U. S. 505, 561, 43 L. ed. 259, 284, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 25; Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 234, 243, 44 L. ed. 136, 145, 148, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96; Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U. S. 197, 323, 331, 48 L. ed. 679, 696, 697, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 436;

Harriman v. Northern Securities Co. 197 U. S. 244, 291, 298, 49 L. ed. 789, 761, 764, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 498; United States v. American Tobacco Co. 221 U. S. 106, 179, 55 L. ed. 663, 693, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 632; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, 65, 55 L. ed. 619, 647, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 834, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 502, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734; Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, 226 U. S. 20, 49, 57 L. ed. 107, 117, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 9; United States v. Union P. R. Co. 226 U. S. 61, 92, 93, 57 L. ed. 124, 135, 136, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 53; United States v. Reading Co. 226 U. S. 324, 57 L. ed. 243, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 90; United States v. Paten, 226 U. S. 525, 57 L. ed. 333, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 325, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 141; International Harvester Co. v. Missouri, 234 U. S. 199, 209, 58 L. ed. 1276, 1281, 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 525, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 859; Chesapeake & O. Fuel Co. v. United States, 53 C. C. A. 256, 115 Fed. 623.

Even if it would have been lawful for the many independent businesses combined through this holding company to unite to some extent to develop foreign trade—by joint selling agencies, for example—that cannot justify the complete and permanent suppression of competition between them in domestic trade.

United States v. Corn Products Ref. Co. 234 Fed. 1016; United States v. Union P. R. Co. 226 U. S. 61, 93, 57 L. ed. 124, 135, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 53.

In order to vitiate a contract or combination it is not essential that its result should be a complete monopoly; it is sufficient if it really tends to that end, and to deprive the public of the advantages which flow from free competition.

United States v. E. C. Knight Co. 156 U. S. 1, 16, 39 L. ed. 325, 330, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249; Chesapeake & O. Fuel Co. v. United States, 53 C. C. A. 256, 115 Fed. 610.

The test of the legality of a combination is not its present effect upon prices, wages, etc., nor its present conduct toward the remaining competitors, but its effect upon competition. If its effect is unduly to restrict competition, then it is immaterial that for the time being the combination may exercise its power benevolently.

United States v. Union P. R. Co. 226 U. S. 61, 88, 57 L. ed. 124, 134, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 53; Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 193 U. S. 197, 327, 48 L. ed. 679, 696, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 436; Harriman v. Northern Securities Co.

197 U. S. 244, 291, 49 L. ed. 789, 761, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 498; Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 238, 44 L. ed. 136, 146, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96; United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. 166 U. S. 290, 324, 41 L. ed. 1007, 1021, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 540; Pearsall v. Great Northern R. Co. 161 U. S. 646, 676, 677, 40 L. ed. 838, 848, 849, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 705; United States v. Standard Oil Co. 173 Fed. 196; Atty. Gen. v. Great Northern R. Co. 29 L. J. Ch. N. S. 799, 6 Jur. N. S. 1006, 8 Week. Rep. 556; International Harvester Co. v. Missouri, 234 U. S. 199, 209, 58 L. ed. 1276, 1281, 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 525, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 859, 237 Mo. 394, 141 S. W. 672.

Mr. C. B. Ames also for appellant.

Messrs. Richard V. Lindabury, David A. Reed, Cordenio A. Severance, and Raynal C. Bolling, for appellees:

Competition depends not upon the manufacture of common products, but upon the extent of their sale in common territory.

Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 44 L. ed. 136, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96.

The mere combination of manufacturing concerns not in competition with each other is not a violation of the Anti-trust Act, no matter how large their percentage of the country's production may be.

United States v. Winslow, 227 U. S. 202, 217, 57 L. ed. 481, 485, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 253.

It cannot in reason be said that a combination of manufacturing concerns whose competition did not exceed that shown in this case, whose percentage of the production did not exceed 50.1, and whose acquisition of a raw material supply did not exceed its reasonable requirements, and did not approach to a monopoly, must necessarily have operated to restrain trade, or, in and of itself, must necessarily have amounted to a monopoly or an attempt at monopolization.

Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 375, 49 L. ed. 513, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 276; United States v. Standard Oil Co. 173 Fed. 183, 221 U. S. 75, 55 L. ed. 650, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 834, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 502, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734; United States v. American Tobacco Co. 164 Fed. 719, 221 U. S. 157, 55 L. ed. 685, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 662; United States v. Reading Co. 226 U. S. 324, 370, 57 L. ed. 243, 259, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 90.

If the corporation was organized for legitimate business purposes and without intent to monopolize, then, even if it had power to monopolize (which the evidence shows it has not), still the mere incidental acquisition of such power constitutes no threat or offense under the Anti-trust Act.

Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, 55 L. ed. 619, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 834, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 502, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734; United States v. Terminal R. Asso. 224 U. S. 383, 56 L. ed. 810, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 507.

It was the intent of Congress in enacting the Anti-trust Act to require that business should be conducted along normal lines with full opportunity for the play of competitive forces. When this situation exists, all of the public, whether producers, traders, or consumers, are protected.

United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. 166 U. S. 290, 41 L. ed. 1007, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 540; United States v. Joint Traffic Asso. 171 U. S. 505, 43 L. ed. 259, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 25; Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 44 L. ed. 136, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96; Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 375, 49 L. ed. 518, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 276; Shawnee Compress Co. v. Anderson, 209 U. S. 423, 52 L. ed. 865, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 572; Continental Wall Paper Co. v. Louis Voight & Sons Co. 212 U. S. 227, 53 L. ed. 486, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 280; Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. United States, 226 U. S. 20, 57 L. ed. 107, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 9; United States v. Union P. R. Co. 226 U. S. 61, 57 L. ed. 124, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 53; United States v. Reading Co. 226 U. S. 324, 57 L. ed. 243, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 90; Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, 55 L. ed. 619, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 834, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 502, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734; United States v. American Tobacco Co. 221 U. S. 106, 55 L. ed. 663, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 632; W. W. Montague & Co. v. Lowry, 193 U. S. 38, 48 L. ed. 608, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 307; Loewe v. Lawlor, 208 U. S. 274, 52 L. ed. 488, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 301, 13 Ann. Cas. 815; Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Asso. v. United States, 234 U. S. 600, 58 L. ed. 1490, L.R.A. 1915A, 738, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 951.

Mr. George Welwood Murray for appellee Rockefeller.

Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the court:

Suit against the Steel Corporation and certain other companies which it directs and controls by reason of the ownership of their stock, it and they being separately and collectively charged as violators of the Sherman Anti-trust Act [Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. at L. 209, chap. 647, Comp. Stat. § 8820, 9 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 644].

It is prayed that it and they be dissolved because engaged in illegal restraint of trade and the exercise of monopoly.

Special charges of illegality and monopoly are made and special remedies and remedies are prayed; among others, that there be a prohibition of stock ownership and exercise of rights under such ownership and that there shall be such orders and distribution of the stock and other properties as shall be in accordance with equity and good conscience, and "shall effectuate the purpose of the Anti-trust Act." General relief is also prayed.

The Steel Corporation is a holding company only; the other companies are the operating ones, manufacturers in the iron and steel industry, twelve in number. There are, besides, other corporations and individuals more or less connected in the activities of the other defendants that are alleged to be instruments or accomplices in their activities and offendings; and that these activities and offendings (speaking in general terms) extend from 1901 to 1911, when the bill was filed, and have illustrative periods of significant and demonstrated illegality.

Issue is taken upon all these charges, and we see at a glance what detail of circumstances may be demanded, and we may find ourselves puzzled to compress them into an opinion that will not be of fatiguing prolixity.

The case was heard in the district court by four judges. They agreed that the bill should be dismissed; they disagreed as to the reasons for it. 223 Fed. 55. One opinion (written by Judge Buffington and concurred in by Judge McPherson) expressed the view that the Steel Corporation was not formed with the intention or purpose to monopolize or restrain trade, and did not have the motive or effect "to prejudice the public interest by unduly restricting competition or unduly obstructing the course of trade." The corporation, in the view of the opinion, was an evolution, a natural consummation of the tendencies of the industry on account of changing conditions,—practically a compulsion from "the metallurgical method of making steel and the physical method of handling it,"—this method, and the conditions consequent upon it, tending to combinations of capital and energies rather than diffusion in independent action. And the concentration of powers (we are still representing the opinion) was only such as was deemed necessary, and immediately manifested itself in improved methods and products and in an increase of domestic and foreign trade. Indeed, an important purpose of the organization of the corporation was the building up of the export trade in steel and iron, which at that time was sporadic,—the mere dumping of the products upon foreign markets.

Not monopoly, therefore, was the purpose of the organization of the corporation, but concentration of efforts with resultant economies and benefits.

The tendency of the industry and the purpose of the corporation in yielding to it was expressed in comprehensive condensation by the word "integration," which signifies continuity in the processes of the industry from ore mines to the finished product.

All considerations deemed pertinent were expressed and their influence was attempted to be assigned; and, while conceding that the Steel Corporation, after its formation in times of financial disturbance, entered into informal agreements or understandings with its competitors to maintain prices, they terminated with their occasions, and, as they had ceased to exist, the court was not justified in dissolving the corporation.

The other opinion (by Judge Woolley, and concurred in by Judge Hunt, 223 Fed. 161), was, in some particulars, in antithesis to Judge Buffington's. The view was expressed that neither the Steel Corporation nor the preceding combinations, which were in a sense its antetypes, had the justification of industrial conditions, nor were they or it impelled by the necessity for integration, or compelled to unite in comprehensive enterprise because such had become a condition of success under the new order of things. On the contrary, that the organizers of the corporation and the preceding companies had illegal purpose from the very beginning, and the corporation became "a combination of combinations by which, directly or indirectly, approximately 180 independent concerns were brought under one business control," which, measured by the amount of production, extended to 80 per cent or 90 per cent of the entire output of the country, and that its purpose was to secure great profits, which were thought possible in the light of the history of its constituent combinations, and to accomplish permanently what those combinations had demonstrated could be accomplished temporarily, and thereby monopolize and restrain trade.<sup>1</sup>

The organizers, however (we are still representing the opinion), underestimated the opposing conditions, and at the very beginning the corporation, instead of relying upon its own power, sought and obtained the assistance and the co-operation

<sup>1</sup> As bearing upon the power obtained and what the corporation did, we give other citations from Judge Woolley's opinion, as follows:

"The ore reserves acquired by the corporation at and subsequent to its organization, the relation which such reserves bear to ore bodies then existing and subsequently discovered, and their bearing upon the question of monopoly of raw materials, are matters which have been of its competitors (the independent companies). In other words, the view was expressed that the testimony did "not show that the corporation, in and of itself, ever possessed or exerted sufficient power when acting alone to control prices of the products of the industry." Its power was efficient only when in co-operation with its competitors, and hence it concerted with them in the expedients of pools, associations, trade meetings, and finally in a system of dinners inaugurated in 1907 by the president of the company, E. H. Gary, and called "the Gary dinners." The dinners were congregations of producers, and "were nothing but trade meetings," successors of the other means of associated action and control through such action. They were instituted first in "stress of panic," but their potency being demonstrated, they were afterwards called to control prices "in periods of industrial calm." "They were pools without penalties" and more efficient in stabilizing prices. But it was the further declaration that "when joint action was either refused or withdrawn, the corporation's prices were controlled by competition."

discussed in the preceding opinion, and with the reasoning as well as with the conclusion that the corporation has not a monopoly of the raw materials of the steel industry, I am in entire accord."

"Further inquiring whether the corporation inherently possesses monopolistic power, attention is next given to its proportion of the manufacture and sale of finished iron and steel products of the industry. Upon this subject there is a great volume of testimony, a detailed consideration of which in an opinion would be quite inexcusable. As a last analysis of this testimony, it is sufficient to say it shows that, large as was the corporation, and substantial as was its proportion of the business of the industry, the corporation was not able in the first ten years of its history to maintain its position in the increase of trade. During that period, its proportion of the domestic business decreased from 50.1 per cent to 40.9 per cent, and its increase of business during that period was but 40.6 per cent of its original volume. Its increase of business, measured by percentage, was ex-

The corporation, it was said, did not at any time abuse the power or ascendancy it possessed. It resorted to none of the brutalities or tyrannies that the cases illustrate of other combinations. It did not secure freight rebates; it did not increase its profits by reducing the wages of its employees,—whatever it did was not at the expense of labor; it did not increase its profits by lowering the quality of its products, nor create an artificial scarcity of them; it did not oppress or coerce its competitors,—its competition, though vigorous, was fair; it did not undersell its competitors in some localities by reducing its prices there below those maintained elsewhere, or require its customers to enter into contracts limiting their purchases or restricting them in resale prices; it did not obtain customers by secret rebates or departures from its published prices; there was no evidence that it attempted to crush its competitors or drive them out of the market, nor did it take customers from its competitors by unfair means, and in its competition it seemed to make no difference between large and small competitors. Indeed, it is said in ceded by eight of its competitors, whose increase of business, likewise measured by percentage, ranged from 63 to 3,779. This disparity in the increase of production indicates that the power of the corporation is not commensurate with its size, and that the size and the consequent power of the corporation are not sufficient to retard prosperous growth of efficient competitors."

"From the vast amount of testimony, it is conclusively shown that the Steel Corporation did not attempt to exert a power, if such it possessed, to oppress and destroy its competitors, and it is likewise disclosed by the history of the industry subsequent to the organization of the corporation that if it had made such an attempt it would have failed. It is also shown by the testimony that acting independently and relying alone upon its power and wealth, great as they were, the corporation has never been able to dominate the steel industry by controlling the supply of raw materials, restraining production of finished products, or enhancing and maintaining the prices of either."

many ways, and illustrated, that "instead of relying upon its own power to fix and maintain prices, the corporation, at its very beginning, sought and obtained the assistance of others." It combined its power with that of its competitors. It did not have power in and of itself, and the control it exerted was only in and by association with its competitors. Its offense, therefore, such as it was, was not different from theirs, and was distinguished from "theirs only in the leadership it assumed in promulgating and perfecting the policy. This leadership it gave up, and it had ceased to offend against the law before this suit was brought. It was hence concluded that it should be distinguished from its organizers, and that their intent and unsuccessful attempt should not be attributed to it; that it "in and of itself is not now and has never been a monopoly or a combination in restraint of trade," and a decree of dissolution should not be entered against it.

This summary of the opinions, given necessarily in paraphrase, does not adequately represent their ability and strength, but it has value as indicating the contentions of the parties, and the ultimate propositions to which the contentions are addressed. The opinions indicate that the evidence admits of different deductions as to the genesis of the corporation and the purpose of its organizers, but only of a single deduction as to the power it attained and could exercise. Both opinions were clear and confident that the power of the corporation never did and does not now reach to monopoly, and their review of the evidence, and our independent examination of it, enables us to elect between their respective estimates of it, and we concur in the main with that of Judges Woolley and Hunt. And we add no comment except, it may be, that they underestimated the influence of the tendency and movement to integration, the appreciation of the necessity or value of the continuity of manufacture from the ore to the finished product. And there was such a tendency, and though it cannot be asserted it had become a necessity, it had certainly become a facility of industrial progress. There was, therefore, much to urge it and give incentive to conduct that could accomplish it. From the nature and properties of the industry, the processes of production were something more than the stage and setting of the human activities. They determined to an extent those activities, furnished their motives, and gave test of their quality; not, of course, that the activities could get any immunity from size or resources or energies, whether exerted in integrated plants or diversified ones.

The contentions of the case, therefore, must be judged by the requirements of the law, not by accidental or adventitious circumstances. But what are such circumstances? We have seen that it was the view of the district court that size was such a circumstance and had no accusing or excusing influence. The contention of the government is to the contrary. Its assertion is that the size of the corporation, being the result of a "combination of powerful and able competitors," had become "substantially dominant" in the industry, and illegal. And that this was determined. The companies combined, is the further assertion, had already reached a high degree of efficiency, and in their independence were factors in production and competition, ceased to be such when brought under the regulating control of the corporation, which, by uniting them, offended the law; and that the organizers of the corporation "had in mind the specific purposes of the restraint of trade and the enormous profits resulting from that restraint."

It is the contention of the corporation opposing those of the government and denying the illegal purposes charged against it, that the industry demanded qualities and an enterprise that lesser industries do not demand, and must have a corresponding latitude and facility. Indeed, it is insisted that the industry had practically, to quote the words of Judge Buffington, he quoting those of a witness, "reached the limit or nearly at which economies from a metallurgical or mechanical standpoint could be made effective," and "that instead, as was then the practice, of having one mill make ten or twenty or fifty products, the greatest economy would result from one mill making one product, and making that product continuously." In other words, there was a necessity for integration and rescue from the old conditions,—from their improvidence and waste of effort,—and that in redress of the conditions the corporation was formed, its purpose and effect being salvage not monopoly," to quote the words of counsel. It was, is the insistence, the conception of ability, "a vision of a great business which should embrace all lines of steel and all processes of manufacture, from the ore to the finished product, and which, by reason of the economies thus to be effected and the diversity of products it would be able to offer, could successfully compete in all the markets of the world." It is urged further that to the discernment of that great possibility was added a courage that dared attempt its accomplishment, and the conception and the courage made the formation of the corporation notable, but did not make it illegal.

We state the contentions; we do not have to discuss them, or review the arguments advanced for their acceptance or repulsion. That is done in the opinions of the district judges, and we may well despair to supplement the force of their representation of the conditions antecedent to the formation of the corporation, and in what respect and extent its formation changed them. Of course, in that representation and its details there is guidance to decision, but they must be rightly estimated to judge of what they persuade. Our present purpose is not retrospect for itself, however instructive, but practical decision upon existing conditions, that we may not, by their disturbance, produce, or even risk, consequences of a concern that cannot now be computed. In other words, our consideration should be not of what the corporation had power to do or did, but what it has now power to do and is doing, and what judgment shall be now pronounced,—whether its dissolution, as the government prays, or the dismissal of the suit, as the corporation insists.

The alternatives are perplexing,—involve conflicting considerations, which, regarded in isolation, have diverse tendencies. We have seen that the judges of the district court unanimously concurred in the view that the corporation did not achieve monopoly, and such is our deduction, and it is against monopoly that the statute is directed; not against an expectation of it, but against its realization; and it is certain that it was not realized. The opposing conditions were underestimated. The power attained was much greater than that possessed by any one competitor,—it was not greater than that possessed by all of them. Monopoly, therefore, was not achieved, and competitors had to be persuaded by pools, associations, trade meetings, and through the social form of dinners, all of them, it may be, violations of the law, but transient in their purpose and effect. They were scattered through the years from 1901 (the year of the formation of the corporation) until 1911; but, after instances of success and failure, were abandoned nine months before this suit was brought. There is no evidence that the abandonment was in prophecy of or dread of suit; and the illegal practices have not been under Anti-trust Act—dissolution —past and present corporate powers and acts.

Monopoly—

—expectation or realization.

resumed, nor is there any evidence of an intention to resume them, and certainly no "dangerous probability" of their resumption, the test for which Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 396, 49 L. ed. 524, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 276, is cited. It is our conclusion, therefore, as it was that of the judges below, that the practices were abandoned from a conviction of their futility, from the operation of forces that were not understood or were underestimated, and the case is not peculiar. And we may say in passing that the government cannot fear their resumption, for it did not avail itself of the offer of the district court to retain jurisdiction of the cause in order that, if illegal acts should be attempted, they could be restrained.

What, then, can now be urged against the corporation? Can comparisons in other regards be made with its competitors, and by such comparisons guilty or innocent existence be assigned it? It is greater in size and productive power than any of its competitors, equal or nearly equal to them all, but its power over prices was not and is not commensurate with its power to produce.

It is true there is some testimony tending to show that the corporation had such power, but there was also testimony and a course of action tending strongly to the contrary. The conflict was by the judges of the district court unanimously resolved against the existence of that power, and in doing so they but gave effect to the greater weight of the evidence. It is certain that no such power was exerted. On the contrary, the only attempt at a fixation of prices was, as already said, through an appeal to and confederation with competitors, and the record shows besides that when competition occurred it was not in pretense, and the corporation declined in productive powers,—the competitors growing either against or in consequence of the competition. If against the competition, we have an instance of movement against what the government insists was an irresistible force; if in consequence of competition, we have an illustration of the adage that "competition is the life of trade" and is not easily repressed. The power of monopoly in the corporation under either illustration is an untenable accusation.

We may pause here for a moment to notice illustrations of the government of the purpose of the corporation; instancing its acquisition, after its formation, of control over the Shelby Steel Tube Company, the Union Steel Company, and, subsequently, the Tennessee Company. There is dispute over the reasons for these acquisitions which we shall not detail. There is, however, an important circumstance in connection with that of the Tennessee Company which is worthy to be noted. It was submitted to President Roosevelt and he gave it his approval. His approval, of course, did not make it legal, but it gives assurance of its legality, and we know from his earnestness in the public welfare he would have approved of nothing that had even a tendency to its detriment. And he testified he was not deceived and that he believed that "the Tennessee Coal & Iron people had a property which was almost worthless in their hands, nearly worthless to them, nearly worthless to the communities in which it was situated, and entirely worthless to any financial institution that had the securities the minute that any panic came, and that the only way to give value to it was to put it in the hands of people whose possession of it would be a guaranty that there was value to it." Such being the emergency, it seems like an extreme accusation to say that the corporation which relieved it, and, perhaps, rescued the company and the communities dependent upon it from disaster, was urged by unworthy motives. Did illegality attach afterwards, and how? And what was the corporation to do with the property? Let it decay in desuetude, or develop its capabilities and resources? In the development, of course, there would be profit to the corporation, but there would be profit as well to the world. For this reason President Roosevelt sanctioned the purchase, and it would seem a distempered view of purchase and result to regard them as violations of law.

From this digression we return to the consideration of the conduct of the corporation to its competitors. Besides the circumstances which we have mentioned, there are others of probative strength. The company's officers, and, as well, its competitors and customers, testified that its competition was genuine, direct, and vigorous, and was reflected in prices and production. No practical witness was produced by the government in opposition. Its contention is based on the asserted size and dominance of the corporation,—alleged power for evil, not the exertion of the power in evil. Or, as counsel put it, "a combination may be illegal because of its purpose; it may be illegal because it acquires a dominating power, not as a result of normal growth and development, but as a result of a combination of competitors." Such composition and its resulting power constitute, in the view of the government, the offense against the law, and yet it is admitted "no competitor came forward and said he had to accept the Steel Corporation's prices." But this absence of complaint counsel urge against the corporation. Competitors, it is said, followed the corporation's prices because they made money by the imitation. Indeed, the imitation is urged as an evidence of the corporation's power. "Universal imitation," counsel assert, is "an evidence of power." In this concord of action, the contention is, there is the sinister dominance of the corporation,—"its extensive control of the industry is such that the others [independent companies] follow." Counsel, however, admit that there was "occasionally" some competition, but reject the suggestion that it extended practically to a war between the corporation and the independents. Counsel say, "They [the corporation is made a plural] called a few—they called two hundred witnesses out of some forty thousand customers, and they expect with that customer evidence to overcome the whole train of price movement shown since the corporation was formed." And by "movement of prices," counsel explained, "as shown by the published prices . . . they were the ones that the competitors were maintaining all during the interval."

It would seem that "two hundred witnesses" would be fairly representative. Besides, the balance of the "forty thousand customers" was open to the government to draw upon. Not having done so, is it not permissible to infer that none would testify to the existence of the influence that the government asserts? At any rate, not one was called, but, instead, the opinion of an editor of a trade journal is adduced, and that of an author and teacher of economics whose philosophical deductions had, perhaps, fortification from experience as Deputy Commissioner of Corporations and as an employee in the Bureau of Corporations. His deduction was that when prices are constant through a definite period an artificial influence is indicated; if they vary during such a period it is a consequence of competitive conditions. It has become an aphorism that there is danger of deception in generalities, and in a case of this importance we should have something surer for judgment than speculation,—something more than a deduction equivocal of itself, even though the facts it rests on or asserts were not contradicted. If the phenomena of production and prices were as easily resolved as the witness implied, much discussion and much literature have been wasted, and some of the problems that are now distracting the world would be given composing solution. Of course, competition affects prices, but it is only one among other influences, and does not, more than they, register itself in definite and legible effect.

We magnify the testimony by its consideration. Against it competitors, dealers, and customers of the corporation testify in multitude that no adventitious interference was employed to either fix or maintain prices, and that they were constant or varied according to natural conditions. Can this testimony be minimized or dismissed by inferring that, as intimated, it is an evidence of power, not of weakness, and power exerted not only to suppress competition, but to compel testimony, is the necessary inference, shading into perjury to deny its exertion? The situation is indeed singular, and we may wonder at it,—wonder that the despotism of the corporation, so baneful to the world in the representation of the government, did not produce protesting victims.

But there are other paradoxes. The government does not hesitate to present contradictions, though only one can be true, such being, we were told in our school books, the "principle of contradiction." In one, competitors (the independents) are represented as oppressed by the superior power of the corporation; in the other, they are represented as ascending to opulence by imitating that power's prices, which they could not do if at disadvantage from the other conditions of competition; and yet confederated action is not asserted. If it were, this suit would take on another cast. The competitors would cease to be the victims of the corporation, and would become its accomplices. And there is no other alternative. The suggestion that lurks in the government's contention that the acceptance of the corporation's prices is the submission of impotence to irresistible power is, in view of the testimony of the competitors, untenable. They, as we have seen, deny restraint in any measure or illegal influence of any kind. The government, therefore, is reduced to the assertion that the size of the corporation, the power it may have, not the exertion of the power, is an abhorrence to the law; or, as the government says, "the combination embodied in the corporation unduly restrains competition by its necessary effect [the italics are the emphasis of the government], and therefore is unlawful regardless of purpose." "A wrongful purpose," the government adds, is "matter of aggravation." The illegality is statistical, purpose or movement of any kind only its emphasis. To assent to that, to what extremes would we be led? Competition consists of business activities and ability,—they make its life; but there may be fatalities in it. Are the activities to be encouraged when militant, and suppressed or regulated when triumphant because of the dominance attained? To such paternalism the government's contention, which regards power rather than its use the determining consideration, seems to conduct. Certainly conducts we may say, for it is the inevitable logic of the government's contention that competition must not only be free, but that it must not be pressed to the ascendancy of a competitor, for in ascendancy there is the menace of monopoly.

We have pointed out that there are several of the government's contentions which are difficult to represent or measure; and the one we are now considering, that is, the power is "unlawful regardless of purpose," is another of them. It seems to us that it has for its ultimate principle and justification that strength in any producer or seller is a menace to the public interest and illegal because there is potency in it for mischief. The regression is extreme, but short of it the government cannot stop. The fallacy it conveys is manifest.

The corporation was formed in 1901; no act of aggression upon its competitors is charged against it; it confederated with them at times in offense against the law, but abandoned that before this suit was brought, and since 1911 no act in violation of law can be established against it except its existence be such an act. This is urged, as we have seen, and that the interest of the public is involved, and that such interest is paramount to corporation or competitors. Granted,—though it is difficult to see how there can be restraint of trade when there is no restraint of competitors in the trade nor complaints by customers,—how can it be worked out of the situation and through what proposition of law? Of course it calls for nothing other than a right application of the law, and, to repeat what we have said above, shall we declare the law to be that size is an offense, even though it minds its own business, because what it does is imitated? The corporation is undoubtedly of impressive size, and it takes an effort of resolution not to be affected by it or to exaggerate its influence. But we must adhere to the —size of corporation—unexercised powers.

law, and the law does not make mere size an offense or the existence of unexercised power an offense. It, we repeat, requires overt acts, and trusts to its prohibition of them and its power to repress or punish them. It does not compel competition, nor require all that is possible.

Admitting, however, that there is pertinent strength in the propositions of the government, and in connection with them, we recall the distinction we made in the Standard Oil Co. Case (221 U. S. 1, 77, 55 L. ed. 619, 652, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 834, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 502, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734) between acts done in violation of the statute and a condition brought about which, “in and of itself, is not only a continued attempt to monopolize, but also a monopolization.” In such case, we declared, “the duty to enforce the statute” required “the application of broader and more controlling” remedies than the other. And the remedies applied conformed to the declaration; there was prohibition of future acts and there was dissolution of “the combination found to exist in violation of the statute” in order to “neutralize the extension and continually operating force which the possession of the power unlawfully obtained” had “brought” and would “continue to bring about.”

Are the case and its precepts applicable here? The Steel Corporation by its formation united under one control competing companies, and thus, it is urged, a condition was brought about in violation of the statute, and therefore illegal, and became a “continually operating force,” with the “possession of power unlawfully obtained.”

But there are countervailing considerations. We have seen whatever there was of wrong intent could not be executed; whatever there was of evil effect was discontinued before this suit was brought, and this, we think, determines the decree. We say this in full realization of the requirements of the law. It is clear in its denunciation of monopolies, and equally clear in its direction that the courts of the nation shall prevent and restrain them (its language is, “to prevent and restrain violations of” the act), but the command is necessarily submissive to the conditions which may exist and the usual powers of a court of equity to adapt its remedies to those conditions. In other words, it is not expected to enforce abstractions and do injury thereby, it may be, to the purpose of the law. It is this flexibility of discretion—indeed, essential function—that makes its value in our jurisprudence,—value in this case as in others. We do not mean to say that the law is not its own measure, and that it can be disregarded, but only that the appropriate relief in each instance is remitted to a court of equity to determine; not, and let us be explicit in this, to advance a policy contrary to that of the law, but in submission to the law and its policy, and in execution of both, and it is certainly a matter for consideration that there was no legal attack on the corporation until 1911, ten years after its formation and the commencement of its career. We do not, however, speak of the delay simply as to its time, or that there is estopped in it because of its time, but on account of what was done during that time,—the many millions of dollars spent, the development made, and the enterprises undertaken; the investments by the public that have been invited and are not to be ignored. And what of the foreign trade that has been developed and exists? The government, with some inconsistency, it seems to us, would remove this from the decree of dissolution. Indeed, it is pointed out that under congressional legislation in the Webb Act the foreign trade of the corporation is reserved to it. And further, it is said, that the corporation has constructed a company called the Products Company which can be "very easily preserved as a medium through which the steel business might reach the balance of the world," and that in the decree of "dissolution that could be provided." This is supplemented by the suggestion that not only the Steel Corporation, "but other steel makers of the country, could function through an instrumentality created under the Webb Act."

The propositions and suggestions do not commend themselves. We do not see how the Steel Corporation can be such a beneficial instrumentality in the trade of the world and its beneficence preserved, and yet be such an evil instrumentality in the trade of the United States that it must be destroyed. And by whom and how shall all the adjustments of preservation or destruction be made? How can the corporation be sustained and its power of control over its subsidiary companies be retained and exercised in the foreign trade and given up in the domestic trade? The government presents no solution of the problem. Counsel realize the difficulty and seem to think that its solution or its evasion is in the suggestion that the Steel Corporation and "other steel makers could function through an instrumentality created under the Webb Act." But we are confronted with the necessity of immediate judicial action under existing laws, not action under laws that have not been and may not be enacted. We must now decide, and we see no guide to decision in the propositions of the government.

The government, however, tentatively presents a proposition which has some tangibility. It submits that certain of the subsidiary companies are so mechanically equipped and so officially directed as to be released and remitted to independent action and individual interests and the competition to which such interests prompt, without any disturbance to business. The companies are enumerated. They are the Carnegie Steel Company (a combination of the old Carnegie Company, the National Steel Company, and the American Steel Company), the Federal Steel Company, the Tennessee Company, and the Union Steel Company (a combination of the Union Steel Company of Donaro, Pennsylvania, Sharon Steel Company of Sharon, Pennsylvania, and Sharon Tin Plate Company). They are fully integrated, it is said, possess their own supplies, facilities of transportation and distribution. They are subject only to the Steel Corporation is, in effect, the declaration, in nothing, but its control of their prices. We may say parenthetically that they are defendants in the suit and charged as offenders, and we have the strange circumstance of violators of the law being urged to be used as expeditors of the law.

But let us see what guide to a procedure of dissolution of the corporation and the dispersion as well of its subsidiary companies, for they are asserted to be illegal combinations, is prayed. And the fact must not be overlooked or underestimated. The prayer of the government calls for not only a disruption of present conditions, but the restoration of the conditions of twenty years ago; if not literally, substantially. Is there guidance to this in the Standard Oil Co. Case and the American Tobacco Co. Case, 221 U. S. 106, 55 L. ed. 663, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 632? As an element in determining the answer we shall have to compare the cases with that at bar, but this can only be done in a general way. And the law necessarily must be kept in mind. No other comment of it is necessary. It has received so much exposition that it and all it prescribes and proscribes should be considered as a consciously directing presence.

The Standard Oil Company had its origin in 1882, and through successive forms of combinations and agencies it progressed in illegal power to the day of the decree, even attempting to circumvent by one of its forms the decision of a court against it. And its methods in using its power was of the kind that Judge Woolley described as "brutal," and of which practices, he said, the Steel Corporation was absolutely guiltless. We have enumerated them, and this reference to them is enough. And of the practices, this court said, no disinterested mind could doubt that the purpose was "to drive others from the field and to exclude them from their right to trade, and thus accomplish the mastery which was the end in view." It was further said that what was done and the final culmination "in the plan of the New Jersey corporation" made "manifest the continued existence of the intent . . . and impelled the expansion of the New Jersey corporation." It was to this corporation, which represented the power and purpose of all that preceded, that the suit was addressed and the decree of the court was to apply. What we have quoted contrasts that case with this. The contrast is further emphasized by pointing out how, in the case of the New Jersey corporation, the original wrong was reflected in and manifested by the acts which followed the organization, as described by the court. It said: "The exercise of the power which resulted from that organization fortifies the foregoing conclusions [as to monopoly, etc.], since the development which came, the acquisition here and there which ensued of every efficient means by which competition could have been asserted, the slow but resistless methods which followed by which means of transportation were absorbed and brought under control, the system of marketing which was adopted, by which the country was divided into districts and the trade in each district in oil was turned over to the designated corporation within the combination and all others were excluded, all lead the mind up to a conviction of a purpose and intent which we think is so certain as practically to cause the subject not to be within the domain of reasonable contention."

The American Tobacco Co. Case has the same bad distinctions as the Standard Oil Co. Case. The illegality in which it was formed [there were two American Tobacco Companies, but we use the name as designating the new company, as representing the combinations of the suit] continued, indeed, progressed in intensity and defiance to the moment of decree. And it is the intimation of the opinion, if not its direct assertion, that the formation of the company (the word "combination" is used) was preceded by the intimidation of a trade war, "inspired by one or more of the minds which brought about and became parties to that combination." In other words, the purpose of the combination was signaled to competitors, and the choice presented to them was submission or ruin, —to become parties to the illegal enterprise or be driven "out of the business." This was the purpose and the achievement, and the processes by which achieved, this court enumerated to be the formation of new companies, taking stock in others to "obscure the result actually attained, but always to monopolize and retain power in the hands of the few and mastery of the trade; putting control in the hands of seemingly independent corporations as barriers to the entry of others into the trade; the expenditure of millions upon millions in buying out plants, not to utilize them, but to close them; by constantly recurring stipulations by which numbers of persons, whether manufacturers, stockholders, or employees, were required to bind themselves, generally for long periods, not to compete in the future. In the American Tobacco Co. Case, therefore, as in the Standard Oil Co. Case, the court had to deal with a persistent and systematic lawbreaker, masquerading under legal forms, and which not only had to be stripped of its disguises, but arrested in its illegality. A decree of dissolution was the manifest instrumentality, and inevitable. We think it would be a work of sheer supererogation to point out that a decree in that case or in the Standard Oil Co. Case furnishes no example for a decree in this.

In conclusion, we are unable to see that the public interest will be served by yielding to the contention of the government respecting the dissolution of the company or the separation from it of some of its subsidiaries; and we do see in a contrary conclusion a risk of injury to the public interest, including a material disturbance of, and, it may be, serious detriment to, the foreign trade. And in submission to the policy of the law and its fortifying prohibitions the public interest is of paramount regard.

We think, therefore, that the decree of the District Court should be affirmed.

So ordered.

Mr. Justice McReynolds and Mr. Justice Brandeis took no part in the consideration or decision of the case.

Mr. Justice Day, dissenting:

This record seems to me to leave no fair room for a doubt that the defendants, the United States Steel Corporation and the several subsidiary corporations which make up that organization, were formed in violation of the Sherman Act [Act of July 2, 1890, 26 Stat. at L. 209, chap. 647, Comp. Stat. § 8820, 9 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. 644]. I am unable to accept the conclusion which directs a dismissal of the bill instead of following the well-settled practice, sanctioned by previous decisions of this court, requiring the dissolution of combinations made in direct violation of the law.

It appears to be thoroughly established that the formation of the corporations here under consideration constituted combinations between competitors, in violation of law, and intended to remove competition and to directly restrain trade. I agree with the conclusions of Judges Woolley and Hunt, expressed in the court below (223 Fed. 161 et seq.), that the combinations were not submissions to business conditions, but were designed to control them for illegal purposes, regardless of other consequences, and "were made upon a scale that was huge and in a manner that was wild," and "properties were assembled and combined with less regard to their importance as integral parts of an integrated whole than to the advantages expected from the elimination of the competition which theretofore existed between them." Those judges found that the constituent companies of the United States Steel Corporation, nine in number, were themselves combinations of steel manufacturers, and the effect of the organization of these combinations was to give a control over the industry at least equal to that theretofore possessed by the constituent companies and their subsidiaries. That the Steel Corporation was a combination of combinations by which, directly or indirectly, 180 independent concerns were brought under —steel trust—plant practices—dissolution—

public interest.

one control, and in the language of Judge Woolley (p. 167) :

"Without referring to the great mass of figures which bears upon this aspect of the case, it is clear to me that combinations were created by acquiring competing producing concerns at figures not based upon their physical or business values, as independent and separate producers, but upon their values in combination; that is, upon their values as manufacturing plants and business concerns with competition eliminated. In many instances, capital stock was issued for amounts vastly in excess of the values of the properties purchased, thereby capitalizing the anticipated fruits of combination. The control acquired over the branches of the industry to which the combinations particularly related, measured by the amount of production, extended in some instances from 80 per cent to 95 per cent of the entire output of the country, resulting in the immediate increase in prices, in some cases double and in others treble what they were before, yielding large dividends upon greatly inflated capital.

"The immediate, as well as the normal, effect of such combinations, was in all instances a complete elimination of competition between the concerns absorbed, and a corresponding restraint of trade."

The enormous overcapitalization of companies and the appropriation of $100,000,000 in stock to promotion expenses were represented in the stock issues of the new organizations thus formed, and were the basis upon which large dividends have been declared from the profits of the business. This record shows that the power obtained by the corporation brought under its control large competing companies which were of themselves illegal combinations, and succeeded to their power; that some of the organizers of the Steel Corporation were parties to the preceding combinations, participated in their illegality, and, by uniting them under a common direction, intended to augment and perpetuate their power. It is the irresistible conclusion from these premises that great profits to be derived from unified control were the object of these organizations.

The contention must be rejected that the combination was an inevitable evolution of industrial tendencies compelling union of endeavor. Nothing could add to the vivid accuracy with which Judge Woolley, speaking for himself and Judge Hunt, has stated the illegality of the organization, and its purpose to combine in one great corporation the previous combinations by a direct violation of the purposes and terms of the Sherman Act.

For many years, as the record discloses, this unlawful organization exerted its power to control and maintain prices by pools, associations, trade meetings, and as the result of discussion and agreements at the so-called "Gary dinners," where the assembled trade opponents secured co-operation and joint action through the machinery of special committees of competing concerns, and by prudent provision took into account the possibility of defection, and the means of controlling and perpetuating that industrial harmony which arose from the control and maintenance of prices.

It inevitably follows that the corporation violated the law in its formation and by its immediate practices. The power, thus obtained from the combination of resources almost unlimited in the aggregation of competing organizations, had within its control the domination of the trade, and the ability to fix prices and restrain the free flow of commerce upon a scale heretofore unapproached in the history of corporate organization in this country.

These facts established, as it seems to me they are by the record, it follows that if the Sherman Act is to be given efficacy, there must be a decree undoing, so far as is possible, that which has been achieved in open, notorious, and continued violation of its provisions.

I agree that the act offers no objection to the mere size of a corporation, nor to the continued exertion of its lawful power, when that size and power have been obtained by lawful means and developed by natural growth, although its resources, capital, and strength may give to such corporation a dominating place in the business and industry with which it is concerned. It is entitled to maintain its size and the power that legitimately goes with it, provided no law has been transgressed in obtaining it. But I understand the reiterated decisions of this court construing the Sherman Act to hold that this power may not legally be derived from conspiracies, combinations, or contracts in restraint of trade. To permit this would be to practically annul the Sherman Law by judicial decree. This principle has been so often declared by the decisions that it is only necessary to refer to some of them. It is the scope of such combinations, and their power to suppress and stifle competition and create or tend to create monopolies, which, as we have declared so often as to make its reiteration monotonous, it was the purpose of the Sherman Act to condemn, including all combinations and conspiracies to restrain the free and natural flow of trade in the channels of interstate commerce. Pearsall v. Great Northern R. Co. 161 U. S. 646, 676, 677, 40 L. ed. 838, 848, 849, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 705; Trans-Missouri Freight Asso. Case, 166 U. S. 290, 324, 41 L. ed. 1007, 1021, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 540; Northern Securities Co. Case, 193 U. S. 197, 48 L. ed. 679, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 436; Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 238, 44 L. ed. 136, 146, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96; Harriman v. Northern Securities Co. 197 U. S. 244, 291, 49 L. ed. 739, 761, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493; Union Pacific R. Co. Case, 226 U. S. 61, 88, 57 L. ed. 124, 134, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 53. While it was not the purpose of the act to condemn normal and usual contracts to lawfully expand business and further legitimate trade, it did intend to effectively reach and control all conspiracies and combinations or contracts of whatever form which unduly restrain competition and unduly obstruct the natural course of trade, or which, from their nature or effect, have proved effectual to restrain interstate commerce. Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 221 U. S. 1, 55 L. ed. 619, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 834, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 502, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 734; United States v. American Tobacco Co. 221 U. S. 106, 55 L. ed. 663, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 632; United States v. Reading Co. 226 U. S. 324, 57 L. ed. 243, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 90; Straus v. American Publishers' Asso. 231 U. S. 222, 58 L. ed. 192, L.R.A.1915A, 1099, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 84, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 369; Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Asso. v. United States, 234 U. S. 600, 58 L. ed. 1490, L.R.A.1915A, 788, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 951.

This statute has been in force for nearly thirty years. It has been frequently before this court for consideration, and the nature and character of the relief to be granted against combinations found guilty of violations of it have been the subject of much consideration. Its interpretation has become a part of the law itself, and if changes are to be made now in its construction or operation, it seems to me that the exertion of such authority rests with Congress, and not with the courts.

The 4th section is intended to give to courts of equity of the United States the power to effectively control and restrain violations of the act. In none of the cases which have been before the courts was the character of the relief to be granted, where organizations were found to be within the condemnation of the act, more thoroughly considered than in the Standard Oil and American Tobacco Co. Cases, reported in 221 U. S. In the former case, considering the measure of relief to be granted in the case of a combination, certainly not more obnoxious to the Sherman Act than the court now finds the one under consideration to be, this court declared that it must be twofold in character (221 U. S. 78): "1st. To forbid the doing in the future of acts like those which we have found to have been done in the past which would be violative of the statute. 2d. The exertion of such measure of relief as will effectually dissolve the combination found to exist in violation of the statute, and thus neutralize the extension and continually operating force which the possession of the power unlawfully obtained has brought and will continue to bring about."

In the American Tobacco Co. Case the nature of the relief to be granted was again given consideration, and it was there concluded that the only effectual remedy was to dissolve the combination and the companies comprising it, and for that purpose the cause was remanded to the district court to hear the parties and determine a method of dissolution and of recreating from the elements composing it "a new condition which should be in honest harmony with, and not repugnant to, the law." In that case the corporations dissolved had long been in existence, and the offending companies were organized years before the suit was brought and before the decree of dissolution was finally made. Such facts were considered no valid objection to the dissolution of these powerful organizations as the only effective means of enforcing the purposes of the Sherman Anti-trust Act. These cases have been frequently followed in this court, and in the lower Federal courts, in determining the nature of the relief to be granted, and I see no occasion to depart from them now.

As I understand the conclusions of the court, affirming the decree directing dismissal of the bill, they amount to this: that these combinations, both the holding company and the subsidiaries which comprise it, although organized in plain violation and bold defiance of the provisions of the act, nevertheless are immune from a decree effectually ending the combinations and putting it out of their power to attain the unlawful purposes sought, because of some reasons of public policy requiring such conclusion. I know of no public policy which sanctions a violation of the law, nor of any inconvenience to trade, domestic or foreign, which should have the effect of placing combinations, which have been able to thus organize one of the greatest industries of the country in defiance of law, in an impregnable position above the control of the law forbidding such combinations. Such a conclusion does violence to the policy which the law was intended to enforce, runs counter to the decisions of the court, and necessarily results in a practical nullification of the act itself.

There is no mistaking the terms of the act as they have hitherto been interpreted by this court. It was not intended to merely suppress unfair practices, but, as its history and terms amply show, it was intended to make it criminal to form combinations or engage in conspiracies or contracts in restraint of interstate trade. The remedy by injunction, at the instance of the Attorney General, was given for the purpose of enabling the courts, as the statute states, to prohibit such conspiracies, combinations, and contracts, and this court, interpreting its provisions, has held that the proper enforcement of the act requires decrees to end combinations by dissolving them and restoring as far as possible the competitive conditions which the combinations have destroyed. I am unable to see force in the suggestion that public policy, or the assumed disastrous effect upon foreign trade of dissolving the unlawful combination, is sufficient to entitle it to immunity from the enforcement of the statute.

Nor can I yield assent to the proposition that this combination has not acquired a dominant position in the trade which enables it to control prices and production when it sees fit to exert its power. Its total assets on December 31, 1913, were in excess of $1,800,000,000; its outstanding capital stock was $868,583,600; its surplus $151,798,428. Its cash on hand ordinarily was $75,000,000; this sum alone exceeded the total capitalization of any of its competitors, and, with a single exception, the total capitalization and surplus of any one of them. That such an organization, thus fortified and equipped, could, if it saw fit, dominate the trade and control competition, would seem to be a business proposition too plain to require extended argument to support it. Its resources, strength, and comprehensive ownership of the means of production enable it to adopt measures to do again as it has done in the past; that is, to effectually dominate and control the steel business of the country. From the earliest decisions of this court it has been declared that it was the effective power of such organizations to control and restrain competition and the freedom of trade that Congress intended to limit and control. That the exercise of the power may be withheld, or exerted with forbearing benevolence, does not place such combinations beyond the authority of the statute which was intended to prohibit their formation, and, when formed, to deprive them of the power unlawfully attained.

It is said that a complete monopolization of the steel business was never attained by the offending combinations. To insist upon such result would be beyond the requirements of the statute, and in most cases practicably impossible. As we said in dealing with the packers' combination in Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 396, 49 L. ed. 524, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 276: "Where acts are not sufficient in themselves to produce a result which the law seeks to prevent,—for instance, the monopoly,—but require further acts in addition to the mere forces of nature to bring that result to pass, an intent to bring it to pass is necessary in order to produce a dangerous probability that it will happen. Com. v. Peaslee, 177 Mass. 267, 272, 59 N. E. 55. But when that intent and the consequent dangerous probability exist, this statute [Sherman Act] like many others and like the common law in some cases, directs itself against that dangerous probability as well as against the completed result."

It is affirmed that to grant the government's request for a remand to the district court for a decree of dissolution would not result in a change in the conditions of the steel trade. Such is not the theory of the Sherman Act. That act was framed in the belief that attempted or accomplished monopolization, or combinations which suppress free competition, were hurtful to the public interest, and that a restoration of competitive conditions would benefit the public. We have here a combination in control of one half of the steel business of the country. If the plan were followed, as in the American Tobacco Co. Case, of remanding the case to the district court, a decree might be framed restoring competitive conditions as far as practicable. See United States v. American Tobacco Co. 191 Fed. 371. In that case the subject of reconstruction so as to restore such conditions was elaborated and carefully considered. In my judgment the principles there laid down, if followed now, would make a very material difference in the steel industry. Instead of one dominating corporation, with scattered competitors, there would be competitive conditions throughout the whole trade which would carry into effect the policy of the law.

It seems to me that if this act is to be given effect, the bill, under the findings of fact made by the court, should not be dismissed, and the cause should be remanded to the district court, where a plan of effective and final dissolution of the corporations should be enforced by a decree framed for that purpose.

Mr. Justice Pitney and Mr. Justice Clarke concur in this dissent.

ANNOTATION.

The Steel Corporation Case and the Sherman Anti-trust Act.

The reported case (UNITED STATES v. UNITED STATES STEEL CORP. ante, 1121) settles authoritatively, and seemingly for all time, the proposition that the mere size of a corporation does not of itself make it a violator of the Sherman Anti-trust Act. The members of the court were agreed upon this, and, while the point does not seem to have been expressly passed upon in earlier Supreme Court cases, it has been adverted to in argument. For instance, in United States v. American Tobacco Co. (1911) 221 U. S. 106, 55 L. ed. 663, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 632, Mr. Chief Justice White, in delivering the opinion of the court, stated its conclusion to be that the tobacco company was a monopoly and violative of the act, but in effect refused to place the decision upon the ground either of the size of the company or the actual control of the tobacco trade which it undoubtedly had. He said: "These conclusions are inevitable, not because of the vast amount of property aggregated by the combination, not because alone of the many corporations which the proof shows were united by resort to one device of another. Again, not alone because of the dominion and control over the tobacco trade which actually exists, but because," etc. And the same point has been made in a number of Federal cases. Thus, in United States v. Keystone Watch Case Co. (1915) 218 Fed. 502, it was declared that the size and varied character of an enterprise do not in themselves violate the Anti-trust Act. And in United States v. Eastman Kodak Co. (1915) 226 Fed. 62, final decree entered in (1916) 230 Fed. 522, in assenting to the proposition that the size of a corporation and the extent of its business do not alone render it an illegal monopoly, the court said that there is no limit in this country to the extent to which a business may grow, and that the acquisition of property in the case under consideration, standing alone, would not be deemed an illegal monopoly. Again, in United States v. International Harvester Co. (1914) 214 Fed. 987, appeal dismissed in (1918) 248 U. S. 587, 63 L. ed. 434, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 5, Smith, C. J., said: "There is no limit under the American law to which a business may not independently grow, and even a combination of two or more businesses, if it does not unreasonably restrain trade, is not illegal; but it is the combination which unreasonably restrains trade that is illegal." And see Couquard v. National Linseed Oil Co. (1898) 171 Ill. 480, 49 N. E. 563, where the Illinois supreme court, in answering the contention that the company under consideration was a trust formed in violation of law, held that the mere facts that the defendant, a linseed oil company, had acquired a great many oil mills and plants and was managing a large business did not itself render it illegal.

And the decision in the reported case (UNITED STATES v. UNITED STATES STEEL CORP. ante, 1140) on its face seems to eliminate from future cases another contention sometimes made, namely, that the court should consider what the enterprise under consideration has had power to do and has done in the past, by ruling that the test is what it has power to do and is doing at the time of the investigation. In other words, it has now been decided that even the existence of unexercised power unlawfully to restrain competition does not of itself make a company or corporation, which because of its size could exercise such a power, a violator of the Anti-trust Act. (But see United States v. Reading Co. decided by the same court April 26, 1920, as set out infra.) This, of course, in effect overrules on this point cases to the contrary, such as United States v. International Harvester Co. (1914) 214 Fed. 987, appeal dismissed on appellant's application in (1918) 248 U. S. 587, 63 L. ed. 434, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 5, wherein it was held that a potential power to restrain competition through monopoly is sufficient to render a combination violative of the Sherman Act, although it may not have been exercised to any harmful extent. In fact the opinion of the majority in the UNITED STATES STEEL CORP. CASE squarely lays down the rule contended for in the dissenting opinion of Sanborn, J., in the International Harvester Co. Case, i. e., that the crucial issue was whether or not the International Harvester Company was, when the complaint was filed, then unduly or unreasonably restraining or monopolizing interstate or foreign trade, or threatening to do so, and not whether the company, years before, made a combination or an attempted monopoly in restraint of trade.

However, it cannot be said that the reported case (UNITED STATES v. UNITED STATES STEEL CORP.) to any great extent clarifies the confusion in the decisions under the Sherman-Antitrust Act, or points out any certain or definite rule by which the act may be applied. That the decision does not, as has been suggested, nullify the act, is evidenced by the decision in United States v. Reading Co. decided April 26, 1920 (U. S. Adv. Ops. 1919-20, p. 481) — U. S. —, 64 L. ed. —, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 425), rendered but a few weeks after that in the UNITED STATES

STEEL CORP. CASE, wherein it was held (Mr. Chief Justice White and Justices Holmes and Van Devanter dissenting) that the case not only fell within the scope of the Anti-trust Act, but was violative of the commodities clause of the Act of June 29, 1906, relating to interstate commerce. The opinions in the Reading Co. Case also aptly illustrate the different conclusions which may be reached under the act. For instance, in the dissenting opinion it was said that the opinion of the court below (226 Fed. 229) clearly and comprehensively sustained the correctness of the action which it took, and also demonstrated the error of the majority of the Supreme Court in reversing its action, while, on the other hand, Mr. Justice Clarke, in delivering the opinion of the majority, said that it was "difficult to imagine a clearer case," and that "in all essential particulars it rests on undisputed conduct and upon perfectly established law." The latter statement is of especial interest in connection with the reported case (UNITED STATES v. UNITED STATES STEEL CORP.) for the reason that the writer of the prevailing opinion stated that the dominating power of the defendant, obtained as it was for the purpose of domination, was, "regardless of the use made of it," violative of the Anti-trust Act (however, there actually was an unlawful exercise of power) and that the case was specifically and clearly ruled by United States v. Union P. R. Co. (1912) 226 U. S. 61, 57 L. ed. 124, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 53, wherein it was said that "it is the scope of such combinations and their power to suppress or stifle competition or create monopoly which determines the applicability of the act."

G. J. C.

PEOPLE'S BANK & TRUST COMPANY, Exr., etc., of R. M. Brown, Deceased, Appt.,

v.

UNITED STATES TRUST COMPANY.

Kentucky Court of Appeals — November 21, 1919.

(Brown v. United States Trust Co. 185 Ky. 747, 215 S. W. 815.)

Executor and administrator — rent — as cost of administration.

1. The rent paid by an administrator under a lease executed by deceased is not a cost of administration within the meaning of a statute giving such cost preference against funds in the hands of the administrator.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1146.]

Landlord and tenant — right of executor of tenant.

2. An executor of a tenant has the option to keep the property, thereby charging the estate with the rental; to sublet if the contract or statute permits; or to surrender the property to the landlord, thereby subjecting the estate to damages for breach of the contract.

— effect of death of lessee.

3. A lease is not terminated by the death of the lessee.

[See 11 R. C. L. 158; 16 R. C. L. 855.]

Executor and administrator — costs of administration — what are.

4. A statutory provision making costs and charges of administration of an estate a preferred claim against funds in the hands of the administrator refers to such costs and charges as are necessarily incurred in the settlement of the estate.

Landlord and tenant — lien on proceeds of leasehold in possession of administrator.

5. A lessor should have a superior lien upon the net income received by the personal representatives of the lessee from the use or rental of the leased premises.

APPEAL by the executor of the estate of R. M. Brown, deceased, from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Shelby County in favor of claimant trust company, in a suit to settle the estate of deceased and to determine the rights of said claimant. Reversed, with directions.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Beard & Pickett for appellant.

Mr. G. G. Sales, for appellee:

The executor having in good faith continued to occupy the premises for the benefit of the estate, the landlord is entitled to his rent, whether the business proves profitable or not.

Pepper v. Harper, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 837, 47 S. W. 620; 11 Cyc. 173; 18 Cyc. 239, 242, 312; 24 Cyc. 1340.

The landlord would be entitled to judgment and a declaration of privity, whether there are assets to pay or not; but there are assets to pay.

Masonic Sav. Bank v. Bangs, 84 Ky. 135, 4 Am. St. Rep. 197; Woolley v. Louisville Bkg. Co. 81 Ky. 527.

The sum spent to provide fire extinguishers, extra stairways, etc., to make the second floor a safe place for moving picture theater crowds, is an expense of the estate, and not of the landlord.

Holzhauser v. Sheeny, 127 Ky. 28, 104 S. W. 1034; Franklin v. Tracy, 117 Ky. 267, 63 L.R.A. 649, 77 S. W. 1113. 78 S. W. 1112; Altsheler v. Conrad, 118 Ky. 647, 82 S. W. 257; Miles v. Tracey, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 621. 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1142, 89 S. W. 1128; Thomas v. Conrad, 114 Ky. 841, 71 S. W. 903, 74 S. W. 1084.

Mr. Robert N. Miller also for appellee.

Carroll, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

R. M. Brown died testate in Shelby county in July, 1916. Shortly after this his will was probated, and the People's Bank & Trust Company appointed executor. He owned considerable property, real and personal, but his estate was heavily encumbered with lien debts, aside from which there were many unsecured creditors, and it is conceded that the general creditors cannot be paid in full, nor will there be anything for the devisees.

In December, 1913, Brown leased for a period of ten years and thirteen days, or to December 31, 1923, a three-story building on Main street, in Shelbyville, Kentucky, from the United States Trust Company. Under the contract of tenancy Brown was to pay an annual rental of $3,000, and in addition all taxes, insurance, and repairs, making the rental, in the aggregate, amount to about $4,000 a year. To better secure the payment of the rent charges and other expenses, and protect the lessor against loss, Brown mortgaged to it certain real estate located in Shelbyville. When he died, in July, 1916, the lease had about seven years and five months to run.

In July, 1917, the executor brought this suit for a settlement of the estate, and in its petition asked the advice of the court concerning certain matters that had come up between it and the landlord, among which was the claim of the landlord that the executor must carry out all the terms and conditions of the lease made with Brown, and also its contention that the rentals and other expenses due and payable under the contract of lease were preferred claims, to be paid out of the general estate in the hands of the executor before the creditors received anything. Another question was whether the executor had the right to terminate the lease, which it expressed a willingness to do.

Other issues raised in the case relate to a controversy between the executor and the landlord as to which was liable for certain repairs and alterations made on the leased property after it came into the hands of the executor. The question, however, as to whether the executor or the landlord should pay the expense of the alterations and repairs appears to have been adjudged to the satisfaction of both parties by the lower court. At any rate, neither of them is complaining on this appeal about the judgment in this respect. So that the only questions we need to consider on this appeal are, first, whether the executor, as tenant, may surrender the property to the landlord, thereby terminating the lease; or, second, if it may not do this, has the landlord a preferred claim for the rents and other charges that will be due and payable under the contract, and must these rents and charges be paid out of the general estate in the hands of the executor, as part of the costs of administration, before the creditors receive anything therefrom?

The lower court adjudged that the landlord had a preferred claim against the estate for rent and other obligations due under the rent contract, and that these amounts should be paid by the executor as a part of the cost of administering the estate for such time as the executor might hold the property under the lease. The judgment did not determine whether the executor could surrender the property and thereby cancel the lease; but, as this question is made in the case and discussed by counsel in their briefs, it should be settled on this appeal.

The executor took charge of the estate and the leased premises shortly after the death of Brown, and it appears from the judgment that there were due and unpaid rentals amounting on December 31, 1917, to $2,500, which sum was adjudged to be a preferred claim and directed to be paid by the executor out of the estate in his hands, as a part of the cost of administration. As the lease by its terms did not expire until January 1, 1923, and the annual amount due for rent and other expenses was about $4,000, it will be seen that the executor, under the judgment, would be required to pay, in addition to the $2,-500 mentioned in the judgment, $4,-000 a year for five years, which sums under the judgment would be preferred claims, and payable out of the estate in the hands of the executor as part of the cost of administration.

It appears from the record that the gross annual income received by the personal representative from the leased property is about $4,680, and that the yearly expense incurred by the personal representative in connection with the premises is $1,215.87, leaving a net income from the leased estate of $3,464.13. It also appears, as we have before said, that the annual rent and the other expenses stipulated in the contract amount to some $536 more than the income derived from the property at the present rentals. Although it is conceded that the leased property has been well managed by the executor, it will be seen that it is a burden and not a benefit to the estate, and that if the lease is continued, with no increase in the income that has been derived from it thus far, there will be a yearly deficit that must be met by the executor out of the estate, aside from the fact that its continuance will delay a final settlement of the estate until the lease is terminated according to its terms.

There does not seem, however, to be any legal way through which the estate may be relieved of this expensive and embarrassing condition, without subjecting it to the damages that would accrue if the executor surrendered it to the landlord and refused to further perform its conditions, thereby in effect working, on his election, a cancellation of the lease, unless he could sublease it to persons under a contract that would satisfy the terms of the lease contract. In other words, when a lessee of property like this dies, the leased property comes into the possession of his personal representative, and he has only three rights of election in respect to it: First, he may keep the property, thereby charging the estate with the performance of the terms and conditions of the lease. Second, he may, if the contract or statute permit it, sublease the premises; but this would not, of course, relieve the estate of its obligation to satisfy the terms and conditions of the lease, as between it and the landlord. Third, he may surrender the leased property to the landlord, and refuse to have anything further to do with it, thereby working a cancellation of the lease; but the doing of this would subject the estate to a suit for damages by the landlord for breach of the contract.

Landlord and tenant—right of executor of tenant.

We say this because, although we have not been able to find any cases from this court on the subject, it is well settled by the authorities that a contract of this character is not terminated by the death of the lessee, and that his estate continues liable for the performance of the conditions of the lease until it expires. It is also generally agreed that the obligation of a lessee under the contract passes on his death to his personal representative, who assumes in his fiduciary capacity the performance of the contract in the same manner that its performance could have been demanded of the lessee. 16 R. C. L. p. 855; Underhill, Land. & T. p. 619; 18 Cyc. 239-242, 312; 24 Cyc. 1340; Becker v. Walworth, 45 Ohio St. 169, 12 N. E. 1; Alsup v. Banks, 68 Miss. 664, 13 L. R. A. 598, 24 Am. St. Rep. 294, 9 So. 895; Hoagland v. Crum, 113 Ill. 365, 55 Am. Rep. 424; Hihn v. Mangenberg, 89 Cal. 268, 26 Pac. 968.

Effect of death of lessee.

Accordingly the personal representative can no more surrender or terminate the lease without the consent of the landlord than could the lessee himself, and if the personal representative does terminate the lease by refusing to perform its conditions, the landlord may bring a suit against him and recover from the estate damages in the same amount that he could have recovered from the lessee, if he had broken or refused to perform the contract. In other words, the personal representative takes the place in the contract of his deceased lessee, and assumes in his fiduciary capacity all the liability that the lessee assumed in entering into the contract.

The rights, duties, and obligations stipulated in the lease having thus come to the executor to be discharged by him, the question is whether the rentals and other charges against the lessee were preferred claims against his estate, to be paid as a part of the costs of the administration, or, if not, what is their status, and out of what funds in the hands of the executor should they be paid? It is provided in § 3868 of the Kentucky Statutes that "if the personal estate of a decedent be not sufficient to pay his liabilities, then the burial expenses of such decedent, and the cost and charges of the administration of his estate, and the amount of the estate of a dead person, or of a ward, or of a person of unsound mind, committed by a court of record to, and remaining in the hands of, a decedent, shall be paid in full before any pro rata distribution shall be made; but this preference shall not extend to a demand foreign to this state. All other debts and liabilities shall be of equal dignity, and paid ratably in the administration of his estate, and should more than the ratable share of any debt be paid, his personal representative shall only receive credit for its proper proportion."

It will be seen that this statute makes no mention of rentals as a preferred claim, and so, unless the rents and other expenses the lessee assumed in the contract are properly be charged as a part of the cost of the administration of the estate of Brown, they are not entitled to a preference over other debts in the distribution of the estate; and whatever remains due after applying to their payment the net income derived by the personal representative from the leased premises becomes an ordinary debt against the estate, to be paid ratably with other like debts of the decedent in the administration of the estate.

The provision in the statute that the "cost and charges of the administration" of an estate are a preferred claim refers to such costs and charges as are necessarily incurred by the personal rep-

Executor and administrator --costs of administration --what are.

representative in the settlement of the estate, such as court costs, attorney's fees, the compensation of the personal representative, and other necessary incidental expenses that he may be put to in the discharge of his fiduciary duties, but do not, as we think, embrace ordinary contract obligations of the decedent that the personal representative is under a duty to satisfy out of the assets of the estate.

We therefore do not find any good reason why a contract of lease, which falls within the class of ordinary contracts, made by a decedent, that the personal representative is under a duty to perform, should occupy a more favorable position in the distribution of the assets of the estate than any other contract made by the decedent that the personal representative, acting in his place, is under a duty to perform. Although the expense incurred by the personal representative in looking after leased premises that come into his possession as a personal asset of the estate would be a preferred claim, as a part of the cost and charges of the administration to the same extent as would expenses incurred by him in looking after any other business of the estate, this does not mean that the claim of the landlord or lessor must be given a preference in the distribution of the estate, further than is allowed by the statute, over the claim of any other creditor.

But of course what we have said does not mean that in this case the landlord may not look for payment of the whole or any part of his debt to the statutory remedies and liens given a landlord against the property of the lessee and the subtenants on the leased premises, or that the lessor in this case may not look to his mortgage lien for the payment of the rentals and charges stipulated in the contract or any part thereof.

We think, however, that the landlord, aside from and independent of any other liens he may have under and by virtue of statutory provisions on property on the leased premises, should also have a superior lien on the net income received by the personal representative from the use or rentals of the leased premises, and that the personal representative should pay this income to the landlord in part or full satisfaction, as the case may be, of the obligations of the lease contract.

Landlord and tenant—lien on proceeds of leasehold in possession of administrator.

The statute, in § 2317, provides, in part, that "a landlord shall have a superior lien on the produce of the farm or premises rented, on the fixtures, on the household furniture, and other personal property of the tenant, or undertenant, owned by him, after possession is taken under the lease," and under this statute the landlord has a superior lien on the income derived by the lessee from the rented premises, as this income, less the necessary expense that the lessee must incur in maintaining the leased premises in a condition suitable for their use and occupancy, or that he must incur or assume as a part of the contract of leasing them, if he does this, is a part of the "produce" of the leased premises.

But this superior lien of the landlord does not extend to other property of the tenant, and when the landlord has exhausted the property on which the statute gives him a superior lien, the remainder due on his claim, if any, becomes an ordinary debt against the tenant, to be paid ratably with other debts of like character. The death of the lessee should not put the landlord in any better position than he would have occupied if the lessee had not died; but if the whole of the rents and other obligations due under the lease contract should become a preferred claim against the estate of the decedent, independent of its preference under the statutory provisions giving the landlord a superior lien, it is evident that the landlord would be given a preference over unsecured as well as lien creditors on the whole estate of the decedent, when, as against the tenant, he would only have the superior lien and preferred claim given by the statute to landlords.

Having the view of the law applicable to the case as we set it out, it follows that the court erred in adjudging that the claim of the lessor must be paid as a part of the costs of administration.

Wherefore the judgment is reversed, with directions to proceed in conformity with this opinion.

ANNOTATION.

Rent accruing under lease after death of lessee as preferred claim or cost of administration.

Preference of payment out of the assets of a decedent has been claimed for rent due, because of the occupancy or use by the personal representative of premises leased by the decedent in his lifetime.

Thus, in the reported case (People's BANK & T. CO. v. UNITED STATES TRUST CO. ante, 1142), it is held that though a lease does not terminate on the death of a lessee, and the duty of performance of the lease falls on the personal representative, rent charges are not preferred claims under a statute preferring "costs and charges of the administration." The landlord was, however, in that case, given a lien for his rent on the income derived by the personal representative from the leased premises.

In Naftel v. Osborn (1893) 96 Ala. 623, 12 So. 182, it appeared that an administratrix cultivated and gathered crops which were growing on leased property at the time of the death of the lessee. A statute provided that "any crop commenced by a decedent may be completed and gathered by the executor or administrator, and, the expenses of the plantation being deducted therefrom, is assets in his hands, and may be sold by him at private sale, either in or out of the state." It was held that the rent until the crop was gathered was part of the expenses, and that only the surplus of the value of the crop was available to general creditors.

The Maryland Act of 1836, applied in Longwell v. Ridinger (1843) 1 Gill (Md.) 57, gave a preference to "all claims for rent in arrear against deceased persons for which a distress may be levied by law, after the death of the deceased." The court said in that case: "This court is of opinion that the rent in arrear, due from Peter Ridinger to John McCaleb on the 1st day of October, 1842, could have been distrained for by the said McCaleb, who died on the 2d January, 1843, the administratrix of the said Peter Ridinger having continued the tenancy of her intestate up to the time of, and after, the death of the said McCaleb, the landlord and owner of the fee of the said demised premises."

In at least two jurisdictions, the question has arisen whether rent for occupancy of premises by the lessee himself, which did not accrue until after his death, is a preferred claim against his estate under a statute preferring claims for "rent."

Thus, the Pennsylvania Act of 1834 makes "rents not exceeding one year" a preferred claim of the second class, taking precedence of all debts except funeral expenses, etc. In Re Ralston (1844) 2 Clark (Pa.) 224, it was held that rent not accruing until after the death of the tenant was not preferred. The court said: "If the question were put to a layman, he would unhesitatingly answer that rent is not a debt due or owing until the expiration of the term on which it is reserved, unless it be otherwise stipulated by the terms of the lease, and we have seen that, in legal intentment, the meaning of the words 'due and owing' is in accordance with this interpretation. Upon this point the learned and carefully prepared opinion of Kennedy, J., . . . [Bank of Pennsylvania v. Wise (1834) 3 Watts (Pa.) 394] saves us the necessity of any elaborate argument, and indeed proves that in no sense can rent be esteemed a 'debt owing' before it is payable. Nor is there anything in the spirit of the act which makes against this construction. The object is not to favor the landlord in every supposable case, or to the full amount of the claims he may have against the estate of his late tenant. The intent seems to be to give to the landlord a preference as to rent for which he might have distrained at the death of the tenant, not exceeding one year; and not to confer a greater right or larger title than he had at common law, and under our Act of 1772. The preference is in aid or perhaps in lieu of the distress, and not something beyond and of greater efficacy, as the argument submitted on the part of the landlord would make it. But it is urged that a broader meaning is to be assigned to the words 'debts owing,' as used in the act, than is their natural import, because they are used as applicable to 'funeral expenses,' equally with other debts; and as these expenses cannot be due from a deceased person prior to his death, the legislature must be taken as having employed the words in question as expressive of any debt for which the estate of the intestate would be eventually liable. It is, to be sure, a violation of propriety of expression to denominate a claim against the estate of a deceased person, which can only arise subsequent to his death, a debt owing by him, but still it is a debt due from his estate, and so the legislature simply intended to treat it. A slip in calling it a debt owing from the deceased at the time of his death cannot operate to enlarge the terms used, so as to make that a debt due within the purview of the statute, which, both in technical and popular acceptation, sanctioned by reason and justice, is not so due. To produce such a result, something more strongly indicative of a corresponding legislative intention must be shown than mere inaccuracy of expression, employed in speaking of another and distinct subject. As, therefore, there was not a year's rent due and owing by the tenant to his landlord at the time of his death, the accountant is not entitled to the further credit claimed by him in this exception, and it must be overruled."

A different view, resting on cases which are outside the scope of this note, was taken in Walker's Estate (1889) 6 Pa. Co. Ct. 515, the court affirming an auditor's report wherein it was said: "The Act of February 24, 1834, makes rents not exceeding one year a preferred claim. The question is raised whether this prefers all rent accruing up to the death of the tenant, or only what may be actually due by the terms of the lease. The auditor is of opinion that the rent is to be apportioned to the date of the death of the tenant, and is to be allowed a preference to that extent. The language of the Act of 1834 is: 'All debts owing by any person at the time of his decease shall be paid in the order stated.

. . . (2) Rents not exceeding one year.' Under the Act of June 16, 1836, relating to executions, the language is that 'goods taken in execution and liable to distress shall be liable for the payment of all sums of money due for rent.' 1 Purdon's Dig. 752, p. 59. Under this act it has been repeatedly held that the rent is to be apportioned to the date of the levy, whether payable by the terms of the lease before that time or not. Binns v. Hudson (1813) 5 Binn. (Pa.) 506; West v. Sink (1797) 2 Yeates (Pa.) 274; Morgan v. Moody (1843) 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 335; Parker's Appeal (1847) 5 Pa. 390; Case v. Davis (1850) 15 Pa. 39; Wickey v. Eyster (1868) 58 Pa. 501;

Moss's Appeal (1860) 35 Pa. 162; Lewis's Appeal (1870) 66 Pa. 312. Judge Bell, in Re Rolston (Pa.) supra, expresses doubt of the correctness of this construction, but it has become too firmly imbedded in our law to be overturned, and is consonant with reason. As the law takes away the right of distress, it ought to provide a substitute. The same construction, by reason and analogy, must be placed upon the language of the Act of 1834. The rent accruing to the landlord, up to the death of the tenant, will, therefore, be preferred."

The statute construed in McEwen v. Joy (1858) 41 S. C. L. (7 Rich.) 33, gave a preference generally to claims for "rent." The court held that the rent for the second quarter of a term in the course of which the lessee died was a preferred claim under the statute, saying: "If our Statute of 1789 (5 Stat. at L. 111, § 26), in settling the order for payment of the debts of an intestate, confines the precedence which is given to rent over bonds and other obligations, to the rent which was due at the death of the intestate, and that which would become due at the next day for payment after his death, then the plaintiff should recover no more than he has done; but if that precedence is extended to all rent which may accrue under a contract of the intestate, then the defendant here has assets to pay some, if not all, of the rent for the last two quarters, and the plaintiff is entitled to a new trial. . . . In the right of distress, difference may be made by the death of the lessee; but the preference given to rent seems not to depend on that right, but, like it, to have grown out of the preference yielded to landlords, partly from feudal reasons, and partly from consideration of the necessity of habitation for human beings. That assets which arose from other sources should be reserved to meet rent that may, long after the death of an intestate, become due upon a contract, perhaps improvidently made by him for a long lease, will, without doubt, be in some cases inconvenient and unjust; but the unexpired term is assets in the hands of the administrator, the profits it may yield are supposed to exceed the rent, and there is justice in the landlord's claim that those profits should not be directed to the payment of other debts, in defeat of the rent. We conclude that there is no good ground for a distinction, with regard to precedence, between rent which was due at the death of the intestate, and that which became due afterwards." M. J. Q.

LAURA M. SMITH

v.

B. C. SMITH, Plff. in Err.

West Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals—February 26, 1918.

(81 W. Va. 761, 95 S. E. 199.)

Judgment — alimony — enforcement.

1. Though a decree for alimony constitutes a lien on the real estate of the party against whom it is pronounced and may be enforced by execution, it is a decree not merely for the payment of money, but for the payment of money in discharge of the high marital duty of maintenance, wherefore it may be enforced by attachment for contempt also.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1156.]

Appeal — judgment for contempt.

2. Section 4, chap. 160, Code (§ 5605), impliedly withholding or denying a writ of error to a judgment for contempt consisting of nonperformance of, or disobedience to, a judgment, decree, or order, is limited in its operation to judgments, decrees, and orders rendered, pronounced, and entered by courts having jurisdiction to render, pronounce, and enter them, and to such valid judgments, decrees, and orders as the court has jurisdiction and power to enforce by process of contempt.

[See 6 R. C. L. 538.]

Equity — abrogation of remedy.

3. Statutory abrogation of a remedy afforded by general equity jurisprudence denies to courts of equity power and jurisdiction to adopt and use it.

Contempt — denial of jurisdiction to punish.

4. Sections 1, 2, chap. 139, Code (§§ 5093, 5094), deny to courts of equity jurisdiction and power previously accorded them by general equity procedure to enforce decrees for the payment of money by process of contempt.

Appeal — contempt.

5. A writ of error does not lie to a judgment of contempt for disobedience of a decree requiring payment of alimony.

[See 6 R. C. L. 538.]

Judgment — coercing performance — commitment.

6. A court of chancery may, by proper procedure, commit a disobedient or recalcitrant litigant for refusal to perform an affirmative act lawfully required of him by its decree for the benefit of the opposite party to the suit, by an order entered upon its own records under the style of the cause in which such decree was pronounced, as a means of coercing performance of the act so required.

[See 6 R. C. L. 502; 10 R. C. L. 566.]

Contempt — punishment — character.

7. In such cases, the committal is not deemed in law to be punishment for any criminal offense. The contempt for which it is inflicted is civil in its nature, and only incidentally involves an offense to the court or the public.

Headnotes by POFFENBARGER, P.

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Roane County to review a judgment of committal for contempt of court because of nonpayment of alimony in a proceeding to enforce its payment. Writ dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. Charles E. Hogg, for plaintiff in error:

This court has jurisdiction to review the action of the court below.

State v. Fredlock, 52 W. Va. 232, 94 Am. St. Rep. 932, 43 S. E. 153; State ex rel. Fortney Lumber & Hardware Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 73 W. Va. 1, 79 S. E. 834; State ex rel. Mason v. Harper's Ferry Bridge Co. 16 W. Va. 864; State v. Cunningham, 33 W. Va. 607, 11 S. E. 76; Clements v. Tillman, 79 Ga. 451, 11 Am. St. Rep. 442, 5 S. E. 194; Carnahan v. Carnahan, 143 Mich. 390, 114 Am. St. Rep. 660, 107 N. W. 73, 8 Ann. Cas. 53.

The circuit court was without jurisdiction to enforce a decree for the payment of money by means of a proceeding for contempt.

Latham v. Latham, 30 Gratt. 307; Martin v. Martin, 33 W. Va. 695, 11 S. E. 12; Goff v. Goff, 60 W. Va. 9, 53 S. E. 769, 9 Ann. Cas. 1088; Cariens v. Cariens, 50 W. Va. 113, 55 L.R.A. 930, 40 S. E. 335; Stewart v. Stewart, 27 W. Va. 167; Rickard v. Schley, 27 W. Va. 624; Clements v. Tillman, 79 Ga. 451, 11 Am. St. Rep. 442, 5 S. E. 194; Staples v. Staples, 87 Wis. 592, 24 L.R.A. 433, 58 N. W. 1036; Andrews v. Andrews, 69 Ill. 609; Chapman v. Phoenix Nat. Bank, 12 Jones & S. 355; Haines v. Haines, 35 Mich. 138; Coughlin v. Ehlert, 39 Mo. 285; Segear v. Segear, 23 Neb. 306, 36 N. W. 536; Leeder v. State, 55 Neb. 133, 75 N. W. 541; Marsh v. Marsh, 162 Ind. 210, 70 N. E. 154; Baily v. Baily, 69 Iowa, 77, 28 N. W. 443; Carnahan v. Carnahan, 143 Mich. 390, 114 Am. St. Rep. 660, 107 N. W. 73, 8 Ann. Cas. 53.

A final decree for alimony, payable by instalments, is one for the payment of money and enforceable by execution.

Hall v. Harrington, 7 Colo. App. 474, 44 Pac. 365; Conrad v. Everich, 50 Ohio St. 476, 40 Am. St. Rep. 679, 35 N. E. 58; Trowbridge v. Spinning, 23 Wash. 48, 54 L.R.A. 204, 83 Am. St. Rep. 806, 62 Pac. 125; Barber v. Barber, 21 How. 532, 595, 16 L. ed. 226, 230; Dow v. Blake, 148 Ill. 76, 39 Am. St. Rep. 156, 35 N. E. 761; Livermore v. Boutelle, 71 Am. Dec. 711, note; Harding v. Harding, 102 Am. St. Rep. 702, note; 1 R. C. L. 951; Gaston v. Gaston, 55 Am. St. Rep. 86, note; Wetmore v. Wetmore, 149 N. Y. 520, 33 L.R.A. 708, 52 Am. St. Rep. 752, 44 N. E. 169; Johnson v. Johnson, 125 Ill. 510, 16 N. E. 891; Brigham v. Brigham, 147 Mass. 159, 16 N. E. 730;

Dreyer v. Dickman, 181 Mo. App. 660, 111 S. W. 616; De Vall v. De Vall, 57 Or. 128, 109 Pac. 755, 110 Pac. 705.

A proceeding for contempt is criminal in its nature, and the rules of evidence governing criminal trials are applicable.

State ex rel. Mason v. Harper's Ferry Bridge Co. 16 W. Va. 864; Craig v. McCulloch, 20 W. Va. 148; Ruhl v. Ruhl, 24 W. Va. 279; State ex rel. Pelton v. Irwin, 30 W. Va. 404, 4 S. E. 413; State v. Cunningham, 33 W. Va. 607, 11 S. E. 76; State v. Fredlock, 52 W. Va. 232, 94 Am. St. Rep. 932, 43 S. E. 153; Ex parte Mylius, 61 W. Va. 405, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1098, 56 S. E. 602, 11 Ann. Cas. 812.

The court should have discharged the rule awarded against the plaintiff in error to show cause why he should not be held for contempt of court.

Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Powell, 94 Va. 268, 26 S. E. 828; 1 R. C. L. p. 962, § 105.

Mr. Charles J. Hogg also for plaintiff in error.

Mr. H. C. Ferguson for defendant in error.

Poffenbarger, P., delivered the opinion of the court:

A judgment of committal for a contempt of court, effected by non-payment of instalments of alimony decreed against the plaintiff in error, constitutes the subject-matter of this writ of error; and one very vital question arises on the motion to dismiss the writ as having been improvidently awarded.

A judgment for contempt of a trial court, consisting of disobedience of its judgment, decree, or order, is not reviewable in the appellate court if the trial court had jurisdiction of the cause in which it rendered, pronounced, or entered the violated judgment, decree, or order, and did not exceed its jurisdiction in doing so. State ex rel. Fortney Lumber & Hardware Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 73 W. Va. 1, 79 S. E. 834; Code, chap. 160, § 4. Full acquiescence in the foregoing proposition is evidenced by the brief filed for the plaintiff in error; but it is earnestly insisted that the contempt procedure complained of was action in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, because, it is said, § 1 of chapter 139 of the Code has stripped courts of equity of their power to enforce decrees for alimony by such procedure. That section places a decree for land or personal property, or for the payment of money, on the same footing as a judgment for such property or money, and then proceeds as follows: "But a party may proceed to carry into execution a decree or order in chancery other than for the payment of money, as he might have done if this and the following section had not been enacted."

The next section makes the beneficiaries of decrees requiring the payment of money judgment creditors, and authorizes issuance of executions thereon. If the construction contended for should be conceded, it may not follow that a writ of error lies to a judgment in a contempt proceeding, for the statute expressly withholds a writ of error to a judgment, for a contempt effected by disobedience of a judgment decree or order. It reads: "To the judgment of a circuit court for a contempt of court other than for the nonperformance of, or disobedience to, a judgment, decree, or order, a writ of error shall lie from the supreme court of appeals." Code, chap. 160, § 4.

State, ex. rel. Fortney Lumber & Hardware Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. supra, recognizes an implied exception to this statute founded upon lack of jurisdiction in the circuit court, but the lack of jurisdiction constituting the ground of the exception, as defined in that case, pertains to the judgment or decree for enforcement of which the contempt proceeding is invoked. That decision necessarily denies to the statute in question a part of the force and effect literally imported by its terms. If an exception thereto can be validly founded upon lack of jurisdiction to pronounce the decree for enforcement of which contempt procedure is resorted to, it is difficult to see any reason why lack of jurisdiction in the process of enforcement would not constitute a sufficient basis for another or further exception. In the latter case, the lack of jurisdiction would be more clearly and directly involved than in the former. In neither is there any foundation for it in the terms of the statute. At the same time it must be remembered that a judgment or decree rendered without jurisdiction is a nullity, wherefore it may be said there is no judgment or decree in such case to be enforced. On the other hand, when the judgment or decree is not questioned and its binding force is beyond doubt, there is an order of the court which the party proceeded against is bound to respect and obey. Nevertheless, if there is no jurisdiction or power to enforce obedience by the means adopted, the party proceeded against is under no duty to obey in the particular manner in which the contempt proceeding endeavors to make him perform. Obviously, therefore, there is lack of power or jurisdiction of the court in either case; and if proper construction results in an implied exception to the operation of the statute in the one instance, it must necessarily do so in the other. Properly read, therefore, the statute withholds a writ of error to a judgment, for contempt consisting of non-performance of, or disobedience to, a judgment, decree, or order if the court rendering it had jurisdiction to pronounce it and has jurisdiction and power to enforce it by contempt procedure. All judgments, decrees, and orders are not enforceable in that way.

Appeal-judgment for contempt.

Every act of a court founded upon an erroneous interpretation of a statute or a misconception of the common law, and variant therefrom, is not void for want of jurisdiction. It is familiar law that a court has as much power to decide erroneously as it has to decide correctly. Mere errors in decisions upon questions of law are not acts in excess of jurisdiction. In some instances, however, they are. In the determination of the meaning of laws pertaining to their own power and jurisdiction, courts decide and act at their peril. On the other hand, in administering law applicable to the rights of the litigating parties, their acts founded upon erroneous interpretations of laws are ordinarily mere errors of judgment. These propositions are so self-evident and so thoroughly attested by the decisions of this and other courts that authority for them need not be cited.

Courts derive their authority and powers from the Constitution and laws of the state, and unless the power or authority of a court to perform a contemplated act is found therein, the act, if done, is coram non iudice. 7 R. C. L. p. 1030; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Pinnacle Coal Co. 44 W. Va. 574, 41 L. R. A. 414, 30 S. E. 196. In the absence of a statutory modification or abrogation, courts of general jurisdiction have all the powers conferred upon them by the common law, but such remedies and powers as the Constitution or statutes have abrogated, they do not possess. Obviously, therefore, any effort on the part of a court to employ an abrogated remedy formerly permitted to it by the common law or general equity jurisprudence would be an act in excess of its jurisdiction.

Equity—
abrogation of
remedy.

The statute invoked in resistance of the contempt procedure manifestly deals with remedies as well as rights, and impliedly forbids enforcement of a decree or order in chancery for the payment of money otherwise than by execution. It makes the decree the equal of a judgment, and declares it shall be embraced by the word "judgment" whenever it is used in certain chapters. It also makes the person entitled to any decree or order requiring the payment of money a judgment creditor, even though the money may be required to be paid into a court, or a bank, or other place of deposit. In all such cases, it authorizes an execution on the decree or order. Furthermore, the decree becomes a lien upon the real estate of the party against whom it is pronounced. Having done all this, it then declares that the party in whose favor it is may proceed to carry into execution a decree or order in chancery other than for the payment of money, as he might have done before the passage of the act. This necessarily implies that he cannot so enforce a decree for the payment of money. Manifestly, therefore, power to enforce such a decree by process of contempt has been <sup>Contempt—denial of jurisdiction to punish.</sup> abrogated and no longer exists. When such remedy is available, it is the court's remedy or process. Denial thereof to a party necessarily carries denial of power in the court to award it. Jurisdiction formerly existing is, to that extent, abrogated or withdrawn by the statute.

An overwhelming weight of authority, however, makes a decree for alimony more than a mere decree for the payment of money. "It has frequently been insisted that a decree for alimony is in fact a debt, and therefore payment should not be enforced by attachment for contempt where the Constitution prohibits imprisonment for debt. But it is uniformly held, and such is the true doctrine, that the decree for alimony is an order of the court to the husband compelling him to support his wife by paying certain sums, and thus perform a public as well as a marital duty. Such decree is something more than an ordinary debt or judgment for money. It is a personal order to the husband, similar to an order of the court to one of its officers or to an attorney. The imprisonment is not alone to enforce the payment of money, but to punish the disobedience of a party; and the order is not, therefore, a debt, within the meaning of the Constitution." Nelson, Div. & Sep. § 939. "Objection has been raised to the enforcement of a judgment or decree for alimony by contempt proceedings, on the ground that alimony is a debt within the meaning of statutes or constitutions which prohibit imprisonment for debt. By the great weight of authority, however, alimony is not considered a debt within such meaning." 3 Enc. L. & P. 181. "It is sometimes held that where the statute provides for execution and other processes for the collection of alimony, that imprisonment for contempt cannot be resorted to as an additional remedy. But the correct interpretation is that the statute conferring additional remedies did not deprive the courts of their inherent power to enforce such order." Nelson, Div. & Sep. § 939. These quotations from textbooks are sustained by abundant authority. In some of the states having statutes similar to ours, enforcement by attachment for contempt is limited to cases in which the decree cannot be otherwise enforced. In Illinois, it is not permitted if payment is secured. Andrews v. Andrews, 69 Ill. 609. In New York, the moving party is required to show not only that the husband has refused to comply with the order, but also that the payment cannot be enforced by execution or sequestration, or a resort to the securities. Sandford v. Sandford, 44 Hun, 563; Isaacs v. Isaacs, 61 How. Pr. 369; Whitney v. Whitney, 26 Jones & S. 335, 11 N. Y. Supp. 583; Mahon v. Mahon, 18 Jones & S. 92. In Iowa, Michigan, and Nebraska, the courts seem to hold that under no circumstances can a decree for alimony be enforced by process of contempt. Baily v. Baily, 69 Iowa, 77, 28 N. W. 443; Segear v. Segear, 23 Neb. 306, 36 N. W. 536; Carnahan v. Carnahan, 143 Mich. 390, 114 Am. St. Rep. 660, 107 N. W. 73, 8 Ann. Cas. 53.

Under our statutes, a decree for alimony is more than a mere decree for money. Upon decreeing the dissolution of a marriage or a divorce of either class, the court may make such further decree as it shall deem expedient, concerning the estate and maintenance of the parties, or either of them. Code, chap. 64, § 11 (§ 3646). The relation assumed or recognized by this statute, as constituting the basis of the right to be vindicated by the decree, is not that of debtor and creditor. It is a duty of maintenance imposed by the marital relation, from which the divorce does not necessarily exonerate the parties. The statute empowers the court decreeing the divorce to enforce performance of the duty of maintenance after the separation or severance of the marriage relation. Authority is conferred upon the court, not merely to decree money as alimony, but to make any decree it may deem expedient concerning maintenance. Enforcement of the lien of the decree may involve ruinous delay, and execution may be unavailing, and yet the delinquent party may have it in his power easily to raise and pay the money. Power to make such decree as the court deems expedient concerning maintenance obviously goes beyond the mere award of money as a debt and reaches the case supposed. The decree is for maintenance, not mere money. The money decree is a means to an end; the real purpose of the decree, maintenance. Its pecuniary quality makes it a lien and the basis of an execution, as this court has held, but these characteristics do not necessarily imply absence of others. It may consistently be a decree for money, and, in addition thereto, a decree for support, not fully effectuated by execution and enforcement of the lien on real estate.

In view of this conclusion, warranted by the weight of judicial opinion and the liberal terms of the Divorce Statute, there

Judgment—
alimony—
enforcement.

is no lack of jurisdiction, and hence no right of review by writ of error. If the decree goes beyond the ability of the plaintiff in contempt.

Appeal—

error, in its requirements, an application to the court for relief by a modification of its terms and provisions would have forestalled and prevented the procedure for contempt. Error in the court's action upon that application could have been corrected on an appeal. When the court has jurisdiction in all respects, the party subject to a decree enforceable by attachment for contempt must obey the decree or get rid of it. The statute gives him no right to withhold performance by disobedience and a writ of error to the judgment for contempt. The former is a contempt of the court and the statute denies him the latter. State ex rel. Fortney Lumber & Hardware Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. cited supra.

A careful reading of the opinion in Cariens v. Cariens, 50 W. Va. 113, 55 L.R.A. 930, 40 S. E. 335, fails to disclose an assertion of lack of power in the trial court to modify a decree for alimony, entered contemporaneously with a decree of divorce, upon facts subsequently arising. Such a decree is declared to be conclusive upon the parties as to all facts existing at its date, but power in the court to discharge the husband from payment, for good cause subsequently accruing, is affirmed in unequivocal terms. As to the power of the court respecting alimony, the statute deals with both classes of divorce in exactly the same terms, wherefore the legislature cannot be deemed to have intended to withhold or deny right to modify the decree in one class any more than in the other. Moreover, in Henrie v. Henrie, 71 W. Va. 131, 76 S. E. 837, a majority of this court expressed the opinion that the statute does not deny such power.

Entry of the order complained of in the chancery order book, and under the style of the divorce suit, is relied upon as a fatal and jurisdictional departure in the proceeding. Our decisions uniformly say every contempt proceeding is criminal in its nature, and, after issuance of the rule, should be conducted in the name of the state and recorded in the law order book. State v. Fredlock, 52 W. Va. 232, 94 Am. St. Rep. 932, 43 S. E. 153; State v. Cunningham, 33 W. Va. 607, 11 S. E. 76; State ex rel. Pelton v. Irwin, 30 W. Va. 404, 4 S. E. 413; Ruhl v. Ruhl, 24 W. Va. 279; Craig v. Mc-

Culloch, 20 W. Va. 148; State ex rel. Mason v. Harper's Ferry Bridge Co. 16 W. Va. 864. In each of these cases, except Ruhl v. Ruhl, the alleged contempt consisted of the doing of a forbidden act, and the object of the proceeding was punishment. The contempts were primarily criminal, rather than civil, in their natures, and the purpose of the procedure was not mere enforcement of performance of an affirmative act or duty required by a decree. When the disobedience consists of failure to perform a decree in favor of the opposite party, the contempt is civil in its main features, though there is an incidental element of criminality in it. In Ruhl v. Ruhl, the defendant was proceeded against for failure to obey a decree for payment of money, but the decree was void for lack of jurisdiction in the court in which it was entered. The judgment of contempt was entered in the chancery order book, under the style of the main cause, and this court declared the contempt proceeding erroneous, not void, for that reason, but void and without foundation in law, because the decree violated was void. Point 3 of the syllabus in State ex rel. Pelton v. Irwin, 30 W. Va. 404, 4 S. E. 413, seems to say a proceeding so entered is void for want of jurisdiction in the chancery court, and the opinion, at page 420, declares it irregular, and says the law side of the court only has jurisdiction. The alleged contempt in that case was primarily criminal, and the proceeding contemplated punishment only. In that decision the court, going far beyond the case presented by the record, asserted that all contempt proceedings must be conducted on the law side of the court, notwithstanding their differences in character and purpose. Under practically all of the earlier decisions here referred to lies the fallacious assumption of a right of review for errors in the sentence or order in all cases of contempt. From the lack of provision for review otherwise than by writ of error, the court inferred legislative intent to make all contempts criminal, to the end that they may be so reviewed. This process of interpretation completely overlooked plainly expressed legislative purpose not to allow review at all for mere error in certain classes of cases, namely, nonperformance of, or disobedience to, a judgment, decree, or order. Barnes's Code 1918, chap. 160, § 4. But for the statute, there would be no right of appeal in any contempt case. There was none at common law. 6 R. C. L. p. 538; Wells v. Com. 21 Gratt. 500. In these cases the statute does not give it. Plainly, therefore, it does not exist. It exists in other cases because the statute gives it. This oversight and erroneous assumption induced the adoption of a highly confused, illogical, and unnecessarily cumbersome procedure. As the construction has no foundation in law, fact, or reason, it must be rejected, and, in consequence of its rejection, the practice formerly existing, and recognizing the difference between civil and criminal contempts, is reinstated. Under it a court of equity could, by an order entered in its own records

Judgment—
coercing performance—commitment.

under the style of the pending cause, commit a recalcitrant party to coerce him into the performance of a duty required of him by its decree in favor of the opposite party. Purcell v. Purcell, 4 Hen. & M. 507. Such an order is almost devoid of the element of criminality and almost wholly remedial. Without power and authority to make it, a court of equity would be unable in many instances to effectuate legal right and justice between the parties. To make such a proceeding purely criminal in legal contemplation, and limit the jurisdiction to the law courts, necessarily strips the courts of equity of power essential to the due and efficient exercise of their jurisdiction. An interpretation of a statute occasioning such results, and resting upon a mere unnecessary implication hardly more than a conjecture, is obviously unsound and indefensible. In so far as the decisions herein referred to deny to courts of equity jurisdiction over purely civil contempts, they are disapproved and overruled for the reasons here stated. And it follows from this conclusion that the decree complained of is neither void nor erroneous on account of the cognizance of the proceeding by the chancery court, its prosecution therein, and the entry of the decree in its records under the style of the divorce suit. It may be added that this procedure was impliedly recognized as valid in two cases recently decided by this court. Petrie v. Bufington, 79 W. Va. 113, 90 S. E. 557, and Ex parte Beavers, 80 W. Va. 34, 91 S. E. 1076.

The suggestion in argument that the imprisonment involved in the court's process of enforcement of obedience to its decree necessarily makes the proceeding criminal, and confers right of Contempt—punishment—
character. trial by jury, wherefore it is one for the cognizance of a court of law only, is altogether untenable. Instancing the case of a refusal to pay alimony and imprisonment to coerce such payment, the Supreme Court of the United States, in Gompers v. Buck's Stove & Range Co. 221 U. S. 418, 55 L. ed. 797, 34 L. R. A. (N.S.) 874, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 492, speaking through Mr. Justice Lamar, said: "Imprisonment in such cases is not inflicted as a punishment, but is intended to be remedial by coercing the defendant to do what he had refused to do. The decree in such cases is that the defendant stand committed unless and until he performs the affirmative act required by the court's order."

It is unnecessary and would be improper here to attempt to indicate the class of cases in which the procedure should be on the law side of the court, or to say whether procedure in the wrong forum would be fatal to the judgment of contempt or committal for a civil contempt. Such a departure might be a mere error, as to which there is no right to relief. McGrew v. Maxwell, 80 W. Va. 718, 94 S. E. 395.

For the reasons stated, the writ of error will be dismissed as having been improvidently awarded.

ANNOTATION.

Statute expressly or impliedly denying power to enforce by process of contempt, order, judgment, or decree, for money, as applicable to order or decree for alimony.

- I. Introduction, 1156.
- II. Illinois, 1156.
- III. Michigan, 1157.
- IV. Missouri, 1157.
- V. Nebraska, 1159.
- VI. New Jersey, 1159.
- VII. New York, 1160.
- VIII. West Virginia, 1160.
- IX. Wisconsin, 1160.

I. Introduction.

In its origin, the jurisdiction of courts of chancery was exercised exclusively over the person of the defendant. The decrees of the court did not have the dignity of a judgment at law, and common-law process was not available for the enforcement of them. The payment of money could be enforced only by process of contempt. By statute in the United States, however, decrees in equity have been given the same force as judgments at law, and execution may issue thereon. See 10 R. C. L. 565. The statutes whereby such enforcement of decrees is permitted ordinarily prohibit, either expressly or impliedly, the enforcement by contempt proceedings of a decree or order in equity for the payment of money. From that situation arises the specific question with which this annotation is concerned, viz., whether that prohibition extends to orders or decrees for the payment of alimony. Whether alimony is a debt within a constitutional prohibition of imprisonment for debt is not discussed.

II. Illinois.

In Illinois, it has been held that a statute making a decree for money a lien on land to the same extent as a judgment at law does not affect the power of the court to punish, as for contempt, a husband's contumacious refusal to pay alimony. Wightman v.

Wightman (1867) 45 Ill. 167. That case was decided under the Chancery Code of 1845. The complainant was imprisoned for failing to make payments under a decree for alimony. A statute provided that "a decree for money shall be a lien on the lands and tenements of the party against whom it is entered, to the same extent, and under the same limitations, as a judgment at law." By another statute, the issuance of an execution was permitted, in certain cases, on a final decree, and the court was expressly empowered, if necessary, to "direct an attachment to be issued against the party disobeying such decree, and fine or imprison him, or both, in the discretion of the court," and also to direct a sequestration for his disobedience. It was also provided that the payment of alimony and maintenance could be enforced in any other manner consistent with the rules and practice of the court. Holding that the statute making the decree for alimony a lien on the lands of the defendant did not affect the power of the court to enforce the decree by process of contempt, the court said: "The nonperformance of the decree being adjudged a contempt, the power to attach for the contempt cannot be questioned. The order adjudging the nonperformance of the decree a contempt being a lawful order, the court was allowed the usual means to enforce the order, by issuing an attachment therefor, and committing him, on failure to purge himself of the contempt. . . . We have no doubt a court of chancery has power, in addition to making a decree for alimony a lien on the lands of a defendant, which it would be without a decree to that effect, to enforce the decree by attachment for contempt, and, if the defendant remains contumacious, defying the court, may also sequester his estate, real and personal, as a means of enforcing performance of the decree."

In Andrews v. Andrews (1873) 69 Ill. 609, the court, making reference to the statute set out in Wightman v. Wightman, supra, said: "We think there can be no doubt of the power of the court to award an attachment for noncompliance, with an order for the payment of alimony."

The later case of O'Callaghan v. O'Callaghan (1873) 69 Ill. 552, was decided under the Chancery Code of 1871, which provided that "when any bill is taken for confessed, or upon hearing, the court may make such decree thereon as may be just, and may enforce such decree, either by sequestration of real and personal estate, by attachment against the person, by fine or imprisonment, or both, or by ordering the demand of the complainant to be paid out of the effects of the estate sequestered, or which are included in such decree; and by the exercise of such other powers as pertain to a court of chancery, and which may be necessary for the attainment of justice." Denying the contention that a proceeding to enforce the payment of a decree for alimony should have been against the defendant's property, since the decree was made a lien thereon, and not against his person, the court said: "The sequestration of property was not intended to supersede proceedings by contempt, but on the contrary it was in aid of it, and resorted to either where the contemnor could not be arrested upon process, or where, having been arrested, he remained in prison, without paying obedience to the court. . . . It is, therefore, . . . manifest that the mere fact that the decree is, in this case, made a lien upon appellant's property, is not a sufficient reason why the attachment should not issue against him, either by the old chancery practice, or under the provisions of our statute. The object of this attachment is merely to bring the appellant before the court, to show cause why he should not be adjudged guilty, and punished for contempt in refusing to obey its order. . . . We are of the opinion, however, that, when brought before the court on attachment, it would be sufficient to entitle the party to be discharged, to show that his disobedience had not been wilful, but was solely on account of his pecuniary inability, or some other misfortune over which he had no control. The court is empowered to punish wilful obstinacy, in such cases, by imprisonment, but we think the spirit of our Constitution forbids that the pecuniary inability of the party, not resulting from his fraudulent conduct to produce that condition, cannot be punished as a contempt by imprisonment."

III. Michigan.

In Michigan, under statutes permitting the enforcement of money decrees by attachment, "where by law execution cannot be awarded for the collection of such sum" (Comp. Laws, § 5689), and empowering the court to enforce the "performance of any decree, or obedience there by execution" (§ 5689), it has been held that, where the court ordered the defendant in a divorce suit to make certain payments for expenses of litigation and for temporary support, and he failed to do so, since an execution would not issue to enforce the order, process of attachment would lie. Haines v. Haines (1876) 35 Mich. 138, wherein the court said: "We have no difficulty in holding that the process of contempt to enforce civil remedies is one of those extreme resorts which cannot be justified if there is any other adequate remedy. The statutes have done away with the barbarous rules which made process of contempt the usual remedy for the enforcement of equitable rights. . . . [But] the nature and purpose of allowances to carry on litigation would not allow them to depend for enforcement on executions. Unless they can be enforced in some other way, they may be practically defeated."

IV. Missouri.

In Missouri, the rule is well settled that an order for the payment of alimony is merely one for the payment of money, collectable on execution, but not by a process of contempt. Coughlin v. Ehlert (1866) 39 Mo. 285; Re Kinsolving (1909) 135 Mo. App. 631, 116 S. W. 1068.

The case of Coughlin v. Ehlert, supra, was decided under the General Statutes of 1865 (chap. 114, § 6), which provided that, when a person neglected or refused to pay alimony as adjudged, the court should have the power "to award execution for the collection thereof, or to enforce the performance of the judgment or order by sequestration of property, or by such other lawful ways and means as is according to the practice of the court." The petitioner was imprisoned for the failure to pay a decree for alimony. In ordering his release the court said: "The party here was under no other contempt than that of refusing to pay the money which the court had ordered to be paid as alimony. As process against the body for the nonpayment of a debt cannot now be issued, there would seem to be no means of putting a party in contempt for disobeying orders or decrees for the mere payment of money. . . . An order for the payment of alimony is simply an order for the payment of money. Imprisonment for debt is abolished in this state . . . [and since] this was an imprisonment for debt only, . . . the commitment was without authority of law."

And in the case of McMakin v. McMakin (1896) 68 Mo. App. 57, the Coughlin Case, supra, was accepted as an authoritative determination that a judgment or decree for alimony is one for money, and not enforceable by process of contempt.

In the case of Re Kinsolving (1909) 135 Mo. App. 631, 116 S. W. 1068, the petitioner was imprisoned for his failure to pay a decree for alimony. His release was sought on the ground that an order for the payment of alimony was an order for the payment of money in discharge of a debt, and could not be enforced by process of contempt. The case arose under the Revised Statutes of 1899, which re-enacted the Act of 1865, set out supra, and added two sections concerning the payment of alimony. Section 2029 of the later Code gave a general lien on the realty of the party against whom the decree was rendered, "as in the case of other judgments," but provided that when alimony was decreed from year to year, the decree "shall not be a lien on the realty, as aforesaid, but an execution in the hands of a proper officer, issued for the purpose of enforcing such decree, shall constitute a lien on the real and personal property of the defendant in such execution, so long as the same shall lawfully remain in the possession of such officer unsatisfied." It was further provided in that section as follows: "In lieu of the lien of such decree for alimony from year to year, it is hereby provided that the party against whom such decree may be rendered shall be required to give security ample and sufficient for such alimony; but where default has been made in giving such security, the decree for alimony from year to year shall be a lien as in case of general judgments." Another section (4685) provided as follows: "No person shall be arrested, held to bail, or imprisoned, on any mesne process or execution founded upon any civil action whatsoever." An act of 1903 (Sees. Acts 1903, p. 240) added a new section (4827a) which provided that no property should be exempt from execution or garnishment or a decree of alimony. Ordering the release of the petitioner, the court said: "Consideration of these provisions leads us to the conclusion that, as regarded by our law-makers, a decree for alimony and maintenance, when made, is a judgment or decree for a debt—the amount fixed becomes a debt; it is a lien, as other judgments for debts are; it is collectable by execution; no property is exempt from levy under an execution to enforce it; and, under § 4685 of the Revised Statutes, to say nothing of § 16 of article 2 of our Constitution, there can be no imprisonment to enforce its payment."

But the conclusion reached in Missouri that a decree for the payment of alimony is but an order for the payment of money, and not punishable by process of contempt, does not mean that a party may not be put in contempt for disobeying a decree for the performance of acts which are within his power, and which the court may properly order to be done. Coughlin v. Ehler, supra, wherein it was said: "If it were shown, for instance, that the party had in his possession a certain specific sum of money, or other things, which he refused to deliver up under the order of the court for any purpose, it may very well be that his disobedience would be a contempt for which he might lawfully be imprisoned. But the order must be for the performance of some specific act other than the mere payment of money. For such a contempt as this would suppose, the statute has made a special provision to the effect that 'where a judgment required the performance of any other act than the payment of money,' and the party neglects or refuses obedience, 'he may be punished by the court as for a contempt, by fine or imprisonment, or both, or, if necessary, by sequestration of property.'"

V. Nebraska.

In Nebraska, an order for the payment of alimony is, by statute, of the same character as a judgment at law, and its enforcement and collection are limited to the same means. Segear v. Segear (1888) 28 Neb. 306, 36 N. W. 536; Leeder v. State (1898) 55 Neb. 133, 75 N. W. 541.

The statute (Neb. Comp. Stat. chap. 25, § 4a, title, Divorces and Alimony), provides as follows: "All judgments and orders for payment of alimony or of maintenance in actions of divorce or maintenance shall be liens upon property in like manner as in other actions, and may in the same manner be enforced and collected by execution and proceedings in aid thereof, or other action or process as other judgments."

In Segear v. Segear, supra, wherein it appeared that the defendant was committed to jail for his failure to pay alimony, the court said: "The provisions of this section establish the character of an order for the payment of alimony with that of a judgment at law, and limit the enforcement and collection to the same means. It is not in the nature of tort, and, in the absence of fraud by the defendant, he could not be subjected to a more summary method of collection than that of levy and sale of property as upon executions at law."

And in Leeder v. State, supra, the court, ordering the release of a defendant committed to jail for his failure to pay alimony, said: "It is true the order of commitment recites that he agreed to bring into court by a specified time, to apply on the decree for alimony, the sum of $100, and that he failed to keep his promise in that regard; but this constituted neither an actual nor constructive contempt of court. The defendant could no more be adjudged guilty of contempt, and fined and imprisoned for failing to pay the $100, than he could be punished as for contempt for a refusal to pay his grocery bill, or to pay an ordinary judgment. The proceedings under review were without jurisdiction and void, and the order and sentence are reversed and the proceedings dismissed."

VI. New Jersey.

While not involving alimony in the strict sense, the point under discussion was adjudicated in Aspinwall v. Aspinwall (1895) 53 N. J. Eq. 684, 38 Atl. 470, in regard to a separation agreement, the performance of which was decreed by the court. The respondent having failed to pay to the appellant the money decreed to be due under the articles of separation, application was made for an attachment for contempt to compel the performance of the decree. In New Jersey, a statutory provision empowered the enforcement of decrees for money by the sequestration of the estate of the defendant, and by the issuance of writs of fi. fa. and ca. sa. against him, and gave the decrees which directed the payment of a sum of money by one person to another the force, operation, and effect of judgments at law. Denying the enforcement of the decree by contempt proceedings, the court said: "In my opinion, the effect of this legislation was to do away with the process of contempt as a method of enforcing decrees for the payment of moneys due upon contracts between the parties, in cases where no special equities exist, and to substitute therefor sequestration of the defendant's estate, the writ of fieri facias against his real and personal property, and, in cases of fraud, the writ of capias against his person."

In the subsequent case of Flower v. Flower (1901) — N. J. Eq. —, 49 Atl. 158, the court, after citing the Aspinwall Case, supra, refused an attachment for contempt, it appearing that the complainant had been awarded an execution for unpaid alimony, which remained unexhausted.

VII. New York.

The early New York case of Lansing v. Lansing (1871) 4 Lans. 377, reversing (1871) 41 How. Pr. 248, held that a final judgment for alimony, being a judgment for money and enforceable by execution, could not be enforced by process of contempt. This doctrine found support in the later cases of Howe v. Howe (1878) 5 N. Y. Week. Dig. 460, and Gane v. Gane (1879) 13 Jones & S. 355, motion for reargument denied in (1880) 14 Jones & S. 218. The statute under consideration in those cases empowered courts of record to fine or imprison parties for the nonpayment of any sum of money ordered by the court, in cases where, by law, execution was unavailable for the collection of such sum.

Doubt was first cast on the correctness of the doctrine laid down in the foregoing cases by Park v. Park (1879) 18 Hun, 466, affirmed in (1880) 80 N. Y. 156, wherein the court said: "In regard to the collection of final alimony it was decided in Lansing v. Lansing (1871) 4 Lans. 377, that it was to be collected by execution. It is not explained, however, in that case, how a judgment for final alimony is to be docketed—whether or not a new docket is to be made every time the annual or semiannual alimony becomes payable. And as a judgment is made a lien only for ten years from the filing of the roll and docketing, it is not clear how, after ten years from the judgment, the amounts of alimony are to be docketed so as to be lien on land. And docketing is necessary before the issue of execution. Code, §§ 287, 282. Besides, after the lapse of five years from the entry of judgment, execution is to issue only by leave of the court, granted on notice. §§ 283, 284." And the doctrine was seriously questioned, by way of dictum, in Strobridge v. Strobridge (1880) 21 Hun, 288, wherein it was said: "The extending of the use of the writ of execution to courts of equity did not deprive them of any remedy previously employed for the enforcement of their decrees."

Section 1773 of the Code of Civil Procedure now expressly authorizes attachment for contempt where alimony remains unpaid.

VIII. West Virginia.

The reported case (SMITH v. SMITH, ante, 1149) holds that the West Virginia statute, which impliedly denies the power to enforce a decree for the payment of money by process of contempt, is not applicable to a decree for alimony.

IX. Wisconsin.

In the Wisconsin case of Staples v. Staples (1894) 87 Wis. 592, 24 L.R.A. 433, 58 N. W. 1036, it was contended that, since under one statute a judgment for alimony could be enforced by execution, and under another statute contempt proceedings for the nonpayment of money were authorized only where an execution could not be awarded, a judgment for alimony, being capable of enforcement by execution, was unenforceable by process of contempt. Affirming the action of the lower court in committing the defendant for contempt, the court said: "Were the judgment here a judgment for a gross sum, payable at once, it might undoubtedly be docketed as a money judgment, and execution might issue to enforce it. . . . In that case the argument would be strong that contempt proceedings could not be resorted to, and the position would not be without authority. . . . But, conceding the correctness of the doctrine, it cannot apply to the present case. Execution can be issued only on a judgment which has been docketed. Rev. Code, §§ 2968, 2969. It does not appear in the present case that any judgment has been docketed for any of the instalments of alimony. In fact, there seems to be no provision of law for such docketing. . . . And docketing is necessary before the issue of execution. . . . Our conclusion is that contempt proceedings will lie to compel payment of instalments of alimony ordered to be paid in the future by a final judgment of divorce." A. S. M.

SAMUEL KUMIN

v.

IDA S. FINE et al.

SAME

v.

MAURICE FINE et al.

Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court — January 2, 1918.

(229 Mass. 75, 118 N. E. 187.)

Evidence — unanswered letter — new transaction.

1. An unanswered letter written by the holder of a note to the indorser, stating that holder would look to indorser for payment, is not admissible in an action on renewal notes executed after receipt of the letter.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1163.]

— evidence of facts stated.

2. The addressee is ordinarily not required to reply to a letter, and his failure to do so is no evidence of the facts therein stated.

[See 10 R. C. L. 1150.]

— admissions.

3. Unanswered letters from the holder of a note to indorser, claiming liability on the part of the indorser, not part of a mutual correspondence between the parties, or in reply to any communication by the indorser, and not referred to in any subsequent conversation between the parties, are not admissible as admissions in an action against the indorser on the note.

[See 10 R. C. L. 1150.]

Appeal — exclusion of immaterial evidence.

4. Exclusion of immaterial evidence is not reversible error.

EXCEPTIONS by plaintiff to rulings of the Superior Court for Worcester County (White, J.) made during the trial of consolidated actions brought to recover the amount of two promissory notes given by defendant Kaplan to plaintiff, and indorsed by the other defendants, which resulted in judgments for defendants Fine. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. George A. Drury, Fred A. Walker, and J. Fred Humes for plaintiff.

Messrs. Thomas H. Sullivan and George A. Gaskill, for defendants Fine:

The four letters sent to defendant Fine, to which he made no reply, by plaintiff, and offered in evidence, were inadmissible.

Fearing v. Kimball, 4 Allen, 126, 81 Am. Dec. 690; 2 Wigmore, Ev. § 1073

(3), p. 1263; 1 Greenl. Ev. 15th ed. § 198, p. 274; 16 Cyc. 960, note 59; Buffum v. York Mfg. Co. 175 Mass. 474, 56 N. E. 599; Thomas v. Wells, 140 Mass. 517, 5 N. E. 435; Smith v. Abbott, 221 Mass. 331, 109 N. E. 190; Com. v. Eastman, 1 Cush. 215; Percy v. Bibber, 134 Mass. 404; Callahan v. Goldman, 216 Mass. 287, 103 N. E. 687; Huntress v. Hanley, 195 Mass. 236, 80 N. E. 946; Pye v. Perry, 217 Mass. 68, 104 N. E. 460; Com. v. Kenney, 12 Met. 287, 46 Am. Dec. 672.

Crosby, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These are two actions of contract, tried together, to recover the amount of two promissory notes given by the defendant, Barnard Kaplan, to the plaintiff, and indorsed by the other defendants. The notes were given in renewal of previous notes given by the defendants to the plaintiff.

The defendants Fine contended that when the original notes were given they indorsed them for the accommodation of the plaintiff, and that, in consideration of such indorsements of the notes and of the renewals, the plaintiff agreed that he would hold them harmless. The jury, in answer to a special question submitted to them, found that the notes declared on were signed by the defendants Fine at the request and for the accommodation of the plaintiff.

The plaintiff offered in evidence four letters written by him to the defendant Maurice Fine. They were excluded by the presiding judge, subject to the plaintiff's exception. It appeared that notes in renewal of previous notes indorsed by the defendants Fine were given to the plaintiff after the receipt of all the letters. It was agreed that no reply was made to any of the letters, each of which in substance stated that the plaintiff would look to the defendant Maurice Fine for payment of the note therein referred to, if it was not paid by Kaplan, the maker. These letters, written before the unanswered letter—new transaction.

Evidence—

notes declared on were indorsed by the defendants Fine, plainly were inadmissible, although we do not mean to intimate that they would have been competent if written afterwards.

The rule is well established that a person to whom a letter is addressed ordinarily is not required to make any reply; and failure to answer it is no evidence of the truth of the facts therein stated, because such evidence would be in violation of the rule that a party cannot make evidence for himself by his own declarations. It was held in Wiedemann v. Walpole [1891] 2 Q. B. 534, 60 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 762, 40 Week. Rep. 114, that in an action for breach of promise of marriage the mere fact that the defendant did not answer letters written to him by the plaintiff, in which she stated that he had promised to marry her, was not corroborative of the plaintiff's testimony in support of such promise.

In the case at bar, the letters offered in evidence were not a part of mutual correspondence between the parties relating to the notes, and were —admissions.

not in reply to any communications written by the defendant Maurice Fine; nor does it appear that the letters or their contents were ever referred to in any subsequent conversations between the parties. That such evidence is inadmissible has often been held by this court. Smith v. Abbott, 221 Mass. 326, 331, 109 N. E. 190; Pye v. Perry, 217 Mass. 68, 104 N. E. 460; Callahan v. Goldman, 216 Mass. 234, 103 N. E. 687; Percy v. Bibber, 134 Mass. 404; Fearing v. Kimball, 4 Allen, 125, 81 Am. Dec. 690.

The plaintiff saved eleven exceptions to the exclusion of questions put to the defendant Maurice Fine in cross-examination, the first three of which are waived; we have examined the others in connection with all the evidence printed in the record—to consider them separately would serve no useful purpose—and we are satisfied that the questions called for evidence which would not have assisted the jury in deciding whether the defendants Fine were or were not accommodation indorsers, which was the only question in the case. The evidence therefore was exclusion of immaterial

Appeal—
evidence.

immaterial, and besides would have had a tendency to raise collateral issues; it was excluded rightly.

Let the entry be, exceptions overruled.

Petition for rehearing denied.

—evidence of facts stated.

ANNOTATION.

Admissibility in favor of writer of unanswered letter not part of mutual correspondence.

- I. Generally, 1163.
- II. Letter part of res gestæ, 1166.
- III. Letter relating to existing contract, 1166.
- IV. Letter containing demand or notice, 1168.

I. Generally.

As a broad general rule, subject to several exceptions hereinafter considered, it seems that a letter which is not a part of a mutual correspondence, and to which no answer is made, is not ordinarily admissible in favor of the writer as evidence of the statements therein contained, the failure to reply not being considered an implied admission by the addressee of the truth of the statements made.

Alabama.—H. Curjel & Co. v. Hallett Mfg. Co. (1917) 198 Ala. 609, 78 So. 988.

Louisiana. — Porter v. Ledoux (1851) 6 La. Ann. 377.

Maryland.—Biggs v. Stueler (1901) 98 Md. 100, 48 Atl. 727.

Massachusetts.—Robinson v. Fitchburg & W. R. Co. (1865) 7 Gray, 92.

Michigan. — State Bank v. McCabe (1904) 185 Mich. 479, 98 N. W. 20.

Nebraska.—Kane v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (1911) 90 Neb. 112, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1145, 132 N. W. 920, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 764.

New Jersey.—State, Hand, Prosecutor v. Howell (1897) 61 N. J. L. 142, 38 Atl. 748.

New York.—Levison v. Seybold Mach. Co. (1898) 22 Misc. 327, 49 N. Y. Supp. 148; La Bau v. Vanderbilt (1879) 3 Redf. 399; Learned v. Tilletson (1884) 97 N. Y. 1, 49 Am. Rep. 508.

England.—Fairlie v. Denton (1828) 3 Car. & P. 103; Draper v. Crofts (1846) 15 Mees. & W. 166, 158 Eng. Reprint, 807, 15 L. J. Exch. N. S. 92.

The reason for this view was well stated, by way of dictum, in Fenno v. Weston (1858) 31 Vt. 345, wherein it was said: "Where there has been a correspondence between parties in regard to some subject-matter, and one of the parties writes a letter to the other making statements in regard to such subject-matter, of which the latter has knowledge, and which he would naturally deny if not true, and he wholly omits to answer such letter, such silence is admissible as evidence tending to show the statements to be true. Still all such evidence is of a lighter character than silence when the same facts are directly stated to the party. Men use the tongue much more readily than the pen. Almost all men will reply to and deny or correct a false statement verbally made to them. It is done on the spot and from the first impulse. But when a letter is received making the same statement, the feeling which readily prompts the verbal denial not infrequently cools before the time and opportunity arrive for writing a letter. Other matters intervene. A want of facility in writing, or an aversion to correspondence, or habits of dilatoriness may be the real cause of the silence. As the omission to reply to letters may be explained by so many causes not applicable to silence when the parties are in personal conversation, we do not think the same weight should be attached to it as evidence. Where the party replies to the letter, but says nothing upon points which he would naturally contradict if untrue, as, in this case, in Weston's reply to Fenno's first letter, the silence furnishes stronger proof of acquiescence in the alleged facts than the subsequent entire omission to reply." Compare Hill v. Pratt (1856) 29 Vt. 119.

So, in Fairlie v. Denton (Eng.) supra, the court said: "What is said to a man before his face, he is some degree called on to contradict, if he do not acquiesce in it; but the not answering the letter is quite different; and it is too much to say that a man, by omitting to answer a letter, at all events admits the truth of the statements that letter contains. I am of opinion that this letter cannot be read. You may have that single line read, in which the plaintiff makes a demand of a certain amount, but not any other part which states any supposed fact or facts."

The plaintiff in Learned v. Tillotson (N. Y.) supra, demanded that the defendant account for all purchases and sales of certain stock under an alleged copartnership agreement. On the question whether a valid agreement existed between the parties the plaintiff sought to introduce in evidence an unanswered letter from him to the defendant, giving his version of the transaction from which he alleged the contract arose. The court held the letter not to be admissible, saying: "We think that a distinction exists between the effect to be given to oral declarations made by one party to another, which are in answer to or contradictory of some statement made by the other party, and a written statement in a letter written by such party to another. It may well be that, under most circumstances, what is said to a man to his face, which conveys the idea of an obligation upon his part to the person addressing him, or on whose behalf the statement is made, he is at least in some measure called upon to contradict or explain; but a failure to answer a letter is entirely different, and there is no rule of law which requires a person to enter into a correspondence with another in reference to a matter in dispute between them, or which holds that silence should be regarded as an admission against the party to whom the letter is addressed. Such a rule would enable one party to obtain an advantage over another, and has no sanction in the law."

In State, Hand, Prosecutor, v. Howell (N. J.) supra, it appeared that Hand, a sheriff, took in execution the goods of one Elliott, a tenant of Howell, sold the same and paid the proceeds to the plaintiffs. On the trial Howell testified that before the sale he posted a letter to the sheriff, containing notice of his claim for rent, and that the letter was returned to him unanswered. The admission of the contents of this letter was objected to. It was held that the objection was well taken, the court saying that it was no legal evidence, and had no relevancy in the case except to work an implied admission of notice of the claim on the part of the sheriff, and that the recipient was not called on to reply, or be considered as admitting what was written.

State Bank v. McCabe (1904) 135 Mich. 479, 98 N. W. 20, was a suit on a promissory note. Letters written by the cashier of the plaintiff bank, which were not answered by the defendant, were offered in evidence, in which the cashier referred to a promise claimed to have been made by the defendant. It was held that such letters were inadmissible, the court saying: "The authorities make a distinction between statements made orally and those contained in letters which are unanswered or not acted upon. In the former case, the party to whom statements hostile to his interest are made may, with much reason, be required to contradict, or be held to acquiesce in, their truth. In the latter case, he is not called upon to go to the trouble and expense of writing a denial, and silence cannot be construed into acquiescence in the truth of the written statements."

In Robinson v. Fitchburg & W. R. Co. (1856) 7 Gray (Mass.) 92, an action for personal injuries, the plaintiff sought to introduce in evidence a letter written by him to the defendant in which he claimed damages, which letter the defendant's directors voted to lay on the table. It was held that the letter was incompetent, not being connected with any act or omission of the defendant, and being, in effect, only a naked declaration.

In Kane v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (1911) 90 Neb. 112, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1145, 132 N. W. 920, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 764, an action to recover sick benefits by a member of a railroad relief department, the defendant attempted to introduce in evidence a letter written by its superintendent to the plaintiff, stating that the plaintiff had resigned from the defendant's service. The letter was held to be inadmissible.

In La Bau v. Vanderbilt (1879) 3 Redf. (N. Y.) 384, a will contest, a son of the testator, against whom it was claimed the testator had unjustly discriminated, offered in evidence a letter written by him to the testator, in which he told the testator that he had reformed his habits, to which the testator had not replied. The proponents objected, first, because the facts in the letter could not affect the issue; and, second, because the receipt of the letter by the deceased neither imposed any obligation on him to answer, nor justified any inference that he acquiesced in the statements contained therein. It was held that these objections were well taken.

It appeared in Biggs v. Stueler (1901) 93 Md. 100, 48 Atl. 727, that a tenant, before his term expired, left the house and sent the keys to the lessor, who wrote to the tenant, saying that he received the keys under protest and would hold him liable for any loss he should sustain in not being able to rent the premises, since their contract provided for thirty days' notice. The tenant did not answer the letter. The court held that the failure to answer the letter could not be construed as an admission of the claim therein made, and that the letter was inadmissible.

Similarly, it appeared in Draper v. Crofts (1846) 15 Mees. & W. 166, 153 Eng. Reprint, 807, 15 L. J. Exch. N. S. 92, that the plaintiff had let premises to the defendants for a certain term. One defendant, who alone actually occupied the premises, held over after the period for which they were leased. There was no evidence that the defendant Crofts, who did not occupy the premises, had knowledge of the holding over on the part of his cotenant. A letter written by the plaintiff to Crofts, which was not answered, demanding rent for the extra period, was sought to be introduced in evidence, showing Croft's knowledge. The defendant objected to the admission of the letter on the ground that it furnished no evidence against him. It was held that, since the premises were held without Croft's assent, he stood in the position of a stranger who was not bound to answer the letter, and that if not absolutely inadmissible it was of very little value.

So, it is held in the reported case (KUMIN v. FINE, ante, 1161) that an unanswered letter written to a person who was not legally liable on certain notes, stating that the writer would look to him for payment, was not admissible.

It has been said that a failure to answer a self-serving written communication is seldom to be regarded as an admission by the person addressed, but that exceptional circumstances may justify the court in submitting it to the jury with a proper caution. Morris v. Nerton (1896) 21 C. C. A. 553, 43 U. S. App. 789, 75 Fed. 912, wherein the court said: "The rule is well settled that conversations between parties to a controversy, in which one makes a statement of fact of which both have personal knowledge, and which naturally calls for a denial by the other if the statement is untrue, are competent against the silent party, as admissions, by acquiescence, of the truth of the statement. The weight of the admissions varies with the circumstances of the case and the strength of the probability that the statement, if untrue, would have evoked a denial, and is always for the jury, guided by a proper caution of the court as to the theory upon which such conversations are admitted. . . . With respect to written communications, however, the rule is different, because the failure of one receiving a letter to answer it may be attributed to many causes besides an acquiescence in the truth of what is written, and such a rule would furnish a dangerous weapon in the hand of an unscrupulous party to make evidence in his favor against a careless opponent. It cannot be said, however, to be an unvarying rule that an unanswered letter may not be evidence against the person addressed, because there are cases in which such letters have been admitted. Fenno v. Weston (1858) 31 Vt. 345; Gaskill v. Skene (1850) 14 Q. B. 668, 117 Eng. Reprint, 257, 19 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 275, 14 Jur. 597; Gore v. Hawsey (1862) 3 Fost. & F.

(Eng.) 509; Lucy v. Moufflet (1860) 5 Hurlst. & N. 229, 157 Eng. Reprint, 1168, 29 L. J. Exch. N. S. 110; Roe v. Day (1836) 7 Car. & P. (Eng.) 705. These authorities are explained—some of them—on the view that a demand by the plaintiff of the defendant was necessary to the plaintiff's case, and the letter unanswered was competent to show this, but it will be observed that even in those cases the jury was permitted to draw inferences from the failure to answer the demand. The better-supported rule, probably, is that unanswered letters are ordinarily not evidence against the person addressed, as admissions of the truth of statements contained therein."

But in St. Joseph Hydraulic Co. v. Globe Tissue Paper Co. (1901) 156 Ind. 665, 59 N. E. 995, an action to enforce a contract for a lease of water power, it was shown that the plaintiff wrote a letter to the defendant, inclosing a check for water rent and stating the terms on which the check was sent. The defendant kept the check, but made no answer to the letter. On the question whether the letter was admissible in favor of the plaintiff, to show the defendant's acceptance of the terms, the court held that the letter was competent, saying: "There are circumstances under which unanswered letters are competent evidence of admission, as when the party receiving the letters has in any way invited the same, or when there is any ground to infer that he acted on the letter by partially answering, or otherwise recognized the same, or when such letters, goods, or other articles are forwarded with bills, and received without return or protest."

II. Letter part of res gestæ.

Unanswered letters are admitted in favor of the writer when they form part of the res gestæ. Murray v. East End Improv. Co. (1901) 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1477, 60 S. W. 648; Thorndike v. Boston (1840) 1 Met. (Mass.) 242.

In Murray v. East End Improv. Co. (Ky.) supra, it appeared that a personal interview was had between the president of the defendant corporation and the president of a bank with respect to the making of a loan to the defendant. The bank thereafter refusing the loan, the defendant's president wrote to the plaintiff, who had brought the parties together, informing him of the fact. The plaintiff failed to answer the letter, and remained silent until after the death of the defendant's president, and then sought to obtain a commission. It was held that the letter was admissible as part of the res gestæ, showing acquiescence on the part of the plaintiff in the view that he was not entitled to a commission since the loan was not made. The court said that letters which pass between parties to a contract immediately before or after a transaction may be so connected with and related to it as to become part of the res gestæ.

Thorndike v. Boston (Mass.) supra, was an action to recover the amount of a poll tax and a personal property tax. In order to show that he was not a resident of Boston, the plaintiff offered in evidence declarations he had made on leaving the country, of his intention to remain in Edinburgh, also an unanswered letter from him to his agent, declaring his intention to remain in Edinburgh. The letter was offered on the ground that it was a declaration of the plaintiff, accompanied by his act of removal from Boston to Edinburgh, and therefore was good evidence of his intention, connected with his acts, and admissible as part of the res gestæ. The court held that the letter was admissible on this ground.

See also Learned v. Tillotson (1884) 97 N. Y. 1, 49 Am. Rep. 508, stated at length, supra, in subdivision I., wherein the letter in question was held not to be part of the res gestæ.

III. Letter relating to existing contract.

Unanswered letters containing self-serving declarations may be admitted when they relate to an existing contract between the parties, though they are not part of a mutual correspondence. Peninsular Naval Stores Co. v. Parrish (1918) 18 Ga. App. 779, 80 S. E. 28; Ross v. Reynolds (1914) 112 Me. 228, 91 Atl. 952; Keeling-Easter Co. v. R. B. Dunning & Co. (1915) 113 Me. 34, 92 Atl. 929; Dennis v. Water- ford Packing Co. (1915) 113 Me. 159, 93 Atl. 58, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 788; Sturtevant v. Wallack (1886) 141 Mass. 119, 4 N. E. 615; Gore v. Hawsey (1862) 3 Fost. & F. (Eng.) 509.

In Ross v. Reynolds (1914) 112 Me. 223, 91 Atl. 952, supra, an action for deceit in the sale of an automobile, the plaintiff was permitted to testify as to the contents of a letter which he wrote to the defendant. The letter was to the effect that the defendant had misrepresented the condition of the car, and that it was in bad condition, etc. It was held that this evidence was admissible, and, although in a sense self-serving, if the charge therein was untrue, it was calculated to evoke a reply, and since no reply was made, that fact might afford an inference that the charge was true.

To similar effect was Keeling-Easter Co. v. R. B. Dunning & Co. (1915) 113 Me. 34, 92 Atl. 929, an action of assumpsit to recover the price of 512 tons of crushed oyster shells. On receiving the shells the defendant, after discovering their inferior quality, wrote to the plaintiff, informing him that the shells were defective and not what had been contracted for. He wrote two letters to this effect, receiving no answer. The letters were admitted in evidence over the plaintiff's objection. The court said that letters written in the general course of business, and not specially to manufacture evidence, which by the character of their contents would call forth a reply denying the statements therein, were admissible, although they were self-serving and unanswered.

But in Levison v. Seybold Mach. Co. (1898) 22 Misc. 327, 49 N. Y. Supp. 148, an action to recover the price of a machine, the contract provided that the vendee might return the machine within thirty days if it proved to be unsatisfactory. The vendee sold it one week after purchasing it, and when sued for the price asserted that it was defective, putting in evidence an unanswered letter from him to the vendor in which he set out his version of the transaction. It was held that this method of making evidence, by letters of the person who offered them in evidence, was not permissible.

In Gore v. Hawsey (1862) 3 Fost. & F. (Eng.) 509, an action for money expended by the plaintiff for the defendant at his request, it appeared that the plaintiff, at the request of her seducer, the defendant, had taken lodgings and incurred expenses for her confinement during childbirth. She wrote to the defendant saying: "I have been and taking the room. I will tell you all about it this evening when I see you." The defendant did not reply. The court held that the letter was admissible; since the action was founded on a contract with respect to the writer's expenses, and any letter from one of the parties to the other was admissible.

In Peninsular Naval Stores Co. v. Parrish (1913) 13 Ga. App. 779, 80 S. E. 28, the plaintiff sued on an oral agreement with the defendant, whereby the plaintiff was to receive $25 per month for his services in assisting in the operation of certain turpentine "places," owned by the defendant, and that in case of sale of the places, the plaintiff should have half of the excess after debts were paid. Both parties agreed on the contract in these terms, but the plaintiff contended that the indebtedness on the places was fixed at $18,000, whereas the defendant contended that no amount was specified, and that at the time of the agreement the debt was actually $28,000. There was introduced in evidence an unanswered letter from the defendant to the plaintiff, written after the agreement, reading as follows: "We also agree to give you a half interest in the places at Adel and Greggs, after the debt they owe us, and interest on the same, is entirely worked out." The court held this letter to be admissible; since if it appeared thereby that the defendant was placing a different construction on the agreement than the plaintiff, it was the latter's duty to object to the construction; and his silence should be deemed acquiescence.

Self-serving letters written by the plaintiff after a transaction is closed, and which are not answered by the defendant, are inadmissible, since there is no duty on the part of the defendant to reply, and it cannot be said that his failure to do so is an admission of the truth of the statements contained in the letters. Barrow v. Newton (1918) 55 Pa. Super. Ct. 387. See also Holler v. Weiner (1850) 15 Pa. 244.

So, in Porter v. Ledoux (1851) 6 La. Ann. 377, the plaintiff sued for breach of a contract to lease certain lands. The defendants, in attempting to prove that the contract between them and the plaintiff became void through a proviso therein, introduced the following letter written by them to the plaintiff: "Dr. Porter, Monroe, Ouachita. Dear Sir:—We leased you our Bry plantation with the condition, as you will recollect, that it was not already leased by Mr. Grammont Filhiol, whom we had requested to rent the said property for us. We had prepared the lease for you to sign, as also a writing, providing for the above conditions; when you came to the countinghouse, our Mr. Ledoux, who had made the agreement with you, was absent, and the lease was handed to you, but not the proviso. We hear that the property had been rented previously by Mr. Filhiol. We are sorry to say that the contract we had made with you becomes null and void. Yours respectfully, A. Ledoux & Co." The plaintiff never answered this letter. It was held that this letter was not admissible to vary the terms of the written contract. The court said that if caution is necessary in inferring acquiescence from silence, when declarations are made to a person face to face, it is still more so when declarations are made by letter, and added: "The plaintiff had a written contract, which had been defeated by the act of the defendants. When they in their letter declared the matter closed and the agreement null, and did not even ask a reply, it seems to us to be going too far to say that the plaintiff, by not answering this letter, is to be considered as admitting the truth of their declarations, and that his lease, absolute on its face, was intended to be conditional."

Similarly, in Wagman v. Ziskind (1920) — Mass. —, 125 N. E. 633, it was held, following the reported case (KUMIN v. FINE, ante, 1161), that an unanswered letter, complaining of the breach of a contract by the addressee, was not admissible as evidence of self-serving statements therein.

H. Curjel & Co. v. Hallett Mfg. Co. (1917) 198 Ala. 609, 73 So. 938, was an action for breach of a contract to purchase logs from the plaintiff. The defendant, in attempting to prove that the plaintiff acquiesced in the cancelation of the agreement to furnish the first instalment, offered a letter written by himself to the plaintiff, in which he stated that, since no delivery had been made, he was obliged to ask that delivery of the first instalment be considered canceled, and requested delivery of the second. The plaintiff did not reply to the letter. The court held that the letter was inadmissible, since the plaintiff's failure to answer could not be treated as an admission of the cancelation of the first instalment.

IV. Letter containing demand or notice.

An unanswered letter is admissible on behalf of the writer, to show a demand made or notice given thereby. Hays v. Morgan (1882) 87 Ind. 231; Sonnesyn v. Hawbaker (1914) 127 Minn. 15, 148 N. W. 476; State, Hand, Prosecutor, v. Howell (1897) 61 N. J. L. 142, 38 Atl. 748; Allen v. Peters (1860) 4 Phila. (Pa.) 78; Murphey v. Gates (1892) 81 Wis. 370, 51 N. W. 573; Keen v. Priest (1858) 1 Fost. & F. (Eng.) 814.

Allen v. Peters (1860) 4 Phila. (Pa.) 78, was an action to recover the price of a horse. The defendant sold a pair of horses to the plaintiff, warning soundness. Later one of the horses took fright, and, at the instance of the plaintiff, was taken back by the defendant, who furnished the plaintiff another horse. The plaintiff alleged that this horse was not received as a permanent substitute for the horse which had taken fright, and that after the lapse of a month he returned the horse, accompanied by a letter in which he stated that he was returning the horse which was loaned him until another horse could be furnished in place of the one which had taken fright, and that if another was not furnished within a certain time, he would sue for the price of the horse. The defendant read the letter, and sent the horse back to the plaintiff. The lower court admitted the letter in evidence. The court held that it was not necessary to decide whether the letter was properly admitted, and said: "We think this decision places the subject on its true grounds; and the result of the whole of the case seems to be that an unanswered letter, offered by the party by or for whom it was written, if it be restricted to making a demand where this is requisite, or giving a notice merely, is always admissible; that if it contain statements of a different nature, and evidently framed for a different purpose, and these derive no support from other evidence in the cause, it should be wholly excluded; but, if the statements do not go beyond what is necessary to render the demand or notice intelligible, or there is other contemporaneous evidence, the whole may be submitted to the consideration of the jury. But that it is the duty of the court, whenever such a letter is received, to scan its contents rigorously and make such discriminating observations to the jury that they may be prevented from giving undue weight to what has been so written." See also State, Hand, Prosecutor, v. Howell (1897) 61 N. J. L. 142, 38 Atl. 748, set out supra, I., wherein the court said that the letter in question was not evidence, except to show notice or demand.

Keen v. Priest (1858) 1 Fost. & F. (Eng.) 314, was an action for distraining sheep which were privileged from distress for rent. The plaintiff put in evidence a letter written for him by his attorney, which was an ordinary application for redress for "an illegal seizure of sheep" made by the defendant. The defendant never answered the letter. It was held that this letter was admissible; that it was simply a demand, and that the defendant's silence was evidence against him.

8 A.L.R.—74.

In Hays v. Morgan (1882) 87 Ind. 231, the appellee sued the appellant on a note. The appellee offered in evidence a letter written by him to the appellant, informing him of the loss of the note, and requesting him to stop payment on it, if presented by anyone; that the loss had been advertised, and that he would forward an affidavit. The appellant did not answer this letter. It was held that the letter was competent testimony, the same as if the appellee had verbally spoken its contents to the appellant and the latter had remained silent; not that the appellant's silence in the matter of itself established his liability, but it was a circumstance which should be properly submitted to the jury for consideration, together with the other surrounding circumstances.

It has been held that when a demand or charge is of such a kind that, according to common experience, a man would naturally deny it, the fact that it is not denied is a matter for the consideration of the jury. Sturtevant v. Wallack (1886) 141 Mass. 119, 4 N. E. 615. That was an action to recover the price of certain machinery, constructed by the plaintiff and sent to the defendant by order of A, who was under a contract with the defendant to heat a certain building. On the question whether A had authority to order the machinery, the plaintiff offered in evidence a letter which he wrote to the defendant, making a demand for payment, which letter the defendant did not answer. On the admissibility of the letter in evidence, the court held that the letter was admissible to show that a demand was made and not repudiated, and that this fact, together with the surrounding circumstances, might be considered by the jury.

A letter making a demand for an amount claimed, and stating the ground for the demand, is admissible in evidence. Sonnesyn v. Hawbaker (1914) 127 Minn. 15, 148 N. W. 476, wherein it was said: "Where a demand is made upon a party under such circumstances that he would naturally deny if he did not assent, the demand and failure to reply may be received as evidence in the nature of an admission tending to prove the justice of the demand."

So, in Murphey v. Gates (1892) 81 Wis. 370, 51 N. W. 573, the plaintiff, an attorney, brought an action before a justice of the peace to recover of the defendant the unpaid balance of the plaintiff's fees and expenditures. The plaintiff wrote several letters to the defendant, demanding payment, to which no answer was made. The court said that these letters were admissible in favor of the plaintiff, and that failure to respond or deny the statements therein was a tacit admission of their contents. M. J. Q.

HELEN J. PETERS, Appt.,
v.
FARMERS' STATE BANK et al.

Kansas Supreme Court—March 8, 1910.

(106 Kan. 1, 185 Pac. 892.)

Appeal — insufficiency of pleading — agreed facts — effect.

1. A judgment will not necessarily be reversed on account of a defective pleading, where that pleading is not attacked before trial, and the action is tried on an agreed statement of facts, supplemented by oral evidence, and the statement of facts and oral evidence sustain the judgment.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1172.]

— construction of pleading.

2. The averments of an answer which was not attacked by the pleadings should be liberally construed to uphold a judgment based upon it.

[See 21 R. C. L. 467, 625.]

Headnote 1 by MARSHALL, J.

(Porter and Dawson, JJ., dissent.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Washington County (Hogin, J.) in favor of defendants in an action brought to enjoin them from selling certain real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. J. R. Hyland, F. C. Baldwin, and Pulsifer, Hunt, & Short for appellant.

Messrs. Edgar Bennett, Frank H. McFarland, and Ivan A. Allen, for appellees:

The remedy by injunction is summary, peculiar, and extraordinary, and ought not to be issued except for the prevention of great and irreparable mischief.

14 R. C. L. 307.

Before plaintiff was entitled to relief by means of an injunction it was incumbent upon her to show that she had no adequate remedy at law.

14 R. C. L. 345; Kirby v. Union P. R. Co. 51 Colo. 509, 119 Pac. 1042, Ann.

Cas. 1913B, 461; Yount v. Hoover, 95 Kan. 752, L.R.A.1915F, 1120, 149 Pac. 408, Ann. Cas. 1918C, 148; McKeever v. Buker, 80 Kan. 201, 101 Pac. 991; 22 Cyc. 928.

Plaintiff never having acquired any title to her sister's interest in the land, the bank had the right to sell the same to satisfy its judgment.

Miller v. Dixon, 2 Kan. App. 445, 42 Pac. 1014; First Nat. Bank v. Livingston, 83 Kan. 120, 109 Pac. 987; McLain v. Parker, 92 Kan. 561, 141 Pac. 243; Travis v. Topeka Supply Co. 42 Kan. 625, 22 Pac. 991; 25 Cyc. 1460; 17 R. C. L. 1025; Thompson v. Baker, 141 U. S. 643, 35 L. ed. 389, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 89.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff sought to enjoin the defendants from selling an undivided one-fifth interest in her land, under an execution issued on a judgment in the district court of Washington county, in favor of defendant, the Farmers' State Bank, and against Henry J. Schuette and Hannah Schuette. Judgment was rendered in favor of the defendants, and the plaintiff appeals.

The action was tried on an agreed statement of facts, supplemented by some oral evidence on behalf of the plaintiff. This statement of facts and the oral evidence showed the following: On September 26 or 27, 1915, the plaintiff arranged with Hannah Schuette, who then owned the controverted interest in the land, to purchase that interest from her. The consideration given was a promissory note for $3,200, about $400 in cash, and indebtedness due the estate. Hannah Schuette had inherited her interest in the land from her father, who died on September 7, 1915. On September 29, 1915, the bank commenced an action against Henry J. Schuette and Hannah Schuette in the district court of Washington county to recover on a promissory note for $3,000 and on that day caused an attachment to be levied on that interest in the land. The deed conveying the land to the plaintiff was dated October 5, 1915, but was not recorded until November 12 of that year. On November 1, 1915, the attachment was dissolved by the district court, and from the order dissolving the attachment the bank appealed to this court, where the judgment of the district court was affirmed on March 10, 1917. Farmers State Bank v. Schuette, 100 Kan. 45, 163 Pac. 1073. The November, 1915, term of the district court of Washington county began on November 15, and judgment was rendered in favor of the bank and against the Schuettes on December 16. On April 16, 1917, execution was issued on that judgment and levied on the one-fifth interest in the land. This action was afterward brought to enjoin the bank and D. W. McLeod, as sheriff, from selling that interest under the execution.

The plaintiff argues that the bank obtained no right or interest in, or lien on, the land by virtue of the attachment proceeding. It may be conceded that the plaintiff is correct on this proposition, but it does not avail her, for the reason that the judgment against her must be affirmed on the ground that she obtained the deed to the land in fraud of the rights of the bank.

The judgment in favor of the bank became a lien on all the property owned by the Schuettes, or either of them, in Washington county, on the 1st day of November, 1915, term of court. Civ. Code, § 416 (Gen. Stat. 1915, § 7320). The deed to the plaintiff was executed and recorded before the judgment lien attached thereto. The plaintiff says: "There was no allegation in the answer that the transfer was for the purpose of hindering, delaying, or defrauding creditors."

That conveyance was attacked by the following allegations in the answer: That the plaintiff was not an innocent purchaser in good faith; that the land was not purchased by the plaintiff for a valuable consideration; that she paid nothing whatever for the deed; and that the plaintiff is not the owner of the undivided one-fifth interest in the land. These allegations charge that the plaintiff fraudulently obtained the conveyance.

The answer was not attacked; therefore its averments should be liberally construed to uphold the judgment. Bailey v. Bayne, 20 Kan. 657; Sweet v. Ward, 43 Kan. 695, 23 Pac. 941. Sometimes issues will be considered as enlarged by the consent of the parties. Hartwell v. Equitable Mfg. Co. 78 Kan. 259, 263, 97 Pac. 432; Custer v. Royse, 104 Kan. 339, 179 Pac.

Appeal—construction of pleading.

353. It has been held that the submission of a case on an agreed statement of facts waives all defects in pleading. Brettun v. Fox, 100 Mass. 234. In Marts v. Newton, 29 Kan. 331, 336, this court refused to consider objections made to the findings of the trial court on the ground that the findings were incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. The court there said: "We cannot discuss these objections, because the findings are based upon an agreed statement of facts, signed by the parties to the action."

In the present action, no special findings were made, but the court found generally for the defendants. That finding determined in favor of the defendants every issue necessary to uphold the judgment. The general finding determined that the conveyance to the plaintiff was made to hinder, delay, and defraud the bank of its just and lawful debts. That determination was sustained by the agreed statement of facts and the oral evidence.

The defendants urge other propositions, which have become immaterial on account of the conclusion reached on the question discussed, and will not be further considered. The judgment is affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

A petition for rehearing having been granted, Dawson, J., on January 14, 1920, handed down the following additional opinion:

For reasons which appeared sufficient at the time, a rehearing was granted in this case, and the court has been favored with additional oral arguments and new and carefully prepared briefs. A majority of the court, however, are still of opinion that the judgment of affirmance should stand; and that the court's opinion, as written by Mr. Justice Marshall, needs neither correction nor modification. Therefore the judgment is again affirmed.

Porter and Dawson, JJ., dissent.

ANNOTATION.

Submission on agreed statement of facts or agreed case as waiver of defect in pleading.

- I. Distinction between stipulation as to facts and agreed case, 1172.
- II. Waiver:
  - a. In general, 1174.
  - b. Irregularities waived, 1176.
- III. Where pleadings included in statement, 1178.

I. Distinction between stipulation as to facts and agreed case.

It is to be noted that there is a difference between the submission of an action under a stipulation as to the facts, and the submission of what is generally termed an agreed case. A stipulation as to the facts in the case is made with reference to a pending action, and is intended to be evidentiary, to be used as a substitute for evidence of the facts to which it relates, thereby avoiding the necessity of proving such facts. An agreed case generally does not relate to a pending action, but it is a stipulation between parties between whom there is a controversy, agreeing upon facts relating to the controversy, and that the same shall be submitted to the court without the formality of summons or pleadings, for a decision of the court thereon, as justice and equity may require under the facts stated.

This distinction is pointed out in State ex rel. Webb v. McCune (1908) 129 Mo. App. 511, 107 S. W. 1030, wherein the court said that "an agreed case, submitted by the parties without action, differs in essential features from an agreed statement of facts filed by the parties in an action brought in the ordinary way. In the latter case the agreed facts are regarded in the same light as facts settled by the verdict of a jury . . . and may constitute matter of exception. . . . But where the controversy is submitted by agreement without action, i. e., without filing suit, having summons issued, and the defendant brought into court against his will and without formal pleadings, etc., the jurisdiction of the court over parties and subject-matter attaches only to the precise state of facts contained in the stipulation."

In Clason v. Matko (1909) 12 Ariz. 213, 100 Pac. 773, affirmed in (1912) 223 U. S. 646, 56 L. ed. 588, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 392, it appeared that a demurrer was interposed by the plaintiffs to the answer of the defendants, which was sustained by the trial court on the ground that the location certificate which was made part of the answer was void, and hence the answer constituted no defense. The defendants stood upon their answer, whereupon the court, upon a stipulation of facts which had been theretofore entered into and filed by the respective parties, entered judgment for the plaintiffs. It appeared that both parties, subsequently to filing this stipulation, had amended their pleadings without reference or regard to the stipulation. Under these circumstances, the court held that the stipulation of facts could not be regarded or treated as an agreed case. The court said that the obvious purpose of the parties in filing a stipulation was to have it in the place of testimony or other evidence on the trial, and not to supplant the pleadings in the action, and added: "Undoubtedly the parties might have come into court upon an agreed statement of the case without any formal pleadings, and under the provisions of § 1390, Civ. Code 1901, and have obtained such a judgment as the facts might warrant. Such was not the attempt in this case, as appears from the stipulation itself and the conduct of the parties in the proceedings subsequent to the entry of the stipulation. It appears by the record that, after the stipulation was entered into and filed, both parties amended their pleadings without regard thereto. It therefore appears that this was not an agreed case under § 1390, but a stipulation appertaining merely to the matter of evidence upon the trial. We hold therefore that the trial court did not err in sustaining the demurrer."

In Rutter v. Carothers (1909) 228 Mo. 631, 122 S. W. 1056, it is held that where the case is submitted upon an agreed statement of facts, the fact that there is no express statement therein of an adverse holding or claim on the part of plaintiffs in an action to quiet title, reference being had to the pleadings and the theory upon which the case was tried in the lower court, this deficiency may be supplied. The court said that the pleadings are necessarily a substantial part of the action submitted on an agreed statement, and the trial theory must be read into and illuminate the words of the stipulation. The court was here apparently referring to a stipulation of facts, as distinguished from a technical agreed case. The case itself is not within the scope of the note and the cases involving the point covered are not included herein.

In Warrick Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Houghland (1883) 90 Ind. 115, it is said that it was intended that the agreed statement of facts should serve the purpose of all the pleadings used in an ordinary action to form an issue for trial. It is to be construed to show the facts in the controversy and to constitute the different causes of action in favor of the plaintiff. If a complaint has been filed it performs no office in the case, and its insufficiency cannot affect the question, and cannot be assigned as error.

In Weed v. Calkins (1881) 24 Hun (N. Y.) 582, it is held that where the parties have agreed upon a statement of facts under the act, they thereby waive the formalities and technicalities of an action and seek the decision of the court on the facts stated. The court must declare their rights thereunder where they rest on an application of legal or equitable principles, hence the submission constitutes a waiver of all formalities and technical objections not material to the determination of the legal question referred to the court for decision.

In so far, however, as concerns the question of waiver, the distinction between a stipulation of facts and an agreed case is apparently frequently overlooked, although as a matter of course the question of waiver of defects in pleadings cannot arise in an agreed case, as that term is technically used, since in such case there are no pleadings. It is, however, difficult in many cases to determine whether the case was submitted upon an agreed case or merely an agreement as to the facts, since the two terms are frequently regarded as synonymous.

The difficulty of undertaking to ascertain in many cases whether the court was considering an agreed case or a stipulation as to facts may be illustrated by reference to Warrick Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Houghland (Ind.) supra, wherein the court, after saying that the proceeding was an agreed case under the statute, and in such a case no pleadings are contemplated, pointed out that it was intended that the agreed statements of facts should serve the purpose of all the pleadings used in an ordinary action to evolve an issue for trial. It is to be noticed that the court used, apparently interchangeably, the terms "agreed statement" and "stipulation of facts." It is, however, clear that the court considered this particular case an agreed case.

As pointed out, the purpose of the submission upon an agreed case is to do away with the necessity of a summons, complaint, and answer. McKethan v. Ray (1874) 71 N. C. 165. And no pleadings are contemplated. Donald v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. (1879) 52 Iowa, 411, 3 N. W. 462. All matters of pleading are disregarded, and there is a waiver of all irregularities and questions arising upon pleadings. Chappell v. McIntyre (1852) 9 Tex. 161.

In Van Sickle v. Van Sickle (1853) 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 265, it is held that, where an agreed case is submitted under a statute after an action has been commenced, this action will be presumed to be abandoned or suspended and the case will be considered and determined entirely independent of it. If the submission of the agreed case does not of itself work a discontinuance of the case, it must be so when followed by a judgment. In the meanwhile, the action was suspended; hence, the court is not called upon to decide whether the action was properly brought or could have been maintained under the facts agreed upon by the parties.

In Hamilton v. Cook County (1843) 5 Ill. 519, it is held that the parties, by making an agreed case after the plea has been filed, virtually abandon their pleadings and submit the case to the court to be determined upon the question, not as to whether this plea is sustained by the evidence, but whether under the facts agreed upon the plaintiff is entitled to recover of the defendant.

II. Waiver.

a. In general.

It is the general rule that the submission of an action to the court upon a statement of facts agreed to by the parties under stipulation, for the rendition of such judgment as the facts may require, or the submission of what is generally termed an agreed case, constitutes a waiver of all questions relative to the sufficiency of the pleadings in matter of form or as to character of the action.

United States. — Bond v. Dustin (1884) 112 U. S. 604, 28 L. ed. 835, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 296; Willard v. Wood (1890) 135 U. S. 309, 34 L. ed. 210, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 831; Saltonstall v. Russell (1894) 152 U. S. 628, 38 L. ed. 576, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 733; Re Blake (1906) 80 C. C. A. 167, 150 Fed. 279; Snow v. Miles (1878) 3 Cliff. 608, Fed. Cas. No. 13,146.

Delaware. — Beeson v. Elliott (1831) 1 Del. Ch. 368.

District of Columbia. — District of Columbia v. Lee (1910) 35 App. D. C. 341, 21 Ann. Cas. 973; Jefferson v. District of Columbia (1913) 40 App. D. C. 381.

Illinois. — Hamilton v. Cook County (1843) 5 Ill. 519; Sioux Valley State Bank v. Drovers Nat. Bank (1895) 58 Ill. App. 396; Gaines v. McAdam (1898) 79 Ill. App. 201; Smith v. Chicago (1908) 107 Ill. App. 270, affirmed in (1903) 204 Ill. 356, 68 N. E. 395.

Indiana. — Warrick Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Houghland (1883) 90 Ind. 115.

Iowa. — Donald v. St. Louis, K. C. &

N. R. Co. (1879) 52 Iowa, 411, 3 N. W. 462; Baugh v. Barrett (1886) 69 Iowa, 495, 29 N. W. 425.

Kansas.—PETERS v. FARMERS' STATE BANK (reported herewith) ante, 1170; Reynolds v. Reynolds (1883) 30 Kan. 95, 1 Pac. 338; State Bank v. Norduft (1896) 2 Kan. App. 55, 43 Pac. 312.

Maine.—Gardiner v. Nutting (1827) 5 Me. 140, 17 Am. Dec. 211; Moore v. Philbrick (1850) 32 Me. 102, 52 Am. Dec. 642; Machias Hotel v. Fisher (1868) 56 Me. 321; Knight v. Ft. Fairfield (1880) 70 Me. 500; Pillsbury v. Brown (1890) 82 Me. 450, 9 L.R.A. 94, 19 Atl. 858.

Maryland. — American Coal Co. v. Allegany County (1882) 59 Md. 185; Bostick v. Blades (1882) 59 Md. 231, 43 Am. Rep. 548.

Massachusetts. — Johnson v. Shed (1838) 21 Pick. 225; Ellsworth v. Brewer (1831) 11 Pick. 316; Scudder v. Worster (1853) 11 Cush. 573; Kimball v. Preston (1854) 2 Gray, 567; Russell v. Loring (1861) 3 Allen, 121; Miner v. Coburn (1862) 4 Allen, 136; Cushing v. Kenfield (1862) 5 Allen, 307; Rogers v. Daniell (1864) 8 Allen, 343; Esty v. Currier (1868) 98 Mass. 500; Brettun v. Fox (1868) 100 Mass. 284; Merrill v. Bullock (1870) 105 Mass. 486; West Roxbury v. Minot (1874) 114 Mass. 546; Hutchinson v. Tucker (1876) 121 Mass. 402; Second Religious Soc. v. Harriman (1878) 125 Mass. 321; Smith v. Carney (1879) 127 Mass. 179; Cleaveland v. Boston Five Cents Sav. Bank (1880) 129 Mass. 27; Fay v. Duggan (1883) 135 Mass. 242; Fish v. Fiske (1891) 154 Mass. 302, 28 N. E. 278; Morse v. Natick (1900) 176 Mass. 510, 57 N. E. 996; Fay v. Locke (1909) 201 Mass. 387, 131 Am. St. Rep. 402, 87 N. E. 753.

Missouri.—Frank v. Frank (1879) 6 Mo. App. 589; Vanderline v. Smith (1885) 18 Mo. App. 55.

New York. — Van Sickie v. Van Sickie (1853) 8 How. Pr. 265; Weed v. Calkins (1881) 24 Hun, 582.

North Carolina.—McKethan v. Ray (1894) 71 N. C. 165; Foreman v. Hough (1887) 98 N. C. 386, 3 S. E. 912. And see Gerrish v. Johnson (1854) 46 N. C. (1 Jones, L.) 335.

Oklahoma. — Powell v. Crittenden (1910) 57 Okla. 1, 156 Pac. 661.

Pennsylvania.—Bixler v. Kunkle (1828) 17 Serg. & R. 298.

Texas.—Bates v. Republic (1847) 2 Tex. 616; Chappell v. McIntyre (1852) 9 Tex. 161; Parker v. Portis (1855) 14 Tex. 166; Aultz v. Zucht (1919) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 209 S. W. 475.

Virginia.—Sawyer v. Corse (1867) 17 Gratt. 230, 94 Am. Dec. 445.

Upon this point in Bixler v. Kunkle (Pa.) supra, it is said: "We are deciding upon a case stated. The declaration is not before us; it is waived and superseded; the parties have agreed to put, and actually have put before us, the facts of the case. True, the counsel did reserve their exceptions, but it is a reservation incompatible with the agreement; they cannot, at the very time they are placing all the facts specifically upon the record, object because the facts are not specifically upon the record. It is an attempt to mix a special demurrer with a case stated; it is without precedent; it can be subservient to no one purpose of justice or law, nor productive of anything but delay and vexation, thus to entangle the merits of a cause with points of form relative to the wording of a declaration which both parties have agreed to set aside."

In State Bank v. Norduft (Kan.) supra, the court said that "undoubtedly, after the submission of the case to the court upon the agreed statements of facts, an amendment would have been permitted if the attention of the trial court had been directed to the alleged defect, and it cannot be claimed that the defendant would have been in any manner prejudiced by such amendment. Such being the case, we feel that this court should treat the record as if such amendment was in fact made, and that the judgment ought not to be disturbed for this alleged error."

In McCombs v. Matney (1901) 23 Ky. L. Rep. 654, 63 S. W. 578, the court said that under all the circumstances of the case it had concluded to disregard the defects of the pleadings on both sides, and treat the case as an agreed case for the settlement, inasmuch as all the parties united in praying a reference to the commissioner.

In Moore v. Philbrick (1850) 32 Me. 102, 52 Am. Dec. 642, the rule is stated that if, in an agreed statement of facts, there is no special limitation, and the defendant is to have judgment on the facts, it would verify any plea which would be a bar to the action.

Any defects in the pleadings are not available to a party who pleads the merits of the case, where there is a judgment in his favor and he stipulates that the controversy shall be determined upon an agreed statement of facts, which he signed without making any objection to the pleadings or to the form of the proceeding. Re Blake (1906) 80 C. C. A. 167, 150 Fed. 279.

Where the parties agree on the facts and submit the case to the judgment of the court, such submission has the effect of curing any possible irregularities with reference to the bringing of the proceedings, and the pleadings and proceedings thereon. Foreman v. Hough (1887) 98 N. C. 386, 3 S. E. 912. Such judgment will be rendered as will conform to the legal rights of the parties, according to the agreed statement of facts. Esty v. Currier (1868) 98 Mass. 500. But the decision will be made with reference to the pleadings. Miner v. Coburn (1862) 4 Allen (Mass.) 136. The plaintiff is entitled to judgment, if the facts agreed upon establish a cause of action in his favor. The question of law, however, as to the right of the plaintiff to recover in any form of action, is not waived. West Roxbury v. Minot (1874) 114 Mass. 546.

b. Irregularities waived.

The general rule referred to, that the submission of a case upon an agreed statement of facts will waive any defects in the pleadings if the statement of facts will support a judgment, applies to and includes irregularities in the pleadings (Gaines v. McAdam (1898) 79 Ill. App. 201; Morse v. Natick (1900) 176 Mass. 510, 57 N. E. 996); or objections to the form thereof (Baugh v. Barrett (1886) 69 Iowa, 495, 29 N. W. 425; Rogers v. Daniell (1864) 8 Allen (Mass.) 343); or as to the sufficiency (Bostick v.

Blades (1882) 59 Md. 231, 43 Am. Rep. 548; Enid City R. Co. v. Enid (1914) 43 Okla. 778, 144 Pac. 617).

In Bostick v. Blades (Md.) supra, it is held that where there is no demurrer to the declaration, and no objections to the sufficiency of pleadings, and the case upon appeal is submitted upon an agreed statement of facts, it is merely the duty of the court to declare the law upon the facts thus submitted, and it is not called upon for a judgment as to the sufficiency of the pleadings.

Where the parties agree upon a case stated, to be considered as a special verdict founded upon declaration or pleadings filed, the defendant thereby waives all objections to the form or sufficiency of the declaration. Bixler v. Kunkle (1828) 17 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 298. In Bates v. Republic (1847) 2 Tex. 616, it is held that a submission upon an agreed statement of facts of the claims between the parties as to two different matters waives the objection that the pleadings do not justify a judgment except as to one of the matters. In this regard it has been held that the objection that a petition by a widow to have the homestead set off to her from her husband's estate should refer to the statute allowing the homestead is waived by submitting the case on an agreed statement of facts. Brettun v. Fox (1868) 100 Mass. 234. In Reynolds v. Reynolds (1883) 30 Kan. 95, 1 Pac. 388, it is held that, where a case is submitted upon an agreed statement of facts, it is immaterial whether the trial court erred in overruling a demurrer to the plaintiff's petition.

So, where there is an agreement by the parties to submit a case upon certain facts, all questions of the form of the pleadings are waived, unless the same are expressly reserved. The question then is whether the plaintiff, upon the agreed statement of facts, is entitled to recover in any legal form of declaration. Ellsworth v. Brewer (1881) 11 Pick. (Mass.) 316. For example, a motion to dismiss the action, upon the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, is properly refused, where the material facts were agreed upon in writing and submitted to the court for its judgment. Hines v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. (1886) 95 N. C. 434, 59 Am. Rep. 250. It is pointed out in this case that the parties agreed that the court should make an order allowing the plaintiffs to amend their complaint so as to make it conform to the facts agreed upon. Where, however, a stipulation is made as to certain facts, but this stipulation by its express terms is made subject to any objection which might be raised as to the competency, relevancy, or materiality of any of the stipulated facts as testimony, the objection is not waived that the complaint does not state a cause of action. Rogers v. St. Paul (1902) 86 Minn. 98, 90 N. W. 155.

Such submission also waives any question as to the variance between the pleadings and the facts agreed upon. Sioux Valley State Bank v. Drovers Nat. Bank (1895) 58 Ill. App. 396; Pillsbury v. Brown (1890) 82 Me. 450, 9 L.R.A. 94, 19 Atl. 858. Even the lack of pleadings is waived, as, for example, the failure to file an answer (Saltonstall v. Russell (1894) 152 U. S. 628, 38 L. ed. 576, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 738); or a plea (Sawyer v. Corse (1867) 17 Gratt. (Va.) 230, 94 Am. Dec. 445); or a further plea or answer after the original answer was overruled (Fay v. Locke (1909) 201 Mass. 387, 131 Am. St. Rep. 402, 87 N. E. 753); or an objection as to the time of filing an amended pleading (Aultz v. Zucht (1919) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 209 S. W. 475); or as replication (Vanderline v. Smith (1885) 18 Mo. App. 55). And the objection is waived that no issue was raised by the pleadings. Frank v. Frank (1879) 6 Mo. App. 589.

A submission of this character also waives any objection to the form of the answer. Snow v. Miles (1873) 3 Cliff. 608, Fed. Cas. No. 13,146; Folger v. Columbian Ins. Co. (1868) 99 Mass. 267, 96 Am. Dec. 747; Cushing v. Kenfield (1862) 5 Allen (Mass.) 307; Kimball v. Preston (1854) 2 Gray (Mass.) 567. Or objections which can be raised only by plea in abatement, such as the nonjoinder of parties plaintiff. Fay v. Duggan (1883) 135 Mass. 242. Or the question of the disability of an infant to bring the action. Smith v. Carney (1879) 127 Mass. 179. Objections to the service of process are also waived. Second Religious Soc. v. Harriman (1878) 125 Mass. 321. Or that the plaintiff has a plain, adequate, and complete remedy at law. Russell v. Loring (1861) 3 Allen (Mass.) 121. In McRae v. Locke (1873) 114 Mass. 96, it is held that where an action at law could not be maintained against the officers of the corporation to enforce their statutory liability for the corporation's debts, the objection that the action should have been planted in equity instead of at law is not waived by submission on an agreed statement of facts.

In Beeson v. Elliott (1831) 1 Del. Ch. 368, it is held that by joining in a case stated in a court of equity, and submitting the question of validity of an award in an amicable action at law, the parties do not waive the objection of lack of jurisdiction in the court, since the consent of the parties cannot waive jurisdiction, where none otherwise existed.

In Fisher v. Knight (1894) 9 C. C. A. 582, 17 U. S. App. 502, 61 Fed. 491, however, by the terms of a case stated, judgment was to be given in favor of the plaintiff if the opinion of the court upon the question of set-off was against the defendant. After thus submitting the case, the defendant sought to raise the objection that the plaintiff should have proceeded by a bill in equity, instead of a suit at law. After pointing out that this objection to the mode of procedure was not raised by the defendant in the court below, the court said that it should not avail him in that court, even if originally well founded, since there was a clear and binding waiver of all objections to the form of the proceedings.

A submission under the statute, of an agreed case, waives any irregularity in giving a bond. Parker v. Portis (1855) 14 Tex. 166.

The agreed statement of facts also waives all questions of form in regard to the proceedings previously had and the manner of bringing the case upon appeal. Fish v. Fiske (1891) 154 Mass. 302, 28 N. E. 278.

In Whiteside v. North American Acci. Ins. Co. (1911) 200 N. Y. 320, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 696, 93 N. E. 948, the appellant originally answered in the action, but by stipulation this answer was withdrawn, and the case submitted on the facts stated in the complaint as upon application for judgment. The court said that, under such a stipulation, the question practically was whether the complaint set forth a cause of action in view of the facts appearing therein concerning the failure of the respondent to serve, or cause to be served, a certain notice which had been mentioned, being a notice which the insured was bound to serve on the insurance company as a condition precedent to any claim against the company for liability for loss.

III. Where pleadings included in statement.

In Esty v. Currier (1868) 98 Mass. 500, holding that an agreed statement of facts waived all defects in the pleadings, even though the pleadings were referred to as part of the statement, the stipulation authorized the entry of such judgment on the merits as if the facts were duly presented upon proper pleadings.

And see Com. v. Worcester & N. R. Co. (1878) 124 Mass. 561, holding that the defendant was entitled to judgment where the declaration did not show a violation of the statute relied on, since the case stated, by its terms, limited the plaintiff's right to recover to the pleadings.

In Merrill v. Bullock (1870) 105 Mass. 486, the stipulation expressly provided for the waiver of all questions as to the sufficiency or character of the pleadings. A. G. S.

J. J. WEEKS, Respt.,

v.

GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.

North Dakota Supreme Court — November 13, 1910.

(— N. D. —, 175 N. W. 726.)

Carrier — misleading passenger — liability.

1. Where a passenger sustains damages by reason of misinformation as to the time of the departure of trains, given by a carrier's employees, the carrier is liable for the actual damages sustained by the passenger, proximately caused by reason of the misinformation.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1183.]

Damages — for causing passenger to miss train.

2. Where a passenger who has been misinformed as to the time of the departure of a train, and as a result thereof has missed his train, procures an automobile and, equipped with inadequate clothing, drives across country during a cold, stormy night, and as a result suffers discomfort and inconvenience, he is not entitled to recover damages for discomfort and inconvenience endured during such trip, as the negligence or wrongful action of the carrier was not the proximate cause thereof.

Headnotes by the COURT.

(Grace and Robinson, JJ., dissent.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Bottineau County (Burr, J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages sustained by reason of defendant misinforming him as to departure of its trains. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Murphy & Toner, for appellant:

The verdict was not justified by the law or the facts.

Kinnonen v. Great Northern R. Co. 34 N. D. 556, 158 N. W. 1058; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Allender, 59 Ill. App. 620.

A person in the position that the plaintiff was in is not a passenger, and is not entitled to any of the rights under the law that are held to apply to a passenger.

Hutchinson, Carr. § 1006; Southern R. Co. v. Smith, 40 L.R.A. 746, 30 C. C. A. 58, 52 U. S. App. 708, 86 Fed. 292; Phillips v. Southern R. Co. 124 N. C. 123, 45 L.R.A. 163, 32 S. E. 383; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Laloge, 113 Ky. 396, 62 L.R.A. 405, 69 S. W. 795, 12 Am. Neg. Rep. 288; Webster v. Fitchburg R. Co. 161 Mass. 298, 24 L.R.A. 521, 37 N. E. 165; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Jennings, 190 Ill. 478, 54 L.R.A. 827, 60 N. E. 818; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Weeks, 99 Ill. App. 526; Devine v. Chicago City R. Co. 162 Ill. App. 246; Deatrick v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 164 Ill. App. 36; O'Donnell v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 106 Ill. App. 292; Lake Street Elev. R. Co. v. Gormley, 108 Ill. App. 62; Strong v. North Chicago Street R. Co. 116 Ill. App. 250; Illinois C. R. Co. v. McMillion, 129 Ill. App. 33; Radley v. Columbia Southern R. Co. 44 Or. 332, 75 Pac. 212, 1 Ann. Cas. 447, 15 Am. Neg. Rep. 659; Metropolitan West Side Elev. R. Co. v. Sutherland, 139 Ill. App. 88; McCarty v. St. Louis & S. R. Co. 105 Mo. App. 596, 80 S. W. 7; Creech v. Charleston & W. C. R. Co. 66 S. C. 528, 45 S. E. 86; Gregg v. Northern P. R. Co. 49 Wash. 183, 94 Pac. 911; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Thurlow, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 571, 102 C. C. A. 128, 178 Fed. 898; 6 Cyc. 536; Fremont, E. & M. Valley R. Co. v. Hagblad, 72 Neb. 773, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 254, 101 N. W. 1033, 106 N. W. 1041, 9 Ann. Cas. 1096; Hicks v. Union P. R. Co. 76 Neb. 496, 107 N. W. 798.

Exemplary damages were not recoverable.

Parker v. Long Island R. Co. 13 Hun, 319; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Wurl, 62 Ill. App. 381; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Carr, 71 Md. 135, 17 Atl.

1052; Hamilton v. Third Ave. R. Co. 53 N. Y. 25.

The verdict was excessive.

Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Gaedcke, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 39 S. W. 312, 1 Am. Neg. Rep. 707; Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Wallace, 141 Ga. 51, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 429, 80 S. E. 282, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 1076; Cooley v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 40 Misc. 239, 81 N. Y. Supp. 692; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Harder, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 151, 81 S. W. 356; Berley v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 83 S. C. 411, 65 S. E. 456; North American Transp. & Trading Co. v. Morrison, 178 U. S. 262, 44 L. ed. 1061, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 869; Southern R. Co. v. Myers, 32 C. C. A. 19, 58 U. S. App. 131, 87 Fed. 149; Turner v. Great Northern R. Co. 15 Wash. 213, 55 Am. St. Rep. 883, 46 Pac. 243; Southern R. Co. v. Marshall, 111 Ky. 560, 64 S. W. 418; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Reeves, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 2236, 80 S. W. 471.

Messrs. J. J. Weeks and John E. Martin, for respondent:

Plaintiff was a passenger, and as such entitled to his rights and privileges.

Dieckmann v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 145 Iowa, 250, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 338, 139 Am. St. Rep. 420, 121 N. W. 676; 2 Hutchinson, Carr. 3d ed. 1006; Hayes v. Wabash R. Co. 163 Mich. 174, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 229, 128 N. W. 217.

Defendant was liable in damages, and the amount allowed by the jury was not excessive.

Dalton v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 78 Kan. 232, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1226, 96 Pac. 475, 16 Ann. Cas. 185; Lilly v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 31 Okla. 521, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 663, 122 Pac. 502; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sanders, 7 Ala. App. 543, 61 So. 482; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Evans, 94 Ark. 324, 126 S. W. 1058; Schroeder v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 174 Mich. 684, 140 N. W. 968.

Per Curiam:

On the morning of October 19, 1917, the plaintiff, who lived at Bottineau, went to Rugby on defendant's passenger train, intending to return to Bottineau on the afternoon train. Bottineau is located on a branch of the defendant's railway which connects with the main line at Rugby, and there is only one passenger train in each direction on each day. On October 19th the regular scheduled time for the departure of the train known as No. 213 from Rugby to Bottineau was at 4:15 P. M. At about 4 P. M. plaintiff, in company with one Thomas Hennessy, sheriff of Bottineau county, went to the defendant's depot at Rugby for the purpose of taking train No. 213 to Bottineau, but on examining a bulletin board in the depot they found that this train was marked to leave at 5:40 P. M. The plaintiff thereupon inquired at the ticket window, of the person in charge, if he was certain that the train would not leave before 5:40 P. M., and was answered in the affirmative. The plaintiff and Hennessy thereupon went uptown. They returned to the depot about 5:30 P. M., at which time they were informed that the train had left at 4:50, or about 50 minutes ahead of the time formerly announced. Plaintiff was therefore compelled either to remain in Rugby until the next day, or else drive to Bottineau, a distance of about 48 miles. The plaintiff and Hennessy engaged an auto livery, and made the trip to Bottineau that evening. They paid the driver $20, the plaintiff and Hennessy each paying one half thereof.

The evidence adduced by the plaintiff tended to show that there had been quite a severe snowstorm a day or two before; that as a result the roads were in bad condition, and travel rendered difficult, and the telephone wires between Rugby and Bottineau broken down; that the night was cold, and that snow was falling to such an extent that it was necessary for the driver to stop at times and clean off the windshield and lamps in order to travel with safety. The plaintiff testified that he had on only a medium weight cloth overcoat, and that he became very cold on the trip to Bottineau. Hennessy testified that the weather was so cold that he would not make the trip until he obtained a fur coat. There is some conflict as to the length of time required to make the trip. The plaintiff testified that it took about three hours, while the driver of the automobile claimed the trip was made in about two hours.

The plaintiff was state's attorney of Bottineau county, and he testified that a preliminary examination had been set for hearing in a justice's court that evening at 7 o'clock, and that he was caused considerable worry on account of his inability to telephone the justice of the peace and explain the reason of his failure to appear at the time set for the hearing. The plaintiff claimed that he was damaged in the sum of $100, and made demand upon the defendant for payment. Payment was refused, and plaintiff brought this action, wherein he demanded judgment for $300 treble compensatory and $300 exemplary damages. The defendant denied all liability. The case was tried to a jury, which returned a verdict in plaintiff's favor for $175 compensatory damages, no exemplary damages were allowed. Defendant has appealed from the judgment.

The evidence adduced by the plaintiff shows that plaintiff was misinformed as to the time when train No. 213 would depart, that such misinformation was conveyed both by what was written on the bulletin board and by what was said by the person in charge of the ticket office, and that such misinformation caused plaintiff to miss the train. It is true the testimony does not show that the plaintiff had procured a ticket at the time the information was received by him, but it does show that he came to the depot for the purpose of becoming a passenger upon that train. There is also evidence to the effect that the plaintiff was known to the operator, the person who wrote the statement on the bulletin board with respect to train No. 213, and that plaintiff talked with that person on the day in question. We are of the opinion that the evidence considered as a whole justified the jury in finding that at the time the misinformation was given to the plaintiff he was in the position of a passenger. 10 C. J. p. 613, § 1040.

It is well settled that where a passenger sustains damages by reason of misinformation as to trains, given by the carrier's employees, the carrier is liable for the actual damages sustained by the passenger by reason of such misdirection. Michie, on Carr. §§ 2252, 2253; Robertson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 142 Ala. 216, 37 So. 831; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Cannon, 158 Ala. 453, 48 So. 64; Wilcox v. Southern R. Co. 91 S. C. 71, 74 S. E. 122.

The defendant contends that the verdict is excessive. We are of the opinion that this point is well taken. In his complaint, plaintiff avers "that the defendant on said 19th day of October, 1917, maliciously, unlawfully, and falsely reported that said train No. 213 would leave Rugby at 5:30 P. M., and thereafter caused said train to depart at 4:50 P. M., and that by reason thereof plaintiff was put to great annoyance, worry, and delay, and was compelled to travel by livery from the said city of Rugby to Bottineau during the nighttime over roads that were almost impassable on account of mud and snow, the said drive occupying about three hours and causing plaintiff considerable suffering on account of exposure to cold and a snowstorm prevailing at said time. That on said 19th day of October, 1917, plaintiff, as state's attorney of Bottineau county, represented the state of North Dakota in an action then pending in justice court for Bottineau county, in which action, hearing was set for 7 o'clock P. M., on the said 19th day of October, 1917, and that plaintiff was unable to communicate with the said justice of the peace by telephone from Rugby on account of the fact that said telephone lines were down and out of service at said time, and that on account of said action pending and other business, plaintiff was compelled to travel by livery from Rugby to Bottineau in the evening and night of October 19, 1917, but was unable to reach Bottineau in time for said hearing in justice court, and was unable to reach Bottineau in time to attend to other matters of business requiring plaintiff's attention, and that by reason of all these facts, plaintiff has suffered damages in the sum of $100."

This is the only allegation in the complaint alleging either the facts as to, or the amount of, damages. In his testimony the plaintiff admitted his inability to specify any damage by reason of the loss of time. And upon this feature of the case the trial court expressly instructed the jury as follows: "In finding the actual damages you cannot allow for loss of time as there is no proof of the value of any time lost. Find what actual damages the plaintiff suffered in money, actually and necessarily spent, and the amount which would fairly compensate the plaintiff for loss and harm suffered in personal property."

The defendant was liable to the plaintiff for the detriment which was proximately caused by the misinformation which its employees gave to him. Section 7165, Comp. Laws 1913. So far as the discomfort which plaintiff suffered on the trip from Rugby to Bottineau is concerned, this was, according to his own testimony, due to inadequate clothing. Neither Mr. Hennesy nor the driver of the automobile claimed that they suffered any particular discomfort. Manifestly the defendant cannot be charged with any detriment which plaintiff brought upon himself. In Michie on Carriers it is said: "In the absence of peculiar circumstances, a passenger is entitled only to reasonable compensation for the damages he has sustained by reason of fail-

Carrier—misleading passenger—liability.

Damages—for causing passenger to miss train.

ure to transport him to his destination promptly. The carrier in such case is liable for the damages actually sustained by the passenger as the direct and necessary result of its negligence. This includes the value of the time lost by the passenger, and the reasonable expenses to which he has been put, because of the delay. But the passenger is not entitled to actual damages, unless he shows some pecuniary injury or personal injury, and is not entitled to damages for inconvenience, loss of time, or fatigue, unless some pecuniary damage or personal loss has resulted therefrom. And no damages can be recovered for physical injuries which are not the proximate result of the carrier's negligence." Vol. 3, § 3386.

See also International & G. N. R. Co. v. Addison, 100 Tex. 241, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 880, 97 S. W. 1037; Ingraham v. Pullman Co. 190 Mass. 33, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1087, 76 N. E. 237, 19 Am. Neg. Rep. 292; Stephens v. Oklahoma City R. Co. 28 Okla. 340, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1007, 114 Pac. 611.

The verdict which the plaintiff recovered in this case was clearly in excess of what he was entitled to recover either under his pleading or his proof. The judgment must therefore be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial. In view of a new trial we deem it necessary to say that under the evidence in this case there was no occasion to submit to the jury the question of exemplary damages. Exemplary damages may be allowed in an action for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract only "when the defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice, actual or presumed." Comp. Laws 1913, § 7145. In the case at bar, the undisputed evidence shows that, at the time the plaintiff was informed by the employees of the defendant that train No. 213 would depart at 5:40 P. M., that information was correct. The departure of the train before the time stated was occasioned by a subsequent change of orders by the train despatcher. It appears that train No. 213 ordinarily made connections with train No. 9 on the main line of the defendant's railway. On the day in question train No. 9 was late, and the departure of train No. 213 was delayed in order to make the proper connection with train No. 9. About 4:50 P. M. train No. 9 was reported much later, and the train despatcher thereupon rescinded the former order relating to the departure of train No. 213, and fixed the time for the departure of that train at 4:50 P. M. After this order was received the defendant's employees in the depot at Rugby endeavored to communicate the change to the various persons intending to take passage on that train. They even went to the extent of telephoning the hotels and pool rooms. Manifestly there is no basis under this evidence for a finding that the defendant was guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice.

Judgment reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

Christianson, Ch. J., and Bronson and Birdsell, JJ., concur.

Robinson, J.:

I think the action should be dismissed.

Grace, J., dissenting:

This case was, upon the issues formed, tried to a jury. The jury, under all the facts and circumstances of the case submitted to it, after due deliberation, returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $175. The verdict is not excessive; there is nothing to show passion or prejudice.

I dissent from the result arrived at by the majority opinion.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, the following Per Curiam response was handed down on December 9, 1919:

In a petition for rehearing it has been suggested that the court in its opinion overlooked § 7165, Comp. Laws 1913, which reads: "For the breach of an obligation not arising from contract the measure of damages, except when otherwise expressly provided by this Code, is the amount which will compensate for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, whether it could have been anticipated or not."

This section was not overlooked. On the contrary, it was cited in the former opinion. We were of the opinion then, and are of the opinion now, that the acts of the defendant were not the proximate cause of whatever inconvenience or suffering the plaintiff endured on the automobile trip from Rugby to Bottineau. According to his own testimony, such discomfort was due to his own, and not to defendant's, acts.

Neither did we overlook §§ 6238, 7145, and 10,360, Comp. Laws 1913, in holding that the case did not present one for the allowance of exemplary damages. Giving full force and effect to these sections, the facts still remain as stated in the former opinion; and they furnish no basis for a finding that defendant was guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice, actual or presumed, and there could be no allowance of exemplary damages, unless there is evidence from which reasonable men, in the exercise of judgment and reason, could so find. That is the rule announced in the statute. See § 7145, supra.

Rehearing denied.

ANNOTATION.

Liability of carrier for giving misinformation to passenger as to running of train.

- I. Destination of train, 1183.
- II. Time of departure or arrival of train, 1186.
- III. Stopping of train at particular station, 1188.
- IV. Other matters, 1193.

I. Destination of train.

A carrier is liable for misinformation given to a passenger by an authorized employee as to the destination of a particular train.

Alabama.—Robertson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1904) 142 Ala. 216, 37 So. 881; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Cannon (1908) 158 Ala. 453, 48 So. 64; Southern R. Co. v. Wooley (1909) 158 Ala. 447, 48 So. 369; Southern R. Co. v. Farquhar (1915) 192 Ala. 415, 68 So. 289.

District of Columbia.—Dye v. Virginia Midland R. Co. (1891) 9 Mackey, 63.

Georgia.—Atkinson v. Southern R. Co. (1901) 114 Ga. 146, 55 L.R.A. 223, 39 S. E. 888, 11 Am. Neg. Rep. 32.

Kentucky.—Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Barkley (1891) 13 Ky. L. Rep. 331.

New York.—Martin v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1886) 1 N. Y. S. R. 738; Elliott v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1889) 53 Hun, 78, 6 N. Y.

Supp. 363. Compare Barker v. New York C. R. Co. (1862) 24 N. Y. 599.

North Carolina.—Bullock v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (1910) 152 N. C. 66, 67 S. E. 60.

Texas.—International & G. N. R. Co. v. Gilbert (1885) 64 Tex. 536; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Smith (1886) — Tex. —, 1 S. W. 565; Davis v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. (1901) 25 Tex. Civ. App. 8, 59 S. W. 844; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Pruitt (1904) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 79 S. W. 598; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Humphries (1913) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 157 S. W. 1174.

Thus, where a ticket agent sells a ticket for a passage on a particular train and assures the plaintiff that the train will take him to his destination, the company is liable in damages for the expulsion of the plaintiff from the train designated because it is not bound for that destination. Atkinson v. Southern R. Co. (1901) 114 Ga. 146, 55 L.R.A. 223, 39 S. E. 888, 11 Am. Neg. Rep. 32, wherein the court said: "When a railroad company places an agent in charge of its business at a place where passengers are expected to board its trains, and authorizes such agent to sell tickets to passengers to be used when taking passage upon its trains, one who purchases from such an agent a ticket upon which there is no statement as to what trains it will or will not be good for passage upon has a right to presume that the agent is authorized by the company to give him information on this subject. When, therefore, the purchaser of such a ticket applies to the ticket agent for information as to what train or trains the ticket will be good for passage upon, and the agent gives him this information, he has a right to act upon the information so given. If in so doing he boards a train of the company upon which the ticket is not good for passage to the point indicated thereon, and is for this reason expelled therefrom by the agent of the company in charge of the train, the company is liable to him for whatever damages he may sustain on account of such expulsion, notwithstanding there is in existence a rule or regulation of the company which prohibits the conductor from carrying passengers on the train thus boarded, or from carrying passengers to a given point along the line of road. The company can only avoid this liability by showing that the purchaser of the ticket knew, or had sufficient reason to believe, that the ticket agent was misinforming him, or that the purchaser knew of a rule of the company which made the agent incompetent to give the information, or forbade the recognition of the ticket by the conductor."

It has been held that the statement of a ticket agent misinforming a passenger that a certain train will take him to his destination without a change of cars may be relied on by a passenger unless a general announcement made on the train to a different effect is heard by the passenger, and if the statement of the agent is so relied on to the injury of the passenger, an action to recover damages may be maintained against the carrier. Dye v. Virginia Midland R. Co. (1891) 9 Mackey (D. C.) 63.

So, where a passenger was directed by a train employee to move into a car ahead, which was going to her destination, it was held that the defendant was liable where the plaintiff, acting on the information given, failed to arrive at her destination. Robertson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1904) 142 Ala. 216, 37 So. 831.

A decision to the same effect was made in Southern R. Co. v. Farquhar (1915) 192 Ala. 415, 68 So. 289, wherein the plaintiff's evidence tended to show that when he presented his ticket to the gateman, he was misinformed as to which train he was to take, and therefore was not carried to his destination. It was held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover for the negligence of the defendant's servants in misinforming him, and a judgment in his favor was affirmed. See to the same effect Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Cannon (1908) 158 Ala. 453, 48 So. 64; Southern R. Co. v. Wooley (1909) 158 Ala. 447, 48 So. 369.

Likewise, where it appeared that a gateman in the defendant's employ punched the plaintiff's ticket and pointed out the train for him to board, it was held that the company was liable in damages for the resulting injuries where the train proved to be the wrong one. Elliott v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1889) 53 Hun, 78, 6 N. Y. Supp. 363. See to the same effect Crutcher v. Big Four (1908) 132 Mo. App. 311, 111 S. W. 891; Martin v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1886) 1 N. Y. S. R. 738.

In Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Humphries (1913) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 157 S. W. 1174, it was shown that a gateman, employed in a Union depot, misdirected the plaintiff as to which train to board, and also that the brakeman of the train misinformed her that it was the train going to her destination. In an action to recover damages for being ejected from the train, it was held that the defendant was liable for the misinformation given by the gateman, the court saying: "We are inclined to believe in this case, under the evidence, that, so far as the general public was concerned, the gateman was the agent of appellant as well as of the Texas & Pacific Railway Company, and that appellant was responsible for his negligence. It is true that the evidence shows that he was employed by the former company, and under its control; but it is also shown that appellant was entitled to his services, and that it was his duty to attend said gate, and direct passengers to their respective trains. He was therefore held out to the public by appellant as its agent in this respect, whereby appellant was responsible for his acts of negligence, if any, for which reason we think the court did not err in instructing a verdict in behalf of the Texas & Pacific Railway Company on said issue." See to the same effect Davis v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. (1901) 25 Tex. Civ. App. 8, 59 S. W. 844.

The abstract of the decision in Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Barkley (1891) 13 Ky. L. Rep. 381, states the case as follows: "It is the duty of the agents of a railroad company who have charge of its passenger stations to know, when the inquiry is made of them, what train a passenger should take to reach his destination; and if a passenger takes the train he is directed by the agent to take, and it afterwards turns out that it was the wrong train, he is not a trespasser. The plaintiff, being on the wrong train through the mistake of one of defendant's agents in charge of its passenger stations, it was the duty of the conductor to politely inform him of his mistake and explain to him why he could not carry him to his destination; but as the conductor, instead of pursuing this course, humiliated the plaintiff by his abuse, the plaintiff is entitled to recover not only compensatory, but punitive, damages."

In Bullock v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (1910) 152 N. C. 66, 67 S. E. 60, it was held that where an employee of the defendant had directed the plaintiff to board a certain train, which, in fact, did not go to her destination, it was the duty of the defendant to put her off at a suitable and proper place either at a station or near a house. The court said: "The plaintiff was a passenger on the defendant's road, and continued to be such while on the platform at Parmele. . . . If the porter told her to get on this train, she had a right to presume that he knew what he was talking about, and would properly discharge his duties, which by general knowledge and consent cover assistance to passengers."

A peculiar state of facts was disclosed in International & G. N. R. Co. v. Gilbert (1885) 64 Tex. 536. The plaintiff, on arriving at the station where she was supposed to change cars, inquired of the conductor of the defendant's train if she was in the right train, to which he replied by telling her to keep her seat. Because of this statement the plaintiff was carried to a point other than her destination and there ejected. It was held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover for the action of the defendant's employee, the court stating that the plaintiff was on the defendant's train through the fault and negligence of the conductor of the train, whose duty it was to see that she made no such mistakes, that it was the duty of the railroad company to return her in safety to the place where she took the wrong train through the fault of the conductor, and that when she was left at an improper, uncomfortable, and possibly an unsafe place, the company was liable for the resulting damages. See to the same effect International & G. N. R. Co. v. Smith (1886) — Tex. —, 1 S. W. 565.

In St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Pruitt (1904) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 79 S. W. 598, it appeared that the plaintiff informed the conductor as to her destination and asked him if his train was the proper one for her to board, and the conductor replied in the affirmative. Subsequently the plaintiff discovered that she was on the wrong train and was ejected, although the conductor was informed that she had no money, but did have friends at the next station who would see that she was properly cared for. It was held that the defendant was liable for the conductor's conduct in ejecting the plaintiff, as he had failed to exercise that high degree of care which was due her under the circumstances, and a judgment for the plaintiff was affirmed.

But in Barker v. New York C. R. Co. (1862) 24 N. Y. 599, the evidence showed that there were two trains, which ran an hour apart, the first of which went almost the entire distance to the plaintiff's destination and then branched off, making it necessary for the plaintiff to complete his journey on the second train. Shortly before the first train left the plaintiff presented himself at the defendant's station and inquired of an employee as to when he could board a train for his destination. The employee pointed out the first of the two trains, but did not explain the necessity for changing. In holding the action of the employee not to be negligent and affirming a judgment for the defendant, the court said: "Can the direction of the ticket agent at Albany be called a misdirection? I think it cannot. Passengers from Albany for Lyons could go by either the 6½ or 7½ o'clock train. If Page took the 7½ o'clock train, he had to wait in Albany an hour; if he took the 6½ o'clock train, he had to wait at Syracuse an hour and thirty-five minutes. How was the ticket agent at Albany to know that he did not prefer the delay at Syracuse? From his presenting himself and purchasing the ticket just before the 6½ o'clock train started, the agent had a right to presume that he preferred that train. Under these circumstances, I think the designation by the agent of the 6½ o'clock train as the train for Lyons cannot be called a misdirection or fault. It was natural and reasonable under the circumstances that he should tell Page that the 6½ o'clock train was the train for Lyons, for the ticket which he bought would take him there, if he took the 6½ o'clock train, in about the same time as the 7½ o'clock train, and the agent had a right to suppose that he preferred the 6½ o'clock train."

II. Time of departure or arrival of train.

Where an employee of a railroad company misinforms a passenger as to the time of the departure of a train or of its arrival at destination, the carrier is liable for damages which are the direct result of the misinformation.

Massachusetts. — Sears v. Eastern

R. Co. (1867) 14 Allen, 433, 92 Am. Dec. 780.

Michigan.—Van Camp v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1904) 137 Mich. 467, 100 N. W. 771; Geer v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1905) 142 Mich. 511, 106 N. W. 72.

Mississippi.—Wells v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. (1889) 67 Miss. 24, 6 So. 757.

New York.—Barney v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (1908) 61 Misc. 62, 113 N. Y. Supp. 138.

North Dakota. — See the reported case (WEEKS v. GREAT NORTHERN R. Co. ante, 1178).

South Carolina.—Wilcox v. Southern R. Co. (1912) 91 S. C. 71, 74 S. E. 122.

Texas.—Texas & P. R. Co. v. Conway (1915) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 180 S. W. 666.

Virginia.—Fowlkes v. Southern R. Co. (1899) 96 Va. 742, 32 S. E. 464.

Washington. — Turner v. Great Northern R. Co. (1896) 15 Wash. 213, 55 Am. St. Rep. 883, 46 Pac. 243.

Thus, in Sears v. Eastern R. Co. (1867) 14 Allen (Mass.) 433, 92 Am. Dec. 780, it appeared that the plaintiff purchased a ticket from Boston to Lynn and return. The carrier published daily advertisements of its regular trains in papers published in Boston, and from one of these papers the plaintiff obtained the information that there was a train scheduled to leave Boston at 9:30 in the evening which was scheduled to stop at Lynn. The plaintiff presented himself at the station in due time to take the train, but was informed that it had been postponed to 11:15 for the accommodation of passengers who desired to remain in Boston to attend places of amusement. Notices of the change had been given, printed handbills having been posted up in the cars and stations on the day of the change, but no notice of the change had been inserted in the daily papers. In holding the defendants liable the court said: "The defendants published daily advertisements of their regular trains in the Boston Daily Advertiser, Post, and Courier, and the plaintiff had obtained his information as to the time of running from one of these papers. If they had published a notice of the change in these papers, we think he would have been bound by it. For, as they had a right to make changes, he would be bound to take reasonable pains to inform himself whether or not a change was made. So, if in their advertisement they had reserved the right to make occasional changes in the time of running a particular train, he would have been bound by the reservation. It would have bound all passengers who obtained their knowledge of the time-tables from either of these sources. But it would be contrary to the elementary law of contracts to hold that persons who relied upon the advertisements in either of those papers should be bound by a reservation of the offer, which was, without their knowledge, posted up in the cars and stations. If the defendants wished to free themselves from their obligations to the whole public to run a train as advertised, they should publish notice of the change as extensively as they published notice of the regular trains. And as to the plaintiff, he was not bound by a notice published in the cars and stations, which he did not see. If it had been published in the newspapers above mentioned, where his information had in fact been obtained, and he had neglected to look for it, the fault would have been his own. . . . The court are of opinion that the defendants, by failing to give such notice of the change made by them in the time of running their train on the evening referred to as the plaintiff was entitled to receive, violated their contract with him, and are liable in this action."

Similarly, the plaintiff, in Turner v. Great Northern R. Co. (1896) 15 Wash. 213, 55 Am. St. Rep. 883, 46 Pac. 243, was informed, when purchasing a ticket, that the train which he purposed taking would reach its destination on schedule time. He alleged that the defendant's agent knew that the train would not be able to complete its run owing to a serious break in the roadbed, which fact it negligently and fraudulently concealed from the plaintiff. After commencing his journey the plaintiff was detained by reason of the condition of the roadbed for several days. The court held, in an action for damages for the delay, that evidence as to the conversation between the plaintiff and the ticket agent was admissible to show that the plaintiff was not in fault in taking the particular train on which he started. It was said that the ticket agent was the only person at a railroad station who could give travelers the necessary information as to the arrival, departure, and running of trains, and that passengers had a right, until otherwise informed, to rely on information received by them from a ticket agent, in answer to inquiries concerning those matters, provided they did not disregard other reasonable means of information.

In Van Camp v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1904) 137 Mich. 467, 100 N. W. 771, a suit to recover the penalty provided by statute for the failure of the defendant to transport the plaintiff, it appeared that the plaintiff purchased a ticket good for a continuous passage from Ypsilanti to Grand Junction. Her route was over the main line of the defendant railroad to Kalamazoo, from which place the defendant had a branch line to Grand Junction. She was informed by the ticket agent that she could make close connections at Kalamazoo for her train to Grand Junction, and he showed her a schedule stating that a train left the connecting station at 4:45 P. M., her train on the main line arriving at 4:25 P. M. On arriving at Kalamazoo she was informed that there was no train running on the branch line, and she was therefore obliged to remain overnight in Kalamazoo. The defendant introduced evidence to show that the time card showing a train scheduled to leave at 4:45 P. M. had been canceled by another one, eliminating such train from the schedule, but it was not shown that the cancellation of the time card had been brought to the attention of the ticket agent who misinformed the plaintiff. The court held that the defendant was liable for the statutory penalty, saying: "The undisputed facts are that the plaintiff applied two or more times to the authorized agent of the defendant to ascertain about this train. She was shown a time-table issued by defendant and in the hands of its duly authorized agent. She was under no obligation to look for a schedule posted in the defendant's depot or published in the newspapers. She went to the proper place for the most reliable information. She obtained it by being shown a printed schedule. She relied on it as well as on the representation of the agent. This made her case, and entitled her to a judgment under the statute, unless the defendant showed 'a legal and just excuse' for not carrying her in accordance with her contract of carriage and printed schedule."

See to the same effect Geer v. Michigan C. R. Co. (1905) 142 Mich. 511, 106 N. W. 72; Barney v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (1908) 61 Misc. 62, 113 N. Y. Supp. 138.

Likewise, it has been held that where the ticket agent of a railroad company informed a passenger that a certain train would make a close connection with the train of another railroad at a junction mentioned, when in fact no such connection was made, the giving of misinformation was negligence, for the direct consequences of which the railroad company was liable. Fowlkes v. Southern R. Co. (1899) 96 Va. 742, 32 S. E. 464.

In the reported case (WEEKS v. GREAT NORTHERN R. Co. ante, 1178) it appeared that the plaintiff was misinformed by a ticket agent in the employ of the defendant as to the time of the departure of a certain train. By reason of this misinformation the plaintiff missed the train and was compelled to motor to his destination in a snowstorm. The court holds the carrier liable for the actual damages sustained by the misinformation given out by its agent.

So, where misinformation was given by a ticket collector as to the time of trains, it was held that it was within the scope of the duty of that official, and that the defendant was liable for the injuries received by the plaintiff as a result of such misinformation.

Wilcox v. Southern R. Co. (1912) 91 S. C. 71, 74 S. E. 122.

But in a case where the plaintiff offered to introduce evidence of statements made by the defendant's policeman in its station as to the time of the departure of trains, it was held that the evidence was properly excluded, since the defendant was not liable for misinformation given by such an employee. Wells v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. (1889) 67 Miss. 24, 6 So. 737.

A passenger cannot recover for the failure of his train to connect with a train on another road, where the carrier sells tickets only to the point of transfer, although the employees of the carrier misinform the passenger as to the connection she can make. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Conway (1915) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 180 S. W. 666, wherein the court said: "Furnishing to persons appellant had undertaken to carry to points on its line information about the movement of trains on other lines of railway was outside the scope of the duties the porter and brakeman were employed to perform; and appellant should not, we think, be held bound to respond in damages to appellee for injury she suffered because she relied upon information they furnished her which turned out to be false. Legally she had no right to rely upon, as representations of appellant, statements made to her by its employees who were without authority, real or apparent, to act for it in making same."

III. Stopping of train at particular station.

A carrier is liable for damages sustained as the result of misinformation given by one of its agents to a passenger as to whether a certain train will stop at his destination.

Alabama.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Thomason (1912) 6 Ala. App. 365, 60 So. 506; South & North Ala. R. Co. v. Huffman (1884) 76 Ala. 492, 52 Am. Rep. 349, 8 Am. Neg. Cas. 1; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Heddleston (1886) 82 Ala. 213, 8 So. 53.

Georgia.—Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Roberts (1893) 91 Ga. 513, 18 S. E. 315.

Indiana.—Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Nuzum (1875) 50 Ind. 141, 19 Am. Rep. 708; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hoagland (1881) 78 Ind. 203. Compare Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Bills (1888) 118 Ind. 221, 20 N. E. 775.

Kansas.—Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Little (1903) 66 Kan. 378, 61 L.R.A. 122, 97 Am. St. Rep. 376, 71 Pac. 820, 13 Am. Neg. Rep. 524.

Kentucky.—Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Scott (1911) 141 Ky. 538, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 206, 133 S. W. 800, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 547.

Michigan.—Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Pierce (1882) 47 Mich. 277, 11 N. W. 157.

New Jersey.—McDonald v. Central R. Co. (1905) 72 N. J. L. 280, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 505, 112 Am. St. Rep. 672, 62 Atl. 405, 19 Am. Neg. Rep. 378; Runyon v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1907) 74 N. J. L. 225, 68 Atl. 107.

New York.—Miller v. King (1897) 21 App. Div. 192, 47 N. Y. Supp. 534.

Ohio.—Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Reynolds (1896) 55 Ohio St. 370, 60 Am. St. Rep. 706, 45 N. E. 712.

Oklahoma.—Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Sheets (1916) 54 Okla. 586, 154 Pac. 550.

South Carolina.—Trapp v. Southern R. Co. (1905) 72 S. C. 343, 51 S. E. 919.

Texas.—Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Moorman (1898) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 46 S. W. 662.

The plaintiff in Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Roberts (Ga.) supra, bought of the defendant's agent a Sunday excursion ticket from Hatcher's station to Eufaula, with a return coupon attached, stating to the agent that he wished to return that night by a particular train known as the Cannon Ball, and that if he could not return on that train he did not want the ticket. The agent told him that the train specified would stop for him to get off at Hatcher's station. On boarding that train and presenting his return ticket, the conductor refused to take it for his passage, and ordered him, with others similarly situated, in the presence of the other passengers, to leave the train at a point 9 or 10 miles from Hatcher's station. The plaintiff was compelled to walk the rest of the distance through unpleasant weather. On the trial the court charged the jury as follows: "I charge you that when a party buys a ticket in this state over a railroad to go to a particular point and return, he has the right to return on the railroad if he perform all the conditions of the ticket. I charge you further, if the agent of the railroad told him that he could go to Eufaula and back upon this ticket, he had the right to presume that he could do so; and if in his effort to do so he was put off at any other station than Hatcher's, he would be entitled to damages." On appeal it was held that this charge was erroneous, since there was a conflict of evidence as to whether the agent told the passenger he could return on the fast train, and the charge as given would authorize the jury to find against the company without settling that conflict. In discussing the company's liability for misinformation given by its agent, the court said: "The agent who sold the Sunday excursion ticket represented the company in making the sale, and the information which he gave as to whether the ticket would afford a right to return on a particular train could be relied on unless it was known to be incorrect, or unless some known rule or order of the company made the agent incompetent to give such information or forbade the recognition of such a ticket by the conductor of the designated train, or of trains belonging to that class. The ticket being silent on its face as to trains, and one of the parts of the ticket being for a return passage, of course it would be proper for the company to authorize someone to answer questions when the ticket was sold, so that the buyer might know how to use it; and no other person would seem to be so proper for this purpose as the agent selling it."

Similar facts were involved in Drew v. Wabash R. Co. (1908) 129 Mo. App. 459, 107 S. W. 478, wherein the evidence showed that the plaintiff purchased a ticket for an excursion, and at the time of the purchase was informed by the ticket agent that he could come back on another and different train than the excursion train. The plaintiff boarded this train, but his destination was not one of the regular stops, and he was accordingly ejected at a stop other than his destination. It was held that under the form of the plaintiff's petition he was not entitled to recover, but in reversing the judgment the court stated that if the plaintiff elected to amend, damages could be sought on the ground that the defendant's agent negligently misdirected the plaintiff.

Similarly, in Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Little (1903) 66 Kan. 378, 61 L.R.A. 122, 97 Am. St. Rep. 376, 71 Pac. 820, 13 Am. Neg. Rep. 524, the evidence showed that a ticket agent informed the plaintiff that a certain freight train due at a certain time would carry passengers, and sold him a ticket to his destination. Subsequently, as a train pulled into the station the agent informed the plaintiff that the train was coming. The plaintiff boarded the train, but after riding a few miles was ejected because the train was not scheduled to stop at his station. It was held that the railroad company was liable for the incorrect information given by the ticket agent, the court saying: "If all of these representations were untrue, and the train which plaintiff boarded was not, under the rules of the company, scheduled to stop at Hillsdale, there is nothing to show that he had knowledge of such fact. He made all reasonable inquiry of those whom the company had put there to furnish such information to ascertain if he might rightfully enter the train, and acted on the information thus received. He had a right to rely on all of these representations and assurances. They were made by the agents of the company within the scope of their agency, in the execution of their duties, and bound the company. Acting on them, the plaintiff had a right to go upon that train and be carried to the specified destination. To be ejected from the train before this was accomplished was a wrong for which a recovery might be had." See to the same effect Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Heddleston (1886) 82 Ala.

218, 3 So. 53; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Thomason (1912) 6 Ala. App. 365, 60 So. 506; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Nizum (1875) 50 Ind. 141, 19 Am. Rep. 703; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Reynolds (1896) 55 Ohio St. 370, 60 Am. St. Rep. 706, 45 N. E. 712.

So, where a passenger is informed by a ticket agent that a certain train will stop at his destination, which information is incorrect, the railroad company is liable in damages for the failure of the train to stop. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Pierce (1882) 47 Mich. 277, 11 N. W. 157, wherein the court said: "Upon the question whether the company is liable for the action of the agent at Batavia, it is insisted by the plaintiff in error that the passenger is bound to ascertain for himself what trains stop at the place of his destination, and acts at his peril in boarding any others. It is undoubtedly true that where some trains make general and some only partial stoppages, the passenger should not disregard reasonable means of information in regard to his proper course. But he cannot be supposed to know that any such difference exists unless he has means of knowing the facts. Time-tables furnish one means of information, but they are not always accessible or intelligible to all classes of passengers, and the experience of all travelers is that they are sometimes not changed as soon as train changes are made, and are not always strictly adhered to. It is the business of the agents who contract with passengers for their fare to have the means of directing them safely, and such an agent is universally resorted to for such information by strangers who have occasion to obtain such guidance. When, as in this case, the attention of the agent was distinctly called to the desire of Pierce to know what trains he could rely on to bring him to Batavia in season for his purposes, we think he had a right to rely on the correctness of the information received, and to act on it, at least until informed to the contrary. It does not appear that any care was taken at Elkhart to warn passengers what trains they must take for their several destinations, and there is nothing to show that Pierce had any reason to doubt the correctness of his course in going upon the train in question until after he had started and the conductor called for his ticket."

Where a passenger, before purchasing a ticket, inquires of the ticket agent whether the train stops at a certain station, and is answered in the affirmative and is given a time-table showing that the train is scheduled to stop, the passenger, by his contract, has a right to have the train stop at that station, and his ejection at the preceding station is wrongful. McDonald v. Central R. Co. (1905) 72 N. J. L. 280, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 505, 111 Am. St. Rep. 672, 62 Atl. 405, 19 Am. Neg. Rep. 378.

However, it may be noted that in Runyon v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (1907) 74 N. J. L. 225, 68 Atl. 107, the court held that where a ticket agent misinformed the plaintiff as to whether a train made a certain stop, he was not entitled to have the train make the stop. The court distinguished the McDonald Case, supra, on the ground that the furnishing of a time-table by the defendant's agent showing that the train was scheduled to stop at the station was a vital element in that case. In discussing the duty of the passenger under such circumstances, the court said: "It is the ordinary case of a passenger who has taken a train which is not scheduled to stop at the station for which he holds a ticket, by reason of misinformation received from the agent from whom he purchased his ticket, and who has been ejected at a regular station of the company after notification by the conductor that the train did not stop at the point to which he held a ticket, and a request from that official that he leave the train at a stopping point short of his destination, and refusal on his part to comply with the request. . . . The refusal of the plaintiff to leave the defendant company's train, when requested to do so by the conductor, constituted him a trespasser, and justified that officer in ejecting him from the train, using no more violence than was necessary to accomplish his removal."

In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Scott (1911) 141 Ky. 538, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 206, 133 S. W. 800, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 547, it appeared that a ticket agent in the employ of the defendant company contracted with the plaintiffs to have a certain train stop at a station at which it was not scheduled to stop. On the faith of this information the plaintiffs purchased tickets and took passage on the train, but it failed to stop. The court held that the railroad company was liable in damages for the failure of the train to stop as agreed, saying: "It is elementary that an agent has no authority to bind his principal, unless he is acting within the apparent scope of his authority, but we think that when a railroad company has established a place on its line of railroad, or elsewhere, at which tickets may be bought for transportation upon its line of road, it thereby invests the agent in charge of its business, so far as the public is concerned, with the implied authority to furnish all reasonable information relating to the transportation of passengers, and concerning the movement of passenger trains, and with the power to bind it by any agreements made by him or information furnished by him, within the line of his duty. And we are also of the opinion that it is within the line of his duty to give information and make representations in reference to the rights of passengers holding tickets that he sells to them. The public has the right to go to such an agent for information concerning the movement of trains upon which they desire to take passage, and they have the right to rely upon the statements made by him concerning such matters. It would be a curious state of affairs if an agent having the express authority to sell tickets for transportation to and from different points did not also have the authority to give reasonable and proper information concerning the trains upon which such tickets might be used and the places at which trains would stop to receive and discharge passengers holding tickets sold by him. And so, when the ticket agent of a railroad company agrees with, or informs, a person desiring to become a passenger that the ticket will be good on certain trains, or that certain trains upon which it may be used will stop at a designated place to let such person on or off, the company will be bound by his agreements or representations or by the information furnished by him, in the absence of knowledge upon the part of the purchaser of the ticket that the agent had no authority to make such an agreement or that the information given was incorrect, and when the ticket does not contain agreements or conditions by which the passenger's rights are to be determined. It may be true that the agent must submit the request for a change in schedules, or for authority to stop a train at a place it is not scheduled to stop, to his superiors and obtain their consent, but this is a matter between the railroad company and its agent. If its agent having the implied authority to act for it makes agreements or representations in violation of its rules, or in disobedience of its orders, or fails or neglects to procure the necessary authority to do what he agreed or represented should be done, it is the fault of the agent, and not the passenger, and the company, as between the passenger and it, must suffer the consequences of its agent's negligence or want of power."

So, the plaintiff, in Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Moorman (1898) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 46 S. W. 662, purchased from a person in charge of the defendant's ticket office a return ticket and was informed that the return trip could be made at night, the train stopping at the point in question. On the return trip, after boarding the train, the plaintiff discovered that the train did not stop at his station, and he was forced to leave the train and complete his journey on foot. In holding the defendant to be liable for the misinformation given the plaintiff, the court said: "It is the duty of one in purchasing a ticket to inform himself as to the movements of trains over the lines of his proposed route; but we know of no better source of information, so far as the public are concerned, than that of the ticket agent with whom the public must deal, and with whom the contract of transportation is made. He stands as the representative of the company, and is supposed to be able to correctly impart information to parties with whom he may contract for the right of transportation as to the movements of the trains over the route which he is expecting to travel. If the passenger knows that according to the rules of the company a certain train will not stop at a particular point, he would not be safe in relying upon information received from the ticket agent to the contrary; but where he does not actually possess such knowledge, he has the right to assume that the agent whom the railway company intrusts with the power to contract concerning his right of transportation possesses accurate knowledge as to the movements of trains over his prospective route, and he can safely rely upon the information received from that source. The charge of the court, as a whole, was correct upon this subject, and there was no error in refusing the charges requested by appellant."

The view maintained in the cases heretofore discussed apparently depends somewhat on the form of the action. Thus, in Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Bills (1889) 118 Ind. 221, 20 N. E. 775, it was held to be reversible error to permit a passenger to testify as to the negligence of a ticket agent in misinforming him as to whether a train would stop at a certain station. It appeared that the passenger purchased a ticket and entered one of the company's through trains, which, according to the published schedule, did not stop at his station. He was ejected from the train because of his failure to pay his fare to the first station beyond his destination where the train stopped. He was permitted to testify, over objection, that before purchasing the ticket he inquired whether the train would stop at his destination, and that he was informed that it would. The court held that this evidence was improperly admitted, as the action was brought for an unlawful invasion of the plaintiff's right of personal security, to recover for injuries sustained by being ejected from the train with needless violence. It was, therefore, wholly immaterial to any issue in the case to prove that he had acted with proper care in entering the train, or that he was brought into the situation in which he was found by the mistake of the ticket agent. The court said: "The passenger's right to recover damages which he may have sustained by being misled by the ticket agent is a right of action altogether different and distinct from one which arises out of an assault and battery committed upon him by the conductor in ejecting him from the train with needless violence. If the plaintiff was damaged by the misinformation negligently communicated to him by the defendant's ticket agent, he has his right of action for that yet, and it was therefore prejudicial error to permit him to prove the negligence of the ticket agent and get the benefit of that element in the present case, while the defendant was deprived of any right to insist that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. If the question had been upon the company's negligence, arising out of the conduct of its ticket agent, then the doctrine of contributory negligence would have been applicable. Possibly the plaintiff was negligent in not looking at a train schedule, which may have been at hand, or he may have known, for all that appears in this case, that the train did not usually stop at Curtisville. It cannot be said that the evidence was harmless."

Where it appeared that an employee of the defendant railroad company was stationed at the train for the purpose of inquiring the destination of each passenger attempting to go aboard, it was held that the question whether a passenger allowed to enter a train which did not stop at his destination was misinformed or misled through the fault of the carrier's servant, was for the jury. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Sheets (1916) 54 Okla. 586, 154 Pac. 550.

So, in Trapp v. Southern R. Co.

(1905) 72 S. C. 343, 51 S. E. 919, it appeared that the plaintiff was directed by a uniformed railroad attendant to board a certain train, which the passenger did, relying on the attendant's answer to his question as to a train for a certain point. The train which the plaintiff boarded did not stop at his destination, and in an action for damages for being ejected from the train, the court held that evidence was properly admitted to show the misdirection of the defendant's agent which caused the plaintiff to board the wrong train. See to the same effect South & North Ala. R. Co. v. Huffman (1884) 76 Ala. 492, 52 Am. Rep. 349, 8 Am. Neg. Cas. 1.

Where a passenger was informed by the conductor of a train that the next stop was her destination, and the train was unexpectedly stopped before arriving there, it was held that it was the duty of the conductor to inform the passenger that the train had not arrived at her destination, and his failure to do so entitled the plaintiff to damages for the injuries sustained. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hoagland (1881) 78 Ind. 203.

In Miller v. King (1897) 21 App. Div. 192, 47 N. Y. Supp. 534, it was held that where a passenger was misinformed by a ticket agent as to a train stopping at a certain point, he was not justified in remaining on the train after he was notified of the error, and that on his failure to leave the train, his expulsion was lawful. However, the defendant was held to be liable for the breach of the contract to carry, due to the ticket agent's misinformation, and a judgment for the defendant was accordingly reversed.

IV. Other matters.

In Burnham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (1873) 63 Me. 302, 18 Am. Rep. 220, it appeared that the plaintiff desired to make a trip on the defendant's line, which necessitated a stop-over at an intermediate station. The plaintiff informed the defendant's ticket agent of his desire to stop over, and was told that it was necessary to purchase but one ticket, as the conductor would give him a stop-over check. On the second day his ticket was refused by the conductor, as it was indorsed "good for this day only," and he was ejected from the train. The court held that the defendant was liable in damages for such ejection, saying: "It seems that before this the conductor had been permitted to give 'stop-over checks.' This custom had been abrogated but a few days previous, of which, so far as appears, no notice had been given. This is the very point upon which the plaintiff desires information. To whom shall he go to obtain it? To whom can he go but to the person appointed by the company for the purpose of giving such information, and selling the proper tickets? To that person he does go, and is informed that the custom of giving stop-over checks still continues, and that it is necessary to purchase but one ticket. Relying upon this information, as he was justified in doing, he purchased his ticket and paid the fare demanded for the whole distance.

. . . The conductor acted in obedience to orders from his superiors; the plaintiff, in obedience to information he had received from the ticket agent and upon which he had paid his money; surely, then, he was not in the wrong. But it is said the company were not bound by the contracts of the agent. Admit it. The conductor had proof from the ticket that the fare had been paid for the whole distance and from the statements of the plaintiff, which he had no reason to doubt, and which were confirmed by the custom so lately abrogated, that he had paid it upon the representations of the agent, that the ticket would carry him through. If, under these circumstances, the company, through the conductor, would repudiate or deny the contract, the least they could do would be to pay back the surplus money that they had received, or deduct it from the fare claimed, neither of which was done, or offered to be done, and this they were legally bound to do before refusing to execute the contract made by their agent, even if they were not bound by it."

In Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Floyd (1914) 115 Ark. 607, 171 S. W. 913,

it was proved that the plaintiff was informed by a station agent in the employ of the defendant that a certain train would make connections with a motor car which was operated by the defendant railroad and which would carry the plaintiff to his destination. Relying on this information the plaintiff made the trip, but found that the motor-car service had been discontinued. It was held that the defendant was liable for the misinformation given by its agent, and a verdict for the plaintiff was affirmed.

Where an agent informs a passenger that a certain route is the proper and best one to take in traveling from one point to another, when in fact there is a shorter and more convenient route over the same company's line by which the passenger may travel, and by reason of such misinformation the passenger suffers damage, the company is liable therefor. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. White (1905) 99 Tex. 359, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 110, 122 Am. St. Rep. 631, 89 S. W. 746, 13 Ann. Cas. 965.

So, in Texas & P. R. Co. v. Armstrong (1899) 93 Tex. 31, 51 S. W. 835, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 721, wherein it appeared that the defendant's agent, on application by the plaintiff for information as to the best route to a certain place, misdirected the plaintiff, with the result that the plaintiff's wife and children were delayed for several days. The court held that the company was liable for the act of its agents in selecting the wrong route, and that the mental suffering, anxiety, and distress of the wife, caused by the delay, was a proper element of actual damage to be considered by the jury in arriving at the amount of the verdict.

In Mace v. Southern R. Co. (1909) 151 N. C. 404, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1178, 66 S. E. 342, it was held that evidence was admissible to show that a passenger was erroneously informed by the defendant's station agent that his ticket was good over either of two routes, though the ticket showed on what route the plaintiff was entitled to travel. In affirming a judgment for the plaintiff, it was said: "The fact that the conductor did nothing wrongful upon his part does not exculpate the defendant from liability for the negligence of its station agent in causing plaintiff to take the wrong route on his return home. This liability is upon the same principle that when a passenger holds a ticket good on one train and one route, and by direction of the gatekeeper is made to take another train going in the wrong direction, the carrier is liable for the negligence of its agent." E. C. B.

RICHARDSON PRESS, Appt.,

v.

ANDREW ALBRIGHT, JR., Respt.

New York Court of Appeals — November 10, 1918.

(224 N. Y. 497, 121 N. E. 362.)

Contract — to pay debt of corporation.

1. A parol promise of a stockholder to pay the debt of the corporation is unenforceable under the Statute of Frauds.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1198.]

Corporation — liability of stockholder to pay debt.

2. That a stockholder of a publishing company is beneficially interested in having its publication continue without interruption will not render him liable upon his oral promise to pay an overdue printing bill and to pay cash for future issues, if the creditor continues to regard the corporation as the principal debtor and attempts to collect the bills from it.

[See 25 R. C. L. 494, 510.]

Contract — collateral promise — Statute of Frauds.

3. A promise may be collateral so as to require writing under the Statute of Frauds, even though the new consideration moves to the promisor and is beneficial to him.

[See 25 R. C. L. 490.]

— to pay another's debt — primary liability.

4. The promise of a stockholder to pay the debt of a corporation, which debt continues to exist, is regarded as original, so as to dispense with the necessity of writing only when, within the intention of the parties, he becomes the principal debtor or primarily liable.

[See 25 R. C. L. 501, 510.]

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming a judgment of a Trial Term for New York County, Part XIV., dismissing an action brought to recover a balance alleged to be due for materials furnished to a certain publishing company for which defendant agreed to pay. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. George T. Hogg, for appellant:

The defendant had an interest of his own to subserve. His promises rested on a new consideration,—forbearance, or time to pay past indebtedness, and the publication of future issues of "Dogs in America," which moved toward him and was beneficial to him. They were original, therefore, and did not need to be in writing.

Faber v. New York, 213 N. Y. 411, 107 N. E. 756; Kraus v. Birnbaum, 200 N. Y. 130, 93 N. E. 474; R. & L. Co.

v. Metz, 165 App. Div. 533, 150 N. Y. Supp. 843, affirmed in 215 N. Y. 695, 109 N. E. 1091; A Schwoerer & Sons v. Stone, 130 App. Div. 796, 115 N. Y. Supp. 440, affirmed in 200 N. Y. 560, 93 N. E. 1116; Richardson Press v. Vandergrift, 165 App. Div. 180, 150 N. Y. Supp. 238; Davis v. Patrick, 141 U. S. 479, 488, 489, 35 L. ed. 826, 828, 829, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 58; Kelsey v. Munson, 117 C. C. A. 483, 198 Fed. 841; Guaranty Trust Co. v. Koehler, 115 C. C. A. 475, 195 Fed. 669; Choate

v. Hoogstraat, 46 C. C. A. 174, 105 Fed. 713.

There was a "note or memorandum" of the defendant's promise to pay the plaintiff, particularly for subsequent issues of "Dogs in America," and it was subscribed by the defendant. The requirements of the Statute of Frauds are fully met, if applicable.

Spiegel v. Lowenstein, 162 App. Div. 443, 147 N. Y. Supp. 655; Poel v. Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. 159 App. Div. 365, 144 N. Y. Supp. 725; Guaranty Trust Co. v. Koehler, 115 C. C. A. 475, 195 Fed. 669; Choate v. Hoogstraat, 46 C. C. A. 174, 105 Fed. 713; Quaker Oats Co. v. North, 102 Misc. 108, 168 N. Y. Supp. 145; Brauer v. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. 178 N. Y. 339, 70 N. E. 863; Evansville Nat. Bank v. Kaufmann, 93 N. Y. 273, 45 Am. Rep. 204; National Park Bank v. Seaboard Bank, 114 N. Y. 28, 11 Am. St. Rep. 612, 20 N. E. 632; San Remo Copper Min. Co. v. Moneuse, 149 App. Div. 26, 133 N. Y. Supp. 509.

The trial term erred in refusing to allow the plaintiff's treasurer to testify whether it relied on the promise of the defendant in getting out the work in question.

Thurston v. Cornell, 38 N. Y. 281; Noonan v. Luther, 206 N. Y. 105, 41 L.R.A. (N.S.) 761, 99 N. E. 178, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 1038.

Mr. Charles Thaddeus Terry, for respondent:

There is no evidence in the record sufficient to have warranted the submission to the jury of the question whether the defendant made an original promise.

White v. Rintoul, 108 N. Y. 222, 15 N. E. 318; Mallory v. Gillett, 21 N. Y. 412; Roscoe Lumber Co. v. Reynolds, 124 App. Div. 539, 108 N. Y. Supp. 1018; Mechanics & T. Bank v. Stettheimer, 116 App. Div. 198, 101 N. Y. Supp. 513; Halsted v. Pelletreau, 101 App. Div. 125, 91 N. Y. Supp. 927; Ackley v. Parmenter, 98 N. Y. 425, 50 Am. Rep. 693; O'Brien v. Mendel, 132 N. Y. Supp. 426; Belknap v. Bender, 75 N. Y. 446, 31 Am. Rep. 476; Cardeza v. Bishop, 54 App. Div. 116, 66 N. Y. Supp. 408; Duffy v. Wunsch, 42 N. Y. 243, 1 Am. Rep. 514; Millard v. Steers, 9 App. Div. 419, 41 N. Y. Supp. 321; McRoberts v. Mathews, 18 App. Div. 624, 45 N. Y. Supp. 481.

Plaintiff cannot recover on the theory that the promise was a collateral one, because there was no note or memorandum in writing thereof, signed by the defendant, sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. The letter signed by him was tentative, and not final; fails to express the terms of any agreement, and, in particular fails to show the consideration for any promise which it may be construed to contain.

Poel v. Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. 216 N. Y. 310, 110 N. E. 619; Brauer v. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. 178 N. Y. 339, 70 N. E. 863; Drake v. Seaman, 97 N. Y. 230; Barney v. Forbes, 118 N. Y. 580, 23 N. E. 890; Glens Falls Lumber Co. v. Joseph T. Ryerson & Son, 175 App. Div. 769, 162 N. Y. Supp. 427.

The plaintiff has been paid in full for all materials furnished and services rendered since March 4th, 1912.

Winne v. Mehrbach, 130 App. Div. 329, 114 N. Y. Supp. 618; Pfeiffer v. Adler, 37 N. Y. 164; Belknap v. Bender, 75 N. Y. 446, 31 Am. Rep. 476.

The court will not reverse the judgment appealed from, unless the evidence presented by the plaintiff is substantial, credible, and makes out a prima facie case.

Laidlaw v. Sage, 158 N. Y. 73, 44 L.R.A. 216, 52 N. E. 679; Re Case, 214 N. Y. 199, 108 N. E. 408; Jewell v. Parr, 13 C. B. 916, 138 Eng. Reprint, 1463.

Pound, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff declares on a balance of about $4,000 alleged to be due on account for materials furnished to Oceanic Publishing Company, a corporation, for which it is alleged that defendant agreed to pay. The complaint was dismissed at the close of plaintiff's evidence, and the question is whether sufficient evidence was adduced to establish prima facie defendant's liability as a primary principal debtor.

Defendant was a large stockholder in Oceanic Publishing Company, which was publishing a semi-monthly periodical entitled "Dogs in America," which plaintiff was printing for it. On February 29, 1912, plaintiff brought to the attention of defendant by letter the fact that it had been carrying a large account with his company which was past due, and asked him to make some arrangement for the systematic payment of it. On March 1st defendant answered, explaining that he had nothing to do with the direct management of the company; that the president, Vandergrift, conducted the business; that he expected that Vandergrift would soon resign and allow him to assume the management of the paper; and that he would be glad to meet the representative of plaintiff to make arrangements for the payment of the back account due it and for future issues. This letter contains no promise to pay plaintiff the debt of Oceanic Publishing Company, but it contains a personal assurance that defendant will furnish Oceanic Publishing Company money to pay for each future issue.

The parties met on March 4th, and Aberle, plaintiff's representative, testifies as follows: "I met Mr. Albright on that morning, and Mr. Albright stated to me in substance—at least he said directly: 'I am now in charge of the Oceanic Publishing Company. I will run it hereafter. Mr. Vandergrift has withdrawn.' He inquired about the size of the account, and I had a statement with me, which I showed him. The exact figure I haven't here now. It was something like $3,000. We discussed the thing generally, and he said, 'Well, you can't expect me to pay all of this.' He says: 'I will agree to pay you $1,500 in three payments, $500 weekly. I will further agree to pay each issue hereafter in cash, before you send it out.' This I want to say, because we had notified the publishing company that we would not publish hereafter unless the cash was in evidence. That was really in answer to our request. Mr. Davidson, the treasurer of the company, was then present in the office. I asked Mr. Albright to give me this in writing, and he said: 'No, I am an honorable man; my word is my bond. Besides, you have Davidson here as a witness.' " It later appeared that the money was to be forwarded by defendant to Mr. Davidson, the treasurer of the Oceanic Company.

No other promise, original or collateral, was ever made by defendant to plaintiff to pay the debt of Oceanic Publishing Company, and, if the promise is to answer for its debt, it is unenforceable, because no note or memorandum in writing was made, sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the Statute of Frauds.

Assuming that defendant, in the interview above quoted, was speaking for himself, and not merely as the representative of his company, it may be said that some of the elements of an original, enforceable, absolute promise on his part to pay $1,500 of the back indebtedness and to pay for future issues unquestionably appear. Technically, at least, defendant had a substantial interest to subserve in making the promise. He had—or at least he said that he had—taken control of Oceanic Publishing Company, and was about to reorganize it. It was his desire to have the plaintiff continue to issue "Dogs in America," and perhaps it was a benefit to him to have the periodical appear regularly without a change of publishers. Thus the element of a new consideration moving to him was present. But his beneficial interest was at best remote. Unquestionably, the principal debt was not extinguished, and credit was still given and to be given to Oceanic Publishing Company.

On this evidence it is urged that defendant became a primary debtor with Oceanic Publishing Company (White v. Rintoul, 108 N. Y. 222, 15 N. E. 318; First Nat. Bank v. Chalmers, 144 N. Y. 432, 39 N. E. 331; A. Schwoerer & Sons v. Stone, 130 App. Div. 796, 115 N. Y. Supp. 440, affirmed in 200 N. Y. 560, 93 N. E. 1116; R. & L. Co. v. Metz, 165 App. Div. 533, 537, 538, 150 N. Y. Supp. 843, affirmed in 215 N. Y. 695, 109 N. E. 1091), and that plaintiff was entitled to recover.

But a promise may still be collateral, even though the new con-

Contract—to pay debt of corporation.

Corporation—liability of stockholder to pay debt.

consideration moves to the promisor and is beneficial to him. The elements of beneficial interest and new consideration must be present to take the case out of the statute; but the inquiry remains whether the consideration is such that the promisor thereby comes under an independent duty of payment, irrespective of the liability of the principal debtor. White v. Rintoul, supra, at page 227 of 108 N. Y. The implied consideration, as indicated by the subsequent dealings of the parties, is that plaintiff will continue to give credit primarily to Oceanic Publishing Company. Plaintiff was notified on March 14, 1912, that defendant admitted no responsibility as to its claim, and it is indisputable that plaintiff thereafter considered that the primary duty of payment remained with the original debtor. It continued to furnish materials and render services to Oceanic Publishing Company, publishing its periodical down to the issue of September 19th; it kept no account with defendant on its books; made but one demand on him to furnish money in advance of an issue of the periodical, and that was for the issue of March 7th, which brought forth the denial of responsibility; took assignments of accounts from Oceanic Publishing Company; took assignments of stock under an agreement

Contract—
collateral promise—Statute of Frauds.

which gave it control of Oceanic Publishing Company; took possession of all its personal property, books, and papers, and turned to defendant only when the resources of the original debtor had been completely exhausted. The tenor of the entire transaction was that defendant purposed to help out the Oceanic Company and verbally promised to pay its debts.

When the primary debt continues to exist, the promise of another to pay the debt may be original, or it may not be; but it is regarded as original only when the party sought to be charged clearly becomes, within the intention of the parties, a principal debtor primarily liable. If we pick a few phrases from the context, we may draw the conclusion that defendant intended to assume such a relation to plaintiff; but on all the evidence we find but one principal primary debtor, and that is Oceanic Publishing Company. The ancient purpose of the Statute of Frauds was to require satisfactory evidence of a promise to answer for the debt of another person, and its efficacy should not be wasted by unsubstantial verbal distinctions.

—to pay another's debt—primary liability.

The judgment should be affirmed, with costs.

Hiscock, Ch. J., and Chase, Collin, Cuddeback, Cardozo, and Andrews, JJ., concur.

ANNOTATION.

Statute of Frauds: validity of oral promise by stockholder to pay debt of corporation.

- I. In general, 1199.
- II. When promise is to secure benefit to promisor apart from interest as stockholder, 1202.
- III. Promise to secure continued performance of contract with corporation, 1203.
- IV. Promise to induce forbearance by creditor of corporation, 1206.
- V. Promise to induce further loans to the corporation, 1208.
- VI. Promise to induce compromise of claim against the corporation, 1208.
- VII. Where promisor owns substantially all the stock of debtor corporation, 1209.
- VIII. Promise by one stockholder to another, 1210.
- IX. Where promisor is substituted as debtor, 1210.
- X. Contemporaneous promise:
  - a. In general, 1211.
  - b. Where a charge is made against the corporation, 1212.

I. In general.

As indicated by the title, this note deals with cases involving that provision of the Statute of Frauds which, in effect, makes invalid all oral promises to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another. Notwithstanding the general confusion existing among the courts with regard to the application of the statute to oral promises to pay another's debt, it is settled that an oral promise of this character is not within the statute if, in effect, it amounts to an original promise; while it is generally held to be within the statute if it is collateral. The question here raised is whether or not a promise by a stockholder to pay the debt of a corporation is original or collateral within the foregoing rule. An original promise is generally held to be one in which the primary object of the promisor is to subserve or promote some personal interest of his own rather than to become a surety or guarantor for another. In this regard a distinction is to be observed between a promise based upon a consideration sufficient to support a contract independently of the Statute of Frauds, and a promise, the consideration for which is of such a character as to make the promise an original one. The applicability of the statute to an oral promise does not depend upon the question as to whether there is a consideration for the promise which would be sufficient to support it if it were not for the Statute of Frauds. The real question is whether or not the consideration is of a character which stamps the promise as an original one. As applied to the question here raised as to oral promises by a stockholder or officer of a corporation, it may be said that a promise by such a person or persons to answer for the debt of the corporation is original where the primary object of the promisor is to secure some direct and personal benefit from the performance by the promisee of his contract with the corporation, or from his refraining to exercise against the corporation some right existing in him by virtue of the contract. The benefit to the promisor is to be distinguished from the indirect benefit which would accrue to him merely as an officer or stockholder in the corporation. If the benefit accruing is direct and personal, then the promise is original within the rule, and the validity thereof is not affected by the Statute of Frauds.

United States.—Emerson v. Slater (1860) 22 How. 28, 16 L. ed. 360; Davis v. Patrick (1891) 141 U. S. 479, 35 L. ed. 826, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 58 (rule recognized, but not applied).

Alabama.—Cassels v. Alabama City, G. & A. R. Co. (1916) 198 Ala. 250, 73 So. 494.

Connecticut.—S. J. Cordner Co. v. Manevets (1918) 92 Conn. 587, 103 Atl. 842.

Illinois.—Donovan v. Purtell (1905) 216 Ill. 629, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 176, 75 N. E. 834; Brown v. Reinberger (1913) 177 Ill. App. 297.

Iowa.—Whinnery v. Cundiff (1915) — Iowa, —, 150 N. W. 659.

Kentucky.—Creel v. Bell (1829) 2 J. J. Marsh. 309; Grant v. Pearce (1894) 16 Ky. L. Rep. 204.

Missouri.—Beall v. Board of Trade (1912) 164 Mo. App. 186, 148 S. W. 886; Rubey Trust Co. v. Weidner (1913) 174 Mo. App. 692, 161 S. W. 333.

Montana.—Bennighoff v. Robbins (1917) 54 Mont. 66, 166 Pac. 687.

New Jersey. — Cortelyou v. Hoagland (1885) 40 N. J. Eq. 1; Fitzgerald Speer Co. v. Kelly (1912) 83 N. J. L. 626, 85 Atl. 1134, affirming (1911) 81 N. J. L. 6, 83 Atl. 491.

New York.—A. Schwoerer & Sons v. Stone (1909) 130 App. Div. 796, 115 N. Y. Supp. 440, affirmed in (1911) 200 N. Y. 560, 93 N. E. 1116; RICHARDSON PRESS v. ALBRIGHT (reported herewith) ante, 1195; Windsor Constr. Co. v. Ruland (1916) 173 App. Div. 94, 159 N. Y. Supp. 446; Levitt v. Griswold (1914) 148 N. Y. Supp. 320.

North Carolina. — Satterfield v. Kindley (1907) 144 N. C. 455, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 399, 57 S. E. 145, 12 Ann. Cas. 1098.

Oklahoma. — Kesler v. Cheadle (1903) 12 Okla. 489, 72 Pac. 367; Lindley v. Kelly (1915) 47 Okla. 328, 147 Pac. 1015.

Oregon.—Manary v. Runyon (1903) 43 Or. 495, 73 Pac. 1028.

Pennsylvania.—Maule v. Bucknell (1865) 50 Pa. 39; Jefferson County v. Slagle (1870) 66 Pa. 202; Thompson v. Hazelwood Sav. & T. Co. (1912) 234 Pa. 452, 83 Atl. 286; Burr v. Mazer (1896) 2 Pa. Super. Ct. 436; Goodling v. Simon (1913) 54 Pa. Super. Ct. 125; Shannon v. American Iron & Steel Mfg. Co. (1917) 66 Pa. Super. Ct. 211.

Rhode Island.—Whitaker v. Greene (1918) — R. I. —, 103 Atl. 779.

Texas.—Uvalde Nat. Bank v. Brooks (1913) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 162 S. W. 957; Enterprise Trading Co. v. Bank of Crowell (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 167 S. W. 296.

Virginia.—Kanter v. M. Hofheimer & Co. (1916) 118 Va. 625, 88 S. E. 60.

West Virginia.—Hurst Hardware Co. v. Goodman (1910) 68 W. Va. 462, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 598, 69 S. E. 898, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 218.

While all of the foregoing cases recognize the principle stated, and most of them apply it, as hereinafter shown they do not all apply it.

The test to determine whether or not a promise by a stockholder to pay the debt of a corporation is original or collateral has been said to be whether credit was given to the promisor or the corporation. Brown v. Reinberger (1913) 177 Ill. App. 297.

In Davis v. Patrick (1891) 141 U. S. 479, 35 L. ed. 826, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 58, the court said: "The purpose of this provision was not to effectuate, but to prevent, wrong. It does not apply to promises in respect to debts created at the instance, and for the benefit, of the promisor, but only to those by which the debt of one party is sought to be charged upon and collected from another. The reason of the statute is obvious, for in the one case if there be any conflict between the parties as to the exact terms of the promise, the courts can see that justice is done by charging against the promisor the reasonable value of that in respect to which the promise was made, while in the other case, and when a third party is the real debtor, and the party alone receiving benefit, it is impossible to solve the conflict of memory or testimony in any manner certain to accomplish justice. There is also a temptation for a promisee, in a case where the real debtor has proved insolvent or unable to pay, to enlarge the scope of the promise, or to torture mere words of encouragement and confidence into an absolute promise; and it is so obviously just that a promisor receiving no benefits should be bound only by the exact terms of his promise, that this statute requiring a memorandum in writing was enacted. Therefore, whenever the alleged promisor is an absolute stranger to the transaction, and without interest in it, courts strictly uphold the obligations of this statute. But cases sometimes arise in which, though a third party is the original obligor, the primary debtor, the promisor has a personal, immediate, and pecuniary interest in the transaction, and is therefore himself a party to be benefited by the performance of the promisee. In such cases the reason which underlies and which prompted this statutory provision fails, and the courts will give effect to the promise."

In Emerson v. Slater (1860) 22 How. (U. S.) 28, 16 L. ed. 360, the rule is stated that "cases in which the guaranty or promise is collateral to the principal contract, but is made at the same time, and becomes an essential ground of the credit given to the principal debtor, are, in general, within the Statute of Frauds. Other cases arise which also fall within the statute, where the collateral agreement is subsequent to the execution of the debt, and was not the inducement to it, on the ground that the subsisting liability was the foundation of the promise on the part of the defendant, without any other direct and separate consideration moving between the parties. But whenever the main purpose and object of the promisor is not to answer for another, but to subserve some pecuniary or business purpose of his own, involving either a benefit to himself, or damage to the other contracting party, his promise is not within the statute, although it may be in form a promise to pay the debt of another, and although the performance of it may incidentally have the effect of extinguishing that liability."

As to the confusion existing among the courts in the application of the statute to oral promises to pay another's debt in Maule v. Bucknell (1865) 50 Pa. 39, the court said: "It must be admitted that the cases respecting the application of the Statute of Frauds are greatly confused and irreconcilable with each other. Upon no subject, perhaps has there been more diversity of judicial decision. The value of the statute is everywhere admitted, and its language is plain, but in the supposed justice of a particular case, a court has often lost sight of the exact rule prescribed by the legislature. As much ingenuity has been expended in efforts to take individual cases out of the statute as was formerly devoted to avoiding the Statute of Limitations, and in these ingenious efforts, principles have been asserted which, if sound, practically deny all effect to the expressed will of the legislature. Happily, there are glimmerings of late, of a tendency to return to a plainer reading of the act, and to give to it a construction more consonant to the apparent mind of the legislature. In this state we have very few decisions upon the subject, for our statute has been in existence only since 1855, but as it is a substantial copy of the British statute, and those of other states, the judgments of their courts cannot be overlooked. Without attempting any extended review of them, we think certain principles may safely be considered as settled, or, if not settled, sustained by reason, and the authority of the best-considered adjudications. It is not true, as a general rule, that a promise to pay the debt of another is not within the statute, if it rests upon a new consideration passing from the promisee to the promisor. A new consideration for a new promise is indispensable without the statute, and if a new consideration is all that is needed to give validity to a promise to pay the debt of another, the statute amounts to nothing. Nor can it make any difference that the new consideration moves from the promisee to the promisor. The object of the statute is protection against 'fraudulent practices commonly endeavored to be upheld by perjury,' and to these all suits upon verbal contracts to answer for another's debt or default are equally exposed, no matter whence the consideration of the contract proceeded or to whom it passed. Indeed, many of the cases hold that the question always is, What was the promise? not, What was its consideration?"

8 A.L.R.—76.

And in Enterprise Trading Co. v. Bank of Crowell (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 167 S. W. 296, it is said that "there is considerable loose language upon the question of a new contract taking a case out of the Statute of Frauds, because, forsooth, it is based upon a subsequent contract and a new consideration. Though the promise is new and original—original in the sense it had no original connection with the debt—does not take the case out of the statute; neither because you vary the form of the consideration to the promisee, though created subsequently, does it make the promise new and original, in the sense of taking it out of the statute, as long as the principal object in view is to stand good for another's debt."

It is clear that where the oral promise by a stockholder to pay the debt of the corporation is collateral in form and effect, and the consideration, therefore, is not to secure or promote some personal object or advantage of the promisor as distinguished from the indirect benefit to him from the mere fact of his being a stockholder of the corporation, the promise is collateral and within the Statute of Frauds.

Connecticut. — Temple v. Bush (1903) 76 Conn. 41, 55 Atl. 557.

Illinois.—Home Nat. Bank v. Waterman (1890) 134 Ill. 464, 25 N. E. 648, 29 N. E. 503; Brown v. Reinberger (1913) 177 Ill. App. 297.

Massachusetts. — Free Schools v. Flint (1847) 13 Met. 539; Carleton v. Floyd, R. & Co. (1906) 192 Mass. 204, 78 N. E. 126.

Missouri. — Walther v. Merrell (1878) 6 Mo. App. 371.

New York. — Quin v. Hanford

(1841) 1 Hill, 82; Mechanics & T. Bank v. Stettheimer (1906) 116 App. Div. 198, 101 N. Y. Supp. 513; Winne v. Mehrbach (1909) 130 App. Div. 329, 114 N. Y. Supp. 618; Yracheta v. Stanford (1909) 120 N. Y. Supp. 117.

North Carolina. — Satterfield v. Kindley (1907) 144 N. C. 455, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 399, 57 S. E. 145, 12 Ann. Cas. 1098.

Pennsylvania.—Maule v. Bucknell (1865) 50 Pa. 39; Shannon v. American Iron & Steel Mfg. Co. (1917) 66 Pa. Super. Ct. 211.

South Carolina. — Turner v. Lyles (1904) 68 S. C. 392, 48 S. E. 301.

Virginia. — Friedlin v. Crockin (1911) 122 Va. 521, 95 S. E. 432.

A mere promise by a stockholder to pay an existing debt of the corporation is collateral and within the Statute of Frauds. Home Nat. Bank v. Waterman (1890) 134 Ill. 464, 25 N. E. 648; Brown v. Reinberger (1913) 177 Ill. App. 297.

In Free Schools v. Flint (1847) 13 Met. (Mass.) 539, on the assumption that a trustee orally promised to pay the debt of the corporation, the court said that such a promise would be inoperative and void by reason of the Statute of Frauds.

In Winne v. Mehrbach (1909) 130 App. Div. 329, 114 N. Y. Supp. 618, in holding that an oral promise by a stockholder to pay the debt of a corporation was collateral, the court said that whatever may have been the interest of the defendant or the stockholder in the corporation, he was not individually liable for its debts. His assumption of liability upon the contract in question was only for a collateral liability as surety in case of the nonpayment by the corporation. The promise, therefore, was clearly one contemplated by the Statute of Frauds.

In Quin v. Hanford (1841) 1 Hill (N. Y.) 82, where the contractor for the construction of a church building gave an order upon the treasurer of the society to a subcontractor for the amount due the latter, and the treasurer, who was also a trustee of the church and a member of the building committee, orally agreed to pay the order within a few days, the agreement was held to be collateral and within the Statute of Frauds. It is pointed out that the promisor held the church money as a bailee of the society and subject to its orders, and the church could not only direct him to pay any other creditor in preference to this particular one, but it could at its pleasure withdraw the fund and place the same in the hands of another agent.

II. When promise is to secure benefit to promisor apart from interest as stockholder.

It is obvious that there is a distinction between a promise by a stockholder of a corporation to pay a claim owing by it where the purpose is to promote or secure some benefit or advantage to himself individually, separate and distinct from any advantage or benefit which would accrue to him indirectly as a stockholder of the corporation, and a promise merely to promote the interest of, or secure some advantage to, the corporation from which he might benefit as a stockholder. It is reasonably clear that if the promise by a stockholder to pay a debt of the corporation is to secure or promote some interest or advantage for himself individually, rather than indirectly in the capacity of stockholder, the promise is original, and is not within the Statute of Frauds.

An illustration of a promise to pay the debt of a corporation for the direct purpose of promoting the promisor's interest is found in Cassels v. Alabama City, G. & A. R. Co. (1916) 198 Ala. 250, 78 So. 494. In that case it appeared that a corporation was indebted for the rental of a meter, and the creditor refused to move the meter to the works of a stockholder until this indebtedness was paid. A promise under these circumstances by this stockholder to pay the debt of the corporation in instalments on condition that the promisee remove the meter to the promisor's plant was held to be original, and not within the Statute of Frauds.

In Satterfield v. Kindley (1907) 144 N. C. 455, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 399, 57 S. E. 145, 12 Ann. Cas. 1098, a promise by the intending purchaser of the property of an insolvent corporation, which was being sold at a public sale to pay its debts, that if permitted to purchase the property he would pay all of the debts of the corporation without reference to the price at which he might purchase the same, was construed as a promise to pay a given price for the property, that is, an amount sufficient to pay the debts of the corporation, rather than an agreement to pay the debts of another, and hence it was not a collateral promise within the Statute of Frauds.

But see Maule v. Bucknell (1865) 50 Pa. 39, which holds to be collateral a promise to pay the debts of a corporation, made to the majority of the directors on condition that such directors would transfer certain of their stock to the promisors and resign their office as directors, to the end that the promisors might become directors. The court said: "It was a promise to pay the debts of the 'Eastern Market Company.' It was strictly collateral to those debts, not a substituted obligation. Those debts still continued. The company remained the primary debtor, and had they paid, the defendants would have had nothing to pay either to the plaintiff or to the original debtor. The promise of the defendants was therefore in no sense a promise to pay their own debt, or a debt of their property. It was not in relief of any property they owned or upon which they held a lien. Nor was the consideration for the promise of a nature to take the case out of the statute. It was not a placing in the hands of the defendants, by the debtor or the creditor, funds, securities, or property of the debtor pledged or devoted to the payment of the debts. The transfer of the small number of shares of stock, and the resignation by the plaintiffs of their directorship, were to enable the defendants to become directors, not to place funds in their hands to pay the debts. The averment is, that it was their own money they promised to pay in discharge of the debts, and it is because they did not pay their own money that this action is brought."

III. Promise to secure continued performance of contract with corporation.

In many of the cases in which this question has been presented, and which have held that an oral promise by a stockholder to pay for goods or articles furnished a corporation was original, and not within the Statute of Frauds, on the ground that the primary object of the promisor was to receive some personal benefit from the performance of the contract, the promise was made by a stockholder to a contractor or materialman to induce him to continue performance of the contract after he had refused to perform on the ground of the failure of the corporation to pay him according to its contract. In these cases, as a rule, it is held that such a promise is original, and not within the Statute of Frauds, especially as to work performed or material furnished subsequently to the promise.

United States.—Emerson v. Slater (1859) 22 How. 28, 16 L. ed. 360.

New Jersey.—Fitzgerald Speer Co. v. Kelly (1912) 83 N. J. L. 626, 85 Atl. 1134, affirming (1911) 81 N. J. L. 6, 83 Atl. 491.

New York.—A. Schwoerer & Sons v. Stone (1909) 180 App. Div. 796, 115 N. Y. Supp. 440, affirmed in (1911) 200 N. Y. 560, 93 N. E. 1116; Windsor Constr. Co. v. Ruland (1916) 173 App. Div. 94, 159 N. Y. Supp. 446; Levitt v. Griswold (1914) 148 N. Y. Supp. 320.

Oklahoma. — Kesler v. Cheadle (1903) 12 Okla. 489, 72 Pac. 367.

Pennsylvania.—Jefferson County v. Slagle (1870) 66 Pa. 202; Burr v. Mazer (1896) 2 Pa. Super. Ct. 436.

In Emerson v. Slater (U. S.) supra, it appeared that the person contracting for the construction of bridges for a railway company, after the contract was partially performed, refused to proceed thereunder for the reason that the railway company failed to make the monthly payments according to the terms of the contract. To remedy this difficulty and insure the completion of the bridges so as to render the road available for use, the defendant contracted with the plaintiff for the completion of the bridges. This contract was held not to be within the statute.

It does not appear that the defendant was a stockholder in the corporation, but he was a creditor of the corporation, and held an assignment of the proceeds of the railroad for a certain period of time.

In A. Schwoerer & Sons v. Stone (1909) 130 App. Div. 796, 115 N. Y. Supp. 440, affirmed in (1911) 200 N. Y. 560, 93 N. E. 1116, a stockholder, in order to induce a construction company to perform a contract with the corporation, agreed that if the construction company went ahead and performed the contract, he would pay for everything done on the job. This promise was held to be original. The court said: "The promise sought to be enforced related to the indebtedness thereafter to be created. It was an original promise, founded upon a new consideration, which was work thereafter to be performed and materials thereafter to be furnished. . . . It was beneficial to the promisor by reason of his interest in the Wolff Construction Company or the Mannados Realty Company, or both. Thus, the case is brought within the rule laid down in White v. Rintoul (1888) 108 N. Y. 222, 15 N. E. 318, in which the court said: 'Where the primary debt subsists and was antecedently contracted, the promise to pay it is original when it is founded on a new consideration moving to the promisor and beneficial to him, and such that the promisor thereby comes under an independent duty of payment irrespective of the liability of the principal debtor.'"

In Windsor Constr. Co. v. Ruland (1916) 173 App. Div. 94, 159 N. Y. Supp. 446, the court said that an agreement by stockholders in a realty company to pay a contractor for his work for the company, provided he completed the contract and did not file a mechanics' lien for the amount then due, was original as to money due and work thereafter performed, provided the work was performed in reliance upon the promise. It was held, however, that, as a matter of fact, the promise relied upon had not been made.

It has been held that where a contractor released a mechanics' lien filed against property, and continued to perform the contract according to the direction of an officer of the corporation upon the agreement of the latter to pay the amount due under the contract and the amount thereafter to be earned thereunder, the promise was original, and not within the statute. Levitt v. Griswold (1914) 148 N. Y. Supp. 320; Windsor Constr. Co. v. Ruland (1914) 148 N. Y. Supp. 386.

In Kesler v. Cheadle (1903) 12 Okla. 489, 72 Pac. 367, the promise by an officer and stockholder of a corporation that he would see that the promisee was paid for all coal then delivered for the use of the corporation, and which should thereafter be delivered by him, was held to be original, both as to the coal already delivered and that subsequently delivered. In this case the evidence showed that after the promisee had delivered part of the coal to the corporation and had not been paid therefor, the bill was presented to the promisor and he was asked who was to pay it; the promisor did not at the time pay the bill, but said to bring the bill in at a later time and to go ahead and deliver more coal and he would see that it was paid. Under these circumstances it was held to be a question of fact for the jury as to whether or not the promise was original and not within the statute, or collateral and within it.

In Winne v. Mehrbach (1909) 130 App. Div. 329, 114 N. Y. Supp. 618, it appeared that a stockholder of a corporation which was indebted for ice theretofore furnished agreed to pay whatever amount the corporation was eventually short, including the amount then unpaid and the amount unpaid for ice thereafter furnished. The validity of this agreement was sustained as to the amount unpaid by the corporation for ice subsequently furnished, but as to the amount then unpaid the promise was held to be within the Statute of Frauds.

A case of interest on this point is Davis v. Patrick (1891) 141 U. S. 479, 35 L. ed. 826, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 58. It does not appear that the defendant, promisor, was a stockholder in the corporation; but it does appear that he represented to the promisee that he was practically the owner of the corporation, and, as a matter of fact, the corporation was largely indebted to him. Under these circumstances, in order to secure the payment of his debt from the corporation, it was to his interest that its product should be transported, and to secure such transportation, he promised the plaintiff that he would be personally responsible for his pay if he transported such product, and said that he would see him paid. Notwithstanding the form of the promise, it was held to be original. While conceding that in form this promise implied that someone else was also bound, the court said: "But the real character of a promise does not depend altogether upon the form of expression, but largely on the situation of the parties; and the question always is, what the parties mutually understood by the language, whether they understood it to be a collateral or a direct promise. Patrick declares he understood it to be a direct promise, and acted on the faith of it. That Davis understood it in the same way is evidenced not only from the circumstances surrounding the parties at the time, but from the fact that in a subsequent interview, when charged to have always promised to pay this debt, he admits that he believes that he did. The plaintiff, believing that Davis was, as he said, practically the owner, the party primarily to be benefited by the conversion of the products of the mine into money, understood that Davis was making an original promise to pay for the work which he might do, and upon such promise he might surely rely as an original promise, at least for any work done thereafter."

Compare with the reported case (RICHARDSON PRESS v. ALBRIGHT, ante, 1195). In this case the facts were that a stockholder in a publishing company was asked by a creditor of the company to make some arrangement for the payment of its past-due claim against the company. The defendant explained that he had nothing to do with the direction or management of the company, but expected subsequently to assume the management thereof, and that he would be glad to meet the creditor and make arrangement for the payment of the back account due it and for the performance of further work by it for the company. Subsequently the defendant agreed to pay a certain amount of the existing indebtedness of the company in instalments, and further agreed to pay for subsequent work by the promisee in cash, the promisee having notified the publishing company that it would not continue to do work for it unless the cash was in evidence. This promise was held to be collateral, and within the Statute of Frauds, even assuming that the promisor was speaking for himself, and not merely as representative of the company, and although there were some elements of an original promise in the agreement in question, and technically the promisor had a substantial interest to subserve in making the promise. The court said that the element of a new consideration moving to the promisor was present, but his beneficial interest was at best remote, and in this connection it is pointed out that the principal debt was not extinguished, and credit was still given, and to be given, to the publishing company.

In Hurst Hardware Co. v. Goodman (1910) 68 W. Va. 462, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 598, 69 S. E. 898, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 218, the facts were that the officers and stockholders of a corporation orally promised to pay for goods furnished the corporation. The promise was made after the corporation had failed to pay its bills promptly, and the sellers declined to fill further orders, whereupon the defendant made the promise relied upon to bind him personally, in which the promisor was to be personally responsible for amounts to become due on all further purchases by the corporation. This promise was held to be collateral and within the Statute of Frauds, upon the ground that it did not appear that there was anything of advantage or personal benefit, which accrued directly and immediately to the promisor.

IV. Promise to induce forbearance by creditor of corporation.

In jurisdictions which adhere strictly to the rule that an oral promise to pay the debt of another is within the Statute of Frauds unless the primary purpose of the promisor was to secure some personal benefit or advantage for himself, it is held that an oral promise by a stockholder to pay a debt of the corporation, made to induce the promisee to forbear to press or prosecute his claim against the corporation, is within the Statute of Frauds and void, since the benefit accruing to the promisor from the mere fact of his being a stockholder in the debtor corporation is not a sufficient consideration to make the promise an original one.

In Carleton v. Floyd, R. & Co. (1906) 192 Mass. 204, 78 N. E. 126, the facts were that a stockholder was about to acquire the business of a corporation, and he orally promised to pay a debt against the corporation if the creditor would refrain from attaching its property. This promise was held to be within the Statute of Frauds. The court, in reaching this conclusion, quotes from the language by Morton, J., in Ames v. Foster (1871) 106 Mass. 400, 8 Am. Rep. 343, to the effect that "the defendant's promise was, in its primary and essential character, a promise to guarantee the debt of another. Its object was to secure the payment of the old debt, which was not extinguished. The defendant's liability was collateral and contingent, would exist as long as the original debt existed, and would be extinguished whenever the original debtors should pay that debt. It was not in any sense his debt; the original party remained liable; and there is an entire absence of any liability on the part of the defendant or his property, except such as arises from his express promise. . . . When all these elements concur, we know of no case in this commonwealth which sanctions the doctrine that such promise loses its character as collateral, and becomes an original promise, because there is a consideration which is beneficial to the promisor."

In Walther v. Merrell (1878) 6 Mo. App. 370, an oral agreement by the president of a bank to a depositor to pay him the entire amount of his deposit if the bank should fail was held to be within the Statute of Frauds, although made for the purpose of, and actually resulting in, inducing the depositor to permit the deposit to remain with the bank. The court said: "In the case at bar, the promise was to pay the debt of another. Merrell was certainly not the bank. The promise was clearly collateral. Merrell was to pay the deposit to plaintiff if the bank should close; the indebtedness of the bank existed when the promise was made, and still subsisted. Here was no distinctly new consideration moving directly to the promisor, and substantial, so as to be a clearly sufficient motive for the transaction. The main object was forbearance to the bank, and any benefit to the promisor was merely incidental. It is true, defendant was an officer and shareholder of the bank, and might be benefited by the action of plaintiff in leaving the deposit; but that is not enough."

But in Yracheta v. Stanford (1909) 120 N. Y. Supp. 117, where goods were furnished a partnership which was subsequently succeeded by a corporation, a promise to pay for the goods by one who was a member both of the partnership and the corporation was held to be collateral, there being no question of forbearance by the promisee.

And in Friedlin v. Crockin (1911) 122 Va. 521, 95 S. E. 432, a promise by a stockholder of the corporation to pay the rental of property rented to the corporation was held to be collateral and within the Statute of Frauds, there being no evidence that the creditor released the corporation or waived any rights to subject the corporate assets to the payment of the indebtedness.

In some jurisdictions, however, on the theory that a consideration which is independent and sufficient to support a contract will take an oral promise out of the Statute of Frauds, forbearance by the creditor to press a claim against the corporation has been held to be a sufficient consideration to sustain as original a promise by a stockholder of the corporation to pay the debt in consideration of such forbearance.

Thus, in Goodling v. Simon (1913) 54 Pa. Super. Ct. 125, where a creditor of a corporation was threatening to sue it on a note, thereby forcing the company into a situation which would be dangerous to the interest of the promisor, a stockholder and creditor of the corporation, and he thereupon promised to pay the debt within a certain time if the creditor refrained from suing the corporation, the promise was held to be original. The court stated the rule to be that wherever the main purpose and object of the promisor was not to answer for another, but to subserve some pecuniary or business purpose of his own, involving either a benefit to himself or loss to the other contracting party, his promise was not within the statute, although the promise to pay the debt of another, and this was true even though as a result the debt of the corporation was extinguished.

In Enterprise Trading Co. v. Bank of Crowell (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 167 S. W. 296, it was held that a promise by a trustee for the sale of the goods of the corporation, who was also a stockholder, to pay a note against the corporation in consideration of forbearance by the creditor to press the claim, was original. The court pointed out that while there was not an agreement of forbearance directly in favor of the debtors owing the note to the bank, yet the effect of the agreement operated to that extent; "the agreement is to forbear the exercise of legal rights against a third person, a corporation, and its representatives interested therein. If the promise is collateral, and the original debt continues, and such promise is not one based upon some new consideration to the promisor so as to except it from the statute, of course it must be in writing." Upon this point it is said that the testimony shows that the promisor was not only subserving a purpose of the corporation, but was also subserving a personal purpose.

In Thompson v. Hazelwood Sav. & T. Co. (1912) 234 Pa. 452, 83 Atl. 284, where an officer of a corporation agreed with the bank that if it would renew a note against the corporation, he would deposit in the bank a certain sum of money and would not withdraw this deposit till the note was paid in full, the agreement was held to amount to a pledge of the deposit, and hence not to be within the Statute of Frauds.

In Creel v. Bell (1829) 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 309, where a stockholder and director of a bank induced a depositor to permit the use of his deposit by the bank to discharge certain of its debts, by orally promising to pay the amount of the deposit, the court, in holding the promise to be original, and not within the statute, said: "The promise in this case (if there be one) may not be, and we would suppose is not, within the statute. It was made with approbation of the bank to pay to the Bells the debt which Creel owed the bank, in consideration that they would not draw their deposit, but let the bank use it. Here is a new contract, on a distinct consideration. It is not a collateral undertaking, barely to pay the debt of the bank. It is independent contract to pay the creditors of the bank the debt which Creel owed the bank. The consideration is the use of the deposit on one side, and the debt due by Creel on the other. Such a contract on a new consideration between the parties is not a contract merely to pay the debt of another, it is a contract on a sufficient consideration, unconnected with the liability of the bank to pay the debt of Creel himself. . . . And, therefore, it may be binding without being reduced to writing. . . . Where the promise is founded upon some new consideration sufficient in law to support it, and is, not merely for the debt, etc., of another, such an undertaking, though, in effect, it be to answer for another person, is considered as an original promise, and not within the statute; as where A promises B to pay him a sum of money in case he will withdraw his record in an action of assault and battery (against C)."

V. Promise to induce further loans to the corporation.

In Mechanics' & T. Bank v. Stettheimer (1906) 116 App. Div. 198, 101 N. Y. Supp. 513; where the stockholders orally guaranteed the payment of all loans thereafter made to the corporation by a bank, the court, in holding that, although the bank continued to make loans to the corporation upon the faith of this agreement, the promise was nevertheless collateral, said that there was no distinction between a case "where an antecedent indebtedness existed at the time of the promise, and a case where the indebtedness is created subsequent to the promise. The liability of the promisor must in each case be determined by the nature of the promise, whether it was to answer for the debt of a third person or whether it was to answer for his own debt. In this case, was the note of the beer cask company that was discounted by the plaintiff, and the checks of the beer cask company which were paid by the plaintiff and which created the overdraft, a loan to the corporation which the defendant and his copromisors agreed to guarantee or pay if the beer cask company did not? It is undoubtedly true that the money was advanced to the beer cask company in reliance upon the promise of the defendant and his copromisors to be responsible for the loan, but it was clearly a loan to the company, and not to the promisors. Mr. Wallach testified to the offer made by the plaintiff's president, that he would 'advance the company whatever money the company required, provided that we who were there would be responsible for it.' The plaintiff's president testified that 'the conversation was about borrowing some money for the company, and I told them that the bank would not loan the American Beer Cask Company any money, as they do not loan money to corporations. Then they all agreed to loan this money, and each one would guarantee their proportionate share for the amount of that note, or any moneys that would be wanted for the benefit of the American Beer Cask Company.' On cross-examination he said: 'The amount of money which I say Mr. Stettheimer, in common with others, guaranteed to make good to the bank, was such moneys as should be advanced by the bank on notes or overdrafts after that date;' and on the faith of this agreement the plaintiff advanced not to the promisors, but to the company, and the advances were used by the company in the transaction of its business. The subsequent transactions were all between the company and the plaintiff; its note was discounted by the plaintiff, and was renewed from time to time; its checks were paid by the plaintiff, as presented. The bank could not have collected from the defendant and his copromisors the amount of this note, which it had discounted, until the note became due. The whole course of business shows that it was the company to which the bank advanced the money, and it was the company that was primarily responsible for the amount of the note and of the overdrafts. The promise was to guarantee or be responsible for the amount of the note of the company that the bank discounted, or of the overdrafts made by the company. Within the rule established in this state, this was the company's debt, and the agreement sought to be enforced was an agreement to answer for the company's debt, and not for the debt of the promisors. I think this promise was within the statute and is, therefore, void."

VI. Promise to induce compromise of claim against the corporation.

The majority of the cases considering the point hold that where the purpose or object of an oral promise by a stockholder to pay a debt of the corporation is to induce the creditor to compromise or settle his claim against the corporation, the promise is original, and not within the Statute of Frauds.

Thus, in Beall v. Board of Trade (1912) 164 Mo. App. 186, 148 S. W. 386, the facts were that a creditor of a corporation agreed to release the corporation from all claim against it on payment by it of a certain per cent of the indebtedness and the assumption by an officer of the corporation of the balance of the indebtedness. This agreement by the officer was held to be an original promise, and hence not within the Statute of Frauds.

In Whitaker v. Greene (1918) — R. I. —, 103 Atl. 779, it is held that the promise to the creditor of a corporation which was in financial difficulties that if he would settle his claim against the corporation on the basis of 50 per cent thereof, the promisor would pay the balance, was held to be original, and not within the Statute of Frauds. It appeared that the promisor had been a stockholder in the corporation, but it was not clear whether or not he was such stockholder at the time of making the promise in question. In reaching its conclusion, the court said: "This is not a case of a promise to pay the debt of another, but is a promise on the part of the deceased to pay to the plaintiff a certain specified sum in consideration of the surrender by the plaintiff to the corporation of the balance of his claim against the corporation and the evidence thereof in the form of notes. It does not appear exactly when [the promisor] ceased to hold an interest in the corporation, and there is some evidence to the effect that he still had a legal interest in the corporation at the time when this promise is alleged to have been made. If such was the fact, and the plaintiff in consideration of his promise refrained from bringing bankruptcy proceedings, this is a sufficient consideration for the new agreement; but if we assume that Mr. Greene did not have any legal interest in the corporation at the time this promise was made, if the plaintiff, acting in reliance upon this promise of Mr. Greene, surrendered the balance of his claim and the notes to the corporation, this would be a detriment to the plaintiff, and consequently a legal consideration for the promise of Mr. Greene, even although the latter derived no benefit from the performance of the promise."

According to the California Code, the promise to answer for the obligation of another is to be deemed original where the promise is for an antecedent obligation, and it is made upon the consideration that the promisee will cancel such antecedent obligation and accept the new promise as a substitute therefor, or if there is a consideration beneficial to the promisor. In Fairchild v. Cartwright (1918) — Cal. App. —, 178 Pac. 333, applying this provision, it is held that an oral promise by the president of a corporation to pay certain obligations of the corporation in consideration of the promisee agreeing to take less than the whole amount of his claim against the corporation is original.

In Temple v. Bush (1903) 76 Conn. 41, 55 Atl. 557, the president and managing officer of an insolvent corporation, in making a settlement with its creditors, undertook and agreed to take the assets of the corporation and pay the claim of the plaintiff and certain other creditors in full, and a per cent of the balance of the claims, and further agreed that if the assets of the corporation were not sufficient for this purpose, he would pay the balance from his own money. This agreement was held to be within the Statute of Frauds.

VII. Where promisor owns substantially all the stock of debtor corporation.

It has been held that where the promisor owned substantially all of the stock of the corporation, and was transacting his own business in its name for personal convenience, his oral promise to pay a debt of the corporation is based upon a sufficient consideration running to him personally to make the promise original, and hence not within the statute.

For example, in Donovan v. Purtell (1905) 216 Ill. 629, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 176, 75 N. E. 334, it was held that where a person organized a corporation and used it for the purpose of transacting his private business, he is personally liable for the repayment of money which was owing by the corporation and which he orally promised to pay. And see Davis v. Patrick (1891) 141 U. S. 479, 35 L. ed. 826, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 58, supra.

But in Turner v. Lyles (1904) 68 S. C. 392, 48 S. E. 301, it is said that the test to determine whether or not the promise to pay the debt of another is original or collateral is whether there is a new consideration given to the promisor. Applying this test, it was held that the fact that the promisor was the owner of 499 out of 500 shares of stock in a corporation was not a new consideration for his promise to pay a debt of the corporation, so as to make the promise an original one.

And in Goldie-Klenert Distributing Co. v. Bothwell (1912) 67 Wash. 264, 121 Pac. 60, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 849, the seller of goods to a corporation, to be paid for in cash on delivery, having refused to deliver them until paid, a stockholder of the corporation represented to the seller that he was virtually the corporation, but for certain reasons operated the business in its name, and agreed to pay for the goods then delivered and goods thereafter to be delivered if the seller would deliver the goods in question and furnish other goods which should be ordered in the name of the corporation. This promise was held to be collateral and within the Statute of Frauds. The court said that the true import and meaning of the complaint as an entirety was that the promisor induced the promisee to forego its demand upon the corporation for immediate payment of the first account and to extend it further credit upon the promise to indemnify it against loss. This, the court remarked, was clearly the promise to answer for the debt of another. And see the reported case (RICHARDSON PRESS v. ALBRIGHT, ante, 1195).

VIII. Promise by one stockholder to another.

In Cortelyou v. Hoagland (1885) 40 N. J. Eq. 1, it appeared that one both a director and stockholder indorsed a note for the corporation upon the oral promise of other stockholders that if he would do so, they would jointly and severally save him from all loss incurred thereby. This promise was held to be original, and hence not within the Statute of Frauds.

In Grant v. Pearce (1894) 16 Ky. L. Rep. 204, an oral agreement by a stockholder of a corporation to advance his proportionate share of the money necessary to pay the debts of the corporation on condition that other stockholders did likewise was held not to be within the Statute of Frauds. The court said that while the money was advanced ostensibly to the corporation, it was in reality advanced for the purpose of putting the concern on a successful basis.

But in Bennighoff v. Robbins (1917) 54 Mont. 66, 166 Pac. 687, a promise by one stockholder to another that if the latter would pay the debts of the corporation and the corporation was eventually unable to repay the money advanced, he would pay one half thereof, was held to be collateral and within the statute.

IX. Where promisor is substituted as debtor.

Of course, where the promisor is substituted as a debtor in place of the corporation, the release of the corporation and the substitution are a sufficient consideration to support the promise, and being original in character it is not within the Statute of Frauds.

In Hurst Hardware Co. v. Goodman (1910) 68 W. Va. 462, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 598, 69 S. E. 898, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 218, the court remarked: "If, in substance, effect, and main purpose, the oral agreements were for his [the promisor's] benefit, the promises were original, and not collateral undertakings. It is not enough merely to say he was benefited by them. In ordinary contract law a benefit to the promisor or detriment to the promisee constitutes a sufficient consideration. The question we are called upon to determine goes beyond this. How far the policy which dictated the Statute of Frauds, and the terms in which the legislative will is expressed, must have weight in the solution thereof. In almost every instance of the assumption of one man's debt by another there is some reason for the promise, some benefit accruing to the promisor as well as the debtor. The acknowledged and expressly declared purpose of the statute is to preclude the establishment of rights by oral testimony, when the situation of the parties is such as to constitute a strong motive for perjury and fraud in establishing a liability, or the false extension or amplification of conversations and transactions so as to make them impose obligations lying beyond their real scope and effect. To this end, it ordains and declares that no action shall lie to charge any person upon a promise to answer for the debt, default, or misdoings of another, unless the promise or some memorandum or note thereof be in writing, signed by the party to be charged thereby or his agent. Tested by its letter, the statute inhibits proof of an oral promise to pay the debt of a third person. That some benefit accrues to the promisor for the service rendered, or the property sold and delivered, to such third person, does not necessarily make the debt that of the promisor or prevent it from being that of such third person. If the debt is that of another, and not of the promisor, the terms of the statute include it, and an incidental benefit accruing to the promisor cannot exclude it. If, on the other hand, the debt is that of the promisor, the promise is not within the statute, though a third person may be incidentally relieved of an obligation in consequence of payment. If, for a consideration, the promisor has assumed the debt of another and made it his own, the promise lies beyond the terms and policy of the statute. Neither its terms nor policy relate exclusively to the subject of benefit or detriment. The subject-matter is the mode of proof of the assumption by one man of another's debt. Therefore, whether the debt is that of another is the true test."

In Maule v. Bucknell (1865) 50 Pa. 39, the court said: "It is undoubtedly true that a promise to answer for the debt or default of another is not within the statute, unless it be collateral to a continued liability of the original debtor. If it be a substitute, an arrangement by which the debt of the other is extinguished, as where the creditor gives up his claim on his original debtor, and accepts the new promise in lieu thereof, it need not be in writing. And as the cases referred to show, it may be unaffected by the statute, though the original debt remains, if the promisor has received a fund pledged, set apart, or held for the payment of the debt. But except in such cases, and others perhaps of a kindred nature, in which the contract shows an intention of the parties that the new promisor shall become the principal debtor, and the old debtor become but secondarily liable, the rule, it is believed, may be safely stated, that while the old debt remains, the new must be regarded as not an original undertaking, and that it is therefore within the statute. At least this may be stated as a principle generally accurate."

In Fields v. Bullington (1917) 20 Ga. App. 102, 92 S. E. 653, an oral promise by an officer of a corporation to pay a debt due from the corporation was said not to be within the Statute of Frauds if there was a substitution, but there was held to be no substitution where the corporation did not officially agree thereto, and hence the promise in question was held to be within the Statute of Frauds.

X. Contemporaneous promise.

a. In general.

It is obvious that where the promise is in form and effect an original promise to pay for goods or material to be furnished or work done for a corporation, the promisor is the original debtor, and he is not collaterally liable merely because the corporation receives the benefit of performance on the part of the promisee, hence the promise is not within the statute.

In Rubey Trust Co. v. Weidner (1913) 174 Mo. App. 692, 161 S. W. 333, it appeared that a bank upon which checks of a corporation were drawn refused to pay the same on the ground that there were no funds of the corporation on deposit to meet checks. Thereupon a stockholder and officer of the corporation offered to pay the amount of the checks to the bank if the latter would honor and pay them. This promise was held to be original, not collateral.

In Uvalde Nat. Bank v. Brooks (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 162 S. W. 957, it appeared that a bank refused to loan money to a corporation, but agreed to make a loan to certain directors. The loan thus made was held to be the original debt of the directors.

In Whinnery v. Cundiff (1915) — Iowa, —, 150 N. W. 659, the owner of property refused to lease it to a corporation upon its responsibility, whereupon an officer agreed to pay the rental, and the rent was charged to him and statement thereof sent to him. This promise was held not to be within the statute.

In Kanter v. M. Hofheimer & Co. (1916) 118 Va. 625, 88 S. E. 60, it appeared that a stockholder and manager of a corporation which was engaged in retail trade promised to pay for goods to be delivered to the corporation, the seller having refused to sell and deliver them to the corporation upon the order of the latter. This promise was held to be original.

In Manary v. Runyon (1903) 43 Or. 495, 73 Pac. 1028, the president of a corporation promised a person negotiating with the corporation for a certain contract that if the contract was not entered into, he would pay such person his expenses and attorney's fees incurred in the negotiations. This promise was held to be original, and not collateral.

b. Where a charge is made against the corporation.

A difference of opinion apparently exists among the courts as to the effect of the act of the creditor in charging to the corporation the price of goods he furnishes it upon the promise of a stockholder to pay therefor. This difference, however, is more apparent than real. Such a charge undoubtedly is evidence of an intent to look to the corporation as the primary debtor, and the language used in some of the opinions would indicate that such a charge is regarded as conclusive against the creditor. It is fair to assume, however, that the court had in mind only the facts of the particular case, and was merely referring to the effect of the charge to the corporation as an evidentiary fact in view of the circumstances, without any intention of asserting a rule of law.

For example, in Hurst Hardware Co. v. Goodman (1910) 68 W. Va. 462, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598, 69 S. E. 898, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 218, the court said: "By charging the goods to the corporation and demanding payment thereof from it, the vendors disclosed manifest, positive, and unequivocal intent to hold it a debtor to them. In seeking now to hold Goodman also, they are attempting to make him pay the acknowledged debt of the corporation. In such cases the decisive test is to whom credit was given, and it must have been given to the promisor alone. If the creditor relies upon the person to whom the property is delivered or for whom the service is rendered to any extent whatever, the promise is collateral and void, if not in writing. . . . Here the charging of the goods to the corporation, rendition of statements to it, and assertion of claims therefor against it in the bankruptcy proceeding, all admitted by the plaintiff, effectually preclude a finding in its favor. A verdict for it, on this theory of the case, could not be sustained."

In Roscoe Lumber Co. v. Reynolds (1908) 124 App. Div. 539, 108 N. Y. Supp. 1018, lumber was delivered to a third person for the construction of a building in which a corporation was interested, upon the promise of an officer of the corporation to pay for all the lumber delivered to this building. The promisee stipulated at the time that it would deal only with the promisor personally. A bill, however, was subsequently rendered to the principal debtor. Under these circumstances the promise was held to be collateral.

In Shannon v. American Iron & Steel Mfg. Co. (1917) 66 Pa. Super. Ct. 211, it appeared that certain officers of a corporation requested the dealer to furnish to a contractor anything he might need in the construction of a building for the corporation, and that such officers would see that he was paid. This promise was held to be collateral. The court pointed out that the bills were made to the contractor, who was credited with payments made, and the whole transaction fairly raised the inference that the primary liability was that of the contractor, and that the defendants were looked to as guarantors of the debt. The court said: "We do not regard the arrangement as one in which the leading purpose and effect of the transaction were the benefit which the defendant derived, from which it might fairly be said that the debt was that of the latter rather than of Weller. The material furnished did not enter into the structure of the defendant's property, and was of a character which might have been obtained in other places in the open market. The purpose of the promise was to guarantee the payment of the bill which Weller contracted for the goods ordered by him. In such a case the promise is within this statute, and not enforceable in an action at law."

In Searight v. Payne (1874) 2 Tenn. Ch. 175, 13 Mor. Min. Rep. 401, a seller was denied the right to recover from certain officers of a corporation for goods sold the corporation, although such officers had promised to pay for the same. It is pointed out that the testimony showed that the sale was made and the credit given exclusively to the corporation, hence the promise to pay the debt was within the Statute of Frauds.

The distinction between the statement of the effect of the creditor charging to the corporation the price of goods furnished it as an evidentiary fact and as a rule of law is recognized in S. J. Cordner Co. v. Manevetz (1918) 92 Conn. 587, 103 Atl. 842. In this case the question was presented as to whether or not the oral promise of an executive officer of a corporation to pay for goods sold to and upon the credit of said corporation, to be charged in the bill to it, binds the officer individually. The court said that if this was the actual question presented, the trial court erred in holding that the promise was not within the statute. It is, however, pointed out that it does not appear in the record that the goods were sold upon the credit of the corporation, although it does appear that the goods were charged to it and received and used by it for its benefit. The court said that these facts are indeed evidence, more or less convincing according to circumstances, tending to prove that the original credit was given to the corporation, but they are not conclusive, and added: "The promise required by the Statute of Frauds to be in writing is a promise to answer for the debt of another, not the promisor's own debt. The only question in the case is, Was this the defendant's own debt, which it is admitted he agreed to pay, or was it in a legal sense the Trucking Company's debt? To whom was the credit originally given? This is always a question of fact. Cases may be found where it has been held that the evidence does not justify the conclusion of the trier upon this question, but none that hold that it is a question of law. The finding in this case does not state in direct terms that the court finds as a fact that the original credit was given by the plaintiff to the defendant, but states that the court reached this conclusion: 'That the promise of the defendant to pay for the gas and oil . . . was an original undertaking, and not an undertaking to answer for the debt . . . of another.' Whether this conclusion be regarded, as intended by the court, as one of fact or of law, is of no importance in this case, because the facts detailed in the finding justify the conclusion, as a fact, that the credit was given to the defendant, and no other rational conclusion is possible."

In Kesler v. Cheadle (1903) 12 Okla. 489, 72 Pac. 367, the fact that the goods delivered were charged to the corporation, followed by a statement "guaranteed by the promisor," was held not to be conclusive upon the promisee as to the character of the promise, the promisee testifying that this charge merely signified that the articles were delivered to the corporation, and did not indicate the person to whom it was charged. A. G. S.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA

v.

JIM COOPER, Appt.

North Carolina Supreme Court—December 1, 1915.

(170 N. C. 719, 87 S. E. 50.)

Evidence — declarations to show insanity.

1. Declarations of one accused of crime are admissible in evidence at the trial not only to show insanity, but also weakness of the mental faculties. [See note on this question beginning on page 1219.]

— statement to officer.

2. Statements to an officer by one in custody or even in jail are not incompetent evidence against him if they were voluntary.

[See 1 R. C. L. 472.]

— statements showing state of mind.

3. Statements by one under arrest for murder, to an officer, in response to a question as to why he killed deceased, are admissible as showing the state of his mind at the time of the homicide.

[See 8 R. C. L. 191; 18 R. C. L. 920.]

— insanity — observation of attendant.

4. Upon the question of insanity of one accused of murder the sheriff may give his opinion based on observation, although the observation was subsequent to the time of the killing.

[See 8 R. C. L. 189; 14 R. C. L. 620.]

— declarations showing state of mind.

5. Where a particular state of mind of a person is a relevant fact, declarations which indicate its existence are admissible and circumstantial evidence, and are considered as primary evidence notwithstanding declarant is available as a witness.

[See 1 R. C. L. 491.]

— proximity of declarations to crime.

6. To be admissible to show the state of mind of one who committed crime his declarations must have been made at a time sufficiently close to the commission of the crime to have some probative force in regard to the mental condition at the time, of the one who committed the act.

[See 14 R. C. L. 620.]

Criminal law — effect of insanity on responsibility for crime.

7. One so insane as to be incapable of having a criminal intent is not, in law, responsible criminally for his acts.

[See 14 R. C. L. 598.]

— degree of insanity necessary.

8. To be a defense to crime, insanity must render accused incapable of understanding the nature and quality of the act he is about to commit, or of distinguishing between right and wrong either generally or with reference to the particular act.

[See 14 R. C. L. 599 et seq.]

Appeal — omission in charge — effect.

9. Omission, by the court in charging the jury that if accused has failed to satisfy the jury they must make a certain finding, of the words, "from the evidence," is not reversible error if the words had been used in an immediately preceding sentence so that the jury could not have been misled.

— charge correct as whole.

10. If when considered as a whole the charge presents the law fairly and correctly to the jury there is no ground for reversing the judgment, though some of the expressions, when standing alone, might be regarded as erroneous.

[See 14 R. C. L. 817.]

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Rowan County (Shaw, J.) convicting him of murder in the first degree. Affirmed.

Statement by Walker, J.:

The defendant was charged with the murder of Lucinda Price. It appears that he had a wife, who lived in Charlotte, and that he had for some time previous to the homicide been living in Salisbury with the deceased.

Lee Scott, a witness for the state, testified: "I am cousin to defendant James Cooper; saw him on 28 March, this year, at Leroy Lyerly's house; Rose Smith and Lucinda Price were there; it was about 7 or 8 o'clock in the evening; Rose Smith was sitting next to the fireplace in the back room. Lucinda Price, the deceased, asked Jim Cooper why he did not go home; Jim said nothing; in about fifteen minutes James Cooper left; did not say anything; was gone about twenty minutes, and came back; came in the front door with a shotgun; stepped up into the door behind me. Lucinda Price, deceased, was near the door and was just getting up; she hollered and Jim Cooper shot her; she tried to run from him and was on the right side, close to the door. He shot her once. He ran out of the door and said nothing. I saw him next, after he was arrested on Thursday; the killing was on Saturday. I never heard Jim Cooper and Lucinda Price talking together. I did hear him ask Lucinda if she was going to leave, two or three weeks before the killing. She lived about two or three minutes after he shot. I saw her after she died."

Claude Hoskin, witness for the state, testified substantially to the same facts.

The cross-examination of the witnesses for the state and the testimony of the defendant's witnesses indicated that the defense was insanity, and the prisoner was allowed the benefit of this plea.

The prisoner appealed from the judgment upon a verdict finding him guilty of murder in the first degree.

Messrs. A. H. Price and J. M. Waggoner for appellant.

Messrs. T. W. Bickett, Attorney General, and T. H. Calvert, Assistant Attorney General, for the State:

Statements made to an officer are not incompetent simply because the defendant was at the time in custody or in jail.

State v. Jones, 145 N. C. 466, 59 S.

E. 353; State v. Smith, 138 N. C. 700, 50 S. E. 859; State v. Bohanon, 142 N. C. 695, 55 S. E. 797; State v. Horner, 139 N. C. 603, 52 S. E. 136, 4 Ann. Cas. 841; State v. Exum, 138 N. C. 600, 50 S. E. 283.

On a prosecution for murder, which is defended on the ground of insanity, evidence of acts, conduct, and declarations of the accused before and after, as well as at the time of the commission of the act charged, is competent, provided the inquiry does not call for too remote evidence.

21 Cyc. 948; 12 Cyc. 403; 1 Whart. Crim. Ev. 10th ed. § 55, p. 236; Berry v. Hall, 105 N. C. 154, 10 S. E. 903.

The charge of the court must be construed as a whole, and if it presents the law fairly and clearly there is no error, even though certain expressions, standing alone, might be erroneous.

State v. Robertson, 166 N. C. 356, 81 S. E. 689; State v. Fowler, 151 N. C. 731, 66 S. E. 567; State v. Lance, 149 N. C. 551, 63 S. E. 193.

Walker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The first exception was taken to the testimony of the policeman, M. N. Earnhardt, who was allowed to state what the defendant said to him after he was arrested and when the officer asked him "what he wanted to kill the woman for."

The third exception was taken to the testimony of the sheriff, as to the statement made by the defendant to him after his arrest.

Statements made to an officer are not incompetent simply because the defendant was at

Evidence—statement to officer.

the time in custody or even in jail, if they are voluntary. State v. Exum, 138 N. C. 600, 50 S. E. 283; State v. Horner, 139 N. C. 603, 52 S. E. 136, 4 Ann. Cas. 841; State v. Bohanon, 142 N. C. 695, 55 S. E. 797; State v. Smith, 138 N. C. 700, 50 S. E. 859; State v. Jones, 145 N. C. 466, 59 S. E. 353. Besides, this testimony was competent as showing the state of the prisoner's mind at the time of the homicide, as words, acts, and conduct are competent for this purpose, they being natural evidence.

—statements showing state of mind.

The prisoner objected to a question asked the sheriff by the solicitor: "From what you have seen of the defendant while in jail, state whether or not, in your opinion, he knows right from wrong." The —insanity—observation

of attendant.

ground of the objection was that the inquiry as to the defendant's mind should be confined to the time of the killing. "On a prosecution for murder, defended on the ground of insanity, evidence of acts, conduct, and declarations of the accused before and after, as well as at the time of the commission of the act charged, is competent, provided the inquiry does not call for evidence which is too remote." 21 Cyc. 948; 12 Cyc. 403; 1 Whart. Crim. Ev. 10th ed. § 55, p. 236.

It is well settled that where the particular state of mind of a person is a relevant fact, declarations which indicate its existence are admissible as circumstantial evidence, and are considered as primary evidence, notwithstanding that the declarant is available as a witness. Within the bounds of relevancy, the declarations may precede, accompany, or follow the occurrence of the principal act. 16 Cyc. 1180-1182. Judge Brewer said in Mooney v. Olsen, 22 Kan. 69, 77: "A man's words show his mental condition. It is common to prove insanity by the party's sayings as well as by his acts. One's likes and dislikes, fears and friendships, hopes and intentions, are shown by his utterances. So that it is generally true that whenever a party's state of mind is a subject of inquiry his declarations are admissible as evidence thereof. In other words, a declaration which is sought as mere evidence of an external fact, and whose force depends upon its credit for truth, is always mere hearsay if not made upon oath; but a declaration which is sought as evidence of what the declarant thought or felt, or of his mental capacity, is of the best kind of evidence." In Waterman v. Whitney, 11 N. Y. 157, 62 Am. Dec. 71, which presents a careful analysis of this matter, Justice Selden says: "The difference is certainly very obvious between receiving the declarations of a testator to prove a distinct external fact, such as duress or fraud, for instance, and as evidence merely of the mental condition of the testator. In the former case it is mere hearsay, and liable to all the objections to which the mere declarations of third persons are subject, while in the latter it is the most direct and appropriate species of evidence." Declarations are competent not only to show insanity, but also weakness

—declarations
to show insanity,
to show insanity.

of the mental faculties. 16 Cyc. 1181. This court, by Smith, Ch. J., in McLeary v. Norment, 84 N. C. 235, 237, states the rule very clearly and the reasons underlying it. It was there objected that an interested witness could not testify to such declarations, being excluded by Code Civ. Proc. § 343 (Code 1883, § 590; Rev. 1905, § 1631), and the court met the objection in this way: "The conversations offered are not to prove any fact stated or implied, but the mental condition of the plaintiff, as declarations are received to show the presence of disease in the physical system. How, except through observations of the acts and utterances of a person, can you arrive at a knowledge of his health of body or mind? As sanity is ascertained from sensible and sane acts and expressions, so may and must any conclusion of unsoundness be reached by the same means and the same evidence. The declarations are not received to show the truth of things declared, but as evidence of a disordered intellect, of which they are the outward manifestations. Would it not be competent to show an attempt at self-destruction? And do not foolish and irrational utterances equally tend to show the loss of reason when proceeding from the same person? In either case the conduct and the language may be feigned and insincere; but this will only require a more careful scrutiny of the evidence, and does not require its total rejection."

How better can we judge of a man's physical or mental state than by what he says or what he does? Greenleaf on Evidence, Redf. ed. § 102, says: "Wherever the bodily or mental feelings of an individual are material to be proved, the usual expressions of such feelings, made at the time in question, are also original evidence. If they were the natural language of the affection, whether of body or mind, they furnish satisfactory evidence, and often the only proof, of its existence; and whether they were real or feigned is for the jury to determine." Lord Justice Mellish held that such evidence was admissible, not under the res gestæ notion, nor as original evidence, but as a distinct exception to the hearsay rule. The subject is fully reviewed in Jacobi v. State, 133 Ala. at p. 14, 32 So. 158, by Chief Justice McClellan, who quotes the neat phrase of Lord Justice Bowen: "The state of a man's mind is as much a fact as the state of his digestion," and may be proved by any declarations indicative of mental or bodily health or infirmity. The exception to the hearsay rule is admitted, we presume, because of necessity in making proof of the fact and the difficulty of showing it otherwise, or because it may be considered as natural evidence, and reliable, if sincere and not feigned, of which the jury must judge. If it should appear that the declarations are not genuinely expressive of the mental or physical conditions, they would, of course, be disregarded.

The declarations must have been made at a time sufficiently close to the principal occurrence as to have some probative force in regard to the mental condition of the person who committed the act or whose sanity is in question.

There is some testimony in this case that the defendant had been having something like epileptic attacks and that he was subject to fits, which had weakened his faculties, and that just before he assaulted the woman with his gun and killed her he was not in his normal condition of mind, but was rather sullen and morose, acted "curiously," and was indifferent to his surroundings. There was also testimony, coming from his own witnesses, that after the intimacy between him and the woman had ceased, and they had stopped living together, he became silent, sullen, and indifferent, and that he killed her shortly after the two had fallen out with each other and just after the deceased had asked him why he did not go home.
8 A.L.R.—77.

One who is so insane as to be incapable of having a criminal intent, which is one of the essential ingredients of crime, is

*Criminal law—effect of insanity on responsibility
for crime.*

not, in law, responsible criminally for his acts, want of sufficient mental capacity to form such intent being a complete defense, and not merely a mitigating circumstance; but in order to be available as a defense the insanity, or want of mental capacity, must exist at the time the act is committed. 12 Cyc. 164, 165. It is said at the latter page: "Where a person becomes insane after commission of a crime, he cannot be tried while in such condition, but such insanity does not exempt him from responsibility and prosecution if he afterward becomes sane again. The former insanity of the accused does not excuse his crime if it appears that he recovered from it previously to the commission of the crime; but in the absence of such proof it will be presumed to be continuous to the time of the crime. The law does not require that the insanity shall have existed for any definite period, but only that it shall have existed at the precise moment when the act occurred with which the accused stands charged." Again, the insanity must render the person incapable of understanding the nature and quality of the act he is about to commit or of distinguishing between right and wrong, either generally or with reference to the particular act. 12 Cyc. 165. While a slight departure from a well-balanced mind may be pronounced insanity in medical science, yet such a rule cannot be recognized in the administration of the law when a person is on trial for the commission of a high crime. The just and necessary protection of society requires the recognition of a rule which demands a greater degree of insanity to exempt from punishment. Taylor v. Com. 109 Pa. 262, 271.

The court, in State v. Brandon, 53 N. C. (8 Jones, L.) 463, 467, after referring to the defense, set up by the prisoner in that case, that he was under the influence of a superior and irresistible moral power or supernatural force which destroyed his free agency, said: "It assumes that the accused knew the nature of his act, and that it was wrong. The law does not recognize any moral power compelling one to do what he knows is wrong. 'To know the right and still the wrong pursue' proceeds from a perverse will, brought about by the seductions of the Evil One, but which, nevertheless, with the aids that lie within our reach, as we are taught to believe, may be resisted and overcome; otherwise it would not seem to be consistent with the principles of justice to punish any malefactor. There are many appetites and passions which by long indulgence acquire a mastery over men more or less strong. Some persons, indeed, deeming themselves incapable of exerting strength of will sufficient to arrest their rule, speak of them as irresistible, and impotently continue under their dominion; but the law is far from excusing criminal acts committed under the impulse of such passions. To excuse one from criminal responsibility the mind must, in the language of the judge below, be insane. The accused should be in such a state from mental disease as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or, if he did know it, that he did not know he was doing what was wrong, and this should be clearly established. This test, a knowledge of right and wrong, has long been resorted to as a general criterion for deciding upon legal accountability, and, with a restricted application to the act then about to be committed, is approved by the highest authorities. But we do not undertake to lay down any rule of universal application."

The charge of the court upon this phase of the case—the insanity of the prisoner at the time he killed the woman—was clear and full, and conformed to the rule we have stated.

The prisoner excepted to an instruction of the court to the effect that if he had failed to satisfy the jury that he did not have mental capacity sufficient to commit a crime the verdict would be guilty, the particular objection being that the court should have said, if he had failed to satisfy the jury "from the evidence" of his mental incapacity he should be convicted; but, in the sentence immediately preceding, the court had instructed the jury that, "if the defendant has satisfied you from the evidence that he did not have sufficient mental capacity to commit a crime, he should be acquitted." The two instructions are so intimately connected with each other that no intelligent jury could have misunderstood what was meant, nor can we reasonably suppose that they would find the fact one way or the other without any evidence, or otherwise than "from the evidence." The charge of the court must be considered as a whole, in the same connected way as given to the jury, and upon the presumption that the jury did not overlook omission in charge—effect.

Appeal—

any portion of it. If, when so construed, it presents the law fairly and correctly to the jury, there is no ground for reversing the judgment, though some of the expressions, when standing alone, may be regarded as erroneous. Kornegay v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 154 N. C. 389, 70 S. E. 731; State v. Robertson, 166 N. C.

—charge correct as whole.

356, 81 S. E. 689; State v. Lance, 149 N. C. 551, 63 S. E. 198; McNeill v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 167 N. C. 390, 83 S. E. 704; Thomp. Trials, § 2407.

We believe that this covers all the exceptions taken at the trial to the rulings of the court and the charge, and in none of them do we find any ground for a reversal.

No error.

ANNOTATION.

Evidence of declarations of accused on issue of insanity.

I. General rule, 1219.

II. Application of rule:

a. Verbal statement:

1. Before commission of act, 1221.
2. After commission of act, 1222.
3. Before and after commission of act, 1224.

b. Written statement, 1225.

I. General rule.

The general rule seems to be that, where the sanity of a person accused of crime is in issue, his declarations, whether written or oral, made at the time of the offense or at a time sufficiently close thereto to have some probative force in regard to his mental condition, are admissible in evidence.

United States.—United States v. Holmes (1858) 1 Cliff. 98, Fed. Cas. No. 15,382; Guiteau's Case (1882) 10 Fed. 161; United States v. Chisholm (1907) 153 Fed. 808; Perkins v. United States (1915) 142 C. C. A. 638, 228 Fed. 408.

Alabama.—McLean v. State (1849) 16 Ala. 672; Kimbrell v. State (1900) 130 Ala. 40, 30 So. 454; Cawley v. State (1901) 133 Ala. 128, 32 So. 227; Porter v. State (1902) 135 Ala. 51, 33 So. 694; Parrish v. State (1903) 139 Ala. 16, 36 So. 1012; Braham v. State (1904) 143 Ala. 28, 38 So. 919; Gilbert v. State (1911) 172 Ala. 386, 56 So. 136; Howard v. State (1911) 172 Ala. 402, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 990, 55 So. 255; Granberry v. State (1913) 184 Ala. 5, 63 So. 975.

Arkansas.—Ince v. State (1906) 77 Ark. 426, 93 S. W. 65; Reed v. State (1912) 102 Ark. 525, 145 S. W. 206.

California.—People v. Harris (1914) 169 Cal. 53, 145 Pac. 520; People v. Brent (1909) 11 Cal. App. 674, 106 Pac. 110.

Colorado.—Bulger v. People (1915) 60 Colo. 165, 151 Pac. 937.

Delaware.—State v. Reidell (1888) 9 Houst. 470, 14 Atl. 550.

Indiana.—Blume v. State (1900) 154 Ind. 343, 56 N. E. 771.

Iowa.—State v. Wright (1900) 112 Iowa, 436, 84 N. W. 541.

Kentucky.—Abbott v. Com. (1900) 107 Ky. 624, 55 S. W. 196; Cogswell v. Com. (1895) 17 Ky. L. Rep. 822, 32 S. W. 935.

Louisiana.—State v. Hays (1870) 22 La. Ann. 39.

Massachusetts.—Com. v. Spencer (1912) 212 Mass. 438, 99 N. E. 266, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 552.

Missouri.—State v. Kring (1877) 64 Mo. 591, 2 A'm. Crim. Rep. 313; State v. Speyer (1905) 194 Mo. 459, 91 S. W. 1075; State v. Porter (1908) 213 Mo. 43, 127 Am. St. Rep. 589, 111 S. W. 529.

Montana.—State v. Leakey (1911) 44 Mont. 354, 120 Pac. 234.

Nevada.—State v. Lewis (1889) 20 Nev. 333, 22 Pac. 241, 8 Am. Crim. Rep. 574.

New York.—People v. Nino (1896) 149 N. Y. 326, 43 N. E. 853; People v. Miles (1894) 143 N. Y. 383, 38 N. E. 456; Lake v. People (1854) 1 Park. Crim. Rep. 495.

North Carolina.—See the reported case (STATE v. COOPER, ante, 1214).

Pennsylvania.—Sayres v. Com. (1879) 88 Pa. 291.

South Carolina.—State v. Driggers (1910) 84 S. C. 526, 137 Am. St. Rep. 855, 66 S. E. 1042, 19 Ann. Cas. 1166.

Texas.—Burt v. State (1897) 38 Tex. Crim. Rep. 397, 39 L.R.A. 305, 40 S. W. 1000, 43 S. W. 344; Cannon v. State (1900) 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 467, 56 S. W. 351; Reinhard v. State (1907) 52 Tex. Crim. Rep. 59, 106 S. W. 128.

Utah.—State v. Brown (1909) 36 Utah, 46, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 545, 102 Pac. 641.

Washington.—State v. Constantine (1908) 48 Wash. 218, 93 Pac. 317.

Wisconsin.—French v. State (1896) 95 Wis. 325, 67 N. W. 706, 10 Am. Crim. Rep. 606.

Wyoming.—Keffer v. State (1903) 12 Wyo. 49, 73 Pac. 556.

The ground on which such testimony is admitted was stated in State v. Leakey (Mont.) supra, as follows: "It is well settled that the declarations of one accused of crime, made either before or after the criminal act, may be given in evidence on the question of sanity or insanity, for the purpose of enabling the jury to ascertain the condition of his mind. . . . Such declarations are not admissible as a part of the res gestæ, nor as self-serving declarations, but on the theory that, as substantive evidence, they reflect light upon the condition of defendant's mind at the time of the act in question, and aid the jury in determining the presence or absence of a particular purpose or intent which is a necessary element of the crime charged."

It has, however, been held in several cases that statements made by the accused to a physician as to his condition and symptoms are not admissible as bearing on an issue of prior or subsequent insanity.

Thus, in People v. Hawkins (1888) 109 N. Y. 408, 17 N. E. 371, it was held that statements made by the accused to a doctor prior to the homicide, outlining his condition previously to the time he made the declarations, were inadmissible as bearing on the condition of his mind at the time of the homicide, and such statements could not furnish a basis for an expert opinion. The court said; "The prisoner's declaration in November as to his condition in September was not competent as evidence of his actual condition at that time, nor could it be the basis of a scientific opinion as to whether he was sane or insane at that period. Had the question related to his condition at the time of the interview, the result might be quite different. Everything said or done at a given period serves to disclose the mental state of the actor, but his narration as to what he said or did, or of his feelings or bodily ailments upon a former occasion, furnishes no foundation for an opinion as to his actual state or condition at that time. It is of no higher grade than the declarations of third persons as to a past transaction, and in like manner is inadmissible."

So, in State v. Dunn (1903) 179 Mo. 95, 77 S. W. 848, wherein the accused interposed the plea of insanity as a defense to a murder committed by him, the court refused to allow in evidence a statement made by him to a doctor several days before the homicide, to the effect that he believed he was going crazy. The court assigned as its reason that the declaration was self-serving, and no part of the res gestæ.

To the same effect was People v. Strait (1896) 148 N. Y. 566, 42 N. E. 1045, wherein the accused interposed his insanity as a defense to an indictment for wife murder. The court held that statements made by the accused to a doctor several months after the murder were inadmissible in evidence as a basis for a scientific opinion as to the mental condition of the accused at the time of the homicide.

Compare Perkins v. United States (1915) 142 C. C. A. 638, 228 Fed. 408, set out at length infra, II. a, 1.

In People v. Ellsworth (1900) 127 Cal. 595, 60 Pac. 161, it appeared that the accused was tried for murder and set up the plea of insanity. The court held that the statements of the accused made several months prior to the homicide, showing that he lived in great fear of his life, were inadmissible as tending to prove his insanity, where this fear in no way partook of the character of a delusion.

In North Carolina, it has been held that in a prosecution for murder where insanity is relied on as a defense, the declarations of the prisoner after the homicide are not admissible in evidence to prove his insanity at the time of the trial, unless such declarations are part of the res gestæ and accompany the act. State v. Vann (1880) 82 N. C. 631. See to the same effect, State v. Scott (1820) 8 N. C. (1 Hawks) 24. These holdings, however, seem to be inconsistent with the later ruling in the reported case (STATE v. COOPER, ante, 1214) which attaches no limitation to the reception of prior and subsequent declarations of the accused, bearing on his sanity, except that they "must have been made at a time sufficiently close to the principal occurrence as to have some probative force in regard to the mental condition of the person who committed the act."

II. Application of rule.

a. Verbal statement.

1. Before commission of act.

In United States v. Holmes (1858) 1 Cliff. 98, Fed. Cas. No. 15,382, a prosecution of a ship's captain for the murder of a seaman on the high seas, the accused urged his insanity at the time of the act, and in support of this contention introduced in evidence statements made by him not only throughout the voyage, but throughout his entire previous life. The court said that this was permissible; but held that it was also competent for the prosecution to introduce other declarations of the accused within the same period to show that he was sane.

Perkins v. United States (1915) 142 C. C. A. 638, 228 Fed. 408, was likewise a prosecution for murder committed on the high seas. The evidence showed that the accused appeared among the passengers in the saloon in his bare feet, clad only in pajamas and a raincoat. On being advised by the master to return to his room and clothe himself, the accused without notice or provocation discharged his pistol until the chambers were empty, wounding the master and killing a passenger. The defense interposed was insanity, resulting from excessive drinking, and an overdose of chloral prescribed by a physician to alleviate the pain in his head. It was held that statements made by the accused to a doctor just before going aboard, to the effect that he had severe headaches and suffered great mental strain, nervousness, and insomnia, accompanied by hallucinations, were admissible in evidence to show his mental condition at the time of the homicide.

So, in Guiteau's Case (1882) 10 Fed. 161, the accused, being on trial for the murder of President Garfield, and interposing as a defense his insanity, the court admitted in evidence all the statements made and explanatory papers written by the accused before the homicide, which tended to show his morbid state of mind.

Likewise, in a prosecution for wife murder, the defense interposed being the insanity of the accused, the court held that declarations made by the accused before the trial to several persons, to the effect that his wife had placed bugs in his ears, tied his hands to prevent his working, and repeatedly tried to kill him, were admissible in evidence as tending to show the condition of his mind. People v. Nino (1896) 149 N. Y. 326, 43 N. E. 853.

In People v. Miles (1894) 143 N. Y. 383, 38 N. E. 456, it appeared that the accused was indicted for the murder of one whom he accidentally killed while attempting to shoot another. One of the defenses interposed was insanity, and to sustain it proof was offered of certain strange and inexplicable words uttered by the accused on an occasion when he was trying to settle his business difficulties with the deceased. The court admitted the words in evidence, but allowed evidence in rebuttal to show that on the occasion referred to the accused was intoxicated, and his words were explainable by that fact.

In State v. Driggers (1910) 84 S. C. 526, 137 Am. St. Rep. 855, 66 S. E. 1042, 19 Ann. Cas. 1166, the accused was charged with the murder of his sister. It appeared that the accused and the sister had had an altercation over certain property, and that when she left for her home the accused followed her into the street and deliberately shot her. The defense set up was that the accused, at the time of the homicide, was in such a state of delirium from excessive drink that he was wholly irresponsible. In support of this defense, the accused introduced in evidence certain statements made by him previous to the homicide, showing his inability to recognize his own brother. The court held that the statements were admissible in evidence, and were not objectionable as declarations in his own favor, saying: "Wild, foolish, or irrelevant speech is as much evidence of most forms of insanity as violent or unreasonable actions and unnatural appearance. One may be feigned as well as the others, and there is no reason for the rejection of one that would not apply with equal force to the others. Such speech of a party is not subject to the objection that it is a declaration of the defendant in his own favor, for evidence of it is not received as tending to prove any act or intention of the party, but merely as an indication of mental aberration or condition."

The defendant in Bulger v. People (1915) 60 Colo. 165, 151 Pac. 937, shot and killed a hotel clerk on account of the latter's reluctance to give information as to the whereabouts of a certain guest at the hotel, with whom the accused had just had a quarrel. The defense offered was the insanity of the accused at the time of the commission of the act. It was held that, as indicating the mental condition of the accused at the time in question, it was competent to admit in evidence, for the prosecution, certain statements made by the accused to a stranger, about a week prior to the homicide, which apparently tended to show that the accused was sane, but of a quarrelsome disposition.

In Cannon v. State (1900) 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 467, 56 S. W. 351, the accused, charged with murder, interposed insanity as a defense. Evidence of statements made by him to third persons, before the homicide, that his wife was unchaste and his brother-in-law was familiar with her, and that various persons had formed a mob and were planning to kill him, was allowed as tending to show his mental derangement.

In Abbott v. Com. (1900) 107 Ky. 624, 55 S. W. 196, the accused was indicted for the murder of the seducer of his sister. The defense interposed was that, on receipt of the news of the ruin of his sister, the accused became temporarily insane and wholly irresponsible for his acts. The court held that the declarations of the accused while in bed the night before the homicide, continually calling his sister's name, were admissible in evidence, with other acts of his, to show his mental condition at the time of the homicide.

In a prosecution for forgery, where the sole defense relied on was insanity at the time of the act, the court admitted in evidence certain incoherent statements made by the accused before the crime, to the effect that he was making thousands of dollars a day, was a hypnotist, and was the reincarnation of a great lawyer, and other statements to like effect, since these statements tended to show the condition of the mind of the accused at the time of the forgery. State v. Brown (1909) 36 Utah, 46, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 545, 102 Pac. 641.

In Porter v. State (1902) 135 Ala. 51, 33 So. 694, the court allowed in evidence, to show insanity, certain extravagant statements, made by the accused about the value of certain dogs, but held that such evidence could be rebutted by evidence that the accused was a great hunter, so that his rash statement could as well have been attributed to that as to his insanity.

2. After commission of act.

In McLean v. State (1849) 16 Ala. 672, wherein the accused set up his insanity in defense to a prosecution for murder, the court held that the subsequent declarations of the accused were admissible as tending to show the state of his mind at the commission of the homicide.

See to the same effect, Gilbert v.

State (1911) 172 Ala. 386, 56 So. 136; People v. Brent (1909) 11 Cal. App. 674, 106 Pac. 110; Com. v. Spencer (1912) 212 Mass. 488, 99 N. E. 266, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 552.

In State v. Leakey (1911) 44 Mont. 354, 120 Pac. 234, a prosecution for murder, the court held that statements made by the accused, after the crime and before his incarceration in jail, that he remembered nothing about shooting a man, didn't know the name of the deceased, and had no motive for the act, were admissible in evidence as tending to show the condition of his mind.

So, in State v. Wright (1900) 112 Iowa, 436, 84 N. W. 541, the defense being insanity produced by epilepsy, it was held to be error to exclude certain statements made by the accused after the crime, to the effect that he remembered nothing about the shooting.

Similarly, the accused in State v. Porter (1908) 213 Mo. 43, 127 Am. St. Rep. 589, 111 S. W. 529, was indicted for the murder of his father. It appeared that the father was not on very friendly terms with his second wife, and on several occasions had threatened to kill her, and that the accused in these instances had saved her from harm and always deemed it his duty to protect her. On the day of the homicide the father and his wife had a violent quarrel, after which the father left the house, returning later with a shotgun. The accused opened fire on him with a shotgun, but the same being taken from him, he procured a pistol, rushed into the yard, and killed his father. The defense interposed was that the accused, after firing the shotgun, became temporarily insane and remembered nothing that transpired thereafter. On this issue the court held that the declarations made by the accused, shortly after the homicide, that the father "will kill us, he will kill us," were admissible in evidence as tending to show the condition of mind of the accused at the time of the crime.

Likewise, in United States v. Chisholm (1907) 153 Fed. 808, a prosecution for embezzlement of the funds of a national bank, it was held that statements made by him subsequent to the commission of the offense were admissible in evidence as tending to show whether, at the time of the offense, he was suffering from an insane delusion to the effect that he had supernatural power to control the entire stock market.

In Reinhard v. State (1907) 52 Tex. Crim. Rep. 59, 106 S. W. 128, it appeared that the accused had been maintaining illicit relations with a woman, as a result of which he was compelled to marry her to save her from disgrace. A short time after the marriage he killed her, and then attempted to take his own life. On the issue of insanity the court held to be admissible in evidence, as tending to show the state of his mind, the following statement made by the accused after the crime, and while still suffering from a self-inflicted wound: "The wretch (meaning the deceased), she thought she could do with me as she wished; and if it was done over I would do it again."

In State v. Constantine (1908) 48 Wash. 218, 98 Pac. 317, wherein the accused was on trial for an assault with intent to kill his son-in-law, because of the latter's alleged mistreatment of the daughter of the accused, the court held that a statement made by the accused to his daughter after the shooting was admissible, on the issue of the insanity of the accused at the time of the shooting.

The accused in Burt v. State (1897) 38 Tex. Crim. Rep. 397, 89 L.R.A. 305, 40 S. W. 1000, 48 S. W. 344, was tried for the murder of his wife and two children. It was held that it was no error for the court, in order to ascertain whether the accused was simulating insanity, to allow the sheriff to give his opinion as to the sanity of the accused, it appearing that the sheriff's opinion was formed as a result of statements made by the accused to him while the latter was in custody, but after he had been warned by the sheriff that whatever he said would be used against him.

Granberry v. State (1913) 184 Ala. 5, 63 So. 975, was a prosecution for homicide in which the accused interposed the plea of insanity. In order to negative this plea, and to show that the insanity of the accused was merely feigned, the state introduced a witness who testified that he overheard a conversation between the accused and a certain doctor, wherein the accused agreed to pretend insanity. It was held that the introduction of this evidence was permissible, and it was immaterial whether the conversation took place before or after the accused had interposed his plea in court.

So, in Cogswell v. Com. (1895) 17 Ky. L. Rep. 822, 32 S. W. 935, the accused, who was indicted for maliciously shooting at another without wounding him, defended on the ground of insanity, and in pursuance thereof introduced his father as a witness, with a view to establishing such facts as to his mental condition when the shooting took place, as would authorize the jury to acquit him on the ground of irresponsibility, resulting from disease or weakness of mind. The court held that it was competent for the state to rebut such defense by introducing witnesses to testify to statements made by the accused, soon after the shooting, that he was trying to imitate the actions of an insane person, but that he had to guess how one acted, as he had never seen one.

In Ince v. State (1906) 77 Ark. 426, 93 S. W. 65, the accused was charged with the murder of his wife. The defense interposed was hereditary insanity, and to establish this the accused introduced testimony showing that his father was insane, and also that his sister was insane and had committed suicide. To rebut this defense the state allowed in evidence statements made by the accused while confined in jail, to a third person, that "his father never was crazy, but that his grandfather's money sent him to the asylum," and that he didn't believe his sister was crazy, but "from what he had heard he believed her husband killed her."

In Reed v. State (1912) 102 Ark. 525, 145 S. W. 206, wherein the accused, who was on trial for the murder of his wife, set up the plea of insanity, the court held that a statement made by him while incarcerated in jail after the killing, to the effect that he intended to feign insanity in order to get out on bond, was admissible in evidence for whatever the jury might consider it worth as tending to throw light on his mental condition at the time the killing occurred.

So, in State v. Reidell (1888) 9 Houst. (Del.) 470, 14 Atl. 550, it appeared that the accused, in a fit of despondency, shot and killed his wife and child. The defense relied on was insanity. The court held that a statement made by him to the sheriff after his arrest that he was perfectly sane at the time he committed the act was admissible in evidence, as it indicated the condition of his mind at the time of the shooting, it being a common delusion of insane persons to believe themselves sane.

In Braham v. State (1904) 143 Ala. 28, 38 So. 919, wherein it appeared that the accused had murdered his sweetheart because she refused to marry him, and then interposed insanity as a defense, the court held that, as indicating the condition of his mind at the time of the crime, a statement voluntarily made by him after the commission of the crime was admissible in evidence.

So, in Parrish v. State (1904) 139 Ala. 16, 36 So. 1012, a prosecution for murder, wherein the accused relied on his insanity at the time of the commission of the crime, it was held that statements voluntarily made by the accused to a police officer, after the commission of the crime and while the accused was in jail, were admissible in evidence as bearing on the question of his sanity and the condition of his mind.

3. Before and after commission of act.

In French v. State (1896) 93 Wis. 325, 67 N. W. 706, 10 Am. Crim. Rep. 606, the accused was indicted for the murder of one whom he wrongfully suspected of ruining his home. The defense interposed was insanity. On this issue, the court held that evidence of statements made by the accused both before and a reasonable time after the homicide, to the effect that he had been having great family troubles, that the deceased and another were conspiring to wreck his home and ruin his family, that he had been several times shot at, and was troubled with snakes, etc., was admissible to show the state of the mind of the accused at the time of the homicide, and further, that it was error to exclude such statements made by him subsequent to the fourth day after the homicide. The court said: "The exclusion of evidence offered on the part of the defendant, of his acts, conduct, and declarations occurring subsequent to the fourth day after the homicide, and offered as bearing upon the question of his insanity, was, we think, plainly erroneous. It is very generally agreed that evidence of the acts, conduct, and statements of the accused after, as well as before, the homicide, are admissible to show the mental condition of the accused, and as bearing upon the question of his sanity."

The defense in People v. Harris (1914) 169 Cal. 53, 145 Pac. 520, was that the homicide was committed by the accused under a delusion, prompted by insane suggestions and voices to the effect that the act was necessary to save his own life. The court held that the declarations of the accused, made a reasonable time before and after the crime, were admissible in evidence if they tended to show the condition of his mind at the time of the homicide.

So, in Cawley v. State (1901) 133 Ala. 123, 32 So. 227, the defense interposed was that previous to and at the time of the killing the mind of the accused was materially affected with a mental disease produced by the information imparted to him of the illicit relations maintained between his niece and the deceased. The court held that the previous as well as the subsequent declarations of the accused were admissible in evidence, as tending to show the state of his mind at the time of the homicide.

Similarly, in Kimbrell v. State (1900) 130 Ala. 40, 30 So. 454, a prosecution for murder where the defense was insanity, the court held that declarations made by the accused a few days before and a few days after the commission of the crime were admissible in evidence if they tended to show his mind was unsound.

In State v. Hays (1870) 22 La. Ann. 39, it was held that in a prosecution for murder, where the accused relied on insanity, all the declarations, conversations, and exclamations which the witnesses had with the accused, or heard him make at any time shortly before, at the time of, or after the killing, were admissible in evidence as tending to show the condition of the mind of the accused.

In Lake v. People (1854) 1 Park. Crim. Rep. (N. Y.) 495, affirmed in (1855) 12 N. Y. 358, the accused was tried for the murder of his wife and his two children. It appeared that, after the murder, the accused stood in front of his window, practically naked, uttering incoherent statements, flourishing a sword, and keeping a crowd which had assembled from arresting him, until he was eventually shot down. The defense offered was insanity at the time of the commission of the deed. The court held that, as bearing on that question, it was proper to admit in evidence the several irrational statements made by the accused, both before and after the commission of the crime.

In Howard v. State (1911) 172 Ala. 402, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 990, 55 So. 255, wherein it appeared that the accused shot and killed the deceased for the latter's failure to make reparation for numerous slanders he had uttered concerning the sister of the accused, the court held, in determining the insanity of the accused, that the statements made by him after the homicide were admissible in evidence to prove his state of mind.

b. Written statement.

In State v. Speyer (1905) 194 Mo. 459, 91 S. W. 1075, the accused, who was on trial for the murder of his son, relied on insanity, and as evidence thereof introduced in evidence letters written by him to his wife before the murder, containing words of love and affection for his son. The court held these were inadmissible because having no tendency to prove insanity. The court said: "There is no dispute on the legal proposition that letters written by a defendant which show signs of mental weakness, upon an investigation of his mental condition, are competent evidence. Upon an investigation of the mental soundness of a person his oral declarations are frequently offered in evidence, and declarations made in letters may also be shown, but it must be remembered that the crucial test as to the admissibility of either oral declarations or declarations in the shape of letters written by a defendant is, whether or not they have any bearing upon the subject under investigation,—that is, the insanity or mental incapacity of the person undergoing investigation. The letters offered in evidence in this cause had no such tendency, hence there was no error in their exclusion."

In Blume v. State (1900) 154 Ind. 343, 56 N. E. 771, it appeared that the accused, a young man of dissolute habits, became attached to a prostitute. A loathsome disease rendered the accused a cripple, and the refusal of the woman to cohabit with him while in this condition excited his resentment and jealousy to such an extent that he shot her to death and attempted to take his own life. His defense was insanity. It was held that in deciding this issue the several letters written by him to the deceased were admissible in evidence, as a basis for the opinion of an expert. The court said: "Written communications, as well as oral conversations, may afford evidence of the soundness or unsoundness of the mind of the writer, and may constitute a sufficient basis for the opinion of a skilled physician or alienist upon that subject. Indeed, evidence of this character is regarded as of especial value in many cases, and as furnishing important tests of insanity."

Letters written by the accused to his wife, prior to the homicide, were, in State v. Kring (1877) 64 Mo. 591, 2 Am. Crim. Rep. 313, held to be admissible in evidence to show the condition of his mind at the time of the commission of the offense, though not as evidence of the truth of the statements therein. And in the same case in (1881) 74 Mo. 612, it was held not to be error for the court to admit in evidence statements made by the accused, after the homicide, that he was sane when the crime was committed. The case was reversed on other grounds in (1888) 107 U. S. 221, 27 L. ed. 506, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 443.

In Sayres v. Com. (1879) 88 Pa. 291, wherein the accused, who was on trial for the murder of his wife, interposed insanity as a defense, the court held that where the evidence introduced by the accused to prove his insanity extended over his lifetime, it was not error to receive in rebuttal evidence of letters written by him ten years previous to the commission of the crime.

M. J. McC.

---

STATE OF MISSOURI EX REL. FRANK W. McALLISTER, Attorney General,

v.

JOHN G. SLATE, Judge of the Circuit Court of Cole County.

Missouri Supreme Court (In Banc) — June 14, 1919.

(— Mo. —, 214 S. W. 85.)

Prohibition — to prevent judge sitting in case.

1. Prohibition lies to prevent a prejudiced judge from sitting at trial of a case.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1238.]

Definition — venue.

2. Venue means the place where a trial is to take place.

Judge — change — right of state.

3. A change of judge by whom a case is to be tried is not a change of venue within the rule that the state is not entitled to change of venue.

Reference — finding of commissioner — conclusiveness.

4. The finding of a commissioner appointed by the court to determine the question of prejudice of a judge, while not conclusive, is persuasive.

[See 2 R. C. L. 210, 211.]

Judge — bias — prejudice against state.

5. A judge, incensed at the state's attorneys because of his belief that they instigated newspaper articles reflecting upon him, and ruling erroneously on their offers of evidence contrary to his rulings in other cases, is shown to be so biased as to be disqualified to sit in the case.

— cause of prejudice.

6. If a judge becomes prejudiced in a case, the cause of the prejudice, and whether it is warranted or not, are immaterial upon the question of his qualification to sit.

— error in ruling — effect.

7. Prejudice on the part of a judge cannot be deduced merely because of error in ruling against a party to a cause upon a question of law.

— prejudice against state — effect.

8. A trial judge may lose jurisdiction of a criminal case because of prejudice against the state.

— evil arising from change.

9. Since the objection of prejudice by a judge against the state must be raised, if at all, by the state's prosecuting officers, no evils are likely to arise by permitting change of judge for prejudice against the state.

— provision for disqualification.

10. Disqualification of a judge by prejudice against the state is provided for by a constitutional provision that, if a judge for any cause be unable to hold part of a term of court, such term may be held by a judge of another circuit, and in any case where a judge is unable to preside the general assembly shall make provision for holding court.

— statutory incompetency.

11. Prejudice by the trial judge against the state is within a statute providing that the judge shall be deemed incompetent to hear and decide the case when he is in any wise interested or prejudiced.

— interest — own case.

12. A case wherein a judge is interested is one wherein, to an extent and in effect, the case becomes his own.

[See 15 R. C. L. 527.]

— absence of statute — right of judge to decide.

13. Failure of the legislature to provide process for ascertaining the prejudice of a judge does not leave the fact of existence or nonexistence of prejudice entirely to his own conscience.

[See 15 R. C. L. 539; see note in 5 A.L.R. 1275.]

ORIGINAL proceeding to prohibit the respondent judge from further proceeding with the trial of a certain criminal case because of alleged prejudice against the state in said case. Preliminary ruling for prohibition absolute.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Frank W. McAllister, Attorney General, John T. Gose and Shrader P. Howell, Assistant Attorneys General, and Lee B. Ewing, for relator:

Prohibition is the proper remedy where a court or judge assumes to exercise powers not granted by law, whether the exercise of the power is attempted in a case which the court is not authorized to entertain at all, or is merely an excessive and unauthorized application of judicial power in a cause otherwise properly cognizable by the court or judge in question.

State ex rel. Judah v. Fort, 210 Mo. 525, 109 S. W. 737; State ex rel. Fenn v. McQuillin, 256 Mo. 703, 165 S. W. 713; St. Louis, K. & S. R. Co. v. Wear, 135 Mo. 256, 33 L.R.A. 341, 36 S. W. 357, 658; State ex rel. Hoffman v. Withrow, 135 Mo. 376, 36 S. W. 896, 1038; State ex rel. Renfro v. Wear, 129 Mo. 619, 31 S. W. 608.

The facts clearly show that respondent is prejudiced in the case of State v. Scott.

22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1173; Re Howell, 273 Mo. 96, 200 S. W. 65.

If a circuit judge is prejudiced in a cause, either for or against the state or the accused, he is incompetent to sit in said cause, and any exercise of jurisdiction therein by him, except to certify to his prejudice and take steps to call another judge, is beyond his power.

Re Howell, supra; Jim v. State, 3 Mo. 147; State ex rel. Sansone v. Wofford, 111 Mo. 526, 20 S. W. 236; State ex rel. Renfro v. Wear, 129 Mo. 619, 31 S. W. 608; People v. Connor, 142 N. Y. 130, 36 N. E. 807; Forest Coal Co. v. Doolittle, 54 W. Va. 210, 46 S. E. 238; Com. v. Davidson, 91 Ky. 162, 15 S. W. 53; Dimes v. Grand Junction Canal, 3 H. L. Cas. 759, 10 Eng. Reprint, 301, 17 Jur. 73.

The state has the right, when the judge is prejudiced, to a change of venue from said judge. This was a common-law right, and has never been taken away by any provisions of the Constitution or statutes of this state.

4 Bl. Com. 321; 2 Hale, P. C. chap. 27, p. 201; Rex v. Cowle, 2 Burr, 859, 97 Eng. Reprint, 601; Rex v. Harris, 3 Burr. 1333, 97 Eng. Reprint, 859, 1 W. Bl. 378, 96 Eng. Reprint, 213; People v. Baker, 3 Park. Crim. Rep. 181; Com. v. Balph, 111 Pa. 365, 3 Atl. 220; People v. Peterson, 93 Mich. 27, 52 N. W. 1039; Crocker v. Justices of Superior Ct. 208 Mass. 167, 94 N. E. 369, 21 Ann. Cas. 1061; People v. Webb, 1 Hill, 179; People v. Fuhrmann, 103 Mich. 593, 61 N. W. 865; People v. Baker, 3 Abb. Pr. 42; Chitty, Crim. Law & Pr. (1847 ed.) p. 201; Com. v. Davidson, 91 Ky. 162, 15 S. W. 53; Barry v. Truax, 13 N. D. 181, 65 L.R.A. 762, 112 Am. St. Rep. 662, 99 N. W. 769, 3 Ann. Cas. 191; Hewitt v. State, 43 Fla. 194, 30 So. 795; State ex rel. Hornbeck v. Durlfinger, 73 Ohio St. 154, 76 N. E. 291; 1 Bishop, Crim. Proc. §§ 73, 113; Re Howell, 273 Mo. 96, 200 S. W. 65; State ex rel. Renfro v. Wear, 129 Mo. 619, 31 S. W. 608; State ex rel. Sansone v. Wofford, 111 Mo. 526, 20 S. W. 236; Jim v. State, 3 Mo. 147; State v. Gates, 20 Mo. 401; People v. Connor, 142 N. Y. 130, 36 N. E. 807; Forest Coal Co. v. Doolittle, 54 W. Va. 210, 46 S. E. 238; State v. Holloway, 19 N. M. 523, L.R.A.1915F, 922, 146 Pac. 1066; Reg. v. Phelan, 14 Cox, C. C. 579; Reg. v. Conway, 7 Ir. C. L. Rep. 525.

Messrs. Irwin & Haley, A. T. Dumm, and Roy Williams, for respondent:

The only office of the writ of prohibition is to prevent a usurpation of jurisdiction by a subordinate court.

High, Extr. Leg. Rem. 3d ed. §§ 767b, 768; Spelling, Inj. & Extr. Rem. 2d ed. § 1725.

A subordinate court, having jurisdiction over the subject-matter, has the right to determine it, incorrectly as well as correctly; and its judgment will not be interfered with by a superior court through the writ of prohibition.

Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Smith, 154 Mo. 321, 55 S. W. 470; State ex rel. Laclede Bank v. Lewis, 76 Mo. 370; State ex rel. Daugherty v. Hickman, 85 Mo. App. 198; State ex rel. Dawson v. St. Louis Ct. of Appeals, 99 Mo. 216, 12 S. W. 661.

The writ of prohibition is not a disqualifying writ. It leaves the court where it found it, either with or without jurisdiction.

Spelling, Inj. & Extr. Rem. 2d ed. § 1716; High, Extr. Leg. Rem. 3d ed. § 762; State ex rel. Morse v. Burckhardt, 87 Mo. 533; State ex rel. Ellis v. Elkin, 130 Mo. 90, 30 S. W. 333, 31 S. W. 1037.

The right to a change of venue is purely statutory, and unless some authority is given by statute for the change demanded, none exists.

State v. Anderson, 96 Mo. 247, 9 S. W. 636; State ex rel. Cottrell v. Wofford, 119 Mo. 408, 24 S. W. 1009; State ex rel. Kirn v. O'Hallaron, 144 Mo. App. 574, 129 S. W. 227; State ex rel. Bixman v. Denton, 128 Mo. App. 304, 107 S. W. 446; State v. Headrick, 149 Mo. 396, 51 S. W. 99; State v. Barrington, 198 Mo. 85, 95 S. W. 235; State v. Greenwade, 72 Mo. 298; State v. Sanders, 106 Mo. 188, 17 S. W. 223; State v. Witherspoon, 231 Mo. 716, 133 S. W. 323; State v. Dyer, 139 Mo. 209, 40 S. W. 768.

Sections 5198, 5201, Rev. Stat. 1909, relate to the same subject-matter, and should be construed together as being in pari materia.

State ex rel. Jones v. Mallinc-Krodt Chemical Works, 249 Mo. 702, 156 S. W. 967; Gantt v. Brown, 238 Mo. 560, 142 S. W. 422; Re Ryan, 174 Mo. App. 202, 156 S. W. 759; Hegberg v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 164 Mo. App. 514, 147 S. W. 192; State ex rel. McClanahan v. De Witt, 160 Mo. App. 304, 142 S. W. 366; Eldon v. Phillips, — Mo. App. —, 180 S. W. 418.

Faris, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an original proceeding in prohibition, whereby it is sought to prohibit respondent, as judge of the circuit court of Cole county, from taking further jurisdiction in the trial of the case wherein the state of Missouri is plaintiff and John W. Scott is defendant, said cause being No. 1,879 upon the docket of the Cole county circuit court.

Heretofore, upon the petition of relator by the attorney general of the state of Missouri, we issued our preliminary rule in prohibition, which rule it is now sought to make absolute.

The facts upon which it is sought by the state, through its attorney general, to prohibit respondent from taking further jurisdiction in the trial of the case of State v. Scott, as these facts are set forth in the petition for our writ, run briefly as follows: At and prior to the 2d day of February, 1918, which is the date upon which our preliminary rule herein was issued, there was pending against said John W. Scott, in the county of Cole aforesaid, an indictment in two counts, charging defendant therein with embezzlement and grand larceny. By virtue of an order made by the governor of the state of Missouri, pursuant to the statute in such cases made and provided, the assistant attorney general, together with special counsel for the state, appeared in the circuit court of Cole county and aided in the prosecution of said case of State of Missouri v. Scott. After the making of said order by the governor, and on the 27th day of November, 1917, the case of State v. Scott came on to be heard before respondent, and the state by Shraeder P. Howell, assistant attorney general, and Lee B. Ewing, as special counsel for the state, appeared and announced that it was ready for trial. Thereafter, but prior to the impaneling of the trial jury for the trial of the case, said Howell and Ewing became possessed, it is alleged, of information and knowledge of the existence of prejudice on the part of the respondent against the state of Missouri. The state thereupon, through its counsel, withdrew its announcement of ready for trial, and, having first obtained leave of court in that behalf, filed a formal, verified motion alleging the disqualification and incompetence of respondent to sit in the trial of the case of State v. Scott, on account of the alleged prejudice of said respondent against the state. Thereupon, on the ground of this alleged disqualification of respondent, the state moved that respondent proceed in accordance with the provisions of § 5201, Rev. Stat. 1909. The latter section makes provision for the calling in of a special judge to sit in the trial of any criminal case wherein the regular judge is disqualified.

This motion being overruled, relator made the allegations therein and the fact of overruling such motion the grounds of application for our writ. In the petition for our writ relator avers that respondent is prejudiced against the state in said case of State v. Scott, and by reason thereof that he is incompetent to hear and determine said case, and prays that we issue our writ of prohibition to prohibit respondent from taking further proceedings in, or holding further jurisdiction therein, and from taking further cognizance of, said case.

Our preliminary rule was, as above stated, issued, and for return thereto respondent admits all of the allegations of said petition except the fact of his prejudice in any degree in favor of the said Scott, or against the state of Missouri, which fact of prejudice he categorically denies. Respondent further denies that Messrs. Howell and Ewing, as assistant attorney general and special counsel as aforesaid, were legally in full charge of the prosecution in the case of State v. Scott, and avers the fact to be that their acts in that behalf are without authority and not warranted by the law of the state of Missouri. This latter allegation is not referred to in the briefs, and we assume, therefore, that it has been abandoned.

The denial by respondent of the alleged fact of his prejudice raised an issue of fact in the case. Thereupon this court made an order appointing J. P. McBaine, Esq., of the Boone county bar, as commissioner to hear and see the evidence adduced, and to find, make, and return to us his findings and conclusions both of fact and of law.

In due course our learned commissioner performed the duties made incumbent upon him by our order, and, pursuant to the command thereof, has reported to us that he finds the issues joined, both of law and of fact, against the respondent, and accordingly recommends that the preliminary rule herein issued be made absolute. To this report respondent has duly filed his exceptions, wherein he takes issue both upon the facts and the law. The case is before us, therefore, upon both of these questions.

I. Regard being had to the briefs of able counsel, and to the positions assumed and the arguments made therein, it is apparent that some confusion exists as to the exact nature of the relief sought herein by relator. This thought obtrudes itself from the fact that the argument is in large part directed against assumed position that the relator is asking for prohibition, with the object of procuring a change of venue on the part of the state. From this assumption as a basis, it is strenuously urged that both the law and the Constitution forbid a change of venue to the state, and therefore no such change is permissible.

It may be wise, therefore, in passing, to dispose of this erroneous view by a brief recourse to the history of the law and to first principles; whereupon much that is urged against the state's position at once becomes wholly irrelevant. In the very twilight of the trial jury's origin, men of the vicinage who were witnesses, or recognitors, as well as jurors, came up to the King's trial courts from the identical neighborhood in which the crime was committed for which accused was to be tried. They were brought up by a writ, which writ, from the command that it contained, came to be called a "venire facias," hence the word "venire," which, from being used as the name of the writ which brought the jurors up, has come to be used sometimes in the books as the name collectively of the jurors or those brought up by the writ. Whether we derive the word "venue" from the French as the Anglicized spelling of the past participle of "venir," to come, and thus it means "(those who) come," or from the modern French substantive, meaning "a coming," or whether it is derived from the Latin "vicinitatum," meaning "of the neighborhood," shortened by usage to "vicinetum," and again in law Latin to "visnetum," whence "visne," which in early days was used and written interchangeably for "venue" (10 Bacon, Abr. 364), we need not stop to ascertain; for the matter is one obscured by thick doubt. From meaning the place from which the jurors came, in course of time it came to mean the place to which the jurors came—i. e., the place of trial. According to the universal trend of modern authority, "venue" now means "the place of trial for an action." 40 Cyc. 11. In the true sense in which we are here compelled to consider it, the word does not mean the judge or the court before whom an accused is put upon his deliverance, but venue.

Definition—

which he is to be tried. Hence, if that place of trial is not to be changed, or sought so to be by this, or as a result of this, proceeding, the matter is one merely of a change of the judge before whom the trial is to be had, and not a change of the place—i. e., the venue whereat he is to be brought to trial. It follows that the expression "change of venue" is a misnomer, and all arguments against the permissibility of a change of venue to the state have nothing to do with the case, enjoying in that behalf a condition bearing a striking similitude in all respects to that of "the flowers that bloom in the spring."

II. Upon the question whether prohibition is the proper remedy, the case of State ex rel. Renfro v. Wear, 129 Mo. 619, 31 S. W. 608, is upon principle conclusive. This is so apparent as scarcely to require exposition.

Prohibition—to prevent judge sitting in case.

The ultimate facts in the Wear Case were that Judge Wear, being concededly related to the defendant, and therefore biased and prejudiced, as the legislature had determined, by the very fact that it passed the statute disqualifying him and others similarly situated, yet persisted in sitting in the trial of the case, or in preventing another judge from taking jurisdiction therein. If the fact of the bias of Judge Wear had not been foreclosed by the legislative determination of the fact of prejudice from the fact of relationship, but had been left to be determined by evidence adduced, it is as plain as a pikestaff that the cases presented are precisely alike. Therefore, if the fact of respondent's prejudice and bias shall have been shown by the evidence in this case, he stands in a position in no wise different from that of Judge Wear, and so prohibition will lie.

Therefore, if we shall find as a matter of fact from the evidence in the case that respondent is prejudiced, we bring the case, as we look at it, precisely within the procedure successfully invoked in the Wear Case. How stands the evidence upon this question of fact? Our learned commissioner who heard the evidence, and who was by virtue of our order empowered to make and report to us his conclusions both of fact and of law, has found from the evidence that respondent was prejudiced. While we are not compelled to accept as final and binding upon us the conclusions of our learned commissioner, either upon the law or upon the facts [State ex rel. Major v. Arkansas Lumber Co. 260 Mo. loc. cit. 271, 169 S. W. 145], these conclusions are at least persuasive. We have gone over the evidence and the divers exhibits forming parts thereof, and have reached the identical conclusion in regard to their weight and probative effect which was reached by our commissioner. Upon this point our commissioner, summing up, reports to us thus: "We conclude, therefore, that because of all Judge Slate had heard and surmised and had read that he was not in an unbiased frame of mind, and this we say without in any manner intending to reflect upon Judge Slate's honesty of purpose.

Reference—finding of commissioner—conclusiveness.

Judge—bias—prejudice against state.

"Summing up, the matter comes to this:

"Mr. Howell had conducted the investigation before the Cole county grand jury which resulted in these indictments. During the time of this investigation there were frequent controversies and disagreements between Judge Slate and Mr. Howell. The grand jury proceedings attracted public interest, and the newspapers of the state gave a great deal of space to the investigation. A reporter for one of the papers was sent to jail by Judge Slate for contempt of court, and two editors of papers in the state were cited for contempt of court. The newspaper articles were frequently uncomplimentary to Judge Slate, and he was no doubt quite exasperated by the many newspaper articles about the investigation. Judge Slate had concluded that many of the newspaper articles were inspired by Mr. Howell and others in the attorney general's office. Long before the cases came on for trial Judge Slate had developed strong ill feelings against Mr. Howell. He was convinced that the attorney general's office gave out information to various newspaper reporters upon which they based newspaper articles criticizing and reflecting upon him.

"Judge Slate's own testimony before the commissioner was also convincing that during the trial of these cases he had no little feeling of ill will for Mr. Ewing.

"There is nothing in the record that shows that Judge Slate had any reason for favoring or shielding the defendant, John W. Scott. While the testimony shows that they had known each other for a great many years, it also shows that their social and political relations were not very friendly. We are convinced, however, that the court's attitude as to Mr. Ewing and Mr. Howell had prejudiced his mind against the prosecution of these cases, including the case of State of Missouri v. John W. Scott, No. 1,879. We believe that because of this feeling that existed that he could not and did not view with equanimity propositions advanced on behalf of the state by the state's representatives in charge of the prosecution of this case. We feel that he did not possess that calm, dispassionate, and unbiased condition of mind essential in order that the trial judge shall conduct a trial with complete impartiality. We feel that because of this feeling against Messrs. Howell and Ewing that the interest of the state could not be sufficiently considered by Judge Slate. We think, for example, that had Judge Slate on the occasion in question possessed an open mind, that he would have listened to the argument of the attorneys for the state as to the admissibility of other offenses in the case of State of Missouri v. John W. Scott, and that he would not have ruled immediately without any argument when the matter was presented to him that such testimony was inadmissible.

"The decisions of this court, beginning with State v. Myers, 82 Mo. 558, 52 Am. Rep. 389, and ending with State v. Patterson, 271 Mo. 99, 196 S. W. 3, no doubt most strongly tend to support the view that evidence of other sales of coal by Scott were admissible to prove his intent in selling the coal in question.

"Judge Slate admitted evidence of other offenses in the case of State of Missouri v. James C. Welch, No. —, and we confess we are unable to see any distinction whatever in principle between the Welch Case and the Scott Case. We of course recognize that it is not proof of prejudice to merely show that a judge has ruled incorrectly upon the admissibility of testimony. Our finding of prejudice is not based on these rulings alone. We think, though, that in view of all the circumstances, and particularly the manner in which the rulings were made, the rulings do show that Judge Slate did not maintain an open and unprejudiced mind."

To this summing up, and to the evidence upon which it is based, other facts shown by the record might have been added; particularly the facts found in the testimony of witnesses Mayhall and Adcock touching the expressed view of respondent that "there was nothing in these cases." This statement, it is fair to say, was denied by him as to its application to the pending case of State v. Scott.

III. We are constrained to agree also with the view of the commissioner that, if prejudice existed, it makes no earthly difference in the law of the case as to the manner in which that prejudice was engendered. Prejudice is the ultimate fact; its <sup>—cause of</sup> ~~prejudice.~~ origin is wholly im-material. Likewise it is immaterial whether it was warranted or unwarranted, justified by the facts or not justified thereby. If in fact bias exists to an extent which will preclude a fair, unprejudiced, and unbiased weighing of the law and the facts on the state's side upon a trial of the case of State v. Scott, then prejudice is present to a degree forbidden to a judge by both the common law (Massie v. Com. 93 Ky. 588, 20 S. W. 704) and the statute (Rev. Stat. 1909, § 5198).

We are also constrained to agree that the record before us shows the existence of prejudice in the mind of the respondent. This appears not only from what we find and from what the commissioner finds, but, to use a homely expression from the vernacular, the fact of prejudice can be read from between the lines upon almost every page of the voluminous record before us. In so ruling we acquit the learned respondent of conscious knowledge of the fact of his bias. Regrettably the cases pending were such as naturally to create great public interest. They were, also regrettably, being tried beforehand by the press of the state in the forum of public opinion. In the search after sensational features which would catch and hold the public eye, and create public opinion, much was printed which was based upon bald surmise. Much also was deduced which had as its sole basis erroneous conclusions drawn from acts in themselves innocent, or acts done by respondent in the line of his official duty. From the latter acts, in some instances, deductions were printed which reflected upon him unjustly, and had the effect to distort respondent's enforced absence while holding regular terms of court in other counties of his circuit, into seemingly studied reluctance to continue the grand jury investigation.

IV. It is unquestionably true that from mere error in ruling against the state upon a question of law neither interest, nor bias, nor prejudice can be safely predicated. But if the proof show that upon a trial of a case wherein intent must be proven or deduced, if at all, from proof of the doing of other similar acts in the same neighborhood, about the same time, evidence of such similar acts was admitted in the trial of a case against A, but denied in the trial immediately thereafter of a case against B, such fact may be a circumstance which, added to other things, may tend to show prejudice in favor of B, especially if, as was the case presented, the reason and the law favoring the admissibility of the evidence of similar acts against B were by far more apparent and cogent in B's case than they were in the case of A. Moreover, such a ruling would afford a more cogent circumstance if it were announced that it would be made, as was the case here, before the trial of the case against B. We repeat, for emphasis' sake, that nothing is better settled in law than that mere error of the kind mentioned, when standing alone, disassociated from other facts and circumstances, does not afford the least evidence of bias or prejudice.

But, be all this as may be, we are convinced that, in the state of mind into which the learned respondent was driven by the matters and things mentioned, it was not possible for him to try the case before him without prejudice, and so, without more, we agree with the finding of the fact of prejudice as made by our commissioner. In so finding we pause in all fairness to disclaim the remotest reflection upon the motives of the able and learned respondent. His attitude may well be ascribed to the righteous exasperation of an honest and conscientious judge, driven to indignation and from judicial plumb by what he conceived to be unjust and unwarranted criticisms of his official conduct.

V. Which brings us to the point of law strenuously and most ably presented by respondent's learned counsel. This point, as forecast supra, is not whether the state is ever entitled to a change of venue. There is no question of a change of venue in this case. The question of law is: Can a trial judge, absent his own voluntary disqualification, lose jurisdiction of a criminal case because of his interest or prejudice therein against the state? We agree with the conclusion of law upon this point of our learned commissioner and are constrained upon both reason and authority to hold the affirmative of the question stated.

Some settled propositions as fore-—error in ruling

—effect.

—prejudice against state—
effect.

words are apposite. One of these is an axiom of the common law wholly applicatory by the closest analogy, which runs in substance that no man ought to sit in judgment in his own case. The other is that, if the objection of prejudice against the state be raised in a case, such objection must of necessity be raised by the sworn, elected, prosecuting officer of the state; that is, either by the prosecuting attorney of the county wherein the cause is pending, or by the attorney general of the state. Such prosecuting officers owe neither lesser nor greater duty, but precisely the same duty, to both state and defendant in the trial of criminal cases, as does the judge of the circuit court. It cannot be assumed that such prosecuting officer would act in such a case except from motives bottomed upon considerations of the very highest devotion to official duty. It cannot be urged,

—evil arising from change.

then, against the question propounded, that the taking of the affirmative thereof would open a Pandora's box of evils and make trials of criminal cases subject to captious objections of disgruntled prosecuting officers, with all the delays incident thereto.

For the reason forecast by us at the outset of this discussion, we need not consider whether that provision of our organic law which guarantees to the accused in criminal prosecutions "the right to appear and defend in person and by counsel; to demand the nature and cause of the accusation; to meet the witnesses against him face to face; to have process to compel the attendance of witnesses in his behalf; and a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the county." Const. § 22, art. 2, would or would not render invalid any legislative act which had for its object a trial by a jury of some other county than that wherein the alleged crime was committed. That question, upon a consideration of what the expression "change of venue" connotes, falls out of this case. For upon the facts here, considered in the light of the relief sought <sup>—provision for disqualification.</sup> by this proceeding, this case comes precisely within another provision of our Constitution (Const. § 29, art. 6), which provides that "if there be a vacancy in the office of judge of any circuit, or if the judge be sick, absent, or from any cause unable to hold any term or part of term of court in any county in his circuit, such term or part of term of court may be held by a judge of any other circuit; and at the request of the judge of any circuit, any term of court or part of term in his circuit may be held by the judge of any other circuit, and in all such cases, or in any case where the judge cannot preside, the general assembly shall make such additional provision for holding court as may be found necessary."

That part of the above provision which we italicize was added to an existing provision of the Constitution of 1865 (Const. 1865, § 17, art. 6) by the adoption of the Constitution of 1875. Pursuant to the permission granted by § 29 of article 6 of the Constitution of 1875, there are now divers sections of the statute affecting the matter of interest of the trial judge, and providing for his disqualification upon the grounds of interest, relationship, and prejudice. See §§ 3867, 5198, Rev. Stat. 1909. Likewise the legislature has passed divers statutes providing the details of calling in other judges, or of electing special judges. See §§ 5199–5201, Rev. Stat. 1909.

Some of the above sections antedated in their original provisions, at least, the adoption of the Constitution of 1875. But all these, where not in conflict with the provisions of the Organic Law of 1875, continued in force and are now in force, pursuant to the Constitution itself. Const. Schedule, § 1.

Learned counsel for respondent insist that § 3867, supra, is alone apposite, and that § 5198, supra, has no application. We are constrained to hold to the contrary.

—statutory incompetency.

The legislative history of these two sections clearly shows the fallacy of this position. Section 5198 seems to have had its beginning and to have come into the statutes in 1835. Stat. 1835, § 15, p. 486. It was then a change of venue statute. Many changes and amendments have been made to it from time to time, till manifestly it has, so far as its own contents are concerned, long since ceased to be solely a change of venue statute. Section 5198 read at the time the matters and things here under discussion transpired, and now reads, thus: "When any indictment or criminal prosecution shall be pending in any circuit court or criminal court, the judge of said court shall be deemed incompetent to hear and try said cause in either of the following cases: First, when the judge of the court in which said case is pending is near of kin to the defendant by blood or marriage; or, second, when the offense charged is alleged to have been committed against the person or property of such judge, or some person near of kin to him by blood or marriage; or, third, when the judge is in any wise interested or prejudiced, or shall have been counsel in the cause; or, fourth, when the defendant shall make and file an affidavit, supported by the affidavit of at least two reputable persons, not of kin to, or counsel for the defendant, that the judge of the court in which said cause is pending will not afford him a fair trial."

The reason for the enactment of the original of said § 5198 is fairly obvious and historically interesting. In 1832, and at a time when all statutes providing details for the removal of cases by change of venue had been theretofore repealed, the case of Jim v. State, 3 Mo. 147, was heard by this court. The defendant, a slave, had been convicted of murder. The trial below was before Judge David Todd, whose slave the defendant was. Defendant had applied for a change of venue which the trial court refused to grant. Upon defendant's appeal here the refusal to grant a change of venue was held to be error, notwithstanding the fact that all the statutes providing for the details of the practice in change of venue proceedings had been theretofore repealed. Jim v. State, 3 Mo. loc. cit. 177. There then existed no applicable statute from which the practice could be deduced. All there seems then to have been in our statutes at all applicable to the situation confronting this court was an extremely general statute found in the chapter on "Courts" (1 Mo. Rev. Laws 1825, § 23, p. 277), which statute, so far as pertinent, read thus: "That no judge of the supreme court, who is interested in any suit or related to either party, or who shall have been of counsel in any suit or action . . . pending in said court, shall sit on the determination thereof . . . nor shall any judge of the circuit or probate court sit on the determination of any cause or proceeding, either civil or criminal in which he is interested or related to either party, . . . but such cause or proceeding; if pending in the circuit court, shall be removed to some county where such objection does not exist, according to law: . . . Provided, that in no criminal cases shall the venue be changed without the consent of the defendant."

The above section has come down to us after many changes and amendments as § 3867, Rev. Stat. 1909. Following the decision in the case of Jim v. State, supra, the legislature amended the chapter on "Practice and Proceedings in Criminal Cases" by adding thereto a number of sections which set forth the grounds for granting changes of venue and provided for the details of the practice therein. Mo. Stat. 1835, §§ 15 et seq. p. 486. From § 15, supra, after being many times amended, we get § 5198. The fact that said § 15 was passed by reason of the decision in the Jim Case is clearly indicated by one of its provisions, which is that if the defendant be a slave, and the judge of the circuit court be the owner thereof, a removal of the cause to another court shall be ordered.

It will be noted, however, that § 5198 now contains within itself no reference to any removal of the cause from the county of the venue. It merely deals with the incompetence of the circuit judge and sets forth the conditions or disabilities under which he shall be incompetent to try a given criminal case. Such judge is made incompetent to sit in the trial under four separate and distinct conditions: "First, when the judge of the court in which said case is pending is near of kin to the defendant by blood or marriage; or, second, when the offense charged is alleged to have been committed against the person or property of such judge, or some person near of kin to him by blood or marriage; or, third, when the judge is in any wise interested or prejudiced, or shall have been counsel in the cause; or fourth, when the defendant shall make and file an affidavit, supported by the affidavit of at least two reputable persons, not of kin to or counsel for the defendant, that the judge of the court in which said cause is pending will not afford him a fair trial."

The first of these creates an incompetence or disqualification in the judge for which the state may prevent the judge from sitting by our writ of prohibition. State ex rel. Renfro v. Wear, 129 Mo. 619, 31 S. W. 608. The second seems to constitute a status of incompetence whereby the accused, being prejudiced, might alone be interested in acting. The third (the existence of prejudice or interest, or the fact that the judge has been of counsel being granted or proved) will clearly serve as a basis of disqualification either for the state or for the defendant; for, under the reasoning in the Jim Case, supra, as found at page 176 of 3 Mo., either of the above reasons could be urged by the accused as a ground for a change of venue. The fourth ground is clearly applicable to the accused. By virtue of it he may urge the specific ground set out in such fourth subdivision, namely, that the judge of the court "will not afford him a fair trial," or he may urge any other ground contained in this statute.

From the plain language of subdivision 3 of § 5198, supra, it will not do to say that interest or prejudice against the state, or what is tantamount thereto, bias and prejudice in favor of the defendant, or the fact that the trial judge had been of counsel for the defendant, cannot be taken advantage of by the state, or that such things are not disqualifications which produce, when the existence thereof is either admitted or proved, an incompetence to sit as trial judge, for which the judge may be prevented from sitting by the state's prosecuting officer. There is no manner of doubt that, if the circuit judge be in fact interested or prejudiced against the state, or shall have been of counsel for the defendant, he ought not to sit. This is obviously both the moral and ethical view, and the statute has enacted these moral and ethical views into a law. No man ought to be a judge in his own case, and <sup>—interest—</sup> own case.

a case wherein a judge is interested is one wherein to an extent and in effect the case becomes the judge's own case. The latter is merely an evolution of the above fundamental maxim.

Neither will it suffice to say that the fact of the existence or non-existence of interest or prejudice must be left for determination to the automatus action of the trial judge's conscience, nor that some such intention in the legislature's mind is to be de- <sup>—absence of</sup> duced from the fact <sup>statute—right of</sup> that it has enacted <sup>judge to decide.</sup>

no law which provides details of the practice to govern cases wherein, though interest and prejudice exist, the conscience of the trial judge has failed to move him aright. The case of State ex. rel. Renfro v. Wear, supra, was such a case, and this court took jurisdiction and prohibited the judge therein from holding further jurisdiction of a criminal case wherein the son of the judge was the defendant.

Our learned commissioner in his conclusions upon the law construing § 5196 says:

"It is contended by respondent's learned counsel that the terms and provisions of § 5198 are applicable only to the defendant, and that a circuit judge in a criminal prosecution cannot be disqualified at the instance of the state. We do not agree with this interpretation of the section. The language of the section is general, and there is nothing stated expressly or impliedly that limits the first three subdivisions of the section to applications on behalf of a defendant. It is remembered that the fourth subdivision expressly relates to application upon the part of the defendant. That subdivision provides, 'when the defendant shall make and file an affidavit, supported by the affidavit of at least two reputable persons, not of kin to or counsel for the defendant, that the judge of the court in which said cause is pending will not afford him a fair trial,' that the regular judge shall be disqualified. This section, it will be noticed, is especially liberal in favor of the defendant, and provides that the regular judge shall not sit when two reputable persons not of kin or of counsel and the defendant himself will make an affidavit that the judge will not afford him a fair trial.

"The fact that the fourth section is by express provision applicable to the defendant, and that the other subdivisions do not mention the defendant, strengthens the conclusion that the first three subdivisions of the section are general provisions enumerating causes which shall disqualify a judge at the instance of either the state or the defendant.

"This section was under consideration by this court in State ex rel. Renfro v. Wear, supra, and while the facts in that case are not precisely the same as in this case, yet the principle of law to be deduced from that decision is controlling here. In that case Judge Wear was disqualified because of his relationship to the defendant on trial.

"This court called attention to §§ 3247 and 4174, Revised Statutes 1889, which are now §§ 3867 and 5198, Rev. Stat. 1909. Judge Gantt, however, in the opinion, quotes from § 4174, now § 5198, Rev. Stat. 1909, and concludes that 'from these provisions of the Constitution and statutes of this state it is plain that Judge Wear, by his relation to his son, the defendant, was disqualified, and, knowing this, it was his imperative duty to either order an election of a special judge, or request the judge of another circuit to sit in the trial of said indictment.'

"In that case, after Judge Wear had called in a special judge, he declined to permit the special judge to try the case, but attempted himself to exercise jurisdiction, and was prohibited from exercising jurisdiction by a writ of prohibition from this court.

"There are numerous decisions of this court sustaining the general principle that it is the policy of the law in this state that criminal trials shall be conducted by wholly disinterested judges. See State v. Jim, 3 Mo. 147; State v. Gates, 20 Mo. 401. In the latter case it was said: 'It was both the policy and intention of our legislature to have tribunals for the determination of criminal cases above all suspicion—courts upon whose disinterestedness not only the prisoner, but the whole community, can repose with entire confidence.'

"And § 5198, Rev. Stat. 1909, also indicates the policy of the state, for it will be noticed it is provided that the judge shall be incompetent to sit if he is in 'any wise interested or prejudiced.'

"There is no doubt but that it is true that as strong reasons may exist why a prejudiced judge should not try a case when the suggestion comes from the state, as well as when the suggestion comes from the defendant. As was said by Walker, P. J., in Re Howell, 273 Mo. 96, loc. cit. 120, 200 S. W. 72: 'A condition of the public mind may exist in a locality which would impel a public prosecutor, in an honest effort to discharge his duty, to at least call the trial judge's attention to circumstances indicating that he had, although without corrupt intent, prejudiced the case, and that it should be tried by another. This would involve no question of personal integrity, afford at least a fair opportunity for the state to conduct the prosecution free from any possible ulterior influence, and in no wise interfere with any right accorded to the defendant.'

No difficulties or embarrassments can arise in the administration of the criminal law from the view that a circuit judge may be disqualified by reason of prejudice against the state from sitting in the trial of any criminal case, and that, being so disqualified, such judge may be, by our writ of prohibition, prevented from sitting therein. The situation thus brought about by a compulsory disqualification is in no wise different than the situation which would have existed had the learned respondent of his own volition declared his own disqualification. Automatically the applicatory statutes will, as in case of a voluntary disqualification, apply and solve all the problems presented, and thus the resultant situation presents no difficulties either insuperable or insolvable.

Being constrained by the record to the view that respondent does not possess that unprejudiced and disinterested state of mind in regard to the case of State v. Scott which is requisite under the statute, and which is essential and necessary as a matter of right in the proper administration of justice, and being fully convinced that this court has the power both at common law and by statute to prohibit him from further exercising his jurisdiction in the trial of said case, we are of the opinion that our preliminary rule in prohibition heretofore issued herein ought to be made absolute.

Let it be so ordered.

All concur, except Woodson, Blair, and Graves, JJ., not sitting.

ANNOTATION.

Prohibition to prevent prejudiced judge from proceeding with case.

Generally.

In the absence of a statute expressly permitting it, the general rule is that prohibition, being an extraordinary writ, can be resorted to only when the ordinary and usual remedies provided by law are not adequate and available. See 22 R. C. L. 9. Applying this rule to the availability of prohibition as a remedy to restrain a prejudiced judge from proceeding further in a pending cause, it has been held in several cases that prohibition will issue where the remedy by appeal is inadequate. North Bloomfield Gravel Min. Co. v. Keyser (1881) 58 Cal. 815 (applying express provision of statute); People ex rel. Brown v. District Ct. (1899) 26

Colo. 226, 56 Pac. 1115; Rush v. Denhardt (1910) 138 Ky. 238, 127 S. W. 785, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1199; State ex rel. Jones v. Gay (1911) 65 Wash. 629, 118 Pac. 830.

Thus, under the Kentucky statute (Stat. § 4211; Russell's Stat. § 6153), which provides that in a proceeding to cancel the license of a liquor dealer an appeal from an order of the county court shall not suspend the operation thereof, it has been held that the remedy by appeal from an order revoking a license is not adequate where it appears that the county judge is so prejudiced that a license holder cannot obtain a fair and impartial hearing, and a writ of prohibition will issue to restrain the county judge from hearing or determining the proceedings for the revocation of the license. Rush v. Denhardt (1910) 138 Ky. 238, 127 S. W. 785, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1199, supra, wherein the court said: "As courts are established to administer justice, why should not the highest court in the state, when there is no other adequate remedy, in the exercise of the ample and unquestioned power conferred upon it, lay its superintending hand upon any inferior jurisdiction that is about to commit a judicial wrong, and compel it to administer justice according to the right of the case? However, it is not necessary to further pursue this line of thought. In the case before us, the legislature has given both to the commonwealth and the liquor dealer the right to appeal from the judgment of the county court to the circuit court, and from the circuit court to this court, thereby declaring that any decision entered by the county court should be subject to review and reversal by the circuit court, and any decision rendered by the circuit court should be subject to review and reversal by this court. Having granted the right of appeal, it seems manifest that the legislature did not contemplate that the licensee would be arbitrarily deprived of his license by the county court, but rather that he should have a fair hearing in that court, and after such a hearing his license, if revoked, would be suspended until a trial in the circuit court. But when it is made to appear, as in these cases, that the judge of the county court will not grant a fair hearing, but will cancel the license whether or no, then the licensee, without the statute so intending, is deprived of a privilege he had the right to enjoy. It therefore becomes important that an impartial trial should be had in the county court; and, when this cannot be had, this court in the interest of justice will exercise its power and grant relief from a condition not intending to exist by the statute."

So, in State ex rel. Jones v. Gay (1911) 65 Wash. 629, 118 Pac. 830, wherein prohibition was sought to prevent a judge from proceeding with the trial of a criminal case, after he had denied a motion for a change of judge on the ground of prejudice, it was held that an appeal was not an adequate or speedy remedy, since the petitioner for the writ was in custody under a charge of having committed a felony, and was financially unable to furnish bail or prosecute an appeal. The court said: "He is entitled, under the Constitution, to 'a speedy public trial by an impartial jury' (art. 1, § 22) and an unbiased judge (Laws 1911, p. 617, § 1), which cannot be had in this case unless this writ is granted."

Likewise, in North Bloomfield Gravel Min. Co. v. Keyser (1881) 58 Cal. 315, it was held, under a statute expressly providing that prohibition might be issued "to an inferior tribunal, or to a corporation, board, or person, in all cases where there is not a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law," that a judge of the superior court was a "person," within the meaning of the statute, and that an appeal from a denial by such judge of a motion for a change of venue, on account of his interest in the subject-matter of the action, was not an adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, and that consequently prohibition would issue. With respect to the second point decided, the court said: "A glance at the nature of the relief sought in this case is sufficient to show that the remedy by appeal is not a plain, speedy, and adequate one. If, as has already been determined, the respondent is so interested in the determination of the action before him as renders him disqualified to sit in the cause, the petitioner has the right to insist that he do not sit. Upon an application made for a change of venue, based in part on the disqualification of the judge, the latter decided that he was not disqualified, denied the motion, and will, as is alleged in the petition, continue to act as judge in the case. On an appeal from the order denying the motion, no stay of proceedings is allowed by statute, and, pending the slow process of appeal, other orders may be made, and possibly the cause be tried before a judge disqualified to act. Under such circumstances, we are of the opinion that the petitioner has not a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law." The following cases were decided on the authority of North Bloomfield Gravel Min. Co. v. Keyser (Cal.) supra; Connolly & G. M. G. Co. v. Keyser (1881) 58 Cal. 328; Milton Min. Co. v. Keyser (1881) 58 Cal. 328; South Feather Co. v. Keyser (1881) 58 Cal. 329; Alpha Min. Co. v. Keyser (1881) 58 Cal. 329; Blue Tent Min. Co. v. Keyser (1881) 58 Cal. 329; Excelsior W. & M. Co. v. Keyser (1881) 58 Cal. 329.

In People ex rel. Brown v. District Ct. (1899) 26 Colo. 226, 56 Pac. 1115, it was held that a writ of prohibition was properly issued by a district court to restrain a county judge from proceeding further in a matter wherein he was disqualified to act by virtue of his having previously been attorney for one of the parties, the decision being based apparently on the ground that the orders which it was sought to prevent the judge from making would not constitute final judgments from which an appeal would lie.

On the other hand, in Talbot v. Pirkey (1903) 139 Cal. 326, 73 Pac. 858, it was held that where a trial judge has jurisdiction to decide the question of his own bias, his error, if error there is, in denying a motion for a change of judge on account of bias and prejudice, can be reviewed only on appeal, and hence prohibition will not lie to restrain him from proceeding in the cause.

So, in People ex rel. Deal v. Williams (1900) 51 App. Div. 102, 64 N. Y. Supp. 457, it was held that a writ of prohibition will not issue to restrain a justice of the peace, on the ground of prejudice, from proceeding with the trial of a person for criminal contempt committed in the presence of the justice, since the matter is not triable before any other officer, and the petitioner has the right of review.

In a number of cases, however, the right to a writ of prohibition as against a prejudiced judge is not made to depend on the existence or nonexistence of another adequate legal remedy, the decision in each case apparently turning on the sufficiency of a showing of disqualification. Thus, in the reported case (STATE EX REL. MC-ALLISTER v. SLATE, ante, 1226) it is held that prohibition is the proper remedy to restrain further action by a judge, if the court finds as a matter of fact, from the evidence in the case, that the judge is prejudiced.

So, in State ex rel. Renfro v. Wear (1895) 129 Mo. 619, 31 S. W. 608, followed in principle by the reported case, a writ of prohibition was issued without discussion of the propriety of the remedy, it appearing that the judge in question was disqualified by virtue of statute, because related to one of the parties.

And in State ex rel. Lentz v. Fort (1903) 178 Mo. 518, 77 S. W. 741, a writ of prohibition was issued to restrain a judge from proceeding further in a cause wherein he had entered an order disqualifying himself on the record, and then had made a subsequent order revoking the first one.

It has also been held, without reference to the existence of any other legal remedy, that the writ of prohibition lies to restrain a judge of a court from proceeding in a cause in which he is disqualified by reason of interest, though there is no statute prohibiting a judge from sitting in a case in which he is interested, and the case is one of which the court, as distinguished from the judge, has full jurisdiction. Forest Coal Co. v. Doolittle (1903) 54 W. Va. 210, 46 S. E. 238; Grafton v. Holt (1905) 58 W. Va. 182, 52 S. E. 21, 6 Ann. Cas. 403. See to the same effect, Dimes v. Grand Junction Canal (1852) 3 H. L. Cas. 759, 10 Eng. Reprint, 301, 17 Jur. 73. In Grafton v. Holt (W. Va.) supra, however, it was held that, while prohibition would issue to prevent a judge from acting further in the hearing and determination of a chancery suit to which he was a quasi party, the writ would not be granted to annul a merely voidable temporary injunction granted by him, or to prevent him from entering such orders as should be necessary to bring the suit to a hearing and determination before a qualified court or judge. But a writ of prohibition will not issue to prevent a judge, on the ground of prejudice, from proceeding with the trial of a cause, where the application presents to the court no facts which will establish the disqualification. Dakan v. Superior Ct. (1905) 2 Cal. App. 52, 82 Pac. 1129. In that case it appeared that, after the filing of a notice of motion with affidavits annexed thereto for a change of the place of trial on account of the bias and prejudice of the judge, but before the hearing and determination of the motion, the judge commenced the hearing of the cause. Denying an application for a writ of prohibition, the court said: "There is no presumption that a judge is disqualified; and, if a party would seek a change of place of trial of the action upon that ground, the burden is upon him to present facts showing such disqualification. Whether it exists is a judicial question, to be determined by the tribunal before which it is presented, and an application for a writ of prohibition based upon this ground must present to the court facts which will establish the disqualification of the judge. Neither in the petition herein, nor in the affidavits which were attached to the notice of motion, is there set forth the existence of any bias or prejudice on the part of the judge, or any fact showing his disqualification to hear and determine the action before him. The statement in the notice of motion of the grounds upon which the motion would be made is not to be considered in determining whether such disqualification exists. Only the facts set forth in the affidavits in support of the motion can be considered for that purpose, and these are insufficient to show any disqualification of the judge, or that the defendant could not have a fair and impartial trial before him."

So, a writ of prohibition will not be granted to restrain a judge from proceeding in a cause where the contention that he is disqualified by reason of his interest in the suit as a former stockholder in the corporation defendant is not sustained by the allegations or proof. Favorite v. Superior Ct. (1919) — Cal. —, ante, 290, 184 Pac. 15.

Likewise, prohibition will not issue to restrain a judge from taking any further proceedings in a cause on the ground that his son is the attorney for one of the parties, where there is no sufficient evidence to show that the son ever entered an actual bona fide appearance as attorney in the case. Benton v. Budd (1898) 120 Cal. 329, 52 Pac. 851.

In People ex rel. Devery v. Jerome (1901) 36 Misc. 257, 73 N. Y. Supp. 306, a writ of prohibition was denied, where it was claimed merely that the trial judge was "biased and prejudiced and inspired by partisan motives." The court said: "The rule must be deemed well settled that, in the absence of express statutory provisions, bias or prejudice or unworthy motives on the part of a judge, unconnected with an interest in the controversy, will not be cause for disqualification. While it might be indecorous and offensive to judicial propriety for a judicial officer to act where there were such impediments to impartial action, yet our statutes make no provision for disqualifying a judge for these causes."

See also Bowman's Case (1877) 67 Mo. 146, wherein a writ of prohibition was denied because, in the opinion of the court, the trial judge was not disqualified.

In Louisiana where a trial judge, whose recusation has been moved, refuses to recuse himself and to refer the issue to be tried in the manner provided by law, a writ of prohibition will be issued to restrain him from proceeding further in the cause. State ex rel. Tyrrell v. Judge of Fifteenth Judicial Dist. Ct. (1881) 33 La. Ann. 1293; State ex rel. Segura v. Judge of Twenty-first Judicial Dist. (1885) 37 La. Ann. 253; State ex rel. Trimble v. Judge of Third Judicial Dist. (1886) 38 La. Ann. 247. But where the issue of recusation is referred to a judge ad hoc, or to a neighboring judge, the latter has authority to determine the question of his own recusation, and a writ of prohibition will not issue to restrain him from so doing. State ex rel. Ribbeck v. Foster (1904) 112 La. 533, 36 So. 554.

Prohibition against member of special tribunal.

It seems that prohibition will issue in a proper case against a member of a special tribunal having judicial functions. State ex rel. Barnard v. Board of Education (1898) 19 Wash. 8, 40 L.R.A. 317, 67 Am. St. Rep. 706, 52 Pac. 317. In that case it appeared that a member of a board of school directors had been a prime mover in having charges preferred against a school superintendent, and had announced his intention to vote to remove the superintendent from office, no matter what the evidence might be. Holding that prohibition should issue to prevent the prejudiced member from sitting as a member of the board to hear and determine the charges, the court said: "It is stoutly contended by the respondents that this case does not fall under any of the disqualifications of the judge provided in subd. 4 of § 163 of the Code of Procedure (Bal. Code, § 4857), and that, outside of the provisions of the Code, a judge is only disqualified by having a financial interest in the result of the suit. We have examined with care all the authorities cited by the respondents to sustain this contention, but are of the opinion that they fail to do so. Most of the cases either fall within the doctrine of necessity, which is announced by some of the courts, where to challenge the judge successfully would prevent the hearing of the cause, as in cases where there was no other tribunal to try the case, or where the judge was sitting merely to declare the law, and the case was tried by jury; and in all the cases we think an appeal would lie. It may be said here that no appeal lies from the decision of the board of directors, and the judges act in the capacity of jurors; and, while some courts have decided that the tests of the respective qualifications of judges and jurors are not the same, yet in a case of this kind, where the judges pass upon the facts, and it is a pure question of fact which is presented for their consideration and for their determination, we see no good reason why the test of qualification should be different; for the judge in this case is in reality a juror passing upon questions of fact. . . .

The reason that financial interest or near relationship to a litigant is held to be sufficient to recuse a judge is that it is to be presumed that self-interest or natural affection will unconsciously prejudice a judge, and deprive the litigant of a fair trial. This presumption in certain cases may or may not be justified by the truth, but so solicitous is the law to maintain inviolate the principle that every litigant shall be secure in his right to a fair trial that he is accorded the benefit of the presumption. But what does a presumption amount to compared with the admitted fact that the judge will not accord the litigant a fair trial,—that he will vote to remove him from his office, no matter what the evidence may be? And this, so far as this case is concerned, the demurrer to the affidavit having been sustained, must be considered the fact. To compel a litigant to submit to a judge who has already confessedly prejudiced him, and who is candid enough to announce his decision in advance, and insist that he will adhere to it, no matter what the evidence may be, would be so farcical and manifestly wrong that it seems to us that the idea must necessarily be excluded by the very expression 'administration of justice.'

But it has been held that prohibition will not lie to prevent an attorney for one of the parties from sitting as a member of a special tribunal, constituted in accordance with statute, to hear and determine an election contest. McWhorter v. Dorr (1905) 57 W. Va. 608, 110 Am. St. Rep. 815, 50 S. E. 838, wherein the decision was based on the theory that the special tribunal in question was not a court, or part of the judicial department of the state, but was a subordinate legislative tribunal, and hence prohibition could not issue.

See also Ex parte Medwin (1853) 1 El. & Bl. 609, 118 Eng. Reprint, 566, 22 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 169, 17 Jur. 1173, wherein the court refused to prohibit a cause before the chancellor of the consistory court of a diocese, it appearing merely that the bishop who had appointed the chancellor was interested in the cause, to the extent of having guaranteed the costs.

M. J. Q.

J. S. MOODY

v.

GULF REFINING COMPANY.

J. M. HORN

v.

SAME.

Tennessee Supreme Court — March 5, 1930.

(— Tenn. —, 218 S. W. 817.)

Proximate cause — fire from gasoline — ignition by stranger — act of child.

1. Negligence of a dealer in oils in permitting the ground along the switch track where it unloads its material to become saturated with oil and gasoline is not the proximate cause of the destruction of neighboring property by fire caused by boys throwing lighted matches into the gasoline.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1250.]

Negligence — unloading car of gasoline — permitting fluid to run out upon ground.

2. The owner of a carload of gasoline is not guilty of negligence, if, after opening the discharge vent preparatory to unloading the car, a servant in charge of the work seeks a place of safety without closing the vent, upon receiving warning that a blast is to be shot in the immediate vicinity, thereby permitting the gasoline to overflow the tub set to catch the drip and run out upon the ground, where fire is subsequently set to it by boys, to the injury of property in the neighborhood.

[See 11 R. C. L. 662; 20 R. C. L. 29; see annotation in 5 A.L.R. 1376.]

— duty to anticipate that boys will set fire to gasoline.

3. One engaged in unloading a car of gasoline which has overflowed the tub set to catch the drip from the vent is not bound to anticipate that boys standing near by and knowing the character of the fluid will set fire to it if he momentarily leaves to secure assistance to empty the tub, so as to make such leaving negligence and render the owner liable for destruction of neighboring property by fire so set out.

[See 11 R. C. L. 664, 665.]

PETITIONS for writs of certiorari to review a judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court for Davidson County dismissing suits brought to recover damages for loss of property by fire alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. C. H. Rutherford and W. H. Washington, for petitioners:

The proximate cause of an injury may in general be stated to be that act or omission which immediately causes or fails to prevent an injury.

Deeming & Co. v. Merchants' Cotton-press & Storage Co. 90 Tenn. 353, 13 L.R.A. 518, 17 S. W. 89; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Kelly, 91 Tenn. 699, 17 L.R.A. 691, 30 Am. St. Rep. 902, 20 S. W. 312; Anderson v.

Miller, 96 Tenn. 35, 31 L.R.A. 604, 54 Am. St. Rep. 812, 33 S. W. 615; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Boon, 95 U. S. 117, 24 L. ed. 395; Illidge v. Goodwin, 5 Car. & P. 190; Brown v. Standard Oil Co. 159 C. C. A. 397, 247 Fed. 303; Moore v. Jefferson City Light, Heat & P. Co. 163 Mo. App. 266, 146 S. W. 825; Quaker Oats Co. v. Grice, 115 C. C. A. 343, 195 Fed. 441.

The proximate cause of an injury is the superior or controlling agency from which springs the harm, as distinguished from incidental or subsidiary causes.

Stuck v. Kanawha & M. R. Co. 76 W. Va. 453, 86 S. E. 13; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Ryon, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 177 S. W. 525.

Proximate cause means that which is the procuring and efficient cause of the accident, and indicates rather nearness in causal relation.

Grigsby & Co. v. Bratton, 128 Tenn. 597, 163 S. W. 804.

Where an original wrongful act supplies the condition by which a subsequent act is rendered injurious, the one committing the wrongful act is responsible.

Peru Heating Co. v. Lenhart, 48 Ind. App. 319, 95 N. E. 680.

Where there were two causes which proximately contributed to the injury, for only one of which the defendant was responsible and with the other of which neither he nor the plaintiff was chargeable, still the defendant must be held to answer for the injury inflicted.

Columbia & B. B. Turnp. Co. v. English, 139 Tenn. 638, 202 S. W. 925.

One may be liable for an injury resulting from his negligence, though he could not have reasonably anticipated the particular injury or that the particular person would be injured.

Mitchell v. Schofield's Sons Co. 16 Ga. App. 686, 85 S. E. 978; Cummins v. Sanitary Dist. 185 Ill. App. 639; Greer v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 173 Mo. App. 276, 158 S. W. 740.

While the negligent act or omission must be one of the essential causes producing the injury, it need not be the sole cause, nor the nearest cause; if it concurs with the other cause, such as an accident or the negligent act of a third person, which in combination with it causes the injury, it is sufficient.

Casey v. Chicago R. Co. 184 Ill. App. 439.

Where injurious consequences might have been foreseen as likely to result from the first negligent act or omission, the act of a third person will not excuse the first wrongdoer.

Jenkins v. La Salle County Carbon Coal Co. 182 Ill. App. 36; Gatliff Coal Co. v. Hohlman, 157 Ky. 778, 164 S. W. 76.

Dangerous explosives in a public place contiguous to dwellings are a public nuisance.

Cheatham v. Shearon, 1 Swan, 214; McAndrews v. Colliard, 42 N. J. L. 189, 36 Am. Rep. 508.

The blast created no emergency, Porch was not in peril, and the only immediate danger was the presence of the boys, which Porch ignored.

Chattanooga Electric R. Co. v. Cooper, 109 Tenn. 308, 70 S. W. 72; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Ridley, 114 Tenn. 738, 86 S. W. 606, 4 Ann. Cas. 925; 20 R. C. L. 29; Lemay v. Springfield Street R. Co. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 60, note; Texas Midland R. Co. v. Booth, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 322, 80 S. W. 121.

Mr. Charles C. Trabue, for defendant:

The spilling of the gasoline was not due to defendant's negligence, but was due solely to the conduct of its employee in a sudden emergency imperiling his safety, which conduct the law excuses.

20 R. C. L. p. 178; Standard Oil Co. v. Swan, 89 Tenn. 434, 10 L.R.A. 366, 15 S. W. 1068; Lemay v. Springfield Street R. Co. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 60, note; Chattanooga Electric R. Co. v. Cooper, 109 Tenn. 312, 70 S. W. 72; McRae v. Erickson, 1 Cal. App. 326, 82 Pac. 209; Harrison v. Wisdom, 7 Heisk. 116.

The spilling of the gasoline was not the proximate cause of the fire, but the proximate cause was the act of third persons igniting it.

Sprankle v. Mathis, 4 Tenn. C. C. A. 530; United States Natural Gas Co. v. Hicks, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 250, note.

The gasoline that was ignited and caused the fire was not "puddles and streams" of gasoline other than the gasoline from this particular tank car.

Baird-Ward Printing Co. v. Fleming, 137 Tenn. 356, 193 S. W. 115; East Tennessee & W. N. C. R. Co. v. Lindamood, 111 Tenn. 473, 78 S. W. 99; Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Fuller Combing Gin Co. 2 Tenn. C. C. A. 346.

The boys were trespassers or licensees, and defendant owed them no duty other than not to intentionally injure them.

Westborne Coal Co. v. Willoughby, 133 Tenn. 262, 180 S. W. 322; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Lovejoy, 138 Tenn. 506, 198 S. W. 61; Clapp v. La Grill, 103 Tenn. 174, 52 S. W. 134, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 709.

Hall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These two actions were brought by the plaintiffs in error, who will be hereinafter referred to as the plaintiffs, to recover damages for loss of property growing out of a fire which is alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence.

The suits, by consent, were tried together in the court below, and upon the conclusion of the evidence a motion for a directed verdict was made by the defendant, and was sustained by the trial judge, and the plaintiffs' suits were dismissed. From this judgment they appealed to the court of civil appeals, where both cases were, by consent, again heard together, and the judgment of the trial court was affirmed. The cases are now before this court upon petitions for writs of certiorari.

The material facts are undisputed, and, briefly stated, are as follows: The defendant is a wholesale dealer in oils and gasoline, and in conducting its business in the city of Nashville, Tennessee, maintained a large warehouse fronting on the Tennessee Central Railroad at a point near where said railroad crosses Twenty-fifth avenue, at which it received the commodities handled by it. It received large quantities of gasoline from railroad tank cars, the contents of which were pumped from the cars into storage tanks situated on the defendant's warehouse premises. These tank cars were delivered to its premises by the railroad company by means of a switch or sidetrack extending from its main line from a point west of where it intersected with Twenty-fifth avenue to and by the defendant's warehouse premises.

The fire that destroyed the property belonging to plaintiffs originated on this sidetrack in front of defendant's warehouse, and destroyed defendant's warehouse and a large quantity of merchandise stored therein, and from the defendant's premises traveled or was carried by the wind to the premises of the plaintiffs, igniting the houses occupied by them, and destroyed the property, the value of which is sought to be recovered in these actions.

The declarations charged that the defendant maintained its premises in a negligent and dangerous condition, in that it permitted quantities of gasoline and oil to escape or to be spilled on such premises to such an extent that the floor and other timbers of the warehouse became soaked with oil and gasoline; that the ties of the sidetrack were also soaked with oil and gasoline and other inflammable substances, and that oil and gasoline and other inflammable substances were permitted by defendant to accumulate "in puddles and streams" on its said premises; that defendant negligently handled its stock of gasoline and spilled same adjacent to the public highway in a thickly populated part of the city of Nashville, where many men, women, and children were in the habit of playing; that the gasoline was left unguarded to such an extent that the public safety was endangered, and the premises of the defendant became a public nuisance; that on the date of the fire, while some boys were smoking and lighting matches on or near the premises of the defendant, which fact was known to defendant's employee, the gasoline took fire from the act of said boys in lighting matches, or some other act committed by them, "either accidentally or in play, or from some other cause;" and that the flames from same extended into the warehouse of the defendant, from which it was communicated from the premises of the defendant to the premises of the plaintiffs.

The evidence shows that at the time of the fire the defendant was engaged in unloading, or preparing to unload, a tank car of gasoline, which stood on the sidetrack in front of its warehouse, which was located only a few feet from the sidetrack. These tank cars consist of large, long metal tanks built on railroad trucks, and are ——— feet in length, ——— feet in diameter, and some of them hold several thousand gallons of gasoline. On the top of these tanks, and about the center of the same, is what is called a dome, which is about 18 inches in diameter, and extends some distance above the top of the tank. In the top of this dome is an opening in which a large cap is fitted to close the opening, and at the bottom of the tank, and about the center of the same, is a spout or leg which extends below the body of the tank. The dome is used in loading the car with gasoline, and for any and all purposes where it is necessary to enter the tank, and the leg is used in unloading the car. On the inside of the tank, and just about the point where the leg connects with the bottom of the tank, is a valve, and from this valve a rod runs up into the dome, and to the top of this rod is attached an arm or lever, and when it is desired to prevent the gasoline from escaping through the leg, the valve, by means of this rod or arm, is tightly closed. When it is desired to empty the car through the leg, the valve is opened by means of the rod extending therefrom into the dome. The tank is unloaded by connecting a hose with the valve in the leg of the tank and pumping the gasoline from the car tank into the storage tank, which is located near by.

Two of the defendant's employees had gone on top of the tank car, removed the top from the dome, measured the distance between the bottom of the dome and the top of the gasoline in the car, and had taken the temperature of the gasoline, which was the usual and customary procedure before unloading it. The rod which led through the car to the valve over the leg was examined to ascertain if it were properly seated or closed so as to prevent the passage of gasoline into the leg when it was opened for the purpose of attaching to the valve the hose preparatory to pumping the contents of the car into the storage tank.

The evidence shows that during the transportation of the car the movement of the gasoline on the inside of the tank washes the sides thereof, and any impurities that may be in the gasoline will, when the car is stopped and permitted to stand for a while, sink to the bottom of the tank, and if the valve in the leg is not tightly closed such impurities will escape into the leg, as will the gasoline. It further appears that, however much care is exercised in loading the tank car, and in closing the valve in the leg, foreign substances will sometimes get in the way of the valve and it will not close tightly, and gasoline will flow from the tank into the leg. In unloading it is the custom to open the leg by unscrewing and removing the plug in the lower end, and catch the contents of the leg into a vessel or tub, and then attach the hose, by means of which the gasoline is transferred to the storage tank.

At the time of the fire in question a colored employee of the defendant, who was experienced in unloading gasoline from the tank cars, went to the car in question, unscrewed the plug at the lower end of the leg, and placed under it a large tub for the purpose of catching whatever gasoline and other substance might flow from said leg; and about the time he placed the tub and unscrewed the plug an employee of the Nashville Railway & Light Company, who, together with other employees of that company, was digging a hole for an electric light pole across the main line of the railroad company, and about 30 feet from the tank car, informed the employee of the defendant that they were preparing to "shoot," meaning that they were going to set off a blast for the purpose of breaking some rock in said post hole. The defendant's employee, believing that he was in dangerous proximity to the blast which was about to be fired, and having no other means of protection, left the leg from which gasoline was then flowing into the tub and ran around the end of the car to protect himself from the blast. Upon the blast being fired he returned to the leg and found that a sufficient quantity of gasoline had run into the tub to overflow it, and that some of the gasoline was running out of the tub onto the ground. He immediately replaced the plug in the leg to stop the flow of the gasoline. He says that while he was performing this operation some boys, who were standing upon the main track of the railroad about 6 feet away, asked him if it were gasoline or coal oil that was flowing into the tub, to which inquiry defendant's employee says that he told them that it was gasoline.

The undisputed evidence further shows that after defendant's employee had stopped the flow of the gasoline he went into the warehouse for the purpose of getting some buckets to dip some of the gasoline out of the tub so that it could be removed, and to secure the services of another employee in assisting him to remove the tub and empty its contents into the storage tank. He was gone for this purpose only a very short time, and upon his return the gasoline was on fire, the flames traveling at a rapid rate toward the warehouse, and were soon beyond control.

The uncontradicted evidence is that the fire was produced by these boys, who were standing on the railroad track when defendant's employee left the tub of gasoline and went into the warehouse for the purpose stated, throwing lighted matches into the gasoline in the absence of defendant's employee. This is admitted by one of the boys who indulged in throwing the matches, and is also proven by another one of the plaintiffs' witnesses, a Mr. Cooper.

It is further uncontradicted that these boys were from twelve to fourteen years of age, and Charlie Reeves, one of the boys, testified that he knew gasoline was highly inflammable and would burn when it came in contact with fire.

It is further shown by the evidence that defendant's warehouse premises are not on a public street or highway, but that men, women, and children in the neighborhood do use the railroad track to a considerable extent in traveling to and from their homes and in going to and from school.

There was evidence tending to show that the defendant's premises had become more or less greasy or oily from gasoline, oils, and other substances which had been permitted to escape or leak from the receptacles in which they were contained, but the undisputed evidence is that the fire which occasioned the plaintiff's losses did not originate from this condition, but alone from the matches being thrown into the gasoline contained in the tub, or in that which had flowed from the tub onto the ground.

It is insisted by the plaintiffs that the court of civil appeals erred in not holding that the trial judge erred in directing a verdict in defendant's favor upon the foregoing facts. It is contended by the plaintiffs that the fire which caused the losses sustained by them was the direct and proximate result of the negligent manner in which the defendant maintained its premises, and undertook to unload the tank car in question, and in permitting the tub which was used to catch the gasoline that was being emptied from the car to overflow and run out on the ground, and in leaving the tub of gasoline unattended in close proximity to where the boys were, and without warning them away from the gasoline and of the danger of the situation, and in leaving them at that point "when it knew, or might have known, that they were smoking cigarettes and striking matches."

The correctness of the plaintiffs' contention depends upon two propositions:

First. Was the fire which destroyed the property of the plaintiffs the result of the defendant's negligence?

Second. Was that negligence the direct and proximate cause of the plaintiffs' losses, or were their losses the result of an independent, intervening cause which could not have been reasonably anticipated by the defendant?

It was held by this court in Southern R. Co. v. Pugh, 97 Tenn. 624, 37 S. W. 555, that negligence is the want of ordinary care and caution in doing an act, or it is the failure or omission to do what a person of ordinary prudence or caution would do under the circumstances, or it is failure to perform a duty required by law.

In the case of Kreigh v. Westinghouse, C. K. & Co. 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 684, 81 C. C. A. 338, 152 Fed. 120, it was said: "Negligence is a breach of duty. Where there is no duty or no breach, there is no negligence. An injury that is the natural and probable consequence of an act of negligence is actionable. But an injury which could not have been foreseen nor reasonably anticipated as the probable result of an act or omission is not actionable; and such an act or omission is either the remote cause or no cause whatever of the injury."

To the same effect is the holding of the court in Cole v. German Sav. & L. Soc. 63 L.R.A. 416, 59 C. C. A. 593, 124 Fed. 113, 14 Am. Neg. Rep. 676.

In Hoag v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 85 Pa. 293, 27 Am. Rep. 658, the court held that, in determining what is proximate cause, the true rule is that the injury must be the natural and probable consequence of the injury,—such a consequence as, under the surrounding circumstances of the case, might and ought to have been foreseen by the wrongdoer as likely to flow from his act.

In Ryan v. New York C. R. Co. 35 N. Y. 210, 91 Am. Dec. 49, it was held that damages which were not the necessary or natural consequences nor the result ordinarily to be anticipated were not the proximate result of a negligent act.

In Stone v. Boston & A. R. Co. 171 Mass. 536, 41 L.R.A. 794, 51 N. E. 1, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 490, it was held that the negligence of a railroad company in storing oil upon its station platform, and in permitting it to remain there in violation of statute, was not the proximate cause of damage by a fire which was started by the careless dropping of a match by a teamster who came to the platform to deliver goods, and who was in no sense a servant, agent, or guest of the railroad company.

In that case and in the case of Laidlaw v. Sage, 158 N. Y. 73, 44 L.R.A. 216, 52 N. E. 679, it was held that the question was not one for the jury, but that as a matter of law the defendant's negligence could not be said to be the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury.

In Fanning v. J. G. White & Co. 148 N. C. 541, 62 S. E. 734, the court held that, assuming the defendant, who was engaged in construction work, was guilty of negligence in storing a large quantity of dynamite in an old shanty on the railroad right of way, the plaintiff could not recover for an injury sustained by an explosion of the dynamite as the result of the plaintiff's companion shooting into the shanty, though ignorant of the presence of the explosive. The court was of the opinion that the shooting into the dynamite by the plaintiff's companion was the proximate cause of the explosion and injury which resulted therefrom.

In 22 R. C. L. § 8, at page 121, the rule is correctly stated as follows: "An injury that is the natural and probable consequence of an act of negligence is actionable, and such an act is the proximate cause of the injury. But an injury which could not have been foreseen nor reasonably anticipated as the probable result of an act of negligence is not actionable, and such an act is either the remote cause, or no cause whatever, of the injury. An injury that results from an act of negligence, but that could not have been foreseen or reasonably anticipated as its probable consequence, and that would not have resulted from it, had not the interposition of some new and independent cause interrupted the natural sequence of events, turned aside their course, and produced it, is not actionable. Such an act of negligence is the remote, and the independent intervening cause is the proximate, cause of the injury."

We are of the opinion that the uncontradicted evidence fails to show any negligence on the part of the defendant in permitting the gasoline to overflow the tub and run out on the ground. The evidence indisputably shows that this was caused by the sudden emergency that arose by the notice being given to the defendant's employee by the employee of the Nashville Railway & Light Company of the impending blast, and which caused defendant's employee to believe that he was in immediate danger. The uncontradicted evidence shows that the car was being unloaded or emptied in the ordinary and usual manner, and in the manner that it was designed to be emptied, and by competent and experienced employees. It is undisputed that just at the moment, or just after the cap had been removed from the leg by defendant's employee, notice was given him that a blast was about to be discharged only a few feet away, and defendant's employee, being exposed to said blast, and realizing the dangers incident to the same, ran around the car for protection. It was while thus endeavoring to protect himself from the dangers of the blast that the gasoline overflowed the tub. We are clearly of the opinion that the leaving of the tub under these circumstances was not an act of negligence.

In 20 R. C. L., p. 29, it is stated as follows: "One who in a sudden emergency acts according to his best judgment, or who, because of want of time in which to form a judgment, omits to act in the most judicious manner, is not chargeable with negligence."

This statement of the rule is supported by many cases in the note to the case of Lemay v. Springfield Street R. Co. reported in 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 43.

But, even if it be conceded that the defendant was guilty of negligence in the manner in which it kept its premises and the manner in which it was unloading the gasoline in question, still we are of the opinion that such negligence was not the direct and proximate cause of the fire which destroyed the property of plaintiffs, but that said fire was the direct and proximate result of the independent intervening act of the boys in throwing lighted matches into the gasoline during the absence of defendant's employee, and that this act on the part of said boys was not such as could have been reasonably anticipated by defendant's employee. It is not shown that defendant's employee knew that the boys were smoking or that they had matches. The undisputed evidence is that the boys knew it was gasoline that was running into the tub, and knew its inflammable and dangerous qualities, and defendant's employee had no reason to anticipate that they would deliberately throw a lighted match into it during the short interval that he was absent on his errand to secure the buckets and unloading car of gasoline—permitting fluid to run out upon ground.

Negligence—

Proximate cause
—are from gaso-lene—ignition
by stranger—act of child.

Negligence—duty to anticipate that boys will set fire to gasoline.

another employee to assist him in removing the tub from the tank car to the storage tank.

It results that we find no error in the judgment of the court below, and it is affirmed, with costs.

ANNOTATION.

Intervening act of child as affecting question of proximate cause of damage to the person or property of third person by fire or explosion.

In treating the cases falling within the scope of the present annotation, little more can be done than to indicate the conclusions to which the courts have come under the particular facts involved in the respective cases. This is the difficulty usually confronted, and is, of course, due to the fact that there is but little disagreement as to the general principles governing the question of proximate cause. Generally speaking, it may be said that the answer to the question whether the act of a child may be an efficient, intervening cause between the negligence of one person and an injury to a third person so as to break the chain of causation and relieve the former from liability for his negligent acts, seems to turn upon the application to the facts of the particular case of the test, "Was the intervening, efficient cause a new and independent force, acting in and of itself in causing the injury and superseding the original wrong complained of, so as to make it remote in the chain of causation, although it may have furnished a condition by which the injury was made possible?" 22 R. C. L. p. 133.

The majority of the cases treat the question from the viewpoint as to whether or not the intervening act of the child must or ought to have been foreseen, recovery not being barred provided the act was reasonably to be expected, and the contrary where it could not have been reasonably expected.

For instance, in Wichita Falls Traction Co. v. Hibbs (1919) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 211 S. W. 287, where the defendant's servant negligently left a burning charcoal stove in a public street, and a five-year-old child's clothing caught fire while she was playing around it, it was held that the negligence in so leaving the stove was the proximate and efficient cause of the mother's burns received in extinguishing the fire. The defendant contended that the injuries were not the direct and proximate result of its negligence, and that the damages claimed were too remote, and urged the proposition that "in order for damages to be recoverable for a negligent act, such act must be the direct and proximate cause of the injury complained of," and that "where a new or independent agency, which could not have been reasonably foreseen, intervenes and causes the injury, the alleged wrongdoer is not liable," but as above indicated the court arrived at a different conclusion, saying: "The finding of the jury that the act of the conductor in leaving the charcoal stove burning in front of appellee's home constituted negligence is amply supported by the evidence. That the child was too young to appreciate the danger, and was irresponsible, is not questioned. This being a fact, there was no intervening efficient or responsible cause to break the causal connection between the negligence of appellant's employee and the injury. While the injury may not be the usual, necessary, or inevitable result of the negligence, we think it is the natural and probable consequence thereof, and is one which an ordinarily prudent person ought reasonably to have anticipated as the result of his negligence."

And upon similar grounds it was expressly held in United States Natural Gas Co. v. Hicks (1909) 134 Ky. 12, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 249, 135 Am. St. Rep. 407, 119 S. W. 166, that the negligence of a gas company in maintaining in a public highway a leaky gate valve in its main, inclosed by a cracked and decayed box, and not the act of a four-year-old boy in throwing a lighted match through a crack in the box, was the proximate cause of an explosion of the gas to the injury of another boy playing in the street.

And in Iamurri v. Saginaw City Gas Co. (1907) 148 Mich. 47, 111 N. W. 884, the negligent leaving of a drip wagon containing explosive gases, with the vent open, upon a public street, in violation of municipal ordinance, was held to be the proximate cause of an injury to a child resulting from an explosion assumed to have been caused by another child dropping a lighted match into the open vent. In reaching this conclusion the court, in the prevailing opinion, said that there was no intervening, efficient cause because the intervening human agency, being a child of tender years, was irresponsible, and implied that to destroy the causal connection between a wrong and its consequences the intervention of "a responsible human agency" was necessary. The court also in terms approved the rule that the wrongdoer is responsible for all consequences naturally resulting from his wrong, whether he could have anticipated those consequences or not. It seems unnecessary, however, to have adopted this extreme rule, since the evidence showed that the danger of an explosion from leaving the vent of the wagon open was known. However, the dissent was mainly upon the ground that the injured child was a trespasser because he, as well as the intervening wrongdoer, had gone upon the wagon. The prevailing view was that the element of trespass was eliminated by the fact that the wagon was left in a public street.

And again in Harriman v. Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. (1887) 45 Ohio St. 11, 4 Am. St. Rep. 507, 12 N. E. 451, where the servants of a railroad company negligently placed and left unexploded on a railroad track at a place commonly used by the public as a crossing, a signal torpedo which was picked up by a boy nine years old, carried away, and subsequently exploded in attempting to open it, to the plaintiff's injury, it was held that the negligence of the defendant's servants, and not the act of the child in carrying the torpedo from where he found it and attempting to explode it, was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury, the theory being that the causal connection between the defendant's negligence and the plaintiff's injury was not broken by the intervening act of the third person, and that the defendant should have reasonably anticipated the result. In this connection, Williams, J., speaking for the court, said: "In this case the plaintiff, when injured, was free from fault, and where he might lawfully be. He was not instrumental in any way in bringing about the disaster, nor chargeable with Brown's conduct or agency therein. The defendant, by its negligent act and omission in placing and leaving the torpedo where it was found and picked up by Brown, rendered the plaintiff's injury possible and probable; and the danger of injuries resulting from someone picking up and handling an instrument of the kind described in plaintiff's amended petition, left upon the defendant's track at the place and under the circumstances therein stated, would have been reasonably anticipated by a person of ordinary care and prudence. The act of Brown, therefore, was but a contributing condition, which defendant's servants ought to have anticipated as a probable consequence of their negligent act or omission, while their negligence remained the culpable and direct cause of the injury suffered by plaintiff."

And in Moore v. Jefferson City Light, Heat & P. Co. (1912) 163 Mo. App. 266, 146 S. W. 825, where an employee of the defendant negligently placed dynamite left from his day's work under the plaintiff's porch and the same was exploded the following day by the shooting of Roman candles by plaintiff's little boy, it was held that the negligent placing of the dynamite was the proximate cause of the injury resulting to plaintiff's house from the explosion, the court applying the rule that "where the negligence of the defendant and the act of a third person concurred to produce the injury complained of, so that it would not have happened in the absence of either, the negligence was the proximate cause of the injury." It was also said in this case that under the undisputed evidence the act of the defendant's servant was the natural and proximate cause of the injury complained of.

And in Mills v. Central of Georgia R. Co. (1913) 140 Ga. 181, 78 S. E. 816, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1098, where it was alleged that the employees of the defendant railroad company negligently left an unexploded signal torpedo lying on the right of way, which torpedo was found by a boy and exploded by him to the injury of his boy companion, it was held that the petition was good as against a demurrer based on the contention that the petition showed that the injury complained of was not the proximate result of the defendant's negligence.

The reported case (MOODY v. GULF REF. Co. ante, 1243) is illustrative of those cases where, in applying rules and principles similar to those considered in the preceding cases, contrary conclusions have been reached. In this case, boys who knew the inflammable nature of gasoline threw lighted matches into pools of gasoline which had formed during the short absence of defendant's employee, who was engaged in unloading a tank car, by the overflowing of receptacles set to receive the gas it drained from the car spout at the bottom of the tank, and the fire thus started destroyed plaintiff's buildings. Under these facts, it will be recalled, the court held that the act of the boys was an independent intervening cause which broke the chain of causation between any negligent act of the defendant's servant and the burning of plaintiff's buildings.

So, in Perry v. Rochester Lime Co. (1916) 219 N. Y. 60, L.R.A.1917B, 1058, 113 N. E. 529, where defendant's employees left explosives stored in an unlocked chest in a public place, it was held that the wrongful leaving of the explosives was not the proximate cause of the death of a child resulting from an explosion caused by boys who stole the explosives, attempting to make use thereof. In this case the explosives were evidently stolen with knowledge of the wrong and with intent to make some use of the same. The explosion occurred on the day following the theft and at a considerable distance from the place from which the explosives were stolen. These facts, the court said, constituted a series of intervening new and unexpected causes.

And in Horan v. Watertown (1914) 217 Mass. 185, 104 N. E. 464, in holding that the negligence of the defendant's servants in leaving dynamite in an unlocked and unguarded tool chest within the limits of a highway in violation of law was not the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries, which resulted from the taking of such dynamite by young boys who threw it upon a bonfire, where it exploded, the court stated the test for intervening, efficient cause as follows: "Where as here the original negligence of the defendant is followed by the independent act of third persons which directly results in injurious consequences to the plaintiff, the defendant's earlier negligence may be found to be the direct and proximate cause of those injurious consequences, if, according to human experience and in the natural and ordinary course of events, the defendant ought to have seen that the intervening act was likely to happen. But if this is not the case, if the intervening act which was the immediate cause of the injury complained of was one which it was not incumbent upon the defendant to have anticipated as reasonably likely to happen, even though a high degree of caution would have shown him that it was possible, then he owed no duty to the plaintiff to anticipate such further acts, the chain of causation is broken, and the original negligence cannot be said to have been the proximate cause of the final injury"—and in applying the rule said: "Tested by this rule, the plaintiff's case fails. While the dynamite and the other contents of the box were left in such a way that a thief might not find it very difficult to steal them, it cannot be said that the defendant was bound to anticipate that this might be done and to guard against the consequences that might follow if a thief should steal the dynamite and so use it as to do injury to others. The general presumption of innocence would be inconsistent with this. Still less was there reason to anticipate a series of thefts under the circumstances shown here, or to believe that such thefts would be committed in daylight, upon what seems to have been a pleasant Saturday afternoon, in so public a place. There is nothing to indicate that anything of the kind had ever before been done. We see no reason why the defendant should be held bound to have anticipated that at such a place and at such a time a gathering of boys, after some of them had stolen the dynamite, should engage in the dangerous sport which is shown by the testimony."

And again in Affick v. Bates (1899) 21 R. I. 281, 79 Am. St. Rep. 801, 43 Atl. 539, where the defendant city left explosive caps in a tool chest on a vacant lot, and some unknown person removed a cap from the box and left it on the ground near by, where it was found by plaintiff's brother, aged eleven, who gave it to another boy, who exploded it by striking it with a stone to the injury of the plaintiff, aged nine, it was held that the negligence of the city, if any, was not the proximate cause of the injury, but that the act of the boy who exploded the cap was an intervening, proximate cause which broke the causal connection between the defendant's assumed negligence and the plaintiff's injury.

So, in Betz v. Brooklyn (1896) 10 App. Div. 382, 41 N. Y. Supp. 1009, applying the rule that a party is only liable for the natural and probable consequences of his wrongful act or omission, and that if the result is of such a character that reasonable prudence and foresight would not forecast its happening as a consequence of the act, it cannot be considered as a proximate cause, it was held that the act of a boy in picking up quicklime negligently allowed to escape from barrels in a public street, where it was being used for building purposes, and putting it in water, was not the proximate cause of the blinding of another boy due to an explosion of the lime when it came into contact with the water. The court said: "There is nothing which appears in the case having a tendency to establish that the lime, if left alone in the street, as it was placed, would have inflicted injury upon any person, or that it would be likely to be so blown about as to inflict damage. Could the defendant, in reasonable contemplation, have supposed that children would carry this lime from the street to this vacant lot, and there attempt to make use of it in the manner described? We think to ask the question is to answer it. The lime was harmless as it lay upon the street. It was only made dangerous by the active intervention of two other agencies,—the boy who carried it, and its contact with water. It does not appear that there was any water near it, or anything connected with it, except the use to which it was commonly put, that would suggest to anyone that it could be carried away and mixed in this vacant lot. It is suggested that it was as dangerous as exposed gunpowder, and constituted a nuisance. We are not able to accept this view. It is as commonly in the streets for building purposes as is building stone, is placed therein and used therein daily without danger or serious inconvenience to the general public using the streets."

And in Clark v. Wallace (1911) 51 Colo. 437, 118 Pac. 973, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 349, where a large tract of standing peas was burned, and the owner sought to hold one who had hired plaintiff's herder, who, with his family, had charge of the peas, to come and help him dip sheep on a near-by place, on the theory that the proximate cause of the damage was the procuring of the herder to leave the field, it was held that there was an efficient intervening cause after the absence of the herder, the fire having been started by the herder's boy or wife or both after the departure of the herder. It was said that such starting of the fire could not have been anticipated as a natural result of the absence, since it could not be said that the fire would not have been started if the herder had not been called away. This decision attaches no importance to the fact that the intervening act was possibly that of a child, the court seemingly having assumed that it made no difference whether the fire was started by the boy or by the wife or by both.

G. J. C.

BIG DIAMOND MILLING COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE, & ST. PAUL RAILWAY COMPANY, Respt.

Minnesota Supreme Court — April 11, 1919.

(142 Minn. 181, 171 N. W. 799.)

Limitation of actions — new promise to public — effect.

1. A new promise in writing made either before or after the debt is outlawed starts a new period of limitation. The new promise must identify the debt, but specific reference to it is not necessary if the language with certainty covers it. Language that would be sufficiently specific in a bond is sufficiently specific in a new promise. A promise to pay all claims of a class is sufficient. A letter to the public, signed by a railroad company, promising to refund the difference between a statutory freight rate and a higher rate collected on all shipments made during a period of litigation to determine the validity of the statutory rate, is sufficiently definite.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1258.]

Statute — application — recovery of excessive freight charges.

2. Chapter 195, Laws 1909 (Gen. Stat. 1913, §§ 4307-4309), authorizing the attorney general to sue for recovery of excessive freight charged by railway corporations, has no application to a suit by a shipper.

Limitation of actions — conditional promise — meeting condition.

3. A conditional new promise becomes effectual to revive a claim on fulfilment of the condition by the creditor or on his readiness to fulfil. Where a promise was to pay properly supported claims, and the plaintiff submitted claims supported by proof, whereupon the defendant expressed regret that plaintiff had taken the time and trouble to furnish proof, and declined the claims for the sole reason that its own records had been destroyed so that it was unable to verify the claims, defendant will not be heard to complain that plaintiff's claims were not properly supported.

[See 17 R. C. L. 902.]

APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the District Court for Ramsey County (Michael, J.) dismissing an action brought to recover alleged overcharges collected by defendant on separate shipments of grain. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. Patrick J. Ryan, for appellant: Defendant in its letters to plaintiff acknowledged in writing its liability to pay the claims in question.

Saiborn v. School Dist. 12 Minn. 17, Gil. 1; Worth v. Worth, 155 Cal. 599, 102 Pac. 663; Willis v. Wileman, 53 Misc. 462, 102 N. Y. Supp. 1004; Shearlock v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 193 Mo. App. 430, 182 S. W. 89.

Defendant agreed with plaintiff that it would not rely upon the Statute of Limitations to defeat these claims, and is bound thereby.

Jordan v. Jordan, '85 Tenn. 561, 3 S. W. 896.

Defendant, by its agreement and dealings with the Railroad & Warehouse Commission, its conduct toward the plaintiff, and by its correspondence with the plaintiff, waived its right to plead or rely upon the Statute of Limitations.

Robinson v. Great Northern R. Co. 123 Minn. 495, 144 N. W. 220; Naumen v. Great Northern R. Co. 131 Minn. 217, 154 N. W. 1076; Coleman v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 242 Pa. 304, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 432, 89 Atl. 87, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 529; McAdams v. Wells, F. & Co. 139 La. 681, P.U.R.1916E, 464, 71 So. 945; Parsons, R. & Co. v. Lane, 97 Minn. 98, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 231, 106 N. W. 485, 7 Ann. Cas. 1144; Gamble-Robinson Commission Co. v. Northern P. R. Co. 119 Minn. 40, 137 N. W. 19.

Messrs. F. W. Root, Nelson J. Wilcox, and J. N. Davis, for respondent:

The Statute of Limitations is a bar to the plaintiff's right to recover in this case.

L. Christian & Co. v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 135 Minn. 45, 159 N. W. 1082; Anderson v. Nystrom, 103 Minn. 168, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1141, 123 Am. St. Rep. 320, 114 N. W. 742, 14 Ann. Cas. 54; Smith v. Moulton, 12 Minn. 352; McManaman v. Hinchley, 82 Minn. 296, 84 N. W. 1018; Trask v. Weeks, 81 Me. 325, 17 Atl. 162.

There was no authoritative act of defendant's agent, or agents, whether by correspondence or otherwise, sufficient to revive the debts sued upon, under § 7712, Gen. Stat. 1913.

St. Paul v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 45 Minn. 387, 48 N. W. 17; Redwood County v. Winona & St. P. Land Co. 40 Minn. 512, 41 N. W. 465, 42 N. W. 473; Bell v. Morrison, 1 Pet. 351, 358, 7 L. ed. 174, 178; Brasie v. Minneapolis Brewing Co. 87 Minn. 456, 67 L.R.A. 865, 94 Am. St. Rep. 709, 92 N. W. 340; Russell v. Davis, 51 Minn. 482, 53 N. W. 766; Anderson v. Nystrom, 103 Minn. 168, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1141, 123 Am. St. Rep. 320, 114 N. W. 742, 14 Ann. Cas. 54; Bell v. Morrison, 1 Pet. 351, 362, 7 L. ed. 174, 179; McCormick v. Brown, 36 Cal. 185, 95 Am. Dec. 173; Stout v. Marshall, 75 Iowa, 498, 89 N. W. 808.

The Statute of Limitations may not be waived by a carrier.

A. J. Phillips Co. v. Grand Trunk & W. R. Co. 236 U. S. 662, 59 L. ed. 774, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 444; W. H. Ferrell & Co. v. Great Northern R. Co. 119 Minn. 302, 138 N. W. 284.

Hallam, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In 1907 the Minnesota legislature fixed maximum rates of freight to be charged by railroad companies within this state.

From May 31, 1907, to July 21, 1913, the establishment of the rates and the enforcement of rights accruing under the statute were restrained by injunction issuing out of the United States circuit court. During this time defendant charged rates of freight in accordance with schedules theretofore existing, which were in excess of the rates prescribed by the Act of 1907. Plaintiff alleges that it paid these excessive rates on certain shipments of grain and asks judgment for the difference between the lawful rate and the rate charged. If plaintiff's allegations are true, it is entitled to recover unless its right of action is barred by the Statute of Limitations. The complaint alleges that the freight was paid between September 1, 1907, and April 5, 1909. The action was commenced September 10, 1917. The claims are therefore outlawed, unless the bar of the Statute of Limitations has been in some manner removed. L. Christian & Co. v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 135 Minn. 45, 159 N. W. 1082. The trial court held the Statute of Limitations operative and dismissed the case. The propriety of this ruling is the question presented on this appeal.

1. Plaintiff makes the claim that chapter 195, Laws 1909 (Gen. Stat. 1913, §§ 4307-4309), which authorized the attorney general to sue for the recovery of excessive freight charged during the pendency of the injunction, and permitted shippers to participate in the funds recovered on presentation of their claims to the state, superseded the Statute of Limitations. We do not sustain this contention. The statute, whether valid or not, has no application to a suit brought by a shipper, nor to the time within which such a suit shall be brought.

2. Plaintiff contends that the bar of the Statute of Limitations was removed by a new promise to pay. A claim may be revived by a new promise "contained in some writing signed by the party to be charged thereby." Gen. Stat. 1913, § 7712. And where the new promise is made before the claim is outlawed, the period of limitation thereafter runs from the date of the new promise. 25 Cyc. 1328; Dern v. Olson, 18 Idaho, 358, L.R.A.1915B, 1016, 110 Pac. 164, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 1; Pickering v. Frink, 62 N. H. 342; Carlton v. Coffin, 27 Vt. 496.

The Act of 1909 provided that within sixty days after the judicial proceedings were ended, unless said rates should be found to be unlawful, every common carrier should pay to the Railroad & Warehouse Commission for the benefit of the parties entitled thereto "all sums so charged and collected by it on the business to which such rates apply in excess of the rates so prescribed," and authorized the attorney general to bring suit therefor against any carrier failing or refusing to so pay. On June 9, 1913, the United States Supreme Court held the rates valid. Minnesota Rates Cases (Simpson v. Shepard) 230 U. S. 352, 57 L. ed. 1511, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1151, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 18. On June 24, 1913, representatives of various railroad companies, including defendant, gathered at the office of the Railroad & Warehouse Commission. A statement was issued "to the public," signed by the Commission and by each railroad company. This statement recited the United States Supreme Court decision and recited an opinion of the attorney general that chapter 195, Laws 1909, was invalid and that the legislature had no power to compel a railroad company to pay to the state the excessive amounts collected by the companies for freight rates, and then contained this language: "In view of this opinion, and after conference between the Railroad & Warehouse Commission and by undersigned railway companies, it is hereby announced that such railway companies are prepared to immediately entertain properly supported claims for the period during which the rates were enjoined, and to make prompt payment thereof, shortly following the dissolution of the several injunctions. It is suggested that the attached sheet be used by claimants in submitting their claims. . . . The expense bill or prepaid bill of lading should accompany the claim. If the original expense bill or prepaid bill of lading has previously been presented to any railway company supporting a claim for loss, damage, or overcharge, such reference as is possible should be made to the claim in question so that the original expense bill or prepaid bill of lading may be located."

This letter, construed in the light of the language of the Act of 1909 to which it refers, may fairly be regarded as a promise to pay all sums charged and collected on the business to which such rates apply in excess of the rates so prescribed.

The question is, Does this constitute a new promise sufficient to remove the bar of the Statute of Limitations? The trial court held not. In our opinion this was error.

One reason urged in support of the court's ruling is that the writing does not identify the plaintiff's claims and promise to pay them. It must, of course, do so in order to constitute a "new promise." Russell v. Davis, 51 Minn. 482, 53 N. W. 766; Anderson v. Nystrom, 103 Minn. 168, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1141, 123 Am. St. Rep. 320, 114 N. W. 742, 14 Ann. Cas. 54. But specific reference to a particular claim is application—recovery of excessive freight charges.

Statute—

Limitation of actions—new promise to public—effect.

not necessary. If the language would be sufficiently specific in a bond to pay claims, surely it is sufficient in a new promise by the debtor. A general admission of unsettled matters of account between the parties is not sufficient. Conway v. Reyburn, 22 Ark. 290, 292. But if the general language refers, with certainty, to the debt, that is sufficient. A promise to pay "every cent he owed him," it is held, sufficiently identifies the debt sued on. O'Hara v. Murphy, 196 Ill. 599, 63 N. E. 1081. It is not necessary that the new promise should state the amount of the debt. Conway v. Reyburn, 22 Ark. 290; First Nat. Bank v. Woodman, 93 Iowa, 668, 57 Am. St. Rep. 287, 62 N. W. 28; Wetz v. Greffe, 71 Ill. App. 313; Kincaid v. Archibald, 73 N. Y. 189, 192; Abrahams v. Swann, 18 W. Va. 274, 280, 41 Am. Rep. 692. Nor even that the amount should have been fixed. "We owe you for three years' salary" is held sufficient though the salary had never been fixed. Schmidt v. Pfau, 114 Ill. 494, 502, 2 N. E. 527. An admission of some balance due, the amount to be ascertained by arbitration, is held sufficient. Cheslyn v. Dalby, 10 L. J. Exch. in Eq. N. S. 21. A promise to pay if the debt is established is held a good new promise. Stanton v. Stanton, 2 N. H. 425; Shaw v. Lambert, 14 App. Div. 265, 43 N. Y. Supp. 470; Read v. Wilkinson, 2 Wash. C. C. 514, Fed. Cas. No. 11,611; Heylin v. Hastings, 12 Mod. 223, 88 Eng. Reprint, 1277. So is a promise to pay if the debtor cannot prove payment. Richmond v. Fugua, 33 N. C. (11 Ired. L.) 445; Sweet v. Hubbard, 36 Vt. 294; Sothoron v. Hardy, 8 Gill. & J. 133. And a prediction that nothing will be found due, it is held, does not vitiate the promise. 25 Cyc. 1343; Bliss v. Allard, 49 Vt. 350; Read v. Wilkinson, 2 Wash. C. C. 514, Fed. Cas. No. 11,611.

A promise to pay all claims of a definite class is in our opinion sufficiently definite. The language of the letter "to the public," promising to pay all claims of the class to which plaintiff's claims belong, sufficiently identified plaintiff's claims. This is in accordance with the decision of the Washington supreme court, in Belcher v. Tacoma Eastern R. Co. 99 Wash. 34, 168 Pac. 782, a case so similar to this one that, as to matter of identification of the claim, we cannot distinguish it.

3. Respondent contends that the promise to entertain "properly supported" claims and "to make prompt payments thereof" was a conditional promise, and that the condition was not complied with. What is meant by "properly supported" is not very clear. It is "suggested" in the letter that a certain sheet be used in submitting the claims. The letter said the expense bill "should accompany" the claim, but if it had previously been presented in support of a claim of some kind, then "such reference as is possible should be made so that it may be located." We are not at all satisfied that there was any purpose to except from this promise any just claim, or to make the form of proof suggested or any other preliminary proof a condition to payment. Defendant did not so treat its promise. The correspondence in evidence shows that it entertained claims that were not supported by preliminary proof.

If it can be said that this is a promise to pay only "properly supported" claims, and if proper "support" is a condition to the operation of the promise, this does not avail defendant. A conditional promise becomes effectual to remove the bar of the statute on fulfillment of the condition by the creditor or on his readiness to fulfil. 25 Cyc.

1348. See McNab v. Stewart, 12 Minn. 407, Gil. 291. After considerable negotiation, defendant's freight claim agent wrote to plaintiff April 7, 1916, as follows: "We regret exceedingly the fact that you took the time and trouble to furnish us with the sheet showing the —conditional promise—meeting condition.

amounts actually collected in the various claims presented by you, for the reason that we will be unable to handle the claims in question, as the shipments moved during the period of 1907-8-9, and for which period all our records have been destroyed."

And on July 25, 1916, defendant's "commerce counsel" wrote: "None of the claims . . . was rejected on the theory that the Statute of Limitations had run against them. None . . . was rejected on any proof in our possession that such claim is not legitimate. The sole reason for declining each of the claims above referred to was and is that we were and are unable to verify its correctness. . . . The reason that we were not able to verify them or check their regularity lay in the fact that the accounting department records more than six years old have been destroyed."

Surely after this "regret" that the plaintiff took the time and trouble to "support" its claims by proof and after these and other requested avowals that the sole reason for refusal to pay the claims was the destruction of its own records, defendant will not now be heard to complain that plaintiff's claims were not "properly supported."

We are of the opinion that the letter, "to the public" of June 24 1913, was sufficient as a new promise and that it started a new period of limitation. It is proper to say that in L. Christian & Co. v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 135 Minn. 45, 159 N. W. 1082, supra, this letter was not called to the attention of the court nor was any new promise pleaded or proved.

Order reversed.

ANNOTATION.

General acknowledgment or promise in statement addressed to public as removing bar of limitation.

Apparently there is but one case in addition to the reported case passing directly on the question whether a general acknowledgment or promise in a statement addressed to the public is sufficient to remove the bar of the Statute of Limitations. In Belcher v. Tacoma Eastern R. Co. (1917) 99 Wash. 34, 168 Pac. 782, it appeared that the defendant railroad company had applied to the Public Service Commission to obtain permission to cancel admittedly unjust switching charges exacted of the St. Paul & Tacoma Lumber Company. The defendant confessed at that time that the lumber company had been a favored shipper and had operated under a preferential tariff in shipping its logs. As a means of inducing the Commission to allow it to absorb the switching charges, the railroad imposed on itself an obligation to "remove any suggestion of discriminatory charges or violation of the long and short haul provision of the Public Service Commission Act, and as to charges in excess of those collected under T. E. R. R. G. F. D. No. 76, and succeeding issues, refund will be made by the Tacoma Eastern Railroad to all claimants down to the basis prescribed in that tariff." Action was brought by the plaintiff to recover excess payments arising out of the claim that the defendant had charged the plaintiff's assignor, the Tidewater Lumber Company, a higher rate, based on a higher minimum load per car, for transporting its logs a lesser distance on the same line and in the same direction than it had charged the St. Paul & Tacoma Lumber Company for performing a like and contemporaneous service. The defense was interposed that the claims of the Tidewater Lumber Company were barred by limitation at the time the defendant filed its petition with the Public Service Commission. In holding to the contrary the court said: "The petition was a recognition of all claims arising out of the discriminatory tariff under which the St. Paul & Tacoma Lumber Company had operated, and amounted to an express promise to pay all claims of that class, and this, we think, revived the claims which theretofore had been barred by lapse of time. It is true, the promise was not made directly to the shippers, but it was made to the Public Service Commission, which was exercising official functions in the interest of all persons engaging in shipping, and was made for the express purpose of inviting an order which would redound to the benefit of appellant's assignor and to other shippers similarly situated. The petition therefore amounted to a new promise, supported by the moral obligation to pay, and revived the claims."

It will be noted that the essential difference between the Belcher Case and the reported case (BIG DIAMOND MILL CO. v. CHICAGO, M. & ST. P. R. CO. ante, 1254) was that in the latter the promise was made in the form of a statement issued to the public and signed by the Commission and the railroad companies, while in the former the promise was made to the Commission.

The cases hereinafter cited, while not involving the precise question under consideration in the reported case, are in some respects similar thereto, and are considered to be of sufficient importance to appear in this annotation.

In Adams v. Orange County Bank (1837) 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 514, it appeared that a bank, in pursuance of a statute, published a list of unclaimed deposits remaining in the bank. It was held that this was an acknowledgment of indebtedness to the several persons named in the publication as depositors, sufficient to remove the bar of the Statute of Limitations.

In Ft. Scott v. Hickman (1884) 112 U. S. 150, 28 L. ed. 686, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56, it appeared that the finance committee of a city council, in a report on the city indebtedness, recommended that a circular letter offering a compromise be sent to persons holding city bonds other than "Macadam bonds," as to which the committee made no report further than to include them in its statement of liabilities. The city council adopted the report of the committee, and the circular letter, addressed to "each person holding bonds of the city," was sent to each holder of city bonds except the holders of the "Macadam bonds." It was held that neither the report of the committee nor its adoption by the council, nor the circular letter, was such an acknowledgment of the debt evidenced by the named issue of bonds as to take them out of the bar of the Statute of Limitations.

In Houston v. Jankowskie (1890) 76 Tex. 368, 18 Am. St. Rep. 57, 13 S. W. 269, it appeared that the secretary of a municipality in his annual report, in which he estimated the bonded indebtedness of a city, included as a valid claim bonds which were on their face barred by the Statute of Limitations. It was held that these bonds were not relieved from the bar of the statute, as the acknowledgment, in order to be effective, must be made by the debtor, or someone authorized to make it, and must be made to the creditor or his agent. W. F. F.

---

RE THOMAS T. KERL.

Idaho Supreme Court—March 6, 1920.

(— Idaho, —, 188 Pac. 40.)

Attorney and client — conviction of crime involving moral turpitude — interference with military forces — conclusiveness.

1. When an attorney at law, admitted to practise in Idaho, has been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude (such as attempted interference with military forces), and a certified copy of the record of his conviction has been filed in this court with a view to bringing about his disbarment, his guilt or innocence is not in issue. The question is, Has he been convicted of such offense? Comp. Stat. 1919, § 6578, makes the record of his conviction conclusive evidence of that fact, and Comp. Stat. 1919, § 6590, prescribes the judgment which must be entered.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1262.]

— purpose of disbarment.

2. The purpose of disbarment is not the punishment of the attorney, it is to protect the public and those charged with the administration of justice from the misconduct of persons who have found their way into the legal profession and who are unfit to perform the duties of an attorney at law.

[See 2 R. C. L. 1088.]

War — interference with — moral turpitude.

3. If a citizen of the United States of America, at a time when our country is at war, knowingly and wilfully makes false statements with intent to interfere with the success of its military and naval forces and with intent to promote the success of its enemies, or wilfully attempts to cause disloyalty, insubordination, mutiny, and refusal of duty in its military and naval forces, or wilfully obstructs its recruiting and enlistment service, his conduct involves moral turpitude.

[See 2 R. C. L. 1100.]

Attorney and client — power to revoke license.

4. The legislature may provide that the conviction of an attorney in any jurisdiction of a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, whether his acts are so designated by local laws or not, should be sufficient cause for revoking his license.

PROCEEDINGS for the disbarment of Thomas T. Kerl. *Judgment of disbarment ordered.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. Oliver O. Haga, Chairman of Grievance Committee of the Idaho Bar Association.

Mr. Thomas T. Kerl, in propria persona.

Morgan, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Thomas T. Kerl, an attorney at law admitted to practise in the courts of Idaho, was, on December 12, 1918, in the district court of the United States in and for the Omaha division of the district of Nebraska, convicted of violating the portions of United States Statutes at Large, vol. 40, chap. 75, p. 553 (Comp. Stat. § 10,212c, Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1918, p. 122), which are as follows: "Whoever, when the United States is at war, shall wilfully make or convey false reports or false statements with the intent to interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces of the United States, or to promote the success of its enemies, . . . and whoever, when the United States is at war, shall wilfully cause or attempt to cause, or incite or attempt to incite, insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty, in the military or naval forces of the United States, or shall wilfully obstruct or attempt to obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States, . . . shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than twenty years, or both."

The acts of which Kerl was convicted consisted of certain statements which he was alleged to have made to a number of persons when the United States of America was at war with the Imperial German government, with the unlawful intent and purposes above indicated. He was sentenced to pay a fine of $2,000 and costs, which he paid.

An accusation, accompanied by certified copies of the indictment, verdict, and sentence, was filed in this court, and it was therein charged that Kerl had been convicted of a crime which involved moral turpitude, being the offense above mentioned. A citation was thereupon issued, directing him to show cause, if any he had, why he should not be disbarred. He answered the accusation, both orally and in writing, admitting the conviction and denying that the acts and statements of which he had been accused and convicted involved moral turpitude. He also denied that he made the statements, or that he entertained the views therein expressed, and he insists he is now and always has been a patriotic citizen of the United States of America.

The statutes of Idaho applicable to this case are as follows:

Comp. Stat. § 6578. "An attorney and counselor may be removed or suspended by the supreme court and by the district courts for either of the following causes, arising after his admission to practise: (1) His conviction of a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, in which case the record of conviction is conclusive evidence."

Comp. Stat. § 6580. "The proceedings to remove or suspend an attorney and counselor under the first subdivision of § 6578 must be taken by the court on the receipt of a certified copy of the record of conviction."

Comp. Stat. § 6590. "Upon conviction, in cases arising under the first subdivision of § 6578, the judgment of the court must be that the name of the party must be stricken from the roll of attorneys and counselors of the court, and that he be precluded from practising as such attorney or counselor in all the courts of this state."

The supreme court of North Carolina, Re Ebbs, 150 N. C. 44, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 892, 63 S. E. 190, 17 Ann. Cas. 592, construing a statute similar to ours, held it did not confer power to disbar an attorney because of his conviction in the courts of another state, or of the United States, and the supreme court of Oregon, in Ex parte Biggs, 52 Or. 433, 97 Pac. 713, construing a like statute, held that, because there was no offense known to the law of the state as "conspiracy to suborn perjury," an attorney's conviction of that crime in a Federal court would not warrant his disbarment. In view of the purpose of the law the opinions in these cases are not persuasive.

A certificate of admission to the bar is a pilot's license which authorizes its possessor to assume full control of the important affairs of others and to guide and safeguard them when, without such assistance, they would be helpless. Moreover, in Idaho, it is a representation made by this court that he is worthy of the unlimited confidence which clients repose in their attorneys; trustworthy to an extent that only lawyers are trusted, and fit and qualified to discharge the duties which devolve upon members of his profession.

The purpose of disbarment is not the punishment of the attorney, it is to protect the public and those charged with the administration of justice from the misconduct of persons who have found their way into the legal profession and who are unfit to perform the duties of an attorney at law. Re Wourms, 31 Idaho, 291, 170 Pac. 919.

It is competent for the legislature to provide that conviction of an attorney in any jurisdiction, of a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, whether his acts are so designated by the laws of this state or not, shall be deemed to be sufficient ground for revoking his license. The Idaho legislature so provided by enacting § 6578, subd. 1, above quoted, and by not limiting its scope. Re Shepard, 35 Cal. App. 492, 170 Pac. 442; Re Thompson (Cal. App.) 174 Pac. 86; Re Kirby, 10 S. D. 322, 39 L.R.A. 859, 73 N. W. 92, 907.

Attorney and client—purpose of disbarment.

—power to revoke license.

If a citizen of the United States of America, at a time when our country is at war, knowingly and wilfully makes false statements with intent to interfere with the success of its military and naval forces and with intent to promote the success of its enemies, or wilfully attempts to cause disloyalty, insubordination, mutiny, and refusal of duty in its military and naval forces, or wilfully obstructs, or attempts to obstruct, its recruiting and enlistment service, his conduct involves moral turpitude. Re Hofstede, 31 Idaho, 448, 173 Pac. 1087.

When an attorney at law, admitted to practise in Idaho, has been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude and a certified copy of the record of his conviction has been filed in this court with a view to bringing about his disbarment, his guilt or innocence is not in issue. The question is, Has he been convicted of such offense? Comp. Stat. § 6578, makes the record of his conviction conclusive evidence of that fact, and Comp. Stat. § 6590, prescribes the judgment which must be entered.

In conformity to the requirements of the section last mentioned the name of Thomas T. Kerl will be stricken from the roll of attorneys and counselors of this court, and he will be precluded from practising as such attorney or counselor in all the courts of this state. The clerk is directed to enter judgment accordingly.

Rice and Budge, JJ., concur.

ANNOTATION.

Disloyal acts or political opinions as ground for disbarment or suspension of attorney.

It will be seen that it is held in the reported case (RE KERL, ante, 1259), under the Idaho statute providing that an attorney may be removed or suspended for conviction of a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, that it was ground for disbarment, that an attorney had been convicted under the United States statute imposing a punishment for wilfully making or conveying false reports or false statements with the intent to interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces of the United States or to promote the success of its enemies, or for wilfully inciting disloyalty, etc., or attempting to obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States, etc.

It was held in Re Hofstede (1918) 31 Idaho, 448, 173 Pac. 1087, under the same Idaho statute, that an attorney convicted under the United States statute of the crime of aiding another to avoid registration under the Selective Service Law of the United States (Act of May 18, 1917), and more particularly of counseling and advising young men of registration age not to register as required by that law, thereby seeking to interfere with the government of the United States in its efforts to raise an army in time of war, is convicted of a crime "involving moral turpitude," and should be disbarred.

In Re Arctander (1920) — Wash. —, 188 Pac. 380, the court disbarred an attorney who assisted some 400 persons from thirty-one to forty-six years of age in the preparation of their war questionnaires, charging them $5 apiece, and who also assisted 200 registrants in the preparation of affidavits on the government blank form to withdraw intention of becoming citizens of the United States, charging them $10 apiece therefor. It appeared that the legislature had adopted the Code of Ethics of the American Bar Association as the standard of ethics and guide by the members of the bar, and that it had authorized the board of examiners to recommend for disbarment all persons whose conduct was in violation of the purpose and spirit of the statute, and that canon 32 of such Code stated: "But, above all, a lawyer will find his highest honor in a deserved reputation for fidelity to private trust and to public duty, as an honest man and as a patriotic and loyal citizen." The rules and regulations prescribed by the President under the authority of the Selective Service Law stated that all lawyers and physicians should regard it as their duty to identify themselves with the advisory board, and freely and without compensation to give their best service to the nation, and that it is inconsistent with this duty for lawyers to seek clients for the purpose of urging and advocating individual cases in any other way than as disinterested and impartial assistants of the selective service system. As to the preparation of the questionnaires, shortly after the attorney had begun the work the government appeal agent of the city called his attention to the fact that he was at least violating the spirit of the selective service regulations, and his partner and other friends advised him to desist. The opinion of the board of examiners, which was adopted by the court, stated: "He resented the President's call to the lawyers to serve the nation and its registrants voluntarily, freely, and without charge. He did just what the regulations asked the lawyers not to do. He became the advocate for the man who was seeking to escape military service. He refused to make out questionnaires for registrants who had no claim for exemption. He refused to perform services whereby the War Department could obtain the information which it needed for the classification of registrants for military and industrial service. He became the advocate, and not the disinterested adviser, of the slacker and of men who were even willing to renounce their intentions to become American citizens,—men whom he himself called sneaks. . . . From the respondent's own admissions and actions, we are regretfully forced to the conclusion that his conduct in performing services for registrants under the Selective Service Law was disloyal, mercenary, unethical, and unprofessional. Had the bar of the United States assumed the same attitude in response to the President's call to duty that respondent did, it would have called down upon itself the reprobation of the nation. It would have been disgraced to eternity. It is the duty of the lawyer, above all others, to serve his country, and his services should always be at his country's call in times of need. We feel that the respondent should not be allowed to practise law before the courts of this state, and we therefore respectfully recommend his permanent disbarment." (But it was further held in the same case that it was not unethical or disloyal for an attorney to prepare petitions to be presented to the Norwegian embassy in asking the State Department of the United States for the release of Norwegian subjects from military service, under the provisions of the treaty of the United States with Sweden and Norway, and to charge for such services.)

Attorney and client—conviction of crime involving moral turpitude—interference with military forces—conclusiveness.

In Re Wiltsie (1920) — Wash. —, 186 Pac. 848, the court disbarred an attorney for soliciting the employment of claiming exemptions for persons subject to the operation of the Selective Service Act, and for suggesting, encouraging, and assisting in the preparation of false affidavits looking to the improper exemption of his clients, saying: "The charges of solicitation of business, . . . and the filing of false claims of exemption, are so well proved and so flagrantly unethical, as well as disloyal, as sufficiently to evidence that degree of moral turpitude unfitting the practitioner to continue the practice of law in this state."

In Cohen v. Wright (1863) 22 Cal. 293, in upholding the constitutionality of a statute that provided that no attorney should be permitted to practise in any court until he should have taken and filed the oath of allegiance, the court said: "The public have a right to demand that no person shall be permitted to aid in the administration of justice whose character is tainted with dishonesty, corruption, crime, and, we will add, disloyalty, or treasonable acts. And his name will be stricken from the roll by the court, by a summary proceeding, in such cases, whether provided for by statute or not, as it is a duty which the court owes to the public."

"The courts will . . . strike attorneys off the rolls . . . after being convicted of seditious practices." Merrifield, Attys. p. 90, citing Ex parte Frost (1830) 1 Chitty (Eng.) 558, note.

In Dormenon's Case (1810) 1 Mart. (La.) 129, the court disbarred an attorney who, in 1793, when a municipal officer in San Domingo, aided and assisted the negroes in murdering and massacring the whites.

But it was held in Lotto v. State (1919) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 208 S. W. 563, that it was not "dishonorable conduct," under the Texas statute prescribing the offenses for which an attorney may be disbarred, for an attorney to say to another person that "Germany is going to win the war and I hope she will," referring to the war then pending between the United States and Germany, the statute having been re-enacted after the court construed the words "dishonorable conduct" as meaning conduct as an attorney, and only official conduct as such.

It may be noted that in Ex parte Garland (1867) 4 Wall. (U. S.) 333, 18 L. ed. 366, the petitioner, who had been a member of the so-called Confederate Congress during the secession of the South, but had been pardoned by the President of the United States, applied for a license to practise law in the United States courts without first taking an oath to the effect that he had never voluntarily given aid to any government hostile to the United States, etc., as required by statute. It was held, by a divided court, that to exclude petitioner from the practice of law for that offense would be to enforce a punishment for the offense, notwithstanding the pardon, which the court had no right to do; and the petition was granted. Ex parte Law (1866) 35 Ga. 285, Fed. Cas. No. 8,126, was a similar case, in which the same doctrine was laid down.

But it is stated in Merrifield's Law of Attorneys, page 55, that where an attorney who had been struck off the roll upon a conviction for seditious practice was afterwards pardoned, "the court refused to readmit him, stating that the want of experience arising from his having discontinued practice was, independently of other circumstances, a sufficient ground for not acceding to the motion," citing Ex parte Frost (1830) 1 Chitty (Eng.) 558, note.

Sometimes the statutes expressly provide that no person convicted of treason shall be permitted to practise in any court. B. B. B.

WILLIAM STEIN, Sole Trader under the Name of Stein Brothers, Resp.,
v.

SOL SCHAPIRO, Appt.

Minnesota Supreme Court — January 30, 1920.

(Stein v. Shapiro, — Minn. —, 176 N. W. 54.)

Sale — effect of custom.

Previous dealings, or a well-established usage or custom of a trade, cannot inject into a sales contract an obligation on the part of the seller to deliver the goods sold, upon being tendered a draft drawn by the buyer's agent upon the buyer.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1268.]

Headnote by HOLT, J.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Morrison County (Roeser, J.) in favor of plaintiff and from an order denying a new trial in an action brought to recover damages for failure of defendant to deliver goods which he had contracted to sell plaintiff. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. E. A. Kling, for appellant:

The verdict was in clear violation of the instructions given to the jury, and is void.

Standiford v. Green, 54 Neb. 10, 74 N. W. 263; Browne v. Hickie, 68 Iowa, 330, 27 N. W. 276; Crane v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 74 Iowa, 330, 7 Am. St. Rep. 479, 37 N. W. 397; Bushnell v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 69 Iowa, 620, 29 N. W. 753; Soderburg v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 167 Iowa, 123, 149 N. W. 82; Freil v. Pietzsch, 22 N. D. 113, 132 N. W. 779; King v. Lincoln, 26 Mont. 157, 66 Pac. 886; Darlington Oil Co. v. Pee Dee Oil & Ice Co. 68 S. C. 46, 46 S. E. 720; Aguirre v. Alexander, 58 Cal. 30; Lynch v. Snead Iron Works, 132 Ky. 241, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 852, 116 S. W. 693; Rogers v. Murray, 3 Bosw. 357; Buck v. Buck, 122 Minn. 463, 142 N. W. 729.

The offering of the draft in question did not constitute payment.

State Bank v. Byrne, 97 Mich. 178, 21 L.R.A. 753, 37 Am. St. Rep. 332, 56 N. W. 355; Sjoli v. Hogenson, 19 N. D. 82, 122 N. W. 1008; 30 Cyc. 1187; Goenen v. Schroeder, 18 Minn. 66, Gil. 51; National Bank v. Wisconsin C. R. Co. 44 Minn. 224, 9 L.R.A. 263, 20 Am. St. Rep. 566, 46 N. W. 342, 560; Buffalo Center Land & Invest. Co. v. Swigart, 176 Iowa, 422, 156 N. W. 701; Seattle v. Molin, 99 Wash. 210, 169 Pac. 318; Townsend v. Swallow, 91 Neb. 564, 136 N. W. 730.

Mr. David London for respondent.

Holt, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Damages were awarded for defendant's failure to deliver goods he had contracted to sell plaintiff. Defendant appeals from an order denying a new trial.

Both parties deal in hides, plaintiff buying from the smaller dealers. Plaintiff's place of business is at Rice Lake, Wisconsin, and defendant's at Little Falls, this state. Jack Stein was plaintiff's traveling agent, who, on December 21, 1918, made a contract to purchase, at prices specified, all the hides that defendant might have on hand between the 15th and 25th of January following. A draft for $300, to apply on the purchase, was given when the contract was made. On January 23d Jack Stein came to Little Falls to inspect, bundle, and weigh the hides that defendant had on hand. Before the work was completed Stein found some fault with the condition of the hides, and defendant stated that he would not deliver them except upon receipt of the balance of the purchase price in cash. Stein drew a draft on plaintiff for $2,114.77, the balance of the purchase price, and gave to defendant. Stein claims the draft was accepted. Defendant claims it was left on his desk against his protest that he would not accept it, or ship the hides until he obtained his pay in money. At any rate, while Stein was at the depot waiting to depart, he telephoned defendant that if he, defendant, thought he could get away with the dirty trick of soaking the hides before they were weighed he was mistaken. Stein admits that there was a demand for cash, and that he telephoned plaintiff to arrange with the Little Falls bank to cash the draft. The hides were not shipped, and on January 27th, the draft was returned to plaintiff, with a notice that defendant would not be bound by the sale because the full purchase price was not tendered in cash within the time set for the delivery of the hides.

The answer admitted the contract of sale set forth in the complaint, but alleged its breach by plaintiff in failing to tender the price within the stipulated time. The reply alleged that payment was to be made by draft as in former similar transactions between the parties and in accordance with the custom of the trade, and that "it is the custom of the trade in which both plaintiff and defendant are engaged, and of which both had notice, to pay for merchandise sold under this and similar contracts by drafts."

The jury were instructed that a recovery could be had for failure to deliver if they found that defendant accepted the draft in payment of the hides. No such issue was tendered by the pleadings; but evidence directed thereto was offered by both sides, was received without objection, and no fault was found with its submission to the jury. Hence if it could be ascertained that the jury solved this issue in favor of plaintiff, the verdict should stand. But that cannot be done, for the court also left to the jury two other issues, either of which, determined in plaintiff's favor, would also entitle him to a verdict. If either of the two issues thus submitted do not warrant such a verdict there must be a new trial. In regard to the two issues referred to, the charge was: "If you find that by previous dealings there had been established a course of dealings between the parties whereby the defendant had previously accepted the draft of plaintiff in payment for purchases made, or if you find that there is a custom of the hide business, in this locality, of which both parties had notice so as to bind them, that payment for the purchase of hides by hide dealers is made by draft and not by cash, then it was the duty of defendant to accept plaintiff's draft on January 24th."

Error is assigned upon this instruction. It is well settled that where a contract for the sale of goods is silent as to the manner of the purchase price, payment in money or legal tender must be made or offered before delivery of the goods can be demanded. And § 42, chap. 465, Laws 1917 (Gen. Stat. Supp. 1917, § 6015-42), the Uniform Sales Act, provides: "Unless otherwise agreed, delivery of the goods and payment of the price are concurrent conditions."

Payment of the price was here necessary before the seller could be placed in default, for there is no contention that the sale was on credit. Nor is there any claim that there was a tender of the purchase price in money. Unless the draft drawn upon plaintiff by his agent Stein was either accepted in payment, or unless a provision may be incorporated into the contract of sale that such draft should be accepted in payment because of the evidence received of prior use of drafts in the deals between the parties, or because of the usage or custom of the trade testified to, defendant must be conceded the right to have the balance of the purchase price in cash before he could be required to deliver the hides. It would seem entirely clear that the fact that defendant had, in prior deals with plaintiff, accepted such drafts, cannot inject into all subsequent contracts of sale an agreement to accept drafts in lieu of money, unless some new principle of contracts is furnished by § 71 of chapter 465 (Gen. Stat. Supp. 1917, § 6015-71), which provides: "Where any right, duty or liability would arise under a contract to sell or a sale by implication of law, it may be negatived or varied by express agreement or by the course of dealing between the parties, or by custom, if the custom be such as to bind both parties to the contract or the sale."

We do not think this section adds, or was intended to add, anything new to sales contracts, but is rather in recognition of existing contract law. The duty or liability to pay the price for goods purchased can hardly be said to arise by implication, for it is the essence of every sale. The same is the fact that the purchaser is entitled to the stipulated price in money or in legal tender.

We think neither previous dealings nor the custom testified to should be held to import into a sales contract an obligation on the seller to accept an order or draft drawn by the buyer's agent upon the buyer as payment. As long as the seller has possession of the goods he has a seller's lien thereon, and may retain possession until the price is paid or tendered in money. It is true that it has been held that, where a general well-established custom prevails in a trade, contracts pertaining to such trade are made with reference to such custom. Paine v. Smith, 33 Minn. 495, 24 N. W. 305; McDonald v. Union Hay Co. — Minn. —, 172 N. W. 891. But such custom or "usage cannot be allowed to subvert a well-settled rule of law." Globe Mill. Co. v. Minneapolis Elevator Co. 44 Minn. 153, 46 N. W. 306. "Custom will not be allowed to vary or contradict the plain expressed terms of a contract, or to imply from these terms an obligation different from what the law would imply, or to imply an obligation in the absence of any contract on the subject." E. L. Welch Co. v. Lahart Elevator Co. 122 Minn. 432, 142 N. W. 828. In Southwestern Freight & Cotton Press Co. v. Stanard, 44 Mo. 71, 100 Am. Rep. 255, the court said: "But evidence of custom, however, is never admissible to oppose or alter a general principle or rule, so as to make the rights and liabilities of parties other than they are at law."

Sale—effect of custom.

Nor will evidence of an unreasonable usage or custom be permitted to inject an obligation into a contract. Byrd v. Beall, 150 Ala. 122, 124 Am. St. Rep. 60, 43 So. 749. And it might well be held that a custom which requires the delivery of goods sold upon the mere receipt of an order or draft, like the one in this case, is unreasonable and contrary to the well-settled rule of law which assures to the seller the price in money and gives him a lien upon the goods therefor, and possession to enforce it. Many things may happen between the making of a contract for the sale of goods and the time set for payment and delivery, such as insolvency of the buyer or disputes which might culminate in a lawsuit, which the seller might be forced to bring in a foreign jurisdiction if he be denied his right to payment in money concurrent with delivery.

The custom proven should hardly amount to more than this: In transactions between dealers the convenience of the buyer, and perhaps the seller also, is usually served by using the buyer's checks or drafts drawn on him by his agent to settle for purchases, but, although so used, both parties understand that the check or draft is accepted from choice in the particular case, and not from an obligation of the contract, and only as conditional payment. Nearly all large transactions between dealers of good repute are by checks or drafts. The risk of carrying large sums of money to pay for goods purchased in businesses carried on in the manner which plaintiff was doing is so apparent that no one attempts it. But, notwithstanding this manner of using checks or drafts, it should be, and we think it is, well understood that a seller is free to insist on cash when to him it seems best to have it, unless there is a specific agreement in the contract to accept something else in lieu thereof. It might well be that the course of dealing or this custom might avail to avoid a default of forfeiture. That is, when defendant refused the draft, their previous dealings or the custom to settle with drafts might have given plaintiff a reasonable time to produce and tender the balance of the purchase price in money. But that question is not involved and is not decided, for there was no tender of money at any time.

Our conclusion is that there should be a new trial.

Order reversed.

ANNOTATION.

Custom or previous dealing as imposing an obligation upon party to contract to accept something else in lieu of cash.

The annotation does not cover the question as to what money is legal tender, nor generally as to what kinds of money a creditor, or one entitled by contract to payment, may be obliged to take. Nor does it cover cases which turn on the interpretation of the particular wording of the contract, such as a contract for payment in "currency." Some cases which are of these classes are cited, however, partly for illustrative purposes, and partly because the particular case is of value on the present question by reason of the method of treatment of the questions involved.

The reported case (STEIN v. SCHAPIRO, ante, 1264) in holding that previous dealings, or a well-established usage or custom of trade, cannot inject into a sales contract an obligation on the part of the seller to deliver the goods sold, upon being tendered something else in lieu of cash, such as a draft drawn by the buyer's agent upon the buyer, seems sound in principle, although no case precisely similar has been found. It is supported by a number of cases cited in the present annotation, arising, however, under somewhat different circumstances. It will be observed that, in the STEIN CASE, the court stated that it might well be that a course of dealing, or custom, might avail to avoid a default or forfeiture; that is, when the seller refused the draft, the previous dealings of the parties, or custom to settle with drafts, might have given the buyer a reasonable time to produce and tender the purchase price in money. And there are several decisions to the effect that custom or usage may be shown for the purpose of proving the readiness of the buyer to comply with the terms of the contract, where he went to the seller's place of business to take possession of the goods and had only commercial paper as payment. But in these cases the refusal on the part of the seller to perform the contract was not placed on the ground that payment was not offered in cash. Such cases, however, are distinguishable from STEIN v. SCHAPIRO, ante, 1264, and apparently should not be construed as supporting the view that custom or previous dealing may impose an obligation on a party to a contract to accept something else in lieu of cash.

Thus, in Hughes v. Knott (1905) 138 N. C. 105, 50 S. E. 586, 3 Ann. Cas. 903, holding that evidence of a general custom in the tobacco trade to accept checks in payment of tobacco sold was admissible in an action by the buyer against the seller for the possession of the property, the question arose in connection with that as to the alleged readiness of the buyer to perform the contract, he having testified that on the day for performance he had a check and other collateral which could be promptly converted into cash, and did not ask the seller to take his check, but told him that he would get the money the next day and pay him. The court said that evidence of such custom was admissible not for the purpose of varying the contract, but of interpreting its terms; and that if on the day for performance the buyer went to the warehouse of the seller during business hours for the purpose of paying for the tobacco, and had available funds for that purpose, either in money or checks, which he could have promptly converted into money, and the seller was not at its place of business, the buyer must be relieved of the duty of converting the checks into currency on that day, and carrying the same about on his person until he could find the seller; that, if the buyer's view of the entire transaction was correct, he should have been allowed a reasonable time, after the refusal of the seller to deliver the tobacco, to convert his funds into currency, and, if the funds were available for that purpose, the jury would be justified in finding that he was ready, able, and willing, within the terms of the contract.

"We have held," said the court in Hughes v. Knott (N. C.) supra, "that testimony tending to show a custom among cotton dealers to accept checks in payment for cotton sold in large lots was competent." This proposition is supported by Blalock v. Clark (1904) 137 N. C. 140, 49 S. E. 88, where, in an action by the buyer of cotton against the seller for breach of contract, it was held that, the contract being silent as to the mode of payment for the cotton, it was competent for the buyer to show a general commercial custom and usage among cotton dealers as to the method of paying for cotton in large lots, and that evidence was admissible of a well-established custom to pay therefor by check. In this case also the admissibility of evidence of the custom arose in connection with the question of the buyer's readiness to perform.

Ordinarily, however, it seems clear that the rule of law by which parties entitled by contract to payment are entitled to payment in legal tender currency cannot be changed by custom or prior dealings of the parties.

It was held in State ex rel. News Pub. Co. v. Park (1917) 166 Wis. 386, 165 N. W. 289, that the terms of a definite and unambiguous contract of sale, to make payment monthly "by cash payable in funds current in Chicago or New York," could not be varied by evidence that the seller had been in the habit of receiving personal checks of the buyer in payment of instalments due under previous contracts, the court stating that at most this seemed to have been a mere indulgence, and, even if it rose to the dignity of custom, could not vary the terms of the contract.

And the rule that a creditor cannot be compelled by custom to receive anything in payment of his debt except legal tender currency is supported by the case of Marine Bank v. Chandler (1862) 27 Ill. 525, 81 Am. Dec. 249, holding that a custom by business men of a particular place to receive depreciated paper money in payment of their debts would not, in the absence of a special agreement, bind a depositor in a bank to accept payment in such money, especially where he did not reside in that place. The court said: "That parties may contract to receive any commodity in lieu of money, in payment of indebtedness, is undeniably true. This can only be done by special agreement, and not by usage. No custom can compel a creditor, in the absence of a special agreement, to receive anything but the constitutional currency of the country. The fact that the business men of the particular place have been in the habit of receiving depreciated paper money in payment of their demands by no means proves that all creditors in that locality have agreed to receive the same, much less a person residing hundreds of miles distant. To have such an effect, a special agreement must be proved."

To the same effect is Marine Bank v. Birney (1862) 28 Ill. 90, holding that a bank which credited a depositor's account with a certain number of dollars, received in Illinois currency, could not, when sued by the depositor, prove a custom of the banks in the city in question to pay deposits in depreciated Illinois bank bills. The court referred to the fact that the letter of advice acknowledging the deposit did not state that it was payable in the kind of funds deposited, but stated that a certain number of dollars had been received, and the court said that "whether that amount was received in bank paper, in cattle, horses, grain, or other commodity, could not change the liability to pay the number of dollars received. . . . The liability is for money, and not for bank bills. . . . The evidence as to custom of Chicago bankers was properly rejected. Appellant had no right to alter, change, or modify the agreement by the proof of a custom. . . . The credit was given for dollars, and proof could not be heard to show that it could be paid in something else."

And in Howes v. Austin (1864) 35 Ill. 396, the court instructed the jury, in an action on a check, that the word "dollars" in the check "means dollars in the lawful money of the United States, and it cannot be explained, either by verbal agreement, or by custom, or any mercantile or other usage, to have any other or different meaning than that, and all evidence given to establish such custom or usage should be rejected." The instructions given were assigned as error, and the judgment for the plaintiff affirmed on appeal, although the particular question here under consideration is not discussed in the opinion.

So, it was held in Buford v. Tucker (1870) 44 Ala. 89, that, in an action on a note given in 1865 for the hire of a slave, evidence was inadmissible of a custom at the time the note was given, in the county where the parties resided, that in the case of a contract employing the word "dollars," without designating the kind of dollars, the contract was to pay in Confederate money. The court said that, Confederate money having been first issued about 1862, the alleged custom wanted antiquity and other elements requisite to a good custom.

The annotation does not cover in general the question of the right to discharge in Confederate money an obligation incurred during the Civil War. See, for example, Austin v. Kinsman (1867) 84 S. C. Eq. (13 Rich.) 259, and Bryan v. Harrison (1877) 76 N. C. 360, on the question whether parol evidence is admissible to explain the use of the term "dollars" in a note given in 1862, for the purpose of showing that payment was contemplated in Confederate money. In Taylor v. Bland (1883) 60 Tex. 29, where this question was involved, the court stated that after the close of the Civil War many contracts made during its existence, payable in "dollars," came before the state and Federal courts for construction, and that the construction finally settled upon was that where the contract is payable in "dollars," without designating the kind of money meant, the presumption is that the contract called for legal tender "dollars;" but that the facts and circumstances attending the transaction were admissible for the purpose of rebutting that presumption and of showing that in fact the term meant Confederate "dollars."

A custom in 1863 or 1864, in a southern state, to pay debts in Confederate money, was held invalid in Williamson v. Richardson (1867) Fed. Cas. No. 17,754.

The holder of a promissory note, it was held in Lord v. Burbank (1841) 18 Me. 178, is not bound by a usage to accept payment in common paper currency instead of specie.

In Thompson v. Riggs (1866) 5 Wall. (U. S.) 663, 18 L. ed. 704, the question arose as to whether a bank which had received a general deposit in specie could discharge the obligation in treasury notes, which were legal tender, but of depreciated value as respects specie. It was held that, as the deposit was general and title to the money deposited had passed to the bank, the general rule of law by which the debt could be discharged by such money as was legal tender could not be controlled by evidence of a local custom of bankers to distinguish between deposits in specie and in depreciated paper money, and to pay the former in coin.

It was held also in Veeche v. Grayson (1823) 1 Mart. N. S. (La.) 133, that in an action on a note payable in dollars, parol evidence was inadmissible to prove that the currency and medium of exchange in Kentucky, where the note was executed, consisted of notes of the bank of Kentucky, and that, according to the custom and usage of trade, notes of individuals to pay money were payable in such bank notes, unless the contract expressly provided for payment in specie.

The proposition that a custom cannot be shown to discharge by payment in kind an obligation to pay damages for breach of a contract of warranty finds support in Johnson v. Gilfillan (1863) 8 Minn. 395, Gil. 352, although stress is laid in the opinion on the fact that antiquity, one of the essential elements of a valid usage, was wanting in this case, the business of dealing in land warrants, which formed the subject-matter of the sale in this instance, and which was formerly not assignable at law, being of recent date.

Although not strictly in point, attention is called to Pilmer v. Bank of Des Moines (1864) 16 Iowa, 321, holding that, in an action on a draft payable in "currency," evidence is admissible of the general and customary meaning of the term "currency" at the place of payment.

And on the question whether a contract made at Ceylon to pay for goods deliverable at New York, "in cash," meant a payment in specie,—gold or silver,—it was held in Gladstone v. Chamberlain (1867) Fed. Cas. No. 5,469, that the meaning of the phrase "to be paid in cash" might be explained by the usage and custom of the trade, if any existed.

But see Marc v. Kupfer (1864) 34 Ill. 286, construing the term "funds current" in a draft, and holding that in an action on the draft evidence was inadmissible that the term had a local meaning at the place where the draft was payable, and was understood there, and throughout the state, to mean Illinois bank notes, which were then greatly below par.

There are a number of cases involving the question of forfeiture of an insurance policy for nonpayment of the premium, as affected by the custom of the company to accept checks or other negotiable paper in payment of premiums. But these cases, which turn on the principle of estoppel or of waiver of the company to insist on a strict compliance with the contract, constitute a distinct class, affected by special considerations, and no attempt to cover them is made in the present annotation. It will be observed that the question in these cases is distinctly different from that involved in the reported case (STEIN v. SCHAPIRO, ante, 1264), where the question was whether the seller was obliged to deliver the goods on being tendered a draft. In the latter case, if the draft was not paid, the seller would have only his right of action, while in the insurance cases referred to it seems clear that nonpayment of the check or draft would be a good defense in an action on the policy. As illustrative of the class of cases referred to, involving the question of forfeiture of an insurance policy for nonpayment of the premium, as affected by the custom of the company to accept checks or other negotiable paper in payment of premiums, attention is called to the following: Krebs v. Security Trust & L. Ins. Co. (1907) 156 Fed. 294; Travelers Ins. Co. v. Brown (1903) 138 Ala. 526, 35 So. 463; Continental Ins. Co. v. Hargrove (1909) 131 Ky. 837, 116 S. W. 256; Hartford Life & Annuity Ins. Co. v. Eastman (1898) 54 Neb. 90, 74 N. W. 394; Kenyon v. Knights Templar & M. Mut. Aid Asso. (1890) 122 N. Y. 247, 25 N. E. 299; Van Bokkelen v. Massachusetts Ben. Asso. (1895) 90 Hun, 330, 35 N. Y. Supp. 865; Hollowell v. Life Ins. Co. (1900) 126 N. C. 398, 35 S. E. 616; Texas Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Munson (1882) 2 Posey, Unrep. Cas. (Tex.) 649. R. E. H.

JOSIE TREBOWOSKI, Resp't.,

v.

TOWN OF RINGLE et al., Appts.

Wisconsin Supreme Court—June 12, 1917.

(165 Wis. 637, 163 N. W. 165.)

Highway — defect on town line — liability.

In case of injury because of a defect in a highway at the point where it crosses the boundary line between two towns, the towns are liable jointly and severally under a statute providing that if any damage shall happen by reason of want of repair of any road in any town the person injured shall have a right to sue and recover against any such town.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1274.]

SEPARATE APPEALS by defendants from an order of the Circuit Court for Marathon County (Reid, J.) overruling demurrers to the complaint in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries for which defendants were alleged to be responsible. Affirmed.

Statement by Marshall, J.:

The appeals are from an order overruling demurrers to the complaint for insufficiency and misjoinder of defendants. The allegations of the complaint were sufficient to constitute a cause of action against each and both of the defendants, if there can be a joint statutory liability for a personal injury against two towns under the circumstances stated, which were to this effect: The towns of Ringle and Pike Lake adjoin, with a north and south highway crossing the boundary between the two. At a point on the ground in the town of Ringle, about 5 rods north of such boundary and 1 rod east of the center of the traveled way, a telephone wire was extended southwesterly to the top of a telephone pole located in the town of Pike Lake, about 4 rods south of such boundary and 1 rod west of such center line so that, at the point where such way crossed such boundary, the wire was about 7 feet from the ground. Plaintiff, while traveling with ordinary care south on such way, seated in a top wagon to which a team of horses was attached and being driven with ordinary care, was severely injured by the top coming in contact with the wire at such point, causing the horses to become frightened and the wagon to be upset. In due time notice of the injury and claim for damages were served on the proper officers of both towns. As to the place of injury, the complaint stated this: "When said plaintiff reached the intersection point where said highway intersects said town line, the said telephone wire extending across said highway caught the top of the wagon in which plaintiff was seated, and thereby caused said horses to become frightened, upsetting said wagon, throwing said plaintiff from said wagon onto the ground and thereby seriously injuring and bruising said plaintiff's head, face and body, compelling her to be confined to her bed for some time."

The notice of injury, served as aforesaid, contained substantially a like statement.

The defendants separately demurred to the complaint upon the grounds before indicated, and separately appealed from the decision in respect thereto.

Messrs. Brown, Pradt, & Genrich and M. W. Sweet, for appellants:

The complaint does not state a cause of action against either of the defendant towns.

Stilling v. Thorpe, 54 Wis. 532, 41 Am. Rep. 60, 11 N. W. 906; Reed v. Madison, 83 Wis. 177, 17 L.R.A. 733, 53 N. W. 547.

Messrs. Regner & Ringle, for respondent:

Defendants were jointly liable.

Sutherland, Damages, § 140; Colegrove v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 20 N. Y. 492, 75 Am. Dec. 418; Curtis v. Rochester & S. R. Co. 9 Am. Neg. Cas. 618, note; Reynolds v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 180 Mo. App. 138, 168 S. W. 221; Johnson v. Chapman, 43 W. Va. 639, 28 S. E. 744; Driscoll v. Allis-Chalmers Co. 144 Wis. 451, 129 N. W. 401; Glettler v. Sheboygan Light, P. & R. Co. 130 Wis. 137, 109 N. W. 973; Geuder, P. & F. Co. v. Milwaukee, 147 Wis. 491, 133 N. W. 835; Coel v. Green Bay Traction Co. 147 Wis. 229, 133 N. W. 23; Weisenberg v. Winneconne, 56 Wis. 667, 14 N. W. 871; Clapp v. Ellington, 87 Hun, 542, 34 N. Y. Supp. 283, affirmed in 154 N. Y. 781, 49 N. E. 1095; Hawxhurst v. New York, 43 Hun, 589; Oakley v. Mamaroneck, 39 Hun, 448; Boyd v. Watt, 27 Ohio St. 259.

Marshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

True, as suggested by counsel for appellants, liability for injuries to persons or property caused by defective highways is wholly statutory. It rests in the duty, created by the written law, of every town, city, or village to keep its highways, including bridges, in a reasonably safe condition for public travel, and the responsibility thus created for damages happening by reason of failure to perform such duty. Stat. § 1339. Such failure is deemed to be negligence as a matter of law, and hence a wrong of tortious character. Jaquish v. Ithaca, 36 Wis. 108; Fehrman v. Pine River, 118 Wis. 150, 95 N. W. 105. True, also, the statute does not make any express provision respecting liability for damages where the defect causing the damage is at a point common to two towns, as in this case. The language of the statute is as follows: "If any damage shall happen to any person, his team, carriage, or other property by reason of the insufficiency or want of repairs of any bridge, sluiceway or road in any town, city or village, the person sustaining such damage shall have a right to sue for and recover the same against any such town," etc., subject to a requirement for giving notice within a specified time and in a specified way to the municipality "against which damages are claimed," and stating, among other things, where such damage occurred.

Is the language of the statute, "in any town," etc., as to the place of a defective highway causing injury to a person using the same, and the language as to service of notice on the municipality against which the damage is claimed, stating "where such damage occurred," confined to events characterized by a defect at a point in a highway wholly within one municipality? Counsel for appellants contend for the affirmative. If that should prevail, the result would be that the statute leaves a person remediless who suffers damage from a defective highway at a point which is common to two towns. That the legislature did not intend such an absurdity seems quite clear. By a familiar principle, if the language of the written law can reasonably be read so as to avoid such absurd result, it should be presumed that it was intended to be so read, and effect be given thereto accordingly.

It is considered that a point which is common to two towns, as the boundary line between them, in a proper sense, may be said to be within either or both, and so that the words of the statute, "in any town," apply to such point as regards either municipality. It follows that a defective highway at such a point answers to the call of the statute for "any town," as applied to each or both of the municipalities, and that both are in duty bound to maintain the highway at such point in a reasonably safe condition for public travel. Failure to do so is a joint and several liability, in case of damage to anyone in his person or property, happening thereby.

Highway—defect on town line—liability.

Our attention is called to the fact that § 1339, Stat., in effect provides that in case of damage to person or property happening from a defective bridge, erected and maintained at the joint expense of two towns, the sufferer may maintain an action against the two, it being immaterial on which side of the boundary between them the accident occurred. From that counsel draw the inference that the legislature deemed it necessary to specially provide for an action against two towns for damages caused by a defective highway, in order for competency to maintain such an action to exist. It does not seem so. The statute deals with the subject of joint liability of two towns in the special circumstance of damage occurring from a defective highway at a point which may be wholly within one of them. Such special circumstance required supplementary to the general language referring to damage happening from a defective highway in any town, or else a town jointly liable with an adjoining town for the maintenance of a bridge might be held solely responsible for damages happening on the bridge because of a defect on its side of the boundary. In case of a defect which is common to two towns, hence within one as much as the other, no special provision, as that in respect to joint liability in case of bridges jointly constructed and maintained, was required.

From the foregoing it would seem that both of the defendants are liable, if, as alleged, the injury to plaintiff was caused by a defect in the highway at a point which was common to both, and, being so liable, and the nature of the wrong being of a tortious character, it seems that the elementary principle applies that an action may be maintained against either or both, as the trial court held.

The foregoing is in harmony with Clapp v. Ellington, 87 Hun, 542, 34 N. Y. Supp. 283, affirmed in 154 N. Y. 781, 49 N. E. 1095, cited to our attention by counsel for respondent. It was there held that an action of this nature is for tort; that in case of a defect in a highway at a point where each of two towns is in duty bound to maintain the same in a reasonably safe condition for public use, such defect is in each of the towns, and the principles as to remedies for damages for wrongs of a tortious character apply. The remark of Barnard, J., in Oakley v. Mamaroneck, 39 Hun, 448, "When an accident results from joint negligence, all or either of the towns may be sued," in harmony with the general rule in actions not on contract was approved.

The order appealed from is affirmed, respondent to have costs against each appellant.

ANNOTATION.

Liability for injury on highway or bridge at town, municipal, or county line.

- I. In general, 1274.
- II. Roads, 1274.
- III. Bridges:
  - a. Counties, 1276.
  - b. Towns, 1277.
  - c. Cities and villages, 1280.
- IV. Miscellaneous, 1281.

I. In general.

Some statutes contemplate a joint duty and a joint responsibility on the part of both political divisions in respect of the entire line road or bridge. Others contemplate an allotment of different parts to the respective political divisions and a responsibility upon the part of each limited to its allotment. The cases for the most part deal with the application of one or the other of these forms of statute to varying situations. It may be said generally that under either form of statute the responsibility for injuries follows the duty to repair, and that except as it may affect that duty the mere locus in quo of the accident is not controlling.

II. Roads.

It will be seen that in the reported case (TREBOWOSKI v. RINGLE, ante, 1271), where the plaintiff was injured because a telephone wire, crossing diagonally a town line road, was struck by her buggy top at a point in the highway common to both towns, it was held on demurrer that the towns were jointly and severally liable for the injury under the statute referred to in the opinion, creating a liability for damage, by reason of insufficiency or want of repair of any road in any town, "against any such town." The court repeated its ruling on an appeal from the trial of the case in (1919) — Wis. —, 174 N. W. 915, where it appeared that the wire was 8 feet high, and that a statute required the wire at this crossing to be 24 feet above the surface.

Where an injury happened on a line road between the townships of S and E, the place, though in S township, being, under the statutes and a township agreement, under the care and control of E, it was held that E township was "liable to this plaintiff for any injury she may have received, without her fault, in consequence of the neglect of said township or its commissioner to keep the same in good repair;" the statutes giving a right of action for injuries on a public highway against the town whose corporate authority extended over it and whose duty it was to keep the same in repair. Sharp v. Evergreen Twp. (1887) 67 Mich. 443, 35 N. W. 67.

Where there was a statutory liability upon counties for insufficiency or want of repair of highways which they were required to keep in repair, it was held, in Ewh v. Otoe County (1915) 98 Neb. 469, 153 N. W. 509, that "where a public road is established and opened upon the line between two counties, part of such road having been established by each county, it is the duty of each to use reasonable diligence to keep such road in a reasonably safe condition for the use of the traveling public, and for a failure to perform this duty such counties are jointly and severally liable."

In Jones v. Utica (1879) 16 Hun (N. Y.) 441, it was held that a city was not liable to the plaintiff for damages for injuries to his horse, due to stepping into a hole on the city's side of a highway between the city and a town, but within the portion of the highway allotted by agreement to the town, under the statute providing that "each district shall be considered as wholly belonging to the town to which it shall be allotted, for the purpose of opening and improving the road, and for keeping it in repair." The city under the charter was considered as a town under the statute, and the main question in the case was as to the validity of an unrecorded allotment, the court stating: "No question is made by the appellant's counsel but that an agreement made and recorded, as provided by the statute, is valid, and has the effect to make each town liable to third persons for injuries caused by the negligent condition of those portions of the road allotted to it, although not lying within the boundaries of such town, and to exempt it from liability in respect to the portion allotted to the other contracting party."

Where the statute provided that, when a highway is laid out upon the line between two towns, the supervisors of each adjoining town shall determine what part of the highway shall be made and kept in repair by each town, and each town has all the rights and is subject to all the liabilities in relation to the part which is apportioned to it to be repaired, as if the same were wholly located in such town, it was held that it was sufficient to show that the supervisors of the two towns had agreed that the defendant should put in repair the part of the highway where the plaintiff was injured, and such town was liable, although there was no order of the supervisors affecting the highway between the two towns. Montgomery v. Scott (1874) 34 Wis. 338.

In Wolfgram v. Schoepke (1903) 119 Wis. 258, 96 N. W. 556, a joint town road, by order of the supervisors, under statute, was apportioned as to its west 80 rods to G township, and as to its east 80 rods to S township, to be made and kept in repair, a little of the east part not running on the line; thereafter S township reconstructed the east part, building it on the line, and shortly afterwards an act was passed increasing the boundaries of G township, and providing: "That part of the order fixing their liabilities shall be deemed vacated, and a majority of the supervisors of each of such towns shall, before the time for making the next subsequent tax roll, meet together and make a new order apportioning their liabilities on account of such highway." Nine days after the passage of the act the plaintiff was injured by reason of a hole in the new part of the road. The court said: "It is obvious that the time for a reapportionment of this highway by the supervisors of such towns had not yet arrived when the accident occurred. To construe the statute as contended for would, in effect, cast the burden of appellant's default, incurred prior to the time of such legislation, upon the town of Gagen. No such result can be said to have been reasonably contemplated by the statute. It fails, in terms and by implication, to impose such a liability on the town of Gagen; nor does it seem to contemplate a release of the appellant from the consequences of its default in performing a legal duty."

III. Bridges.

a. Counties.

It is a general rule that counties are not liable for damages for injuries owing to defects in a bridge between them, unless the statutes expressly make them so. Paxton v. Berrien County (1903) 117 Ga. 891, 45 S. E. 266.

It was held in South v. San Benito County (1919) — Cal. App. —, 180 Pac. 354, that, where counties formerly maintaining a bridge over a creek between them suffered it to go out of existence, a traveler falling into the creek had no cause of action against them in the absence of a statute making them liable.

A county is not made liable for the negligent exercise of the duty of maintaining bridges between it and another county, imposed on it by the state, by a general statute declaring that a county is a municipal corporation, "and formed for the purpose of exercising the powers and discharging the duties of local government, and the administration of public affairs, conferred upon it by law," which statute provides further that actions for damages for any injury to any property or rights for which it is liable shall be in the name of the county. Markey v. Queens County (1898) 154 N. Y. 675, 39 L.R.A. 46, 49 N. E. 71.

In Brooks County v. Carrington (1909) 7 Ga. App. 225, 66 S. E. 625, it was held that a bridge, all of which was in B county except what was necessary for the purpose of safe abutment and approach on one end, was a county line bridge,—that is, a bridge over a watercourse dividing one county from another,—although the boundary line was the bank of the river, and that, therefore, an action for injuries would not lie against B county except in the case provided for in the statute, relating to county line bridges.

Where a statute required that if a county did not take a bond from a bridge contractor it should be liable for damages, and that bonds of contractors should make them bound to keep the bridge in good repair for seven years, it was held that if a county causes a bridge to be constructed, under a contract, over a watercourse dividing it from another county which refuses to contribute, and the building county fails to take the bond required by law, the building county will, for seven years thereafter, be liable for injuries in place of the contractor. Cook v. Dekalb County (1894) 95 Ga. 218, 22 S. E. 151, further appeal in (1895) 97 Ga. 415, 24 S. E. 157. Followed in Willingham v. Elbert County (1901) 113 Ga. 15, 38 S. E. 348.

(It seems that in Iowa, Maryland, and Pennsylvania, and possibly in Canada, counties are liable at common law for injuries due to neglect of their bridges.)

Where the whole of a bridge between two states, with the possible exception of one abutment, was within the corporate limits of a town in Maryland, and the hole which caused the injury was in Maryland, it was held that the Maryland county, which built the bridge under an agreement with the adjoining West Virginia county that such county would pay one half of the cost of the construction, was liable for the injury, and that such Maryland county could not "be absolved from any possible liability for conditions which may render it unsafe, merely because it is located within the bounds of a municipal corporation, invested with a general power of control over its own streets and highways." It appeared that the agreement between the two counties provided that the expense of keeping the bridge in repair should be chargeable to the counties and adjoining municipal corporations in proportion to the amounts paid by each towards its erection, that the board of directors of the Maryland county had had control of the bridge and assumed the duty of making the necessary repairs, and that they had been reimbursed to the extent of one half of the cost of this work by the West Virginia county, and that neither of the municipalities had made any payments on account of the repairs. Allegheny County v. Seaber (1904) 123 Md. 527, 91 Atl. 702.

Bethel v. Pawnee County (1914) 95 Neb. 203, 145 N. W. 363, was an action for damages for the death, from the giving way of a bridge built on a state line road, half of which road was in Nebraska and the other half in Kansas; part of such public road had been established by each of the adjoining counties, but the bridge was built by the Kansas county. The action was brought against the Nebraska county, and there was a statutory liability upon counties for injuries due to defects in bridges which they were liable to keep in repair. It was held that it was the duty "of each county to use reasonable diligence to keep such bridge in a reasonably safe condition for the use of the traveling public, regardless of the fact that such bridge may have been built by and at the separate expense of one of the counties; and for a failure to perform this duty such counties are jointly and severally liable." The court said: "If the evidence had shown that defendant county had used reasonable diligence to keep that portion of the bridge located within its boundaries in safe condition, there are authorities which hold that that would have relieved it of liability, but that is not this case. If defendant county had made proper inspection of this bridge, it would have discovered its dangerous condition, and if it had placed proper supports under that portion of the west end of the bridge within its boundary it is difficult to see how this unfortunate accident could have occurred."

Compare, in this connection, Brown v. Fairhaven (1875) 47 Vt. 386, infra, b.

It has been held in Pennsylvania that where a person injured by the fall of a bridge between two counties, maintainable at their joint expense, recovered judgment against one of the counties, it could have contribution against the other county. Armstrong County v. Clarion County (1870) 66 Pa. 218, 5 Am. Rep. 368.

It has been held that the defendant county could not escape liability for personal injuries due to a defect in a bridge, because—under authority of a statute providing for the construction of county bridges on county line roads wholly within one of the two counties interested where a suitable site could not be obtained on the county line—in order to secure a better bridge site and one that would require a shorter bridge than would be necessary on the county line, the bridge in question was built entirely within the limits of another county, though but a short distance from the county line, which the highway followed except at the crossing of the stream. Casey v. Tama County (1888) 75 Iowa, 655, 37 N. W. 138. No question seems to have been raised as to the liability of the other county.

In Harrold v. Simcoe County (1868) 18 U. C. C. P. 9, it was held that both counties were liable in an action by a person injured by reason of the draw being left open in a bridge connecting the counties, the statute providing that, where a bridge lies wholly or partly between two counties, the councils of such municipalities shall have joint jurisdiction over it.

For cases between counties and cities, see infra, c.

b. Towns.

In Brown v. Fairhaven (1875) 47 Vt. 386, where a bridge over a stream separating two states was maintained by an agreement, one half by a town in the other state, and one fourth each by two towns in Vermont, the Vermont half of the bridge being built on the dividing line between the two Vermont towns, and they were sued jointly for an injury which happened on a part of the bridge beyond the limits of Vermont—it was held that there could be no recovery, the statute only making a town liable for want of repair of any bridge which such town was liable to keep in repair.

Compare, as to liabilities of counties for defects in state line bridges, cases in supra, a.

Where an injury happened on a bridge on a line road running between two townships, on a part of the road which, under statute, had been allotted to the defendant township to repair, as appeared by an agreement signed only by the defendant's commissioner and recorded in the office of the clerk of such town, the defendant could not object that the agreement was not signed by the commissioners of both towns. The statute gave a cause of action for injuries due to neglect to keep a bridge in repair, against the township whose duty it was to keep it in repair. Hunter v. Dwight Twp. (1909) 157 Mich. 634, 123 N. W. 267.

Where, under statute, county commissioners decreed that a city and town should each maintain and keep in repair one half of a county bridge between them, and one half of the draw, each maintaining that part contiguous to the highway leading onto the bridge from their own city and town, it was held that the town was liable for an injury on that part of the bridge which, by the said decree, it was bound to keep in repair, although the place was not within such town. Whitman v. Groveland (1881) 131 Mass. 553. The court does not give the terms of the statute imposing a liability upon towns for injuries due to defects in bridges.

In Perkins v. Oxford (1877) 66 Me. 545, it was held that a town was solely liable for injuries due to a defect on its side of a bridge over a stream dividing it from another town, as "towns are severally responsible under the statute, for injuries suffered by reason of defects that are within their limits."

Two towns, as was their statutory duty, built and maintained a succession of bridges over a river between them, at their joint expense, the original length of which was 150 feet, but this length was successively reduced to about 65 feet by extending the abutments into the river. It was held that both towns were jointly liable for an injury to a traveler from omission of a proper railing on the solid part of the bridge, but within the original space of 150 feet. Tolland v. Willington (1857) 26 Conn. 578. The court does not refer to the terms of the statute making towns liable for injuries due to defective bridges.

In Bryan v. Landon (1875) 3 Hun (N. Y.) 500, 5 Thomp. & C. 594, the commissioners of two adjoining towns in different counties were held jointly liable for damages sustained by the plaintiff through their negligence in the breaking down of a bridge over a creek which formed the boundary between such towns, erected and maintained as a joint bridge between said towns, the statute providing that "commissioners of said towns so liable,"—that is, liable to make and maintain highway bridges crossing a stream between two towns, at the joint expense of said towns,—“may be proceeded against jointly, for any neglect of duty in reference to such bridges.” The court said: “The same liability which, under the statute and at common law, would attach to these defendants for neglect to repair roads and bridges in their respective towns, we think, under this statute, attaches to them jointly for any neglect in keeping in repair any highway bridge between said towns, constructed at the joint expense of said towns, and thus, by said act, made a joint bridge. As was held in Beckwith v. Whalen (1872) 5 Lans. (N. Y.) 376, the law imposes an obligation upon two towns, separated by a creek, to build and maintain at their joint expense a bridge over said creek, when such bridge is necessary to connect two highways in the towns respectively.”

Where, supposedly, the bridge where the injury occurred was between the two defendant towns, the court said: “The liability to keep and maintain the bridge is a joint one imposed on the defendant towns. Chapter 225, Laws of 1841, as amended by chap. 383, Laws of 1857. When an accident results from joint negligence all or either of the towns may be sued. The law which permits towns to be sued for negligence, when its commissioner of highways is negligent, is broad enough to support a joint action against two towns when both are negligent.” Oakley v. Mamaroneck (1886) 39 Hun (N. Y.) 448.

In Shaw v. Potsdam (1896) 11 App. Div. 508, 42 N. Y. Supp. 779, it was held, as the duty of repairing a bridge over a brook between two towns was imposed upon the commissioners of highways of both towns, that “for damages resulting from a negligent omission to perform that duty an action could be maintained jointly against them."

In Theall v. Yonkers (1880) 21 Hun (N. Y.) 265, where the point was not necessary to the decision, it was held that, where the statute declares only a joint liability in case of neglect of duty by the commissioners of highways in relation to bridges connecting two towns, a city which succeeded one of such towns is not liable alone for an injury happening on a part of the bridge beyond its limits. But this case was disapproved in Hawxhurst v. New York (1887) 43 Hun (N. Y.) 588, infra, c, and in Clapp v. Ellington (1895) 87 Hun, 542, 34 N. Y. Supp. 283, affirmed in (1898) 154 N. Y. 781, 49 N. E. 1095, infra.

A bridge on a line road between two towns in different counties, the center of the bridge being the boundary line, is a bridge in each of such towns, within the statute providing that "the several towns in this state shall be liable to any person suffering the same, for all damages to person or property by reason of defective highways or bridges in such town, in cases in which the commissioner or commissioners of highways of said towns are not by law liable therefor," and either town may be sued for an injury on such bridge. The court said: "The liability of the two towns to maintain it was joint, and each of them was chargeable with one half of the expense of its maintenance. . . . The remedy by action was not necessarily against both towns jointly. The action is in its nature for tort. In such case parties chargeable may be sued severally, as well as jointly, by the person aggrieved. . . . In Theall v. Yonkers (N. Y.) supra, there was an expression, not necessary to the result, that the defendant was not liable because the accident occurred on the portion of the bridge outside of the city of Yonkers and within the limits of East Chester. That view was not adopted by the court in Hawxhurst v. New York (1887) 43 Hun (N. Y.) 589. And by the court in the department where the Theall Case was decided, it was said, obiter, by Mr. Justice Barnard, in Oakley v. Mamaroneck (N. Y.) supra, that "when an accident results from joint negligence, all or either of the towns may be sued." But the nonjoinder of the other town was not pleaded as a defense. Clapp v. Ellington (N. Y.) supra, cited in the reported case (TREBOWSKI v. RINGLE, ante, 1271).

Where a bridge ran from S town in S county on the west bank of the river, to an island in the middle of the river, and another bridge ran from the island to E town, on the east side of the river, in W county, a highway running across the island, about 200 feet long, connecting the two bridges, an injury happened by reason of a defect in the first-mentioned bridge. It was held that both towns were jointly liable therefor, although the island was all in the town of S, as both spans of the bridge were to be considered as one bridge, under the statute requiring towns jointly to pay the expense of boundary bridges. Lee v. Saratoga (1914) 160 App. Div. 112, 145 N. Y. Supp. 106, affirmed in (1915) 214 N. Y. 617, 108 N. E. 1099.

In Sheridan v. Palmyra Twp. (1897) 180 Pa. 439, 36 Atl. 868, 1 Am. Neg. Rep. 521, where two townships in different counties bridged the stream between them, each building to a pier recognized as the boundary in the middle of the stream, it was held that the township on whose part of the bridge an injury occurred, was liable therefor, and that the statute providing a mode for building county bridges over streams upon the line between two counties did not apply. The court said: "It is competent for the people of the respective townships to build the bridge themselves, and when they divide the bridge at a fixed point, each may build and keep in repair so much of the structure as lies within the township, as any other township road or bridge is built and repaired. Where this is done, as in the case before us, each township would be liable for the negligence of its own authorities in the care of its own end of the bridge. If this was not so, it might be important for every traveler, when-approaching such a bridge, to leave his team and make a journey to the county seat to examine into the legality of the proceedings under which the bridge had been erected, before venturing himself upon it."

In Haley v. Calef (1907) 28 R. I. 332, 67 Atl. 323, the court construed the Rhode Island statutes as limiting the liability of the respective towns for injuries on bridges between them to those injuries happening on a part of the bridge within the town.

In Powers v. Woodstock (1865) 38 Vt. 45, the question was whether the place where the accident happened was on the bridge approach or not, where a bridge was built near the corner of four towns, and the expense was laid by statute upon them, and an accident occurred on an adjoining road. It was held that, as the accident did not happen on the approach to the bridge, the town in which it occurred was liable.

Where a person was killed through the nonrepair of roads in a township, at a place where they crossed each other, within 100 feet of a bridge crossing a river bounding the county and city, and required by law to be maintained by the councils of the city and the county, it was held that the township was liable. The court considered that the township, while entitled to enforce against the bridge owner the provisions of the statute, was not relieved from liability to repair by its provision that "the approaches for 100 feet to and next adjoining each end of all bridges belonging to, assumed by, or under the jurisdiction of any municipality or municipalities, shall be kept up and maintained by such municipality or municipalities; the remaining portion or portions of such approaches shall be kept up and maintained by the local municipalities in which they are situate." It was further held that the meaning to be attached to "approaches" in the statute was "such artificial structures as may be reasonably necessary and convenient for the purpose of enabling the public to pass from the road to the bridge, and from the bridge to the road," the court saying: "If no such artificial structures are required for that purpose, there is, in my opinion, no ability to keep up and maintain any. If such artificial structures are required, but not to the extent of 100 feet, the liability is only to keep up and maintain them to the extent to which they are required." Traversy v. Gloucester (1888) 15 Ont. Rep. 314.

Under the Quebec statutes, one injured by the bad condition of a road lying between two local municipalities, but wholly in one of them, cannot recover of such municipality, as the road is a county road, where the statute provides that "(1) every municipal road, or every part thereof, wholly situate in one local municipality, is a local road; (2) every municipal road, or every part thereof, lying between two local municipalities, or partly in one municipality and partly in another, is a county road." Walsh v. St. Anicet Parish (1903) Rap. Jud. Quebec 25 C. S. 319.

Where an injury occurred on a bridge on a line road between two townships, over a stream crossing the line, and the statutes provided that "it shall be the duty of the county councils to erect and maintain bridges over rivers forming or crossing boundary lines between two municipalities," and that in case a road lies wholly or partly between two townships, the councils of the municipalities between which it lies shall have joint jurisdiction over the same, and the road shall include a bridge forming part of the road, it was held that, as the stream was a river, an action would not lie against the townships, as the liability was on the county councils. McHardy v. Ellice Twp. (1877) 1 Ont. App. Rep. 628.

c. Cities and villages.

It was held in Nand v. Newton (1897) 58 Kan. 229, 48 Pac. 852, where a city took in land including half of a highway lying along the new boundary, that it became liable to repair a bridge built by the township, located in the half of the highway taken in by the city, and was liable for injuries suffered by falling from the bridge, as the legislature intended that, in case of a road located on the line of a city, the part established within the city should be a city street.

In Hawxhurst v. New York (1887) 43 Hun (N. Y.) 588, where a city and an adjoining county had jointly employed a contractor to repair a bridge over a river between them, and the plaintiff claimed that through the negligence of such contractor, he had suffered injury, owing to insufficient barriers on the county side approach, it was held that the city was liable in an action against it alone. The court said: "In Theall v. Yonkers (1880) 21 Hun (N. Y.) 265, the injury was sustained on the East Chester end of a bridge between East Chester and Yonkers, maintained by both the town and the city, and the court declared that, by reason of the place where the accident happened, the city was not liable. The expression of this opinion, however, does not seem to have been necessary to the decision, and furthermore, it is apparently based upon the view that, under the general statute relating to bridges between towns (Laws 1841, chap. 225), the duty of each town to maintain the bridge does not extend beyond its own limits. We construe the special statute applicable to this case differently." The statute made the expense of repairing the bridge a joint charge on the city and county of New York and the county of Westchester.

For other cases between cities and towns, see supra, b.

Where a toll bridge connecting two towns was bought by the towns, a village at one end of the bridge contributing money to its town for the purchase, and thereafter the repairs of the bridge being made by such town, it was held that the village was liable for an injury caused by a defect in the bridge within its limits, its charter conferring upon it "the power to regulate, grade, pave, and improve the streets and alleys in the town, and to levy taxes and borrow money to improve the streets." The court said: "Under the powers conferred by the charter, it was the duty of the village to keep all the streets and highways in the corporation in a reasonably safe condition for the use of the public.

8 A.L.R.—81.

No importance is to be attached to the fact that the commissioners of highways of the town of Rutland assumed to control and repair the bridge after the purchase from the bridge company. Commissioners of highways have no jurisdiction whatever over highways or bridges within an incorporated city, town, or village located within their town. They cannot levy a tax to build or repair bridges within an incorporated town, and they have no right to exercise any control or supervision over such bridges." Marseilles v. Howland (1888) 124 Ill. 547, 16 N. E. 888, affirming (1887) 23 Ill. App. 101. Followed in Marseilles v. Kiner (1889) 34 Ill. App. 355.

In Reid v. New York (1898) 68 Hun, 110, 22 N. Y. Supp. 623, 5 Am. Neg. Cas. 547, affirmed in (1893) 139 N. Y. 534, 34 N. E. 1102, 5 Am. Neg. Cas. 551, it was held that a statute making the trustees of a bridge between two cities liable for all claims and demands growing out of the bridge was not retroactive, and that the two cities were jointly liable for injuries received by the plaintiff when alighting as a passenger from a railroad car operated by the defendants upon the bridge, and alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendants and their servants.

Where a county purchased a bridge, one end of which touched a city, and an injury happened in the city upon a sidewalk which was an approach to the bridge, and not a public highway of the city, it was held that the city was not liable for the injury, as the county owned the bridge. The court said: "The liability for injuries resulting from the want of repairs to a bridge or other highway, under our statute, rests alone upon the municipality upon which the law casts the duty of making the repairs, and not upon the mere fact that the highway is within the bounds of the municipality." Bishop v. Centralia (1880) 49 Wis. 669, 6 N. W. 353.

IV. Miscellaneous.

Where an injury occurred on a bridge which was being renewed or newly built by the county at the junction of a city, borough, and town, the place of the accident being in the borough, it was held that an action would not lie against the city, borough, and township jointly. The court said that "a joint judgment against the three defendants here cannot be maintained, first, because there was no evidence whatever of any independent negligence on the part of Plains township and Parsons borough which contributed to the accident; second, there was no joint obligation on their part to maintain a barrier across the sidewalk on the part and within the limits of the city of Wilkes-Barre, even if there was such an obligation on the part of the city; and, third, a joint judgment cannot, in any event, be sustained." Skadra v. Plains Twp. (1911) 45 Pa. Super. Ct. 87.

In Weightman v. Washington

(1861) 1 Black (U. S.) 39, 17 L. ed. 52, it was held that an action would lie against the city of Washington for injuries due to the breaking of a bridge between that city and Georgetown, it being conceded that Washington was bound by its charter to maintain the bridge and keep it in repair.

In Curtiss v. Bovina (1909) 138 Wis. 660, 120 N. W. 401, it was held that the bridge in question was not a public highway.

In Woods v. Wentworth County (1856) 6 U. C. C. P. 101, it was held, under complicated facts of location and history, that the bridge in question was not one lying between city and county so as to create the joint liability to repair under the statute.

B. B. B.

---

NEIL GUINEY, Appt.,

v.

R. P. BONHAM, United States Inspector of Immigration.

United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Ninth Circuit—December 1, 1919.

(261 Fed. 582.)

Aliens — deportation — time limitation.

1. An alien found advocating or seeking the unlawful destruction of property may be deported at any time after his entering the country, under a statute providing that if at any time within five years after entry an alien who at the time was one of the classes excluded by law, and any alien who at any time after entry shall be found advocating or seeking the unlawful destruction of property, may be deported.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1286.]

— warrant for deportation — applicability of statutes.

2. That a warrant for arrest and deportation of an alien is based upon one statute does not make inapplicable a later statute providing for deportation, which was passed before the warrant was issued.

— sufficiency of warrant.

3. A warrant for arrest and deportation of an alien is sufficient if it give him adequate information of the acts relied upon to bring him within the excluded classes and to enable him to offer evidence to refute the same at the hearing.

Habeas corpus — disposal of person — time.

4. A statute requiring the court, in a habeas corpus proceeding, to dispose of the party as law and justice require, means as law and justice require at the time of the hearing.

Alien — deportation — hearing without counsel — effect.

5. That, at the hearing before the immigration inspector of an alien for deportation, he was not represented by an attorney or informed of his right to be so represented until most of the testimony had been taken, does not render the hearing unfair.

— ex parte evidence — effect.

6. That the record sent to the inspector of immigration by the Department of Labor, in a proceeding to deport an alien, contains letters and clippings which had been introduced ex parte and without the knowledge of the alien, does not render the proceeding unfair if the deportation was not based upon anything contained in them.

— power of court to weigh testimony.

7. The court cannot, in a habeas corpus proceeding to review the action of the Department of Labor in ordering deportation of an alien weigh the testimony upon which the order is based.

[See 1 R. C. L. 831; 12 R. C. L. 1213.]

APPEAL by petitioner from an order of the District Court of the United States for the District of Oregon (Wolverton, J.) discharging a petition for a writ of habeas corpus to secure his release from custody, to which he had been committed for deportation for violation of the Immigration Act. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Argued before Gilbert, Ross, and Hunt, Circuit Judges.

Messrs. George F. Vanderveer and Ralph S. Pierce for appellant.

Messrs. Bert E. Haney and Barnett H. Goldstein for appellee.

Gilbert, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant, a native of British Columbia, entered the United States in February or March, 1913. In 1916 he became a member of the Industrial Workers of the World, in which he has held the offices of standing delegate, branch secretary, and traveling delegate. In September, 1918, he became secretary of Lumber Workers' Industrial Union, a branch of the I. W. W. having 35,000 members. In February, 1919, he opened an office for said union in the city of Portland. On February 18, 1919, the Department of Labor issued its warrant of arrest, charging that the appellant had been found advocating or teaching the unlawful destruction of property, in violation of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917. On this warrant he was granted three hearings, which resulted in an order for his deportation. On appeal to the Department of Labor, the order of deportation was affirmed. The appellant presented to the court below his petition for a writ of habeas corpus. On the hearing the writ was discharged and the appellant was remanded to custody. The appellant appeals.

The appellant contends that deportation under § 19 of the Act of February 5, 1917 (39 Stat. at L. 889, chap. 29, Comp. Stat. § 4289<sup>1</sup>jj, Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1918, p. 212), was barred after five years from the date of his entry into the United States. We do not so read the statute. It provides: "Sec. 19. That at any time within five years after entry, any alien who at the time of entry was a member of one or more of the classes excluded by law; any alien who shall have entered or who shall be found in the United States in violation of this act, or in violation of any other law of the United States; any alien who at any time after entry shall be found advocating or teaching the unlawful destruction of property, or advocating or teaching anarchy, or the overthrow by force or violence of the government of the United States or of all forms of law or the assassination of public officials; any alien who within five years after entry becomes a public charge from causes not affirmatively shown to have arisen subsequent to landing, . . . shall, upon the warrant of the Secretary of Labor, be taken into custody and deported."

It is plainly the intention of the statute to provide for the deportation of any alien who, at "any time after entry," shall be found advocating or teaching the unlawful destruction of property. The five-year limitation expressed in the first clause of the statute is not to be read into the clause under which the appellant is ordered deported.

Again, the order of deportation does not depend upon the Law of 1917. Act Oct. 16, 1918, chap. 186, 40 Stat. at L. 1012, Comp. Stat. § 4289½b(1), authorizes the deportation of aliens who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property, and declares: "The provisions of this section shall be applicable to the classes of aliens mentioned in this act irrespective of the time of their entry into the United States."

The Law of 1918 was in force prior to the institution of proceedings against the appellant. The fact that the warrants of arrest and of deportation are, in terms, based upon § 19 of the Act of February 5, 1917, does not render the Act of 1918 inapplicable to the case. The principle involved is similar to that which obtains in criminal cases, in which it is held that the statute on which an indictment is founded must be determined as a matter of law from the facts charged, which facts may bring the offense within an existing statute, although the indictment in terms bases the charge upon another statute. Williams v. United States, 168 U. S. 382, 42 L. ed. 509, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 92; United States v. Nixon, 235 U. S. 231, 59 L. ed. 207, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 49; Vedin v. United States, 168 C. C. A. 534, 257 Fed. 550.

It has been repeatedly held that the warrant of arrest for deportation of an alien is sufficient if it give him adequate information of the acts relied upon to bring him within the excluded classes, and to enable him to offer testimony to refute the same at the hearing, and that it need not have the formality and particularity of an indictment. United States v. Uhl, 128 C. C. A. 560, 211 Fed. 628; United States ex rel. Rosen v. Williams, 118 C. C. A. 632, 200 Fed. 538; Healy v. Backus, 137 C. C. A. 166, 221 Fed. 358; Ex parte Hamaguchi (C. C.) 161 Fed. 185; Siniscalchi v. Thomas, 115 C. C. A. 501, 195 Fed. 701; Toy Tong v. United States, 76 C. C. A. 621, 146 Fed. 343.

It is to be observed also that, this being a habeas corpus proceeding, § 761 of the Revised Statutes, Comp. Stat. § 1289, 3 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 469, requires the court, justice, or judge granting the writ "to dispose of the party as law and justice require," which means as law and justice require at the time of the hearing. Iasigi v. Van de Carr, 166 U. S. 391, 41 L. ed. 1045, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 595; Motherwell v. United States, 48 C. C. A. 97, 107 Fed. 437. In Nishimura Ekiu v. United States, 142 U. S. 651, 35 L. ed. 1146, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336, the court said: "A writ of habeas corpus is not like an action to recover damages for an unlawful arrest or commitment, but its object is to ascertain whether the prisoner can lawfully be detained in custody; and if sufficient ground for his detention by the government is shown, he is not to be discharged for defects in the original arrest or commitment."

Habeas corpus—disposal of person—time.

The appellant contends that the hearing before the immigration inspector was unfair, in that he was not represented by an attorney nor informed of his right to counsel until three fifths of the testimony had been taken. This does not render the hearing unfair. In Low Wah Suey v. Backus, 225 U. S. 460, 56 L. ed. 1165, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 734, it was held that the preliminary examination of an alien without counsel is permitted, and that it is sufficient if at subsequent stages the alien has counsel. That case was followed by —warrant for deportation—applicability of statutes.

Alien—deportation—hearing without counsel—effect.

—sufficiency of warrant.

this court in Mok Nuey Tau v. White, 137 C. C. A. 190, 244 Fed. 742. The appellant, on being told that he was entitled to counsel to represent him, stated that he did not desire to avail himself of the privilege.

It is said that the hearing was unfair, in that the record which was sent from the Department of Labor in answer to the writ contains ten letters and one newspaper clipping which were on file in the Department, and which had been introduced ex parte and without the appellant's knowledge, and the appellant cites the decision of this court in Chew Hoy Quong v. White, 162 C. C. A. 103, 249 Fed. 869, in which the hearing on an application of an alien for admission into the United States was held unfair for the reason that the decision was based in whole or in part on confidential communications received by the immigration officers, the source, motive, or contents of which were not disclosed to the applicant or his counsel, and no opportunity was offered to cross-examine or to present testimony in rebuttal thereof. The appellant's case does not come within that ruling. It is clear that the order for his deportation was not based upon anything contained in the letters, and there is nothing in them tending to sustain the charge on which the appellant was arrested or ordered to be deported, and in fact those papers are not properly a part of the record.

Nine of the letters consisted of correspondence which the appellant had with fellow workers of the I. W. W. after his arrest, and while he was in jail. One of the letters was a communication from the Department of Justice to the Commissioner General of Immigration, and is no part of the evidence upon which the report of the inspector at Portland was based, and it has no proper place in the record. It contains the erroneous statement that in 1917 the appellant had been arrested in Idaho on a charge of criminal syndicalism, and had been convicted and imprisoned in the Idaho state penitentiary; whereas, in fact, the appellant had been acquitted of that charge. But the memorandum of the Commissioner General of Immigration contains the statement that the department knew that the appellant had been acquitted of the charge of criminal syndicalism in Idaho, and the decision of the Commissioner General shows by its terms that the judgment of deportation was based wholly upon the activities of the appellant in the various offices which he held in the I. W. W., and his distribution of literature which advocated the doctrine of sabotage, or the unlawful destruction of property.

The newspaper clipping, originally found in the appellant's possession, contains a list of men in Benewah county, Idaho, "known as aliens, or alien enemies, who have either revoked their first papers, or who have claimed exemption from military service on the ground that they were aliens," and in the list is the name of the appellant. The appellant could not have been injured by anything contained in the clipping. He admitted that he was an alien, and that as such he had claimed exemption from military service. In Tang Tun v. Edsell, 223 U. S. 673, 681, 56 L. ed. 606, 610, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 363, the court, answering the contention that certain papers, in addition to the record on the hearing, had been forwarded to the Secretary on the appeal, said: "The contents of these papers are not printed in the transcript of record, but we must assume from the description that they were from the official files. Of these the Secretary might at all times take cognizance, and it would be extraordinary, indeed, to impute bad faith or improper conduct to the executive officers because they examined the records, or acquainted themselves with former official action."

In Re Jem Yuen (D. C.) 188 Fed. 350, it was contended that the hearing on the appeal was unfair, because of alleged improper additions made to the record submitted to the Secretary. The court said: "As to the hearing at Boston there is no complaint that the applicant was in any way hindered in submitting such evidence as he desired, or of any refusal to hear what was submitted. . . . It is well settled that officers of the government, to whom the determination of questions of this kind is intrusted under statutes like those governing these proceedings, are not bound by the rules of criminal procedure, nor by rules of evidence applied in courts. It is not enough for a review of their decision on habeas corpus that there was no sworn testimony, or no record of the testimony or of the decision. . . . I am unable to believe that the duty of the officers to give a fair hearing required them to shut their eyes to the contents of this former record, or to do so without formal or independent proof of its contents."

It is contended that the order of deportation is void, for the reason that there is no evidence in the record to sustain it. It is true that the appellant testified that he did not advocate, nor to the best of his knowledge did the organization to which he belonged advocate, the unlawful destruction of property in any way whatsoever, and said: "I do not believe in sabotage, whether as a weapon used by the working class or used against them."

But it appears without dispute that in his connection with the organization to which he belonged he had been actively engaged in distributing to others the literature published and issued under the sanction of that organization. In that literature are to be found expressions directly and unmistakably inculcating the unlawful destruction of property. It was on the nature of that literature and the appellant's activities in disseminating the same that the order of deportation was based. It is not our province to weigh the testimony. We can go no further —power of court to weigh testimony. than to determine whether or not the officers to whom is intrusted the enforcement of the law have in this instance abused the discretion which was placed in them. We find no abuse of discretion, nor absence of evidence to sustain the order which is appealed from.

The order is affirmed.

ANNOTATION.

Limitation of time for deportation of alien.

Generally.

The right of a nation to deport aliens who have not been naturalized is absolute and unqualified. It rests on the theory that a foreigner is no part of the nation, and that his reception into its territory is a matter of permission or tolerance, and creates no obligation. 1 R. C. L. 830. So, in a case involving the validity of the repeal of all limitations on the time for the deportation of a certain class of aliens, the Federal Supreme Court said: "The attempt to reopen the constitutional question must fail. It is thoroughly established that Congress has power to order the deportation of aliens whose presence in the country it deems hurtful. The determination by facts that might constitute a crime under local law is not a conviction of crime, nor is the deportation a punishment; it is simply a refusal by the government to harbor persons whom it does not want." Bugajewitz v. Adams (1913) 228 U. S. 585, 57 L. ed. 978, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 607.

Limitations on the time for the deportation of aliens from the United States exist, therefore, only as Congress has imposed them (Bugajewitz v. Adams (U. S.) supra), and their extent is to be determined entirely from a construction of the several acts of Congress on the subject. It is to be noted that nearly all of the cases cited in this note were decided under the Immigration Act of 1903, and the Immigration Act of 1907 (see 3 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. pp. 637 et seq.), and that those acts have been superseded by the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1918, pp. 212 et. seq.), which contains provisions distinctly at variance with those of the former acts with respect to the time for the institution of deportation proceedings. Section 19 of the Act of 1917, which deals with the time limited for deportation, states in successive clauses the classes of aliens subject to deportation, some of the clauses containing a time limit and others making no reference to time for proceeding. The only two cases which have passed on that act seem to warrant the general statement that limitations contained in one clause are not to be read into any other, so that, with respect to the deportation of aliens described by a clause of the Act of 1917 containing no limitation, deportation proceedings may be begun at any time. See Lopez v. Howe (1919) — C. C. A. —, 259 Fed. 401. And see the reported case (GUINEY v. BONHAM, ante, 1282).

The time limit, if any, fixed by Congress for deportation proceedings, having been uniformly made to run from the entry of the alien into the United States, some uncertainty at one time existed as to whether an alien who left the United States with intent to return started the running of a new period of limitation on his re-entry. In two cases it was held that under those circumstances the period was to be computed from the first entry. Redfern v. Halpert (1911) 108 C. C. A. 262, 186 Fed. 150; United States v. Tsuji Suekichl (1912) 118 C. C. A. 188, 199 Fed. 750.

It is now established, however, that the re-entry of an alien into the United States after an absence, however short, from its territory, fixes the date from which the limitation on subsequent deportation proceedings runs. Lapina v. Williams (1914) 232 U. S. 78, 58 L. ed. 515, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 196; Lewis v. Frick (1914) 233 U. S. 291, 58 L. ed. 967, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 488, affirming (1912) 115 C. C. A. 493, 195 Fed. 693; Ex parte Petterson (1908) 166 Fed. 537; United States ex rel. White v. Hook (1908) 166 Fed. 1007; Ex parte Hoffman (1910) 103 C. C. A. 327, 179 Fed. 839; Sibray v. United States (1911) 107 C. C. A. 483, 185 Fed. 401; United States ex rel. Ueberall v. Williams (1911) 187 Fed. 470; United States v. Sprung (1910) 110 C. C. A. 37, 187 Fed. 903; Siniscalchi v. Thomas (1912) 115 C. C. A. 501, 195 Fed. 701; United States ex rel. Bauder v. Uhl (1914) 128 C. C. A. 560, 211 Fed. 628; United States v. Tsurukichi Nakao (1914) 133 C. C. A. 49, 217 Fed. 50.

The strictness with which this rule is applied is illustrated by the case of Lewis v. Frick (1914) 233 U. S. 291, 58 L. ed. 967, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 488, supra, wherein, as appears from the opinion of the lower court (1912) 115 C. C. A. 493, 195 Fed. 693), the alien in question was absent from the United States but one hour, after several years' residence therein. It was held that deportation proceedings might be brought within three years after his re-entry into the United States. A similar holding was made in United States ex rel. Ueberall v. Williams (1911) 187 Fed. 470, supra, with respect to an alien who, after residing in the United States several years, visited Niagara Falls, and while there went to the Canadian side for about an hour.

The deportation provision of the Immigration Act of 1907 (3 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 673, § 20) was to the effect that an alien, within its terms, might "be taken into custody and deported to the country whence he came at any time within three years after the date of his entry." Similar phraseology was used in the Act of March 3, 1903, which was superseded by the Act of 1907. The cases arising under those acts are in conflict as to whether the deportation must be completed within the three-year period. In Botis v. Davis (1909) 178 Fed. 996, it was held that there must be an actual deportation within three years, or the power to deport will be lost. So, in International Mercantile Marine Co.

v. United States (1912) 113 C. C. A. 365, 192 Fed. 887, reversing (1911) 186 Fed. 669, it was held that the alien must be actually delivered on board ship for deportation within three years after his entry. On the other hand, it was held in United States ex rel. Calamia v. Redfern (1910) 180 Fed. 506, that it was sufficient if deportation proceedings were begun within three years, the court saying: "I consider the government should have the whole of the last day of the three years in which to make the arrest, and, prescription being interrupted by the arrest, the government is entitled to a reasonable time in which to carry out the sentence of deportation." The last decision was followed in Bun Chew v. Connell (1916) 147 C. C. A. 226, 238 Fed. 220, wherein the court said: "We think the statute should be construed in analogy with Statutes of Limitation in criminal cases, the requirement of which is answered if prosecution is begun within the time limited. It does not seem reasonable to suppose that Congress intended that, before ordering the arrest of an alien believed to be unlawfully in the country, the Secretary must take into account the probable time that must ensue between the arrest and the warrant of deportation, and compute the time of all possible delays in obtaining testimony, and possible delays to be caused by appeals or writs of habeas corpus." In a brief opinion in the case of Re Rusomanno (1904) 128 Fed. 528, it was said that since the alien in question was not "seized even, for purposes of deportation," before the expiration of the time limited, the authority to deport was lost. In Matsumura v. Higgins (1911) 109 C. C. A. 431, 187 Fed. 601, it was held that, where a warrant was issued in deportation proceedings within three years, the fact that the alien was thereafter imprisoned under conviction of crime did not prevent a deportation after his release from that imprisonment, though the alien had then been in the United States more than three years, the court saying that no domiciliary rights could be acquired during incarceration for crime.

While the Immigration Act of 1917 (Fed. Stat. Anno. 1918 Supp. pp. 212 et seq.) does not plainly solve this doubt, the provisions of § 20 of that act, with respect to charging the cost of deportation on the person by whom the alien was procured to immigrate, or on the owners of the vessel bringing him to the United States, "if deportation proceedings are instituted" at any time within five years, would seem to indicate an intention that the institution of the proceedings, rather than the actual deportation, shall be regarded.

Limitation applicable to particular classes of aliens — Chinese.

The right to deport a Chinese person under § 20 of the Immigration Act of 1907 (3 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 673), and the Act of March 3, 1903, which it superseded, providing that any alien who entered the United States in violation of law might be deported within three years, was lost with the expiration of the three-year period. United States ex rel. Ng. Sam v. Redfern (1914) 210 Fed. 548; Wong Yuen v. Prentis (1916) 148 C. C. A. 44, 234 Fed. 28; Backus v. Owe Sam Goon (1916) 149 C. C. A. 159, 235 Fed. 347; Mok Nuey Tau v. White (1917) 157 C. C. A. 190, 244 Fed. 742; Quan You v. White (1917) 157 C. C. A. 194, 244 Fed. 746.

After the lapse of that period, the remedy was under the Chinese Exclusion Act (2 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 92), no time limit being attached to that proceeding. Moy Wing Sun v. Prentis (1916) 148 C. C. A. 40, 234 Fed. 24; Wong Chung v. United States (1917) 157 C. C. A. 36, 244 Fed. 410.

While there appears to be no reported decision on the subject, it would seem that proceedings to deport Chinese under the first clause of § 19 of the Immigration Law of 1917 (Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1918, p. 230) must be begun within five years.

— prostitutes and the like.

Section 3 of the Immigration Act of 1907 provided for the deportation of any alien woman found practising prostitution, within three years after her entry into the United States. That section was amended by the Act of March 26, 1910 (3 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 649), so as to provide for the deportation of any alien found to be an inmate of a house of prostitution, owning or employed in such a house, subsisting on the earnings of a prostitute, etc., "after such alien has entered the United States." Under that amendment it was held that no time limit attached to the deportation of an alien prostitute, the provision that the alien shall be deported "in the manner provided in" § 20 of the Act of 1907 (3 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 673) being held not to adopt the three-year limitation contained in that section. Bugajewitz v. Adams (1913) 228 U. S. 585, 57 L. ed. 978, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 607; Schwartz v. Adams (1913) 228 U. S. 592, 57 L. ed. 980, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609; United States ex rel. Mango v. Meis (1910) 181 Fed. 860; United States ex rel. Brion v. Prentis (1910) 182 Fed. 894; United States ex rel. Dickman v. Williams (1910) 183 Fed. 904; Sire v. Berkshire (1911) 185 Fed. 967; Ladaux v. Berkshire (1911) 185 Fed. 971; United States v. North German Lloyd S. S. Co. (1911) 185 Fed. 158; Chomel v. United States (1911) 112 C. C. A. 461, 192 Fed. 117; Ex parte Cardonnel (1912) 197 Fed. 774; Choy Gum v. Backus (1915) 189 C. C. A. 85, 223 Fed. 487, writ of certiorari denied in (1916) 239 U. S. 649, 60 L. ed. 485, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 284.

The same rule was, of course, applied to a male alien falling within the terms of the Act of 1910. Ex parte Garcia (1913) 205 Fed. 53; United States v. Czeslicki (1913) 209 Fed. 496; Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. United States (1916) 146 C. C. A. 549, 232 Fed. 591, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 248.

The removal of the time limit on deportation proceedings in the Act of 1910 was held to be valid, even as to aliens who entered the United States before that date. Bugajewitz v. Adams (1913) 228 U. S. 585, 57 L. ed. 978, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 607; United States ex rel. Mango v. Weis (1910) 181 Fed. 860; United States ex rel. Dickman v. Williams (1910) 183 Fed. 904.

The Act of February 5, 1917 (Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1918, p. 212), apparently affixes no time limit on the deportation of prostitutes and the like.

—anarchists and the like.

It is held that the five-year limitation attached by the first clause of § 19 of the Act of February 5, 1917 (Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1918, p. 230), to the deportation of an alien who was, at the time of his entry, a member of one of the classes excluded by law, is not to be read into the second clause of the same section, relating to the deportation of an alien who "at any time after entry" is found advocating or teaching anarchy or the like. Accordingly, in Lopez v. Howe (1919) — C. C. A. —, 259 Fed. 401, it was held that a "philosophical anarchist" might be deported after more than five years' residence in the United States. The court said: "Because he is a philosophical anarchist, and is opposed to the overthrow of government by force or violence, the relator claims he is not within the provisions of § 19 of the act of Congress, except in the five-year class, and that, as he has been in this country for fifteen years, he cannot be deported. From what has been said in an earlier part of this opinion, it appears that the relator's understanding of the statute differs from the understanding of this court. That section deals with a number of different classes of aliens, and provides that certain classes may be deported at any time within five years after entry, but does not so limit the time of deportation as respects certain other classes, as to whom it is declared they may be deported, irrespective of the time of their entry into the United States. An alien at the time of his entry may not be an anarchist, and therefore may be entitled to enter. But if, at any time after his entry, he is found 'advocating or teaching anarchy,' he may be deported."

In the reported case (GUINEY v. BONHAM, ante, 1282) a like ruling is made with respect to a member of the I. W. W., shown to have advocated the unlawful destruction of property. In that case the court calls attention to the Act of October 16, 1918 (Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1919, p. 71), § 2 of which authorizes the deportation of seditious aliens, and attaches no limitation to proceedings therefor.

W. A. S.

JAMES E. QUERY

v.

POSTAL TELEGRAPH-CABLE COMPANY, Appt.

North Carolina Supreme Court — December 10, 1919.

(178 N. C. 639, 101 S. E. 390.)

Easement — additional burden — telegraph line on railroad right of way.

1. A telegraph line constructed along a railroad right of way imposes an additional burden on the fee, entitling the owner of the fee to compensation.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1293.]

Limitation of action — when statute begins to run — construction of telegraph line on railroad right of way.

2. The limitation period against a right of action for damages for imposing an additional burden on the fee by constructing a telegraph line along a railroad right of way begins to run only when the line is constructed.

Damages — for telegraph line on railroad right of way.

3. Permanent damages may be assessed to the owner of the fee for the construction of a telegraph line along a railroad right of way.

[See 10 R. C. L. 152, 153.]

— effect of possible interference with easement.

4. The allowance of full damages to the owner of the fee for placing a telegraph line on a railroad right of way is not affected by the fact that the construction of additional tracks by the railroad company may impair the full enjoyment of the telegraph company, at least if there is nothing to show that enlarged occupation by the railroad company was likely to occur.

Appeal — eminent domain — review of damages.

5. The supreme court cannot review an award of damages in an eminent domain proceeding.

[See 10 R. C. L. 222, 223.]

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Cabarrus County (Harding, J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for an additional burden imposed upon the fee by the construction of a telegraph line along a railroad right of way. Affirmed.

Statement by Walker, J.:

The plaintiff alleges that the defendant erected certain poles on his land, within the right of way of the North Carolina Railroad Company, and strung wires thereon for the purpose of using the same in its business of telegraphy, and the defendant admits the other allegation that the plaintiff is the owner of the land, "subject to the right of way of the said railroad company;" it being 100 feet wide on each side from the center of the railroad track. The court charged, among other things, as follows: "The contention of the plaintiff is this: That those under whom he claims and he himself were and are the owners of the land in fee; that the railroad company entered upon the land by reason of the grant of a right of way from the grandfather of the plaintiff; that after the railroad company had taken the right of way the Postal Telegraph Company went upon the right of way and put up poles, and thereby imposed an additional burden upon the fee; and that the plaintiff is entitled to recover damages for such additional burden. If you answer the first issue 'Yes' and the second issue 'No,' and you find that after the railroad company took possession of the property the defendant Postal Telegraph Company entered upon the property and erected additional poles thereon and strung wires on the poles, you will then find that the entry of the Postal Telegraph Company imposed upon the fee such additional burden as would entitle the plaintiff to recover, and in that event the question would be: What amount is the plaintiff entitled to recover by reason of such wrongful entry on the part of the defendant?"

Under the evidence and charge of the court the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, assessing his damages at $350. Judgment thereon, and appeal by the defendant.

Mr. J. Lee Crowell for appellant.
Messrs. L. T. Hartsell and M. H. Caldwell for appellee.

Walker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The case turns principally on the question of damages, although defendant moved for a nonsuit, which was refused, and, as we think, properly so. There was no dispute as to the defendant's entering upon the land and erecting the poles and stringing the wires; the only issues being as to the ownership, the Statute of Limitations, and the damages. The first was answered "Yes," and the ownership was admitted for the purpose of the appeal. The Statute of Limitations does not apply, or, more accurately speaking, is not a bar; for the jury found, as is shown by the evidence and the charge of the court, that the defendant entered upon the land in 1915, erected the poles, and strung the wires. The action was commenced on May 11, 1917. This court said in Teeter v. Postal Teleg.-Cable Co. 172 N. C. 783, 90 S. E. 941: "It is not denied by defendant that the telegraph line superimposed upon a railroad right of way is an additional burden, which entitled the owner to compensation

Limitation of action—when statute begins to run—construction of telegraph line on railroad right of way.

Easement—additional burden—telegraph line on railroad right of way.

(Hodges v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 133 N. C. 225, 45 S. E. 572; Phillips v. Postal Teleg.-Cable Co. 130 N. C. 513, 89 Am. St. Rep. 868, 41 S. E. 1022); but objection is made to the validity of plaintiff's recovery on the ground, chiefly, that his Honor should have held as a conclusion of law that, on the facts in evidence, plaintiff's cause of action is barred by the three-year Statute of Limitations Revisal, § 395, subsec. 3, the language being as follows: 'Actions shall be brought within three years for trespass on real property. When the trespass is a continuing one, within three years from the original trespass, and not thereafter.' Speaking to this section in Sample v. John L. Roper Lumber Co. 150 N. C. 165, 166, 134 Am. St. Rep. 902, 63 S. E. 731, an action for wrongful entry and cutting timber on another's land, the court said: "True, the statute declares that actions for trespass on real estate shall be barred in three years, and when the trespass is a continuing one such action shall be commenced within three years from the original trespass, and not thereafter; but this term, "continuing trespass," was no doubt used in reference to wrongful trespass upon real property, caused by structures permanent in their nature, and made by companies in the exercise of some quasi public franchise. Apart from this, the term could only refer to cases where a wrongful act, being entire and complete, causes continuing damage, and was never intended to apply when every successive act amounted to a distinct and separate renewal of wrong."

Referring to the language of subsec. 3, above mentioned, and the meaning of it, as suggested in Sample v. John L. Roper Lumber Co., it is further said by Justice Hoke: "The court is inclined to the opinion that this is a continuing trespass within the meaning of the law, and for damages incident to the original wrong, and for that alone, no recovery could be sustained. But this is a suit for permanent damages, and on recovery and payment, so far as plaintiff is concerned, confers on the defendant the right to maintain its line on plaintiff's land for an indefinite period, and to enter on the same whenever reasonably required for the 'planting, repairing, and preservation of its poles and other property.' Caveness v. Charlotte, R. & S. R. Co. 172 N. C. 305, 90 S. E. 244. It is a suit to recover for the value of the easement, which can pass to defendant only by grant or by proceedings to condemn the property pursuant to the statute (Revisal, §§ 1572, 1573), or by adverse and continuous user for the period of twenty years."

The defendant, therefore, is entitled to an easement for an indefinite period of time, and the plaintiff to permanent damages as compensation therefor, which are to be

Damages—for telegraph line on railroad right of way.

assessed according to the rule stated in the Teeter Case. See also Hodges v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 133 N. C. 225, 45 S. E. 572, and Phillips v. Postal Teleg.-Cable Co. 130 N. C. 513, 89 Am. St. Rep. 868, 41 S. E. 1022, citing the well-known cases of Story v. New York Elev. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 122, 43 Am. Rep. 146, and Lahr v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 104 N. Y. 268, 10 N. E. 528, as to the right of the abutting owners to compensation for the additional burden imposed upon the streets by the elevated railways. White v. Northwestern North Carolina R. Co. 113 N. C. 610, 22 L.R.A. 627, 37 Am. St. Rep. 639, 18 S. E. 330, is also a well-considered case in our own reports.

We now come to the real question in the case—the measure of damages. The defendant requested the court to instruct the jury to take into consideration the fact that, when these poles were erected and the wires were strung, the land was already subject to the burden of the North Carolina Railroad Company's right of way, and this was given by the court. The court charged the jury, as we have seen, that the defendant, by the erection of its telegraph line, had imposed an additional burden upon the land—in other words, a new one, in addition to that of the railroad right of way, already resting upon it—and that for this additional burden the defendant was under obligations to pay, and the plaintiff had the right to receive, reasonable and just compensation.

The principle of Virginia & C. R. Co. v. McLean, 158 N. C. 498, 74 S. E. 461 (an action between the railroad company and the landowner), as to the probability of an appropriation by the railroad company of its entire right of way being considered in assessing permanent damages against it, does not apply to a case like this where the defendant's right of way is essentially of a different kind, and does not call for any such further appropriation, or any widening of its right of way, the boundaries of which are now fixed and fully occupied, and there is nothing to show that the railroad company can deprive the defendant of its rights in respect to the maintenance and operation of its present line. Whether it could do so must depend upon the right and easement, which was acquired by the defendant from the railroad company, whether by contract, condemnation, or in some way equivalent to the latter method. If the railroad company should extend the occupation of its right of way further from the center of the track, it would not affect the question of damages in this case, unless it had the right to deprive the defendant of its right of way, or some part of it, which does not appear in this record. We do not know what their contractual relations are. We think, though, that in any view the court adequately responded to the defendant's request for instructions as made, and the jury must have understood that the assessment of damages should be made upon the basis of the right which the railroad company had already acquired in respect to the land, and its privilege of enlarging, under proper circumstances, the actual occupation of the right of way, even if that enlargement would impair the full enjoyment by defendant of its easement, which is not at all probable.

—effect of possible interference with easement.

The amount awarded in the verdict does not appear to be excessive, when all the facts are taken into account, and, even if so, we cannot re-view it. Phillips v. Postal Teleg.-Cable Co. 180 N. C. 513, 89 Am. St. Rep. 868, 41 S. E. 1022. We affirm the judgment, finding no material error in the proceedings.

Appeal—eminent domain—review of damages.

No error.

ANNOTATION.

Right and measure of compensation to owner of fee when telegraph or telephone line is erected along railroad right of way or highway.

I. Railroad right of way:

- a. Operation for exclusive use of railroad, 1298.
- b. Operation for commercial purposes, 1294.
- c. Measure of compensation, 1296.

II. Highway:

- a. City or village street:
  1. View that telephone or telegraph is added burden, 1296.
  2. View that telephone or telegraph is not added burden, 1301.

I. Railroad right of way.

a. Operation for exclusive use of railroad.

Telegraph or telephone lines constructed along a railroad right of way and used exclusively by the railroad company for the transmission of information incident to the general business of the company are not an additional burden on the fee, but are within the purposes of the original easement, and the fee owner is not entitled to additional compensation therefor. Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Rich (1878) 19 Kan. 517, 27 Am. Rep. 159; American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Pearce (1889) 71 Md. 535, 7 L.R.A. 200, 18 Atl. 910; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Cape Girardeau Bell Teleph. Co. (1908) 134 Mo. App. 406, 114 S. W. 586; Hodges v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1903) 133 N. C. 225, 45 S. E. 572.

II.—continued.

b. Rural highway:

1. View that telephone or telegraph is added burden, 1304.
2. View that telephone or telegraph is not added burden, 1306.

c. Rule in New York, 1308.

d. Measure of compensation, 1310.

III. Effect of act of Congress relative to post roads, 1311.

In American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Pearce (1889) 71 Md. 535, 7 L.R.A. 200, 18 Atl. 910, the court said: "We entertain no doubt whatever as to the right of a railroad company to construct on and over its right of way a telegraph or telephone line, for its use in the operation of its road and despatch of its business; and it may do this by itself, or may employ another company to do it, or may do it conjointly with another company. If, then, this line is in process of construction, or is about to be constructed, over the right of way of this railway company, in good faith, for the use and benefit of the latter in the operation of its road and to facilitate its business, or is reasonably necessary for that purpose, the landowners have no ground of complaint, because such use of their land is within the scope of the original easement, for which they have already received compensation."

The language of the foregoing case was quoted with approval in Hodges v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1903) 138 N. C. 225, 45 S. E. 572.

So, in Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Rich (1878) 19 Kan. 517, 27 Am. Rep. 159, an action by the fee owner for additional compensation by reason of the construction of a telegraph line, the telegraph company called a witness and attempted to prove by him that the line of telegraph was built jointly by the railroad and telegraph companies, for the use of the railroad company in the moving of its trains and the transaction of its business, and that it was a part of and necessary to its business. The court refused to receive this testimony. Brewer, J., said: "In this we think the court erred. A telegraph line, if not indispensable to a railroad, tends so much to facilitate its business, and to the speedy and safe running of its trains, that the railroad company has a right to build it, to use its right of way therefor, and to remove all obstructions thereon, to its fullest and most uninterrupted and beneficial use. Although it may have but an easement in the land, and that easement limited to its use for railroad purposes, yet a telegraph is so convenient, if not indispensable, that it may cut down every tree and bush on the right of way, if necessary for the most constant and efficient use of a telegraph line built by it over and upon such right of way, just as it may dig away a hill or fill up a ravine for the sake of a water tank or a station house. . . . By so doing it gives the adjacent landowner no claim for damages. Such use is contemplated in the original condemnation, and the damages resulting therefrom are part of the damages included in the assessment therefor."

The same view was taken as to a line jointly built in St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Cape Girardeau Bell Teleph. Co. (1908) 134 Mo. App. 406, 114 S. W. 586, wherein the court said: "The railroad company may construct and maintain such telephone or telegraph line on the right of way for its own purpose, or it may take a partner into the enterprise, or contract with another to erect and maintain the line and furnish the required telephonic or telegraphic service, to the end of transmitting intelligence with respect to the operation of its trains, carriage of traffic, passengers, and other needs of its calling. In such circumstances, the telephone is not an additional servitude upon the fee of the adjacent owner, but, on the contrary, it is viewed as a legitimate development of the easement acquired for railroad purposes."

In Prather v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1883) 89 Ind. 501, it was held to be competent for a railroad company to erect a telegraph line along its right of way. The decision, however, was based on the fact that the railroad company owned the fee to the land embraced in the right of way.

b. Operation for commercial purposes.

Where a telegraph or telephone line constructed along a railroad right of way is to be used for general commercial purposes, it is an additional burden on the fee, for which the landowner is entitled to compensation.

Kansas.—Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Rich (1878) 19 Kan. 517, 27 Am. Rep. 159.

Maine.—Canadian P. R. Co. v. Moosehead Teleph. Co. (1910) 106 Me. 363, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 703, 76 Atl. 885, 20 Ann. Cas. 721.

Maryland.—American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Pearce (1889) 71 Md. 585, 7 L.R.A. 200, 18 Atl. 910.

Missouri.—St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Cape Girardeau Bell Teleph. Co. (1908) 134 Mo. App. 406, 114 S. W. 586.

New Jersey.—Nicoll v. New York & N. J. Teleph. Co. (1899) 62 N. J. L. 733, 72 Am. St. Rep. 666, 42 Atl. 583.

North Carolina.—Teeter v. Postal Teleg.-Cable Co. (1916) 172 N. C. 783, 90 S. E. 941; Hodges v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1903) 133 N. C. 225, 45 S. E. 572; Phillips v. Postal Teleg.-Cable Co. (1902) 130 N. C. 513, 89 Am. St. Rep. 368, 41 S. E. 1022, on rehearing (1902) 181 N. C. 225, 42 S. E. 587.

And see the reported case (QUEBY v. POSTAL TELEG.-CABLE Co. ante, 1290).

In Nicoll v. New York & N. J. Teleph. Co. (1899) 62 N. J. L. 733, 72 Am. St. Rep. 666, 42 Atl. 583, the court, in holding that the construction of a telephone line along a railroad right of way imposed an additional burden on the land, said: "The argument to support the proposition that the right to construct and maintain a telephone line for common public use is within this easement is that the structures required for the exercise of the right are mere adaptations of the road to the passage of the electric current, which thus travels along the highway. But the resemblance between this use and that ordinarily enjoyed under the easement scarcely goes beneath the words by which it may be described. In reality, the electric current does not use the highway for passage. It uses the wire, and would be as well accommodated if the wire were placed in the fields or over the houses. The highway is used only as a standing place for the structures. Such a use seems to us to be so different from the primary right of passage as to be essentially distinct. . . . We therefore think that the right now under consideration is not within the public easement, and can be acquired, against the consent of the private owner of the fee, only by condemnation under the power of eminent domain."

Similarly, in Hodges v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1908) 133 N. C. 225, 45 S. E. 572, an action against a telegraph company by an adjacent owner of land to recover damages for the erection of telegraph poles along a railroad right of way, the court said: "We cannot construe this into a reasonable use of the easement granted by the plaintiff to the railroad company, but as an additional burden placed upon the plaintiff's land. It is clear that the railroad company could not grant to the defendant company an easement. This could be done only by the owner of the soil."

A telephone line was held in Teeter v. Postal Teleg.-Cable Co. (1916) 172 N. C. 783, 90 S. E. 941, to impose on a railroad right of way an additional burden, entitling the owner to compensation.

So, in Canadian P. R. Co. v. Moosehead Teleph. Co. (1910) 106 Me. 363, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 703, 76 Atl. 885, 20 Ann. Cas. 721, an action in equity to enjoin a defendant telephone company from maintaining its line of poles and wires on the plaintiff's right of way, it was held that the location of a telephone line on a railroad right of way imposes an additional burden, for which the owner of the fee is entitled to compensation.

To the same effect is Phillips v. Postal Teleg.-Cable Co. (1902) 130 N. C. 513, 89 Am. St. Rep. 868, 41 S. E. 1022, an action to recover damages caused by the appropriation by the defendant of a portion of the plaintiff's land, which was subject to a railroad right of way, for the purpose of erecting and maintaining a telegraph line. It was not contended that this telegraph line was in any degree essential to the operation of the railroad, but, on the contrary, the railroad company, in the proceeding under which the telegraph company claimed to have acquired its easement, claimed that no benefit or advantage could accrue to it from the erection of the telegraph line. "Under the circumstances," the court said, "it is clear that the additional easement claimed by the defendant is an additional burden upon the land, for which the owner is entitled to just compensation." On rehearing ((1902) 131 N. C. 225, 42 S. E. 587) a new trial was granted for error in the admission of incompetent evidence, which affected the amount of damages. The judgment, however, was re-affirmed in all other respects.

Likewise, in American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Pearce (1889) 71 Md. 535, 7 L.R.A. 200, 18 Atl. 910, in an action brought by abutting landowners to restrain the defendant company from erecting poles and stringing wires on a railroad right of way, it was held that if the main object in constructing the telegraph line was to establish an extensive line of telegraph and telephone communication for the use and benefit of the company, and such line was not reasonably necessary for the purposes of the railroad, it was a new easement, and placed a new and additional burden on the land, for which the owners were entitled to compensation.

Where the railroad right of way consists of an easement only, the fee thereto residing in the adjacent landowner, and a telegraph or telephone line is constructed thereon under a contract with the railroad company, for the purpose of serving the railroad in its operations and also to serve the general public as a commercial enterprise, so far as the telegraph or telephone company serves the general public as a commercial enterprise, distinct from the vocation of the railroad, it constitutes a use of the right-of-way easement other than for railroad purposes, and is, therefore, a servitude not contemplated in the original grant, and a burden on the fee, of which the adjacent owner may rightfully complain. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Cape Girardeau Bell Teleph. Co. (1908) 134 Mo. App. 406, 114 S. W. 586.

So, in Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Rich (1878) 19 Kan. 517, 27 Am. Rep. 159, wherein it appeared that the telegraph line was built for the joint use of the railroad and the telegraph company, it was held that the telegraph company was liable in damages to the owner of the fee to the extent of the additional burden cast on the land by the independent use of the line by the telegraph company.

If a railroad company owns its right of way in fee simple, the construction by another of a telegraph or telephone line thereon constitutes a burden on the fee, which amounts to a taking of private property without compensation. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Cape Girardeau Bell Teleph. Co. (Mo.) supra.

c. Measure of compensation.

Where a telephone or telegraph line is constructed along a railroad right of way for other than railroad uses, it has been held that the owner of the fee is entitled to recover the difference between the value of the fee before the construction of the line and its value after the construction. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Snyder (1903)

120 Iowa, 582, 95 N. W. 183; Teeter v. Postal Teleg.-Cable Co. (1916) 172 N. C. 783, 90 S. E. 941; Phillips v. Postal Teleg.-Cable Co. (1902) 130 N. C. 513, 89 Am. St. Rep. 868, 41 S. E. 1022. And see Hodges v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1903) 133 N. C. 225, 45 S. E. 572.

In Teeter v. Postal Teleg.-Cable Co. (1916) 172 N. C. 783, 90 S. E. 941, the court, in ruling on the measure of damages, held that the inquiry should not be confined to the diminution in the value of the land as farming land, but that it was proper to consider its availability for factory sites, since the compensation was to be estimated by reference to the uses for which the property was suitable, having regard to the business and wants of the community as they existed, or might reasonably be expected to exist in the immediate future. And see the reported case (QUERY v. POSTAL TELEGRAPH-CABLE Co. ante, 1290).

But in Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Snyder (1903) 120 Iowa, 582, 95 N. W. 183, it was held that, although the construction of a telegraph line along a railroad right of way might impose an additional servitude on the land, the landowner had no right to an accounting of the rents and profits received by the railroad from the telegraph company.

II. Highway.

a. City or village street.

1. View that telephone or telegraph is added burden.

In some jurisdictions the courts have taken the view that a telephone or telegraph line constructed along a city or village street, is not within the purposes of the original easement, and is not a proper street use, but is an added burden on the fee, for which an abutting landowner is entitled to compensation.

Illinois.—De Kalb County Teleph. Co. v. Dutton (1907) 228 Ill. 178, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1057, 81 N. E. 838, 10 Ann. Cas. 464; Union Electric Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Applequist (1902) 104 Ill. App. 517. See also Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. West Chicago Street R. Co. (1895) 156 Ill. 255, 29 L.R.A. 485, 40 N. E. 1008.

Kentucky.—East Tennessee Teleph. Co. v. Russellville (1899) 106 Ky. 667, 51 S. W. 308.

Maryland.—Chesapeake & P. Teleph. Co. v. Mackenzie (1891) 74 Md. 36, 28 Am. St. Rep. 219, 21 Atl. 690.

Mississippi.—Stowers v. Postal Telegr.-Cable Co. (1891) 68 Miss. 559, 12 L.R.A. 864, 24 Am. St. Rep. 290, 9 So. 356.

Nebraska.—Bronson v. Albion Teleph. Co. (1903) 67 Neb. 111, 60 L.R.A. 426, 93 N. W. 201, 2 Ann. Cas. 639.

New Jersey.—Nicoll v. New York & N. J. Teleph. Co. (1898) 62 N. J. L. 733, 72 Am. St. Rep. 666, 42 Atl. 583. See also Halsey v. Rapid Transit Street R. Co. (1890) 47 N. J. Eq. 380, 20 Atl. 859; State, Winter, Prosecutor, v. New York & N. J. Teleph. Co. (1888) 51 N. J. L. 83, 16 Atl. 188. Compare Roake v. American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (1886) 41 N. J. Eq. 35, 2 Atl. 618.

North Dakota.—Donovan v. Allert (1902) 11 N. D. 289, 58 L.R.A. 775, 95 Am. St. Rep. 720, 91 N. W. 441. See also Coagriff v. Tri-State Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (1906) 15 N. D. 210, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1142, 107 N. W. 525.

Ohio.—Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Champion Electric Light Co. (1885) 9 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 540; Burns v. Columbus Citizens' Teleph. Co. (1907) 30 Ohio C. C. 74; Prentiss v. Cleveland Teleph. Co. (1894) 1 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 97. Compare Auerbach v. Cuyahoga Teleph. Co. (1900) 9 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 389, 7 Ohio N. P. 633.

Texas.—Southwestern Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Smithdeal (1910) 103 Tex. 128, 124 S. W. 627 (certifying answers to court of civil appeals, see (1910) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 126 S. W. 942). Compare Roaring Springs Town-site Co. v. Paducah Teleph. Co. (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 164 S. W. 50.

Wisconsin.—Krueger v. Wisconsin Teleph. Co. (1900) 106 Wis. 96, 50 L.R.A. 298, 81 N. W. 1041.

The rule that a telephone system constructed and maintained in a city street is an additional servitude on the fee is not altered by the fact that the city uses the same poles for its fire alarm and police system. De Kalb County Teleph. Co. v. Dutton (1907)

228 Ill. 178, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1057, 81 N. E. 838, 10 Ann. Cas. 464.

In Union Electric Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Applequist (1902) 104 Ill. App. 517, an owner of property abutting on an alley sued to enjoin the defendant company from tearing up the pavement and excavating in the alley for the purpose of erecting telephone poles. The complainant, it appeared, owned that portion of the alley in fee. It was contended by the defendant that the grant by the city to the telephone company was within the authorized power of the city, and did not subject the alley to an added servitude. With respect to this contention the court said: "Any use of a public street calculated to facilitate travel, under the authorities of our state, is held to be within the contemplation of the dedicatory and cannot be considered an added servitude. But a telephone system is not such a use. Its object has no relation to public travel, or any contemplated use of the streets. It is an added servitude." In Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. West Chicago Street R. Co. (1895) 156 Ill. 255, 29 L.R.A. 485, 40 N. E. 1008, the court said by way of dictum: "Telegraph poles erected upon a highway serve no useful purpose in regard to the highway, and telegraph and telephone poles erected upon a street are not directly ancillary to the use of the street as such; for this reason they are held to be an additional servitude in the street."

In East Tennessee Teleph. Co. v. Russellville (1899) 106 Ky. 667, 51 S. W. 308, it was said that "it is the imposition of a new and additional servitude on streets and alleys of a city or town, to erect telephone poles and string wires thereon." See, however, Cumberland Teleph. Co. v. Avritt (1905) 120 Ky. 34, 85 S. W. 204, 8 Ann. Cas. 955, holding a telephone line on a rural highway not to be an additional servitude, the language of that decision being apparently broad enough to apply to streets.

Likewise, in Chesapeake & P. Teleph. Co. v. Mackenzie (1891) 74 Md. 36, 28 Am. St. Rep. 219, 21 Atl. 690, the court said: "The planting of a telegraph or telephone pole in a highway or street is not a public nuisance, because the legislature has declared that it shall not be; but the general assembly was powerless to subject the reversionary interest in the bed of such highway or street to an additional servitude, without making appropriate provision for just compensation to the owner."

In Stowers v. Postal Teleg.-Cable Co. (1891) 68 Miss. 559, 12 L.R.A. 864, 24 Am. St. Rep. 290, 9 So. 356, wherein an abutting property owner sought to enjoin the defendant from erecting telegraph poles in front of his premises adjoining a city street, it was held that telegraph lines formed no part of the equipment of a public street, but were foreign to its use, and were an additional burden on the fee, entitling an abutting property owner to additional compensation irrespective of whether the fee to the street was in the abutting owner or in the city. In this connection the court said: "It was not competent for the city of Vicksburg, by the action of its municipal authorities, to authorize the erection of the telegraph wires by the telegraph company to the injury of appellant, without having first made compensation to him for the injury inflicted upon him. The authority granted by the municipality would protect the company in its interference with the rights of the public, which is represented by the local authorities. But it cannot operate to withdraw from the appellant his right of property and confer it upon the company. That right is secured by constitutional provisions, and can only be obtained by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, and upon due compensation being first made."

Similarly, in Bronson v. Albion Teleph. Co. (1903) 67 Neb. 111, 60 L.R.A. 426, 93 N. W. 201, 2 Ann. Cas. 639, the court, in holding that telephone poles and wires in a street were an added burden on the fee, said: "When we recall the forest of poles with their clumsy appurtenances, and the network of wires and even cables with which some of our city streets are encumbered, it seems hard to say that an owner whose light is cut off, who has the safety of his buildings and their occupants in case of fire endangered, and access to his property impeded by these permanent obstructions, is less entitled to complain than one whose easement, by adjacency, is impaired by a steam railway. Of course, in the greater number of cases, the poles and wires work no substantial injury, and the owner has no ground of objection. But because the damage in most cases is trivial or nominal, we should not be blind to the substantial and considerable damage that often exists."

In Nicoll v. New York & N. J. Teleph. Co. (1898) 62 N. J. L. 733, 72 Am. St. Rep. 666, 42 Atl. 583, it was held that, where the fee to a street was in the abutting owners, the use of the street for the construction and maintenance of a telephone line constituted an added burden on the fee, for which an abutting owner was entitled to compensation. The court said: "The public easement, as interpreted in this state, is primarily a right of passage over the surface of the highway and of so using and occupying the land within it as to facilitate such passage. In this primary right are included the grading, paving, cleaning, and lighting of the highway, the construction and maintenance of street railways with the apparatus proper for their use, and the maintenance of appliances conducive to the protection and convenience of travelers while using the way. Secondly, the easement covers uses which, though their relation to the right of passage is remote, or even fanciful, are so generally advantageous to the owners of the fee, the owners of abutting property, that, rather by common consent and custom than by logical deduction from the primary design, they are now recognized as legitimate. Such are the construction and maintenance of sewers, water pipes, and gas pipes for the convenience of persons occupying neighboring lands." So, in Halsey v. Rapid Transit Street R. Co. (1890) 47 N. J. Eq. 380, 20 Atl. 859, wherein the court held that placing poles in a street for the purpose of using electricity for street car propulsion did not impose an additional servitude on the fee, it was said obiter: "The question whether a new method of using a street for public travel results in the imposition of an additional burden on the land, or not, must be determined by the use which the new method makes of the street, and not by the motive power which it employs in such use. The use is the test, and not the motive power. And this principle exhibits, in a very clear light, the reason why it has been held that the placing of telegraph and telephone poles in the street imposes an additional servitude on the land. They are not placed in the street to aid the public in exercising their right of free passage, nor to facilitate the use of the street as a public way, but to aid in the transmission of intelligence. Although our public highways have always been used for carrying the mails and for the promotion of other like means of communication, yet the use of them for a like purpose by means of the telegraph and telephone differs so essentially, in every material respect, from their general and ordinary uses, that the general current of judicial authority has declared that it was not within the public easement." But in Roake v. American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (1886) 41 N. J. Eq. 35, 2 Atl. 618, the court refused to enjoin a telephone and telegraph company from stringing wires in front of the complainant's premises, which abutted on a city street, it appearing that the poles were erected on adjacent property, and that the damage threatened was not of an irreparable nature. The court did not decide the question whether an additional servitude was imposed, but said: "A complainant is not in a position to ask for such an injunction when the right on which he founds his claim is, as a matter of law, unsettled. . . . I do not intend to express any opinion at this time upon the merits of the controversy. . . . If the company has not the right which it claims, its action in the premises will be taken at its peril. It will gain no right by the refusal of this court to prohibit it at this stage of the suit, and this court will be able to protect the complainant in his rights."

In Donovan v. Allert (1902) 11 N. D. 239, 58 L.R.A. 775, 95 Am. St. Rep. 720, 91 N. W. 441, the court, in holding that the construction and operation of a telephone line on a city street, the fee to which was in the abutting owner, was not a proper street use, and imposed a new servitude on the fee of the abutting owner, said: "The streets of the said city were given to the public for public use. What is understood by 'public use?' The primary intention and idea of the use of the street was for travel,—moving from place to place in any way that does not interfere with the use of the street for travel in any other way. The manner or mode of travel is not restricted to those known or in use at the time of the dedication, but may be those modes of travel that are the result of modern inventions." In Cosgriff v. Tri-State Teleph. Co. (1906) 15 N. D. 210, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1142, 107 N. W. 525, the court, after reviewing many authorities, held that the construction of a telegraph and telephone line on a rural highway constituted an additional servitude on the fee of an abutting owner, for which he was entitled to compensation, but Young, J., delivering the opinion of the court, remarked: "The proposed use must be within the purpose of the original dedication. If it is not, it constitutes an additional servitude, whether it be a street or rural highway."

In Southwestern Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Smithdeal (1910) 103 Tex. 128, 124 S. W. 627, it was said: "The telephone company was not exempted from the payment of damages caused to abutting property by the construction of its lines. The structure of the telephone company is an additional burden upon the street." See also the decision of the court of civil appeals in the same case (1910) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 126 S. W. 942, wherein the court said: "The question in this case is not what character of title plaintiff possessed in the street, but is: Did the appellant have the right to burden the street with its structures, though having a franchise from the state and city so to do, without responding to plaintiff in such damages as the erection of its lines along said streets accrued to plaintiff by reason of such structures. Our Constitution provides that 'no person's property shall be taken, damaged, or destroyed for, or applied to, a public use without adequate compensation being made, unless by consent of such person.' Art. 1, § 17. We think it settled in this state by a number of decisions that, where private property is damaged by the construction of a public work, the owner of such property may recover compensation for such damage." But in Roaring Springs Town-site Co. v. Paducah Teleph. Co. (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 164 S. W. 50, it appeared that a statute authorized telephone and telegraph companies to set their poles, wires, and other fixtures "along, upon, and across any of the public roads, streets, and waters of this state in such manner as not to incommode the public in the use of such roads, streets, and waters." The question arose whether, under that statute, it was necessary for telephone companies to condemn the land in streets for that purpose. The court quoted with approval from the case of Pierce v. Drew (1883) 136 Mass. 75, 49 Am. Rep. 7, wherein a similar statute was under consideration, holding that an additional servitude was not imposed by the appropriation of a public highway for the use of a line of telegraph; and held the statute in question to be constitutional, although it made no provision for compensation to the owner of the fee in the highway.

In Krueger v. Wisconsin Teleph. Co. (1900) 106 Wis. 96, 50 L.R.A. 298, 81 N. W. 1041, an abutting owner who held the fee to the center of the street sued to compel a telephone company to remove a pole which it had caused to be placed in front of his premises, and to recover damages for its erection. The court directed the trial court to enter judgment for the plaintiff for the removal of the pole, and for the damages found by the jury. In holding that an additional servitude was imposed, it was said: "The suggestion that the adoption of this rule will cripple or destroy the commerce of the state is weighty, but the rights of the public, or of corporations engaged in conducting business of a public character, cannot be allowed to prevail over the rights of individuals, except in the way pointed out in the Constitution. The fact that some of the cases mentioned were decided with reference to the location of poles on country roads does not lessen their weight. If it be a fact, as we believe it is, that in the dedication or condemnation of streets the taking and occupancy of a specific portion for permanent structures was not within the contemplation of the parties, then the argument of the greater rights of the public in city streets fails. The freedom of use and enjoyment of adjoining property has been interfered with, and a definite portion of both street and highway has been taken, contrary to the original purpose, and without compensation."

In Ohio, the cases are in conflict, and no decision seems to have been rendered by the court of last resort. In Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Champion Electric Light Co. (1885) 9 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 540, the court said: "The city council of a city of the class of Springfield is vested by law in Ohio with the control and management of the streets and alleys thereof. As incident thereto, it grants or refuses authority and permission to street and other railways, telegraph and electric light companies, to use the same so far as necessary for laying of tracks, and erecting poles, and maintaining the same thereon. Such grant does not affect the private rights of any individual property owner in the street, which remain unimpaired thereby, and over which the council of the city has no such power or authority." So, in Burns v. Columbus Citizens' Teleph. Co. (1907) 30 Ohio C. C. 74, it was held that the construction and maintenance of a telephone line on a city street constituted an additional servitude, for which an abutting owner was entitled to compensation, but the court refused to enjoin the telephone company from placing in an underground conduit in the street wires which were strung on poles, the complainant not having objected to the use of the street for the poles. In Prentiss v. Cleveland Teleph. Co. (1894) 1 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 97, it was held that the erection of telephone poles on a residence street in a city should be enjoined, but that the telephone wires could be put into underground conduits in the street. However, in Auerbach v. Cuyahoga Teleph. Co. (1900) 9 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 389, 7 Ohio N. P. 633, set forth at length in subdivision II. a, 2, infra, telephone poles and wires were held not to constitute an additional burden upon a city street.

B. View that telephone or telegraph is not added burden.

Other courts have taken the view that telephone and telegraph lines are simply new and improved methods of communication; that the primary and original purpose of the dedication of a street includes the transmission of intelligence as well as public travel; and hence that the erection and maintenance of telephone and telegraph lines are within the scope of the original easement for which the landowner has been compensated.

Alabama.—See Southern Bell Teleph. Co. v. Francis (1895) 109 Ala. 224, 31 L.R.A. 193, 55 Am. St. Rep. 930, 19 So. 1.

District of Columbia.—Hewett v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1886) 4 Mackey, 424.

Indiana.—Magee v. Overshiner (1897) 150 Ind. 127, 40 L.R.A. 370, 65 Am. St. Rep. 358, 49 N. E. 951; Caburn v. New Teleph. Co. (1900) 156 Ind. 90, 52 L.R.A. 671, 59 N. E. 324.

Kentucky.—East Tennessee Teleph. Co. v. Russellville (1899) 106 Ky. 667, 51 S. W. 308.

Louisiana.—Irwin v. Great Southern Teleph. Co. (1885) 37 La. Ann. 63.

Massachusetts.—Pierce v. Drew (1883) 136 Mass. 75, 49 Am. Rep. 7.

Michigan.—People v. Eaton (1894) 100 Mich. 208, 24 L.R.A. 721, 59 N. W. 145.

Minnesota.—Cater v. Northwestern Teleph. Exch. Co. (1895) 60 Minn. 539, 23 L.R.A. 310, 51 Am. St. Rep. 543, 63 N. W. 111; Willis v. Erie Teleg. &

Teleph. Co. (1887) 37 Minn. 347, 34 N. W. 337.

Missouri.—Julia Bldg. Asso. v. Bell Teleph. Co. (1885) 88 Mo. 258, 57 Am. Rep. 398; Cartwright v. Liberty Teleph. Co. (1907) 205 Mo. 126, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1125, 103 S. W. 982, 12 Ann. Cas. 249; Gay v. Mutual U. Teleg. Co. (1882) 12 Mo. App. 491.

Montana.—Hershfield v. Rocky Mountain Bell Teleph. Co. (1892) 12 Mont. 102, 29 Pac. 883.

Ohio.—Auerbach v. Cuyahoga Teleph. Co. (1900) 9 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 389, 7 Ohio N. P. 633; but compare other Ohio cases cited in the preceding subdivision.

Pennsylvania.—York Teleph. Co. v. Keesey (1896) 5 Pa. Dist. R. 366; Shinzel v. Bell Teleph. Co. (1906) 81 Pa. Super. Ct. 221. See also Lockhart v. Craig Street R. Co. 139 Pa. 419, 21 Atl. 26.

South Dakota.—Kirby v. Citizens' Teleph. Co. (1908) 17 S. D. 362, 97 N. W. 3, 2 Ann. Cas. 152.

Tennessee.—Frazier v. East Tennessee Teleph. Co. (1905) 115 Tenn. 416, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 823, 112 Am. St. Rep. 856, 90 S. W. 620, 5 Ann. Cas. 838; Patton v. Chattanooga (1901) 108 Tenn. 197, 65 S. W. 414.

West Virginia.—Maxwell v. Central Dist. & Printing Teleg. Co. (1902) 51 W. Va. 121, 41 S. E. 125.

In Magee v. Overshiner (1897) 150 Ind. 127, 40 L.R.A. 370, 65 Am. St. Rep. 358, 49 N. E. 951, an action was brought by the fee owner to compel the removal of a telephone pole which was placed by the defendant in the curb line of the sidewalk in front of the plaintiff's property. The court, in holding that the reasonable use of city streets for the equipment of a telephone system was not a new and additional servitude for which the abutting property owner was entitled to compensation, drew a distinction between telephone and telegraph lines, saying in this connection: "The telephone is particularly useful in communications between the people within a city, and it can be used for that purpose directly, and by persons without special skill. It is more clearly a substitute for the old methods of the communication of messages between persons within the city than the telegraph." In Coburn v. New Teleph. Co. (1900) 156 Ind. 90, 52 L.R.A. 671, 59 N. E. 324, the question arose whether the construction of a subsurface trench in a sidewalk, 3 feet wide, 5 feet deep, and 3 feet from the abutter's lot line, for use as a conduit for telephone cables and wires to be used by the city public in intercommunication by electricity, was such a use of the street as was consistent with the contemplated purpose of the dedication. The court answered this question in the affirmative, saying: "The general doctrine of these cases is that in locating, marking, and dedicating streets in plats of land, for urban residences, the purpose of the dedication, in the absence of controlling language, is conclusively presumed to be for the accommodation of public travel, traffic, and communication. Anything which reasonably facilitates these ends is, therefore, consistent with the dedication. In sparsely settled towns and cities public necessity requires but little of the servient owner beyond the right of unobstructed passage over the street, but as cities become populous, and the streets crowded with traveling footmen and vehicles, public necessity increases with the multitude, and, whenever the necessity exists, any use of the street by reasonable structures and devices, above or below the surface, which will enable the citizens to communicate without actual travel upon the street, and which does not materially obstruct the ingress and egress and light and air to abutting property, is within the contemplated purpose of the dedication, and not a new burden upon the fee."

It appeared in Pierce v. Drew (1883) 136 Mass. 75, 49 Am. Rep. 7, that a telegraph company was about to build a line in the streets of a city, under a statute allowing it to do so. Adjacent owners thereupon sought to enjoin the authorities from granting the privilege to the company, claiming that the statute was unconstitutional because it did not provide for compensation to the owners of the fee in the street. The court held that the transmission of information by electricity was a use similar to, if not identical with, the purpose for which highways were established, and that therefore no additional servitude was imposed or other compensation required. In Auerbach v. Cuyahoga Teleph. Co. (1900) 9 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 389, 7 Ohio N. P. 638, the court held that telephone poles and wires in city streets did not constitute an additional burden, and that an abutting owner was not entitled to compensation therefor, saying: "The question before me is not confined to whether the streets of Cleveland may be used for the purposes of erecting therein telephone poles and wires without the consent of the abutting property owner, or compensation lawfully ascertained and paid to him, but is, broadly, whether or not the use of the streets for telephonic purposes, either by poles or wires, or by underground conduits, is such a use as requires such consent of, or payment to, the abutting owner. If it is within the proper public use of a street in a city to lay telephone wires in underground conduits, it follows that it is equally within such proper public use to erect poles to carry wires. The right to decide whether poles should be erected or conduits constructed in the streets, for the purpose of making possible intercommunication between citizens by means of telephones, lies with the city in the discharge of the trust which attaches to the fee in the streets, which rests in such city. The doctrine which I adopt in deciding this case is that the reasonable use of the streets of a city for the poles, wires, and necessary equipment of a telephone system is not a new and additional burden, for which the abutting property owner is entitled to compensation. This doctrine appears to me to be abundantly supported by authority. In this connection it is proper to say that, because the subject of expansion and development of the public uses of the streets is intimately connected with the progress and development of invention, which make possible such enlarged use and enjoyment, the later decisions, rendered with a better appreciation of modern public demands and responding inventions, should have more weight than those rendered at an earlier time."

The question at issue in Shinzel v. Bell Teleph. Co. (1906) 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 221, was whether a telephone pole erected in a city street imposed an additional burden on the adjacent property owner. In holding that it did not, the court said: "The principal question raised in this case has not been decided by our supreme court in a case involving the same state of facts. But the general principles which have received recognition in the cases above cited, as to the servitude in favor of the public in city and borough streets, lead to the conclusion that the erection of telephone poles and wires in such streets, under charter right, with municipal consent, and in conformity to municipal regulations, is not in itself an additional burden for which the owner of the fee is entitled to compensation. It logically follows that unsightliness of the poles, and noises which are the ordinary incident of the lawful and non-negligent maintenance of the poles and wires and the conduct of the business, do not constitute a special injury for which damages are recoverable." So, in York Teleph. Co. v. Keesey (1896) 5 Pa. Dist. R. 366, a bill in equity was filed by a telephone company to obtain an injunction restraining the defendant and his employees from interfering with either the erection or maintenance by the complainant of a telephone pole located in a city street on which the defendant's property abutted. A preliminary injunction was issued by the lower court on the ground that the placing and maintaining of this pole imposed an additional burden upon the fee. On appeal, however, the court dissolved the injunction, saying: "Do the erection of poles and the stringing of wires in front of the defendant's property impose an additional servitude upon it? Is it such a burden as was contemplated when the street was either condemned or dedicated? Manifestly not, since the street was either dedicated or condemned more than a hundred years ago, long before the wildest dreamer imagined such a thing as the transmission of articulate speech over an electrified wire, and before Franklin first drew the electrical spark from the cloud. But the same might be said of lamp-posts, gas and water pipes, street railways, both horse and electric, and it has been ruled as to all of these that they do not impose an additional servitude."

In Kirby v. Citizens' Teleph. Co. (1908) 17 S. D. 362, 97 N. W. 3, 2 Ann. Cas. 152, in deciding that a telephone system on the streets of a city was not an additional servitude, the court remarked: "The streets of a city or incorporated town are, in contemplation of law, dedicated, appropriated, or condemned for all proper street uses; and, when a street is used for any proper street purpose by permission of the city authorities, such use does not constitute an additional servitude, though such use may not have been known when the streets were dedicated, appropriated, or condemned for street purposes, and the abutting fee owner is not entitled to compensation for any damages he may sustain by reason of such use. The streets of a city are now used for many purposes unknown in former times. . . . The telephone is but a step in advance of former methods of conveying intelligence and information, and is a substitute for the messenger and carrier of former times."

In Frazier v. East Tennessee Teleph. Co. (1905) 115 Tenn. 416, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 323, 112 Am. St. Rep. 856, 90 S. W. 620, 5 Ann. Cas. 838, the court held that telephone poles and lines constructed and maintained in a city street did not impose an additional servitude, saying: "We approve the authorities which hold that the chief purpose of a street is that of intercommunication between the inhabitants or denizens of a city or town, and that the telephone is but a new and improved method of effecting this purpose, and hence not a new burden upon the fee of the abutting owner. If this instrument of a larger and more generous civilization were destroyed, not only would social intercourse be very greatly restricted, but the progress of all business would be retarded and its development confined within much narrower limits than now."

Similarly, in Maxwell v. Central Dist. & Printing Teleg. Co. (1902) 51 W. Va. 121, 41 S. E. 125, the court said: "Telephone poles are not things of beauty, yet their utility is so great that their ugliness must be endured until human invention has discovered some more tasteful substitute for them. The public can well afford to surrender a reasonable portion of the public easement in its highways to a public utility of such vastly increasing importance. As the owner of the fee in such highways loses nothing thereby, she has no grounds of complaint. It puts no additional burden on the fee, but it is a burden, alone, upon the permanent easement to which it is appurtenant and subservient." In Lowther v. Bridgeman (1905) 57 W. Va. 306, 50 S. E. 410, the court, after quoting from Maxwell v. Central Dist. & Printing Teleg. Co. (W. Va.) supra, said: "This case is binding authority on this court, and necessarily brings us to the conclusion that there is no additional servitude by the reasonable use of a public highway for the purpose of placing telephone poles and wires for public use along it."

b. Rural highway.

1. View that telephone or telegraph is added burden.

The weight of authority is to the effect that a telephone or telegraph line is an added burden on a rural highway, entitling an abutting property owner to compensation.

United States.—Pacific Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Irvine (1892) 49 Fed. 113; Kester v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1901) 108 Fed. 926. Compare Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Nalley (1908) 165 Fed. 268.

Illinois.—Board of Trade Teleg. Co. v. Barnett (1883) 107 Ill. 507, 47 Am. Rep. 453; Postal Teleg.-Cable Co. v. Eaton (1897) 170 Ill. 513, 39 L.R.A. 722, 62 Am. St. Rep. 390, 49 N. E. 365; Burrall v. American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (1906) 224 Ill. 266, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1091, 79 N. E. 705. See also De Kalb

County Teleph. Co. v. Dutton (1907) 228 Ill. 178, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1057, 81 N. E. 888, 10 Ann. Cas. 464; American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Jones (1898) 78 Ill. App. 872.

Maryland.—See Chesapeake & P. Teleph. Co. v. Mackenzie (1891) 74 Md. 36, 28 Am. St. Rep. 219, 21 Atl. 690.

New Jersey.—Broome v. New York & N. J. Teleph. Co. (1886) 42 N. J. Eq. 141, 7 Atl. 851.

North Dakota.—Cosgriff v. Tri-State Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (1906) 15 N. D. 210, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1142, 107 N. W. 525; Tri-State Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Cosgriff (1909) 19 N. D. 771, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1171, 124 N. W. 75.

Ohio.—Smith v. Central Dist. Printing & Teleg. Co. (1886) 1 Ohio C. D. 475; Denver v. United States Teleph. Co. (1900) 10 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 273; Daily v. State (1894) 51 Ohio St. 348, 24 L.R.A. 724, 46 Am. St. Rep. 578, 37 N. E. 710.

Pennsylvania.—Shevalier v. Postal Teleg. Co. (1903) 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 506.

Virginia.—Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Williams (1890) 86 Va. 696, 8 L.R.A. 429, 19 Am. St. Rep. 908, 11 S. E. 106.

Holding that the construction of a telegraph line along a public highway amounted to an additional servitude, the court said, in Pacific Postal Teleg. Co. v. Irvine (1892) 49 Fed. 113: "Where the fee of the highway is vested in the public, there can be no valid legal objection to the grant by the public of a right to erect such poles and wires without regard to the adjacent property holders; but where, as here, the fee of the highway remains in the adjacent owner, and only its use for purposes of public travel has been granted, I think it clear that every use of the highway not in the line of such travel is an additional burden, for which the proprietor of the fee is entitled to additional compensation, and which cannot be constitutionally taken from him without his consent, except by proceedings regularly instituted and prosecuted according to law." See to the same effect, Kester v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1901) 108 Fed. 926. But in Southern Bell Teleph.

ANNO.—TELEGRAPH LINE ON RAILROAD RIGHT OF WAY. 1805

& Teleg. Co. v. Nalley (1908) 165 Fed. 263, a bill was filed by a telephone company to enjoin the defendant from interfering with the construction and maintenance of its telephone line. The defendant demurred to the bill, contending that the complainant had no right to maintain a telephone line on the public highway without compensating abutting owners, as such line constituted an additional burden, and exceeded the uses to which the easement in the highway could be put. The court, in overruling the demurrer, held that such use of the highway was not an additional burden or servitude.

In Board of Trade Teleg. Co. v. Barnett (1883) 107 Ill. 507, 47 Am. Rep. 453, an action of trespass was brought by an owner of land abutting on a highway, to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by the construction of a telegraph line. The court held that the construction and maintenance of a telegraph line on a public highway constituted a new and additional burden on the fee, to which it was not contemplated it would be subjected when the road was laid out, and that the owner of the fee was entitled to recover additional compensation for such use. In Postal Teleg.-Cable Co. v. Eaton (1897) 170 Ill. 513, 39 L.R.A. 722, 62 Am. St. Rep. 390, 49 N. E. 365, it was held that ejection could be maintained by an abutting property owner against a company which constructed a telegraph line in a public highway. The court adopted the rule laid down in Board of Trade Teleg. Co. v. Barnett (Ill.) supra, to the effect that such line is an additional burden on the owner of the fee, saying: "But it is said the telegraph company obtained the right to construct its line from the county board of Madison county, and the authority of the county officers to grant a license of this character cannot be questioned in a proceeding of this kind. The consent of the county board of Madison county that the line might be erected on the public highway would no doubt be binding on the county and the road authorities in the several towns through which the highway runs upon which the line was authorized to be constructed, but the county board could give no consent which would be binding on any owner of the fee in the highway where the line was constructed. The right of the owner of the fee was beyond the control of the county board. His right is predicated on that provision of the Constitution which declares that 'private property shall not be taken or damaged without just compensation.' The legislature had no authority to confer power on the county board to authorize the appellant company to take appellee's land without compensation, and hence the county board was powerless to give such authority." In Burrall v. American Teleph. Co. (1906) 224 Ill. 266, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1091, 79 N. E. 705, wherein the court held that the construction of a telephone line along a rural highway constituted an additional burden on the fee, it was said: "The fact that a large number of long distance telephone messages are sent over this line daily, and therefore it would be convenient for the public to have the defendant occupy complainant's land, is of no importance whatever. If the land is needed for a public use the law provides a way for acquiring it, and the Constitution prohibits its appropriation for such a use without compensation." In De Kalb County Teleph. Co. v. Dutton (1907) 228 Ill. 178, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1057, 81 N. E. 838, 10 Ann. Cas. 464, the court said: "There can be no doubt that under the law in this state, as heretofore announced, a long distance telephone line places an additional servitude upon the fee in a rural highway."

In Chesapeake & P. Teleph. Co. v. Mackenzie (1891) 74 Md. 36, 28 Am. St. Rep. 219, 21 Atl. 690, the court said: "Planting telephone or telegraph posts upon a public highway in the country is an appropriation of private property, and unlawful, unless the right to do so is acquired by contract or condemnation."

In Broome v. New York & N. J. Teleph. Co. (1886) 42 N. J. Eq. 141, 7 Atl. 851, the court, in granting a mandatory injunction requiring a telephone company to remove its poles from the highway in front of the complainant's premises, and forbidding it to erect others there, said: "The defendants, a telephone company, without any leave or license from or consent by him [the complainant], but, on the other hand, against his protest and remonstrance, and in disregard of his warning and express prohibition, and without condemnation or any steps to that end, set up their poles upon his land. . . . It is enough to say on that head that it does not appear that the road board had any power to authorize anyone to set up poles in the land of the highway, and thus subject the land to an additional servitude besides that for which it was condemned."

In Tri-State Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Cosgriff (1909) 19 N. D. 771, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1171, 124 N. W. 75, involving a telephone line on a rural highway, the court said: "The contention of plaintiff, suggested by the specifications referred to, that the placing of a telephone and telegraph line upon the land already dedicated to highway purposes is not an additional servitude, entitling the owner of abutting property to compensation, is disposed of adversely to its view by former decisions of this court. And the court, as at present constituted, is not disposed to disturb principles announced in well-considered opinions which may now be regarded as settled law." See to the same effect, Cosgriff v. Tri-State Teleph. Co. (1906) 15 N. D. 210, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1142, 107 N. W. 525.

In Daily v. State (1894) 51 Ohio St. 348, 24 L.R.A. 724, 46 Am. St. Rep. 578, 37 N. E. 710, the defendants, employees of a telegraph company, were convicted under an indictment charging them with wrongfully cutting shade trees on a country highway. In affirming the conviction, it was said: "The rule of law rests upon the clear ground that the appropriation of the public highways for the purpose of telegraph lines was a new use. The highways were originally dedicated for the purposes of public travel, and not for the purpose of telegraph lines. Hence the new use imposed an additional burden." So, in Smith v. Central Dist. Printing & Teleg. Co.

(1886) 1 Ohio C. D. 475, it was held that the erection of a telephone pole in a rural highway in front of the plaintiff's farm would be an additional burden on the fee, and should be enjoined. See to the same effect, Denver v. United States Teleph. Co. (1900) 10 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 273.

In Shevalier v. Postal Teleg. Co. (1903) 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 506, it was held that a telegraph company which constructed and maintained its lines along a rural highway, the fee to which was in abutting owners, was a trespasser and liable in damages to the fee owners.

In Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Williams (1890) 86 Va. 696, 8 L.R.A. 429, 19 Am. St. Rep. 908, 11 S. E. 106, the court said: "That the erection of a telegraph line upon a highway is an additional servitude is clear from the authorities. That it is such is equally clear upon principle, in the light of the Virginia cases. If the right acquired by the commonwealth in the condemnation of a highway is only the right to pass along over the highway for the public, then, if the untaken parts of the land are his private property, to dig up the soil is to dig up his soil; to cut down the trees is to cut down his trees; to destroy the fences is to destroy his fences; to erect any structure, to affix any pole or post in and upon his land, is to take possession of his land; and all these interfere with his free and unrestricted use of his property. If the commonwealth took this without just compensation it would be a violation of the Constitution. The commonwealth cannot constitutionally grant it to another."

2. View that telephone or telegraph is not added burden.

The view is taken by some courts that a telephone or telegraph line is within the purposes for which a rural highway is dedicated, and is not an additional servitude.

Alabama.—Hobbs v. Long Distance Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (1906) 147 Ala. 393, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 87, 41 So. 1003, 11 Ann. Cas. 461; Horton v. Long Distance Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (1906) 148 Ala. 680, 41 So. 1006; Richardson v.

Long Distance Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (1906) 148 Ala. 680, 41 So. 1006; Pryor v. Long Distance Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (1906) 148 Ala. 681, 41 So. 1006.

Kansas.—McCann v. Johnson County Teleph. Co. (1904) 69 Kan. 210, 66 L.R.A. 171, 76 Pac. 870, 2 Ann. Cas. 156.

Kentucky.—Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Avritt (1905) 120 Ky. 34, 85 S. W. 204, 8 Ann. Cas. 955. See also Bevis v. Vanceburg Teleph. Co. (1905) 121 Ky. 177, 89 S. W. 126.

Michigan.—People v. Eaton (1894) 100 Mich. 208, 24 L.R.A. 721, 59 N. W. 145; Wyant v. Central Teleph. Co. (1900) 123 Mich. 51, 47 L.R.A. 497, 81 Am. St. Rep. 155, 81 N. W. 928.

Minnesota.—Cater v. Northwestern Teleph. Exch. Co. (1895) 60 Minn. 539, 28 L.R.A. 310, 51 Am. St. Rep. 543, 63 N. W. 111.

Vermont.—Rugg v. Commercial U. Teleph. Co. (1894) 66 Vt. 208, 28 Atl. 1030.

West Virginia.—Lowther v. Bridgeman (1905) 57 W. Va. 306, 50 S. E. 410.

In Hobbs v. Long Distance Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (1906) 147 Ala. 393, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 87, 41 So. 1003, 11 Ann. Cas. 461, the court, in holding that a telephone line constructed along a rural highway was not an additional burden on the fee, said: "We may add that the uses of the telephone are as important in the country as in the city, and it does not take a prophet's ken to see that in the near future they are to perform an important part in bringing the rural districts within the beneficial enjoyment of city improvements." See to the same effect, Horton v. Long Distance Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (1906) 148 Ala. 680, 41 So. 1006; Richardson v. Long Distance Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (1906) 148 Ala. 680, 41 So. 1006; Pryor v. Long Distance Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (1906) 148 Ala. 681, 41 So. 1006.

Likewise, in McCann v. Johnson County Teleph. Co. (1904) 69 Kan. 210, 66 L.R.A. 171, 76 Pac. 870, 2 Ann. Cas. 156, the court, in holding that a telephone line constructed on a rural highway was not an additional burden on the fee, said: "No modern invention has contributed more to commercial and social intercourse than the telephone. It is an appliance of great public utility, and is coming into general use in the country as well as in the city. Indeed, it seems to serve a more beneficial purpose, and is a greater convenience to rural residents widely distant from business centers and from one another, than it is to residents in cities. The question, however, is not determinable by the difference between urban and suburban conveniences and necessities, or by the fact that the fee may be in the adjoining landowner in one instance and in the public in the other; it must be decided by the scope and purposes of the highway, and whether, in country or city, it is a means of travel and transportation, a medium of transmission, of intercommunication, between the people located in different places."

So, it was said in Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Avritt (1905) 120 Ky. 34, 85 S. W. 204, 8 Ann. Cas. 955: "The only question we deem it necessary to consider on the appeal is whether a telephone line upon a public highway is an additional servitude which gives the original owner of the land, or those claiming under him, a cause of action. . . . We are unable to distinguish a telephone line from a steam railway or an electric railway on the public highway. The telephone line is certainly a much less serious burden than either of these. It in no way interferes with the use of the property as a public highway. The use of the land by the telephone company is no less a public service than the use of it by a railroad company. The telephone takes the place of the private messenger. The transmission of messages by telephone is a business of a public character, which is conducted under public control in the same manner as the carriage of persons or property. The easement of the public is not limited to the particular methods of use in vogue when the easement is acquired, but includes improved methods which the progress of society finds necessary for business."

Concerning the rights of an abutting owner whose fee extended to the center of a highway, the court said in Cater v. Northwestern Teleph. Exch. Co. (1895) 60 Minn. 539, 28 L.R.A. 310, 51 Am. St. Rep. 543, 63 N. W. 111: "We are not unmindful that private property cannot be taken for a public use without compensation, however important that public use is. . . . But viewing, as we do, highways as being designed as public avenues of travel, traffic, and communication, the use of which is not necessarily limited to travel and the transportation of property in moving vehicles, but extends as well to communication by the transmission of intelligence, it seems to us that such a use of a highway is within the general purpose for which highways are designed, and, within the limitations which we have suggested, does not impose an additional servitude upon the land; in short, that it is merely a newly discovered method of using the old public easement."

And see Rugg v. Commercial U. Teleg. Co. (1894) 66 Vt. 208, 28 Atl. 1036, wherein it was held that a telegraph line could be constructed and maintained along any highway in the state, provided there was no interference with the public in traveling on or repairing the highway.

c. Rule in New York.

In New York, it seems to be settled that the erection of telegraph or telephone poles in a rural highway or in a village or city street imposes an additional servitude for which an abutter who owns the fee to the center of the highway or street is entitled to compensation. After that rule had been laid down by two intermediate courts with respect to rural highways (Blashfield v. Empire State Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (1893) 71 Hun, 532, 24 N. Y. Supp. 1006, affirmed in (1895) 147 N. Y. 520, 42 N. E. 2; Gray v. New York State Teleph. Co. (1903) 41 Misc. 108, 83 N. Y. Supp. 920), it was, as to such highways, established by a decision of the court of appeals (Eels v. American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (1894) 143 N. Y. 133, 25 L.R.A. 640, 38 N. E. 202). That case was followed in Andrews v. Delhi & S. Teleph. Co. (1901) 36 Misc. 23, 72 N. Y. Supp. 50, affirmed without opinion in (1901) 66 App. Div. 616, 73 N. Y. Supp. 1129, an action of ejectment, brought for the purpose of removing telephone poles and wires from the portion of a rural highway in which the plaintiff owned the fee, wherein the court said: "Assuming that the defendant had acquired its charter from the legislature of the state to run its line along the public highway, still the legislature had no power to grant to the defendant title in the premises, nor could the legislature impose upon the premises an additional burden, without the consent of the owner in fee." So, in Gannett v. Independent Teleph. Co. (1907) 55 Misc. 555, 106 N. Y. Supp. 3, the court said: "The Eels Case . . . establishes the rule of property in this state to be that the maintenance of a telephone line in a country road between the center line and the exterior line of the highway, upon property where the owner holds the fee to the center of the road, is an additional burden, not contemplated by the original dedication of the highway, and not within the scope of the public use." See to the same effect, Powers v. State Line Teleph. Co. (1907) 116 App. Div. 737, 102 N. Y. Supp. 34.

In the Eels Case, supra, the court explicitly refrained from deciding whether the rule there adopted was applicable to a city or village street. In New York Teleph. Co. v. De Noyelles Brick Co. (1913) 154 App. Div. 845, 139 N. Y. Supp. 748, affirmed without opinion in (1913) 209 N. Y. 526, 102 N. E. 1107, the Eels Case was followed as to poles on a "highway" within the limits of a village, but on the outskirts thereof, the court saying that since that case "there has been no question of the necessity of compensating the owner of the fee of the highway as a condition of making use of the same for the purposes of a telephone or telegraph line." In Hudson River Teleph. Co. v. Forrestal (1907) 56 Misc. 133, 106 N. Y. Supp. 404, the same rule was followed as to poles in a village street. The court, however, laid stress on the fact that the street in question, although in a village of 4,000 people, was located in a rural and sparsely populated section thereof. In Powers v. State Line Teleph. Co. supra, the rule that telephone poles in a village street impose an additional servitude was unequivocally declared. The question presented was whether a telephone company holding a franchise from a village, authorizing the placing of poles and wires in its streets for the purpose of conducting its business, could occupy land forming part of a public street, owned by a citizen, and subject only to those easements arising from a dedication of the street for those purposes, without having acquired such right by condemnation proceedings. "We prefer," the court said, "to hold that this cannot be done." In that case, although involving a village street, the court followed the ruling in Eels v. American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. supra, and in this connection said: "It is sufficient in the case at bar to say that the record discloses no conditions or necessities requiring the application of a different rule than that established by the court of appeals in the Eels Case. While that court has determined that a different rule may exist and govern the rights of owners of the fee of streets in a village, than is held applicable to the owners of the fee of country highways, it has not held that such different rule does exist. We believe that the rule applicable to a village of 10,000 inhabitants ought to be the same as that in purely rural districts, and that the appellant has attempted to use the streets of this village for other than street purposes, and that the judgment was proper."

The entire question was, however, put at rest by the decision in Osborne v. Auburn Teleph. Co. (1907) 189 N. Y. 393, 82 N. E. 428, wherein the court of appeals, in reversing the decision of the appellate division (1906) 111 App. Div. 702, 97 N. Y. Supp. 874, held that the maintaining of telephone and telegraph poles in a city street, for the purpose of stringing wires thereon, was not a street use, and was not within the purposes of the grant of the lands for a street; and that their erection and maintenance amounted to an additional burden on the fee, for which compensation must be made to the owner. The court said: "We only wish to remark that the fee to lands in the city is as sacred to the owner as it is in the country, and that in either place he is protected by the constitutional provision to the effect that property shall not be taken for public purposes without compensation." So, in the early case of Dusenbury v. Mutual Teleg. Co. (1882) 11 Abb. N. C. 440, it was held that, under the General Act for the Incorporation of Telegraph Companies, the payment of compensation to abutting owners along the proposed route was a condition precedent to the erection of their lines, whether those lines were constructed along streets or country highways. But in Castle v. Bell Teleph. Co. (1900) 49 App. Div. 437, 68 N. Y. Supp. 482, it was held that the placing of a conduit for telephone wires beneath the surface of a city street, the fee to the center of which was in the abutting owners, did not constitute an additional burden on the fee, entitling the abutting owners to compensation. The court said: "Of all the discoveries of modern science the telephone is one of the most wonderful, as it is one of the most useful, and its convenience is more especially appreciated by the residents of large cities, whose homes are generally at a great distance from their places of business. This simple contrivance annihilates space, and by its aid relatives and friends widely separated may communicate with each other, business of vast importance may be transacted, a physician may be summoned in case of illness, and assistance obtained whenever a fire or other calamity overtakes a person. In short, there are a thousand ways in which it can be used to such advantage as to render it well-nigh indispensable to an urban resident. And this being the case, why is its maintenance a purpose for which a city street may not properly be used?" That case was followed in two cases prior to the decision in the Osborne Case, and apparently in conflict with the holding therein. In Johnson v. New York & P. Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (1902) 76 App. Div. 564, 78 N. Y. Supp. 598, involving the question of the right of a telephone company to erect poles and string wires on a street of an incorporated village, without the consent of a property owner holding title to the center of the street, Hiscock, J., citing Castle v. Bell Teleph. Co. supra, said: "Passing upon the right of a telephone company like defendant to place its wires in a public street in a city, this court has fully held and decided that such right was within the limits of the public easement in a city street." Further in the opinion the court said: "In the classification of, and distinction to be drawn between, city streets and rural highways, the courts have treated village streets as more analogous and akin to the former than to the latter." So, in Gannett v. Independent Teleph. Co. (1907) 55 Misc. 555, 106 N. Y. Supp. 3, it was held that the maintenance of a telephone line in a city street, the fee to which was in the abutting property owners, was within the public easement and a proper street use, and that the abutting owners were not entitled to compensation therefor. In that case the court followed Castle v. Bell Teleph. Co. and Johnson v. New York & P. Teleph. & Teleg. Co. supra, both decided in the same department.

In State Line Teleph. Co. v. Ellison (1907) 121 App. Div. 499, 106 N. Y. Supp. 130, the rule of the Eels Case was held not to be applicable to a street, the fee of which was owned by the city.

d. Measure of compensation.

In jurisdictions holding that a telegraph or telephone line in a street or highway is an added burden on the fee, the rule seems to be that the damages recoverable are nominal, unless special and unusual damages are proved. Board of Trade Teleg. Co. v. Barnett (1883) 107 Ill. 507, 47 Am. Rep. 453; Board of Trade Teleg. Co. v. Darst (1901) 192 Ill. 47, 85 Am. St. Rep. 288, 61 N. E. 398; Chesapeake & F. Co. v. Mackenzie (1891) 74 Md. 36, 28 Am. St. Rep. 219, 21 Atl. 690;

Blashfield v. Empire State Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (1893) 71 Hun, 532, 24 N. Y. Supp. 1006, affirmed in (1895) 147 N. Y. 520, 42 N. E. 2; Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Bruen (1896) 39 N. Y. Supp. 220; Eels v. American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (1894) 143 N. Y. 183, 25 L.R.A. 640, 38 N. E. 202; Tri-State Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Cosgriff (1909) 19 N. D. 771, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1171, 124 N. W. 75; Shevalier v. Postal Teleg. Co. (1903) 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 506; Southwestern Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Smithdeal (1910) 103 Tex. 128, 124 S. W. 627; Southwestern Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Smithdeal (1910) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 126 S. W. 942.

"In many and perhaps in most instances, the damages may be merely nominal, but in others an actual detriment may be occasioned. That, of course, is a question to be determined from the evidence in each particular case." Board of Trade Teleg. Co. v. Barnett (1883) 107 Ill. 507, 47 Am. Rep. 453.

In Eels v. American Teleph. & Teleg. Co. (1894) 143 N. Y. 183, 25 L.R.A. 640, 38 N. E. 202, the court said: "The amount of the compensation is not now the question, but that, in many cases, it can be anything more than merely nominal would seem to be a proposition which would not require great elaboration of argument to make plain. The use would frequently be but a technical encroachment upon the rights of the adjoining owner, and there would be but little fear that anything more than nominal damages would be allowed."

So, in Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Bruen (1896) 39 N. Y. Supp. 220, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to nominal damages only, where there was no evidence that the value of the premises after the erection of the telephone poles was less than its value before their erection.

Similarly, in Board of Trade Teleg. Co. v. Darst (1901) 192 Ill. 47, 85 Am. St. Rep. 288, 61 N. E. 398, it was held that the plaintiff, whose property adjoined a rural highway along which a telephone line was constructed, was entitled to prove as a proper element of damage the unsightliness of the poles or structures, and their nearness to his residence; also that more labor and expense would be required in cutting weeds and grass around these poles, and that they would render the use of his farm inconvenient or dangerous.

Likewise, in Shevalier v. Postal Telegr. Co. (1903) 22 Pa. Super. Ct. 506, the court said: "Another question raised by the assignments of error is that in any event the plaintiffs below were only entitled to nominal damages for the reason that the telegraph line was constructed along the highway. If there had been no evidence except a concession of the ownership of the land by the plaintiffs, and that the telegraph line was constructed in the highway, we think this would have been the correct rule."

The amount of damages allowed in Blashfield v. Empire State Teleph. & Telegr. Co. (1893) 71 Hun, 532, 24 N. Y. Supp. 1006, affirmed in (1895) 147 N. Y. 520, 42 N. E. 2, was $1 for each pole placed in the highway.

In Chesapeake & P. Teleph. Co. v. Mackenzie (1891) 74 Md. 36, 28 Am. St. Rep. 219, 21 Atl. 690, the court, in ruling on the measure of damages in a case where a telegraph pole was erected in the portion of a public street of which an abutting property owner held the fee, said: "The true measure of damages in such a case as this is not what a particular individual would be willing to charge for having the pole put up or remain; nor the amount some other person might consider the rental value was depreciated for the purposes of his business; but where the land of the plaintiff is not taken, nor his soil actually invaded, the measure of damages, as adjudged in many cases, is either, first, the extent to which the rental or usable value of the particular property has been diminished by the trespass or injury complained of; . . . or, secondly, the difference in the value of the property before the construction of the pole, and its value afterwards, if the depreciation in value has been caused by the erection and maintenance of the pole."

In Southwestern Telegr. & Teleph. Co. v. Smithdeal (1910) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 126 S. W. 942, it was held that the measure of damages for the construction of a telephone and telegraph line along a city street is the difference in the market value of the property before and after the construction of the line.

So, in Southwestern Telegr. & Teleph. Co. v. Smithdeal (1910) 103 Tex. 128, 124 S. W. 627, the court said: "The telephone line may have been constructed by authority of law and with due care, yet, if its presence on the street caused or contributed to a depreciation of the 'market value' of abutting property, the company is liable for such damages."

In Tri-State Teleph. & Telegr. Co. v. Cosgriff (1909) 19 N. D. 771, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1171, 124 N. W. 75, the court said: "Neither are we disposed to hold that the right of the owner of property to compensation under such conditions is merely nominal. The damage to the owner, in view of the existing servitude and the further use to which the telephone company may wish to subject it, may be small even to insignificance; but it is nevertheless substantial in the sense that he is entitled to recover a sum sufficient to duly compensate him for all the damage actually sustained under the conditions."

III. Effect of act of Congress relative to post-roads.

It is held that the Federal statute which authorizes the construction of telegraph lines along post roads (Rev. Stat. §§ 5263-5268, Comp. Stat. §§ 10,072-10,077, 9 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. pp. 505, 517, 518) does not affect the right of a landowner to the damages to which he is entitled for the additional burden on the fee caused by the erection of telegraph poles on a public highway which is a post road. Kester v. Western U. Telegr. Co. (1901) 108 Fed. 926; American Teleph. & Telegr. Co. v. Pearce (1889) 71 Md. 535, 7 L.R.A. 200, 18 Atl. 910; Cosgriff v. Tri-State Teleph. & Telegr. Co. (1906) 15 N. D. 210, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1142, 107 N. W. 525. W. F. F.

J. J. MERCARDO, Jr., Appt.,

v.

STATE OF TEXAS.

Texas Court of Criminal Appeals—January 28, 1920.

(— Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 218 S. W. 491.)

Husband and wife — refusal to support — justification.

1. Refusal of a wife to perform any duties for her husband as such is a justification for his refusal to support her.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1314.]

Definition — wilful.

2. The term "wilful" in a statute providing for the punishment of one deserting his wife and children implies a set purpose and design.

[See 9 R. C. L. 355, 356.]

— justification.

3. Justification is a sufficient lawful reason why a person did or did not do the things charged.

Husband and wife — liability for desertion.

4. Conviction cannot be had for wilful desertion by a man of his wife and children where he contributed to their support the larger part of his earnings until he lost his position, at which time she refused to have anything further to do with him, after which he paid rent for them and agreed to contribute more toward their support as soon as he was able, while they were at no time in necessitous circumstances.

[See 8 R. C. L. 307; 13 R. C. L. 1192.]

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Harris County Court at Law No. 2 (Campbell, J.) convicting him of wilful desertion of his wife and children. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. B. L. Palmer for appellant.

Messrs. E. T. Branch, Fred R. Switzer, and Alvin M. Owsley, Assistant Attorney General, for the State.

Lattimore, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant was convicted in the county court at law No. 2, of Harris county, of the wilful desertion, etc., of his wife and children, and his punishment fixed at six months' imprisonment in the county jail.

The offense for which this conviction was had is set forth in chapter 9a of Vernon's Penal Code. To be guilty of said offense, certain things must affirmatively appear from the evidence in any given case, to wit: (1) That the accused deserted, and neglected or refused to provide for his wife, or children under sixteen years of age; (2) that such conduct on his part was wilful and without justification; (3) that such wife or children were in destitute and necessitous circumstances at the time. If the testimony fail in any one of these requisites, the case is not made.

The term "wilful" has been often defined by our courts, and as applied to this statute

Definition—wilful.

we think means not only with evil intent and malice, but that it also implies a set purpose and design. Justification is defined as a sufficient lawful reason why a party did or did not do the thing charged.

—Justification.

Let us discuss the facts pertinent to the three issues involved in this offense as above outlined, and the law applicable thereto. Do the facts show that the appellant wilfully and without justification deserted, or neglected, or refused to provide for his wife or children on the date alleged in the indictment, to wit, April 8, 1919, or theretofore? The children in question were boys aged eleven and twelve years respectively, and they did not testify in the case. The wife did. Her evidence, condensed, showed that prior to April, 1919, her husband worked in Mexico, and that while there he sent her $125 per month; that she had two boys rooming with her who paid her $40 per month, and another roomer who paid her $25 per month; and that she was a teacher and earned about $40 per month for teaching—making a total income of $230 per month. Her husband lost his position in Mexico about April 1st, and came home. On April 15th, she moved to 2805 Genesee street, in the city of Houston, and appellant paid a month's rent for her in advance, and gave her $40, since which time he has given her nothing; and she further stated that since she moved to Genesee street her husband has not lived with her.

It further appears that after this indictment was returned against appellant, on June 2d, he agreed to pay to his wife and children $60 per month, none of which had been paid at the time of the trial, June 24th. This is the substance of the state's case.

For appellant, it was shown that while in Mexico his salary was $150 per month and expenses; that he sent his wife regularly $125 per month; that when he lost his said position he came home, bringing some little presents, and when he arrived he found his wife in bed, and that she refused to kiss him, and told him she would not kiss him and did not want to live with him and wanted a divorce. This was about April 1st. The house they lived in cost $25 per month rent, and about April 15th the wife rented a house on Genesee street at $30 per month. Appellant paid the first month's rent and gave her $40. Appellant's further uncontradicted testimony was that when he came home he went to work for the Gulf Coast Realty Company, selling real estate, and that his actual earnings since his return to the time of the trial had not been $15, all told. He also said that when he agreed to give his family $60 per month he fully intended to do so, but had had no money to pay it with; that it was his intention to pay said amount out of his first earnings. It also appears that prior to the trial the wife had brought suit against appellant for divorce, and he had filed a cross action asking for the custody of the two children, and had enjoined her from taking them out of the jurisdiction of the court. On cross-examination, the wife made the following statement: "It is true that from the time he got back that I refused to have anything to do with him as a wife; refused to perform the duties of a wife."

We think this evidence just the opposite to that necessary to support the propositions laid down by the article under which this prosecution was had. Instead of appellant leaving the wife and children wilfully and without justification, it appears beyond question from the wife's own lips that notwithstanding he had sent her five-sixths of his salary while absent, from the very day of his return she refused to have anything to do with him as a wife, or to perform for him any duties as a wife. Such refusal on her part is not shown to have been with any excuse or reason, and such refusal, in our opinion, would be ample justification for any failure on his part to further support her.

Husband and wife—refusal to support—justification.

Marriage is a partnership, with mutual obligations and duties, and when either party refuses to meet the fair demands of the partnership contract, the law will not compel of the other party a further observance of them.

It is a just law written on our statute books which penalizes the husband and father who wilfully shirks his part of the marital burden; but a thousand precepts from the hands of the Great Law Writer of the Universe, reinforced by every unwritten law of nature, impose upon both husband and wife duties and obligations to which they must respond; and based on our concept of the graver character of the responsibility of both to the behest of these divine laws, we unhesitatingly hold that if the wife trampled upon the sacred duties of a wife to her husband at a time when he was fully meeting and performing his part of such contract, such violation of the laws of God and nature should justify him, in the eyes of the laws of man, in withholding further compliance with his duty to her. The facts in testimony show that while he had means he gave her the larger portion of same, and that even after she turned away from him, and after the date laid in the indictment, he paid her house rent, and gave her more money than he earned,—probably the remnant left him from the days when his wages were larger. There is nothing in the record sug-

—liability for desertion.

gesting any attitude of wilfulness in the appellant's failure to pay after he lost his position, nor that he did not desire or intend to support his children. He asked for them in the divorce proceedings, and enjoined the wife from taking them away from the county. He swore that out of the first money he might make from his new work he intended to pay the amount he had agreed to contribute to the wife, who voluntarily refused to meet her duties to him.

We do not like to overturn verdicts for insufficiency of evidence, but when the testimony shows that the husband did not desert the wife, but in truth and in fact she turned from him, that he did not wilfully neglect or refuse to provide for her or his children, but gave to them all or the major part of his earnings, and that at the time laid in the indictment they were not in distress or necessitous circumstances, but had house rent paid and money beside, and nothing appears which combats his expressed intention to meet the requirements of the law when financially able so to do, we will not hesitate to say that the verdict is against the law and the evidence. See Irving v. State, 73 Tex. Crim. Rep. 615, 166 S. W. 1166; Wallace v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 210 S. W. 206.

The judgment of the trial court is reversed, and the cause remanded.

ANNOTATION.

Criminal responsibility of husband for abandonment or nonsupport of wife, who refuses to live with him.

This note is supplementary to the one upon the same subject in 3 A.L.R. 107. The general rules there set out are followed in the later cases.

Thus, it was held in Lamm v. State (1919) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 210 S. W. 209, that the evidence was insufficient to support a conviction of the charge of wilfully deserting, neglecting, and refusing to provide for his wife, where it appeared that the accused, because of his inability to earn a living at his home town, went to a neighboring place to work, coming home at first every night, but later, on account of the expense, coming home only two or three nights a week, and that, without his knowledge and in his absence, his father-in-law went to his home and brought the accused's wife to his, the father-in-law's, house, and locked up the accused's house and nailed up all the windows. The court said that there was no evidence of desertion unless it was found in the fact that the accused had not lived with his wife since his father-in-law took her to his home, and that if there was any desertion in this act it was by the wife.

And it was held in Green v. State (1918) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 206 S. W. 93, that a husband did not violate the statute against wilful wife desertion, where, after trying to persuade his wife to move to another town with him because of his inability to leave whisky alone in the town of their residence, he went away to a place where he could save his money in order to assist in the support of his family, and, after he left, sent his wife all the money he could spare. The court said that he did not desert her, because he did his best to induce her to go with him where he could make a living, but she declined, and further, that if his action constituted a desertion, it was not wilful.

In the reported case (MERCARDO v. STATE, ante, 1312) a husband was held to be justified in his abandonment of, and failure to support, his wife; in a prosecution under a statute requiring proof that his conduct was wilful and without justification, where it appeared that, on his return home, after a long sojourn in another place, from which he had sent her, while absent, practically all of his salary, his wife told him that she did not want to live with him, and refused, without excuse or reason, to have anything to do with him as a wife, and rented and moved into another house.

The evidence was held in State v. Lyons (1919) — Mo. App. —, 207 S. W. 264, insufficient to show an abandonment with criminal intent within the meaning of the statute, where it appeared that the accused and his wife were living together at the home of the wife's mother, in the absence from home of her father, and that the accused, on receipt of word from his father-in-law that he was about to return home, rented a room for himself and wife, because of the insufficiency of the accommodations at the home of his father-in-law, and asked his wife to come and live with him in the room so rented, which she declined to do.

On a prosecution of a man for abandoning his wife without good cause and refusing to maintain and provide for her, the exclusion of evidence as to whether or not a witness had rented a house to the accused which his wife refused to occupy was held to be reversible error, the court stating that the question clearly went to the merits of the issue, and that if the accused furnished his wife with a suitable residence, he had so far contributed to her support, and that if she refused to occupy it, it certainly was not his fault. State v. White (1870) 45 Mo. 512.

It was held in a prosecution for failure to provide necessaries under a section of the Criminal Code, to establish responsibility under which it is necessary to prove, among other things, that such failure was without lawful excuse, that the refusal of the wife to live again with her husband, except on condition that he put up security in money for her future support, although such condition was imposed in view of the fact that he had deserted her before, and not given her aid for several years, was a lawful excuse within the meaning of the statute, in the absence of evidence of real danger to her life or health in the event of her living with him again. Rex v. Wolfe (1908) 13 Can. Crim. Cas. 246.

But a conviction under the same statute for nonsupport was sustained in Buteau v. Hamel (1915) 24 Can. Crim. Cas. 53, where the wife declined an offer to go and live with her husband, the court saying: "The general rule is that when the husband offers to receive his wife, she is bound to go back with him, otherwise the action is debarred. In the present case the wife has a judgment by which she is separated as to bed and board. Is she obliged to renounce it? I do not think so. If she does and if afterwards she gets no satisfaction from her husband, she will have to go to the expense of a fresh action to be separated. And, besides, she has the experience of a first reconciliation, which did not last long. I may add that the defendant has no lodging; how is it that he has waited to be prosecuted to make such an offer to his wife? It is only a trick to escape the consequences of the law."

Where a wife has left her husband's house and lives away from him without his consent and without judicial authority or other valid reason, and he is willing and ready to receive her in his home and to maintain her according to his means and condition and has offered to do so, but she has refused to live with him, he cannot be convicted under the Vagrant Act, of having wilfully refused and neglected to maintain his wife. Reg. v. Leclair (1898) 2 Can. Crim. Cas. 297.

A husband is not guilty of an offense under a statute subjecting to punishment one who wilfully refuses or neglects to maintain his wife, whereby she becomes chargeable to a parish or township, where he asks her to come home and live with him and promises to treat her kindly, but she refuses to live with him upon the ground that she is afraid to do so because of his previous ill-usage of her, although such ill-usage would entitle her to a divorce a mensa et thoro, on the ground of cruelty. Flannagan v. Bishopwearmouth (1857) 3 Jur. N. S. 1103, 8 El. & Bl. 451, 120 Eng. Reprint, 168, 27 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 46, 6 Week. Rep. 38, 21 Eng. Rul. Cas. 339.

But in Thomas v. Alsop (1870) L. R. 5 Q. B. 151, 39 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S.

43, 21 L. T. N. S. 715, 18 Week. Rep. 454, 21 Eng. Rul. Cas. 343, under a statute providing that the guardians of a parish to which the wife becomes chargeable may apply to justices in petty sessions to summon the husband before them and to make an order, after hearing the evidence, requiring him to pay a specified weekly sum towards her support, it was held, where it appeared that she was justifiably living apart from him, that an order for her support was properly made under the statute, although the husband offered to take her back and support her and she refused because of her previous ill treatment, where the justices found that it would be injurious to her health to return to cohabitation with her husband. The court distinguished this case from the preceding case upon the ground of an essential difference in the statute. G. V. L.

TOM HILLIARD, Appt.,

v.

STATE OF TEXAS.

Texas Court of Criminal Appeals — February 25, 1920.

(— Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 218 S. W. 1052.)

Assault — pistol as deadly weapon — bludgeon.

1. A pistol used as a bludgeon is not a deadly weapon per se.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1319.]

— aggravated — striking with pistol.

2. Striking one on the arm with a pistol so that the blow glances and makes a slight wound on his head, when he prepares to throw a rock at assailant, is not an aggravated assault.

[See 2 R. C. L. 543, 544.]

Evidence — hypothetical question — bludgeon as deadly weapon.

3. A physician cannot be permitted to answer a hypothetical question in a prosecution for assault as to whether or not a pistol used by a strong man as a bludgeon could be a deadly weapon.

[See 11 R. C. L. 579.]

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the De Witt County Court (Boal, J.) convicting him of aggravated assault. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Chambers, Watson, & Wilson, for appellant:

The hypothetical question asked the physician while a witness for the state was inadmissible in evidence.

Wharton, Crim. Ev. p. 837, art. 411; Cooper v. State, 23 Tex. 331; Hunt v.

State, 9 Tex. App. 166; Thomas v. State, 40 Tex. 42.

The burden of proof is upon the state to make out the case beyond a reasonable doubt.

McLendon v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 66 S. W. 553, 13 Am. Crim.

Rep. 152; Stephenson v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 162, 25 S. W. 784; Pierce v. State, 21 Tex. App. 547, 1 S. W. 463; Jenkins v. State, 30 Tex. App. 379, 17 S. W. 938.

Mr. Alvin M. Owsley, Assistant Attorney General, for the State.

Davidson, P.J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant was convicted of aggravated assault, and his punishment assessed at a fine of $200 and imprisonment in the county jail for ninety days.

The evidence discloses that Adams, the alleged assaulted party, a white man, and appellant, a negro, had known each other practically all their lives, lived neighbors, and were always on friendly terms. Appellant's daughter and another negro girl at his home had gone something like 100 yards from the residence after wood. This was in the evening. A son of Adams and a relative drove by in an auto and accosted the girls and made indecent proposals. The girls returned to the house and informed their brother, a boy about sixteen years of age, of what had occurred. Shortly after this occurrence the two boys in the auto returned, passing the house, and the brother of the girl accosted them and demanded to know the reason of their conduct. They denied it. Appellant's daughter, standing by, informed them of the fact that they did make such indecent proposals, and further stated that if they denied it they lied. They got out of the car, and when they did the girl struck one of them with a stick. The boys informed their father of what occurred, and when appellant returned that night about 8 o'clock, from the town of Cuero, the girl informed him. The next morning, on account of the situation of things, appellant being a negro and the others white people, appellant wanted to have things adjusted without further trouble, and was going to see Mr. John Adams, who seems to have been his adviser in most things. Appellant went to his brother, Bob Hilliard, and inquired for his older son, who was working with Bob Hilliard, and was informed he was in the back of the field. Appellant went to see him, and in returning got his pistol from a neighbor to whom he had loaned it shortly before for the purpose of killing dogs which had been worrying and annoying him. In passing him this party returned the pistol to appellant. The occasion of his returning seems to have been due to the fact that three of the Adamses and a man named Barnes had gone to Bob Hilliard's seeking appellant with reference to this same matter. Bob Hilliard told them where appellant was, and they stated they were going to see him. Bob Hilliard told them to wait and he would send for him, and he did, and appellant came to where they were at Bob Hilliard's house. Appellant, at the request of the assaulted party and another relative, went off about thirty or forty steps to talk over the matter. The prosecuting witness, Adams, wanted to know why the girl had treated his son the way she did, and appellant told them about the conduct of the boys as the girl had informed him. This brought up a contradiction, and appellant is said to have stated that, if the boys told it as the prosecuting witness stated, he would contradict their word and prosecuting witness's word also. This is the state's view of it. Appellant's evidence is to the contrary, and puts vigorous language in the mouth of Adams. When this occurred, however, Adams picked up a rock and prepared to throw it. There seems to have been a great many rocks at that point. The witnesses differ as to the size of the rock picked up by Adams. They were squatted down, and when this occurred both got up. Appellant reached for his pistol, and in the melée he struck prosecuting witness one lick with the pistol. This struck his arm and glanced, and cut a scalp wound on the head about  $\frac{1}{2}$  inch in length and just through the skin. It was not a serious wound, and no physician was called, nor did Adams suffer any inconvenience from it or go to bed. The testimony shows it was not a serious wound, and the blow as struck was rather a light one from the evidence. The state's contention was that he struck at the head of Adams with the pistol. However that may be, the physical facts show that he was struck on the arm, and the blow evidently glanced and struck his head. It is also in evidence that when this occurred appellant held his pistol on Adams, and at this juncture John Adams came and requested that they leave, and they all separated. This is a sufficient statement of the case to dispose of the issues presented.

We are of opinion this evidence does not show an aggravated assault under the long line of decisions rendered by this court. A pistol used as a bludgeon is not a deadly weapon per se. See Branch's

Assault—aggravated—striking with pistol.

Crim. Law, § 82, p. 42, where a great number of opinions are collated; Skidmore v. State, 43 Tex. 93; Jenkins v. State, 30 Tex. App. 379, 17 S. W. 938; Key v. State, 12 Tex. App. 506; Pierce v. State, 21 Tex. App. 547, 1 S. W. 468; McLendon v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 66 S. W. 554, 13 Am. Crim. Rep. 152; Stephenson v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 162, 25 S. W. 784; Peacock v. State, 52 Tex. Crim. Rep. 435, 107 S. W. 346. It was held in McLendon v. State, supra, that if defendant struck slightly with the pistol, and could have struck more licks, it shows he was not using it as a deadly weapon. The evidence is uncontroverted that appellant could have further used it and could have fired it, but did not; and it is also in evidence that the lick was induced by reason of the fact that Adams picked up one or two rocks for the purpose of throwing them at appellant, and appellant struck to ward off this anticipated attack. The question is fully settled in Texas that the instrument or weapon used —pistol as deadly weapon

—bludgeon.

to strike with is not per se a deadly weapon, nor is it the law that, if death results, therefore the conclusion is that the weapon used was a deadly weapon. See Crow v. State, 55 Tex. Crim. Rep. 202, 21 L. R. A. (N.S.) 497, 116 S. W. 52; Washington v. State, 53 Tex. Crim. Rep. 481, 126 Am. St. Rep. 800, 110 S. W. 751, and cases already cited; and also, for a large number of collated cases, see Branch's Crim. Law, § 82, p. 42. There is no question, as we understand this record, that Adams made the first demonstration in picking up the rock with the intention of throwing it. The evidence is in conflict as to whether he placed his arm in position to throw the rock at the time the blow was struck with the pistol, or not, but he intended to throw it, as he himself testified, and was deterred, it seems from the evidence, by the fact that appellant presented his pistol. There was no further attempt on the part of appellant to use the pistol otherwise than hold it where he might use it if further attack was made.

There was an exception taken to the ruling of the court admitting what is termed in the bill the expert testimony of a physician. In view of the disposition of the case on the facts, that matter is not discussed further than to state that the evidence as narrated in the bill was not admissible. That a doctor or any other witness may testify that a certain weapon used by a strong man could be a deadly weapon—that is, that it could inflict death or serious bodily injury—is not sufficient as a hypothetical question in a case, of this character. A hypothetical case, if one is to be used, must be in consonance with facts. It is not what the party could have done with the pistol, but it must be confined to the case as made in accordance with the facts as to what he did. The doctor knew nothing of the facts one way or the other, but he was testifying simply to

Evidence—hypothetical question —bludgeon as deadly weapon.

what a strong man might do with a pistol if used in a certain way. A physician may testify as to the nature of a wound and its probable cause and effect. This was decided in Waite v. State, 13 Tex. App. 169, and Hardin v. State, 51 Tex. Crim. Rep. 562, 103 S. W. 401. He was not testifying as a physician in reference to wounds; he never saw them and knew nothing of them. His testimony was confined simply to a hypothetical case that a strong man with a pistol used as a bludgeon could inflict serious bodily injury or even death. We are of opinion that the doctor's testimony under this record, and as given, carried the doctrine too far. If it be treated as a hypothetical question, then it must be based on facts. If the opinion of the witness is not on a hypothetical case, as above stated, the doctor may, if he has examined the wounds and knows about them, state whether or not the injury was serious or not. Almost any character of weapon may be used with deadly effect. A small pocketknife may be so used, but it would depend upon the concurring facts and circumstances. We think, therefore, that the testimony of the doctor, as given, should not have been permitted to go to the jury.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded.

ANNOTATION.

Firearm used as a bludgeon as a deadly weapon.

It will be seen that it is held in the reported case (HILLIARD v. STATE, ante, 1316) that a blow on the arm with a pistol, glancing to the head and inflicting a slight wound, where the defendant could have struck again and did not, and could have fired the pistol and did not, did not show an assault with a deadly weapon, and that a pistol used as a bludgeon is not a deadly weapon per se.

A double-barreled shotgun, used as a bludgeon, is not necessarily a deadly weapon. Shadle v. State (1870) 34 Tex. 572, where the court said: "When a gun or pistol is used simply as an instrument to strike with, it is not necessarily a deadly weapon, but would be such, or not, according to its size and the manner of using it; and these facts should be determined by a jury."

So, a pistol used as a bludgeon is not a deadly weapon per se. Smallwood v. Com. (1896) 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1134, 33 S. W. 822; People v. Davila (1915) 23 P. R. R. 313; Shadle v. State (1870) 34 Tex. 572 (obiter); Skidmore v. State (1875) 43 Tex. 93; Key v. State (1882) 12 Tex. App. 506; Pierce v. State (1886) 21 Tex. App. 540, 1 S. W. 463 (obiter); Ballard v. State (1890) — Tex. App. —, 13 S. W. 674;

Jenkins v. State (1891) 30 Tex. App. 379, 17 S. W. 938; Stephenson v. State (1894) 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 162, 21 S. W. 784; Branch v. State (1895) 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 304, 33 S. W. 356 (conviction sustained on another ground); McLendon v. State (1902) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 66 S. W. 553, 13 Am. Crim. Rep. 152; Hardin v. State (1905) 47 Tex. App. 493, 84 S. W. 591; Peacock v. State (1908) 52 Tex. Crim. Rep. 432, 107 S. W. 366; HILLIARD v. STATE (reported herewith) ante, 1316.

Where a prisoner was pronounced guilty of assault and battery with aggravated circumstances, under a complaint that merely charged an assault and battery with the butt end of a revolver, and the only provision of law which could enlarge the crime from a simple assault and battery was that describing a battery as committed with a deadly weapon, under circumstances not amounting to an intent to kill or maim, the court said: "The fiscal concedes that no assault and battery with aggravated circumstances was shown, inasmuch as a battery with the butt end of a revolver is not in itself an assault with a dangerous weapon, and the reported jurisprudence supports him. . . . A pistol used like a piece of iron is not necessarily a deadly weapon, unless from its size it becomes so, and in this case there is nothing to show that the weapon was a deadly one from its size, or that it was used in the manner of a deadly weapon, in other words, with deadly violence." People v. Davila (1915) 23 P. R. R. 313.

An information charging that the accused did make an aggravated assault on another with a pistol does not charge an aggravated assault, as a pistol is not necessarily a deadly weapon. Key v. State (1882) 12 Tex. App. 506.

But an allegation in an indictment that a pistol used as a bludgeon was a deadly weapon is a sufficient allegation that the weapon was a deadly weapon. Allen v. People (1876) 82 Ill. 610.

In State v. Franklin (1871) 86 Tex. 155, where it was held that an indictment for aggravated assault was sufficient which charged that the accused with certain pistols,—"said pistols being then and there deadly weapons,"—did beat, bruise, and wound the assaulted party, inflicting upon him divers serious bodily injuries, the court does not refer to the fact that the allegation of serious bodily injuries was sufficient, without the allegation as to the character of the weapon.

It may be noted that where the statute provided that "an assault with intent to murder, by using any weapon likely to produce death, shall be punished," etc., and the allegation in the indictment was that the defendant with a certain pistol, "said pistol being a weapon likely to produce death," did, etc., the person assaulted, etc., beat, wound, and illtreat, with the intent, etc., the court, in affirming a judgment of conviction, said: "The evidence had upon the trial does not appear in the record. In our judgment, the indictment was sufficient in law to authorize the court to render judgment thereon. The legal presumption, after verdict, is that the jury were satisfied from the evidence that the pistol was of sufficient size to have produced death by beating and wounding another with it, as is alleged in the indictment." Prior v. State (1870) 41 Ga. 155.

In State v. Napper (1870) 6 Nev. 113, the court said, obiter: "A pistol may be a deadly weapon under some circumstances, without being loaded with gunpowder and ball."

Evidence is required to show that a pistol used as a bludgeon is a deadly weapon. People v. Davila (1915) 23 P. R. R. 313; Jenkins v. State (1891) 30 Tex. App. 379, 17 S. W. 938; Stephenson v. State (1894) 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 162, 25 S. W. 784; Branch v. State (1895) 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 304, 33 S. W. 356; Peacock v. State (1908) 52 Tex. Crim. Rep. 432, 107 S. W. 346.

Thus, an aggravated assault as made with a deadly weapon is not shown where the weapon was a pistol used as a bludgeon, and its size and weight were not shown. Branch v. State (1895) 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 304, 33 S. W. 356, where the conviction was sustained on another ground.

An information charging an aggravated assault committed with "a pistol, the same being then and there a deadly weapon," by striking the assaulted with said pistol, requires proof that the pistol was a deadly weapon. Jenkins v. State (1891) 30 Tex. App. 379, 17 S. W. 938, where the court said: "The evidence does not sustain the allegation. It shows that the pistol was a large one—a five-shooter—which staggered and dazed the assaulted party when struck with it, causing the blood to flow, but it is not shown that it was capable of producing death or serious bodily injury."

It has been held in Texas that where there is an assault with a pistol used as a bludgeon, and the pistol is discharged at the time, that there is no assault with a deadly weapon unless the pistol used as a bludgeon is a deadly weapon. Pierce v. State (1886) 21 Tex. App. 547, 1 S. W. 463 (obiter); Stephenson v. State (1894) 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 162, 25 S. W. 784; Peacock v. State (1908) 52 Tex. Crim. Rep. 432, 107 S. W. 346.

Thus, in Pierce v. State (Tex.) supra, the court said obiter, in reviewing a conviction for assault with intent to murder: "There is evidence tending to show that defendant was striking, or attempting to strike, the injured party with a pistol, when the pistol was accidentally discharged, whereby the injury complained of was inflicted. If the pistol was used by the defendant to strike with only, the assault would not be aggravated, unless the evidence showed that when used in that manner it was a deadly weapon; or that, by means of such, serious bodily injury had been inflicted; or that the assault was committed with premeditated design, and by the use of means calculated to inflict great bodily injury. Penal Code, art. 496. There is no proof establishing either of these conditions. There is no proof that the pistol was a deadly weapon when used to strike with, and in the absence of such proof it would be presumed that it was not that character of weapon when so used. When a gun or pistol is used to strike with, it is not necessarily a deadly weapon, but would be such, or not, according to its size, or the manner of using it, and its character is usually to be determined by the jury. Hunt v. State (1879) 6 Tex. App. 663; Wilson v. State (1888) 15 Tex. App. 150. If, therefore, the pistol, when used to strike with, was not a deadly weapon, and while being so used was accidentally discharged, whereby serious bodily injury was inflicted, and if the assault was not committed with premeditated design and by the use of means calculated to inflict serious bodily injury, and if no serious bodily injury was inflicted by striking with the pistol, then such assault would be of no higher grade than a simple assault."

So, in Stephenson v. State (1894) 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 162, 25 S. W. 784, the court said, in reversing a conviction for aggravated assault: "The record shows that appellant struck Phillips on the side of the head with the pistol; that the pistol fired accidentally at the time of the blow, cutting out a piece of Phillips's ear, and slightly powder burning his face. The record fails to show the size or weight of the pistol, or that any injury was inflicted on Phillips from its use as a bludgeon, except the accidental result above stated."

Where the accused struck the assaulted on the head with a pistol, which was discharged as a result of the blow, the court said: "There being no evidence in the record describing the pistol by weight or otherwise, and nothing to indicate whether, when used as a bludgeon, it would be a deadly weapon or one calculated to inflict great bodily injury, it became the imperative duty of the court to submit the issue of simple assault. If the pistol, when used as a weapon with which to strike, was not a deadly weapon, or not one calculated when so used to inflict great bodily injury, certainly, in the absence of proof that serious bodily injury was in fact inflicted, the appellant would be guilty of no greater offense than that of simple assault." Peacock v. State (Tex.) supra.

The question as to whether a pistol used as a bludgeon was or was not a deadly weapon is in general for the jury. Riggs v. Com. (1895) 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1015, 33 S. W. 413; Smallwood v. Com. (1896) 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1134, 33 S. W. 822; Shadle v. State (1870) 34 Tex. 572 (obiter); Skidmore v. State (1875) 43 Tex. 93; Hardin v. State (1905) 47 Tex. Crim. Rep. 493, 84 S. W. 591.

Compare McLendon v. State (1902) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 66 S. W. 553, 13 Am. Crim. Rep. 152, infra; also the reported case (HILLIARD v. STATE, ante, 1316).

Where the injury was a gash in the head an inch long, made by one blow by a pistol, the jury asked the court: "Is a pistol necessarily a deadly weapon, the size not known, and not known whether empty or loaded?" It was held to be error for the court to reply: "A pistol is a deadly weapon," as the question was one for the jury. Skidmore v. State (1875) 43 Tex. 93.

In Riggs v. Com. (1895) 17 Ky. L. Rep. 1015, 33 S. W. 413, it was held, in affirming a judgment of conviction for wilfully and maliciously cutting, striking, beating, bruising, and wounding the assaulted with a pistol, a deadly weapon, with intention to kill, where the assaulted was beaten into insensibility, that the jury had the right to say that the weapon was a deadly weapon in the manner in which it was used.

There may well be doubt as to the theory of McLendon v. State (1902) — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 66 S. W. 553, 13 Am. Crim. Rep. 152, now followed in the reported case, that a pistol used as a bludgeon is not a deadly weapon, when the assaulter does not strike as hard and as often as he can; but from the quotation from the opinion in People v. Davila (1915) 23 P. R. R. 313, supra, it may be seen that the court there seems to think that a deadly weapon is one used "with deadly violence."

In reversing a conviction for aggravated assault, the court said: "The proof here showed that appellant only used the pistol, which was a 45-caliber six-shooter, weighing 2½ or 2¾ pounds, to strike with, after he was pressed back on the counter. The pistol used to strike with was not necessarily a deadly weapon, but will be such, or not, according to the size and manner of using it. . . . Here appellant, according to the testimony, after he was pressed back by prosecutor onto the counter, struck three licks with the pistol, and as soon as prosecutor turned him loose he desisted. He had full opportunity to continue the assault, or to have shot the prosecutor. Evidently, he did not use the pistol as a deadly weapon." McLendon v. State (Tex.) supra. B. B. B.

WILLIAM T. KEYWORTH, Appt.,

v.

ATLANTIC MILLS.

Rhode Island Supreme Court — November 14, 1919.

(— R. I. —, 108 Atl. 81.)

Workmen's compensation — loss of eye — 90 per cent destruction of sight.

Destruction of 90 per cent of the sight of an eye does not effect a total loss within the meaning of that term in a workmen's compensation act awarding compensation for total loss of an eye in addition to the award for disability.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1324.]

APPEAL by petitioner from a decree of the Superior Court for Providence and Bristol Counties (Doran, J.) denying him additional compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act for the loss of an eye. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Waterman & Greenlaw, for appellant:

Petitioner is entitled to specific compensation for the entire and irrecoverable loss of sight of an eye under the provisions of ¶ (b), § 12, of article 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Weber v. American Silk Spinning Co. 38 R. I. 309, 95 Atl. 603, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 153; Re J. & P. Coats (R. I.) 41 R. I. 289, 103 Atl. 833; Industrial Commission v. Johnson, — Colo. —, 172 Pac. 422, 16 N. C. C. A. 350; Beauregard v. E. N. Tichener & Co. Illinois Industrial Bd. July 1, 1915, No. 69, p. 8; Joliet Motor Co. v. Industrial Bd. 280 Ill. 148, 117 N. E. 423, 15 N. C. C. A. 75; Kriegbaum v. Buffalo Wire Works Co. 182 App. Div. 448, 169 N. Y. Supp. 307; Blaes v. E. W. Bliss Co. 177 App. Div. 370, 163 N. Y. Supp. 722; Smith v. F. & B. Constr. Co. 185 App. Div. 51, 172 N. Y. Supp. 581; International Travelers' Asso. v. Rogers. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 163 S. W. 421; Murray v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 243 Fed. 285; Routt v. Brotherhood of R. Trainmen, 101 Neb. 763, 165 N. W. 141; Shaanon v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 77 Wis. 618, 9 L.R.A. 685, 20 Am. St. Rep. 151, 46 N. W. 799; Moore v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 75 Or. 47, L.R.A.1915D, 264, 146 Pac. 151, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 1005.

Mr. Charles E. Tilley also for appellant.

Messrs. Gardner, Pirce, & Thornley, Benjamin M. McLyman, and Charles R. Haslam, for appellee:

As a matter of law the loss of vision sustained by the petitioner in his right eye as a result of the accident cannot be considered as "the entire and irrecoverable loss of the sight of either eye" within the meaning of § 12, ¶ (b), of article 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Weber v. American Silk Spinning Co. 38 R. I. 309, 95 Atl. 603, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 153; Re J. & P. Coats (R. I.) 41 R. I. 289, 103 Atl. 833; Boscarino v. Carfagno & Dragonette, 220 N. Y. 323, 115 N. E. 710, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 530; Marhoffer v. Marhoffer, 220 N. Y. 543, 116 N. E. 379; Frings v. Pierce Arrow Motor Car Co. 182 App. Div. 445, 169 N. Y. Supp. 309; Vinginerra v. Commercial Casualty Ins. Co. 156 N. Y. Supp. 573.

Vincent, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On October 5, 1918, the petitioner filed his petition in the superior court, setting forth that on July 23, 1917, being at the time in the employ of the respondent as a painter, he fell out of a second-story window, whereby he sustained two broken ribs, the loss of sight of his right eye, and various bruises, and became totally incapacitated for an undetermined period; that compensation is being made for total incapacity, but that no compensation has been made for the loss of his eye; and that he is entitled to the additional or special compensation provided in § 12, ¶ (b), of article 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act (Pub. Laws 1911-12, chap. 831).

After a hearing, the superior court ordered and decreed that "the petitioner is entitled to compensation for total incapacity at the rate of $10 per week, beginning on the 23d day of July, A. D. 1917, and continuing during the period of total incapacity, but not exceeding a period of five hundred weeks from the date of said injury," and that "petitioner is entitled to no additional compensation for the entire and irrecoverable loss of sight of an eye under the provisions of ¶ (b) of § 12 of article 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act." From this decree of the superior court the petitioner has taken an appeal, which is now before us.

The only question raised by the appeal is whether or not the petitioner has brought himself within the provisions of ¶ (b) before referred to. It appears from the transcript of the testimony produced at the hearing before the superior court that the petitioner has not sustained a total loss of the sight of his right eye, but that, on the contrary, he still retains about 10 per cent of the normal vision, which is useful to a limited extent for certain purposes, and that he also retains a stereoscopic vision of some value, although it would not afford him any assistance in a vocational pursuit.

Upon this state of the testimony the petitioner argues that, having lost so much of the vision of the right eye that it would no longer serve him in any occupation in which he might engage in earning his livelihood, this court should give to the words of the statute, "the entire and irrecoverable loss of sight of either eye," an interpretation broad enough to cover his case; in other words, that a man with the sight of his eye reduced to 10 per cent of the normal vision should be deemed to have suffered the "entire and irrecoverable loss of sight" therein.

With this contention of the petitioner we cannot agree. We think the words of the statute must be taken in their ordinary sense, and that their meaning is clear. To say that this statute was designed to go any further than to provide for additional com-

Workmen's compensation——loss of eye—
90 per cent destruction of sight.

compensation for injuries which resulted in total and complete loss of sight would amount to a distortion of its language. The view which we now take is in accord with the opinion of this court in Weber v. American Silk Spinning Co. 38 R. I. 309, 95 Atl. 603, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 153. In that case the petitioner's thumb was injured in a manner which made it necessary to remove therefrom a small piece of bone and to sever pieces of tendons and flesh, rendering the thumb permanently stiff. The superior court found that the injury to the petitioner's thumb did not bring him within the terms of the Workmen's Compensation Act providing for additional compensation "for the loss by severance" of a thumb, and such finding was held to be without error by this court.

In Re J. & P. Coats (R. I.) 41 R. I. 289, 103 Atl. 833, this court held that, where the employee at the time of the accident was blind in one eye and sustained a loss of sight in the other, and thereby became totally blind, he was entitled to compensation based upon total disability, but not to the additional compensation provided for by § 12 of the Workmen's Compensation Act for the entire and irrecoverable loss of the sight of both eyes, and in its opinion said: "The purpose of § 12 is plainly to provide compensation for specified injuries in addition to the compensation otherwise provided for in the act. There is and can be no question that the specified injury in this case is 'the entire and irrecoverable loss of' the sight of one eye, and not of both, and accordingly the employee is entitled to compensation therefor for fifty weeks, and not for one hundred weeks."

In the petitioner's brief several cases are cited construing the Workmen's Compensation Acts in other states, but as such decisions are based upon language differing from that of our act, they are not particularly helpful, and do not seem to us to demand any special discussion.

The petitioner's appeal is denied and dismissed, the decree of the Superior Court is affirmed, and the cause is remanded to said court for further proceedings.

ANNOTATION.

Workmen's compensation: compensation for loss or impairment of eyesight within Workmen's Compensation Acts.

- I. Generally, 1324.
- II. Where vision remains only to discern objects, or eye is removed, 1324.
- III. Where injured eye was previously defective, 1324.
- IV. Where sight of one eye had previously been lost, 1326.

I. Generally.

This annotation deals primarily with the question of what amounts to a loss of eyesight within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Acts. It assumes that the injury was accidental, and that it arose out of and in the course of the employment, and excludes cases dealing merely with the computation of the amount of compensation.

The determination of the question

- V. Where power to focus or use eyes together is lost, 1329.
- VI. Where condition may be improved by artificial means, 1330.
- VII. Where operation might improve sight, 1330.
- VIII. Effect of ability or inability to follow trade or obtain work, 1331.

here considered is largely one of fact, and it is difficult to lay down any general rules. The provisions of the several Workmen's Compensation Acts with respect to the award of compensation for loss of sight are not entirely uniform. In applying these as well as other provisions of the Compensation Acts, a liberal construction is, in view of the purpose of the acts, generally given, but where the terms are clear and unambiguous, the courts will not, of course, change their plain meaning.

Thus, it will be observed that in the reported case (KEYWORTH v. ATLANTIC MILLS, ante, 1322) it was held that a destruction of 90 per cent of the sight of an eye did not amount to "the entire and irrecoverable loss of sight of either eye" within the meaning of the Rhode Island Compensation Act providing for additional compensation, the court stating that the words must be taken in their ordinary sense, and that their meaning was clear.

In Hirschhorn v. Fiege Desk Co. (1915) 184 Mich. 239, 150 N. W. 851, where, as a result of an injury to the employee's eye, its vision was permanently reduced more than one third, the Industrial Accident Board was held to have no power, under § 10, to award about one third of the compensation which the act provided for the full loss of the eye, where the section referred to merely provided that while the incapacity to work resulting from an injury was partial, the employee should be paid one half his weekly wage, and contained a schedule of specific injuries, including the loss of an eye, but not the partial loss.

In James v. Mordey, C. & Co. (1913) 109 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 377, 6 B. W. C. C. 680, it was held that the county court judge was justified in finding that a workman who had suffered an injury to his eye was totally incapacitated, where the medical referee found that the injured eye had only about 1/30 of normal vision, and the right eye was not very good, although the medical referee was inclined to believe that he had better vision than he was willing to own.

II. Where vision remains only to discern objects or eye is removed.

Where the employee, by reason of an injury, was left with only sufficient vision to see objects, without being able to identify them, findings that he was blind, and that there was a total loss of sight, have been held proper.

Thus, in Industrial Commission v. Johnson (1918) — Colo. —, 172 Pac. 422, 16 N. C. C. A. 350, it was held that an employee was "blind" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act where, after an accident, he had only such vision as enabled him to recognize a form before him, without being able to distinguish its outlines. The court stated that the act was to be liberally construed, and that to hold otherwise under the circumstances would be to give it a strict construction.

And in E. H. Titchener & Co. v. Industrial Bd. (1916) 202 Ill. App. 296, the evidence was held sufficient to bring the case within the provision of the Workmen's Compensation Act giving compensation for the total loss of sight of an eye, where there was testimony that the workman was injured in one of his eyes, and was left permanently so as to be able to distinguish only light, and objects moving before the eye.

In Nelson v. Kentucky River Stone & Sand Co. (1918) 182 Ky. 317, 206 S. W. 473, rehearing denied in (1919) 183 Ky. 583, 209 S. W. 506, where an injury necessitated the removal of the eye, it was held that compensation should not be awarded under the schedule of the act making compensation solely for the loss of the "sight" of an eye, but that it should be allowed under the provision awarding compensation "in all other cases of permanent partial disability."

See also Purchase v. Grand Rapids Refrigerator Co. (Mich.) infra, III.

III. Where injured eye was previously defective.

It has been held that an employee is entitled to compensation for the loss of an eye by an injury which resulted in the removal of the eye, although by reason of a prior accident he could only distinguish light, and see approaching objects. Purchase v. Grand Rapids Refrigerator Co. (1916) 184 Mich. 103, 160 N. W. 391. The court said: "The legislature has not attempted a definition, or made a declaration, applicable to the case at bar, except in terms of the loss of an eye. It has not specified a normal eye, although it may be concluded that the law refers to an eye which performs in some degree the functions of a normal eye. A mere sightless organ might, perhaps, be considered no eye at all. Claimant has lost an eye, although an infirm one. It was not wholly useless as an eye. On the contrary, the testimony is that he could with it distinguish light and see approaching objects."

And although an employee was nearsighted, having less than 50 per cent vision, she was held entitled to an award for the permanent loss of an eye where, by reason of an accident, she lost the use of the eye. Hobertis v. Columbia Shirt Co. (1919) 186 App. Div. 397, 173 N. Y. Supp. 606. The court said: "The statute does not provide that the loss of the use of an eye shall be compensated by an award based upon the amount of vision which existed previous to the accident, whether it be 50 per cent or 80 per cent of vision lost. It awards specific compensation for the loss of an eye. It is a matter of common knowledge that very few persons have complete and perfect vision. The claimant was working with defective vision. So far as appears, her work was entirely satisfactory to her employer, at least so far as the wages she received."

And in Pawling & H. Co. v. Mildemberger (1919) — Wis. —, 174 N. W. 455, an award of compensation for a permanent partial disability equivalent to total blindness of an eye was held sustained by the evidence, where the workman testified that before the injury his eye was all right and that he could read with it, although there was testimony by two doctors that in their opinion the sight of the eye prior to the accident was about 27 per cent normal.

But in Spring Valley Coal Co. v. Industrial Commission (1919) 289 Ill. 315, 124 N. E. 545, the evidence was held not to support the finding that the total loss of sight of the eye was due to the accident where, although the workman testified that he had never had any trouble with his eye before the injury, there was uncontradicted testimony of oculists that he had a disease of the eye from which he was certain to go blind, and that there was only a partial loss of vision due to the accident.

IV. Where sight of one eye had previously been lost.

There is some apparent disagreement as to whether an employee who had suffered an injury to one of his eyes should be allowed compensation for total incapacity, where he subsequently sustained an injury to his other eye. This apparent disagreement may at least be partially accounted for by the difference in the phraseology of the different acts.

It has been held that a one-eyed man who met with an accident whereby he lost the sight of the remaining eye was entitled to compensation for the latter injury as for total incapacity, notwithstanding that part of his total incapacity was made up of the result of a previous accident. Branconnier's Case (1916) 223 Mass. 273, 111 N. E. 792. The court said: "The employee, when he entered the service of the subscriber, had that degree of capacity which enabled him to do the work for which he was hired. That was his capacity. It was an impaired capacity as compared with the normal capacity of a healthy man in the possession of all his faculties. But, nevertheless, it was the employee's capacity. It enabled him to earn the wages which he received. He became an 'employee' under the act and thereby entitled to all the benefits conferred upon those coming within that description. The act affords a fixed compensation for a limited time 'while the incapacity for work resulting from the injury is total.' Stat. 1911, chap. 751, pt. 2, § 9. It establishes no other standard. It fixes no method for dividing the effect of the injury and attributing a part of it to the employment and another part to some pre-existing condition, and it gives no indication that the legislature intended any such division. The total capacity of this employee was not so great as it would have been if he had two sound eyes. His total capacity was thus only a part of that of the normal man. But that capacity, which was all he had, has been transformed into a total incapacity by reason of the injury. That result has come to him entirely through the injury."

And following Branconnier's Case (Mass.) supra, it was held in Re J. & P. Coats (R. I.) (1918) 41 R. I. 289, 103 Atl. 833, that although the employee had previously lost the sight of one eye, he was entitled to compensation for total incapacity to work where he sustained an injury by reason of which he lost the sight of the other eye. It was held that from such circumstances a conclusive presumption of total disability arose under the section of the Workmen's Compensation Act providing that it should be conclusively presumed that the injury resulted in permanent total disability in case of the total and irrevocable loss of sight in both eyes.

But it was held that the employee was not entitled to the additional compensation provided for under the act for "the entire and irrevocable loss of the sight of both eyes."

Citing Branconnier's Case (Mass.) supra, in Jennings v. Mason City Sewer Pipe Co. (1919) — Iowa, —, 174 N. W. 785, where an employee lost his only eye through an injury, it was held that he had suffered a "disability total in character and permanent in quality" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, and not a "disability partial in character and permanent in quality."

And in Kriegbaum v. Buffalo Wire Works Co. (1918) 182 App. Div. 448, 169 N. Y. Supp. 307, affirmed in (1918) 224 N. Y. 621, 121 N. E. 875, an employee who had previously lost the sight of one eye was held entitled to an award for permanent total disability, where he sustained an injury to his other eye, and lost the sight of it, prior to the amendment of § 15, subd. 6, by chap. 615, Laws of 1915. It does not appear exactly what this amendment was.

And where a laborer who had but one eye, by reason of an accident, was left so that he could not rotate his eye to the left, and was cross-eyed, and could only see 20 feet where a normal person could see 100, and this condition was permanent and totally incapacitated him from doing the work he was engaged in, and made it doubtful whether he could do any remunerative work, it was held that he had sustained a permanent total disability within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act. Brooks v. Peerless Oil Co. (1920) — La. —, 83 So. 663. The court said: "The rationale of these Employers' Liability Acts is that the employment in which the workman has been disabled owes him a living, and it stands to reason that the workman is as totally disabled from work by the loss of one eye as by the loss of two, if he had but one, and by the impairment of the sight as much as by the loss of it, if the impairment be to such a degree as to disable entirely from work."

But the Michigan court has held that the loss of his remaining eye by one who had lost the other eye several years before in another employment, although it totally incapacitated him, entitled him to compensation for a partial incapacity only, where the act provided that compensation was payable for incapacity "resulting from the injury," that total incapacity was compensable at a different rate than partial, that the loss of one eye was compensable at a certain rate, and that the loss of both eyes constituted the total and permanent incapacity. Weaver v. Maxwell Motor Co. (1915) 186 Mich. 588, L.R.A.1916B, 1276, 152 N. W. 993, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 238. The court said: "In the instant case the loss of the first eye was a partial disability for which, if our Workmen's Compensation Law had been in existence, the then employer would have been liable, and for which disability the present employer was in no degree the cause. The loss of the second eye, standing by itself, was also a partial disability, and of itself did not occasion the total disability. It required that, in addition to the results of the disability occasioned by the accident of seven years ago, there should be added the results of the partial disability of the recent accident to produce the total disability. The absence of either accident would have left the claimant partially incapacitated. We think it clear the total incapacity cannot be entirely attributed to the last accident. It follows that the compensation should be based upon partial incapacity; and it is so ordered."

And in State ex rel. Melrose Granite Co. v. District Ct. (1919) — Minn. —, 173 N. W. 857, where one eye had, by reason of an injury, lost one half of its vision, and the employee subsequently sustained an injury to both eyes, and lost all practical vision, and could not follow any occupation, it was held that he was entitled to compensation for permanent partial disability, the Minnesota Compensation Act providing that, "if an employee receive an injury which, of itself, would only cause permanent partial disability, but which, combined with a previous disability, does in fact cause permanent total disability, the employer shall only be liable for the permanent partial disability caused by the subsequent injury."

The court further held that a clause of the act providing that the total and permanent loss of the sight of both eyes should constitute permanent total disability did not apply, since the employee had not suffered a total loss of the sight of both eyes as a result of the injury sustained.

And in State ex rel. Garwin v. District Ct. (1915) 129 Minn. 156, 151 N. W. 910, 8 N. C. C. A. 1052, it was held that an employee who suffered an injury resulting in the loss of the sight of an eye was entitled to compensation as for partial incapacity only, although he had previously lost the other eye, with the result that the second injury left him totally incapacitated. The court said: "No doubt, in the enactment of the statute, and in providing for relief in cases of this kind, the legislature had in mind the fact that persons suffering from permanent partial disability would seek such employment as their remaining ability would fit them to discharge, and express provision was made in the statute to protect the employer from liability for injuries received by an employee before entering his service, and to this end § 15 of the act was incorporated therein. That section provides: If an employee receives an injury which, of itself, would only cause permanent partial disability, but which, combined with a previous disability, does in fact cause permanent total disability, the employer shall only be liable for the permanent partial disability caused by the subsequent injury.

"The language of the statute is clear and unambiguous, and clearly was intended to limit the liability of the employer to compensation commensurate with the injury suffered by the employee while in his service, and to relieve him from the consequences of injuries previously sustained, even though both resulted in permanent total disability. From the viewpoint of the legislature, and the fact that the liability created is founded upon no wrong of the employer, it would seem fairly clear that this limitation upon the liability was deliberately made, and founded in justice and fairness. The employer accepts in his service a disabled employee, knowing of the disability and with the knowledge that under the Compensation Statute he is liable for accidental injuries to such employee while engaged in his service, but to couple the prior disability with one suffered while in his service and make the employer liable for both would seem a hardship the legislature intended to avoid. At least we think the language of the statute clearly manifests that intention. The statute is too plain to admit of any other view, and there is no room for judicial construction. While it is true that the combined injuries result in total disability, the statute declares that as to the last employer it shall be treated as a partial disability. That the legislature had the right to so provide cannot well be questioned. And though the statute is remedial in the broadest sense of the term, to be liberally construed, the court is without power or authority to change the plain language thereof by construing it to mean the reverse of what is clearly stated therein."

In Lee v. Baird & Co. [1908] S. C. 905, 45 Scot. L. R. 717, it was held that a miner whose left eye was affected by disease so as to be useless for underground work might be held to be suffering from incapacity resulting from an accident, where his right eye was injured to such an extent that it was of little use for underground work, although the condition of the left eye was neither caused nor aggravated by the accident.

V. Where power to focus or use eyes together is lost.

It has been held that there was a "loss of the sight of an eye" where an injury made it impossible to bring the vision of the injured eye to harmonize with the other, the vision of which was normal, although with the use of correcting glasses he could see clearly with the injured eye at a fixed distance, and although his earning power had not been reduced. Juergens Bros. Co. v. Industrial Commission (1919) 290 Ill. 420, 125 N. E. 337. The court said: "The question before this court is whether or not this man has for all practical uses and purposes lost his eye. The application of laws of this character should not be made to depend upon finespun theories based upon scientific technicalities, but such laws should be given a practical construction and application. For all practical purposes, when a person has lost the sight of an eye, he has lost the eye, and to say that the statute providing compensation for the loss of the sight of an eye does not apply here because of the remote possibility of Kaage losing his good eye, whereby he can through artificial means gain a certain amount of use of the injured member, is to place a construction on a remedial act which deprives it of all practical effect." It rejected the reasoning in Frings v. Pierce Arrow Motor Car Co. (N. Y.) infra, and with respect to the rule applicable said: "We believe the true rule should be that where, as here, the employee has lost all practical use of an eye, which practical use cannot be restored so long as he has his other eye, such amounts, in effect, to the loss of the eye, and that compensation for such loss should be paid to such employee under ¶ 'e' of § 8 of the Compensation Act."

And in Stefan v. Red Star Mill & Elevator Co. (1920) 106 Kan. 369, 187 8 A.L.R.—84.

Pac. 861, it was held that a workman suffered a permanent loss of the use of an eye, within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, where the injury was such as to distort and constrain the angle of vision, and the use of both eyes caused double vision, and required that the injured eye be kept covered, and there was no remedy for the condition.

And in Smith v. F. & B. Constr. Co. (1918) 185 App. Div. 51, 172 N. Y. Supp. 581, it was held that a workman was entitled to compensation for the permanent loss of the use of the right eye, considered as the equivalent of the loss of such eye where, after the injury, with the use of powerful glasses, he had a vision of about one third with the right eye, but, in order to obtain it, he had to close the other eye.

The court here distinguished Frings v. Pierce Arrow Motor Car Co. (N. Y.) infra, on the ground that there, with the use of glasses, the workman had full vision of the eye.

In Frings v. Pierce Arrow Motor Car Co. (1918) 182 App. Div. 445, 169 N. Y. Supp. 309, before referred to, it was held that there was not a permanent loss of use of an eye within the Workmen's Compensation Act where the injured eye, through the use of an artificial lens, could fulfil the natural function of the eye when the uninjured eye was closed, and the employee was able to continue his work, but, owing to a lack of co-ordination of images, the eye could not be used in conjunction with the other. It was stated that the theory of the New York law is not indemnity for loss of a member, or physical impairment, but compensation for disability to work, made on the basis of average weekly wages.

In O'Brien's Case (1917) 228 Mass. 211, 17 N. E. 1, a decision that the employee had sustained a "reduction to one tenth of normal vision in either eye with glasses," within the Workmen's Compensation Act, was held proper, where the evidence showed that the employee's left eye was normal; that the vision of the injured eye was about one sixtieth; that by covering the good eye the vision of the injured one, with a glass, was nearly normal; but that this could not be utilized when he used the normal eye and the corrected one together, as there was a lack of co-ordination; and that no glass could be made that would fuse the vision of the eyes.

In Oliver v. Christopher (1916) 98 Kan. 660, 159 Pac. 397, a finding of a partial disability was held warranted where a workman testified that, since the injury to his eye, he could not do the work that he did before, that he "could not get the focus."

See also Purcell v. International Motor Co. (N. J.) infra, VIII.

VI. Where condition may be improved by artificial means.

In Valentine v. Sherwood Metal Working Co. (1919) 189 App. Div. 410, 178 N. Y. Supp. 494, it was held that a finding that the injury "resulted in the loss of the left eye" was not justified where the entire testimony was to the effect that the eye, with the aid of a proper glass, was nearly normal for many purposes. The court stated that the case was not distinguishable from Frings v. Pierce Arrow Motor Car Co. (1918) 182 App. Div. 445, 169 N. Y. Supp. 309.

And under the Michigan act it has been held that an employee could not be compensated as for a total loss of an eye in the course of his employment, if the sight was diminished only 50 per cent if glasses were used, although without glasses the diminution was 90 per cent.

Cline v. Studebaker Corp. (1915) 189 Mich. 514, L.R.A.1916C, 1139, 155 N. W. 519.

And in Boscarino v. Carfagno & Dragonette (1917) 220 N. Y. 323, 115 N. E. 710, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 530, reversing (1916) 175 App. Div. 286, 161 N. Y. Supp. 562, it was held that a workman had not lost the use of his right eye within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, where it appeared that by reason of an injury he had lost 80 per cent of the vision of the eye, but that, aside from this capacity, the eye was in good condition, and if an artificial pupil were made, the vision would be much improved, and that he could pursue callings similar to that in which he was engaged when injured.

And in Cortina v. Lathrop & S. Co. (1920) — App. Div. —, 180 N. Y. Supp. 855, it was held that an award for total loss should be set aside on account of the unsatisfactory state of the record, where no evidence was produced, and there was no report, or finding, as to whether the vision of the eye could be corrected advantageously by the use of glasses, and one report of specialists gave the loss of vision at 50 per cent, and another at 90 per cent.

In connection with this subdivision, see also Frings v. Pierce Arrow Motor Car Co. (N. Y.); Smith v. F. & B. Constr. Co. (N. Y.); Juergens Bros. Co. v. Industrial Commission (Ill.) supra, V., and State ex rel. Casualty Co. of America v. District Ct. (Minn.) infra, VIII.

VII. Where operation might improve sight.

In Feldman v. Braunstein (1915) 87 N. J. L. 20, 93 Atl. 679, where the judge found that an injury to an employee's eye was permanent, and resulted in the loss of 90 per cent of vision if an operation was not performed, it was held that he should have dealt with the case as one of permanent disability, and that it was erroneous to determine that the injury was temporary, and make an award on the theory that the injury would be cured by an operation.

But in Joliet Motor Co. v. Industrial Bd. (1917) 230 Ill. 148, 117 N. E. 423, 15 N. C. C. A. 75, an award of compensation for complete loss of sight of an eye was held erroneous where there was evidence that the workman was a machinist who sustained an injury to his eye by a particle of steel; that a cataract slowly developed so that fifteen months later the entire sight of the eye was lost; that an operation for the removal of the cataract was neither serious nor dangerous, and in a large majority of cases resulted in the recovery of normal vision; and the board found that the workman unreasonably refused to have an operation performed.

VIII. Effect of ability or inability to follow trade or obtain work.

In State ex rel. Casualty Co. of America v. District Ct. (1916) 133 Minn. 439, 158 N. W. 700, where the injuries to an employee resulted in the total loss of the sight of the right eye, an impairment of vision to the extent of 95 per cent in the left eye, although by the aid of glasses it could be increased to about one third, and other injuries which affected his head, so that he could not stoop or bend over without pain, and there was evidence tending to show that he would not be able to do any work, or engage in any occupation to earn a livelihood, the finding of the trial court that the employee was permanently totally disabled was held supported by the evidence.

In Purcell v. International Motor Co. (1917) 91 N. J. L. 707, 103 Atl. 860, affirmed in (1917) 91 N. J. L. 710, 104 Atl. 894, a finding that an injury to an employee's eyes amounted to nearly one half of a total disability of both eyes was held warranted where there was evidence that, since the injury, the employee's sight was so bad that he could not follow his trade as a machinist, and he testified that he could not distinguish clearly objects with his right eye, and that the vision of his other eye was double, unless he turned his head to one side, and covered his other eye, and an eye specialist testified that the disability to the right eye was two thirds, and to the left one half.

In Stoughton Wagon Co. v. Myre (1916) 163 Wis. 132, 157 N. W. 522, where a workman sustained an injury resulting in the permanent loss of four fifths of the sight of an eye, although his earning capacity was not affected by the injury, he was held entitled to four fifths of the allowance prescribed by the subdivision of the Workman's Compensation Act for "total blindness of one eye," which provided that "in all other cases in this class" the compensation "shall bear such relation to the amount" stated in the schedule "as the disabilities bear to those produced by the injuries named in the schedule."

In International Harvester Co. v. Industrial Commission (1914) 157 Wis. 167, 147 N. W. 53, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 330, 5 N. C. C. A. 822, it was held that an injury to a drill-press operator, resulting in the partial loss of the sight of an eye, might justify an allowance of compensation for permanent partial disability, although after a period he was able to earn as much as formerly in the employment in which he was before engaged, if it appeared that because of the partial loss of the sight of his eye employers would be less likely to hire him.

The evidence in this case, however, was held not to sustain a finding that such an injury was suffered as would deter employers from hiring a person.

See also Juergens Bros. Co. v. Industrial Commission (Ill.) and Oliver v. Christopher (Kan.) supra; State ex rel. Melrose Granite Co. v. District Ct. (Minn.); Brooks v. Peerless Oil Co. (La.); State ex rel. Garwin v. District Ct. (Minn.); Lee v. Baird & Co. (Scot.) supra, IV., and Boscarino v. Carfagno & Dragonette (N. Y.) supra, VI. J. T. W.

STATE OF NEW MEXICO

v.

STEVE EDINS et al., Appts.

New Mexico Supreme Court—February 2, 1920.

(— N. M. —, 187 Pac. 545.)

Evidence — admission of counsel.

The production in evidence before a jury of an admission outside of Headnote by PARKER, Ch. J.

court, by counsel for defendants, that in his opinion, unless a certain fact could be shown, his clients would be convicted, was inadmissible and highly prejudicial, and requires a reversal.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1334.]

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Chaves County (Bratton, J.) convicting them of voluntary manslaughter. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. E. P. Bujac, J. C. Gilbert, and John Howard, for appellants:

The court erred in overruling the objection of the defendants to the question asked by the district attorney of the witness J. N. Hewitt while testifying as a witness for the defendants.

2 Wharton, Ev. § 622-d, pp. 282, 283; 1 R. C. L. p. 482, ¶ 18; 3 Wigmore, Ev. § 1362; 10 R. C. L. pp. 958, 960; 6 Enc. Ev. 665, 667; 1 Enc. Ev. 469; State v. Moeller, 20 N. D. 114, 126 N. W. 568; Alford v. State, 52 Tex. Crim. Rep. 621, 108 S. W. 364; State v. Sharp, 233 Mo. 269, 135 S. W. 488; State v. Hakon, 21 N. D. 133, 129 N. W. 234; People v. Decker, 143 App. Div. 590, 127 N. Y. Supp. 1059; People v. Kathan, 136 App. Div. 303, 120 N. Y. Supp. 1096; State v. Butler, 151 N. C. 672, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 169, 65 S. E. 993, 19 Ann. Cas. 402; State v. Keefe, 54 Kan. 197, 38 Pac. 302; State v. Marx, 78 Conn. 18, 60 Atl. 690; Nels v. State, 2 Tex. 280; Clayton v. State, 4 Tex. App. 515; State v. Beatty, 45 Kan. 492, 25 Pac. 899; Campbell v. State, 30 Tex. App. 645, 18 S. W. 409; State v. Gonzales, 19 N. M. 467, 144 Pac. 1144; State v. Klasner, 19 N. M. 479, 145 Pac. 680.

It was highly improper in the district attorney to undertake to make out his case by a series of objections which, in themselves, amounted to the same thing as if he had been propounding improper questions, and getting before the jury by way of objection his idea of what the law was, and to impress upon their minds certain facts by way of improper objection.

3 Wigmore, Ev. § 1808; 2 R. C. L. pp. 405, 434, 440, §§ 3, 33, 38; 38 Cyc. 1327, ¶ b; Rogers v. State, 8 Okla. Crim. Rep. 226, 127 Pac. 365; 14 Cyc. 1327, ¶ b.

It is the duty of the court and district attorney to see that the defendants get a fair and impartial trial, and that only proper evidence and statements of law are made by counsel in the presence of the jury during the trial of the cause.

8 R. C. L. p. 67, ¶ 20; 22 R. C. L. pp. 102-105, ¶¶ 11, 12; 2 R. C. L. p. 420, ¶ 18; Jamison v. United States, 7 Ind. Terr. 661, 104 S. W. 872; People v. Becker, 210 N. Y. 274, 104 N. E. 396; Price v. State, 10 Okla. Crim. Rep. 427, 137 Pac. 736; Watson v. State, 7 Okla. Crim. Rep. 590, 124 Pac. 1101; Pickrell v. State, 5 Okla. Crim. Rep. 391, 116 Pac. 957.

The court has no power or authority in any event to inquire into collateral matters during the trial of a case, nor does it have the right, nor is it proper upon the part of the court, to examine a witness and to show plainly what the opinion of the court was.

38 Cyc. 1316, ¶¶ L. M. p. 1322, ¶ 8; Taylor v. State, 2 Ga. App. 723, 59 S. E. 12; Murphy v. State, 13 Ga. App. 431, 79 S. E. 228; State v. Ownby, 146 N. C. 677, 61 S. E. 630; New v. State, 99 Ark. 142, 137 S. W. 564; Adler v. United States, 104 C. C. A. 608, 182 Fed. 464; Joyner v. State, 12 Ga. App. 217, 77 S. E. 9; People v. Koerner, 117 App. Div. 40, 102 N. Y. Supp. 93.

The district attorney may not, in his argument to the jury, refer to matters that are not in evidence in the case that can in any way prejudice the jury against defendants, and it is the duty of the district attorney to see to it that defendants have a fair and impartial trial.

2 R. C. L. pp. 404-442; 38 Cyc. 1477-1479; 3 Wigmore, Ev. § 1808; Jamison v. United States, 7 Ind. Terr. 661, 104 S. W. 872; Toledo, St. L. & W. R. Co. v. Burr, 82 Ohio St. 129, 137 Am. St. Rep. 771, 92 N. E. 27; State v. Montgomery, 56 Wash. 443, 134 Am. St. Rep. 1119, 105 Pac. 1035, 21 Ann. Cas. 331; Watson v. State, 7 Okla. Crim. Rep. 590, 124 Pac. 1101; State v. Barton, 70 Or. 470, 142 Pac. 348; State v. Scott, 37 Nev. 412, 142 Pac. 1053.

Messrs. O. O. Askren, Attorney General, and Nicholas D. Meyer, Assistant Attorney General, for the State:

Objections interposed by the district attorney were not improper.

1 Wigmore, Ev. § 18; 16 C. J. §§ 2198, 2199.

Defendant was not prejudiced by the remarks of counsel.

State v. Blancett, 24 N. M. 433, 174 Pac. 207; 1 Thomp. Trials, § 957.

Parker, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendants were indicted for murder and convicted of voluntary manslaughter. It appears that defendants went to the home of the deceased, and the defendant Edins announced to the deceased that he should consider himself under arrest; this defendant claiming that the deceased had robbed his house of certain articles of merchandise, some of which were found upon the premises of the deceased. The deceased submitted to the arrest, and the defendant Edins told his codefendant, Aubrey Calley, to take charge of the prisoner while he (Edins) searched the premises. Thereupon the deceased refused to allow the search and started toward the door of his tent, when the defendant Calley approached him and forbade his entering into his tent. Thereupon the shooting commenced, and in the controversy the deceased was killed by the defendant Calley. It appears from the testimony that the defendants had no authority to either arrest the deceased or to search his premises; they never having been deputized or authorized by the sheriff to exercise the functions of a peace officer. During the examination of one J. N. Hewitt, sheriff of Eddy county, the following occurred:

Q. Isn't it a fact, in the Gilder Hotel, night before last, Major Bujac came to you with tears in his eyes and told you unless you would swear that you gave this defendant, Steve Edins, a commission, that they were a bunch of blowed-up suckers? (This question was not answered.)

Q. You didn't give him a deputy sheriff's commission at any time?

A. No, sir.

Q. And he was trying to get you to swear something that was not true?

A. Yes, sir.

Upon redirect examination the following occurred:

Q. Did I ask you if the facts were that you had deputized Steve, and you said that you had not? My question was "Mr. Hewitt, did you deputize Steve Edins?" and you said you did not, and I said, "Then you can't swear that?" (An objection to this question was sustained.)

Q. Did I tell you all I wanted was whatever the truth would be in the case, and if he was not deputized, why he was not deputized?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then I did not ask you to swear a lie, did I?

A. You asked me if I could swear that I had deputized Steve Edins.

Q. And you said you could not, and I bid you good night?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was all there was to it?

A. Yes; that is a fact; yes, sir.

Upon recross-examination by the district attorney the following occurred:

Q. He said if you didn't do it they were a bunch of blowed-up suckers?

Proper exceptions to this question were preserved, but the court overruled the objection. Then the examination proceeded:

Q. Did he, Mr. Hewitt?

A. Yes, sir.

Counsel for appellant strenuously urge that this testimony was inadmissible and highly prejudicial to the defendants. In this contention they are evidently correct. The statement attributed to Major Bujac, of counsel for defendants, if true, was made by him without the presence of the defendants, and, so far as the record discloses, without their knowledge or consent. Statements by counsel, without the knowledge or authority of his client, in expressing an opinion as to the prospects of acquittal or a conviction of his client, are no more admissible in a court of justice before a jury than would the same statements be if made by a stranger.

That the evidence was highly prejudicial to the defendants is apparent. The production before the jury of such an admission by counsel absolutely closed the door between him and the jury, so that he must have been unable to argue to them the innocence of the defendants from any standpoint whatever.

Other errors are assigned, but they are of such a character that they will probably not occur at a retrial of the case.

For the reasons stated, the judgment of the trial court should be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to award a new trial; and it is so ordered.

Roberts and Raynolds, JJ., concur.

ANNOTATION.

Admissibility of statements by attorney out of court as to probability of verdict or decision adverse to client.

The reported case (STATE v. EDINS, ante, 1332) appears to be the only decision upon this point, and the principle there declared, that statements out of court by counsel, without the presence and without the knowledge or authority of his client, expressing an opinion as to the probability of the conviction of, or a verdict against, his client, are inadmissible, seems to be in accord with reason and the rules relating to admissions.

There is another case having some bearing upon this point, viz., Hicks v. Naomi Falls Mfg. Co. (1905) 138 N. C. 319, 50 S. E. 703, an action for personal injuries, in which it was held that it could not be shown that one who was the attorney for plaintiff on a former trial, but who was not his attorney on the present trial, had said in open court on the former trial that if the evidence was as stated by defendant's witnesses, the plaintiff had no case, and had suggested that each side select a man to go to the defendant's factory and examine the machine which caused the injuries, and that if it was found to be as claimed by defendant, he would take a nonsuit, and that on the return of the men selected his then attorney took the nonsuit. The court, in this connection, said: "These declarations were not made at a place nor under circumstances where the plaintiff could be expected or permitted to protest or reply, and derive no force, therefore, from the fact that the plaintiff may have been present when the statement was made. If held competent, it must be on the ground that the plaintiff is bound in this instance by the admissions of his attorney. Admissions of fact by an attorney only bind a client when they are distinct and formal and made for the express purpose of dispensing with proof of a fact on the trial, and less formal admissions of counsel at a former trial are not evidence against a client at a subsequent trial. Admissions which occur in mere conversation, though they relate to matters at issue in the case, cannot be received in evidence against a client. . . .

The admissions sought to be introduced in this case, however, can hardly be considered admissions of fact at all, but amount only to the attorney's opinion adverse to his client on facts as reported to him, and are clearly incompetent."

G. V. L.

JOHN KLEINE and Wife, Appts.,
v.
MARY L. KLEINE, Resp't.

Missouri Supreme Court (Div. No. 1) — March 2, 1920.

(— Mo. —, 219 S. W. 610.)

Landlord and tenant — signature in lead pencil — sufficiency.

1. A signature to a lease in lead pencil is sufficient.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1339.]

— sufficiency of description in lease.

2. A description of leased property is sufficient which states that it runs a specified number of feet along a road from its intersection with another, and a specified number of feet along the latter from its intersection with the former.

Evidence — to explain calls in deed.

3. Extrinsic evidence is always admissible to explain the calls of a deed for the purpose of applying them to the subject-matter and thus giving effect to the deed.

[See 8 R. C. L. 1074.]

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a decree of the Circuit Court of the city of St. Louis (Hennings, J.) in their favor in part only, in an action brought to quiet title to certain land. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. John W. Mueller, for appellants:

If the description of real estate contained in an instrument, which instrument seeks to convey an interest in said real estate, is so inaccurate, indefinite, and incomplete as to render the identity of the particular tract of land sought to be conveyed wholly uncertain, the instrument is void as a means of conveying interest in real estate or color of title.

Mudd v. Dillon, 166 Mo. 110, 65 S. W. 973; Martin v. Kitchen, 195 Mo. 477, 93 S. W. 780; McCormick v. Parson, 195 Mo. 91, 92 S. W. 1162; Schroeder v. Turpin, 253 Mo. 258, 161 S. W. 716; Campbell v. Johnson, 44 Mo. 247; Bell v. Dawson, 32 Mo. 79; Shoemaker v. McMonigle, 86 Ind. 421; Hoodless v. Jernigan, 46 Fla. 223, 35 So. 656; Youmans v. Moore, 144 Ga. 375, 87 S. E. 273; Harvey v. Byrnes, 107 Mass. 518; Brandon v. Leddy, 67 Cal. 43, 7 Pac. 33; Radford v. Edwards, 88 N. C. 347; Hanna v. Palmer, 194 Ill. 41, 56 L.R.A. 93, 61 N. E. 1051.

If the description of property sought to be conveyed by a written instrument does not fix the boundaries or shape of the land sought to be conveyed, so that, by relying on the description contained therein, the form and identity of the premises could not be ascertained, the instrument is void and inoperative as a means of conveyance of title.

Shoemaker v. McMonigle, 86 Ind. 421; Harvey v. Byrnes, 107 Mass. 518.

A patent ambiguity in an instrument is an uncertainty that arises at once upon the reading of the instrument and arises from the defective, obscure, senseless, or indefinite language used.

Jones, Ev. § 474; Harney v. Wirtz, 30 N. D. 304, 152 N. W. 803; Martin v. Kitchen, 195 Mo. 477, 93 S. W. 780; Mudd v. Dillon, 166 Mo. 110, 65 S. W. 973; Strong v. Waters, 27 App. Div. 299, 50 N. Y. Supp. 257.

Where a mere perusal of the instrument in question reveals an uncertainty as to the identity of the premises sought to be conveyed, and reveals that the description of the premises conveyed as contained in the instrument is given in a defective, obscure, and senseless manner, or by defective, obscure, or senseless language, a patent ambiguity exists in said instrument, which cannot be corrected, explained, or added to by extrinsic testimony.

Mudd v. Dillon, 166 Mo. 110, 65 S. W. 973; Martin v. Kitchen, 195 Mo. 477, 93 S. W. 780; Carter v. Holman, 60 Mo. 498; Campbell v. Johnson, 44 Mo.

247; Craven v. Butterfield, 80 Ind. 503; Fuller v. Fellows, 30 Ark. 657; Bowers v. Andrews, 52 Miss. 596; Hall v. Cotton, 167 Ky. 464, L.R.A.1916C, 1124, 180 S. W. 779; Mills Power Co. v. Mohawk Hydro Electric Co. 155 App. Div. 869, 140 N. Y. Supp. 655; Gorham v. Settegast, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 254, 98 S. W. 669; Palmer v. Albee, 50 Iowa, 429; Ferguson v. Blackwell, 8 Okla. 489, 58 Pac. 647; Goodsell v. Rutland-Canadian R. Co. 75 Vt. 375, 56 Atl. 7; Harney v. Wirtz, 30 N. D. 304, 152 N. W. 803; Taffender v. Merrill, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 661, 45 S. W. 477; Teague v. Sowder, 121 Tenn. 132, 114 S. W. 484; Noyes v. Stauff, 5 Or. 455; Coker v. Roberts, 71 Tex. 597, 9 S. W. 665; 17 Cyc. 682.

An instrument required under the Statute of Frauds to be in writing cannot rest partly on parol and partly on the writing, but must contain in the writing all the elements necessary to the validity of the instrument.

Norris v. Hunt, 51 Tex. 609; Ringer v. Holtzclaw, 112 Mo. 523, 20 S. W. 800.

Messrs. Igoe & Carroll and F. H. Eschmann, for respondent:

The object of a description in a deed is to define what the parties intended.

Long v. Wagoner, 47 Mo. 180.

Intention of parties, whether expressed or shown by surrounding circumstances, is all controlling.

McClure v. Herring, 70 Mo. 18, 35 Am. Rep. 404; Johnson v. Boulware, 149 Mo. 451, 51 S. W. 109; Devlin, Deeds, §§ 835, 836, 1012; 8 R. C. L. 1037; Evans v. Greene, 21 Mo. 195; Baldwin v. Trimble, 85 Md. 396, 36 L.R.A. 489, 37 Atl. 176; 5 Cyc. 867; Horne v. Smith, 159 U. S. 40, 40 L. ed. 68, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 988; Truett v. Adams, 66 Cal. 218, 5 Pac. 96; Thompson v. Motor Road Co. 82 Cal. 477, 23 Pac. 130.

A deed will not be declared void for uncertainty if it is possible by any reasonable rules of construction to ascertain from description, aided by extrinsic evidence, what property is intended to be conveyed.

Hubbard v. Whitehead, 221 Mo. 672, 121 S. W. 69; Holley v. Currie, 58 W. Va. 70, 112 Am. St. Rep. 944, 51 S. E. 135; Tetherow v. Anderson, 63 Mo. 96; Cravens v. Pettit, 16 Mo. 210; Dunn v. English, 23 N. J. L. 126; Bolinger County v. McDowell, 99 Mo. 632, 13 S. W. 100; Reamer v. Nesmith, 34 Cal. 624, 5 Mor. Min. Rep. 610; Devlin, Deeds, § 1012; 17 Cyc. 662;

Hooten v. Comerford, 152 Mass. 591, 23 Am. St. Rep. 861, 26 N. E. 407; Reed v. Locks & Canals, 8 How. 274, 12 L. ed. 1077.

The Statute of Frauds does not apply where the contract has been fully performed.

Hoyle v. Bush, 14 Mo. App. 408.

The description in a deed is sufficient if the object covered is ascertainable with the aid of extrinsic evidence.

Amonett v. Montague, 63 Mo. 206; Livingston County v. Morris, 71 Mo. 603; Orr v. How, 55 Mo. 328; Brown v. Walker, 11 Mo. App. 235; Cox v. Hart, 145 U. S. 389, 36 L. ed. 746, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 962; Mitchell v. D'Olier, 68 N. J. L. 375, 59 L.R.A. 949, 53 Atl. 467; Blake v. Doherty, 5 Wheat. 359, 5 L. ed. 109; Gates v. Paul, 117 Wis. 170, 94 N. W. 55.

The office or purpose of a description in a deed is to furnish the means of identification.

Pipkin v. Allen, 29 Mo. 229; Holley v. Curry, 58 W. Va. 70, 112 Am. St. Rep. 944, 51 S. E. 135; Mitchell v. D'Olier, 68 N. J. L. 375, 59 L.R.A. 949, 53 Atl. 467; Blake v. Doherty, 5 Wheat. 359, 5 L. ed. 109; Craven v. Butterfield, 80 Ind. 503.

A description in a deed is sufficient if it will enable a person of ordinary prudence, acting in good faith and making inquiries which the description would suggest to him, to identify the land.

Hayes v. Martin, 144 Ala. 532, 40 So. 204; Burton v. Mullenary, 147 Cal. 259, 81 Pac. 544; Ford v. Ford, 24 S. D. 644, 124 N. W. 1108; Bogard v. Barhan, 52 Or. 121, 132 Am. St. Rep. 676, 96 Pac. 678; Harris v. Iglehart, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 6, 113 S. W. 170; Walker v. Lee, 51 Fla. 360, 40 So. 881; Devlin, Deeds, §§ 1012 et seq.; Dorr v. School Dist. 40 Ark. 237.

A parallelogram will be presumed to have been intended when a definite and fixed corner is located.

Smith v. Nelson, 110 Mo. 552, 19 S. W. 734; Deal v. Cooper, 94 Mo. 62, 6 S. W. 707; Devlin, Deeds, pp. 1922-1931; 5 Cyc. § 877.

When a conveyance on its face or aided by judicial knowledge equally describes two or more persons or things, this is a patent ambiguity.

Mudd v. Dillon, 166 Mo. 110, 65 S. W. 973; Chambers v. Ringstaff, 69 Ala. 140.

Parol evidence that is not repugnant to the terms of the writing to which it relates, but is consistent with and explanatory of it, is admissible.

Chouteau v. Goddin, 39 Mo. 229, 90 Am. Dec. 462; 10 R. C. L. p. 1019, § 212; Gould v. Boston Excelsior Co. 91 Me. 214, 64 Am. St. Rep. 221, 39 Atl. 554; Hayes v. Wabash R. R. Co. 163 Mich. 174, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 229, 128 N. W. 217.

Courts will take judicial notice of the streets within a city and the direction in which they run and their relation to each other.

Stealey v. Kansas City, 179 Mo. 400, 78 S. W. 599.

In the interpretation of deeds inter partes, courts are not inclined to insist upon that accuracy of description required in sheriffs' deeds or other transfers of property.

Carter v. Holman, 60 Mo. 498.

Graves, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The petition is in conventional form under the statute. By answer the defendant says that she has a lease for a period of twenty years on a portion of the tract of land described in the petition of plaintiffs; that plaintiff John Kleine marked off the lot 100 by 70 feet, and that she built a five-room cottage thereon and fenced it, and took possession of it; that the said John Kleine assisted her in the building of the house and fences; that thereafter she paid rent for two years. Reply was a general denial. Trial before the court resulted in a judgment for plaintiffs as to the title being in them, but the further judgment that defendant had a valid lease for twenty years upon the tract 100 by 70 feet. From such judgment plaintiffs have appealed.

John Kleine and the defendant are brother and sister. In 1913 John Kleine told his sister that she could have a lease upon a small tract (100 by 70) of his land on Coal Bank road in the city of St. Louis. He pointed out to her the boundaries. At her own cost and expense she built a five-room cottage thereon and fenced the land and took possession of it. In 1915, after much urging, she got John Kleine and wife to execute the following lease:

Lease.

This lease made and entered into by and between John and Rose Kleine, hereafter referred to as lessor, and Mary L. Kleine hereafter referred to as lessee.

Said lessor, for and in consideration of a rent of $5 to be paid yearly by said lessee, does hereby lease unto said lessee the following described premises situated in the city of St. Louis, state of Missouri.

One hundred feet running westward on Coal Bank road, beginning at private road fronting house, and 70 feet running northward on private road beginning at Coal Bank road.

This lease begins June 15, 1913, expires June 15, 1933. Lessee has the right to remove at any time improvements made by lessee.

During the time of lease said lessee has the privilege of a moderate use of water.

Said lessee promises to sell improvements made on premises for a reasonable price at any time when lessor sells the land.

Mary L. Kleine.
Jno. J. Kleine.
Rosa Kleine.

For two years he accepted the money for the rent, but thereafter he declined rent. Conceiving the lease invalid, he and his wife brought this action. Kleine's testimony in the case tends to leave a bad taste in the judicial mouth. Among other things, he requested that the lease be signed with a lead pencil, and says that he "figured" that it was no good when he signed it, "because there was no starting point." All this was after the sister had put her money into the improvements. Further details will be left to the opinion.

I. It is clear that the idea of John Kleine, as to there being no starting point mentioned in the lease, is without foundation. The lease says: "One hundred feet running westward on Coal Bank road, beginning at private road fronting house, and 70 feet running northward on private road beginning at Coal Bank road."

From this it is clear that the starting point is the intersection of Coal Bank road and the private road. From this intersection, or starting point, the tract was to be 100 feet on Coal Bank road, and 70 feet on the private road,

Landlord and tenant—sufficiency of description in lease.

from the intersection of the two. In other words the description in the lease gives a starting point, and two sides of the lot. Having a fixed corner and the two sides given, a parallelogram will be presumed. In other words, we have the width and depth of the tract given, and only have to extend the lines to get a parallelogram.

In Smith v. Nelson, 110 Mo. 552, 19 S. W. 734, we have a description calling for 1 acre in the corner of a government-surveyed tract. There we had only the starting point. We held that an acre in a square form would be presumed from such a description. So in this case, having the starting point and two sides given, we will presume the parties had in mind a parallelogram. See also 2 Devlin, Deeds, p. 1922.

We have no doubt about the fact that this lease calls for a parallelogram 100 by 70 feet, with the long side of the parallelogram on Coal Bank road.

The idea of there being no common starting point for the respective sides of the parallelogram is not borne out by the lease itself. Whether the description fails for other reasons we will discuss later.

II. The real issue in the case is not the views expressed by John Kleine, to the effect that he signed the lease (in lead pencil, at his own suggestion) because he thought it invalid, owing to the absence of a starting point. He seems not only to have had that idea, but the other

—signature in lead pencil—
sufficiency.

erroneous view, entertained by many laymen, that a deed cannot be signed with a lead pencil, but must be signed with pen and ink. After his sister had expended her money on a five-room cottage and fences upon ground which he pointed out to her, it required two years to get him to sign a lease. When he did sign it, he thought that he had it in shape to beat the sister. And all this after he had accepted the rent for the first two years. What Wagner, J., said in Tetherow v. Anderson, 63 Mo. loc. cit. 98, is peculiarly applicable to John Kleine. That learned jurist thus spoke: "The only ground urged for a reversal is that the description was so uncertain and indefinite that nothing passed by the plaintiff's deed. This claim surely comes with a bad grace from the plaintiff, who acknowledges that he sold and conveyed the land by that description."

The appellant Kleine not only went upon the ground and marked out the lot upon which the sister was going to build her little home, but he assisted her agents in the building of the cottage and fences, accepted the agreed rent for two years, and finally executed the lease in writing, after telling his sister to make it as short as possible. There is no question that the house is there facing the private road mentioned. There is no question that there is and was a private road. There is no question that Coal Bank road is and was a public highway in the city of St. Louis and state of Missouri. There is no question that the plaintiffs owned a tract of land (some 8 acres more or less) on this public road, and that the lease was intended to cover a part of this tract. A surveyor testified that he could and did take the deed, and from its terms located the lot leased, after finding out the property on Coal Bank road owned by the plaintiffs. In other words, once given their property on Coal Bank road, the tract claimed by defendant could be located by the description given in the lease.

The real issue is whether the description taken as a whole, aided by such extrinsic evidence as may be used in construing the ambiguous terms of the contract, is sufficient to locate the land described in this lease. Thus, in Hubbard v. Whitehead, 221 Mo. loc. cit. 683, 121 S. W. 71, Gantt, P. J., said: "Extrinsic evidence is always admissible to explain the calls of a deed for the purpose of applying them to the subject-matter and thus give effect to the deed. While it is true that a deed must so describe land sought to be conveyed thereby that it can be identified, that is certain which can be rendered certain, and in construing a doubtful description in a grant the court will put itself in the position of the contracting parties as near as possible and consider the circumstances of the transaction between them, and then read and interpret the words used in the light of these circumstances."

Evidence—to explain calls in deed.

The proof aliunde in this case located the lands of plaintiffs on Coal Bank road; it located the private road; it located the lot pointed out by John Kleine to his sister; it located the cottage in actual existence when the lease was written; it located the defendant in possession with the knowledge and consent of plaintiffs. With this information the surveyor said he could and did locate the leased ground.

Under the rule in the Hubbard Case, supra, the judgment nisi is right, and should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

All concur; Blair, P. J., in result.

ANNOTATION.

Signature with lead pencil.

An examination of the cases which have considered the question under annotation discloses that, at least so far as transactions of private business are concerned, the fact that the signature to an instrument was made with a lead pencil will not affect its validity.

Thus, that a signature with lead pencil is sufficient has been held in Drefahl v. Security Sav. Bank (1906) 132 Iowa, 563, 107 N. W. 179 (check); Merritt v. Clason (1815) 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 102, 7 Am. Dec. 286 (memorandum of contract of sale); Clason v. Bailey (1817) 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 484 (memorandum of contract of sale); Brown v. Butchers' & D. Bank (1844) 6 Hill (N. Y.) 443, 41 Am. Dec. 755 (indorsement on bill of exchange); Porter v. Valentine (1896) 18 Misc. 213, 75 N. Y. S. R. 902, 41 N. Y. Supp. 507 (signature of underwriter of policy of insurance); Re Schoner, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. 453 (signature to application for liquor license); Myers v. Vanderbilt (1877) 84 Pa. 510, 24 Am. Rep. 227 (signature to will); Closson v. Stearns (1831) 4 Vt. 11, 23 Am. Dec. 245 (indorsement of promissory note); Geary v. Physic (1826) 5 Barn. & C.

234, 108 Eng. Reprint, 87, 7 Dowl. & R. 653, 4 L. J. K. B. 147, 29 Revised Rep. 225 (indorsement of promissory note); KLEINE v. KLEINE (reported herewith) ante, 1335 (lease).

But in Van Platz Brewing Co. v. Interstate Ice & Cold Storage Co. (1912) 161 Mo. App. 531, 143 S. W. 542, while admitting the general rule that a signature to an instrument is sufficient if written with a pencil, it was held that where a voucher draft required that the signature of the receptor should be in ink, a signature in lead pencil is insufficient, the court saying that it was a requirement which could be rightfully made and insisted upon.

The law extends great indulgence to looseness and inaccuracy in writings necessary to the transaction of the common business of life, propter simplicitatem laicorum. Otherwise the fair intention of the parties would frequently be defeated by their want of acquaintance with the forms of business, and by the haste in which such writings are often necessarily drawn and executed, at times and in places when and where the means of making them in the best manner and with the best materials are not at hand. Stone v. Sprague (1851) 24 N. H. 309.

"To write is to express our ideas by letters visible to the eye. The mode or manner of impressing those letters is no part of the substance or definition of writing. A pencil is an instrument with which we write without ink. The ancients understood alphabetic writing as well as we do, but it is certain that the use of paper, pen, and ink was for a long time unknown to them. In the days of Job, they wrote upon lead with an iron pen. The ancients used to write upon hard substances, as stones, metals, ivory, wood, etc., with a style or iron instrument. The next improvement was writing upon waxed tables; until at last paper and parchment were adopted, when the use of the calamus or reed was introduced. The common law has gone so far to regulate writing as to make it necessary that a deed should be written on paper or parchment, and not on wood or stone. This was for the sake of durability and safety; and this is all the regulation that the law has prescribed. The instrument or the material by which the letters were to be impressed on paper or parchment has never yet been defined; this has been left to be governed by public convenience and usage; and as far as questions have arisen on this subject the courts have, with great latitude and liberality, left the parties to their own discretion.

... A lead pencil is generally the most accessible and convenient instrument of writing on such occasions, and I see no good reason why we should wish to put an interdict on all memoranda written with a pencil. I am persuaded it would be attended with much inconvenience and afford more opportunities and temptation to parties to break faith with each other than by allowing the writing with a pencil to stand. It is no doubt very much in use." Clason v. Bailey (1817) 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 484.

And in Geary v. Physic (1826) 5 Barn. & C. 234, 108 Eng. Reprint, 87, it was said that "there is no authority for saying that where the law requires a contract to be in writing that writing must be in ink. . . . That being so, I am of opinion that an indorsement on a bill of exchange may be by writing in pencil. There is not any great danger that our decision will induce individuals to adopt such a mode of writing in preference to that in general use. The imperfection of this mode of writing, its being so subject to obliteration, and the impossibility of proving it when it is obliterated, will prevent its being generally adopted. There being no authority to show that a contract which the law requires to be in writing should be written in any particular mode or with any specific material, and the law of merchants requiring only that an indorsement of bills of exchange should be in writing without specifying the manner with which the writing is to be made, I am of opinion that the indorsement in this case was a sufficient indorsement in writing within the meaning of the law of merchants, and that the property in the bill passed by it to the plaintiff."

However, no prudent scrivener will write a will in pencil unless under extreme circumstances. Whenever so written, any appearance of alteration should be carefully scrutinized. Yet, inasmuch as the statute is silent on the question, we cannot say that the mere fact that it is written or signed in pencil thereby makes it invalid. It is nevertheless a writing known and acknowledged as such by the authorities and fulfils the requirements of the statute. Myers v. Vanderbilt (1877) 84 Pa. 510, 24 Am. Rep. 227.

And in Re Schoner (1890) 8 Pa. Co. Ct. 453, the court said that, owing to the liability to erasures, the practice of making important signatures in pencil ought to be discouraged.

In the case, however, of a signature required by law to be made by a public officer, signatures with lead pencil have generally been held to be insufficient.

Thus, in Stone v. Sprague (1851) 24 N. H. 309, an officer's indorsement on a summons in lead pencil was held to be insufficient.

And in United States v. Thompson

(1812) 2 Cranch, C. C. 409, Fed. Cas. No. 16,484, a signature in pencil of justice of peace issuing warrant of arrest was held insufficient because liable to be so easily obliterated.

Also in Re Thirty-third Division (1906) 15 Pa. Dist. R. 350, 32 Pa. Co. Ct. 571, a signature to petition for division of election divisions, in lead pencil, was held sufficient ground to defeat the granting of the petition.

In Stone v. Sprague (N. H.) supra, the court said that "the indorsement which the statute requires to be made on a summons is the act of a public officer, who cannot be heard to excuse himself on the ground of ignorance; who is bound to be furnished at all times with the means of discharging his duty in a safe and proper manner; and who has no right to be in such haste as to prevent him from doing all that the law requires of him, with due care and deliberation. The apparent object of the law requiring a summons to be indorsed with the name of the officer who serves it is to give the defendant information who the officer was that took his property, and in case he should conceive himself to be wronged by the taking or detention of the property, to furnish him with prompt and certain proof against a responsible party. This object will not be adequately secured if the indorsement is such that it may be easily erased and obliterated by accident or design. If indorsed in pencil and left at the defendant's house, before it comes to his hands there may be nothing on it to show by whom it was served. If indorsed at an attorney's office when the sheriff took it, and carried it about with other papers a week or a month, as is not unfrequently the case, before it was served, there could be no certainty that it would have any legible indorsement on it at the end of that time. . . . So far as we are informed, this is the first trial of the kind that has taken place in the state; but if such indorsements were held to be legal, it would not be likely by any means to be the last. We should expect indorsements to be made generally in that way. There can be no hardship in holding the officer to make these indorsements in a way to avoid all this uncertainty. He can, without any disproportionate trouble, provide himself at all times with the means of indorsing his process in ink. We have seen no case in which it has been held that the record, signature, or other writing, required by law to be made by a public officer, may be in pencil marks; but if an officer's indorsement on a summons, made in pencil, should be decided to be sufficient, it is not easy to see how any line of distinction could be established which should prevent the rule from being extended to all cases where an officer is required to make a writing or a record. No statute requires that judgments shall be enrolled or deeds recorded in ink. Bail is taken by a mere indorsement of his name on the writ. He would probably be held chargeable if it were done in pencil. But it would be a dangerous looseness if the officer were allowed to take bail and discharge the defendant from arrest, where the only security returned was a pencil mark on the writ, which, as original writs are kept and used in our practice, would in a contested case seldom remain legible till the plaintiff obtained judgment. . . . We think the legislature never intended that these indorsements should be made except in a permanent manner, that would effectually secure the object of the law, and that an indorsement in pencil . . . is not sufficient."

And in Re Thirty-third Division (Pa.) supra, it was said that the practice is not a proper one and is not to be encouraged.

J. H. B.

AMERICAN FUEL COMPANY OF UTAH, Plff. in Certiorari,
v.
INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION OF UTAH et al.

Utah Supreme Court — January 28, 1920.

(— Utah, —, 187 Pac. 633.)

Workmen's compensation — effect of insolvency of insurer.

Securing insurance for the payment of awards under the Workmen's Compensation Act does not relieve the employer from liability in case the insurer becomes insolvent, under a statute providing that employers shall secure compensation to their employees by insuring and keeping insured the payment of such compensation with any stock company authorized to do business in the state, and that the employer or the insurer shall pay compensation for injuries received; especially where other provisions of the act indicate an intention to make both the employer and insurance carrier liable for the payment of the compensation.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1346.]

CERTIORARI to the Industrial Commission to review its award to claimant, defendant Lappas, in a proceeding by him to recover compensation for injuries received while in the employ of plaintiff. Petition dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Dey, Hopbaugh, and Mark, for plaintiff:

The Industrial Commission is given no power or authority under the act to make an award against an employer, but is restricted solely to awarding compensation in proper cases out of the fund provided by the act, and the award, as against plaintiff, is void, and should be annulled.

Industrial Commission v. Daly Min. Co. — Utah, —, 172 Pac. 301; Industrial Commission v. Evans, — Utah, —, 174 Pac. 825; Reinholz v. Industrial Commission, 96 Ohio St. 457, 119 N. E. 129; Scranton Leasing Co. v. Industrial Commission, — Utah, —, 170 Pac. 976; Winfield v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 168 App. Div. 351, 153 N. Y. Supp. 499; Fidelity & C. Co. v. House, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 191 S. W. 155; Post v. Burger & Gohlke, 216 N. Y. 544, 111 N. E. 351, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 158, 10 N. C. C. A. 888; Bradbury, Workmen's Compensation, 3d ed. p. 1181.

Messrs. Dan B. Shields, Attorney General, Oliver C. Dalby, James H. Wolfe, and Herbert Van Dam, Jr., Assistant Attorneys General, for defendants:

The fact that the Industrial Commission Act requires the employer to secure compensation does not absolve him from all liability for compensation, and substitute his insurance carrier as the only party liable.

Industrial Commission v. Evans, — Utah, —, 174 Pac. 825; Stertz v. Industrial Ins. Commission, 91 Wash. 588, 158 Pac. 256, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 357; Crockett v. International R. Co. 170 App. Div. 122, 155 N. Y. Supp. 692.

Weber, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff, a corporation under the laws of Utah, procured the issuance by this court of a writ of certiorari directed to defendants. In its petition plaintiff, inter alia, alleges that on April 21, 1919, Theras Lappas filed an application with the Industrial Commission praying for compensation for personal injuries suffered by accident arising out of and in the course of the employment of said applicant by the American Fuel Company, the plaintiff; that on the 26th of September, 1919, a formal hearing was had before the Industrial Commission, when the plaintiff appeared and presented evidence showing that it had complied with the requirements of § 3114, Comp. Laws Utah 1917, and had secured compensation to its employees by insuring and keeping insured the payment of said compensation in the Guardian & Guaranty Company, a stock corporation authorized to transact the business of workmen's compensation insurance in this state, and that on said date petitioner held a binding policy of insurance in said Guardian Casualty & Guaranty Company, executed and delivered to it in conformity with the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act; that the policy covered the payment of compensation to all of its employees at its mines at Neslen, Utah, including the applicant, Theras Lappas; that said policy was in full force and effect at the time of said accident, to wit, July 25, 1917; that the Guardian Casualty & Guaranty Company recognized its liability to the applicant and for a considerable period of time made payments to him, as compensation and hospital expense, to an amount in excess of $550; that the Guardian Casualty & Guaranty Company does not deny its liability, but that said company is in the hands of a receiver; that on October 29, 1919, the Industrial Commission made and entered its award and order requiring petitioner to pay to the applicant the sum of $968.95 as compensation for said injuries; that on November 22, 1919, the petitioner made application for rehearing before the Industrial Commission on the ground that the Industrial Commission was without jurisdiction to order petitioner to pay the award, and that said Commission acted in excess of its powers in making and entering said award.

Defendants have filed a demurrer to the petition on the ground that the facts therein stated are not sufficient to constitute a cause of action. It is the claim of petitioner that, by procuring insurance, it was relieved from all liability to pay compensation to its injured employee, and that the sole liability to pay the compensation ordered by the Commission devolved upon the Guardian Casualty & Guaranty Company, the insolvent insurance carrier.

Comp. Laws Utah 1917, §§ 3113 and 3114, are as follows:

"Sec. 3113. If a workman receives personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, his employer or the insurance carrier shall pay compensation in the amounts and to the person or persons hereinafter specified.

"Sec. 3114. Employers, but not including municipal bodies, shall secure compensation to their employees in one of the following ways:

"1. By insuring and keeping insured the payment of such compensation with the state insurance fund; or

"2. By insuring and keeping insured the payment of such compensation with any stock corporation or mutual association authorized to transact the business of workmen's compensation insurance in the state; or

"3. By furnishing to the Commission satisfactory proof of financial ability to pay direct the compensation in the amount and manner and when due as provided for in this title.

"In the latter case the Commission may in its discretion require the deposit of acceptable security, indemnity, or bond to secure the payment of compensation liabilities as they are incurred. All stock corporations or mutual associations transacting the business of workmen's compensation insurance in this state under the terms of subdivision 2 of this section shall be subject to the rules and regulations of the Commission with respect to rates to be charged, and methods of compensation to be used."

What is meant by the words "employers shall secure compensation to their employees"? Does it mean they shall obtain an insurance policy and thereby be relieved of all responsibility to the employees, who have no voice in making the selection of the insurance carrier? Or does it not plainly appear, both from the letter and the spirit of the law, that the employer "shall secure"—make sure, make more certain—the payment of compensation, leaving the obligation still that of the employer? The primary obligation on the part of the employer is to pay compensation when awarded. Insurance is incidental, though important. It is necessary, because employers sometimes fail in business, and because payments to injured employees or their dependents are frequently distributed over long periods of time. To make more certain the prompt payment of these awards the insurance feature was provided by the law. In harmony with § 3114 is § 3116, which reads: "Every policy of insurance covering the liability of the employer for compensation, whether issued by the Commission or by a stock company, or by a mutual association authorized to transact workmen's compensation insurance in this state, shall cover the entire liability of the employer to his employees covered by the policy or contract, and also shall contain a provision setting forth the right of the employees to enforce in their own names, either by, at any time, filing a separate claim, or by, at any time, making the insurance carrier a party to the original claim, the liability of the insurance carrier in whole or in part for the payment of such compensation; provided, however, that payment in whole or in part of such compensation, by either the employer or the insurance carrier, shall, to the extent thereof, be a bar to the recovery against the other of the amount so paid."

Why provide that the employee file a separate claim against the insurance carrier if the employer is not liable, and why make the insurance carrier a party to the original claim? Why provide that payment, in whole or in part, by either the employer or the insurance carrier, shall, to the extent thereof, be a bar to the recovery against the other of the amount so paid, unless both are liable?

Section 3117 provides: "Every such policy and contract shall contain a provision that, as between the employee and the insurance carrier, the notice to or knowledge of the occurrence of the injury on the part of the employer shall be deemed notice or knowledge, as the case may be, on the part of the insurance carrier; that jurisdiction of the employer shall, for the purpose of this title, be jurisdiction of the insurance carrier, and that the insurance carrier shall in all things be bound by and subject to the orders, findings, decisions, and awards rendered against the employer for the payment of compensation under the provisions of this title."

If the employer is relieved from liability when he procures his insurance, why should an award be rendered against him? The employer is the one against whom jurisdiction must be obtained, and the insurance company is bound by the orders and awards against the employer, whose primary liability seems to be recognized by the section just quoted.

Section 3118 reads: "Every such policy and contract shall contain a provision to the effect that the insolvency or bankruptcy of the employer, and his discharge therein, shall not relieve the insurance carrier from the payment of compensation for injuries or death sustained by an employee during the life of such policy or contract."

Discussing the above section, the attorney general aptly says in his brief: "In considering this section the thought immediately occurs, why, if the employer is not liable, provide that insolvency or bankruptcy shall not relieve the insurance carrier? If he was never liable, under the plaintiff's theory, why should his insolvency or solvency, bankruptcy or prosperity, make any difference in its effect upon the insurance carrier? This section was inserted to save the situation from the principle that an insolvency or bankruptcy, or a discharge therefrom, of the employer, should relieve the insurance carrier. But why should it be necessary to save the situation from such a legal principle if the carrier were, from the beginning, the only and original one liable? Why speak of him not being released on the contingency of the employer being unable to pay because of insolvency or bankruptcy, if the employer was never liable, regardless of him being solvent or insolvent, bankrupt or flourishing?"

Section 3119 is as follows: "Each county, city, town, or school district which is liable to its employees for compensation may insure in the state insurance fund or pay compensation direct."

If a county, city, town, or school district procures insurance, it certainly is not absolved from its primary liability to pay compensation, and yet there is no difference as between private and public employers; both are liable for compensation; but the public employer is exempt from the obligation to secure such payment. Otherwise their obligations are the same.

Section 3126 is as follows: "If a workman who has been hired in this state receives personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of such employment, he shall be entitled to compensation according to the law of this state as provided for in this title, even though such injury was received outside of this state. If a workman who has been hired outside of this state is injured while engaged in his employer's business, and is entitled to compensation for such injury under the law of the state where he was hired, he shall be entitled to enforce against his employer his rights in this state if his rights are such that they can reasonably be determined and dealt with by the Commission and the court in this state."

The provision that the employee shall be entitled to enforce his rights against his employer is another recognition of the principle that the employer is primarily liable for compensation. This thought is emphasized in § 3132, which reads, in part: "The right to recover compensation pursuant to the provisions of this title for injuries sustained by an employee shall be the exclusive remedy against the employer. . . ."

Section 3134 reads: "Every employee, or his legal representative in case death results, who makes application for an award, or accepts compensation from an employer, waives his right to exercise his option to institute proceedings in any court. Every employee, or his legal representative in case death results, who exercises his option to institute proceedings in court, as provided in this title, waives his right to any award or direct payment of compensation from his employer."

It will be noticed that this section uses the words "compensation from an employer" and "direct payment of compensation from his employer,"—not from the insurance carrier.

Section 3127 provides that employers who comply with the provisions of § 3114 shall not be liable to respond in damages for injuries sustained by their employees not resulting in death. If complying with § 3114 and obtaining insurance relieves the employer from all liability, as contended by plaintiff, why say he "is not liable to respond in damages," leaving the unavoidable inference that he is still liable for compensation?

Reading the statute as a whole, and considering all of its provisions, the plain and unmistakable import of the language of the act compels the conclusion that the right to compensation arises out of the relation existing between employer and employee; that compensation is a tax upon industry or upon the employer's business, a tax that is added to the price of the product and is ultimately paid by the consumer; that the employer is primarily liable for compensation to the employee; that both employer and insurance carrier are liable for the payment of compensation to the injured employee; and that the default of either will not excuse payment by the other.

Workmen's compensation—effect of insolvency of insurer.

The demurrer to the petition is therefore sustained; plaintiff's petition is dismissed, and the Commission's award is affirmed. Plaintiff to pay costs.

Corfman, Ch. J., and Gideon and Thurman, JJ., concur.

Frick, J., being disqualified, did not participate herein.

ANNOTATION.

Workmen's compensation, insolvency of insurer or employer, as affecting liability for compensation.

The determination of the several rights of the parties in case of the insolvency or bankruptcy of the employer or insurer depends upon the provisions of the compensation act in force in the jurisdiction where the question arises.

It will be observed that in the reported case (AMERICAN FUEL CO. v. INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION, ante, 1342), the taking of insurance for the payment of compensation awards under the Workmen's Compensation Act was held not to relieve the employer from liability where the insurer was insolvent, and the act provided that employers "shall secure compensation" to their employees by insuring, and keeping insured, the payment of such compensation with any stock company authorized to do business in the state, and that the employer or the insurer should pay compensation for injuries received, and that the policy should contain a provision to the effect that the insolvency or bankruptcy of the employer should not relieve the insurer from payment of compensation, the court holding that these provisions, read with reference to other clauses of the act, showed an intention to make the employer primarily liable, and that both the employer and insurer were liable for the payment of compensation to an injured employee, and that the default of either did not excuse payment by the other.

In Illinois Indemnity Exch. v. Industrial Commission (1919) 289 Ill. 283, 124 N. E. 665, a section of the Workmen's Compensation Act provided that any person who should become entitled to compensation under the act should,

"in the event of his inability to recover such compensation from the employer on account of his insolvency, be subrogated to all the rights of such employer against any insurance company, association, or insurer which may have insured such employer against loss growing out of the compensation required by the provisions of this act to be paid by such employer, and, in such event only, the said insurance company, association, or insurer shall become primarily liable to pay to the employee or his personal representative the compensation required by the provisions of this act to be paid by such employer." It was held that by this provision, in case of the employer's insolvency, the legislature intended to charge the liability directly to the insurer, and make it primarily liable to the employee; and under § 15 of the act, giving the Industrial Commission jurisdiction over the operation and administration of the act, the Commission was held to have jurisdiction to enforce the employee's claim directly against the insurer without first having procured a judgment, notwithstanding a provision of the insurer's policy making the procurement of a judgment a condition of liability, where there was also a rider attached to the policy, providing that it intended covering such legal liability of the insured as was imposed by the Workmen's Compensation Act.

It is provided by subsec. 1 of § 5 of the English act that, where an employer had entered into a contract with any insurers respecting any liability under the act to any workman, then, in the event of the employer becoming bankrupt, or making a composition or arrangement with his creditors, or, if the employer is a company, in the event of the company having commenced to be wound up, the rights of the employer against the insurers as respects that liability shall, notwithstanding anything in the enactments relating to bankruptcy and the winding up of companies, be transferred to and rest in the workman, and upon any such transfer the insurers shall have the same rights and remedies, and be subject to the same liabilities, as if they were the employer; so, however, that the insurers shall not be under any greater liability to the workman than they would have been under to the employer. And it is provided by subsec. 2 of § 5 that "if the liability of the insurer to the workman is less than the liability of the employer to the workman, the workman may prove for the balance in the bankruptcy or litigation."

In Re Pethick [1915] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 26, [1914] W. N. 403, 84 L. J. Ch. N. S. 285, 112 L. T. N. S. 212, 59 Sol. Jo. 74, [1915] H. B. R. 59, [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 5, 8 B. W. C. C. 337, the employer, and the company in which insurance had been taken by the employer, went into bankruptcy, and it was held that § 5, above set out, was fatal to any claim by the employee to a right of priority, or to a right to prove his claim for compensation against his employer, but that the employee could prove his claim only against the insurer.

And in Renishaw Iron Co. [1917] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 199, 115 L. T. N. S. 755, 61 Sol. Jo. 147, where an insurer, which had issued a policy to an employer, was ordered to be wound up compulsorily, and subsequently the employer was also wound up, it was held, under subsec. 1 of § 5, set out supra, that the right of the employer to prove in the proceedings of the insurer was transferred to employees who had sustained injuries, and that, under subsec. 2 of § 5, supra, the employees were entitled to prove in the employer's proceedings only for the amount of their claims not covered by the insurance.

And in Craig v. Royal Ins. Co.

[1914] W. N. (Eng.) 442, 84 L. J. K. B. N. S. 333, 112 L. T. N. S. 291, [1915] H. B. R. 57, [1915] W. C. & Ins. Rep. 139, 8 B. W. C. C. 339, it was held that upon an employer's becoming bankrupt, the rights which he, or his trustees in bankruptcy, had against the insurer, were vested in the employee, and that the employer's right of indemnity against the insurer was lost, and that the trustees of a bankrupt employer had no right to repayment from an insurer of amounts paid to an injured employee as compensation.

Under the provisions of the English act the employee is entitled only to the employer's rights against the insurer; and where a policy of insurance, issued to an employer which has become bankrupt, contained a clause requiring disputes between the insurers and the employers to be submitted to arbitration, and there was a genuine dispute, it was held that an injured employee could not take proceedings in the county court to have compensation awarded until the dispute had been submitted to arbitration and an award had been made. King v. Phoenix Assur. Co. [1910] 2 K. B. (Eng.) 666, 80 L. J. K. B. N. S. 44, 103 L. T. N. S. 53, 8 B. W. C. C. 442.

In Daff v. Midland Colliery Owners' Mut. Indemnity Co. [1913] W. N. (Eng.) 256, 82 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1340, 109 L. T. N. S. 418, 29 Times L. R. 730, 57 Sol. Jo. 773, 6 B. W. C. C. 799, where the employer, a member of a mutual insurance company, was bankrupt, the insurance company was held liable, under § 5 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, to pay compensation to a workman employed by such member, who was injured prior to a default by the employer in the payment of a call by the association, notwithstanding an article of the association providing that "whenever a member's protection has been determined . . . he shall not be entitled to any indemnity in respect of any accident," such provision being held not to refer to accidents which had occurred prior to the determination of membership in the association.

In Brzinski v. Acme Body Co. (1914)

37 N. J. L. J. 183, a claim, under the Employers' Liability Act, by an injured employee, was held to be for injuries, and not a claim for wages, entitled to priority as against his bankrupt employer's estate under the Bankruptcy Act, providing that wages due to workmen and clerks, earned within three months before the commencement of proceedings, should have priority, but the claim of the employee was held to have priority under another section of the Bankruptcy Act, giving priority to debts owing to any person who, by the laws of the states or the United States, is entitled to priority, where the Employers' Liability Act provided that the right of compensation granted by the act should have the same preference against the assets of the employer as is now, or may hereafter be, allowed by law for a claim for unpaid wages for labor.

J. T. W.

EX PARTE CHARLES E. BALL.

Kansas Supreme Court — March 23, 1920.

(106 Kan. 536, 188 Pac. 424.)

Bail — right of one charged with murder.

Murder in the first degree not being punishable capitally, persons charged with that offense are bailable, under the self-executing provision of the Bill of Rights that all persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, except for capital offenses where proof is evident or the presumption great, notwithstanding the Statute of 1911, which provides that persons charged with the crime of murder in the first degree shall not be admitted to bail when the proof is evident or the presumption great.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1352.]

Headnote by BURCH, J.

APPLICATION by petitioner for a writ of habeas corpus to obtain admission to bail. Writ granted.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Dale, Amidon, Buckland, & Hart and Sam P. Ridings for petitioner.

Mr. A. M. Jackson for respondent.

Burch, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The petitioner was arrested on a warrant charging murder in the first degree, and at the conclusion of a preliminary examination was bound over to the district court, without bail. The writ of habeas corpus was prayed for to obtain admission to bail, which this court granted.

The territorial Crimes Act of 1859 contained the following provisions:

"Section 1. Every murder which shall be committed by means of poison or by lying in wait, or by any other kind of wilful, deliberate and premeditated killing, or which shall be committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate any arson, rape, robbery, burglary or other felony, shall be deemed murder in the first degree.

"Sec. 2. Every murder which shall be committed purposely and maliciously, but without deliberation and premeditation, shall be deemed murder in the second degree.

"Sec. 3. Persons convicted of murder in the first degree shall suffer death. Those convicted of murder in the second degree shall be punished by confinement and hard labor for not less than ten years." Comp. Laws 1862, chap. 33, §§ 1-3.

The territorial Code of Criminal

Procedure contained the following provision: "Persons charged with an offense punishable with death, shall not be admitted to bail, when the proof is evident or the presumption great; but, for all other offenses, bail may be taken in such sum as, in the opinion of the magistrate, will secure the appearance of the person charged with the offense, at the court where such person is to be tried." Comp. Laws 1862, chap. 32, § 45.

These statutes were continued in force in the Revision of 1868 (Gen. Stat. 1868, chap. 31, §§ 6, 7, 8; chapter 82, § 53), and until modified as hereinafter stated.

The Constitution adopted in 1859, under which the state was admitted to the Union in 1861, contains the following provision: "All persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties except for capital offenses where proof is evident or the presumption great." Bill of Rights, § 9 (Gen. Stat. 1915, § 113).

The legislature of 1907 amended the Crimes Act by the enactment of the following statute: "Persons convicted of murder in the first degree shall be punished by confinement and hard labor in the penitentiary of the state of Kansas for life. Those convicted of murder in the second degree shall be punished by confinement and hard labor for not less than ten years." Gen. Stat. 1915, § 3369.

Following the enactment of this statute, persons charged with murder in the first degree were generally admitted to bail. In a few instances bail was refused, and on application to this court bail was allowed as a matter of right, under the provision of the Constitution. In 1911, the legislature amended the Criminal Code by enactment of the following statute: "Persons charged with the crime of murder in the first degree shall not be admitted to bail when the proof is evident or the presumption great; but for all other offenses bail may be taken in such sum as in the opinion of the magistrate will secure the appearance of the person charged with the offense at the court where such person is to be tried." Gen. Stat. 1915, § 7962.

Following enactment of this statute, courts and committing magistrates generally admitted to bail in accordance with the Bill of Rights, precisely as if the statute had not been passed. In a few instances in which bail was denied this court granted bail. In order to render inexcusable denial of bail in any murder case, so long as murder is not a capital offense and the Constitution remains unchanged, this opinion is published.

The press of more important business prevents the court from assuring itself with certainty of the date of the initial appearance of the provision of the Bill of Rights in Anglo-American legal history. It is sufficient for present purposes to know that it formed § 11 of the "Laws Agreed Upon in England," etc., which accompanied Penn's frame of government for the province of Pennsylvania, to which the illustrious Quaker set his "hand and broad seal, this five and twentieth day of the second month, vulgarly called April, in the year of our Lord one thousand six hundred and eighty-two." 5 Thorpe, Am. Charters & Const. p. 3059. While the Habeas Corpus Act of three years before, and the Bill of Rights Act of seven years later, dealt with bail, neither one employed the same or equivalent phraseology.

The provision in question appeared in the Constitution under which Kentucky was admitted to the Union in 1792, and appeared in form or substance in a majority of the Constitutions framed before Kansas became a state. The Kansas Bill of Rights followed the Ohio model, and the provision was contained in the Ohio Constitutions of 1802 and 1851. In all these Constitutions the word "capital" had a definite, settled meaning, which was the meaning accorded the word in general usage whenever employed as an adjective qualifying the terms "crime," "offense," or "felony"— punishable by deprivation of life. Dr. Johnson's definition is a sentence from Bacon: "That which affects life." The Oxford English Dictionary gives many illustrations, extending from 1483 to modern times. Illustrating the present meaning of the word, Webster's New International Dictionary and the Century Dictionary give quotations from Spencer, Milton, Swift, and Macaulay. Histories of English and American legal institutions and legal textbooks know no other meaning than that indicated, and the same is true of the courts.

"The language of the Constitution is: 'All persons shall, before conviction, be bailable by sufficient securities, except for capital offenses where the proof is evident or the presumption great.' . . . Under the Constitution, and the law as it stood before the adoption of the Penal Code, although the offense might be reduced, on the trial, below the grade of the one charged, still when the charge was made, and the proof evident or the presumption great, the magistrates were not permitted to take bail. The question, in contemplation of law, to be tried by the magistrates on an application for bail, was not whether the accused must necessarily be punished with death,—because this they could not know until after the trial,—but whether he might be so punished, and probably would be under the proof. . . . The Penal Code is then adopted, giving to the juries the power of saying, in cases of murder in the first degree, whether the accused shall suffer death or go to the penitentiary for life. This is but a simple extension of the power of the jury one degree beyond what it was before. Capital punishment still remains, and, in cases where the jury so decide, with precisely the same certainty that it existed before the adoption of the Penal Code." Ex parte McCrary, 22 Ala. 65, 71.

"If the statute imposes death as a punishment, and provides for no other punishment, of course the offense is a capital felony. The question now is, when the statute provides that the punishment shall be death or imprisonment, as the jury shall recommend, and the jury recommends imprisonment, whether the verdict of guilty of the offense is a conviction of a capital offense. In our view the expression 'capital felony,' when used in our law, is merely descriptive of those felonies to which the death penalty is affixed as a punishment under given circumstances to distinguish such felonies from that class in which, under no circumstances, would death ever be inflicted as a penalty for the violation of the same." Cæsar v. State, 127 Ga. 710, 712, 57 S. E. 67.

"Section 3910 of the General Statutes provides: 'Twelve men shall constitute a jury to try all capital cases, and six men shall constitute a jury to try all other criminal cases.' A capital case is a case in which a person is tried for a capital crime. A capital crime is one for which the punishment of death is inflicted. The crime of murder in the second degree is punished by imprisonment in the state prison for life, and is not a capital crime." Adams v. State, 56 Fla. 1, 13, 48 So. 224.

"A capital crime is one punishable by the death of the offender." Com. v. Ibrahim, 184 Mass. 255, 258, 68 N. E. 232.

"By the Constitution it is provided 'that all persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, except for capital offenses, when the proof is evident, or the presumption great.' Section 24, Bill of Rights. . . .

"A 'capital offense' is one which is punishable—that is to say, liable to punishment—with death. This is the substance of the definitions by the lexicographers both professional and lay." Ex parte Dusenberry, 97 Mo. 504, 507, 11 S. W. 217.

"Of course, a capital offense is one which may be punished by death. There can be no capital offense unless the punishment is by death." Ex parte Russell, 71 Tex. Crim. Rep. 377, 378, 160 S. W. 76.

"It will be observed that the legislature, in the enactment of the sections quoted, construed the words 'capital offenses' in the constitutional provision as meaning offenses punishable by death. This is the general and legal meaning of the words." Re Schneck, 78 Kan. 207, 209, 96 Pac. 44.

The legal effect of the constitutional provision as a whole is equally definite and well settled. All offenses are bailable of right, except those to which the death penalty is affixed, and those to which the death penalty is affixed are bailable unless the proof be evident or the presumption great.

"The Constitution of the state declares that 'all persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties unless for capital offenses, where the proof is evident or the presumption great.' Article 1, § 7. The Criminal Practice Act, however, provides that 'a person charged with an offense may be admitted to bail before conviction, as follows: (1) As a matter of discretion in all cases where the punishment is death; (2) as a matter of right in all other cases; and that 'no person shall be admitted to bail when he is charged with an offense punishable with death, when the proof is evident or the presumption great.' Sections 509 and 510. The Constitution, as will be thus seen, secures to the citizen accused the right to bail in all cases, except when charged with a capital offense, and even then, unless the proof of guilt is evident, or the presumption of it is great. The statute, on the other hand, renders the admission to bail a matter of discretion, where the punishment is death, unless such evident proof or great presumption exist. In this respect the statute conflicts with the fundamental law. The admission to bail in capital cases, where the proof is evident or the presumption is great, may be made a matter of discretion, and may be forbidden by legislation, but in no other cases. In all other cases, the admission to bail is a right which the accused can claim, and which no judge or court can properly refuse." People v. Tinder, 19 Cal. 539, 542, 81 Am. Dec. 77.

"Under our Code of Procedure special venires are only provided for in 'capital' cases. . . .

"Article 35 of our Penal Code expressly declares that 'a person for an offense committed before he arrived at the age of seventeen years shall in no case be punished with death.'"

"When the district attorney admitted that the defendant was under seventeen years of age, that was an admission that the case was not 'capital,' and that death could in no event be inflicted, notwithstanding he was indicted for and might be convicted of murder in the first degree. The case was not a 'capital' case, and consequently the court did not err in overruling the defendant's motion for a special venire. He was not entitled to one." Walker v. State, 28 Tex. App. 503, 504, 13 S. W. 860.

"The Constitution, art. 1, § 11, reads as follows: 'All prisoners shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, unless for capital offenses, when the proof is evident,' etc. The general proposition enunciated in the Bill of Rights, therefore, is that all prisoners shall be bailable with the exception stated,—that unless for capital offenses when the proof is evident. In order to make the case nonbailable under this clause of our Constitution, the proof must be evident that there has been committed a capital offense." 71 Tex. Crim. Rep. 377, 378, supra.

"The Constitution of this state, § 8, art. 1, provides that, 'all persons shall before conviction be bailable by sufficient sureties, except for capital offenses when the proof is evident or the presumption great.' By chapter 103, Laws of 1853, capital punishment is abolished in this state. . . .

"By the Court, Downer, J.: 'The court are of opinion that since the abolition of capital punishment in this state persons charged with murder are in all cases bailable.' Re Perry, 19 Wis. 676, 677.

"The first objection is merely stated without argument or sustaining authority. We assume, however, that it is based upon the statute, Rem. & Bal. Code, § 2138 (P. C. 135, § 1167), which, so far as pertinent, reads: 'In prosecution for capital offenses, the defendant may challenge peremptorily twelve jurors; in prosecution for offenses punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary, six jurors; in all other prosecutions, three jurors.' It is clear that the twelve challenges are only allowed in prosecutions for capital offenses. A capital offense is one which may be punishable with death. . . . The statute above quoted obviously uses the term 'capital offenses' as so defined. The second clause, by allowing only six peremptory challenges in prosecutions for offenses punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary, in effect, defines such offenses as not capital. Capital punishment was abolished in this state by the act approved March 22, 1913, Laws 1913, p. 581, 3 Rem. & Bal. Code, § 2392, which went into effect on June 9, 1913, ten days before this case was called for trial. The first clause of the statute relating to peremptory challenges above quoted was clearly suspended by the abolition of capital punishment. Since there is now no capital punishment in this state, there are no capital offenses; hence, no offense in prosecution for which the provision for twelve peremptory challenges can be invoked. No amount of argument could add to the clear sequence of this conclusion." State v. Johnston, 83 Wash. 1, 2, 144 Pac. 945.

The Constitution, which in this respect is self-executing, left the legislature free to prescribe whatever punishment it saw fit for murder, and all other offenses. The Constitution, however, dealt specifically with the subject of bail, and made all offenses which the legislature did not see fit to punish capitally bailable. The meaning of the Bill of Rights at the time it was adopted cannot be changed without changing the Constitution itself. This the legislature is not competent to do. At present, treason is the only capital offense under the laws of this state, and all others are bailable as a matter of right, notwithstanding the Statute of 1911.

Bail—right of one charged with murder.

The territorial Code of Criminal Procedure contained two provisions relating to bail; one in the division relating to arrest and examination of offenders, quoted above, page 1349, and one in the division relating to indictments. Offenses could be prosecuted by indictment only, and after indictment found, the following section governed: "All offenses are bailable by sufficient sureties, except murder, when the proof is evident or the presumption great." Comp. Laws 1862, chap. 32, § 114.

This section has been retained in subsequent compilations of the statutes, and appears as § 8048 of the General Statutes of 1915. Manifestly, the section fell under the restriction of the Bill of Rights as soon as the Constitution became effective, and has continued under such restriction ever since.

All the Justices concur.

ANNOTATION.

Abolition of death penalty as affecting right to bail of one charged with murder in first degree.

Aside from the reported case (EX PARTE BALL, ante, 1348), the only reported case which has considered the subject under annotation is Re

Perry (1865) 19 Wis. 676, which held, without any discussion whatever, that "since the abolition of capital punishment in this state persons charged with murder are in all cases bailable," which decision is in accord with the decision in EX PARTE BALL.

There is, however, an obiter statement in Re Welisch (1917) 18 Ariz. 517, 163 Pac. 264, which was an application for admission to bail pending appeal from conviction of the crime of violating the Prohibition Law, to the effect that "the people of Arizona at the last election, through the adoption of an initiated measure submitted to the voters, abolished capital punishment for murder, so that now all persons charged with the crime of murder, however diabolical or atrocious it may be, and howsoever evident may be the proof of guilt thereof, as well as all other crimes not punishable with death, may, before conviction, demand admission to bail as a strict legal right which no judge or court can properly refuse."

In Re Schneck (1908) 78 Kan. 207, 96 Pac. 43, and Re Stewart (1908) 78 Kan. 885, 96 Pac. 45, it was held that one charged with murder in the first degree is not entitled to admission to bail because of the abolition of the death penalty, where the crime charged was committed before such abolition, although the prosecution was had after such abolition. This, however, was upon the ground that, there being no special saving clause in the statute, the penalty of death for murder committed before the statute went into effect was not affected. The imposition of a life sentence as affecting the capital character of the offense for the purpose of bail is considered in Walker v. State, 8 A.L.R. 968, and note.

J. H. B.

JESSE D. JONES, Appt.,

v.

G. J. BRANTLEY.

Mississippi Supreme Court (In Banc)—March 8, 1920.

(— Miss. —, 83 So. 802.)

Sunday — services of attorney — works of necessity or charity.

1. Services rendered by an attorney in straightening out the affairs of a partnership are not works of necessity or charity within the meaning of the Sunday laws.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1356.]

Attorney and client — right of attorney to compensation.

2. An attorney who is retained to transact business for a client, and remains at his office at the client's request for several days to care for such business, is entitled to a reasonable retainer fee and reasonable compensation for his time in waiting.

[See 2 R. C. L. 1033.]

— indivisible contract — work on Sunday.

3. A contract by an attorney to straighten out the affairs of a partnership, which is not for a gross amount, is not an indivisible one, so as to prevent recovery for the retainer and work done on secular days by the performance of some work on Sunday.

(Sykes, J., dissents.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Humphries County (Elmore, J.) in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover an amount alleged to be due for personal services rendered to him by plaintiff. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Robert B. Mayes, Clayton D. Potter, and H. F. Jones for appellant. Messrs. Cashin & Murphy, for appellee:

The contract in question is not only voidable, but absolutely void, and, being void, is a legal nullity.

Kountz v. Price, 40 Miss. 341; Collins v. McCargo, 6 Smedes & M. 128; Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. 258, 6 L. ed. 468; Wooten v. Miller, 7 Smedes & M. 386; Coulter v. Robertson, 14 Smedes & M. 29; Adams v. Rowan, 8 Smedes & M. 638; Torrey v. Grant, 10 Smedes & M. 97.

The court will not lend its aid to enforce a contract, where it grows immediately out of an illegal or immoral act, where it is connected with an illegal act, and where only a part of the consideration is illegal.

Wooten v. Miller, 7 Smedes & M. 380; Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. 258, 6 L. ed. 468; Craig v. Missouri, 4 Pet. 410, 7 L. ed. 903; Gray v. Hook, 4 N. Y. 449; Nellis v. Clark, 4 Hill, 424; Handy v. St. Paul Globe Pub. Co. 41 Minn. 188, 4 L.R.A. 466, 16 Am. St. Rep. 695, 42 N. W. 872; Perkins v. Cummings, 2 Gray, 258; Block v. McMurry, 56 Miss. 219, 31 Am. Rep. 357.

The contract was entire, inseparable, and indivisible, and tainted throughout with its original illegality.

Handy v. St. Paul Globe Pub. Co. 4 L.R.A. 466, 16 Am. St. Rep. 695, and note, 41 Minn. 188, 42 N. W. 872; Williams v. Hastings, 59 N. H. 373.

Ethridge, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant sued the appellee for professional services as an attorney for the sum of $500, alleging that the appellee was engaged in a mercantile business in a partnership, and that he desired the professional services of plaintiff in rearranging or adjusting the partnership business, and that value of the stock, etc., involved in the mercantile business, amounted to $30,000, and that the services so rendered were reasonably worth $500.

The defendant filed the general issue and a special plea, alleging in the special plea that the contract and legal services were entered into and performed on Sunday, and that the said services were in violation of the laws of the state of Mississippi and would not support an action. He also gave notice under the general issue to the same effect, and alleged that the employment was gross, entire, and not divisible, and in such notice alleged that thereafter further services in connection with said matter were rendered by the said plaintiff on Sunday, the 23d day of June, 1918, and on secular days thereafter, to which said plea and notice under the general issue the plaintiff in his replication said that the said contract was not entered into on Sunday as alleged. At the conclusion of the evidence the court gave a peremptory instruction for the defendant, and judgment was entered thereon for the defendant, from which judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

There is a conflict in the evidence between the plaintiff and the defendant as to whether the contract was entered into on Sunday, but the plaintiff admits that he did some of the work and had certain consultations in reference thereto on Sunday. The testimony of plaintiff with reference to employment in part is as follows: "Some time along about the middle of June, 1918, last year, one day along about Thursday or Friday of the week, Mr. T. L. Gilmer and myself were standing on the corner talking by Parker & Parker's store. Mr. Brantley walked up and spoke to us and stood there and talked a few minutes about different things, and said to me, 'I want to see you and talk to you a little.' I said, 'All right.' He said, 'Clint Abrams and two or three other traveling men know you pretty well and said you were a good lawyer, and I have some business I want you to attend to.' I said, 'All right.'"

He further testified that Brantley asked him, would he be in his office on Sunday; that he usually attended to such things on Sunday, and that he replied that he would be if Brantley wanted to see him; that he did confer with Brantley on Sunday and discussed the business and did some writing in reference to the said business; that it was necessary for them to see the other partner in reference to the new contract; and that Brantley requested the plaintiff not to leave town, as he wanted him to see his partner and do the talking when his partner came to town. Plaintiff testified further that he waited some ten days for Brantley's partner to come because of Brantley's request, and that he neglected to make certain trips and to attend to certain other business because of a request of Mr. Brantley that he would not leave town.

It further appears that the plaintiff drew the contract of partnership between Brantley and his partner, or rather closed their business by a contract, that there was no agreement about the amount of the fee, but that after the business was concluded he sent his statement of his fee to the defendant, to which the defendant failed to reply, and he subsequently sent other statements and finally wrote Mr. Brantley that if the fee was not all right he would like to know about it. "I am due the courtesy of some attention in the matter, or at least an explanation of why the delay of payment."

To this the defendant replied: "I am in receipt of your bill for $250, also note what you say and fully intended to see you and talk with you about this bill, but owing to illness and being very much overworked have not been able to get to this. However, I want to say to you I think your charges are entirely too much. I would be glad to pay you what is right as soon as we can get this matter straightened out."

The plaintiff's testimony and that of other lawyers show that the services rendered were reasonably worth $500, but a peremptory instruction was given for the defendant on the theory that the services were rendered on Sunday in violation of § 1366, Code of 1906 (§ 1102, Hemingway's Code), which reads as follows: "1366. Sabbath; Violations of generally.—If any person, on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, shall himself labor at his own or any other trade, calling, or business, or shall employ his apprentice or servant in labor or other business, except it be in the ordinary household offices of daily necessity, or other work of necessity or charity, he shall, on conviction, be fined not more than $20 for every offense, deeming every apprentice or servant so employed as constituting a distinct offense; but nothing in this section shall apply to labor on railroads or steamboats, telegraph or telephone lines, street railways or in the business of a livery stable, meat market or ice house."

The plaintiff's testimony as we view it shows the retainer contract between the plaintiff and his client was made on a secular day, and his testimony shows further that he stayed in town for ten days at the request of defendant, neglecting to attend to other matters, waiting to close up the business for the defendant. It shows that some of the services were rendered on Sunday, but the contract is not shown to have been made on Sunday so far as the plaintiff's testimony is concerned. The plaintiff was entitled to recover a reasonable fee as a retainer, and a reasonable amount for his time in waiting in Belzoni at the request of the defendant, if his testimony as to these facts is believed by the jury.

It is our opinion that the services rendered on Sunday as shown in this record were not a work of necessity or charity in the meaning of the statute. There are some services that an attorney may lawfully perform on Sunday, as the law expressly authorizes certain suits and other legal matters to be done on Sunday. We do not think the contract an indivisible one. There was no contract for the Attorney and client—right of attorney to compensation.

Sunday—services of attorney—works of necessity or charity.

gross amount, but the plaintiff was depending upon the value of the retainer and particu-

Attorney and client—indivisible contract—work on Sunday.

lar services performed under the retainer, and for such time as he was detained in Belzoni on secular days. This view of the law, we think, is supported by Duggan v. Champlin, 75 Miss. 441, 23 So. 179; Western

U. Teleg. Co. v. McLaurin, 70 Miss. 26, 13 So. 36; and Campbell v. Davis, 94 Miss. 164, 47 So. 546, 19 Ann. Cas. 239.

The judgment of the court below is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial in accordance with this opinion.

Sykes, J., dissents.

Suggestion of error overruled.

ANNOTATION.

Application of Sunday laws to attorneys.

Legal services generally are not a work of necessity or charity, the usual exception from the statutory prohibition of work on Sunday. In the reported case (JONES v. BRANTLEY, ante, 1353) the services held to be prohibited, consisted in a conference at the attorney's office with a member of a firm as to the rearranging or adjusting of the partnership business, a discussion of the business, and the doing of some writing with reference thereto, but the court said that there were some services that an attorney might lawfully perform on Sunday, as the law expressly authorized certain suits and other legal matters to be done on that day.

It was stated in Peate v. Dicken (1834) 3 Dowl. P. C. 171, 1 Crompt. M. & R. 422, 149 Eng. Reprint, 1145, 5 Tyrw. 116, 4 L. J. Exch. N. S. 28, that it was doubtful whether an attorney was within the Statute of 29 Car. II. chap. 7, by which it was enacted that no tradesman, artificer, workman, laborer, or other person whatsoever, shall do or exercise any worldly labor, business, or work of their ordinary callings upon the Lord's day, or any part thereof, works of necessity and charity only excepted, as an attorney was not one of the persons specifically mentioned, and could not be included under the words "other person," since those words meant other persons ejusdem generis, but it was held that, even supposing that attorneys came within the statute, an attorney, in entering into an agreement on a Sunday for the settlement of his client's affairs, whereby he rendered himself personally liable to pay his client's debts, was not exercising his ordinary calling within the meaning of the statute.

In Markle v. Scott (1885) 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 593, upholding a contract made on Sunday (by an attorney apparently) in relation to the commencement of an attachment suit, the court said that the Sunday laws of the state prohibited certain labor on that day, and also provide that no suit shall be brought on that day, except an attachment suit, and that a contract made in violation of the statute would be illegal and incapable of enforcement, but that there was no law which made a contract illegal and void, or even voidable, merely because made on Sunday when such contract was in regard to a matter not made unlawful by statute, and that at common law, as to contracts, no distinction was made between Sunday and any other day.

Where an attorney contracts on a secular day to perform legal services in rearranging or adjusting a partnership business, and, in order to complete the performance of such services, stays in town over Sunday at his client's request, he can recover a reasonable fee as retainer, no agreement having been made as to the amount of his fee, and a reasonable amount for such time as he was detained in town on secular days, although some of the services were performed on Sunday in violation of the statute, since such contract was not an indivisible one. JONES v. BRANTLEY (reported herewith) ante, 1353.

In Alfree v. Gates (1891) 82 Iowa, 19, 47 N. W. 993, an action by an employee, whose character did not appear from the report, to recover for services of a character usually performed by attorneys, under a contract requiring him personally to go out of the state and look after the sale of his employer's land, using his best judgment and discretion as to sales, to look up taxes and pay the same, examine and report records, and make and record contracts and deeds, and to do generally everything arising in the selling and looking after the land and the sales and contracts already made, for which services he was to receive a certain sum per day for every day consumed, dating from the day of his departure from the state until his return thereto, Sundays and all, together with all expenses legitimately incurred in such business—the court apparently assumed that the performance of such services on Sunday would be illegal, and stated that two questions were presented for decision: First, was the contract illegal in providing for labor on Sunday? Second, was the employee entitled to recover compensation for Sundays included in the time he spent away from home? The contract was held legal upon the grounds that, as it did not in terms require the performance of labor on Sunday, the presumption was that it did not, and that while it might be said that all days the employee spent away from home to perform the duties required of him by the contract were consumed in discharging such duties, a day so consumed would not necessarily be spent in labor. Upon the second question the court held that the employee was entitled to recover for Sundays included in the time he was away, upon the ground that the specification of a certain compensation per day was simply a means adopted to ascertain the employee's compensation for his services.

It has been held that an attorney's clerk employed at a weekly salary cannot recover from his employer extra compensation for services rendered on Sunday in the ordinary calling of the parties in violation of the prohibition of the statute against working on Sunday, there being no ground for saying that the case is within the exception of works of necessity or charity, and there being no pretense that the parties kept the last day of the week. Watts v. Van Ness (1841) 1 Hill (N. Y.) 76.

G. V. I.

JOHNSON HARDY, Appt.,

v.

STATE OF TEXAS.

Texas Court of Criminal Appeals—January 21, 1920.

(— Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 217 S. W. 939.)

Evidence — of threat against jury.

1. Evidence is not admissible in a criminal case that accused has stated that if the jury convicted him he would "get" some of them if they did not watch out.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1361.]

— failure to object to predicate question — effect.

2. Failure to object to the predicate question propounded to an accused for the purpose of showing a threat against a jury does not estop him from objecting to the admission of testimony of such threat.

Witness — impeachment — immaterial matter — effect of answer.

3. The state is bound by the answer of accused to a predicate question propounded for his impeachment, which is not material to the case.

Name — idem sonans.

4. The names McPherson and McPhersion are idem sonans.

[See 19 R. C. L. 1334 et seq.]

Appeal — rejection of evidence — nonreversible error.

5. It is not reversible error to refuse to admit evidence in a homicide case that accused had told witness that decedent had threatened his life and he was afraid of him, if there was nothing to show the relation of the statement in time to the killing.

[See 13 R. C. L. 923.]

— description of wounds.

6. It is not error to permit witness in a prosecution for homicide to describe the wounds in the body of the victim and state that some of them were in the back of the body.

[See 13 R. C. L. 912.]

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Montgomery County (Singleton, J.) convicting him of murder. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. W. N. Foster, W. R. Cousins, and E. H. Carter, for appellant:

The judgment should be arrested and set aside because of the variance between the name of the alleged injured party as shown in the indictment upon which the defendant was tried, and the name of the injured party as shown by the uncontroverted proof, and all the proof on the trial, in that the indictment alleges the name of the alleged injured party as Monroe McPhersion while the proof and all the proof shows that his name was Monroe McPherson.

Stewart v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 154, 19 S. W. 908; Perry v. State, 4 Tex. App. 566; Martin v. State, 16 Tex. 240; Collins v. State, 43 Tex. 577; Henderson v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 38 S. W. 618; Carnes v. State, 53 Tex. Crim. Rep. 490, 110 S. W. 750; Mindex v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 38 S. W. 995; Robert v. State, 2 Tex. App. 6; Nance v. State, 17 Tex. App. 389; Westbrook v. State, 23 Tex. App. 401, 5 S. W. 248; Waters v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 31 S. W. 642; McDevro v. State, 23 Tex. App. 429, 5 S. W. 133; Chaney v. State, 59 Tex. Crim. Rep. 284, 128 S. W. 614; Burgamby v. State, 4 Tex. App. 573; Parchman v. State, 2 Tex. App. 241, 28 Am. Rep. 435; Neiderluck v. State, 21 Tex. App. 827, 17 S. W. 467; Brown v. State, 28 Tex. App. 65, 11 S. W. 1022; Harrison v. State, 48 Tex. Crim. Rep. 44, 85 S. W. 1058.

It is highly prejudicial to the defendant, improper and a gross error for the district attorney, in argument to the jury, to go outside of the record and state facts on his own information, not testified to by the witnesses.

Marshall v. State, 76 Tex. Crim. Rep. 386, 175 S. W. 154; Liner v. State, 70 Tex. Crim. Rep. 75, 156 S. W. 211; Grimes v. State, 64 Tex. Crim. Rep. 64, 141 S. W. 261; Johnson v. State, 63 Tex. Crim. Rep. 50, 137 S. W. 1021; Sorell v. State, 74 Tex. Crim. Rep. 100, 167 S. W. 356.

Threats against third persons when they are the jury trying the case are not admissible.

Luttrell v. State, 40 Tex. Crim. Rep. 651, 11 Am. St. Rep. 226, 51 S. W. 930; Lucas v. State, 50 Tex. Crim. Rep. 219, 95 S. W. 1055; Harrison v. State, 47 Tex. Crim. Rep. 393, 83 S. W. 699; Strange v. State, 38 Tex. Crim. Rep. 280, 42 S. W. 551; Brown v. State, 56 Tex. Crim. Rep. 389, 120 S. W. 444.

Mr. Alvin M. Owsley, Assistant Attorney General, for the State:

Lattimore, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from the judgment of the district court of Montgomery county, by which appellant was adjudged guilty of the murder of one Monroe McPhersion, and given a life sentence in the penitentiary.

The undisputed testimony shows that appellant killed deceased and one Gentry in 1904, and was arrested and placed in jail, from which he escaped, and was a fugitive from justice for many years, being apprehended, tried, and convicted in 1919.

On his trial, appellant took the stand as a witness in his own behalf, and testified in chief, as well as upon his cross-examination, that he killed both of said men, and gave his reasons for so doing. There was no sort of question raised as to the fact that he shot both said parties with a gun, and killed them.

While on the witness stand, after he had told his story of said killing, on cross-examination the state asked him if it was not a fact that, some three months prior to the date of said trial, he had stated to one Alton Utz as follows: "I killed two men, and twelve men will try me; and if they convict me and don't watch me, I will get some of them."

Appellant denied making the statement. Thereafter, the state placed the said Utz on the stand, and he stated that, at the time mentioned, appellant did make the statement contained in the above quotation.

Appellant reserved a bill of exceptions to the admission of said testimony, which shows that the objection as first made to the testimony of said Utz was that no sufficient predicate had been laid therefor, which objection was overruled, and the witness was permitted to answer. Appellant at once moved to exclude said testimony, upon the ground that the same was not material to any issue in the case, and because the same could only prejudice the jury against appellant, as said statement could only be construed as a threat against the jury. In this connection, counsel for the appellant stated to the court that they had not understood the language used by the state's attorney in laying his predicate, while appellant was on the stand, and hence did not realize that the language imputed to appellant in said predicate question was a threat against the jury, and that, if they had so understood, they would have made the further objection to the testimony of said Utz when it was offered, which was now made the ground of their motion to exclude said testimony, and then moved the court to exclude the testimony, as above stated. This motion was overruled, and appellant took his bill of exception, setting forth the matters just referred to.

The trial court approved said bill, with the explanation that appellant made no objection to the predicate question when same was asked of appellant while on the witness stand. We are of opinion that the action of the trial court, in refusing this motion and in permitting this evidence to remain with the jury, was error. The fact that no objection was made to the predicate question or answer does not

Evidence—failure to object to predicate question—effect.

estop appellant. It is well established that one may not be impeached by proof of statements as to matters not material; and if a party attempting to lay a predicate does so by asking about matters not material, he does so at his peril; and, if the witness answer without objection from the opposite party, such answer ends the inquiry, and the party seeking to lay the predicate is not allowed to prove the falsity of such answer. So it follows, in the instant case, that there was no need of objection to the predicate question. Was the matter contained therein material to any issue in the case? We think, in view of appellant's testimony, and admission of the fact that he had killed both said men, that the question and answer sought could shed no light on the case; but if the question had only been, if he had not stated to Utz that he had killed two men, and stopped there, we would have held the matter harmless. If the question be asked as to the materiality of the predicate in its entirety, truth and fairness compel us to say that it was not material to any issue. Not only was the state's proof clear and abundant that appellant killed both of said men, but this was uncontradicted by any evidence of the appellant, and, as stated, he himself had taken the stand and sworn positively that he did kill them. We are unable to see how proof of a statement by him ex cathedra would have any probative force to establish the fact that he did kill them, and are compelled to believe that such evidence was sought and introduced solely because of the other matters contained therein, besides the statement that appellant had killed the two men. It appears to us that the remainder of said statement contains matters which were most injurious to appellant. Whether the alleged threat against the jury was offered as impeaching evidence, or as an original

Witness—impeachment—immaterial matter—effect of answer.

Evidence—of threat against jury.

statement made by the accused, it should not have been admitted, or if it was given in the testimony by reason of the failure to make proper objection, under a misapprehension, then it should have been stricken out on a motion. It is very difficult for us to see how a jury could be that fair and impartial tribunal which is guaranteed by our Constitution, when it was revealed to them by testimony that the man whose life and liberty were dependent on their calm judgment had said of them that, if they decided that case against him, they would better watch out, as some of them would be his next victims.

"Mankind is unco weak, and little to be trusted;

Should self the wavering balance shake,
'tis rarely right adjusted."

—were the truthful words of a great poet-philosopher; and when the jury, who were just ordinary humans, were told that their own safety, and lives even, were threatened by the man on trial, it might have been thus made much easier for them to send the threatener to the penitentiary for life, and thus put him in a place where he could not do them any harm. We think injury probable from the admission of this testimony, and, in view of this verdict, sufficient to demand the reversal of this case.

In our opinion, the trial court correctly overruled the motion of appellant for a peremptory instruction of not guilty, upon the ground of variance in the name of deceased, as alleged in the indictment and as shown by the testimony. We are of opinion that "Mc-Pherson" and "Mc-Phersion" are idem sonans. See § 23, Branch's Anno. Penal Code; article 456, Vernon's Code Crim. Proc., and authorities cited.

The contentions arising from the argument of counsel for the state will likely not occur on another trial.

By two bills of exception, a review is sought of the action of the trial court in refusing to allow the witness Johns to testify to certain statements made to him by the appellant prior to the homicide. The statements were substantially that appellant told witness that he believed the presence of the witness with appellant kept deceased and Gentry from killing him on one occasion; and also that appellant told him that said parties had threatened his life, and he was afraid to have lights in his house at night, or sit by an open window, etc. This evidence was offered as showing the condition of appellant's mind, and was objected to as being self-serving. As presented here, no error appears. The relation in point of time of said evidence to the homicide is not shown, and, for aught we can tell, the alleged statement was made months prior thereto. On another trial, if it should appear that said conversation and statement occurred reasonably near the date of the homicide, we think same should be admitted. Cole v. State, 48 Tex. Crim. Rep. 443, 88 S. W. 341. Practically the same evidence was admitted when said witness detailed what occurred at the time he and appellant met and talked with one Palmer.

Appeal—rejection of evidence—nonreversible error.

We do not think there was any error in allowing the witnesses Sterrett and Anderson to describe wounds on the bodies of deceased and Gentry, and to state that said wounds, or some of them, were on the backs of said bodies.

—description of wounds.

The charge of the trial court was exceptionally full and fair. The special charges 1 and 2 asked by appellant were properly refused. As we read this record, and the evidence of appellant, there is nothing therein to support the proposition that appellant, just prior to the homicide, accosted the deceased or Gentry, and demanded that they leave his land and desist from cutting and removing his timber, or that he armed himself for the purpose of seeking an interview with them, to protect his property. He said in his testimony that he was hunting for his horse, and kept hearing a bell, and on going up the bottom he heard loud talking and cursing and went to it, and saw Gentry and deceased, and he went right up to them, and said: "Now, Gentry, you are taking my posts, are you?" And that Gentry denied it with an oath, and further called him an opprobrious name, and grabbed a stick and started toward him; and he threw his gun on Gentry, who turned away, and that he shot Gentry. That deceased then started toward the wagon on which there were an ax and a few posts, and he shot deceased before he got to the wagon.

The witness Jones, who saw appellant first after the shooting, said that appellant told him that he had shot Gentry and deceased and said that they cursed him, and that he could not take that. This evidence did not call for the issues contained in said special charge.

For the errors mentioned, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

ANNOTATION.

Admissibility of threats by accused against jury or prosecuting attorney in criminal case.

Research has disclosed little authority on the question under annotation other than the reported case (HARDY v. STATE, ante, 1357), which holds that threats against the jury, made by the defendant shortly before the trial, are not admissible, in case they tend to prejudice the jury against him. Such threats, it might be contended, should be admitted, as tending to show the character of the accused, or his consciousness of guilt or innocence. But while, on these grounds, it seems, under the authorities cited in the annotation, there may be circumstances where threats by the accused against those engaged in the prosecution or trial would be admissible, this would not seem to be the general rule, and such evidence, because of its clear tendency to prejudice the accused, should be received with great caution.

Threats against the prosecuting attorney, made by the accused after the crime, at a time when no prosecution was pending against him, and he had no reason to anticipate that he was to be prosecuted, were held inadmissible in Gawn v. State (1896) 13 Ohio C. C. 116, 7 Ohio C. D. 19, where they were made during, or soon after, proceedings before the grand jury in which the prosecuting attorney was attempting to secure an indictment against a detective employed by the defendant to trace rumors imputing the crime to him, and had relation to such proceedings. The court said that the only ground on which the admission of such threats could stand was that the declarations were of such a character and made under such circumstances as to indicate a consciousness of guilt in the mind of the accused as to the charge under investigation; that if one suspected of crime undertakes to obstruct a full investigation of his guilt by the destruction of evidence, or attempts by intimidation to deter the public prosecutor from doing his full duty in the matter, the inference naturally arises that his conduct is to be attributed to a consciousness of guilt; but that under the circumstances of that case it seemed reasonably certain that the hostility expressed by the accused toward the prosecuting attorney arose solely out of the attempt by such attorney to indict the detective, and the means used to accomplish this purpose, and that the accused did not contemplate by the alleged threats any obstruction of a prosecution against himself; that the evidence did not, therefore, tend to show consciousness of guilt, and was incompetent, and its admission prejudicial error.

That threats made by the defendant in a criminal case, after the beginning of the prosecution, against those engaged therein, may be admissible under some circumstances to show the character of the accused, is held in State v. Rorabacher (1865) 19 Iowa, 154. In sustaining a conviction for burglary, the court said: "This instruction was asked: 'Any threats made by the defendant, since the commencement of this prosecution, against the parties engaged therein, such as threatening to have satisfaction or revenge on such parties, is not evidence that can be considered by the jury in determining the guilt or innocence of defendant.' This was given, the court adding, 'except as links in a chain of testimony to show persistency in the crime charged.' It is difficult to perceive the necessity of this modification or addition, and yet we cannot say that it was error. The instruction itself was not correct for all cases. We can readily see that threats thus made might seem to indicate a mind equal to the commission of the crime charged or any other. While an innocent man might use such threats, yet they are more consistent with a wicked disposition than a life of honesty or integrity. And when the testimony shows, as in this case, that the probable criminals were discovered by a series of long-continued and well-conceived plans, persistently carried out by police officers and detectives, admitted into the confidence of the prisoners, expressions and threats may have been made and used from which the jury could see a determination to persist in the crime, and the development of a feeling extremely inconsistent with innocence. If the modification was susceptible of the construction that the court meant thereby that defendant admitted, by such threats, the truth of the charge against him, it would, of course, be erroneous. This, however, is not its fair construction. All that is meant is that such threats are only proper as showing the mind, spirit, and purpose of the defendant, in his defense and in relation to the crime charged."

In People v. Bezy (1885) 67 Cal. 223, 7 Pac. 643, 6 Am. Crim. Rep. 508, the court, in holding that threats made by the defendant against the brother of the deceased were not admissible on a trial for murder, said that while threats against a deceased are admissible to show malice, threats against another person are only admitted under circumstances which show some connection with the injury inflicted on the deceased; and that the evidence was inadmissible to show the general character of the defendant as to peace and quietness, for evidence of particular facts was not admissible on this issue.

And in Clinton v. State (1908) 16 Fla. 57, 47 So. 389, it was held that on a trial for arson, a threat made by the accused to "get even" with the attorney for the owner of the dwelling burned was not admissible, when it was clearly shown that the threat was directed against the attorney personally, and not the client.

It was held in State v. McHamilton (1911) 128 La. 498, 54 So. 971, that in a trial for shooting with intent to murder, threats made by the deceased against third persons, or against a class to which the prosecuting witness did not belong, are inadmissible, and that the admission of threats made by the accused about an hour and a half before the shooting against a class to which it was not shown the prosecuting witness belonged, which doubtless had the effect of impressing the jurors with the view that the accused was a malicious person generally, who disregarded human life, and was bent upon murdering anybody or everybody, was reversible error.

There are, of course, a number of other cases, such as Henson v. State (1899) 120 Ala. 316, 25 So. 23, and Carr v. State (1888) 23 Neb. 749, 37 N. W. 630, supporting the general proposition, apparently well established, that a mere general threat made by the accused, or one directed against some other person than the victim or the class to which he belongs, is not admissible against him.

The annotation does not purport to cover cases of threats against witnesses, but attention is called to several decisions of this nature, among possibly others, because of their relationship to the class of cases under consideration.

In People v. Chin Hane (1895) 108

Cal. 597, 41 Pac. 697, it was held that in a trial for murder evidence was admissible of threats made by the defendants, while in jail for the killing, against a witness who came to the jail and identified them. The court said that threats made by a defendant against a witness whom he expects to testify against him, with the evident purpose of intimidating the witness, are proper evidence; and that the fact that the defendants were in custody at the time was wholly immaterial.

And threats by the accused in a criminal case to whip certain witnesses for the state were held admissible in Deisher v. State (1916) 80 Tex. Crim. Rep. 428, 190 S. W. 729, the court stating that the effect of the threat would at least tend to show that the defendant was trying to prevent the witnesses from testifying against him, and that this would be a circumstance against him.

R. E. H.

---

GEORGE J. SIEDLER et al.

v.

JACOB S. WALN et al., Appts.

Pennsylvania Supreme Court — February 23, 1920.

(— Pa. —, 109 Atl. 643.)

Easements — reservation — who entitled to benefit.

1. A reservation by the owner of a parcel of land containing only his residence, when selling a portion of the tract, of a right of way to himself, his heirs and assigns, being the owners, tenants, and occupiers for the time being of the ungranted parcel, inures to the benefit of all occupiers after subdivision of such parcel into building lots, their families and others who, through permission of such owners, may desire to visit their homes for any lawful purpose.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1368.]

— increase of use.

2. Under a reservation of a right of way to the grantor, his heirs and assigns, the grantor's property may be improved so as to increase the use of the easement.

[See 9 R. C. L. 787.]

---

APPEAL by defendants from a decree of the Court of Common Pleas No. 2, for Philadelphia County (Rogers, J.), in favor of plaintiffs in a suit to restrain defendants from obstructing an alleged right of way over a paved carriageway. Affirmed.

The situation out of which this controversy arises appears from the following plat:

The parcels numbered 1, 2, and 3, the owners of which are now claiming a right to use the carriageway, do not border upon it, and the claim of right rests entirely upon the fact that such parcels were originally part of the larger tract having a right to the use of the way.

The further facts sufficiently appear in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. George Douglass Hay, John Lewis Evans, and William A. Schnader, for appellants:

Mahan's act in opening for public use apple orchard land and connecting it with defendants' carriageway without preventing the public from using the two ways as a through highway from Glyn-Wynne avenue to Gray's lane so increased the burden over defendants' carriageway, and changed the character of the user, as to amount to an extinguishment of Mahan's easement over defendants' carriageway. Thereafter Mahan had no right of easement which he could convey to the plaintiffs.

Washb. Easements & Servitudes, p. 627; McKinney v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 222 Pa. 48, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1002, 70 Atl. 946; American Academy of Music v. Weldon, 32 W. N. C. 307; Riefler & Sons v. Wayne Storage Water Power Co. 232 Pa. 282, 81 Atl. 300; Schmoele v. Betz, 212 Pa. 32, 108 Am. St. Rep. 845, 61 Atl. 525; Kirkham v. Sharp, 1 Whart. 323, 29 Am. Dec. 57; Darlington v. Painter, 7 Pa. 473; Jamison v. M'Credy, 5 Watts & S. 129; Coleman's Appeal, 62 Pa. 252, 14 Mor. Min. Rep. 221; Allen v. Scheib, 257 Pa. 6, L.R.A. 1917F, 446, 101 Atl. 102; Gowen v. Philadelphia Exch. Co. 5 Watts & S. 141, 40 Am. Dec. 489.

Even if the easement over defendants' carriageway was not extinguished, plaintiffs are not in a position to invoke equitable relief.

McCullough v. Broad Exch. Co. 101 App. Div. 566, 92 N. Y. Supp. 533; American Academy of Music v. Weldon, 32 W. N. C. 307; Crosland v. Pottsville, 126 Pa. 511, 12 Am. St. Rep. 891, 18 Atl. 15.

If the easement was extinguished, the defendants were and are entitled to help themselves.

Crosland v. Pottsville, supra; Allen v. Scheib, 257 Pa. 6, L.R.A. 1917F, 446, 101 Atl. 102.

If the easement is not extinguished, and if the plaintiffs are entitled to equitable relief (although defendants contend they are not), plaintiffs cannot prevent the defendants from taking effective steps consistent with such rights as the plaintiffs may have, to exclude the public from defendants' carriageway.

Kohler v. Smith, 3 Pa. Super. 176; Bosch v. Hoffman, 42 Pa. Super. 313; Hartman v. Fick, 167 Pa. 18, 46 Am. St. Rep. 658, 31 Atl. 342; Mercantile Library Co. v. Philadelphia Trust Co. 235 Pa. 5, 83 Atl. 592.

If defendants' rights are being invaded, it is immaterial whether they have sustained or are sustaining material damage.

Schmoele v. Betz, 212 Pa. 32, 108 Am. St. Rep. 845, 61 Atl. 525.

Mr. Thomas Raeburn White, for appellees:

Not only plaintiffs, but their families, servants, guests, tradesmen, and anyone lawfully visiting them, are entitled to use the way.

Gunson v. Healy, 100 Pa. 42; Benner v. Junker, 190 Pa. 423, 43 Atl. 72; Com. v. Burford, 225 Pa. 93, 73 Atl. 1064; Harper v. Greenmount Cemetery Co. 15 W. N. C. 172; Citizen's Electric Co. v. Davis, 44 Pa. Super. Ct. 138.

The opening of Orchard lane did not extinguish the easement.

McCullough v. Broad Exch. Co. 101 App. Div. 566, 92 N. Y. Supp. 533, affirmed in 184 N. Y. 592, 77 N. E. 1191; Mendell v. Delano, 7 Met. 176; Walker v. Gerhard, 9 Phila. 116.

Moschzisker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiffs filed a bill in equity praying defendants be restrained from obstructing, closing, or interfering with the former's use of a certain private road, or "paved carriageway." After final hearing on bill, answer, and proofs the injunction was granted. Defendants have appealed.

Prior to March 1, 1887, Frederick Sylvester owned a tract of land at Haverford, Pennsylvania, consisting of about 7 acres, bounded on the south by Gray's lane, on the east by Glyn-Wynne avenue, on the north by Booth's lane, and on the west by lands of one Dotson. The "paved carriageway" here involved connected the Sylvester's residence with the two above-mentioned lanes, the southern half of this private road, the part now in controversy, extending along the extreme western boundary of the tract.

On the date last mentioned Sylvester conveyed the Gray's lane front of his land, some 246 feet in depth, to Roland Evans. The latter forthwith deeded the western portion thereof, a little over one third of his purchase, to the defendant Lydia L. Waln.

In the deeds to Evans and Waln, there is reserved to "Frederick Sylvester, his heirs and assigns, being the owners, tenants, and occupiers for the time being of the adjoining piece of land to the northward," the "free use, right, liberty, and privilege" of the carriageway in question, 16 feet wide, running along the westernmost end of the land granted in the two deeds, "from said Gray's lane to said adjoining piece of land to the northward, . . . for all purposes of ingress, egress, and regress as fully and effectually as though said paved carriageway was a public highway."

The above-quoted reservation states that the carriageway is to be enjoyed by "Frederick Sylvester, his heirs and assigns, being the owners, tenants, and occupiers for the time being" of the lands to the north, "in common with the said Roland Evans, his heirs and assigns, being the owners, tenants, and occupiers for the time being" of the balance of the tract.

From the date of his conveyance in 1887 until March, 1913, Sylvester remained the owner of the land north of the plot conveyed to Evans, and during this period the paved carriageway was used only for family purposes by the occupants of the Sylvester and Evans or Waln properties; the road being marked at both the northern and southern entrances thereto by gateways.

March 27, 1913, Sylvester conveyed to one Mahan a portion of the original tract immediately north of the premises theretofore deeded to Evans, giving and granting to Mahan the same use of the paved carriageway which previously had been reserved in the deed to Evans; but Sylvester, by special covenant, then and there extinguished the right of passage possessed by himself, his heirs and assigns, and all future owners and occupiers of the remainder of the original tract (being that portion lying north of the part conveyed to Mahan), over the roadway leading southward therefrom to Gray's lane, being the paved carriageway in question.

The piece of land conveyed to Mahan runs clear across the Sylvester tract from east to west more than 400 feet in width. Mahan opened through the center of this property a private road 33 feet wide, extending from Glyn-Wynne avenue on the east to the western boundary line of the tract, at which point it connected with the paved carriageway. Prior to plaintiffs' bill there was erected on the Glyn-Wynne avenue entrance to this new road a sign, 41 inches long by 36½ inches high, reading as follows: "Private Road. Persons not having business with residents of this property are forbidden to use this road. Any violation of this notice will be prosecuted as a trespass."

Mahan laid out building lots on either side of the 33-foot road, some of which were conveyed by him to plaintiffs. In each instance the deed granted the privilege of the paved carriageway and reserved, for the benefit of the balance of the land, a like right.

From the time the Mahan land was thus divided into building lots, and occupied by several homes, the use of the carriageway increased, and this despite the fact that such way was legally and physically shut off from the easement of the remainder of the Sylvester tract to the north, and its use had been (as stated by the chancellor in his findings) also "lessened by the fact that some of the traffic to and from plaintiffs' properties [which had a right to use the paved carriageway] enters and leaves by way of Glyn-Wynne avenue."

The defendants, however, claiming that the opening of the 33-foot road practically makes a public thoroughfare from Glyn-Wynne avenue to the paved carriageway, and that this has so enlarged the use of the latter as to constitute an abuse of the privilege therein possessed by plaintiffs, threatened to erect a permanent barrier at the northern entrance to the way, and thus to exclude any and all future use thereof by others than the occupants of the Waln lot. The present bill was filed to prevent the erection of this barrier.

The chancellor finds as a fact that the paved carriageway has been employed since 1913 "by plaintiffs and their families, in walking and riding over it to and from the railroad station and stores in Haverford," that "their friends use it by vehicles, and tradespeople, who have business with the plaintiffs, also use it with their wagons and automobiles," adding: "Undoubtedly it is used to some extent by people other than those to whom the privilege is given by the reservation contained in the deeds," but that this latter use is merely incidental (not specially encouraged by plaintiffs), and not of a character materially to injure defendants.

The court below concluded as a matter of law that the right of way over the road in question might be "used and enjoyed by those who owned or occupied any part of the dominant tenement, for any purpose for which it may from time to time be legitimately applied," and that "only those who may be properly regarded as trespassers . . . can be excluded," adding that its present or attempted use by those "who have no right or authority so to do gives defendants no warrant or license to close the way or interfere with the lawful and legitimate use thereof by plaintiffs."

On these findings and conclusions, defendants are enjoined from closing the carriageway or in any manner "interfering with plaintiffs in their use" thereof "in accordance with their rights as set forth in their respective deeds." The decree further states: "Plaintiffs and defendants are to take such steps as will give notice to the public that the paved carriageway is a private road."

We see no error in the decree as entered.

The court below, in answer to one of plaintiffs' requests, states a conclusion of law to the effect that plaintiffs, their families, servants, visitors, "or others to whom they may grant permission," are entitled to the use of the way in controversy. This conclusion is justly complained of as too broadly stating plaintiffs' rights.

While we cannot agree with the suggestion of defendants that the words of the original reservation restrict the use of the carriageway to "the owners, tenants, and occupiers for the time being" of the Sylvester tract, no more can it tenably be maintained that Sylvester retained, for himself and his assignees, an easement in gross over the road, which could be granted by his or their "permission" to whomsoever he or they pleased. The words of the reservation, "owners, tenants, and occupiers," were evidently intended for the very purpose of showing that the easement was not in gross, but appurtenant to the land (Jamison v. M'Credy, 5 Watts & S. 129, 140); and, being so appurtenant, of course, the privilege includes not only the right to use the road by the respective owners for the time being of the several pieces of the original tract, but also

Easements—
reservation—who entitled to Benefit.

by their families, and others who, through permission of such owners, may desire to visit their homes for any lawful purpose. This marks the extent of the easement. Com. v. Burford, 225 Pa. 93, 99, 73 Atl. 1064; Gunson v. Healy, 100 Pa. 42, 46.

The court below did not err in stating, as a matter of law, that, when the easement was created, the parties must have anticipated the Sylvester property would not always remain in its then present condition, but might be

—increase of use.

improved in the future so as to increase the use of the carriageway. Benner v. Junker, 190 Pa. 423, 429, 43 Atl. 72; 9 R. C. L. 787.

"As a rule, it seems that no unlawful additional burden is imposed on the lands of a servient estate by an increased number of persons using an unlimited right of way to which the land is subject; and so, if such a right is granted to a person who afterwards erects tenement houses on his lands, the way may be used by his tenants." 9 R. C. L. 791, § 47.

We cannot agree that the facts of this case show plaintiffs, or their predecessors in title, to have participated in any endeavor, the purpose and effect of which was to increase the burden on defendants' servient estate, of a character and extent to justify a finding that the former had renounced, abandoned, or extinguished their rights of easement. While "it is difficult, if not impossible, to lay down a clear and definite rule to determine what may be considered a proper and reasonable use [of an easement], as distinguished from an unreasonable and improper one, and such questions must, of necessity, be usually left to the determination of a jury or the trial court, as questions of fact" (9 R. C. L. p. 787), here the chancellor has found the facts against defendants; and we are not convinced of reversible error in that regard.

The case of McKinney v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 222 Pa. 48, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1002, 70 Atl. 946, in no sense governs the present one, for the facts materially differ therefrom. In the McKinney Case the complainant's right in the alleged private way, as a private way, had been extinguished by his active participation in legal proceedings whereby the way was turned into a public road. After this statement of fact we need add nothing else in order to distinguish the two cases.

The many authorities cited by counsel on both sides have been examined and considered, but we do not feel that any useful purpose would be served by specially mentioning others than these already referred to; nor is it necessary to pass specifically upon each of the twenty-two assignments of error.

The decree is affirmed; costs to be divided.

ANNOTATION.

Right of owners of parcels into which dominant tenement has been divided, to use a right of way.

It is a general rule, where there is an easement of way appurtenant to a tenement, that the subsequent owner of a part of such tenement has the right to use the way as appurtenant to his particular part of the land.

California.—Currier v. Howes (1894) 103 Cal. 437, 37 Pac. 521 (stating the rule).

Colorado.—Durkee v. Jones (1900) 27 Colo. 159, 60 Pac. 618.

Connecticut.—C. B. Alling Realty Co. v. Olderman (1916) 90 Conn. 241, 96 Atl. 944.

Illinois.—Garrison v. Rudd (1858) 19 Ill. 558 (as stating the rule); Morrison v. King (1871) 62 Ill. 30.

Iowa.—Brossart v. Corlett (1869) 27 Iowa, 288 (obiter).

Massachusetts.—Underwood v. Carney (1848) 1 Cush. 285; Whitney v. Lee (1861) 1 Allen, 198; Fox v. Union Sugar Refinery (1872) 109 Mass. 292; Miller v. Washburn (1875) 117 Mass. 371; Boland v. St. John's Schools (1895) 163 Mass. 229, 39 N. E. 1035; Bailey v. Agawam Nat. Bank (1906) 190 Mass. 20, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 98, 112 Am. St. Rep. 296, 76 N. E. 449 (as probably approving the rule); Ball v. Allen (1914) 216 Mass. 469, 103 N. E. 928, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 1248 (as stating the rule).

Minnesota.—Dawson v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. (1870) 15 Minn. 136, Gil. 102, 2 Am. Rep. 109 (as stating the rule).

New Jersey.—Trenton v. Toman (1908) 74 N. J. Eq. 702, 70 Atl. 606.

New York.—Lansing v. Wiswell (1848) 5 Denio, 213, affirmed in (1848) 5 How. Pr. 77.

Ohio.—Sachs v. Cordes (1896) 11 Ohio C. C. 145, 5 Ohio C. D. 67.

Pennsylvania.—Watson v. Bioren (1814) 1 Serg. & R. 227, 7 Am. Dec. 617; Myers v. Birkey (1863) 5 Phila. 167; Walker v. Gerhard (1873) 9 Phila. 116 (a tenant of part); Zell v. First Universalist Soc. (1888) 119 Pa. 390, 4 Am. St. Rep. 654, 13 Atl. 447 (a tenant of part); Ehret v. Gunn (1895)

166 Pa. 384, 31 Atl. 200; SIEDLER v. WALN (reported herewith) ante, 1363; Citizens' Electric Co. v. Davis (1910) 44 Pa. Super. Ct. 138.

Utah.—Rollo v. Nelson (1908) 34 Utah, 116, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 315, 96 Pac. 263 (as recognizing the rule).

Vermont.—Dee v. King (1905) 77 Vt. 230, 68 L.R.A. 860, 59 Atl. 839.

Virginia.—Linkenhoker v. Graybill (1885) 80 Va. 835.

West Virginia.—Henrie v. Johnson (1886) 28 W. Va. 190.

It will be seen that it is held in the reported case (SIEDLER v. WALN, ante, 1363) that a right of way appurtenant to a tenement may be used and enjoyed by those who use or occupy any part of such tenement for any purpose to which it may be legitimately applied.

In Methodist Protestant Church v. Laws (1893) 7 Ohio C. C. 211, 4 Ohio C. D. 562, it was said that "the law undoubtedly in America is, that one having an easement by grant may assign that easement with the dominant estate, and the easement goes to every portion of the dominant estate assigned, however many the tenants may be."

Where there is a right of way appurtenant to a farm, and the farm is devised in two separate parcels, each devisee thereby acquires a right of way as appurtenant to his land. Lansing v. Wiswell (N. Y.) supra.

Where an owner of five city lots had built a building thereon, the entrance to the second story of which was by a single entrance and stairway, and on his death the widow was allotted some of the lots and the building thereon, it was held that the owners of the rest of the building could not tear down the stairway. Morrison v. King (1871) 62 Ill. 30.

That the subdivision in question does not abut upon the way does not alter the rule. C. B. Alling Realty Co. v. Olderman (1916) 90 Conn. 241, 96 Atl. 944; Fox v. Union Sugar Ref.

Co. (1872) 109 Mass. 292; Boland v. St. John's Schools (1895) 163 Mass. 229, 39 N. E. 1095; Ehret v. Gunn (1895) 166 Pa. 384, 31 Atl. 200; SIEDLER v. WALN (reported herewith) ante, 1863; Henrie v. Johnson (W. Va.) supra.

But in Dawson v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. (1870) 15 Minn. 137, Gil. 102, 2 Am. Rep. 109, it was held that the plaintiff, owning a part of what he claimed to be the dominant tenement, could not enjoin building on the alleged right of way, where it did not appear that his land abutted on such way, unless he could show a right either by grant or necessity to reach the way over the intervening lands. It will be observed that this raises the interesting question as to whether the court is concerned with the right of a party to reach the right of way.

In a partition between the two tenants in common of lot 1, which had a right of way over lot 2, the commissioners, in setting off to the defendant a part of lot 1 which did not touch lot 2, refused to give him a right of way over the rest of lot 1 to reach lot 2. The court, in affirming the decision, said: "But it may be said that, unless Johnson is allowed a right of way over lot A, which separates lot B from lot No. 2, he cannot get to lot No. 2, so as to enjoy his easement over it; and that therefore the decree complained of does in fact deprive him of his right of way over lot No. 2. This may be true; but it is also true that the decree does not attempt to take from him his right of way over No. 2. It merely denies him a right of way over lot A, and determines nothing as to his right of way across No. 2. If he can reach this lot in any legal manner, he has the undoubted right to use his right of way across it. As between him and the owner of lot No. 2, his right of way over this lot is entirely unaffected by the decree." Henrie v. Johnson (1886) 28 W. Va. 190.

In Fox v. Union Sugar Refinery (1872) 109 Mass. 292, an owner of land divided it into lots by a plan which included two passways, the first joining the second as the top of a T, the first passway connecting two streets and the second passway running from the first passway to a third street. Later he sold to the plaintiff lots which abutted only on the second passway, one of them abutting also on the second street. It was held that the plaintiff was entitled to use not only the second passway on which his lots abutted, but also the first passway, although to get to the first passway he would apparently have to use a part of the second passway beyond the boundary of his lots. The court said: "The grantee of an interior lot upon such a plan, referred to in his deed, cannot be restricted in his rights to the single passageway upon which he is bounded. The law will imply in his favor the right to use the passageway upon which he is bounded, not only for the purpose of going back and forth upon it, but also for the purpose of reaching the public ways, by means of such other avenues as his grantor has, by his plan, represented to exist. If there are two or more of such avenues, it is not for the grantor to say that his grantee shall be restricted to one only. The deed is to be taken most strongly against him, and in furtherance of the beneficial operation of his grant."

And where the owner of the dominant tenement was entitled to use several connecting passways, after sale of a part of such tenement the owner of the part so sold was not confined to the use of the passways touching his premises, although the other passways were not necessary to him. Boland v. St. John's Schools (1895) 163 Mass. 229, 39 N. E. 1035.

In a case where the defendant was cut off from direct access to the right of way, but was able to reach it through an adjoining lot owned by him, the court said that the deed "to the defendant of the front part of the lot did not, either by virtue of the division or of its detachment from the portion adjoining the passway, destroy the easement as appurtenant to it, or deprive it of the benefit of the easement in so far as there might exist means for its enjoyment. In the present case such means existed through access to the way over the Beardsley lot." C. B. Alling Realty Co. v. Olderman (1916) 90 Conn. 241, 96 Atl. 944.

The question whether the use of the way by the tenants of parts of the dominant tenement will enhance the burden upon the servient tenement seems to be very little developed by actual decisions. In one or two of the authorities the matter is referred to. Thus, in Henrie v. Johnson (W. Va.) supra, the court said: "The law seems to be well settled that where land is granted with a right of way over other lands, the right is appurtenant to every part of land so granted, and the grantee of any part, no matter how small, is entitled to it, provided no additional burden is thereby created upon the servient estate." So, in Outerbridge v. Phelps (1883) 13 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 117, where the point was not material to the case as decided, it was said at special term: "The general rule undoubtedly is, that where an easement is secured to a dominant estate, and is designed to benefit the same, in whosoever hands it may be, it will inure to the benefit of the owners of the several parts into which it may be divided, provided the burden upon the servient estate is not thereby enhanced."

There is, however, at least one case where the court considered that the use of a waterway by the owner of a part of the dominant estate would be unreasonable as against the grantor of the easement.

Thus, in Bower v. Hill (1835) 2 Bing. N. C. 339, 132 Eng. Reprint, 133, where the owner of an inn near a watercourse sold land between the inn and the watercourse to the plaintiff, who claimed that there was an obstruction of a way along the watercourse which had formerly been used by the proprietor of the inn, the court affirmed a nonsuit on the ground that "upon the evidence the right was found to belong to the King's Head Inn and yard, as one entire subject, and not to the frontage occupied by the plaintiff." The proprietor of the inn had ceased to use the watercourse, but the court considered that he might resume the use, "and the consequence would be, if the plaintiff were held to be entitled to the right of passage, that two different persons would be entitled to use it for themselves and their servants, with boats and barges, or, indeed, as many different persons as possessed any share of the frontage. This would be an unreasonable construction against the grantor, who may have been contented to grant the right to the occupier of the King's Head Inn and yard, from his knowledge of the degree of user which would follow from the grant when so limited."

The subject of rights of way across railroads is excluded. B. B. B.

LAURA A. COLLINS et al., Appts.,

v.

ADA L. LONG et al., Respts.

Oregon Supreme Court — January 27, 1920.

(— Or. —, 186 Pac. 1038.)

Will — guardianship — testamentary capacity.

1. That one is under guardianship does not destroy his right to make a will if he has sufficient mental capacity to do so.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1375.]

— effect of forgetfulness.

2. That a ninety-four-year old testator is forgetful, does not recognize persons and places, and at times has illusions does not invalidate his will if he knew what his property consisted of and how he wanted to dispose of it.

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a decree of the Circuit Court for Linn County (Bingham, J.) reversing a decree of the County Court in their favor in a suit to set aside the will of Samuel G. Collins, deceased. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion of the court.

Mr. N. M. Newport, for appellants:

The testator was incompetent to make a will because of his mental condition.

Sanford v. Hanan, 80 Or. 269, 156 Pac. 1040; Graves v. Graves, 132 Iowa, 199, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 216, 109 N. W. 707, 10 Ann. Cas. 1106; Tadlock v. Eccles, 20 Tex. 782, 73 Am. Dec. 213; Allen v. International Text Book Co. 201 Pa. 579, 88 Am. St. Rep. 835, 51 Atl. 323; Coffey v. United States, 116 U. S. 445, 29 L. ed. 687, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 437; Darby v. Hindman, 79 Or. 223, 153 Pac. 56; Mendenhall's Will, 43 Or. 545, 72 Pac. 318, 73 Pac. 1033; Luper v. Werts, 19 Or. 122, 23 Pac. 850; Hubbard v. Hubbard, 7 Or. 42; King v. Tonsing, 87 Or. 237, 170 Pac. 319; Stewart v. Rowell, 80 Or. 617, 157 Pac. 1064; Re Diggins, 76 Or. 341, 149 Pac. 73; Re Hart, 65 Or. 265, 132 Pac. 526; Tyler v. Gardiner, 35 N. Y. 585; Re Van Ness, 78 Misc. 592, 139 N. Y. Supp. 499; Re Van Houten, 147 Iowa, 725, 140 Am. St. Rep. 344, 124 N. W. 886; 1 Redf. Wills, p. 136; Hoffman v. Hoffman, 192 Mass. 418, 78 N. E. 492; Thomp. Wills, 1916 ed. p. 78, § 84; 2 Alexander, Wills, 1912 ed. p. 381, § 583; Greenwood v. Cline, 7 Or. 22.

Evidence was sufficient to establish undue influence on the part of testator's daughter and her husband.

Holman's Will, 42 Or. 359, 70 Pac. 908; Re Diggins, 76 Or. 341, 149 Pac. 73; Greenwood v. Cline, 7 Or. 17; Re Turner, 51 Or. 8, 93 Pac. 461; Parrish v. Parrish, 33 Or. 486, 54 Pac. 352; Tyler v. Gardiner, 35 N. Y. 592; Soper v. Cisco, 85 N. J. Eq. 165, 95 Atl. 1016, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 454; Burton v. Burton, 17 Ann. Cas. 991, note; Richmond's Appeal, 21 Am. St. Rep. 96, and note, 59 Conn. 226, 22 Atl. 82; Baur v. Cron, 71 N. J. Eq. 743, 66 Atl. 535; Hensan v. Cooksey, 237 Ill. 620, 127 Am. St. Rep. 345, 86 N. E. 1107; Post v. Hagan, 71 N. J. Eq. 234, 124 Am. St. Rep. 997, 65 Atl. 1026; Thomas v. Whitney, 186 Ill. 225, 57 N. E. 808; Harvey v. Sullens, 46 Mo. 147, 2 Am. Rep. 491; Garvin v. Williams, 44 Mo. 465, 100 Am. Dec. 314; Weston v. Teufel, 213 Ill. 292, 72 N. E. 908; Coghill v. Kennedy, 119 Ala. 641, 24 So. 459; 1 Woerner, Administration, 2d ed. § 32; Purdy v. Hall, 134 Ill. 298, 25 N. E.

645; Bush v. Delano, 113 Mich. 321, 71 N. W. 628; Boyd v. Boyd, 66 Pa. 283; Coghill v. Kennedy, 119 Ala. 641, 24 So. 459; Henry v. Hall, 106 Ala. 84, 54 Am. St. Rep. 22, 17 So. 187; Scattergood v. Kirk, 192 Pa. 263, 43 Atl. 1080; Marx v. McGlynn, 88 N. Y. 357; Gay v. Gillilan, 92 Mo. 250, 1 Am. St. Rep. 719, 5 S. W. 7; Haydock v. Haydock, 34 N. J. Eq. 574, 38 Am. Rep. 385; 2 Alexander, Wills, 1912 ed. p. 871, § 576; Hoffman v. Hoffman, 192 Mass. 418, 78 N. E. 592.

Mr. H. H. Hewitt, for respondents:

The mental capacity of the testator is to be tested as of the date of the execution of the will, and, other things being equal, the evidence of the attesting witnesses, and, next to them, of those present at the execution, is most to be relied upon.

Clark v. Ellis, 9 Or. 147; Pickett's Will, 49 Or. 150, 89 Pac. 377; Chrisman v. Chrisman, 16 Or. 138, 18 Pac. 6; Lee v. Lee, 15 S. C. L. (4 M'Cord) 183, 17 Am. Dec. 722.

A testator may not have sufficient memory or vigor of intellect to make and digest all parts of a contract, and yet be competent to direct the distribution of his property by will.

Chrisman v. Chrisman, 16 Or. 137, 18 Pac. 6; Stevens v. Myers, 62 Or. 381, 121 Pac. 434, 126 Pac. 29.

If a testator, at the time he executes his will, understands the business in which he is engaged and has knowledge of his property and how he wishes to dispose of it among those entitled to his bounty, he possesses sufficient testamentary capacity to make a will, notwithstanding his old age, sickness, debility of body, or extreme distress.

Luper v. Werts, 19 Or. 122, 23 Pac. 850; Franke v. Shipley, 22 Or. 104, 29 Pac. 268; Swank v. Swank, 37 Or. 439, 61 Pac. 846; Wade v. Northup, 70 Or. 578, 140 Pac. 451; Re Diggins, 76 Or. 345, 149 Pac. 73; Ames v. Ames, 40 Or. 504, 67 Pac. 737; Stevens v. Myers, 62 Or. 381, 121 Pac. 434, 126 Pac. 29; Chrisman v. Chrisman, 16 Or. 127, 18 Pac. 6; Potter v. Jones, 20 Or. 239, 12 L.R.A. 161, 25 Pac. 769; Clark v. Ellis, 9 Or. 123; Re Cline, 24 Or. 175, 41 Am. St. Rep. 851, 33 Pac. 542; Hubbard v. Hubbard, 7 Or. 42.

Influence from gratitude, affection, or esteem cannot become undue unless it destroys the free agency of the testator at the time the instrument is executed, and shows that the disposition which he attempts to make of his property therein results from the fraud, imposition, and restraint of the person whose superior will prompts the execution of the testament in the particular manner which the testator adopts.

Re Darst, 34 Or. 65, 54 Pac. 947; Re Turner, 51 Or. 8, 93 Pac. 461; Re Diggins, 76 Or. 346, 149 Pac. 73; Holman's Will, 42 Or. 357, 70 Pac. 908; Pickett's Will, 49 Or. 153, 89 Pac. 377; Hubbard v. Hubbard, 7 Or. 42.

It is not sufficient to show that a party benefited by a will had the motive and opportunity for such undue influence. There must be evidence that he did exert it, and so controlled the action of the testator, either by importunities which he could not resist, or by deception, fraud, or other improper means, that the instrument is not the will of the testator.

Hubbard v. Hubbard, 7 Or. 46; Cudney v. Cudney, 68 N. Y. 152; Woodward v. James, 34 S. C. L. (3 Strobb.) 552, 51 Am. Dec. 649; Re Hess, 31 Am. St. Rep. 665; and note, 48 Minn. 504, 51 N. W. 614.

Presumption of mental infirmity may be overcome by evidence proving that a person under guardianship at the time he executed a will was in fact of sound and disposing mind and memory.

Ames's Will, 40 Or. 503, 67 Pac. 737; Stone v. Damon, 12 Mass. 488; Breed v. Pratt, 18 Pick. 115; Slinger's Will, 72 Wis. 22, 37 N. W. 236; Re Sturtevant, 92 Or. 269, 178 Pac. 192, 180 Pac. 595.

Benson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There are two questions now presented for our consideration. The first is: Was Samuel G. Collins, on June 9, 1916, mentally competent to make a will? The second is: Was such will the result of undue influence, exerted upon the testator by the defendants Ada L. Long and her husband, John H. Long?

The history involved in the investigation of the case, as gleaned from the pleadings and the testimony, is about as follows:

Samuel G. Collins, who was ninety-four years of age at the time of the execution of the document tendered for probate as his last will and testament, had been married twice; his first wife having died after bearing two children, who still survive, being the defendants Ada L. Long and John R. Collins. Subsequently he married the plaintiff Laura A. Collins, who survives as his widow, by whom he had six children, who survive and are plaintiffs here, together with five grandchildren, who are the offspring of a deceased daughter. Both marriages occurred in Iowa. The family moved to Oregon in 1875, where the deceased purchased the farm which constitutes practically all of the estate involved in this litigation. It appears that on April 25, 1877, the defendant Ada L. Long, who was then, according to her own testimony, fifteen years of age, and according to her stepmother, seventeen, was for some reason which the record does not undertake to explain, driven from home, penniless, and forbidden to return, and thereafter the mention of her name in the household was taboo. Thereafter, according to evidence offered by the plaintiffs, strangers within the next two or three years wrote to the girl's father, urging him either to take her back into the home or to provide for her support, but he refused to do either. In some fashion she managed to survive and support herself, and finally was married to the defendant John H. Long, with whom she is still living at their home in Bellingham, Washington. On a visit to California with her husband, she visited her father at his farm, arriving there on his ninetieth birthday, and was cordially received during a visit of a few days. In 1913, proceedings were begun in the county court of Linn county for the appointment of a guardian for Samuel G. Collins, upon the ground that he was suffering from senile dementia and was in danger of wasting his property; and John R. Collins was appointed such guardian. Thereafter Mrs. Long made another visit to her father, finding him at the home of the guardian, at Independence, in Polk county. During this visit, the old man filed a petition in the county court of Linn county to be relieved from the control of a guardian, insisting that he was fully competent to look after himself and his property. After a hearing, his petition was denied. Immediately thereafter he undertook to convey to his daughter, Mrs. Long, the north half of his farm, and the deed so executed was duly recorded by her, and, with the consent of the guardian and the county court, she took her father with her to her home in Bellingham. The guardian commenced a suit in the circuit court of Linn county to set aside the conveyance to Mrs. Long, and a decree was made and entered in accordance with the prayer of the complaint. Mrs. Long and her father returned from Bellingham, to contest this suit, and after its conclusion again went to the home in Bellingham, where the old man remained until his death, which occurred on December 9, 1916. On June 9, 1916, the old man employed John R. Crites, an attorney practicing law in Bellingham, to write his last will and testament, which was done, and this instrument, properly executed and witnessed, is the one now contested. By its terms, the north half of the farm in Linn county is devised to the daughter, Ada L. Long, and in the south half is granted a life estate to the testator's widow, with remainder over to the other sons and daughters and the children of the deceased daughter, in equal shares.

The evidence by which the plaintiffs seek to establish the testator's incompetency consists, in the first place, of the decree of the county court, adjudging the testator to be an incompetent person and appointing a guardian of his person and estate. Counsel for plaintiffs urges that such decree, not having been appealed from, is res judicata and conclusive. This contention is fully answered by the opinion in Re Stur- tevant, 92 Or. 269, 178 Pac. 192, in which it is held that "a person under guardianship does not on that account lose his right to make testamentary disposition of his estate, if he retains sufficient mental capacity to execute a will."

Will—guardianship—testamentary capacity.

his estate, if he retains sufficient mental capacity to execute a will."

In the case of Ames's Will, 40 Or. 495, 67 Pac. 737, this court, speaking by Mr. Justice Moore, said: "The rule is settled in this state that if a testator, at the time he executes his will, understands the business in which he is engaged, and has a knowledge of his property, and how he wishes to dispose of it among those entitled to his bounty, he possesses sufficient testamentary capacity, notwithstanding his old age, sickness, debility of body, or extreme distress."

There is evidence tending to show that before the old man was taken to Bellingham he was very forgetful, would put money away and be unable to recall where he had placed it, would fail to recognize old acquaintances or familiar places, and that he on one occasion was heard tapping the wall of his sleeping apartment with his cane, and, when asked why he did so, explained that he was driving out the ghosts. Our attention is also called to the fact that on another occasion, when his daughter entered the kitchen with an apron full of chips, he referred to the chips as a lapful of "nigger babies," and laughed; and on another occasion, when the heavy rains had raised the water in a slough which passed through other farms before it reached his, he complained that neighbors were turning in water to drown out his farm. All of these fragments of evidence occurred more than two years before the old man executed the will in question. Upon the other hand, Mr. Crites, the lawyer who prepared the will, says that he received all of the data and information from the old man himself, who had no written memorandum with him when he described the property and named the members of his family, and that the testator appeared to him to be exceptionally bright and clear mentally at the time. The same witness testifies further as follows: "Well, he told me that he had two sets of children, and said that this farm in Oregon, which amounted to about 200 acres, was purchased or procured with money that came from land that was owned by the mother of Mrs. Long and John Collins—his son John—I think it was back in Iowa, and that when he married his present wife they practically kicked Mrs. Long out to hustle for herself, and she had been making her own living for years, ever since, and he felt as though he had never done anything for her, and had done her a great wrong, and he felt as though he would like to make that wrong right in making this will. That came up when I suggested to him why he did not make John and Mrs. Long equal in his bounty, and he said that he believed that he could right it, and while he wanted his wife to have a living during her lifetime, he felt that the other children had been practically raised out of the proceeds of this farm, and Mrs. Long never had any benefit from it. So, he thought, by giving her the north one half of the land and allowing his wife to have the other one half during her lifetime, and giving the other one half that his wife had during her lifetime, to all of the children—and especially, as John had always enjoyed the use of this farm, he ought to be classed with the other children—he could make things right."

W. A. McCutcheon, one of the subscribing witnesses to the will, says: "At the time he talked very intelligently, and seemed to have quite a business head on him, and was very firm in any remarks he made, and wanted everything done exactly the way he wanted it. I do not believe you could change the old man's mind at all. He seemed to be perfectly competent to make a will, and seemed not to forget it, and seemed to know what he was talking about."

Mr. Fred P. Offerman, the other subscribing witness, says: "I think he was competent, as far as I know. He acted that way. He was rather an old man, but I supposed he was competent."

Dr. Goodheart, a physician at Bellingham, who had attended the old man professionally on several occasions, the last being the day on which the will was executed, testified that he regarded him as an exceptionally capable man for his age, and quite competent. We think that, under the law as declared by this <sup>—effect of forgetfulness.</sup> court in the cases cited, the testator was fully competent.

The remaining topic for consideration is that of the exercise of undue influence. In support of this, plaintiffs call our attention to the deeds executed in favor of Mrs. Long while the decedent was under the control of a guardian, her taking him to her home in Bellingham and keeping him out of touch with his family, her active defense of the suit to set aside the last deed made to her by the old man, and the alleged statement made by her, that she intended to get the property mentioned in the will or spend a considerable sum of money in the effort. It is further urged that, although she and her husband both testify that they never at any time discussed with the old man the contents of his will, they are not to be believed, because she is a vicious and dishonest woman. It is true that the petition contains this allegation: "That the said Ada L. Long is a scheming unprincipled woman, without sense of honor, and for years was what is commonly called and termed 'an adventuress,' and it was a part of her scheme and purpose in getting him to go with her to the state of Washington, and getting permission to take him to the said state and out of the state of Oregon, to get his property."

No evidence was offered in support of these allegations, and they simply add to the weight of wrong heaped upon this defendant by the occupants of the house to which she had a right to look for guidance and protection. The statement of the testator to his attorney, that he was making this bequest in an effort to atone for the hideous cruelty of driving an unformed country girl, not more than seventeen years old, out into a hostile world to fend for herself, is much more impressive.

Practically every legal question presented in this case has been fully discussed and settled in Re Sturtevant, supra, and it is, therefore, needless to enlarge upon them here.

We conclude that the petitioners have not established the charge of undue influence, and the decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Bean, Burnett, and Harris, JJ., Concur.

ANNOTATION.

Effect of guardianship of adult on testamentary capacity.

This note is confined to the substantive question whether one under guardianship has the right to make a will, and does not include cases involving the admissibility, or probative force, of the adjudication establishing the guardianship, as evidence of want of testamentary capacity. That question is the subject of annotation in 7 A.L.R. 562.

It is a practically universal rule that the mere fact that one is under guardianship does not deprive him of the power to make a will.

California.—Re Johnson (1881) 57 Cal. 529.

Indiana.—Harrison v. Bishop (1891) 131 Ind. 161, 31 Am. St. Rep. 422, 30 N. E. 1069.

Iowa.—Re Fenton (1896) 97 Iowa, 192, 66 N. W. 99; Reeves v. Hunter (1919) — Iowa, —, 171 N. W. 567.

Maine.—Re Chandler (1906) 102 Me. 72, 66 Atl. 215.

Massachusetts.—Stone v. Damon (1815) 12 Mass. 487; Leonard v. Leonard (1883) 14 Pick. 280; Breed v. Pratt (1836) 18 Pick. 115.

New York.—Re Barlow (1917) 180 App. Div. 860, 168 N. Y. Supp. 131; Lewis v. Jones (1868) 50 Barb. 645; Re Pendleton (1889) 1 Connolly, 480, 5 N. Y. Supp. 849.

Oklahoma.—Hill v. Davis (1917) — Okla. —, L.R.A.1918B, 687, 167 Pac. 465.

Oregon.—Re Sturtevant (1919) 92 Or. 269, 178 Pac. 192, 180 Pac. 595; COLLINS v. LONG (reported herewith) ante, 1370.

Pennsylvania.—Draper's Estate (1906) 215 Pa. 314, 64 Atl. 520.

Rhode Island.—Jenckes v. Probate Ct. (1852) 2 R. I. 255; Hamilton v. Hamilton (1873) 10 R. I. 538.

Vermont.—Williams v. Robinson (1867) 39 Vt. 267; Re Cowdry (1905) 77 Vt. 359, 60 Atl. 141, 3 Ann. Cas. 70.

Wisconsin.—Slinger's Will (1888) 72 Wis. 22, 37 N. W. 236.

England.—Cooke v. Cholmondeley (1849) 2 Macn. & G. 22, 42 Eng. Reprint, 9, 2 Hall & Tw. 162, 47 Eng. Reprint, 639, 19 L. J. Ch. N. S. 81, 14 Jur. 117; Re Walker [1905] 1 Ch. 106, 4 B. R. C. 432, 74 L. J. Ch. N. S. 86, 53 Week. Rep. 177, 91 L. T. N. S. 713.

One under guardianship may also revoke a will made by him before he was placed under guardianship. Linkmeyer v. Brandt (1898) 107 Iowa, 750, 77 N. W. 493.

Two of the earlier New York cases, however, are opposed to the general rule. Thus, it was held in Re Patterson (1849) 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 34, that an habitual drunkard cannot make a valid will during the existence of the commission, without permission of the court. And there is a dictum in Re Burr (1847) 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 208, to the effect that one who has been found by inquisition to be incapable of governing himself and managing his affairs is legally incompetent to make a valid will while his person and property are under the control of the committee appointed by the court. But these cases were distinguished and criticized in Lewis v. Jones (1868) 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 645, which upholds, with an elaborate discussion, the general rule.

The reason commonly given for the general rule is well stated in Re Chandler (1906) 102 Me. 72, 66 Atl. 215, where the court said that the law recognized that a person might require a guardian by reason of incapacity in one particular, while in other respects he might be entirely competent, and that there might be partial insanity of a testator, some unsoundness of mind that did not in any way relate to his property or disposition of the same by will.

In some cases the holding in accordance with the rule is based upon statute. Thus, it is held in Re Johnson (1881) 57 Cal. 529, that the fact that one is under guardianship as an incompetent person does not deprive him of the power to make a will, since it is provided by statute that, after his incapacity has been judicially determined, a person of unsound mind can make no conveyance or other contract, nor delegate any power, nor waive any right, until his restoration to capacity is judicially determined; but if actually restored to capacity he can make a will, though his restoration is not thus determined.

And the holding in Hill v. Davis (1917) — Okla. —, L.R.A.1918B, 687, 167 Pac. 465, that one under guardianship, if actually restored to capacity at the time, may make a valid will, though his restoration has not been judicially determined, is based upon a similar statute.

And in Re Chandler (Me.) supra, the court, in giving the reason for holding that the mere fact that one under guardianship does not render him incapable of making a will, said that it was well settled that a man might be of unsound mind in one respect, and not in all respects, and that this principle was recognized in a statute of the state which provided that, when a person over twenty-one years of age was under guardianship, he was incapable of disposing of his property otherwise than by his last will.

And in Jenckes v. Probate Ct. (1852) 2 R. I. 255, holding that one under guardianship was not necessarily incapable of making a will, the court overruled the contention of counsel that a will was a conveyance within the meaning of a statute providing that all contracts, bargains, and conveyances made by any person under guardianship shall be utterly void.

It appears that the rule generally applies, irrespective of the cause or reason for the appointment of the guardian, since, although the usual reason is insanity, habitual drunkenness was the cause of the guardianship in Re Johnson (Cal.) supra; Re Barlow (1917) 180 App. Div. 860, 168 N. Y. Supp. 131, supra, and Lewis v. Jones (N. Y.) supra.

And in Slinger's Will (1888) 72 Wis. 22, 37 N. W. 236, supra, the guardian was appointed upon the ground that the testator was a spendthrift, and incompetent to have charge of his estate.

And in Jenckes v. Probate Ct. (R. I.) supra, the testator was placed under guardianship under a statute permitting a guardianship of one who, for want of discretion in managing his estate, shall be likely to bring himself and family to want, and thereby render them chargeable to the town.

It has been held, however, that a person under guardianship as non compos mentis is prima facie incapable of making a will, in Hamilton v. Hamilton (1873) 10 R. I. 538, and in Re Cowdry (1905) 77 Vt. 359, 60 Atl. 141, 3 Ann. Cas. 70. And in Re Fenton (1896) 97 Iowa, 192, 66 N. W. 99, there is a dictum to the effect that persons under guardianship are prima facie disqualified to make a will. But it is held in Re Cowdry (Vt.) supra, that while a person who is adjudged a non compos, and placed under guardianship as such, is thereby rendered prima facie incapable of making a will while the adjudication remains in force, an adjudication of mental incapacity to take care of one self and one's property, and the appointment of a guardian thereunder, does not render one prima facie mentally incapable of making a will. It appears in this case that the statute, as first constituted, provided for the appointment of guardians for insane persons, which were defined as including idiots, persons non compos, lunatics, and distracted persons, but that the statute was subsequently amended so as to include among those for whom a guardian could be appointed persons who merely lacked mental capacity to take care of themselves or their property, and who might, therefore, be possessed of a sound and disposing mind and memory.

The general rule hereinbefore laid down presupposes, of course, that the one under guardianship was in fact mentally competent to make a testamentary disposition of his property. This is sometimes expressly stated as a condition of the rule. Thus, if one under guardianship is restored to his reason, he may make a will, although the guardianship has not been judicially terminated. Stone v. Damon (1815) 12 Mass. 487; Hill v. Davis (1917) — Okla. —, L.R.A.1918B, 687, 167 Pac. 465.

It appears in Hill v. Davis (Okla.) supra, that, by a statute in force at the time, it was provided: "After his incapacity has been judicially determined a person of unsound mind can make no conveyance or other contract, nor designate any power, nor waive any right, until his restoration to capacity is judicially determined. But if actually restored to capacity, he may make a will, though his restoration is not thus determined." And it also appears from the case of Re Johnson (1881) 57 Cal. 529, that it has been so provided by statute in California.

And the mere fact that one is an inmate of an insane asylum at the time of making a will is not a sufficient ground for granting an issue of devisavit vel non, where the uncontradicted testimony shows that he had testamentary capacity at such time. Draper's Estate (1906) 215 Pa. 314, 64 Atl. 520. G. V. I.

GEORGE M. ESTES and Wife, Respts.,

v.

C. P. CROSBY et al., Appts.

Wisconsin Supreme Court—January 18, 1920.

(— Wis. —, 175 N. W. 933.)

Broker — liability for securing excessive price from customer.

1. A real estate broker may be liable for injury to a purchaser who relies upon representations of the broker's agent as to the lowest price to be taken for the property, which price is fixed by the broker without knowledge of the owner, although the agent acts in good faith, and therefore is not personally liable.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1383.]

—agent of owner — absence of legal interest.

2. A real estate broker who has no legal interest in property placed in his hands for sale is, in fixing prices, merely the agent of the property owner.

[See 4 R. C. L. 262.]

—employee of broker — subagent.

3. One employed by a real estate
8 A.L.R.—87.

broker to aid in the sale of property placed in his hands for that purpose is a subagent of the owner if the broker has authority to employ a subagent.

[See 4 R. C. L. 260, 261.]

Principal and agent — liability for misrepresentations of agent.

4. A real estate broker who benefits by misrepresentations of his subagent as to the lowest sale price of property in his hands for sale is answerable for the damages thereby caused to the purchaser.

— scope of authority — naming price of land.

5. An agent of a real estate broker is acting within the scope of his authority in naming to a customer the price fixed by the broker as the lowest price for which the property can be had.

Broker — liability of subagent.

6. An agent of a real estate broker is not liable to a customer for charging him an excessive price for the property, which is named to him by the broker, if he acted in good faith and after using reasonable diligence to ascertain the true facts in the case.

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Oneida County (Reid, J.) in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover damages for alleged deceit of defendants in a sale of real estate to plaintiffs. Reversed as to defendant Crosby. Affirmed as to defendant Hume.

Statement by Eschweiler, J.:

Both defendants in 1914 and for some time before were engaged in the business of dealing in real estate in Oneida county, defendant Hume having his office in the city of Milwaukee, and defendant Crosby at Rhinelander, in Oneida county.

The plaintiffs, husband and wife, were residents of the state of Missouri. Mrs. Estes in August, 1914, came to Rhinelander for the purpose of investigating a proposed purchase by them of a farm in Wisconsin. She called upon the defendant Crosby, knowing him to be in the real estate business, and was shown by him certain pieces of property for the sale of which he had or claimed to have the agency, among which was a farm that had been placed for sale through him by defendant Hume at the fixed price of $4,000, with an agreement for $200 as a commission in case of a sale. The farm in question at that time was actually owned by one E. S. Shepard. The transactions between Hume and Shepard were oral and in writing.

In July, 1913, Shepard wrote the defendant Hume, referring to the farm in question and saying: "The 197.95 acres on Lake Julia I told you you could have for $2,000 cash, no com. [understood to mean commission]. This land is actually worth $25 to $35 per acre, but owing to my need of raising money to pay this I have put the price down to almost nothing for the sake of raising immediate cash to pay with."

Three days later he again wrote to defendant Hume, referring to a talk with some man who had called on him with reference to the same farm: "I would not tell him the price I gave you. Don't tell anyone anything for fear—see?"

Hume testifies that subsequent to these letters Shepard orally raised the price to $3,500, then down to $3,250, and finally accepted $3,000 cash.

August 17th, plaintiffs wrote to Crosby: "What is the best terms possible to get on the place; as I told you, we can now pay $1,000 down and more as soon as we sell, which we hope to do soon, but, of course, we cannot tell. If we could pay the $1,000 down and let the balance run indefinitely at 6 per cent or until we can sell (which we hope to do soon), we will then turn the money in on the place or hope to make some next year if enough can be broke to farm. . . . I want to decide on some place, so please answer this the same day you receive my letter. . . . Please write just what you think we could do on same. . . ."

Crosby to plaintiffs, August 19th: "The piece in question belongs to a gentleman in Milwaukee who wanted me to sell it, and he told me to sell it for $4,000 on any reasonable terms. I think he would be satisfied with $1,000 cash down. . . ."

Letter of August 26th, Crosby to plaintiffs: "Dear Sir:—Mr. Hume of Milwaukee was in the office this morning and talked with me about that Shepard farm. I supposed all the time that he owned that, because he bought a tract of land from Shepard and he gave me a list of this farm for me to sell, but it seems that he does not own it and that Shepard still owns it, and has about decided not to sell, but he told Mr. Hume that he would sell it for $4,000 provided it is all cash and the sale must be made this week or early next. Mr. Hume says that he is going back to Milwaukee Friday, and if he can find anybody who will take a mortgage for $3,000 on the place, he will wire me and we will close the deal up at once, but I don't want to take your $1,000 and pay on the land until I know that he can get somebody to handle the $3,000.

In September plaintiffs purchased the farm by paying $1,000 cash and giving a note for $3,000 secured by mortgage. They moved there in October and have lived there since.

The deed from Shepard was made directly to the plaintiffs, and was sent to them by Crosby, after he had received the $1,000 and the mortgage, in a letter of September 18th, saying: "Dear Madam:—I just returned from the state fair, and the deed being all recorded, am inclosing it herewith. The deed was made from Shepard direct to you to save transfer through Mr. Hume, and Mr. Hume had a trade with him on some other property, so made the deed run '$ Consideration, $3,250 and other valuable considerations.' So you will understand why that sum is mentioned in the way that it is."

August 6, 1914, Hume had written Crosby, saying: "This was given to me as a 200-acre tract, and my price on it, as I telephoned you, was $4,000, and we would have to get this price even if the acreage should fall short."

September 1st, after Hume had been notified of the progress of the deal between Crosby and plaintiffs, he writes Crosby as follows: ". . . I was not able to see my party regarding the Lake Julia land until noon to-day, but am in shape to carry through the proposition providing I can get the property from Shepard as I talked to you. Shepard wants all cash and will consider nothing less. I am prepared to pay it to him providing the deal that you have on hand goes through. . . . If you will have your party deposit $1,000 in your bank at Rhinelander, payable to," etc., "also have her execute a mortgage of $3,000 payable to," etc., "on advice from you that the money has been deposited, I would immediately go up and close the deal with Shepard. In handling this matter on your part, I would not mention to anybody that you have anything to do with Shepard for the reason that I stated to you."

On September 12th he again writes Crosby: "I called up Shepard on the phone and I find that the matter is still open, so I secured money and will be up there on Monday morning to conclude deal, provided Shepard does not change his mind."

The following testimony was given by Mr. Hume on the trial:

Q. Did you have anything in writing or anything that was binding, between Mr. Shepard until that date when you went to his place of business or to his home with money in your pocket to buy?

A. Nothing. The question came up, and I said, "Now, Gene, you better give me a writing," and he said, "No; we have dealt enough, and my word will be all right; you get around here, and we will clean it up."

Shepard testified that he was paid only $2,750 for the property; that Hume claimed to have a partner in the deal with whom he must share a $500 commission.

After plaintiffs learned that considerably less than $4,000 had been paid to the owner, Shepard, on the farm, they brought this action against the two defendants to recover the difference between the amount so paid and the $4,000.

A special verdict was submitted.

to the jury, which, with the answers thereto, were as follows:

"Question No. 1: Did the statements orally and by letter, which were made by defendant Crosby to the plaintiffs, naturally and reasonably convey to the plaintiffs the understanding that $4,000 was Shepard's lowest price for the land in question? Answer: Yes.

"Question No. 2: If you answer the first question 'Yes,' then, did the plaintiffs pay $4,000 for the land in question by reason of such understanding? Answer: Yes.

"Question No. 3: If you answer the second question 'Yes,' then were the plaintiffs justified in relying upon the representations of the defendant Crosby in respect to Shepard's price? Answer: Yes.

"Question No. 4: Did the defendant Hume give the defendant Crosby reasonable grounds to understand, before the sale was made to the plaintiffs, that Shepard's price for the land was $4,000, out of which a commission was to be paid? Answer: Yes.

"Question No. 5: If you answer the first three questions 'Yes,' then what damages did the plaintiffs suffer by reason of the misrepresentations therein referred to? Answer: $875."

Upon the fourth question the court charged the jury as follows: "You will note that it relates to Shepard's price and to a time before the sale was made to the plaintiffs. Did the defendant Hume by his conversation and correspondence with Crosby give Crosby reasonable ground to understand that Shepard's price was $4,000, out of which he would pay a commission? If the evidence satisfies the jury to a reasonable certainty that this question should be answered affirmatively, then you will so answer it. Otherwise you should answer it 'No.'"

After the verdict the two defendants made separate motions for judgment in their favor or in default thereof for other relief, which were severally denied, and plaintiffs' motion for judgment upon the verdict granted, and thereupon judgment entered for the amount of damages as found by the jury, together with interest and costs, and from the judgment so entered the two defendants have severally appealed.

Mr. E. D. Minahan, for appellant Hume:

The fact that Hume paid no consideration for the option from Shepard to purchase the land from him did not make it any the less an option, as an option is merely "an unaccepted offer to sell."

Yerkes v. Richards, 153 Pa. 646, 34 Am. St. Rep. 721, 26 Atl. 221.

An action for damages for deceit does not lie against Hume for the representation made by Crosby to the plaintiffs with reference to the price at which Shepard was holding the land, assuming that such an action lies against Crosby on account of such representation.

Kennedy v. McKay, 43 N. J. L. 288, 39 Am. Rep. 581; White v. New York, S. & W. R. Co. 68 N. J. L. 123, 52 Atl. 216; Mayo v. Wahlgreen, 9 Colo. App. 506, 50 Pac. 40; Ellison v. Stockton, — Iowa, —, 170 N. W. 435; Samson v. Beale, 27 Wash. 557, 68 Pac. 180; Bateman v. Johnson, 10 Wis. 1; Akerly v. Vilas, 15 Wis. 402; McIndoe v. Morman, 26 Wis. 588, 7 Am. Rep. 96; Diggle v. Boulden, 48 Wis. 477, 4 N. W. 678.

Crosby's representation with reference to Shepard's price was outside the scope of his authority.

Tondro v. Cushman, 5 Wis. 279; Hoyer v. Ludington, 100 Wis. 441, 76 N. W. 348; Bryant v. Bank of Commerce, 95 Wis. 476, 70 N. W. 480; Ellison v. Stockton, — Iowa, —, 170 N. W. 435; Leggett v. Moore, 36 S. D. 288, 154 N. W. 804.

Crosby is not liable to an action for deceit on account of the representation made by him to the plaintiffs with reference to Shepard's price for the land; and if he is not liable, his principal, Hume, is not liable.

Ripy v. Cronan, 131 Ky. 631, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 305, 115 S. W. 791; McLennan v. Investment Exch. Co. 170 Mo. App. 389, 156 S. W. 730.

Mr. Charles F. Smith, Jr., for appellant Crosby.

Messrs. John Van Hecke and Max Van Hecke, for respondents:

Defendants were liable to plaintiffs for the fraud perpetrated.

Grant v. Hardy, 33 Wis. 668; Gunther v. Ullrich, 82 Wis. 222, 33 Am. St. Rep. 32, 52 N. W. 88; McKinnon v. Vollmar, 75 Wis. 82, 6 L.R.A. 121, 17 Am. St. Rep. 178, 43 N. W. 800; Bergeron v. Miles, 88 Wis. 397, 43 Am. St. Rep. 911, 60 N. W. 788; Hokanson v. Oatman, 165 Mich. 512, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 423, 131 N. W. 111; Hoyer v. Ludington, 100 Wis. 441, 76 N. W. 348; Matteson v. Rice, 116 Wis. 328, 92 N. W. 1109; Hull v. Doheny, 161 Wis. 27, 152 N. W. 417; Miranovitz v. Gee, 163 Wis. 246, 157 N. W. 790; Helberg v. Hosmer, 143 Wis. 620, 128 N. W. 439; Woteshek v. Neuman, 151 Wis. 365, 138 N. W. 1000.

Eschweiler, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant Hume assigns as error: (1) That there is no evidence to warrant the instruction to the jury given by the court to the effect that he (Hume) was the agent of the owner, Shepard; (2) or that Crosby was such agent; (3) that there is no cause of action shown as against him (Hume); (4) that the representation made by Crosby that the bottom price of this property was $4,000 was not within the scope of Crosby's employment; (5) that there is no ground for liability against the agent Crosby, and therefore there can be none predicated against Hume; and lastly (6) that there is no evidence to support the finding of the jury to the fourth question of the special verdict.

However much Mr. Hume may have felt justified from his manner of dealing with Mr. Shepard, and possibly from more or less of a custom among people engaged in that line of business, in proceeding to deal with this farm as though he were the owner, and therefore fixing such price upon it as he pleased and lawfully might, it nevertheless appears from the correspondence and testimony given above, there being no writing sufficient to meet the requirement of the statute, that there was at no time any binding agreement in law between them sufficient to give Hume an interest in the real estate. When the time came for the conclusion of the transaction with the plaintiffs, Hume evidently did not consider that any prior negotiations between himself and Shepard were complete or binding before he offered to Shepard the cash to meet the latter's then terms. This was after the plaintiffs had paid their $1,000 to Crosby and he in turn sent that sum to Hume.

In offering this property for sale as he did Hume could only act on his own behalf in case he had such a legal interest as would warrant such a course; if he did not possess such interest he was in law an agent of Shepard, the real owner. Not having placed himself in the first position, the legal consequence of his acts necessarily placed him in the second. The trial court was therefore correct in his charge to the jury in summarizing the situation by saying that Hume was the agent of Shepard.

Broker-agent of owner—absence of legal interest.

As between Shepard and Crosby the latter was therefore a subagent of the former, conceding Hume's right to employ such a subagent.

—employee of broker—sub-agent.

The contention on the third point to the effect that there is no cause of action against Hume also cannot be sustained.

Although Crosby was subagent for Shepard, he was also at the same time agent for the defendant Hume in this transaction with the plaintiffs. As such agent for Hume he represented to the plaintiffs that the lowest price for this property was $4,000. Hume fixed that price himself, and, knowing that it is being made by Crosby to the plaintiffs, receives the benefit of such representation. Having profited thereby, he, as principal for his agent, Crosby, must be held chargeable with the damage done to the plaintiffs by their relying upon and acting on such representation. First Nat. Bank v. Hackett, 159 Wis. 113, 119, 149 N. W. 703.

Principal and agent—liability for misrepresentations of agent.

There is support for the finding of the jury that the plaintiffs relied upon this representation that $4,000 was the lowest purchase price, from the evidence of the plaintiffs as well as by the assumption, in which a jury may properly indulge, that in the usual course of human affairs purchasers do not pay the higher in preference to a possible lesser price.

On the fourth point the evidence warrants the conclusion that in making the representation to the plaintiffs as to the price being the lowest Crosby was acting within the scope of his employment. Hume fixed this price, gave it to Crosby to be given to possible purchasers, and it was therefore strictly within the scope of the employment to so represent it.

The question argued in the fifth proposition as to whether or not there was a liability against Crosby is immaterial so far as defendant Hume is concerned. His liability is predicated upon that which was done on his behalf by Crosby, who acted only as agent for him, and from whose acts as subagent Hume reaped the benefit. Hume alone was the moving cause for this error of fact which resulted in damage to plaintiffs; therefore he alone must assume the consequent liability.

The finding of the jury embodied in their answer to the fourth question of the special verdict that Crosby had reasonable grounds to believe that the bottom price for this property was $4,000 is supported by the correspondence between the two defendants and the testimony. Crosby dealt with Hume alone, and not with Shepard. It was Hume who fixed the price, and he confirmed what Crosby had done in regard to the same by accepting the result.

On the appeal of defendant Crosby we deem it necessary to discuss but one of the several points urged by him. Being satisfied, as we have above indicated, that the jury were warranted in arriving at the conclusion that Crosby had reasonable grounds, based upon his transactions with the defendant Hume, to understand that the price of this property was $4,000 to Mr. Shepard less a commission, this in effect determined that Crosby acted in good faith in this transaction, and necessarily also that he used reasonable diligence in ascertaining as to the fact before representing the same. Being acquitted, therefore, by this finding of any lack of either good faith or reasonable care, there is no basis upon which he can be held personally liable. He concealed no material fact within his knowledge. He discloses in the letter of August 26th, supra, that he is merely conveying from Hume to plaintiffs the statement as to Shepard's selling price being $4,000, and he did not fail in the exercise of the ordinary care required of an agent in such a situation. He therefore breached no duty that he owed, if any, to the plaintiffs, and incurred no liability. While a principal may be liable for the mistake of the agent, it does not follow that an agent, having acted in good faith and with reasonable care, is liable for the mistake of his principal.

It follows that the trial court was right in awarding judgment against the defendant Hume, but erred in denying the motion of the defendant Crosby for judgment in his favor.

The judgment is so modified as to discharge the defendant Crosby from any liability thereunder, and it is allowed to stand as against the defendant Hume. Appellant Crosby to have his costs on this appeal as against the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs to have theirs as against the defendant Hume.

Petition for rehearing denied March 9, 1920.

A motion to amend the mandate

—scope of authority—naming price of land.

—liability of subagent.

Broker—liability for securing excessive price from customer.

having been filed, the following Per Curiam response was handed down May 5, 1920 (— Wis. —, 177 N. W. 512):

The decision and mandate of this court on the appeal in this case determined that the defendant Crosby was entitled to a judgment in the court below of dismissal of the action as against him. Upon such a judgment in the circuit court he would be entitled to costs in his favor as against the plaintiffs as a matter of course. For this reason we do not deem it necessary to change the mandate, and the motion to amend it is therefore denied, without costs.

ANNOTATION.

Liability of broker to purchaser for overstating lowest price at which owner is willing to sell.

Whether a purchaser of property can recover damages from the broker through whom he bought, for overstating the lowest price at which the property could be purchased, depends entirely on the facts involved in each case, and it is therefore impossible to lay down a rule that will apply in all cases.

In Kice v. Porter (1899) 21 Ky. L. Rep. 871, 53 S. W. 285, the evidence disclosed that the plaintiff, desiring to buy a house, went to the defendant, a real estate broker, asking to be shown property. After inspecting certain property she intimated that she would pay $7,000 for it, but suggested that she would first see the owner and inquire if he would accept less. The broker informed her that this would be of no use, as the owner would not accept a less amount for the property. Shortly after this conversation the owner called at the office of the broker and agreed to accept $6,500 for the property, and this proposition was put in writing and accepted by the broker. The same day the broker sold the property to the plaintiff for $7,000, and a deed was made to her a few days later. The additional $500 was retained by the broker. The question whether the transaction amounted to a sale to the broker and a resale by him to the plaintiff was considered the crucial one and the case was remanded for a retrial thereof. The court said that although the broker was not the agent of the purchaser, yet if he, as agent for the vendor, practised a fraud on her, and by this fraud obtained $500 of her money, she was entitled to recover this amount less the amount of the broker's commission. It was further said that if the broker had bought the property from the vendor before the sale to the plaintiff, the plaintiff could not recover, without regard to whether she knew that the broker had bought the property for himself. See to the same effect (1901) 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1704, 61 S. W. 266.

In Hokanson v. Oatman (1911) 165 Mich. 512, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 423, 131 N. W. 111, the action was in assumpsit by a purchaser against a broker for fraud. The plaintiff proved that the defendant falsely and fraudulently pretended that the owner was demanding $1,200 for the property, and that this was the lowest price obtainable. As a result of these representations he purchased the property for that price when, as a matter of fact, the owner's price was $900. The court quoted with approval from Kice v. Porter (1900) 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1704, 61 S. W. 266, supra, and in affirming a judgment for the plaintiff held that the rule of caveat emptor did not apply. In this connection it was said: "The verdict of the jury establishes gross fraud practised by defendant, both upon the plaintiff and the owner of the property. The plaintiff was a color mixer, residing in Chicago, wholly ignorant of the value of farm lands, and unable to form any rational estimate of such value by inspection. Knowing these facts and relying upon them to enable him to carry out his fraudulent scheme, defendant stated, in reply to plaintiff's question if the farm could not be bought cheaper, the representations hereinbefore quoted, contending that he had induced the owner to reduce the price to a point where it was a bargain, and the very lowest price the owner would accept. He also induced the plaintiff to believe that the $300 secured by the mortgage was for the benefit of the owner. The representations by defendant were not mere statements of opinion as to the value of the property, but were statements of facts within his own knowledge and unknown to plaintiff, which were intended to, and did, influence him in making the purchase, and upon which he had a right to rely. We agree with the conclusion of the Kentucky court of appeals that plaintiff made out a case of fraud and deceit, for which he was entitled to maintain an action of assumpsit under our statute."

The same principle was announced in Hack v. Crain (1915) — Mo. —, 177 S. W. 587. It therein appeared that the owner of real estate had listed it for sale with a real estate broker at the price of $1,600. The broker showed the property to a prospective purchaser who was not familiar with the value of the land, stating that the land was worth $2,500, that it was a bargain at that price, and that the owner would not accept less for it. On these representations the plaintiff purchased for $2,500, paying $1,500 cash, and giving the broker a note for $1,000 secured by a deed of trust. Affirming a judgment for the plaintiff in an action to cancel the deed of trust the court said: "In our opinion, counsel for the defendant has clearly misconceived the character of the cause of action charged in the bill. They seem to proceed upon the theory that the petition seeks to recover from the defendant upon the ground that he was the agent of the plaintiff. That is clearly not the case. The petition proceeds upon the theory that plaintiff was ignorant of the character of the soil and the value of the land purchased, and that defendant knew those facts, and that, after plaintiff informed defendant thereof and told him that he was going to rely upon his judgment as to the character and value of the land, then, under the facts and circumstances stated in the petition, which were fully proven by the evidence, the conduct of the defendant clearly constituted such a deception and fraud upon the plaintiff as to entitle him to the relief prayed, regardless of the question as to whether or not he had also perpetrated a fraud upon the vendor of the land."

It is held in the reported case (ESTES v. CROSBY, ante, 1877) that a subagent was not liable to a purchaser for overstating the owner's lowest price for the property, where it appeared that the subagent had reasonable grounds, based on his transactions with the agent, for believing that the price he gave the purchaser was in fact the lowest price, and he concealed no material fact within his knowledge. However it is held that since the agent gave this price to the subagent and knew that the subagent was representing it as the lowest price, which was, as he knew, untrue, and since he obtained the benefits from the transaction, he was chargeable with the damage done to the plaintiffs by their relying and acting on the representations of the subagent.

But a recovery was denied to the purchaser in the case of McLennan v. Investment Exch. Co. (1913) 170 Mo. App. 389, 156 S. W. 730, wherein it appeared that the real estate brokers, learning that a purchaser would pay $12,000 for certain property, obtained a contract from the vendor for the land at a price of $11,500. After securing this contract they returned to the purchaser, and, still claiming to be the agents of the vendor, represented that the lowest price their principal would put on the farm was $13,005. The sale was eventually closed for $12,928.50. It was held that the fraud, if any, was against the principal, since the brokers were acting for the vendor, and not for the purchaser. It was said further that since the plaintiff's testimony showed that he purchased the farm at his own price, for less than it was worth, no damage resulted to him by the broker's actions. The court said: "Under the rule of caveat emptor, which recognizes the parties to a sale as business antagonists dealing at arm's length, the purchaser has a right to buy at as low price as his skill will secure, and the vendor has the corresponding right to sell at the best price he can obtain. Neither has the legal right to the other's best price, and therefore the representation of either that he has made his best offer cannot be said to be a representation of a material fact. To say otherwise would be to impose a restriction on the right of persons to make their own bargains. We agree with plaintiff that defendants in law and in fact were the agents of Elebracht in the transaction. The trick by which they pretended to purchase the property themselves was nugatory as to their principal. The law would not permit them to do such violence to the trust and confidence their principal had reposed in them. Therefore the representations they made to plaintiff were the representations of their principal, and as they did not relate to a material fact and did not damage plaintiff, he has no cause of action."

So, in Merryman v. David (1863) 31 Ill. 404, wherein it appeared that the plaintiff bought real estate from the defendant, who represented himself to be the agent of the owner, paying a price in excess of the amount the defendant procured it for, although the facts showed that the defendant was not the agent of the vendor, the court, in denying a recovery, said: "The only thing in which appellee was misled, was as to appellant being Gregg's agent. Has he any interest in the relation that appellant occupied to Gregg? Appellant, having assumed to be Gregg's agent, if recognized as such, had no right to speculate upon his principal. He was bound to the utmost good faith to his principal, and had no right to realize a profit off the fund with which he was acting. Having received more than he accounted for to his principal, if he was an agent, he would be liable to his principal to refund the amount retained, beyond his compensation. But the rights, duties, and liabilities of an agent do not attach to other persons than the principal. And in this case it is not claimed that appellant was the agent of appellee. Nor can appellant be liable to him as an agent. If appellant has acted in bad faith with his principal, it does not concern appellee."

And it was held in Ripy v. Cronan (1909) 131 Ky. 631, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 805, 115 S. W. 791, that a purchaser of property could not recover damages from a broker who falsely stated that a certain price was the lowest sum at which the property could be purchased. The court said: "The general rule applicable to cases of this kind is that, if no confidential relations exist between the parties, and if the facts misrepresented or concealed are not peculiarly within the knowledge of the party charged, and the other party has available means of knowing the truth by the exercise of ordinary prudence and intelligence, and nothing is said or done to prevent inquiry by him, he must make use of his means of knowledge, or he cannot complain that he was misled." The main point of distinction between the foregoing case and Kice v. Porter (1899) 21 Ky. L. Rep. 871, 53 S. W. 285, supra, is the fact that in Ripy v. Cronan no effort or artifice was used by the broker to prevent inquiry or investigation by the purchaser, whereas in Kice v. Porter the purchaser expressed a desire to see the vendor and get a lower price, but was dissuaded from so doing by the statement of the broker that the seller would not accept a lower amount.

In Aronowitz v. Woollard (1915) 166 App. Div. 365, 152 N. Y. Supp. 11, it appeared that the plaintiff, as agent for one Champagne, sold to the defendant certain real estate for $12,500, receiving therefor the checks of the defendant drawn to Champagne, one of which for $500 was thereupon indorsed and turned over to the plaintiff. The defendant stopped payment on the latter check and action was brought to recover thereon. The evidence disclosed that the plaintiff asked the defendant to buy a certain piece of property; that the defendant inquired as to the lowest price and received the reply that the owner would not accept less than $12,500. The defendant thereupon inspected the property and then asked the plaintiff to see the owner and ascertain the lowest price he would take. Later the plaintiff returned, saying that he had seen the owner and that the owner would not accept less than $12,500. The plaintiff had an agreement with the owner by which he was to receive for his services in selling the property any sum he might be able to get in excess of $12,000. The owner received the $12,000 and the plaintiff received the check in question. In the lower court the defendant successfully defended against the check on the ground that the statement that the owner would not take less than $12,500 was false. On appeal the judgment was reversed and judgment directed for the plaintiff, the court saying: "The plaintiff was not the defendant's agent and was under no obligation to sell the property to him except upon his own terms, and under the agreement between him and the owner had a right to obtain the best price he could. A misstatement of fact, so long as it actually did not affect the value of the property, is not actionable. For all that appears the property may be worth much more than the price agreed to be paid."

Likewise, in Bradley v. Oviatt (1912) 86 Conn. 63, 42 L.R.A. (N.S.) 828, 84 Atl. 321, the plaintiff was denied a recovery against a real estate broker. Some time previous to the institution of the action the owner of the property in question listed it with the defendant to sell at "the best price obtainable." The plaintiff, who was well acquainted with the value of property, made a careful examination of this property and purchased it at a price which the defendant told him was the lowest price. At that time no price had been fixed by the owner. The defendant then wired the owner that he had sold the property, but falsely stated a lower price than the plaintiff agreed to purchase it for, and the owner ratified the sale, the defendant retaining for himself the difference in price. It was held that the defendant was not liable, the court giving three reasons for its decision: (1) That he did not know, at the time the representations were made, the ultimatum of the owner as to the "lowest price" it would take; (2) that if he obtained the best price obtainable, and then deceived the owner of the property, this was a matter which concerned the owner, and not the plaintiff; (3) that the plaintiff did not rely on the statements of the defendant in purchasing the property, but relied on his own judgment as to the value of the land and believed it was worth what he paid, basing his judgment on such investigations as he cared to make.

W. F. F.

WILLIAM J. HOGARTY

v.

PHILADELPHIA & READING RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.

Pennsylvania Supreme Court — October 9, 1916.

(255 Pa. 236, 99 Atl. 741.)

Limitation of actions — amendment of pending action — new cause.

1. A common-law action by a railroad employee to recover against his employer for personal injuries cannot be amended so as to count upon the Federal Employers' Liability Act after the limitation period provided by that act has elapsed.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1405.]

(355 Pa. 236, 99 Atl. 741.)

Master and servant — injury in interstate commerce — source of liability.

2. The right to recover for injuries to employees engaged in interstate commerce is governed entirely by the provisions of the Federal Employers' Liability Act.

[See 18 R. C. L. 837.]

— injury in intrastate commerce — common-law liability.

3. The common-law liability of a railroad company for injury to its employees in intrastate commerce is not affected by the Federal Employers' Liability Act.

[See 18 R. C. L. 841.]

Pleading — action under Federal Employers' Liability Act.

4. The pleading in an action to recover under the Federal Employers' Liability Act for injury to a servant in interstate commerce must allege facts and show that the case is within such statute, although it is not necessary to refer to the statute.

[See 18 R. C. L. 860, 861.]

(Moschzisker, J., dissents.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, No. 5, for Philadelphia County (Martin, J.), overruling its motion for judgment notwithstanding a verdict for plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. William Clarke Mason, for appellant:

There was no proof that the defendant was negligent.

Harrison v. Collins, 86 Pa. 153, 27 Am. Rep. 699; Mansfield Coal & Coke Co. v. McEnery, 91 Pa. 185, 36 Am. Rep. 662; Clough v. Hoffman, 132 Pa. 626, 19 Am. St. Rep. 620, 19 Atl. 299; Durst v. Carnegie Steel Co. 173 Pa. 162, 33 Atl. 1102; Price v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 202 Pa. 176, 51 Atl. 756; Patton v. Texas & P. R. Co. 179 U. S. 663, 45 L. ed. 364, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 275.

The original statement of claim was not sufficient to sustain a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, because it failed to aver that at the time of the injury he was engaged in interstate commerce, and this fact was necessary as an averment in the declaration and to be proved at the trial in order to sustain a recovery under the Federal Liability Act.

St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Seale, 229 U. S. 156, 57 L. ed. 1129, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 156; Pedersen v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 229 U. S. 146, 57 L. ed. 1125, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 153, 3 N. C. C. A. 779; Brinkmeier v. Missouri P. R. Co. 224 U. S. 268, 56 L. ed. 758, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 412; Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Duvall, 225 U. S. 477, 56 L. ed. 1171, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 790; Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. Lindsay, 233 U. S. 42, 58 L. ed. 838, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 168; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wulf, 226 U. S. 570, 57 L. ed. 355, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 135, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 134; North Carolina R. Co. v. Zachary, 232 U. S. 248, 58 L. ed. 591, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 159, 9 N. C. C. A. 109; Wabash R. Co. v. Hayes, 234 U. S. 86, 58 L. ed. 1226, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729, 6 N. C. C. A. 224; Garrett v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 235 U. S. 308, 59 L. ed. 242, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 32; Thomas v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 202 Fed. 766; Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Horton, 233 U. S. 492, 58 L. ed. 1062, L.R.A. 1915C, 1, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 635, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 475, 8 N. C. C. A. 834; Chicago, R. I. & C. R. Co. v. Wright, 239 U. S. 548, 60 L. ed. 431, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185; Toledo, St. L. & W. R. Co. v. Slavin, 236 U. S. 454, 59 L. ed. 671, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306; Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Padgett, 236 U. S. 668, 59 L. ed. 777, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 481; Moliter v. Wabash R. Co. 180 Mo. App. 84, 168 S. W. 250.

It was error to allow the amendment to the statement of claim filed by the plaintiff, for the reason that the amendment changed the cause of action declared upon from a cause of action at common law to a cause of action under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, and at the time the amendment was allowed more than two years had elapsed since the cause of action arose, and under the terms of the act of Congress such a cause of action was barred.

Central Vermont R. Co. v. White, 238 U. S. 507, 59 L. ed. 1433, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 252, 9 N. C. C. A. 265; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Burnette, 239 U. S. 199, 60 L. ed. 226, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 75, 17 N. C. C. A. 144.

Messrs. Simpson, Brown, & Williams, for appellee:

The amendment was properly allowed.

Marsh v. Pier, 4 Rawle, 273, 26 Am. Dec. 131; People's Water Co. v. Pittston, 241 Pa. 208, 38 Atl. 503; Nice v. Walker, 153 Pa. 123, 34 Am. St. Rep. 688, 25 Atl. 1065; Bolton v. Hey, 168 Pa. 418, 31 Atl. 1097; Devine's Estate, 199 Pa. 256, 48 Atl. 1072; Pantall v. Rochester & P. Coal & L. Co. 204 Pa. 158, 53 Atl. 751; Fellows v. Loomis, 204 Pa. 225, 53 Atl. 998; Re Pulaski Ave. 235 Pa. 151, 83 Atl. 687; Bell v. Allegheny County, 184 Pa. 296, 63 Am. St. Rep. 795, 39 Atl. 227; Allen v. International Text Book Co. 201 Pa. 579, 88 Am. St. Rep. 834, 51 Atl. 323; Lafferty's Estate, 230 Pa. 496, 79 Atl. 711; Cassell v. Cooke, 8 Serg. & R. 287, 11 Am. Dec. 610; Rodridge v. Curcier, 15 Serg. & R. 81; Coxe v. Tilghman, 1 Whart. 282; Knapp v. Hartung, 73 Pa. 290; Erie City Iron Works v. Barber, 118 Pa. 7, 12 Atl. 411; Noonan v. Pardee, 200 Pa. 474, 55 L.R.A. 410, 86 Am. St. Rep. 722, 50 Atl. 255, 21 Mor. Min. Rep. 517; Smith v. Bellows, 77 Pa. 441, 12 Mor. Min. Rep. 157; Holmes v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 220 Pa. 192, 123 Am. St. Rep. 685, 69 Atl. 597; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wulf, 226 U. S. 570, 57 L. ed. 355, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 135, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 134; Bixler v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 201 Fed. 553; Allen v. Tuscarora Valley R. Co. 229 Pa. 97, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1096, 140 Am. St. Rep. 714, 78 Atl. 34; Renn v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 170 N. C. 128, 86 S. E. 964; Kansas City Western R. Co. v. McAdow, 240 U. S. 51, 60 L. ed. 520, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 252, 11 N. C. C. A. 857.

Brown, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On February 1, 1910, William J. Hogarty, while performing his duties as an extra freight conductor of a shifting crew of the Philadelphia & Reading Railway Company, was thrown under a car and sustained serious injuries, which resulted in the loss of his right arm. He was thrown under the car by coming in contact with a telegraph pole, which he alleges, in the statement of his cause of action, had been negligently placed and left by the railway company too close to the track on which the cars in his charge were being shifted. In the performance of his duties at the time he was injured it was necessary for him to lean out beyond the side of a car to uncouple it while it was in motion, and in so leaning out his body struck the pole. The case has been twice tried. On the first trial the jury were instructed to find for the defendant, and judgment was subsequently entered in its favor. Plaintiff's statement of claim averred a mere common-law liability on the part of the defendant, and, it having proved that he had accepted benefits as a member of its relief association, the court below sustained its contention that he could not recover under Reese v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 229 Pa. 340, 78 Atl. 851, and other cases. He called attention to the Act of Congress of April 22, 1908 (35 Stat. at L. 65, chap. 149, Comp. Stat. § 8657, 8 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 1208), which forbids the defense set up; the defendant having admitted that at the time he was injured it was engaged, and he was employed by it, in interstate commerce. To this the defendant replied that, as the suit had been brought at common law, the Federal statute was without application. The rejoinder of the plaintiff was that if he should have formally pleaded the Federal statute he was entitled to amend. On his appeal from the judgment in favor of the defendant his right to amend was sustained by this court, and the judgment was reversed with a venire facias de novo. Hogarty v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 245 Pa. 443, 91 Atl. 854. The second trial resulted in a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff, and on defendant's appeal from it we are asked, in effect, to reconsider our action in sustaining the plaintiff's appeal from the judgment entered on the first trial; and we must do so if what we then held is, as counsel for defendant contends, in conflict with certain rulings of the Supreme Court of the United States, one of which was made since this appeal was taken. The questions which counsel were directed to argue are: (1) Were the original pleadings sufficient to sustain judgment for the plaintiff? (2) Did the court below err in allowing the statement of claim to be amended?

The Federal Employers' Liability Act of 1908 supersedes the laws of the states upon all matters within

Master and servant—injury in interstate commerce—source of liability.

its scope, and in cases involving accidents to the employees of railroad companies when engaged in interstate commerce the state laws must be regarded as non-existent (Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 56 L. ed. 327, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875; St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Seale, 229 U. S. 156, 57 L. ed. 1129, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 156; Taylor v. Taylor, 232 U. S. 363, 58 L. ed. 638, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350, 6 N. C. C. A. 436; Wabash R. Co. v. Hayes, 234 U. S. 86, 58 L. ed. 1226, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729, 6 N. C. C. A. 224; Hogarty v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. supra); but, while this is so,

—injury in intrastate commerce—common-law
liability.

the common-law liability of a railroad company engaged in intrastate commerce continues, and a right to recover from it for negligence, when so engaged, is still subject to common-law rules (Wabash R. Co. v. Hayes, 234 U. S. 86, 58 L. ed. 1226, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729, 6 N. C. C. A. 224; Hench v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 246 Pa. 1, L.R.A. 1915D, 557, 91 Atl. 1056, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 230).

The action which the appellee brought against the appellant was strictly one at common law to enforce a common-law liability. This conclusively appears from the statement of his cause of action, which is as follows: "On February 1, 1910, plaintiff was employed by defendant as freight conductor on a train of freight cars in its Philadelphia yards near American street and Lehigh avenue, and was directed by William L. Weyman, then acting for defendant, to place two of said cars (there being several in the train) on a certain track. In the performance of this duty plaintiff was required to lean over between two of the cars to uncouple them while the train was moving, and whilst so doing, through no fault of his own, his body struck a telegraph pole, he was thrown beneath the wheels, had three ribs and a collar bone broken, and his right arm was crushed (afterwards amputated). The defendant was negligent in having the pole too close to the track or the track too close to the pole, there not being sufficient room between the two to permit safe performance of the service as directed, and in directing plaintiff to put the cars on the said track, the danger being unknown to plaintiff and no warning given."

Not a word is to be found in plaintiff's statement indicating anything but a common-law liability on the part of the defendant, and to the charge therein alleged against it, it came into court with a complete common-law defense. It was held, however, on plaintiff's appeal, that, notwithstanding the common-law cause of action which he had set forth in his pleadings, the act of Congress was controlling, in view of the admission of the defendant that, at the time the plaintiff was injured, it and he were engaged in interstate commerce. After argument and reargument of this appeal, ordered of our own motion, we are of opinion that our view expressed on the first appeal is not in harmony with the rulings of the Supreme Court of the United States, and, as they are controlling, what we there held must yield to them.

As the act of Congress, and not the common law, gave the plaintiff a right to recover, his pleadings ought to have shown that his case was within the Federal statute, and proof of this was a material part of it. In Garrett v.

Pleading—action under Federal Employers' Liability Act.

Louisville & N. R. Co. 235 U. S. 308, 59 L. ed. 242, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 32, which was an action for damages under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, the plaintiff sought to recover for the pecuniary loss to the parents of the deceased employee of the defendant company; but, as his declaration failed to set forth such loss, recoverable under the act of Congress, it was held that for this reason there could be no recovery. In so holding it was said: "Where any fact is necessary to be proved in order to sustain the plaintiff's right of recovery, the declaration must contain an averment substantially of such fact in order to let in the proof. Every issue must be founded upon some certain point so that the parties may come prepared with their evidence, and not be taken by surprise, and the jury may not be misled by the introduction of various matters. . . . The request is now made that in view of all the circumstances, especially the former undetermined meaning of the statute, this court remand the cause for a new trial upon the declaration being so amended as to include the essential allegation. But we do not think such action would be proper. The courts below committed no error of which just complaint can be made here; and the rights of the defendant must be given effect, notwithstanding the unusual difficulties and uncertainties with which counsel for the plaintiff found himself confronted."

This rule was observed in Allen v. Tuscarora Valley R. Co. 229 Pa. 97, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1096, 140 Am. St. Rep. 714, 78 Atl. 34, where we held that the court below had improperly allowed an amendment of plaintiff's statement after two years from the time of the accident. The amendment averred that the defendant corporation, at the time of the committing of the grievances complained of, was engaged in interstate commerce. In holding that the amendment introduced a new and different cause of action, which was barred by the Statute of Limitations, we said, through Mr. Justice Mestrezat: "The original statement, it is true, averred the injuries of the plaintiff and the alleged negligent act of the defendant by which they were caused, but there was no intimation in the statement that the carrier was engaged in interstate commerce, or that the defendant's cars were equipped with couplers in violation of the act of Congress. Proof of the existence of these two additional facts was required to sustain the action as amended, and this is one of the tests in determining whether the amendment introduces a different cause of action. Wabash R. Co. v. Bhymer, 214 Ill. 579, 73 N. E. 879. It is apparent that without this amendment the act of Congress could have had no place in the case."

In Brinkmeier v. Missouri P. R. Co. 224 U. S. 268, 56 L. ed. 758, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 412, in referring to the attempt to secure the advantage of the Safety Appliance Acts of Congress under insufficient pleadings, Mr. Justice Van Devanter said: "The petition, if liberally construed, charged that defendant was a common carrier engaged in interstate commerce by railroad, that the cars in question were not equipped with couplers of the prescribed type, and that the plaintiff's injuries proximately resulted from the absence of such couplers; but there was no allegation that either of the cars was then or at any time used in moving interstate traffic. The supreme court of the state held that in the absence of such an allegation the petition did not state a cause of action under the original act. We think that ruling was right. The terms of that act were such that its application depended, first, upon the carrier being engaged in interstate commerce by railroad; and, second, upon the use of the car in moving interstate traffic. It did not embrace all cars used on the line of such a carrier, but only such as were used in interstate commerce."

While it must affirmatively appear by distinct averments, in the statement of a cause of action brought under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, that the defendant corporation was engaged in interstate commerce at the time of the grievances of which the plaintiff complains, special reference to the act of Congress in the declaration is not essential. The act is controlling if the averments in the statement show that at the time of the alleged negligent act by the railroad company it was engaged in interstate commerce. In Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Duval, 225 U. S. 477, 56 L. ed. 1171, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 790, the complaint of the plaintiff below made no distinct reference to the Employers' Liability Act, but, as it did allege that the railroad company was operating a line of railroad between Portsmouth, Virginia, and Monroe, North Carolina, and that the plaintiff, while in its employment as baggage master and flagman upon a passenger train running between the said points, was negligently injured, it was held that a ground of action under the act of Congress was sufficiently pleaded; and in Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wulf, 226 U. S. 570, 57 L. ed. 355, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 135, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 134, the averment was that the plaintiff had been employed in the performance of his duties on a train bound from Parsons, in the state of Kansas, to Osage, in the state of Oklahoma, and it was held that the act of Congress applied, because "it was sufficiently averred that the deceased came to his death through injuries suffered while he was employed by the defendant railroad company in interstate commerce." For the same reason a statement was held sufficient in Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. Lindsay, 233 U. S. 42, 58 L. ed. 838, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 168.

While a plaintiff pleading only a common-law right of action against a railroad company may not invoke the Federal Employers' Liability Act, the company in its defense may, of course, rely upon the act of Congress, if it can show, or the testimony offered by the plaintiff shows, that it was engaged in interstate commerce at the time the plaintiff was injured. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Hesterly, 228 U. S. 702, 57 L. ed. 1031, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 703; North Carolina R. Co. v. Zachary, 232 U. S. 248, 58 L. ed. 591, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 159, 9 N. C. C. A. 109; Toledo, St. L. & W. R. Co. v. Slavin, 236 U. S. 454, 59 L. ed. 671, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306.

In the case at bar, as already observed, plaintiff's original statement showed nothing but a mere common-law right of action against the defendant. By it the railroad company was notified to come into court and defend against a common-law charge of negligence. Nothing within its four corners even hinted that plaintiff had undertaken to hold it liable under the act of Congress which had given him a cause of action. In view of his receipt of benefits, he had no common-law right of action, and so the record stood until more than four years had elapsed from the time he had acquired a cause of action against it under the Federal statute; but that statute provides that no action shall be maintained under it "unless commenced within two years from the day the cause of action accrued;" and we now come to the consideration of the second question, of which little need be said, as we regard it as settled by a ruling of the Supreme Court of the United States, announced since we heard this appeal.

In Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Renn, 241 U. S. 290, 60 L. ed. 1006, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 567, 17 N. C. C. A. 1, the plaintiff sought to recover under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, but it was contended by the defendant that his statement did not sufficiently aver a right to recover under that act. It averred that the defendant was operating a line of railroad "in Virginia, North Carolina, and elsewhere." Over the objection of the defendant the trial court allowed the plaintiff to amend by averring that the line of the defendant's railroad extended between the city of Raleigh, in the state of North Carolina, and the city of Richmond, in the state of Virginia. On a writ of error taken by the defendant company, the Supreme Court of the United States, in an opinion filed May 22, 1916, held that

Limitation of actions—amendment of pending action—
new cause.

the amendment had not been improperly allowed, as no new cause of action had been introduced.

Mr. Justice Van Devanter, speaking for the court, said: "This was an action by an employee of a railroad company to recover from the latter for personal injuries suffered through its negligence. The plaintiff had a verdict and judgment under the Employers' Liability Act of Congress (chap. 149, 35 Stat. at L. 65, Comp. Stat. § 8657, 8 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 1208; chap. 143, 36 Stat. at L. 291, Comp. Stat. § 8662; 8 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 1369), the judgment was affirmed (170 N. C. 128, 86 S. E. 964), and the defendant brings the case here. The original complaint was exceedingly brief, and did not sufficiently allege that at the time of the injury the defendant was engaged and the plaintiff employed in interstate commerce. During the trial the defendant sought some advantage from this, and the court, over the defendant's objection, permitted the complaint to be so amended as to state distinctly the defendant's engagement and the plaintiff's employment in such commerce. Both parties conceded that what was alleged in the amendment was true in fact and conformed to the proofs, and that point has since been treated as settled. The defendant's objection was that the original complaint did not state a cause of action under the act of Congress, that with the amendment the complaint would state a new cause of action under that act, and that, as more than two years had elapsed since the right of action accrued, the amendment could not be made the medium of introducing this new cause of action consistently with the provision in § 6, that 'no action shall be maintained under this act unless commenced within two years from the day the cause of action accrued.' Whether in what was done this restriction was in effect disregarded is a Federal question and subject to re-examination here, however much the allowance of the amendment otherwise might have rested in discretion, or been a matter of local procedure. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Burnette, 239 U. S. 199, 60 L. ed. 226, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 75, 17 N. C. C. A. 144. If the amendment merely expanded or amplified what was alleged in support of the cause of action already asserted, it related back to the commencement of the action, and was not affected by the intervening lapse of time. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cox, 145 U. S. 593, 603, 604, 36 L. ed. 829, 832, 833, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905; Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Laird, 164 U. S. 393, 41 L. ed. 485, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 120; Hutchinson v. Otis, 190 U. S. 552, 555, 47 L. ed. 1179, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 778; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wulf, 226 U. S. 570, 576, 57 L. ed. 355, 363, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 135, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 134; Crotty v. Chicago Great Western R. Co. 95 C. C. A. 91, 169 Fed. 593. But if it introduced a new or different cause of action, it was the equivalent of a new suit, as to which the running of the limitation was not theretofore arrested. Sicard v. Davis, 6 Pet. 124, 140, 8 L. ed. 342, 348; Union P. R. Co. v. Wyler, 158 U. S. 285, 39 L. ed. 983, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 877; United States v. Dalcour, 203 U. S. 408, 423, 51 L. ed. 248, 251, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 58. The original complaint set forth that the defendant was operating a line of railroad in Virginia, North Carolina, and elsewhere; that the plaintiff was in its employ; that when he was injured he was in the line of duty and was proceeding to get aboard one of the defendant's trains; and that the injury was sustained at Cochran, Virginia, through the defendant's negligence in permitting a part of its right of way at that place to get and remain in a dangerous condition. Of course, the right of action could not arise under the laws of North Carolina when the causal negligence and the injury occurred in Virginia; and the absence of any mention of the laws of the latter state was at least consistent with their inapplicability. Besides, the allegation that the defendant was operating a railroad in states other than Virginia was superfluous if the right of action arose under the laws of that state, and was pertinent only if it arose in interstate commerce, and therefore under the act of Congress. In these circumstances, while the question is not free from difficulty, we cannot say that the court erred in treating the original complaint as pointing, although only imperfectly, to a cause of action under the law of Congress. And this being so, it must be taken that the amendment merely expanded or amplified what was alleged in support of that cause of action and related back to the commencement of the suit, which was before the limitation had expired."

It clearly appears from this last utterance of the Supreme Court of the United States that, if Renn's original complaint had averred merely a common-law right of action against the railway company, with nothing in it indicating that the employer was operating a line of railroad from one state into another, the amendment would have been improperly allowed, for the reason that it introduced a new cause of action under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, which had been barred, by the express terms of that act, after two years from the time of the accident. What was held in the Renn Case logically followed what the court had said in Garrett v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 235 U. S. 308, 59 L. ed. 242, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 32.

On October 20, 1914, nearly five years after this appellee was injured, the court below, under what we held on the first appeal, allowed his statement to be amended as follows: "On February 1, 1910, the defendant was engaged as a common carrier by railroad in commerce between the several states, and, subject to all the provisions of the Act of Congress of April 22, 1908 (35 Stat. at L. 65, chap. 149, Comp. Stat. § 8657, 8 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 1208), the plaintiff was employed by defendant as freight conductor in such interstate commerce, on a train of freight cars in the Philadelphia yards of the defendant near American street and Lehigh avenue, and was directed by William L. Weyman, then acting for defendant, to place two of said cars (there being several in the train) on a certain track."

The allowance of this amendment was excepted to by the defendant, on the ground that it introduced a new cause of action under the Act of Congress of April 22, 1908, which was barred. Under Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Renn, it was improperly allowed, and proof in support of it, if admitted by the court below, would not have helped the plaintiff. The same is true of the admission by the defendant that when he was injured, it was engaged, and he was employed by it, in interstate commerce. At the time the admission was made, and for nearly three years before, all liability of the defendant under the Act of Congress had ceased; for none could have been enforced against it except by an action brought within two years from the time the injuries were sustained. The admission was not that the plaintiff had a cause of action under the act of Congress, but merely that at the time of the accident, and for two years thereafter, the defendant might have been liable under the act, which, however, was no longer availing to the plaintiff.

The assignments of error are sustained, the judgment below is re-

ciple, nearly, if not quite, rules the present one. In Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Wagner, 239 U. S. 452, 60 L. ed. 379, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 135, 17 N. C. C. A. 1087, an action was brought in a state court to recover for personal injuries. The plaintiff was not employed by the defendant company, and therefore could not sue under the Federal statute. The defendant proved that the plaintiff was an employee of the Burlington Company, another railroad, and that he had received benefits as a member of the latter's relief association; further, that this Burlington Company was a joint tort-feasor with it, the defendant. On these facts the defendant claimed that, "since there can be but one satisfaction for an injury," the plaintiff was not entitled to recover against it, because its joint tort-feasor, the Burlington Company, had been released from liability through and by reason of the acceptance of its relief benefits by the plaintiff. The state supreme court held that, notwithstanding the fact the action was not brought under the act of Congress, since it appeared the accident happened in the course of interstate commerce, the validity of the alleged release must be tested by the Federal, and not the state, law. This view was sustained on appeal, the Supreme Court of the United States saying (239 U. S. 457, 458): "It is urged that § 5 [the part of the Federal Employers' Liability Act which prohibits the defense in question] was wholly inapplicable in an action brought against a third person to enforce a liability not created by the Federal act. The argument is, in substance, that in this action against the Alton Company, inasmuch as it is not brought to enforce the liability imposed by the Federal statute, § 5 cannot be considered for any purpose; that is, that under § 5 the release can be deemed to be invalid only so far as it is actually used to protect the Burlington Company from liability in a suit against it under the act. This involves, we think, a fundamental misconception. It is, of course, impossible to determine whether a joint tort-feasor is discharged except by asking what would happen if he were sued. The liability created by the act arose when the injury was received, and it is clear that, if it was received while Wagner was engaged in interstate commerce, his acceptance of benefits under the relief contract would not bar an action against his employer. . . . When, therefore, the Alton Company sought to escape from liability otherwise existing under the state law by reason of a release to the Burlington Company, it was entirely competent for the plaintiff to show the nature of his employment and that the asserted release was within the Federal statute, and could not operate as a discharge."

It is clear that the above quotation means that, had the Burlington Company been sued as the Alton Company was in the then present action, the Federal act would have applied so as to exclude the defense depended upon, and it is particularly to be observed that the court there states the alleged release "could not operate as a discharge." In fact, as I read it, the whole context of the opinion indicates that the Federal Supreme Court meant to rule that such a release can never operate as a discharge in any case where suit is brought against a railroad by an employee injured in the course of interstate commerce, where the latter fact is properly made to appear, and that this rule applies, whether the action to recover for the injuries is formally instituted under the act of Congress or otherwise. . In this connection, when the case just reviewed was in the supreme court of Illinois on appeal (Wagner v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 265 Ill. 245, 251, 252, 106 N. E. 809, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 778), that tribunal took the position that, although under the local law the defense of an implied release through the acceptance of relief association benefits might ordinarily be a valid one, yet "the state law in this regard has been modified . . . by the Federal Employers' Liability Act as to cases where injuries are received by certain employees of an employer engaged in interstate commerce," and in such cases the defense in question cannot apply. After first saying that a stipulation filed at the trial of the case left it as though no allegation that the plaintiff had been injured in interstate commerce had been made in the declaration, the court adds: "When plaintiff in error [the defendant below] attempted to prove a satisfaction by the payment of benefits by its joint tort-feasor, the Burlington Company, to the defendant in error, it was proper for defendant in error [the plaintiff below], in rebuttal, to show that no valid release had been given the Burlington Company by him. As between defendant in error and the Burlington Company, the Federal Employers' Liability Act clearly applied, and if, as the United States Supreme Court has repeatedly held, that law supersedes all state laws on the subject, then the release given by defendant in error to the Burlington Company was not valid, and would not have precluded recovery by him from that company. If it was not valid so far as the Burlington Company was concerned, it was clearly invalid as to plaintiff in error, and constituted no defense to this action."

Although the view just quoted was dissented from by two justices of the supreme court of Illinois, yet, as we have seen, on appeal it was approved by the Supreme Court of the United States, the latter saying, with reference thereto, it simply meant that "the release could not aid the Alton Company, for the very plain reason that the alleged joint tort-feasor had not been discharged," and adding these significant words: "The state law did not recognize the discharge of the defendant by virtue of a release of a joint tort-feasor, which, under the law applicable thereto, was found to be without validity."

We use the term "significant," for the Federal Employers' Liability Act is referred to as "the law applicable" to the alleged release, though the case quoted from was not an action under that statute. It seems to me that Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Wagner, just reviewed, is sufficient to sustain the judgment entered in this case; but it is not necessary to rest thereon; for, as I shall now show, many other United States Supreme Court decisions can be mentioned which justify the position that the present case was subject to the provisions of § 5 of the Federal Employers' Liability Act.

To begin with, under the relevant Federal authorities, it is not always required that a statement of claim shall expressly aver the act of Congress here in question, or that it is relied upon. In Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Duvall, 225 U. S. 477, 482, 56 L. ed. 1171, 1174, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 790, while the complaint alleged that the defendant's railroad ran from a point in Virginia to one in North Carolina, and that the plaintiff was injured on a train operated between these two places, yet neither it nor the defendant's answer made any direct reference to the act of Congress; nevertheless the Supreme Court of the United States said of the declaration: "This states a ground of action under that act." In Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. Lindsay, 233 U. S. 42, 58 L. ed. 838, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 168, as appears from the opinion of the Supreme Court, the complainant alleged and the evidence showed that the accident happened "in the course of the operation of interstate commerce," but "no express claim was made under the Employers' Liability Act." The court there states: "It is urged it was error in the reviewing court to test the correctness of the rulings of the trial court by the provisions of the Employers' Liability Act, instead of confining the subject exclusively to the Safety Appliance Law [which was pleaded] and the rules of the common law."

And in overruling this contention the court said: "This simply amounts to saying that the Employers' Liability Act may not be applied to a situation which is within its provisions unless in express terms the provisions of the act be formally invoked. Aside from its manifest unsoundness, considered as an original proposition, the contention is not open, as it was expressly foreclosed in Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Duvall."

See also Wabash R. Co. v. Hayes, 234 U. S. 86, 58 L. ed. 1226, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729, 6 N. C. C. A. 224.

In Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wulf, 226 U. S. 570, 57 L. ed. 355, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 135, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 184, the plaintiff, who was "sole beneficiary of the deceased under the state statute," sued in her individual capacity to recover for the death of a son, killed in the employ of the defendant company. The case was in the United States courts by reason of diverse citizenship. The original complaint charged that at the time of the accident the deceased was a fireman on a train bound from a point in the state of Kansas to one in the state of Oklahoma; but it further expressly averred that the suit was instituted "by virtue of the laws of the state of Kansas, where the said Fred S. Wulf was killed," and which by statute provides "a right of action for injuries resulting in death." The defendant answered that the cause of action was "not governed by the laws of Kansas," but by the Federal Employers' Liability Act, whereupon the plaintiff asked leave to amend and apply the Federal statute. To this the defendant objected that the Statute of Limitations had run; but the court allowed the amendment. On appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, the Supreme Court of the United States said: "It is contended that the plaintiff's original petition failed to state a cause of action, because she sued in her individual capacity and based her right of recovery upon the Kansas statute, whereas her action could legally rest only upon the Federal Employers' Liability Act of 1908, which requires the action to be brought in the name of the personal representative of the deceased; that the plaintiff's amended petition . . . alleged an entirely new and distinct cause of action; and that such an amendment could not lawfully be allowed so as to relate back to the commencement of the action, inasmuch as the plaintiff's cause of action was barred by the limitation of two years. . . . It is true the original petition asserted a right of action under the laws of Kansas, without making reference to the act of Congress, but the court was presumed to be cognizant of the enactment of the Employers' Liability Act, and to know that, with respect to the responsibility of interstate carriers by railroad to their employees injured in such commerce, . . . it had the effect of superseding state laws upon the subject. . . . Therefore the pleader was not required to refer to the Federal act, and the reference actually made to the Kansas statute no more vitiated the pleading than a reference to any . . . repealed statute would have done."

It is true that in the course of the foregoing opinion the Federal Supreme Court said that the original petition "sufficiently averred that the deceased came to his death through injuries suffered while he was employed . . . in interstate commerce;" but an examination of the original pleadings in the court below, as sent up on appeal, shows that the excerpt just quoted from the opinion of the Supreme Court must mean, and could only mean, that a certain allegation in the original complaint to the effect that the deceased at the time of the accident was employed in the "performance of his duties . . . upon a train bound from Parsons, in the state of Kansas, to Osage, in the state of Oklahoma," was a sufficient aver-ment to bring the case within the statute; for that is the only possible matter in the entire declaration that in any manner indicated the plaintiff's case had a Federal aspect. Of course, an amendment of the party plaintiff was necessary in this Wulf Case, for the action was instituted by one who in the capacity in which she was named had no right to sue under the Federal statute, which likewise was the situation in St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Seale, 229 U. S. 156, 57 L. ed. 1129, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 156, where the plaintiffs elected to stand on their action as brought, and a verdict in their favor was reversed. In all the cases reviewed in this paragraph it will be observed that the respective declarations failed to aver the fact of the act of Congress, or that it was depended upon; yet each of them contained some allegation of fact which indicated that the cause at issue had a possible Federal aspect; but we shall show, by the authorities discussed in the next paragraph, that it is not always required of a declaration to go even this far in order to justify the application of the Federal Employers' Liability Act, when the actual facts of a given case bring it within the statute.

While in a case of negligence for personal injuries, before the act of Congress here in question will be applied, it must appear in some definite way that the accident happened in the course of interstate commerce, yet, under the relevant authorities, the manner in which this is made to appear, whether in the pleadings or otherwise, does not seem to be of controlling importance. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Hesterly, 228 U. S. 702, 57 L. ed. 1031, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 703, likewise reported in 98 Ark. 240, 135 S. W. 874 (whence we get our information concerning the contents of the complaint), was an action to recover for the death of the plaintiff's intestate. We use the terms "plaintiff" or "defendant" to designate the parties as they stood in the trial court. The declaration simply averred that the defendant was operating a line of railroad "in the state of Oklahoma," and that "deceased was a brakeman on defendant's said line in Oklahoma." The defendant's answer did not refer to the Federal act nor to the interstate character of the plaintiff's employment. The testimony showed, however, that at the time of the accident the deceased was working on a train engaged in interstate commerce; whereupon the defendant requested a peremptory instruction to the effect that a certain item of damage not permitted by the Federal statute could not be recovered. The trial court, while treating the defendant's motion as sufficient to raise a Federal question under the act of Congress, held that the statute did not apply, and the supreme court of the state subsequently decided that it was "only supplementary, and the judgment [for the plaintiff] could be upheld under the state laws." The United States Supreme Court accepted the finding of the court below to the effect that a Federal question was involved, and reversed the case, holding that the act of Congress applied. In Toledo, St. L. & W. R. Co. v. Slavin, 236 U. S. 454, 59 L. ed. 671, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306, neither the plaintiff's complaint nor the defendant's answer contained any reference to the Employers' Liability Act, but, over the plaintiff's objection, evidence was admitted to show that the accident happened in interstate commerce; thereupon the defendant insisted that the case was governed by the act of Congress, which contention the trial court overruled. On appeal the Supreme Court of the United States held that it was error not to apply and enforce the provisions of the Federal statute, and reversed. In Central Vermont R. Co. v. White, 238 U. S. 507, 513, 59 L. ed. 1433, 1437, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 868, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 252, 9 N. C. C. A. 265 (we quote from the opinion of the Supreme Court): "The declaration contained no allegation that White was engaged in interstate commerce at the time of the collision. The company made this the ground of a plea in bar. The administratrix thereupon filed a replication admitting that the deceased was engaged in such commerce at the time of his death. The company demurred to the replication on the ground that it was a departure from the cause of action under the state law, and the assertion of a new cause of action under the Federal Employers' Liability Law. This demurrer was overruled."

In affirming judgment for the plaintiff, the Supreme Court said it was sufficient that the state court of appeals held the defect in the declaration "cured by the charge in the plea and the admission in the replication that White was employed in interstate commerce." In Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Wright, 239 U. S. 548, 549, 551, 60 L. ed. 431, 433, 434, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186 (we quote from the opinion of the United States Supreme Court): "The petition described the road engine as moving from one point to another in Nebraska, and said nothing about interstate commerce, but the answer alleged that this engine was being taken to a point in another state, and that the defendant was engaged and the intestate was employed in interstate commerce. . . . As the injuries resulting in the intestate's death were sustained while the company was engaged, and while he was employed by it, in interstate commerce, the company's responsibility was governed by the Employers' Liability Act; . . . and as that act is exclusive and supersedes state laws upon the subject, it was error to submit the case to the jury as if the state act were controlling."

In North Carolina R. Co. v. Zachary, 232 U. S. 248, 58 L. ed. 591, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 159, 9 N. C. C. A. 109, the act of Congress was not pleaded, and the plaintiff's declaration did not indicate in any way that deceased was engaged in interstate service. The defendant set up "as a special defense" that "at the time the plain-tiff's intestate was killed he was engaged in interstate commerce," and "that the liability of the defendant was fixed and regulated by the Federal Employers' Liability Act." The state court "assumed that the record sufficiently presented a question of Federal right," but decided the point against the party asserting the right, holding that "the action was brought under the statute of North Carolina, that the Federal act had no application, and that the cause was triable under the statutes of the state."

In reversing, the United States Supreme Court ruled that "the Federal act governed to the exclusion of the statutes of the state."

In Koennecke v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 101 S. C. 86, 85 S. E. 375, the supreme court of South Carolina held: "Where, in an action for the death of a railroad employee, evidence that he was engaged in interstate commerce was elicited without objection, on the cross-examination of one of the plaintiff's witnesses, either party might, so long as the evidence remained in the record, claim the benefit of the Federal statute, though the pleadings of neither asserted any right or immunity under it," saying that, where the facts are not changed, the cause of action is essentially the same, whether tried under the state or Federal law, and that "it could rarely happen that a shifting from one to the other would work prejudice and surprise."

The court observed, however, that "if the parties have not been previously warned by the pleadings that such shifting might take place, and if it should be made to appear that it would be a surprise and operate to cut off a claim or defense which could otherwise have been made, the [trial] court would either not allow it or allow it upon such terms as would prevent prejudice."

On appeal the Supreme Court of the United States (Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Koennecke, 239 U. S. 352, 354, 60 L. ed. 324, 326, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 126, 11 N. C. C. A. 165) affirmed, saying, inter alia: "The cause of action arose under a different law by the amendment, but the facts constituting the tort were the same."

See also San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Wagner, 241 U. S. 476, 480, 481, 60 L. ed. 1110, 1115, 1116, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 626.

Thus, from the authorities reviewed, it may be seen that in causes like the one before us, whenever, by any formal method, it is properly made to appear, or whenever it is directly or impliedly conceded, whether by the pleadings or otherwise, that the accident under investigation happened to an employee of a defendant railroad during the course of interstate commerce, the court will regard this as a governing fact and apply the Federal law; and, as suggested in one of the above-cited cases, when we consider that in the vast majority of instances the plaintiff has no way of knowing whether or not he was injured in interstate commerce, while the defendant almost invariably has such knowledge, it is plain that the rule as stated is a just one. Moreover, it is a rule from which no material wrong can flow; for, as suggested in another of the cases, a party taken by surprise is always entitled to a continuance if the trial court be convinced that he may suffer harm.

Before passing to a consideration of the other cases chiefly relied upon by the appellant, it may be well at this point to examine Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Renn, 241 U. S. 290, 60 L. ed. 1006, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 567, 17 N. C. C. A. 1, which, when applied to the facts at bar, to my mind, is a controlling authority against the majority view, although it is cited in support thereof. The opinion in that case was handed down on May 22, 1916, by Mr. Justice Van Devanter. The action was instituted in a state court by an employee of the defendant railroad to recover for personal injuries. Nothing was averred in the declaration which directly indicated the suit was other than a common-law action; but the plaintiff secured a verdict under the Employers' Liability Act. A judgment entered on this verdict was affirmed by the state supreme court (170 N. C. 128, 86 S. E. 964), and the defendant appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States. In affirming, that tribunal said: "The original complaint was exceedingly brief, and did not sufficiently allege that at the time of the injury the defendant was engaged and the plaintiff employed in interstate commerce. During the trial the defendant sought some advantage from this, and the court, over the defendant's objection, permitted the complaint to be so amended as to state distinctly the defendant's engagement and the plaintiff's employment in such commerce. Both parties conceded that what was alleged in the amendment was true in fact and conformed to the proofs. . . . The defendant's objection was that the original complaint did not state a cause of action under the act of Congress, that with the amendment the complaint would state a new cause of action under that act, and that, as more than two years had elapsed since the right of action accrued, the amendment could not be made the medium of introducing this new cause of action consistently with the provision in § 6, that 'no action shall be maintained under this act unless commenced within two years from the day the cause of action accrued.' Whether in what was done this restriction was in effect disregarded is a Federal question, and subject to re-examination here; . . . Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Burnette, 239 U. S. 199, 60 L. ed. 226, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 75, 17 N. C. C. A. 144. If the amendment merely expanded or amplified what was alleged in support of the cause of action already asserted, it related back to the commencement of the action, and was not affected by the intervening lapse of time. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cox, 145 U. S. 593, 603, 604, 36 L. ed. 829, 832, 833, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905; Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Laird, 164 U. S. 393, 41 L. ed.

485, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 120; Hutchinson v. Otis, 190 U. S. 552, 555, 47 L. ed. 1179, 1181, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 778; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wulf, 226 U. S. 570, 576, 57 L. ed. 355, 363, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 135, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 134; Crotty v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. 95 C. C. A. 91, 169 Fed. 593. But if it introduced a new or different cause of action, it was the equivalent of a new suit, as to which the running of the limitation was not theretofore arrested. Sicard v. Davis, 6 Pet. 124, 140, 8 L. ed. 342, 348; Union P. R. Co. v. Wyler, 158 U. S. 285, 39 L. ed. 983, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 877; United States v. Dalcour, 203 U. S. 408, 423, 51 L. ed. 248, 251, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 58."

After this the court pointed out that certain allegations in the original declaration, in no way connected with the happening of the accident, but merely descriptive of the character of the defendant railroad, might be taken as consistent with a recovery under the act of Congress, and that the absence from such declaration of any mention of the laws of Virginia, the state in which the action was instituted, was "at least consistent with their inapplicability." Then the court concluded: "In these circumstances, while the question is not free from difficulty, we cannot say that the court erred in treating the original complaint as pointing, although only imperfectly, to a cause of action under the law of Congress. And, this being so, it must be taken that the amendment merely expanded or amplified what was alleged in support of that cause of action, and related back to the commencement of the suit, which was before the limitation had expired."

Surely this decision should be accepted as controlling the present case; for here, as there, the original declaration, while not averring the act of Congress, or facts bringing the plaintiff's cause of action directly thereunder, contains nothing inconsistent therewith; hence, in view of the defendant's admission it was engaged in interstate commerce, and that the plaintiff was so employed when injured, the declaration should be held sufficient, and the amendment as merely "expanding or amplifying" the cause of action originally stated.

The remaining cases chiefly relied upon by the appellant are easily distinguished from the one at bar. In St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Seale, 229 U. S. 156, 57 L. ed. 1129, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 156, the action was by the widow and parents of an employee of the defendant railroad to recover for his death. The plaintiff's petition contained nothing to indicate that the accident happened in the course of interstate commerce. The defendant excepted to the pleading on the ground that it did not show whether the action was brought under the state or Federal law. If the Federal law applied,—and the evidence showed it did,—then the suit was by the wrong party, as the United States statute requires the action to be in the name of the personal representative of the deceased. The plaintiffs elected to stand by their petition as originally stated. On appeal the Supreme Court reversed, "without prejudice to such rights as the personal representative of the deceased may have," saying: "The plaintiffs . . . stood by their petition. It was to the case therein stated that the defendant was called upon to make defense. . . . When the evidence was adduced it developed that the real case was not controlled by the state statute, but by the Federal statute. In short, the case pleaded was not proved, and the case proved was not pleaded. In that situation the defendant interposed the objection, grounded on the Federal statute, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover on the case proved."

The above decision simply amounts to this: There could be no recovery in the suit as instituted; for the evidence showed that the case fell within the act of Congress, and the parties named as plaintiffs were without authority to sue under defendant was operating a line of railroad "in Virginia, North Carolina, and elsewhere." Over the objection of the defendant the trial court allowed the plaintiff to amend by averring that the line of the defendant's railroad extended between the city of Raleigh, in the state of North Carolina, and the city of Richmond, in the state of Virginia. On a writ of error taken by the defendant company, the Supreme Court of the United States, in an opinion filed May 22, 1916, held that the amendment had not been improperly allowed, as no new cause of action had been introduced.

Limitation of actions—amendment of pending action—
new cause.

Mr. Justice Van Devanter, speaking for the court, said: "This was an action by an employee of a railroad company to recover from the latter for personal injuries suffered through its negligence. The plaintiff had a verdict and judgment under the Employers' Liability Act of Congress (chap. 149, 35 Stat. at L. 65, Comp. Stat. § 8657, 8 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 1208; chap. 143, 36 Stat. at L. 291, Comp. Stat. § 8662; 8 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 1369), the judgment was affirmed (170 N. C. 128, 86 S. E. 964), and the defendant brings the case here. The original complaint was exceedingly brief, and did not sufficiently allege that at the time of the injury the defendant was engaged and the plaintiff employed in interstate commerce. During the trial the defendant sought some advantage from this, and the court, over the defendant's objection, permitted the complaint to be so amended as to state distinctly the defendant's engagement and the plaintiff's employment in such commerce. Both parties conceded that what was alleged in the amendment was true in fact and conformed to the proofs, and that point has since been treated as settled. The defendant's objection was that the original complaint did not state a cause of action under the act of Congress, that with the amendment the complaint would state a new cause of action under that act, and that, as more than two years had elapsed since the right of action accrued, the amendment could not be made the medium of introducing this new cause of action consistently with the provision in § 6, that 'no action shall be maintained under this act unless commenced within two years from the day the cause of action accrued.' Whether in what was done this restriction was in effect disregarded is a Federal question and subject to re-examination here, however much the allowance of the amendment otherwise might have rested in discretion, or been a matter of local procedure. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Burnette, 239 U. S. 199, 60 L. ed. 226, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 75, 17 N. C. C. A. 144. If the amendment merely expanded or amplified what was alleged in support of the cause of action already asserted, it related back to the commencement of the action, and was not affected by the intervening lapse of time. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cox, 145 U. S. 593, 603, 604, 36 L. ed. 829, 832, 833, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905; Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Laird, 164 U. S. 393, 41 L. ed. 485, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 120; Hutchinson v. Otis, 190 U. S. 552, 555, 47 L. ed. 1179, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 778; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wulf, 226 U. S. 570, 576, 57 L. ed. 355, 363, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 134; Grotty v. Chicago Great Western R. Co. 95 C. C. A. 91, 169 Fed. 593. But if it introduced a new or different cause of action, it was the equivalent of a new suit, as to which the running of the limitation was not theretofore arrested. Sicard v. Davis, 6 Pet. 124, 140, 8 L. ed. 342, 348; Union P. R. Co. v. Wyler, 158 U. S. 285, 39 L. ed. 983, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 877; United States v. Dalcour, 203 U. S. 408, 423, 51 L. ed. 248, 251, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 58. The original complaint set forth that the defendant was operating a line of railroad in Virginia, North Carolina, and elsewhere; that the plaintiff was in its employ; that when he was injured he was in the line of duty and was proceeding to get aboard one of the defendant's trains; and that the injury was sustained at Cochran, Virginia, through the defendant's negligence in permitting a part of its right of way at that place to get and remain in a dangerous condition. Of course, the right of action could not arise under the laws of North Carolina when the causal negligence and the injury occurred in Virginia; and the absence of any mention of the laws of the latter state was at least consistent with their inapplicability. Besides, the allegation that the defendant was operating a railroad in states other than Virginia was superfluous if the right of action arose under the laws of that state, and was pertinent only if it arose in interstate commerce, and therefore under the act of Congress. In these circumstances, while the question is not free from difficulty, we cannot say that the court erred in treating the original complaint as pointing, although only imperfectly, to a cause of action under the law of Congress. And this being so, it must be taken that the amendment merely expanded or amplified what was alleged in support of that cause of action and related back to the commencement of the suit, which was before the limitation had expired."

It clearly appears from this last utterance of the Supreme Court of the United States that, if Renn's original complaint had averred merely a common-law right of action against the railway company, with nothing in it indicating that the employer was operating a line of railroad from one state into another, the amendment would have been improperly allowed, for the reason that it introduced a new cause of action under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, which had been barred, by the express terms of that act, after two years from the time of the accident. What was held in the Renn Case logically followed what the court had said in Garrett v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 235 U. S. 308, 59 L. ed. 242, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 32.

On October 20, 1914, nearly five years after this appellee was injured, the court below, under what we held on the first appeal, allowed his statement to be amended as follows: "On February 1, 1910, the defendant was engaged as a common carrier by railroad in commerce between the several states, and, subject to all the provisions of the Act of Congress of April 22, 1908 (35 Stat. at L. 65, chap. 149, Comp. Stat. § 8657, 8 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 1208), the plaintiff was employed by defendant as freight conductor in such interstate commerce, on a train of freight cars in the Philadelphia yards of the defendant near American street and Lehigh avenue, and was directed by William L. Weyman, then acting for defendant, to place two of said cars (there being several in the train) on a certain track."

The allowance of this amendment was excepted to by the defendant, on the ground that it introduced a new cause of action under the Act of Congress of April 22, 1908, which was barred. Under Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Renn, it was improperly allowed, and proof in support of it, if admitted by the court below, would not have helped the plaintiff. The same is true of the admission by the defendant that when he was injured, it was engaged, and he was employed by it, in interstate commerce. At the time the admission was made, and for nearly three years before, all liability of the defendant under the Act of Congress had ceased; for none could have been enforced against it except by an action brought within two years from the time the injuries were sustained. The admission was not that the plaintiff had a cause of action under the act of Congress, but merely that at the time of the accident, and for two years thereafter, the defendant might have been liable under the act, which, however, was no longer availing to the plaintiff.

The assignments of error are sustained, the judgment below is reversed, and is here entered for the defendant.

Moschzisker, J., dissenting:

The plaintiff lost an arm through the negligence of the defendant. So far as concerns the facts of the accident, all the members of this court are convinced the case was for the jury, and of the justice of the verdict rendered. The sole point upon which we differ concerns the law controlling the defense. Since the point of difference involves a substantive Federal question, which may be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States (Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Renn, 241 U. S. 290, 60 L. ed. 1006, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 567, 17 N. C. C. A. 1), I shall state my dissent at greater length than otherwise would be justified.

The present appeal raises more than a mere question of pleading, for the only material fact necessary to invest the case with a Federal aspect, i. e., that at the time of his injury the plaintiff was engaged in interstate commerce, was formally and unconditionally admitted at the trial by the defendant, during the presentation of the plaintiff's case. Hence, we have before us a substantive question of law, arising out of an agreed state of facts; and that question is, When it affirmatively appears, by an unrestricted and unqualified agreement of record, that a plaintiff employed by an interstate railroad was injured while engaged in interstate commerce, can the defendant, after making such an admission, under any circumstances, subsequently be heard to say that § 5 of the Federal Employers' Liability Act of April 22, 1908 (Comp. Stat. § 8661), does not apply to the case? To my mind, both on principle and authority, the answer to this question must be in the negative, as I shall endeavor to demonstrate.

The trial under review proceeded in this manner:

While the plaintiff was presenting his evidence, the following admission was entered on the record: "It is agreed between counsel for the plaintiff and defendant that at the time of the accident to William Hogarty on February 1, 1910, the cars upon which the plaintiff was working contained shipments of freight in interstate commerce."

So it may be seen that this is not an instance where the plaintiff was permitted to prove a material fact, the averment of which had been omitted from his declaration; on the contrary, it is one where the fact in question was expressly and unconditionally agreed to by counsel for the defendant, and thus established as part of the plaintiff's case. Hence it thereby became apparent that the Federal law controlled; for it has been definitely decided that the Act of 1908, supra, announces a broad public policy which supersedes the laws of the states upon all matters within its scope, and that, so long as it remains upon the statute books, in cases involving accidents to railroad employees when engaged in interstate commerce, such laws must be viewed as though nonexistent, or, to state the ruling in another way, that every branch of that public policy is to be considered "as much the policy" of each particular state in the Union "as if the act had emanated from its own legislature." Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 57, 56 L. ed. 327, 349, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875; Taylor v. Taylor, 232 U. S. 363, 58 L. ed. 638, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350, 6 N. C. C. A. 436; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wulf, 226 U. S. 570, 57 L. ed. 355, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 135, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 134; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Devine, 239 U. S. 52, 60 L. ed. 140, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27.

That the Act of 1908, supra, applies and controls even in a suit not instituted thereunder, when it affirmatively appears that the injury sued for happened to one engaged in interstate commerce, has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in many cases, one of the most recent of which, on principle, nearly, if not quite, rules the present one. In Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Wagner, 239 U. S. 452, 60 L. ed. 379, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 135, 17 N. C. C. A. 1087, an action was brought in a state court to recover for personal injuries. The plaintiff was not employed by the defendant company, and therefore could not sue under the Federal statute. The defendant proved that the plaintiff was an employee of the Burlington Company, another railroad, and that he had received benefits as a member of the latter's relief association; further, that this Burlington Company was a joint tort-feasor with it, the defendant. On these facts the defendant claimed that, "since there can be but one satisfaction for an injury," the plaintiff was not entitled to recover against it, because its joint tort-feasor, the Burlington Company, had been released from liability through and by reason of the acceptance of its relief benefits by the plaintiff. The state supreme court held that, notwithstanding the fact the action was not brought under the act of Congress, since it appeared the accident happened in the course of interstate commerce, the validity of the alleged release must be tested by the Federal, and not the state, law. This view was sustained on appeal, the Supreme Court of the United States saying (239 U. S. 457, 458): "It is urged that § 5 [the part of the Federal Employers' Liability Act which prohibits the defense in question] was wholly inapplicable in an action brought against a third person to enforce a liability not created by the Federal act. The argument is, in substance, that in this action against the Alton Company, inasmuch as it is not brought to enforce the liability imposed by the Federal statute, § 5 cannot be considered for any purpose; that is, that under § 5 the release can be deemed to be invalid only so far as it is actually used to protect the Burlington Company from liability in a suit against it under the act. This involves, we think, a fundamental misconception. It is, of course, impossible to determine whether a joint tort-feasor is discharged except by asking what would happen if he were sued. The liability created by the act arose when the injury was received, and it is clear that, if it was received while Wagner was engaged in interstate commerce, his acceptance of benefits under the relief contract would not bar an action against his employer. . . . When, therefore, the Alton Company sought to escape from liability otherwise existing under the state law by reason of a release to the Burlington Company, it was entirely competent for the plaintiff to show the nature of his employment and that the asserted release was within the Federal statute, and could not operate as a discharge."

It is clear that the above quotation means that, had the Burlington Company been sued as the Alton Company was in the then present action, the Federal act would have applied so as to exclude the defense depended upon, and it is particularly to be observed that the court there states the alleged release "could not operate as a discharge." In fact, as I read it, the whole context of the opinion indicates that the Federal Supreme Court meant to rule that such a release can never operate as a discharge in any case where suit is brought against a railroad by an employee injured in the course of interstate commerce, where the latter fact is properly made to appear, and that this rule applies, whether the action to recover for the injuries is formally instituted under the act of Congress or otherwise. . In this connection, when the case just reviewed was in the supreme court of Illinois on appeal (Wagner v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 265 Ill. 245, 251, 252, 106 N. E. 809, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 778), that tribunal took the position that, although under the local law the defense of an implied release through the acceptance of relief association benefits might ordinarily be a valid one, yet "the state law in this regard has been modified . . . by the Federal Employers' Liability Act as to cases where injuries are received by certain employees of an employer engaged in interstate commerce," and in such cases the defense in question cannot apply. After first saying that a stipulation filed at the trial of the case left it as though no allegation that the plaintiff had been injured in interstate commerce had been made in the declaration, the court adds: "When plaintiff in error [the defendant below] attempted to prove a satisfaction by the payment of benefits by its joint tort-feasor, the Burlington Company, to the defendant in error, it was proper for defendant in error [the plaintiff below], in rebuttal, to show that no valid release had been given the Burlington Company by him. As between defendant in error and the Burlington Company, the Federal Employers' Liability Act clearly applied, and if, as the United States Supreme Court has repeatedly held, that law supersedes all state laws on the subject, then the release given by defendant in error to the Burlington Company was not valid, and would not have precluded recovery by him from that company. If it was not valid so far as the Burlington Company was concerned, it was clearly invalid as to plaintiff in error, and constituted no defense to this action."

Although the view just quoted was dissented from by two justices of the supreme court of Illinois, yet, as we have seen, on appeal it was approved by the Supreme Court of the United States, the latter saying, with reference thereto, it simply meant that "the release could not aid the Alton Company, for the very plain reason that the alleged joint tort-feasor had not been discharged," and adding these significant words: "The state law did not recognize the discharge of the defendant by virtue of a release of a joint tort-feasor, which, under the law applicable thereto, was found to be without validity."

We use the term "significant," for the Federal Employers' Liability Act is referred to as "the law applicable" to the alleged release, though the case quoted from was not an action under that statute. It seems to me that Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Wagner, just reviewed, is sufficient to sustain the judgment entered in this case; but it is not necessary to rest thereon; for, as I shall now show, many other United States Supreme Court decisions can be mentioned which justify the position that the present case was subject to the provisions of § 5 of the Federal Employers' Liability Act.

To begin with, under the relevant Federal authorities, it is not always required that a statement of claim shall expressly aver the act of Congress here in question, or that it is relied upon. In Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Duvall, 225 U. S. 477, 482, 56 L. ed. 1171, 1174, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 790, while the complaint alleged that the defendant's railroad ran from a point in Virginia to one in North Carolina, and that the plaintiff was injured on a train operated between these two places, yet neither it nor the defendant's answer made any direct reference to the act of Congress; nevertheless the Supreme Court of the United States said of the declaration: "This states a ground of action under that act." In Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. Lindsay, 233 U. S. 42, 58 L. ed. 838, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 168, as appears from the opinion of the Supreme Court, the complainant alleged and the evidence showed that the accident happened "in the course of the operation of interstate commerce," but "no express claim was made under the Employers' Liability Act." The court there states: "It is urged it was error in the reviewing court to test the correctness of the rulings of the trial court by the provisions of the Employers' Liability Act, instead of confining the subject exclusively to the Safety Appliance Law [which was pleaded] and the rules of the common law."

And in overruling this contention the court said: "This simply amounts to saying that the Employers' Liability Act may not be applied to a situation which is within its provisions unless in express terms the provisions of the act be formally invoked. Aside from its manifest unsoundness, considered as an original proposition, the contention is not open, as it was expressly foreclosed in Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Du-vall."

See also Wabash R. Co. v. Hayes, 234 U. S. 86, 58 L. ed. 1226, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729, 6 N. C. C. A. 224.

In Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wulf, 226 U. S. 570, 57 L. ed. 355, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 135, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 134, the plaintiff, who was "sole beneficiary of the deceased under the state statute," sued in her individual capacity to recover for the death of a son, killed in the employ of the defendant company. The case was in the United States courts by reason of diverse citizenship. The original complaint charged that at the time of the accident the deceased was a fireman on a train bound from a point in the state of Kansas to one in the state of Oklahoma; but it further expressly averred that the suit was instituted "by virtue of the laws of the state of Kansas, where the said Fred S. Wulf was killed," and which by statute provides "a right of action for injuries resulting in death." The defendant answered that the cause of action was "not governed by the laws of Kansas," but by the Federal Employers' Liability Act, whereupon the plaintiff asked leave to amend and apply the Federal statute. To this the defendant objected that the Statute of Limitations had run; but the court allowed the amendment. On appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, the Supreme Court of the United States said: "It is contended that the plaintiff's original petition failed to state a cause of action, because she sued in her individual capacity and based her right of recovery upon the Kansas statute, whereas her action could legally rest only upon the Federal Employers' Liability Act of 1908, which requires the action to be brought in the name of the personal representative of the deceased; that the plaintiff's amended petition . . . alleged an entirely new and distinct cause of action; and that such an amendment could not lawfully be allowed so as to relate back to the commencement of the action, inasmuch as the plaintiff's cause of action was barred by the limitation of two years. . . . It is true the original petition asserted a right of action under the laws of Kansas, without making reference to the act of Congress, but the court was presumed to be cognizant of the enactment of the Employers' Liability Act, and to know that, with respect to the responsibility of interstate carriers by railroad to their employees injured in such commerce, . . . it had the effect of superseding state laws upon the subject. . . . Therefore the pleader was not required to refer to the Federal act, and the reference actually made to the Kansas statute no more vitiated the pleading than a reference to any . . . repealed statute would have done."

It is true that in the course of the foregoing opinion the Federal Supreme Court said that the original petition "sufficiently averred that the deceased came to his death through injuries suffered while he was employed . . . in interstate commerce;" but an examination of the original pleadings in the court below, as sent up on appeal, shows that the excerpt just quoted from the opinion of the Supreme Court must mean, and could only mean, that a certain allegation in the original complaint to the effect that the deceased at the time of the accident was employed in the "performance of his duties . . . upon a train bound from Parsons, in the state of Kansas, to Osage, in the state of Oklahoma," was a sufficient aver-ment to bring the case within the statute; for that is the only possible matter in the entire declaration that in any manner indicated the plaintiff's case had a Federal aspect. Of course, an amendment of the party plaintiff was necessary in this Wulf Case, for the action was instituted by one who in the capacity in which she was named had no right to sue under the Federal statute, which likewise was the situation in St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Seale, 229 U. S. 156, 57 L. ed. 1129, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 156, where the plaintiffs elected to stand on their action as brought, and a verdict in their favor was reversed. In all the cases reviewed in this paragraph it will be observed that the respective declarations failed to aver the fact of the act of Congress, or that it was depended upon; yet each of them contained some allegation of fact which indicated that the cause at issue had a possible Federal aspect; but we shall show, by the authorities discussed in the next paragraph, that it is not always required of a declaration to go even this far in order to justify the application of the Federal Employers' Liability Act, when the actual facts of a given case bring it within the statute.

While in a case of negligence for personal injuries, before the act of Congress here in question will be applied, it must appear in some definite way that the accident happened in the course of interstate commerce, yet, under the relevant authorities, the manner in which this is made to appear, whether in the pleadings or otherwise, does not seem to be of controlling importance. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Hesterly, 228 U. S. 702, 57 L. ed. 1031, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 703, likewise reported in 98 Ark. 240, 135 S. W. 874 (whence we get our information concerning the contents of the complaint), was an action to recover for the death of the plaintiff's intestate. We use the terms "plaintiff" or "defendant" to designate the parties as they stood in the trial court. The declaration simply averred that the defendant was operating a line of railroad "in the state of Oklahoma," and that "deceased was a brakeman on defendant's said line in Oklahoma." The defendant's answer did not refer to the Federal act nor to the interstate character of the plaintiff's employment. The testimony showed, however, that at the time of the accident the deceased was working on a train engaged in interstate commerce; whereupon the defendant requested a peremptory instruction to the effect that a certain item of damage not permitted by the Federal statute could not be recovered. The trial court, while treating the defendant's motion as sufficient to raise a Federal question under the act of Congress, held that the statute did not apply, and the supreme court of the state subsequently decided that it was "only supplementary, and the judgment [for the plaintiff] could be upheld under the state laws." The United States Supreme Court accepted the finding of the court below to the effect that a Federal question was involved, and reversed the case, holding that the act of Congress applied. In Toledo, St. L. & W. R. Co. v. Slavin, 236 U. S. 454, 59 L. ed. 671, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306, neither the plaintiff's complaint nor the defendant's answer contained any reference to the Employers' Liability Act, but, over the plaintiff's objection, evidence was admitted to show that the accident happened in interstate commerce; thereupon the defendant insisted that the case was governed by the act of Congress, which contention the trial court overruled. On appeal the Supreme Court of the United States held that it was error not to apply and enforce the provisions of the Federal statute, and reversed. In Central Vermont R. Co. v. White, 238 U. S. 507, 513, 59 L. ed. 1433, 1437, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 868, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 252, 9 N. C. C. A. 265 (we quote from the opinion of the Supreme Court): "The declaration contained no allegation that White was engaged in interstate commerce at the time of the collision. The company made this the ground of a plea in bar. The administratrix thereupon filed a replication admitting that the deceased was engaged in such commerce at the time of his death. The company demurred to the replication on the ground that it was a departure from the cause of action under the state law, and the assertion of a new cause of action under the Federal Employers' Liability Law. This demurrer was overruled."

In affirming judgment for the plaintiff, the Supreme Court said it was sufficient that the state court of appeals held the defect in the declaration "cured by the charge in the plea and the admission in the replication that White was employed in interstate commerce." In Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Wright, 239 U. S. 548, 549, 551, 60 L. ed. 431, 433, 434, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186 (we quote from the opinion of the United States Supreme Court): "The petition described the road engine as moving from one point to another in Nebraska, and said nothing about interstate commerce, but the answer alleged that this engine was being taken to a point in another state, and that the defendant was engaged and the intestate was employed in interstate commerce. . . . As the injuries resulting in the intestate's death were sustained while the company was engaged, and while he was employed by it, in interstate commerce, the company's responsibility was governed by the Employers' Liability Act; . . . and as that act is exclusive and supersedes state laws upon the subject, it was error to submit the case to the jury as if the state act were controlling."

In North Carolina R. Co. v. Zachary, 232 U. S. 248, 58 L. ed. 591, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 159, 9 N. C. C. A. 109, the act of Congress was not pleaded, and the plaintiff's declaration did not indicate in any way that deceased was engaged in interstate service. The defendant set up "as a special defense" that "at the time the plain-tiff's intestate was killed he was engaged in interstate commerce," and "that the liability of the defendant was fixed and regulated by the Federal Employers' Liability Act." The state court "assumed that the record sufficiently presented a question of Federal right," but decided the point against the party asserting the right, holding that "the action was brought under the statute of North Carolina, that the Federal act had no application, and that the cause was triable under the statutes of the state."

In reversing, the United States Supreme Court ruled that "the Federal act governed to the exclusion of the statutes of the state."

In Koennecke v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 101 S. C. 86, 85 S. E. 375, the supreme court of South Carolina held: "Where, in an action for the death of a railroad employee, evidence that he was engaged in interstate commerce was elicited without objection, on the cross-examination of one of the plaintiff's witnesses, either party might, so long as the evidence remained in the record, claim the benefit of the Federal statute, though the pleadings of neither asserted any right or immunity under it," saying that, where the facts are not changed, the cause of action is essentially the same, whether tried under the state or Federal law, and that "it could rarely happen that a shifting from one to the other would work prejudice and surprise."

The court observed, however, that "if the parties have not been previously warned by the pleadings that such shifting might take place, and if it should be made to appear that it would be a surprise and operate to cut off a claim or defense which could otherwise have been made, the [trial] court would either not allow it or allow it upon such terms as would prevent prejudice."

On appeal the Supreme Court of the United States (Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Koennecke, 239 U. S. 352, 354, 60 L. ed. 324, 326, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 126, 11 N. C. C. A. 165) affirmed, saying, inter alia: "The cause of action arose under a different law by the amendment, but the facts constituting the tort were the same."

See also San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Wagner, 241 U. S. 476, 480, 481, 60 L. ed. 1110, 1115, 1116, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 626.

Thus, from the authorities reviewed, it may be seen that in causes like the one before us, whenever, by any formal method, it is properly made to appear, or whenever it is directly or impliedly conceded, whether by the pleadings or otherwise, that the accident under investigation happened to an employee of a defendant railroad during the course of interstate commerce, the court will regard this as a governing fact and apply the Federal law; and, as suggested in one of the above-cited cases, when we consider that in the vast majority of instances the plaintiff has no way of knowing whether or not he was injured in interstate commerce, while the defendant almost invariably has such knowledge, it is plain that the rule as stated is a just one. Moreover, it is a rule from which no material wrong can flow; for, as suggested in another of the cases, a party taken by surprise is always entitled to a continuance if the trial court be convinced that he may suffer harm.

Before passing to a consideration of the other cases chiefly relied upon by the appellant, it may be well at this point to examine Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Renn, 241 U. S. 290, 60 L. ed. 1006, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 567, 17 N. C. C. A. 1, which, when applied to the facts at bar, to my mind, is a controlling authority against the majority view, although it is cited in support thereof. The opinion in that case was handed down on May 22, 1916, by Mr. Justice Van Devanter. The action was instituted in a state court by an employee of the defendant railroad to recover for personal injuries. Nothing was averred in the declaration which directly indicated the suit was other than a common-law action; but the plaintiff secured a verdict under the Employers' Liability Act. A judgment entered on this verdict was affirmed by the state supreme court (170 N. C. 128, 86 S. E. 964), and the defendant appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States. In affirming, that tribunal said: "The original complaint was exceedingly brief, and did not sufficiently allege that at the time of the injury the defendant was engaged and the plaintiff employed in interstate commerce. During the trial the defendant sought some advantage from this, and the court, over the defendant's objection, permitted the complaint to be so amended as to state distinctly the defendant's engagement and the plaintiff's employment in such commerce. Both parties conceded that what was alleged in the amendment was true in fact and conformed to the proofs. . . . The defendant's objection was that the original complaint did not state a cause of action under the act of Congress, that with the amendment the complaint would state a new cause of action under that act, and that, as more than two years had elapsed since the right of action accrued, the amendment could not be made the medium of introducing this new cause of action consistently with the provision in § 6, that 'no action shall be maintained under this act unless commenced within two years from the day the cause of action accrued.' Whether in what was done this restriction was in effect disregarded is a Federal question, and subject to re-examination here; . . . Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Burnette, 239 U. S. 199, 60 L. ed. 226, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 75, 17 N. C. C. A. 144. If the amendment merely expanded or amplified what was alleged in support of the cause of action already asserted, it related back to the commencement of the action, and was not affected by the intervening lapse of time. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cox, 145 U. S. 593, 603, 604, 36 L. ed. 829, 832, 833, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905; Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. Laird, 164 U. S. 393, 41 L. ed.

485, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 120; Hutchinson v. Otis, 190 U. S. 552, 555, 47 L. ed. 1179, 1181, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 778; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wulf, 226 U. S. 570, 576, 57 L. ed. 355, 363, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 135, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 134; Crotty v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. 95 C. C. A. 91, 169 Fed. 593. But if it introduced a new or different cause of action, it was the equivalent of a new suit, as to which the running of the limitation was not theretofore arrested. Sicard v. Davis, 6 Pet. 124, 140, 8 L. ed. 342, 348; Union P. R. Co. v. Wyler, 158 U. S. 285, 39 L. ed. 983, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 877; United States v. Dalcour, 203 U. S. 408, 423, 51 L. ed. 248, 251, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 58."

After this the court pointed out that certain allegations in the original declaration, in no way connected with the happening of the accident, but merely descriptive of the character of the defendant railroad, might be taken as consistent with a recovery under the act of Congress, and that the absence from such declaration of any mention of the laws of Virginia, the state in which the action was instituted, was "at least consistent with their inapplicability." Then the court concluded: "In these circumstances, while the question is not free from difficulty, we cannot say that the court erred in treating the original complaint as pointing, although only imperfectly, to a cause of action under the law of Congress. And, this being so, it must be taken that the amendment merely expanded or amplified what was alleged in support of that cause of action, and related back to the commencement of the suit, which was before the limitation had expired."

Surely this decision should be accepted as controlling the present case; for here, as there, the original declaration, while not averring the act of Congress, or facts bringing the plaintiff's cause of action directly thereunder, contains nothing inconsistent therewith; hence, in view of the defendant's admission it was engaged in interstate commerce, and that the plaintiff was so employed when injured, the declaration should be held sufficient, and the amendment as merely "expanding or amplifying" the cause of action originally stated.

The remaining cases chiefly relied upon by the appellant are easily distinguished from the one at bar. In St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Seale, 229 U. S. 156, 57 L. ed. 1129, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 156, the action was by the widow and parents of an employee of the defendant railroad to recover for his death. The plaintiff's petition contained nothing to indicate that the accident happened in the course of interstate commerce. The defendant excepted to the pleading on the ground that it did not show whether the action was brought under the state or Federal law. If the Federal law applied,—and the evidence showed it did,—then the suit was by the wrong party, as the United States statute requires the action to be in the name of the personal representative of the deceased. The plaintiffs elected to stand by their petition as originally stated. On appeal the Supreme Court reversed, "without prejudice to such rights as the personal representative of the deceased may have," saying: "The plaintiffs . . . stood by their petition. It was to the case therein stated that the defendant was called upon to make defense. . . . When the evidence was adduced it developed that the real case was not controlled by the state statute, but by the Federal statute. In short, the case pleaded was not proved, and the case proved was not pleaded. In that situation the defendant interposed the objection, grounded on the Federal statute, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover on the case proved."

The above decision simply amounts to this: There could be no recovery in the suit as instituted; for the evidence showed that the case fell within the act of Congress, and the parties named as plaintiffs were without authority to sue under the Federal law. In short, the parties plaintiff were entitled to sue under the state law, but not under the Federal statute, whereas, under the evidence adduced, the latter was the only law which could be applied; therefore the Supreme Court properly said that the case pleaded was not proved, and the case proved was not pleaded. In connection with this Seale Case consider the discussion of Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wulf, 226 U. S. 570, 57 L. ed. 355, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 135, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 134. Also see Winfree v. Northern P. R. Co. 227 U. S. 296, 302, 57 L. ed. 518, 520, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273, a case involving the same act of Congress which is now before us, where it was expressly held that "damages to his [the decedent's] estate [under the Federal statute] would be a distinct cause of action from damages to his parents [under a state statute]," the principle of which ruling, when kept in mind, makes plain the decision in St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Seale, supra. The case at bar differs from the one just reviewed in that here there is nothing whatever in the party plaintiff or in the averments of his declaration inconsistent with an action under the Federal law, and, in addition, we have the element of the admission of record previously discussed.

The present case is readily distinguishable from Allen v. Tuscarora Valley R. Co. 229 Pa. 97, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1096, 140 Am. St. Rep. 714, 78 Atl. 34; Brinkmeier v. Missouri P. R. Co. 224 U. S. 268, 56 L. ed. 758, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 412, and other like authorities, which hold that there can be no recovery under the original Federal Safety Appliance Act of March 2, 1893 (chap. 196, § 2, 27 Stat. at L. 531, Comp. Stat. § 8606, 8 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 1161), unless the statute is either expressly declared upon or the plaintiff avers a breach of its provisions in his statement of claim. The Safety Appliance Act is not of the character of the Employers' Liability Act. The latter ordains broad general rules of public policy, and, within its field, not only supercedes the common law, but all relevant state enactments, while the former is one which ordains a minute, physical regulation, to wit, that a certain kind of mechanical contrivance, or coupler, must be used upon all cars engaged in interstate commerce. Hence, of course, if one desires to recover because of a breach of this special regulation, he must bring his declaration strictly within the provisions of the statute which ordains it. The case of Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. Lindsay, 233 U. S. 42, 58 L. ed. 838, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 168, shows, however, that even when the Safety Appliance Act is expressly pleaded, all the provisions of the Employers' Liability Act apply, though the latter is not referred to in the pleadings. Whether or not the distinction which we have drawn be sound is not important, however, for, as already pointed out, here the defendant had, in effect, conceded in the court below that the Federal law controlled, before raising the inconsistent contention that the relevant act of Congress could not apply because of the plaintiff's failure to plead it. Union P. R. Co. v. Wyler, 158 U. S. 285, 39 L. ed. 983, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 877, is sufficiently distinguished in the Wulf Case, supra.

The defendant relies largely upon an excerpt from Mr. Justice McReynold's opinion in Garrett v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 235 U. S. 308, 59 L. ed. 242, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 32, which was an action under the Employers' Liability Act, where the declaration was held defective because it contained no averment of pecuniary loss to the plaintiff, the court saying: "Where any fact is necessary to be proved in order to sustain the plaintiff's right of recovery, the declaration must contain an averment substantially of such fact in order to let in the proof, . . . so that the parties may come prepared with their evidence, and not be taken by surprise."

The principle just quoted is a correct statement of a general rule; but, if in the Garrett Case the defendant had, as in the case at bar, expressly admitted on the record, during the course of the presentation of the plaintiffs' evidence, the latter's pecuniary loss, it is not within the bounds of reason to suppose that under such circumstances a judgment for the plaintiff would have been reversed because of the absence of an averment of pecuniary loss in the declaration; not only was no such admission made in the Garrett Case, but there the plaintiff refused to amend his declaration when offered an opportunity so to do. Of course, in the case before us for decision there was no surprise, either actual or legal.

As stated at the beginning of this dissent, I do not feel that the present case turns on a question of pleading, but, if it did, I am of opinion the plaintiff's original declaration was sufficient to sustain the judgment; for, while there is nothing therein to indicate the action occurred in interstate commerce, yet, on the other hand, there is nothing to exclude that idea. Kansas City Western R. Co. v. McAdow, 240 U. S. 51, 60 L. ed. 520, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 252, 11 N. C. C. A. 857. In certain instances, where a legislative enactment creates in detail a right or duty new to the law, for instance, the Federal Safety Appliance Act, or, again, where a plaintiff has a choice between the common law and a statute, it may be necessary to plead the latter in a declaration claiming damages by reason of a breach thereof; but that is not this case. Here the ordinary rule applies that it is not necessary to plead an act of assembly; for, though the law thus established is to govern when applicable, yet it is not part of the cause of action; or, to speak more specifically, while, in the contingency of certain defenses being offered, the nonapplication of the Federal Employers' Liability Act might, in the end, serve to defeat the plaintiff, yet, since the right to sue in no sense depended upon it, the act could not be said to enter into his cause of action. Ordinarily it is only essential to plead the facts showing the plaintiff's right and the defendant's violation thereof, and in so doing it is never required that a defense shall be anticipated; but even assuming that, generally speaking, it is the duty of a plaintiff, in a case like the present, in some way to indicate in his declaration that the Act of 1908, supra, is depended upon, and to prove facts showing his case to be within the statute, then we come back to my original position concerning the admission by the defendant. In this connection see Noel v. Kessler, 252 Pa. 244, 97 Atl. 446, where we recently held that defendants, "by their admissions in the pleadings, could waive the proper and necessary averments in the statement, and if they did so they cannot on this appeal, after a trial . . . on the merits, object to the informalities of the statement." This was said in a contract case, but it was an instance where the so-called "informality" concerned a vital matter of substance. Since the abandonment of special pleading, much that was formerly developed in that way prior to trial is now accomplished by formal admissions of record at the time of trial. With us in trespass the general issue is the only plea permitted; hence in a negligence case there could be no such admissions as those referred to in the above quotation, i. e., in the pleadings; for, under our practice in such cases, all admissions by the defendant must be made by written stipulation or orally in court, but, when so made, ex necessitate, they should have the same force and be given the like effect as though contained in a formal pleading. Of course, a fact that is at issue, in the sense that it is controverted, must, as a general rule, have had an averment in the pleadings to support it; but a fact admitted of record, no matter how material it may be, stands on a different footing. An unrestricted admission of record is more than merely evidential in effect, for it not only grants the fact in question, but also its admissibility, and to this extent, at least, such an admission tacitly concedes the pleadings in the case to be good and sufficient. Therefore, in this case, after counsel made the before-quoted admission, without either qualification or restriction, for the purpose of the trial, it was, in effect, conceded the defendant had knowledge of the fact that the accident under investigation had happened in interstate commerce, and that the plaintiff so claimed, just as much as though the latter had either been put formally on notice thereof by an averment in the declaration or had admitted it by an answer in the nature of a plea; and the defendant could not subsequently avoid the force of this admission by complaining that the plaintiff had failed formally to declare the facts comprehended therein. To my mind it is losing sight of the realities of the situation, and playing with the administration of the law, to permit one, after making such an admission, to assume the position that, because the statement of claim failed to inform the defendant of that which it admittedly already knew, the plaintiff could not take advantage of the real facts in the case and the court could not administer the only law applicable thereto.

I think the Supreme Court of the United States never intended to rule as a governing general principle that, if an injured plaintiff incidentally avers the fact that the defendant's railroad traverses more than one state, then the Federal Employers' Liability Act will apply to his cause of action (even though, as in the Wulf Case, 226 U. S. 570, 57 L. ed. 355, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 135, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 134, such plaintiff further expressly avers that he depends upon the local law), whereas, if he fails to inform the railroad, by an averment in his declaration, of the terminal points of its line, then the Federal law will not apply (even though, as in the present case, the defendant as all times knew the accident in controversy happened on its road to an employee, while engaged in the transaction of interstate business). In this connection, it seems to me, the majority of our court, in reading the recent decisions of the Federal Supreme Court, lay undue emphasis upon certain passages from the Wulf and Renn opinions, supra. To my mind, the passages in question represent relevant judicial make-weights, proper under the peculiar facts of those particular cases; but were not intended as statements of restrictive general principles to control all future actions for injuries to railroad employees, particularly where, as here, it is unrestrictedly and unqualifiedly admitted at trial that such injuries happened in the course of interstate commerce.

Moreover, in a case such as the one now before us, where the plaintiff's employer relies upon a defense which is repudiated by the United States law as against public policy, and which, since the happening of the accident that gave rise to the plaintiff's injury, has, for a like reason, been forbidden by statute in our own state (see § 204 of article 2, Act June 2, 1915 [P. L. 736]), it seems to me that this court should not be astute to find reasons for reversing the judgment entered below, particularly when we have already held, in reviewing a prior trial (245 Pa. 443, 91 Atl. 854), that on the pleadings as originally made the issues involved were for the jury.

Before concluding, it may not be amiss to note that at the former trial of this case there also was an unrestricted and unqualified admission that the accident to the plaintiff occurred in the course of interstate commerce. See Hogarty v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 245 Pa. 443, 91 Atl. 854. Hence the amendment of the declaration subsequently permitted merely made the pleadings accord with the real facts involved, as they had previously been agreed to by counsel for the defendant; but, however this may be, under Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Wagner, 239 U. S. 452, 60 L. ed. 379, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep.

135, 17 N. C. C. A. 1087, and other authorities herein cited, after the defendant's admissions of record, the case under review should not be made to turn on a mere question of pleading.

I cannot agree with the majority view, as written by our honored Chief Justice, that the recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States compel a reversal of the present judgment. On the contrary, I strongly feel that, under a proper reading of the relevant authorities on the admitted facts at bar, the defense depended upon was not available, and the plaintiff should hold his verdict; therefore, I dissent.

Petition for writ of error dismissed by the Supreme Court of the United States, October 20, 1919 (U. S. Adv. Ops. 1919-20, p. 49) 250 U. S. 650, 63 L. ed. 1189, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 12.

ANNOTATION.

Amending complaint, after limitation period has expired, so as to come within Federal Employers' Liability Act as changing the cause of action.

I. Introduction, 1405.

II. Doctrine that amendment does not state new cause of action:

a. In general, 1406.

b. View that pleadings should be liberally construed to state cause of action under Federal statute, 1414.

III. View that amendment states new cause of action, 1419.

IV. Miscellaneous, 1424.

I. Introduction.

The general rule appears to be well established that an amendment to a declaration, which does not set up a new cause of action or make a new demand, relates back to the commencement of the action, and the running of the statute against the claim so pleaded is arrested at that point; in other words, when an amendment, or an additional count, is brought into a pending action merely to restate in a different form the same cause of action originally pleaded, it relates back to the beginning of the action, and is not affected by the circumstance that the period set by the Statute of Limitations expired after the suit was brought. On the other hand, when a cause of action set forth in an amended pleading in a pending litigation is new, different, and distinct from that originally set up, there is no relation back, but the new pleading is equivalent to the bringing of a new action, and the Statute of Limitations runs against the new cause of action down to the time it is introduced. These rules are supported by many authorities.

There seems to be a conflict among the different jurisdictions on the general proposition whether a cause of action at common law and one based upon a statute, or a cause of action based upon a statute of one state and one based upon a statute of another state or a Federal statute, where the basic transaction is the same, are the same cause of action, or are different and distinct from each other. If they are the same, an amendment changing from one to the other after the Statute of Limitations has run is proper, and relates back to the time of the original pleading, so as to avoid the bar of the statute; but if they are held to be different and distinct from each other, the amendment, in some jurisdictions, is not allowed after the limitation period has elapsed; while in others it is permitted, but a plea of the Statute of Limitations is thereafter allowed as a bar to recovery upon the amendment.

As illustrating the divergence of opinion on this general proposition, attention is called to the following, among other cases, involving amendments from the common law to statutes as affected by Statutes of Limitations: Alabama Consol. Coal & I. Co. v. Heald (1908) 154 Ala. 530, 45 So. 636, later appeal in (1910) 168 Ala. 626, 53 So. 162; Henderson v.

Moweaqua Coal Min. & Mfg. Co. (1908) 145 Ill. App. 637; Wasson v. Boland (1909) 136 Mo. App. 622, 118 S. W. 663. As involving amendments from statute to common law: Townes v. Dallas Mfg. Co. (1908) 154 Ala. 612, 45 So. 696; Bradley v. Chicago-Virden Coal Co. (1907) 231 Ill. 622, 83 N. E. 424; Oolitic Stone Co. v. Ridge (1910) 174 Ind. 558, 91 N. E. 944. And as involving change from a statute of one jurisdiction to statute of another: De Valle Da Costa v. Southern P. Co. (1910) 100 C. C. A. 313, 176 Fed. 843, writ of certiorari denied in (1910) 217 U. S. 606, 54 L. ed. 900, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 696, and Wingert v. Carpenter (1894) 101 Mich. 395, 59 N. W. 662.

II. Doctrine that amendment does not state new cause of action.

a. In general.

The authorities on the question indicated in the title to the present annotation are conflicting. While the doctrine of the reported case (HOGARTY v. PHILADELPHIA & R. R. Co. ante, 1386), that an action based on the common law for personal injury of a railroad employee cannot be amended so as to count upon the Federal Employers' Liability Act, after the limitation provided by that act has elapsed, is supported by some authorities cited later in the note, the conclusion reached does not seem to be in accord with the apparent weight of authority. This is true not so much because the courts have declared a different rule of law, but because, by a liberal construction of the pleadings, they have construed the original complaint as stating, though defectively, a cause of action under the Federal statute. But even apart from this consideration, by which many of the courts have reached a different conclusion from that reached in the HOGARTY CASE, there are a number of authorities which seem to support a different rule of law from the doctrine of that case, and to take the view that a complaint which attempts to state a cause of action at common law, or under a state statute, and does not allege facts sufficient to bring the case under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, may be amended so as to bring the case within that act, although the period of limitations prescribed thereby has elapsed; in other words, that the amendment is not the beginning of a new action, so as to subject it to limitations, but relates back to the filing of the original complaint.

United States.—St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Smith (1916) 243 U. S. 630, 61 L. ed. 938, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 477, affirming (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 171 S. W. 512 (state statute); Smith v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (1913) 127 C. C. A. 311, 210 Fed. 761.

Colorado.—Wilson v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. (1920) — Colo. —, 187 Pac. 1027 (state statute).

Georgia.—Gainesville Midland R. Co. v. Vandiver (1914) 141 Ga. 350, 80 S. E. 997 (state statute).

Iowa.—Basham v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. (1916) 178 Iowa, 998, 154 N. W. 1019, 157 N. W. 192 (state statute).

Kentucky.—Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Goode (1915) 163 Ky. 60, 173 S. W. 329; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Smith (1916) 169 Ky. 593, L.R.A. 1918F, 1205, 184 S. W. 1108.

Louisiana.—Lanis v. Illinois C. R. Co. (1916) 140 La. 1, 72 So. 788.

Michigan.—Jorgenson v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. (1915) 189 Mich. 537, 155 N. W. 535 (state statute). See also Fernet v. Pere Marquette R. Co. (1913) 175 Mich. 653, 141 N. W. 1084, 144 N. W. 834.

Mississippi.—Broom v. Southern R. Co. (1917) 115 Miss. 493, 76 So. 525.

New York.—Kinney v. Hudson River R. Co. (1916) 98 Misc. 11, 162 N. Y. Supp. 42, affirmed without opinion in (1917) 177 App. Div. 948, 164 N. Y. Supp. 1098 (but see later appeal, set out infra).

Tennessee.—Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Anderson (1916) 134 Tenn. 666, L.R.A.1918C, 1115, 185 S. W. 677, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 902 (state statute).

Texas.—Ft. Worth Belt R. Co. v. Jones (1916) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 182 S. W. 1184; Pope v. Kansas City,

M. & O. R. Co. (1918) — Tex. —, 207 S. W. 514; Bird v. Ft. Worth & R. G. R. Co. (1918) — Tex. —, 207 S. W. 518.

Wisconsin.—Curtice v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1916) 162 Wis. 421, L.R.A.1916D, 316, 156 N. W. 484, later appeal to same effect in (1918) 166 Wis. 594, 166 N. W. 444, petition for certiorari denied in (1917) 247 U. S. 510, 62 L. ed. 1242, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 578 (complaint for personal injuries apparently based on state law). See also Callahan v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1915) 161 Wis. 288, 154 N. W. 449.

The effect of the Federal Employers' Liability Act, in cases to which it is applicable, is to abolish the defense embodied in the so-called fellow-servant doctrine; to abolish the defense of contributory negligence in all cases where the injury was contributed to by the violation by the carrier of any statute enacted for the safety of its employees, and, in all other cases, to establish the doctrine of comparative negligence, so that the contributory negligence of the employee will not bar a recovery, but merely diminishes the damages; to abrogate the defense of assumption of risk in all cases where the injury was contributed to by the violation by the carrier of any statute enacted for the safety of employees; and to prevent the common carrier from exempting itself from liability under the act by any contract, rule, regulation, or other device. Although the Federal Act is supreme in its field, and where the facts bring the case within its scope no recovery can be had under any other law, yet it has been held that the state law governs in all matters not expressly provided for in the statute, such as the sufficiency of a general allegation of negligence (Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Stewart (1913) 156 Ky. 550, 161 S. W. 557); the rules of evidence governing an action brought under the statute (Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Leslie (1914) 112 Ark. 305, 167 S. W. 83, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 834); the sufficiency of the evidence (Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Johnson (1914) 161 Ky. 824, 171 S. W. 847). As the act does not attempt to define negligence, the question as to what constitutes negligence will be determined by the state law. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Swann (1914) 160 Ky. 458, L.R.A.1915C, 27, 169 S. W. 886. Probably the most important change in the common law made by the Federal statute is the abrogation of the so-called fellow-servant doctrine, so that a common carrier is liable for an injury to an employee, although such injury was caused by the negligence of a fellow servant.

It is said in Smith v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (1913) 127 C. C. A. 311, 210 Fed. 761, that the Federal statute does not deal with the cause of action, so far as negligence is concerned, but with the defenses that may be allowed and the measure of the recovery. And some of the cases in which it has been held that the cause of action was not changed by an amendment of a complaint based on a state law, or on the common law, so as to show a statement of facts within the Federal statute, may perhaps be explained on this ground.

And in Kinney v. Hudson River R. Co. (1916) 98 Misc. 11, 162 N. Y. Supp. 42, the court stated that the Federal decisions on the Federal Employers' Liability Act were clearly to the effect that the statute did not create a new or different cause of action, but simply abolished the fellow-servant rule, and modified the common law as to contributory negligence and in other respects; but that the right of action was not affected by it.

In Koennecke v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. (1915) 101 S. C. 86, 85 S. E. 374, so far as appears, the Statute of Limitations was not involved, but in taking the view that an amendment in an action for death of a railway employee so as to bring the case specifically within the Federal statute,—the complaint having originally stated a cause of action under a state statute—did not introduce a new cause of action, the court said: "Strictly and very technically speaking it may be that the amendment substituted one cause of action for another, though it would, perhaps, be more nearly correct to say that the cause of action is the same, whether the action be brought and tried under the state or Federal law; and, since the principal differences between an action under the state and Federal law lie in the authority by which the right of action is given, and in some of the rules of law applicable in the determination of the rights of the parties, they relate to form and procedure rather than to substance. So that it would rarely happen that a shifting from one to the other would work prejudicial surprise." The decision is affirmed in (1915) 239 U. S. 352, 60 L. ed. 324, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 126, 11 N. C. C. A. 165.

We do not understand the contention to be, said the court in Lanis v. Illinois C. R. Co. (1916) 140 La. 1, 72 So. 788, that the statute or law, under authority of which an action is brought, is the cause of action.

The declaration in Broom v. Southern R. Co. (1917) 115 Miss. 493, 76 So. 525, supra, stated a cause of action, the court said, under the state law; it alleged that the deceased, while on duty as an engineer in the defendant's employ, sustained injuries resulting in his death, through the negligence of a fellow servant; that the defendant was an intrastate railroad; and proceeded upon the theory of recovery of damages under the state law. After more than two years had elapsed from the time the cause of action accrued, the railway company gave notice that it would prove that at the time of the injury the deceased was employed in interstate commerce. Thereupon the plaintiff, the action being by the administratrix, was permitted to amend the declaration by alleging the interstate character of the business in which the railway company and the decedent were engaged. In holding that the amendment was properly allowed, the court said: "It will be observed here that the only amendment made to the original declaration was the allegation that the injury occurred while the parties were engaged in interstate commerce, instead of intrastate commerce. This amendment did not present a new or different statement of facts upon which the action was based, but merely amended the declaration, so as to come within the operation of the Federal Employers' Liability Act, instead of the state law. The allegations contained in the original declaration did not support a cause of action under the Federal law, but the amendment is not inconsistent with the purpose and relief originally sought by the declaration. It appears, therefore, that the amendment did not constitute a new cause of action, inconsistent with that set forth in the original declaration. The amendment was properly allowed by the lower court. It was not the beginning of a new action; but the suit should be treated as having been commenced at the time of the filing of the original declaration, which was done within the two years allowed in such cases."

The change of the basis of a cause of action for wrongful death from a state statute to the Federal Employers' Liability Act, and the insertion of allegations that decedent was employed in interstate commerce, are not a beginning of a new action within the operation of the Statute of Limitations; at least, if the interstate character of the transaction was made to appear by the pleadings before the statute had run. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. v. Anderson (1916) 134 Tenn. 666, L.R.A.1918C, 1115, 185 S. W. 677, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 902, supra. In this case, where the action was brought by the widow under a state statute for the death of a railroad employee, and the railway company, by plea filed seven months after the accident occurred, set up the interstate character of the commerce in which the deceased and the railway company were engaged, but this plea was erroneously overruled, and a judgment for the plaintiff was reversed because of the error, it was held that on the remanding of the case to the trial court, although more than two years had elapsed from the accrual of the cause of action, amendments substituting the administrator as the party plaintiff, instead of the widow, eliminating reference to the state statute, and averring the interstate character of the commerce in which the deceased and the railway company were engaged, should be allowed, as the amendments were not, in effect, the bringing of a new action which would be subject to limitations. The court apparently rested its decision in part on the ground that the pleadings, before the limitations period had expired, showed the interstate character of the commerce in which the parties were engaged; but it seems that the holding would have been the same without this additional feature of the case.

In the recent case of Wilson v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. (1920) — Colo. —, 187 Pac. 1027, supra, the supreme court of Colorado held that, in an action for death of a railroad employee, where the complaint stated a cause of action under the state statute, but it developed on the trial that the defendant was, at the time of the accident, engaged in interstate commerce, and the judgment for the plaintiff had been set aside because recovery was not allowed under the state statute by the plaintiff as widow, but the action must be by the personal representative of deceased under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, an amendment of the complaint should be allowed in the trial court, changing the character of the plaintiff from widow to administratrix, and alleging that the defendant was engaged in interstate commerce at the time of the accident, so as to bring the action within the Federal statute, although the Statute of Limitations therein provided had run. The court said: "In the district court, the plaintiff was permitted to and did amend her complaint in the material particulars only that the amended complaint fixed the relationship of the plaintiff to the deceased as administratrix of the estate, instead of as widow, to comply with the Federal statute in that respect, and with the further allegation that the defendant was engaged in interstate commerce at the time of the accident. In all other material particulars the amended complaint is the same as the original complaint in the statement of facts. . . . On the former hearing we said: 'The death of plaintiff's husband, through the negligence of defendant, its officers, agents, or servants, constitutes the cause of action, if any. If the facts establish a case, the defendant would be liable for damages therefor either to the plaintiff in her individual capacity or to the personal representative of the deceased, depending in that regard whether the employee was at the time engaged in intra or interstate commerce.' . . . This must be held to be the law in this case, and therefore we must hold, as there declared, that the death of plaintiff's husband, through the negligence of defendant, its officers, agents, or servants, constitutes the cause of action, and that, if the facts establish a case, the defendants are liable in damages therefor, either to the plaintiff in her individual capacity, or to the personal representative of deceased, depending in that regard upon whether the employer was at the time engaged in intrastate or interstate commerce. The facts alleged in the amended complaint being identical with the facts in the complaint there considered must, under such ruling, be held to be the same cause of action, and not a new and different cause of action as contended by the defendant in error. The cases cited in the former opinion are conclusive of the question." The court relied largely on the opinion of the Federal Supreme Court in Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wulf (1913) 226 U. S. 570, 57 L. ed. 355, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 135, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 134, cited under II. b, infra.

And in Gainesville Midland R. Co. v. Vandiver (1914) 141 Ga. 350, 80 S. E. 997, supra, the complaint alleged that the plaintiff, while in the service of the defendant railway company as fireman, was injured through its negligence, setting forth the nature of the injury and the negligence, and that the plaintiff brought the action under the Georgia statute.

The railway company filed a plea in abatement, alleging that it was engaged in interstate commerce at the time of the injury. The plaintiff thereupon sought to amend the petition by striking from it all reference to the Georgia statute, and further alleging the interstate character of the commerce in which the railway company was engaged. It was held that the amendment did not set up a new cause of action and should be allowed, although more than two years had elapsed from the time the cause of action accrued. The court said: "It was contended that, by the allegation that the defendant was engaged in interstate commerce at the time of the plaintiff's injury, the amendment changed the cause of action as originally laid. We do not think so. The cause of action was the injury sustained by the plaintiff in the negligent operation of the specific train described in the petition. The time, the place, and the manner of the injury were not varied. No new person was brought into the case, and the only added fact was the character of the business in which the train was engaged. When a suit is brought against a carrier by an employee on account of an injury sustained in the operation of its locomotive and cars, all that is necessary for the plaintiff to allege is a statement of the facts showing his relation as an employee and the circumstances under which he sustained his injury, showing negligence and a right of recovery; and, on the trial of the case, if the plaintiff shows a right to recover under any law of which the court will take judicial cognizance, that law will be applied. . . . When the proof is submitted, and it develops that the injury was committed by a carrier engaged in interstate commerce, then it becomes a question of comparison of the pleadings with the proof. If it be necessary to amend the pleading by alleging the interstate character of the carrier, it would be simply an elaboration of the old matter, and not the introduction of new matter. . . . There is no occasion to apply any other than the rule that an amendment relates to the time of filing the petition which is amended."

A similar view seems to be taken in Basham v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. (1916) 178 Iowa, 998, 157 N. W. 192, supra, where it does not clearly appear whether the petition was intended to be based on the Federal or state law, although the action in this instance was brought by the administrator, who alleged that the railway company operated a line of railroad through Iowa, Illinois, and other states, and that the injury occurred while the deceased was in charge of an engine operating between certain points in Iowa. It was held that, although more than two years had elapsed after the accrual of the cause of action, the plaintiff should be permitted to amend the petition by adding an allegation that the deceased left a dependent wife who suffered pecuniary injury by his death, and that the action was being prosecuted for her benefit. The court said: "We are of the opinion that the Statute of Limitations affords no defense in this case. The suit was originally brought and has ever since been maintained by the administrator, who is the proper person to prosecute it, whether it be maintainable under the law of the state or under the Federal Employers' Liability Act. The cause of action in either case is the death of Spellman, occasioned by the alleged negligence of the defendant. In other words, whether the action be brought in one form or the other, it is by the same party, against the same party, in the same court, for damages for the same alleged wrong; the sole distinction being in the measure of damages to be recovered and the person or beneficiary to whom the plaintiff must account for the damages, if any, which he collects. Now, assuming that plaintiff seeks to recover under the statute of the state, and alleges a good cause of action, but before the case is brought to trial, or even pending the trial, it develops that the deceased was injured while engaged in interstate commerce, and that, to sustain a verdict in favor of the administrator, the petition should allege that he was survived by a dependent wife or family, an amendment to the petition adding such necessary averment does not, in the judgment of the court, state a new cause of action permitting the defendant to successfully interpose a plea of the Statute of Limitations. Such is the logical and necessary effect of our own holdings."

In Jorgenson v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. (1915) 189 Mich. 537, 155 N. W. 535, supra, the original declaration, in an action for death of a railway fireman, did not refer to the Federal statute, nor, in express terms, charge that the defendant was engaged in interstate commerce, but, on the contrary, counted solely on the Michigan Employers' Liability Act. During the trial and more than two years after the right of action had accrued, an amendment was allowed bringing the case under the Federal statute. In holding that it was not error to permit the amendment, the court said: "Nor did the amendment introduce any new cause of action. Congress is given power to regulate commerce between the states; and when it has acted, as in passing the Federal Employers' Liability Act, such enactment becomes the general law of the land and supersedes all state laws upon the same subject. Therefore the reference to the state law in the declaration might well have been struck out as surplusage, and as if the reference had been to a law that had been repealed. The charges of negligence and of injury remained the same as before the amendment, and stated in substantially the same words." The Federal statute, the court said, was a general law, as much in force in Michigan as elsewhere, and therein the case differed from a former decision by that court, where it was attempted by an amendment to plead a foreign law, and thereby to introduce into the declaration a cause of action not existing under the laws in force in that state. It is true that, in this case, the original petition alleged that the defendant operated a railway system extending through Michigan and Indiana, and that the decedent was employed by it in the construction and the care of the roadbed, and the court stated that this amounted to an allegation that the defendant was engaged in interstate commerce and that the decedent was employed by it in such commerce. But it appears that the same result would have been reached in the absence of such allegation, for the court said that, had there been no allegation in the declaration that the defendant was engaged in interstate commerce, and that the decedent was employed by it therein, the addition of such matter to the declaration would have amounted simply to an elaboration of the old matter, and not to the introduction of new,—citing Gainesville Midland R. Co. v. Vandiver (Ga.) supra.

"We think it is clear," said the court in Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Goode (1915) 163 Ky. 60, 173 S. W. 329, supra, "that, when the cause of action arises under the Federal statute, but suit is brought under the state law, or by some person not authorized to maintain an action under the Federal statute, defects in the original petition may be cured by an amendment that does not set up a new and distinct cause of action, filed after the expiration of two years from the accrual of the cause of action, as the amendment will relate back to the filing of the original petition." The allegations of the original petition are not shown. The court said, however, that it stated a good cause of action under the Federal statute; but that both parties, after the filing of the petition, seemed to treat the case as falling under the state law; and that the amended petition merely reiterated the averments of the original petition, setting out perhaps more fully than it did the facts showing that the cause of action arose under the Federal statute. The question whether the amendment was barred by limitations arose on a second appeal, the amendment having been offered in the trial court after a judgment rendered against the railway company had been reversed, because, assuming that the action was brought under the state law, the plaintiff could not recover for the injury, on account of contributory negligence.

In Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Smith (1916) 169 Ky. 593, L.R.A.1918F, 1205, 184 S. W. 1108, supra, the petition in an action for damages for injury to a railroad employee alleged that the railway company operated trains over a line of road extending through various states, and that at the time of the injury the plaintiff was employed as a telegraph operator. The court was of the opinion that the petition, as originally filed, sufficiently stated facts showing that the railway company was engaged in interstate commerce, and that the plaintiff was employed by it in such commerce, and so stated a cause of action under the Federal statute. But the court took the position that, if it was mistaken in this view, and the cause of action, as stated by the original petition, was one under the state law, under the authority of Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Goode (Ky.) supra, and the decisions of the Federal Supreme Court, the petition might be amended so as to show that the cause of action arose under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, and that the amendment would not state a new cause of action so as to subject it to the operation of the limitations prescribed by that act.

And where the complaint in an action for the death of a railroad employee, brought by the widow and children of the deceased, did not allege whether the railway company or the deceased was engaged in interstate or intrastate commerce at the time of the accident, but the evidence showed that they were engaged in interstate commerce, it was held in Pope v. Kansas City, M. & O. R. Co. (1918) — Tex. —, 207 S. W. 514, supra, that an amended petition substituting as plaintiff the personal representative of the deceased, and alleging the interstate character of the commerce in which he and the railway company were engaged, did not introduce a new or different cause of action so as to subject it to the limitations prescribed by the Federal statute. The court took the view that, under the Federal Supreme Court decisions, an amendment showing that the cause of action arose under the Federal law did not present a new or different cause of action from a petition stating a cause of action under the state law, where the facts showing the negligence and the damages were the same. To a similar effect is Bird v. Ft. Worth & R. G. R. Co. (1918) — Tex. —, 207 S. W. 518.

It was held in Smith v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. (1913) 127 C. C. A. 311, 210 Fed. 761, supra, that in an action for injury to a railroad employee a new cause of action was not stated by an amendment alleging that the train on which the injury occurred was engaged in interstate commerce, and that such an amendment might be made although more than two years had elapsed after the injury. The court said that the original complaint stated a cause of action, to which the defendant was entitled to interpose certain affirmative defenses; and that when by the amendment the fact was developed that the defendant was engaged in interstate commerce, and the injury was sustained while the plaintiff was employed on an interstate train, the defendant, by virtue of the Federal statute, was deprived of these defenses; that the Federal statute did not deal with the cause of action, so far as negligence was concerned, but with the defenses that might be allowed and the measure of the recovery.

Although the effect of the Statute of Limitations is not discussed in the opinion, attention is called to Fernette v. Pere Marquette R. Co. (1913) 175 Mich. 653, 144 N. W. 834, where it was held that the appellate court would treat the declaration in an action for injuries to a railway employee, as amended to conform to the proof showing that the defendant was engaged in interstate commerce at the time of the injury, so as to sustain a judgment for the plaintiff, although more than two years had elapsed from the date of the injury. The court said: "We are, therefore, bound to hold that plaintiff may recover only under the Federal statute. His declaration, while it counts upon neither act specifically, was properly held by the learned trial judge to be based upon the liability fixed by the state act. This follows because of the fact that there is no averment in the declaration that, at the time of the accident, defendant was engaged in interstate commerce. At the time plaintiff commenced his action that fact could not have been known by him, and could have been ascertained only with great difficulty and trouble, if at all. Defendant was in possession of all the facts touching upon the matter, and upon the trial promptly put them in evidence as a matter of defense. Should plaintiff be held to be debarred from recovery because of his failure to aver in his declaration a fact of which he was in ignorance, and which, in the nature of things, he could not ascertain? We think it would be a reproach to the administration of justice to so hold. It should be borne in mind that the declaration sets out facts which would impose a liability upon defendant under the Federal act, if it had charged that, at the time of the collision, defendant was engaged in interstate commerce. We are of opinion that it was not necessary for plaintiff to plead either statute, but that, upon the coming in of the proofs, it was the duty of the trial court to permit an amendment of the pleadings to conform thereto." To a similar effect, see Callahan v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1915) 161 Wis. 266, 154 N. W. 449. The doctrine that in an action for injury to a railway employee brought under the state law, where the evidence shows that the carrier was engaged in interstate commerce and that the recovery, if any, must be under the Federal statute, the petition may be amended to conform to the proof, is, of course, supported by some cases, such as

Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Tucker (1916) 168 Ky. 144, 181 S. W. 940, which are not within the scope of the present annotation, because no question as to limitations is raised.

In some cases, in which, although limitations had run, an amendment of the complaint was held proper by substituting the administrator as plaintiff, so as to bring the action in the form required by the Federal statute, it does not clearly appear whether the original complaint was based on the Federal or state law.

Thus, it has been held that, where an action by a widow in her own name is brought within the statutory time, she may subsequently, by an amendment to her petition, be substituted as administratrix and recover in a proper case, although the two-year limitation has expired. Texarkana & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Casey (1915) — Tex. Civ. App. — 172 S. W. 729. But it is not clear in this case whether the original petition was based on the Federal statute or not. The same conclusion was reached in Eastern R. Co. v. Ellis (1918) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 153 S. W. 701, where, however, it appears that the original petition attempted to predicate a cause of action under the Federal statute. Both of these cases follow the decision of the Federal Supreme Court in Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wulf (1913) 226 U. S. 570, 57 L. ed. 355, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 135, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 134, supra.

It was held in Vaughan v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (1914) 177 Mo. App. 155, 164 S. W. 144, that where an action, brought by the widow in her own name, proceeds to judgment rendered in her favor, an amendment substituting her as administratrix upon the granting of a new trial may be allowed, and that a recovery as such administratrix will not be denied merely because the amendment was made after the expiration of the two-year limitation fixed by the Federal act. In the original petition the interstate character of the railway in question is alleged, but a state statute is also pleaded, permitting an action by the widow for the death of a railway employee.

Although the case is one in which the amendment attempted to eliminate allegations in the complaint regarding the interstate character of the business in which the defendant was engaged, and to predicate the cause of action on the state statute rather than on the Federal Employers' Liability Act, on which the action was originally based, attention is called to Nash v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. (1918) 141 Minn. 148, 169 N. W. 540, in which the court held that the proposed amendment did not attempt to set out a new cause of action, so as to subject it to the bar of the two-year Statute of Limitations of Iowa, it being said that the plaintiff had but one cause of action, viz., the wrongful act of the defendant in causing the injury to the plaintiff's intestate which resulted in his death; that the action was brought by the administratrix, who was the proper party to prosecute it, whether under the Federal act or the state law, and that whether in one form or the other it was by the same party, against the same party, in the same court, to recover damages for the same wrong. See also, to the effect that the court in an action for injury to a railway employee may disregard reference in the declaration to interstate commerce, as surplusage, and permit recovery on the remaining allegations if they sufficiently state a cause of action at common law, where the evidence fails to show that the parties were engaged in interstate commerce, Hayes v. Wabash R. Co. (1913) 180 Ill. App. 511, writ of error dismissed in (1914) 234 U. S. 86, 58 L. ed. 1226, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729, 6 N. C. C. A. 224, for want of jurisdiction.

b. View that pleadings should be liberally construed to state cause of action under Federal statute.

See Jorgenson v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. (Mich.) and Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Smith (Ky.) II. a, supra; also Lucchetti v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (Fed.) III. infra.

Apparently reluctant to admit as a principle of law that a complaint based on the common law or a state statute may be amended so as to bring the action within the Federal Employers' Liability Act after the limitation prescribed by that act has run, the courts have apparently, in some instances, effected this result by construing the complaint as pointing, although defectively, to a statement of a cause of action under the Federal statute. This has been true not only where the pleadings were silent on the question whether the railway company and the employee were engaged in interstate or intrastate commerce, but even where the action, as originally brought, seemed plainly intended to be based on state law.

The view of the Federal Supreme Court on the question under annotation is not entirely clear, and its decisions have been differently construed by the state courts. It appears, however, that the court has adopted a very liberal view as to the construction of the pleadings in cases to which the Federal statute is applicable, and there is authority of that court for the proposition that even though the pleadings are silent on the question as to the nature of the commerce in which the railway company and the employee were engaged, and the cause of action is construed by the state courts as based on the state statute, an amendment of the petition may be allowed so as to substitute the administrator as the party plaintiff, in place of the widow and parents of the deceased, and permit recovery under the Federal statute, though the limitation period prescribed by that act had elapsed before the amendment. This appears to be the effect of the decision in St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Smith (1916) 243 U. S. 630, 61 L. ed. 938, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 477, affirming (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 171 S. W. 512. The decision is announced in a per curiam opinion, which states simply that the judgment is affirmed on the authority of Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wulf (1913) 226 U. S. 570, 57 L. ed. 355, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 135, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 134; Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Koennecke (1915) 239 U. S. 352, 60 L. ed. 324, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 126, 11 N. C. C. A. 165; and Seaboard

Air Line R. Co. v. Renn (1916) 241 U. S. 290, 60 L. ed. 1006, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 567, 17 N. C. C. A. 1. To understand the significance of this decision consideration of the previous rulings in the case is necessary. It appears that an action was brought by the widow and parents of the deceased, who, while on duty as a railroad employee, was killed by a switch engine in railroad yards in Texas. The petition was silent on the question whether the railway company and the deceased, at the time of injury, were engaged in interstate commerce. The railway company, by special exception, sought to require the plaintiffs to allege in the petition such facts as would enable it to determine whether the Federal or the state law was applicable. The state court in its opinion, reported under title St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Seale (1912) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 148 S. W. 1099, 3 N. C. C. A. 800, held that the action was brought under the state law, that the petition stated a good cause of action, and was not subject to the exceptions presented. It held also that the facts, as shown on the trial, did not bring the case within the Federal statute. On this latter holding, the decision was reversed by the United States Supreme Court. See decision (1913) 229 U. S. 156, 57 L. ed. 1129, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 156. In reversing the judgment, the Federal Supreme Court seems to have regarded the petition as subject to amendment, so as to permit substitution of the personal representative as the party plaintiff, although more than two years had elapsed from the accruing of the cause of action, for it remanded the case for further proceedings, "without prejudice to such rights as a personal representative of the deceased may have." When the proceeding came again before the Texas court of appeals (reported in 171 S. W. 512), the court held that an amendment substituting the personal representative of the deceased as the party plaintiff was not the beginning of a new action, but related back to the filing of the original petition, that the amendment did not set up a new cause of action, and hence that the Statute of Limitations did not apply. It does not appear that the amendment did more than change the capacity of the party plaintiff. Yet the fact remains that the original petition was silent as to the nature of the commerce in which the parties were engaged, and that the state court regarded it as so clearly stating a cause under the state statute that the defendant had no ground to require the plaintiff to state the facts more explicitly, so as to show whether he relied on the state or Federal statutes.

An important case in this connection is Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Wulf (1912) 226 U. S. 570, 57 L. ed. 355, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 135, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 134, which is cited in the dissenting opinion in the reported case (HOGARTY v. PHILADELPHIA & R. R. Co. ante, 1386). In this case the Federal Supreme Court took the view that, although the original petition did not mention the act of Congress, but asserted a right of action under the laws of Kansas, it was sufficiently averred that the injury occurred in interstate commerce, it being alleged at the time of the injury that the deceased was in the employ of the defendant as a foreman on a train running from a point in Kansas to a station in Oklahoma, and that an amendment of the petition, where the action was brought by the sole surviving parent in an individual capacity, by which she set up for the first time the right to sue as personal representative, was not equivalent to the beginning of a new action, for the purpose of applying the two-year limitation prescribed by the Federal statute. The court said that, aside from the capacity in which the plaintiff assumed to bring the action, there was no substantial difference between the original and amended petitions; that "it is true the original petition asserted a right of action under the laws of Kansas, without making reference to the act of Congress. But the court was presumed to be cognizant of the enactment of the Employers' Liability Act, and to know that, with respect to the responsibility of interstate carriers by railroad to their employees injured in such commerce after its enactment, it had the effect of superseding state laws upon the subject. . . . Therefore, the pleader was not required to refer to the Federal act, and the reference actually made to the Kansas statute no more vitiated the pleading than a reference to any other repealed statute would have done. . . . Nor do we think it was equivalent to the commencement of a new action, so as to render it subject to the two years' limitation prescribed by § 6 of the Employers' Liability Act. The change was in form rather than in substance. . . . It introduced no new or different cause of action, nor did it set up any different state of facts as the ground of action, and therefore it related back to the beginning of the suit."

Assuming that the doctrine as to liberal construction of the pleadings to state a cause of action under the Federal statute was the basis of the decision in Curtice v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1916) 162 Wis. 421, L.R.A.1916D, 316, 156 N. W. 484, the case shows well the extreme to which the courts have gone in construing the pleadings so as to permit recovery under the Federal Liability Act, where the act is applicable, and limitations against the bringing of a new action have run prior to the time of the allowance of the amendment specifically setting up a right of action under the Federal statute. In this case the complaint, in an action to recover damages for personal injuries to a railway employee, alleged that the defendant operated a railway between certain points in Wisconsin, and contained no allegations tending to show that the plaintiff or defendant was engaged in interstate commerce at the time of the injury. On the other hand, as is pointed out in the dissenting opinion, the complaint seemed to indicate, if anything, that the employee was engaged in intrastate commerce. Counsel for the plaintiff stated that he intended to state a cause of action under the state law. The defendant set up facts showing the interstate character of the commerce in which it and the plaintiff were engaged. And it was held that an amendment showing that at the time of the injury the railroad was an interstate railroad, and that the injury occurred in interstate commerce, so as to come within the operation of the Federal Employers' Liability Act, did not state a new cause of action, so as to be subject to the limitations prescribed by the Federal statute. It was said: "It is obvious that but one cause of action existed upon all the facts stated in the amended complaint. It is equally obvious that the original complaint was defective in failing to state certain facts going to show that, at the time the injury was sustained, the parties were engaged in interstate commerce. Nothing stated in the amended complaint was in conflict or inconsistent with the allegations of the original complaint. The cause of action upon which the plaintiff sought to recover damages was defectively stated in the original complaint, and the defects were cured by the amendment. But one cause of action was stated. The amendment related back to the original complaint, and became a part of it; hence the Statute of Limitation was no defense." A later appeal to a similar effect is reported in (1918) 166 Wis. 594, 166 N. W. 444, petition for certiorari denied in (1918) 247 U. S. 510, 62 L. ed. 1242, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 578.

In other cases, the courts have more clearly shown that they intended to construe the original complaint as stating, though imperfectly, a cause of action under the Federal statute.

Thus, in Vickery v. New London Northern R. Co. (1914) 87 Conn. 634, 89 Atl. 277, the complaint in an action for injury to a railway employee alleged that the defendant railway company owned a railroad in Connecticut, which was operated by a lessee, also made a defendant, and that the injury occurred while the plaintiff was employed by the lessee as a brakeman in a railroad yard at a certain point in the state. In holding that, although more than two years had elapsed from the date of the injury, the plaintiff should be allowed to amend his complaint by allegations showing that the defendant and the plaintiff were engaged in interstate commerce, the court said: "The complaint contains no clear statement upon the pertinent matter of the employer's character and the nature of the employee's employment. It is not stated whether the operating corporation was engaged in interstate or intrastate commerce. . . . Counsel for the defendants say that the manifest intention of the pleader was to give to the operating corporation an intrastate character, and for that reason to state an action cognizable at common law only. We fail to discover substantial ground for that conclusion. . . . It well may be that the pleader was anticipating a common-law recovery; but that he intended to state a case without the purview of the Federal statute, and by that means bring it under the operation of the common law, is quite another proposition. . . . Judged in the light of the conditions existing when it was drafted, reasonable foundation for a conclusion that the pleader intended to state an intrastate commerce case, which could not be established, cannot be found in the allegations made." And the court accordingly stated that it was unnecessary to consider the proposition whether a change of allegations in the complaint, having the sole purpose of indicating that the remedy applicable was under the Federal statute, and not at common law, would amount to a change of the cause of action; but that the complaint, from the defendants' standpoint, at most merely omitted allegations showing that it was brought under the Federal statute, and, assuming that such allegations formed a part of the statement of a cause of action, the fault with the complaint was that it contained a defective statement of a good cause of action, and not the statement of a defective cause of action.

In Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Lenahan (1913) 39 Okla. 283, 135 Pac. 383, where the action was by the widow of the deceased, the petition was apparently based on the state statute, and did not, the court said, set out a cause of action arising under the Federal Employers' Liability Act; but the answer alleged, and the evidence showed, that the railway company was engaged in interstate commerce. And while it was held that a judgment for the plaintiff must be reversed, as the Federal statute controlled, and the plaintiff could not maintain the action in her own right, the court said that, on the remanding of the case to the district court, she might present an application to be made a party plaintiff in her representative capacity, and that the fact that more than two years had expired after the accrual of the cause of action would not bar her right to be made a party to the suit in her capacity as administratrix. In subsequent proceedings in (1918) — Okla. —, 171 Pac. 455, it was held that the trial court, on the remanding of the case, had properly allowed the petition to be amended by joining the widow as administratrix, as a party plaintiff, without in any way enlarging or modifying the facts upon which the action was based, and that such amendment was not equivalent to the beginning of a new action, for the purpose of applying the two-year limitation provided by the Federal statute. The court said that, aside for the capacity in which the plaintiff sued, there was no difference between the original and amended petitions; that in the former, as in the latter, it was sufficiently averred that the deceased came to his death through injury suffered while he was employed by the railway company in interstate commerce.

And where the original petition alleged the operation by the railway company of a line of road through various states, an amendment specifically alleging the interstate character of the commerce in which the parties were engaged at the time of the injury has been construed, with more plausibility, as a mere amplification of a statement of a cause of action under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, and not the bringing of a new action under that act so as to subject the amendment to the defense of limitations.

Thus, in Lammers v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. (1919) — Iowa, —, 175 N. W. 311, where the complaint in an action for injury to a railroad section hand alleged that the defendant operated a line of railway through Illinois, Iowa, and other states, and that the line extended to Kansas City and St. Paul, and that, at the time of the accident, the plaintiff was unloading rails to repair the track, it was held that an amendment specifically alleging that the plaintiff was employed and the defendant engaged in interstate commerce at the time of the accident was not the assertion of a new cause of action, but served only to amplify or enlarge the allegations of the original petition, and related back to the time of filing the petition, and was, therefore, not subject to the limitations of the Federal statute. In this instance, the case was tried and submitted to the jury under the state law, but on appeal the judgment for the plaintiff was reversed on the ground that the state law was inapplicable. On the remanding of the case to the trial court, the amendment was allowed, and the railway company relied on the bar of the Statute of Limitations. The court, in holding that the amendment was properly allowed, said: "If the amendment served only to amplify or enlarge the allegations of the original petition, it related back, and the Statute of Limitations did not bar the action. . . . If, however, the amendment stated a new cause of action, it did not relate back, and as it was filed more than two years after the cause of action accrued, under the provisions of the Federal act, the bar of the statute was complete. . . . By reference to the allegations of plaintiff's original petition quoted above, it will at once be seen that the character of defendant, as a common carrier engaged in interstate commerce, was sufficiently set forth. Aside from a brief reference to the defendant's negligence, which in no wise changed the cause of action originally pleaded, the amendment to plaintiff's petition included only the statement of the conclusion that plaintiff was employed, and defendant engaged, in interstate commerce at the time of the accident. . . . Defendant tacitly concedes that plaintiff was injured while employed by defendant in performing services in interstate commerce. He had but one cause of action, and that was under the law of Congress. He could not recover under the state statute for two reasons: One, the facts did not bring the case within the terms of the statute; and the other, that all state statutes, where the parties were engaged in interstate commerce at the time of the accident, were superseded by the Federal act. The amendment in no wise varied or altered the allegations of negligence, or the facts constituting his cause of action. There was no departure from the law under which the cause of action was originally pleaded, which was the only law under which it could be maintained, to a law of Congress; the facts and the substantial allegations of the petition remained the same. . . . We think it clear that the amendment did not state a new cause of action, but only amplified and enlarged the cause of action by specifically and directly asking relief under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, and therefore related back to the original cause of action."

And where the petition alleged that the defendant owned and operated a railroad through Nebraska and other states named, and that the plaintiff was employed by the company as a baggage handler at its Omaha depot, and that, while so engaged, a fellow servant negligently caused a heavy trunk to fall upon him, whereby he sustained personal injuries for which he sought to recover damages, the court stated in Eskelsen v. Union P. R. Co. (1918)

102 Neb. 423, 167 N. W. 408, that in this class of cases, where a carrier is engaged in both interstate and intrastate commerce, liberality must be permitted in the amendment of pleadings; and held that the petition stated a cause of action under the Federal act, and that an amended petition, filed more than two years after the accident, which in specific terms alleged the interstate character of the business in which the railway company and the plaintiff were engaged, did not state a new cause of action, but related back to the filing of the original petition, and was not barred by limitations. Rehearing was denied in (1918) 102 Neb. 427, 168 N. W. 366.

There are, of course, other cases, not within the scope of the note, which construe liberally pleadings in an action for injury or death of a railway employee, so as to bring the action within the Federal Employers' Liability Act. See, for example, Martinson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (1918) 102 Neb. 238, 166 N. W. 624, holding that a petition in an action against a railway company for personal injuries to the plaintiff while in the defendant's employ, stating that the defendant was the owner, and was engaged in the operation of a system of railroads in Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska, and other states, when not attacked by demurrer or motion, sufficiently alleged the interstate character of the defendant, so as to bring the cause of action within the Federal statute.

See also the statement of the rule in Vandalia R. Co. v. Stringer (1914) 182 Ind. 676, 106 N. E. 865, 107 N. E. 673, to the effect that while the action must be brought and recovery had under the state law where the injury occurs in intrastate commerce, or under the Federal act where injury occurs in interstate commerce, the plaintiff need not specifically plead or refer to the state statute in the one case, or to the Federal act in the other; but that the proper procedure is to plead the facts; and the recovery may then be had according as the evidence develops the case under the one law or the other.

III. View that amendment states new cause of action.

The decision in the reported case (HOGARTY v. PHILADELPHIA & R. R. Co. ante, 1386), that a common-law action by a railroad employee to recover, against his employer, for personal injury, cannot be amended so as to count upon the Federal Employers' Liability Act, after the limitation provided by that act has elapsed, is supported by the following cases: Walker v. Iowa C. R. Co. (1917) 241 Fed. 395; Morrison v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (1913) 40 App. D. C. 391, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1026; Carpenter v. Central Vermont R. Co. (1919) — Vt. —, 107 Atl. 569.

A similar rule in actions brought under state statutes for death of a railroad employee is supported by a number of cases to the effect that, if the action as originally brought is based on a state statute, an amendment of the petition, so as to base the action on the Federal Employers' Liability Act, introduces a new or different cause of action, and is subject to the limitations prescribed by the Federal statute. Hall v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1907) 157 Fed. 464; Hughes v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. (1913) 158 App. Div. 443, 143 N. Y. Supp. 603; Kinney v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1917) 166 N. Y. Supp. 868; affirmed in (1920) — App. Div. —, 179 N. Y. Supp. 929 (amendment may be allowed, but limitations is a defense); Findley v. Coal & Coke R. Co. (1915) 76 W. Va. 747, 87 S. E. 199. See also Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Renn (1915) 241 U. S. 290, 60 L. ed. 1006, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 567, 17 N. C. C. A. 1 (where rule seems to be implied); and Lucchetti v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (1916) 233 Fed. 137 (supporting rule, although original action was held to be based on Federal statute, and amendment, therefore, proper).

The Pennsylvania supreme court in the HOGARTY CASE reversed its former position taken in the decision on an earlier appeal of the case, reported in (1914) 245 Pa. 443, 91 Atl. 854, this reversal being due largely to the implication in the decision in Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Renn (1916) 241 U. S. 290, 60 L. ed. 1006, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 567, 17 N. C. C. A. 1, which was decided between the two appeals. It must be conceded that the decision of the Federal Supreme Court in the Renn Case, by implication, strongly supports the view that an amendment of a complaint based on the common law or a state statute so as to charge a cause of action under the Federal Employers' Liability Act presents a new cause of action, which is subject to the limitation prescribed by the Federal statute. It was held in the latter case that allegations in the complaint in a suit in a North Carolina court by a railway employee, to recover for personal injury suffered through the railway company's negligence, that the company was operating a railway in Virginia, North Carolina, and elsewhere, that plaintiff was in its employ, and that, when injured, he was in the line of duty, and that the injury occurred in Virginia by reason of a defect in the right of way, point, although imperfectly, to a cause of action under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, so that an amendment stating distinctly that, at the time of the injury, defendant was engaged and plaintiff was employed in interstate commerce, did not introduce a new cause of action which would be barred because the two years' limitation prescribed by the Federal statute had elapsed; but that such amendment merely expanded or amplified what was alleged in support of the cause of action, and related back to the commencement of the suit. The court said: "The original complaint was exceedingly brief, and did not sufficiently allege that at the time of the injury the defendant was engaged and the plaintiff employed in interstate commerce. During the trial the defendant sought some advantage from this, and the court, over the defendant's objection, permitted the complaint to be so amended as to state distinctly the defendant's engagement and the plaintiff's employment in such commerce. Both parties conceded that what was alleged in the amendment was true in fact, and conformed to the proofs, and that point has since been treated as settled. The defendant's objection was that the original complaint did not state a cause of action under the act of Congress, that with the amendment the complaint would state a new cause of action under that act, and that, as more than two years had elapsed since the right of action accrued, the amendment could not be made the medium of introducing this new cause of action, consistently with the provision in § 6 that 'no action shall be maintained under this act unless commenced within two years from the day the cause of action accrued.' If the amendment merely expanded or amplified what was alleged in support of the cause of action already asserted, it related back to the commencement of the action, and was not affected by the intervening lapse of time. . . . But if it introduced a new or different cause of action, it was the equivalent of a new suit, as to which the running of the limitation was not theretofore arrested. . . . The original complaint set forth that the defendant was operating a line of railroad in Virginia, North Carolina, and elsewhere; that the plaintiff was in its employ; that when he was injured he was in the line of duty, and was proceeding to get aboard one of the defendant's trains, and that the injury was sustained at Cochran, Virginia, through the defendant's negligence in permitting a part of its right of way at that place to get and remain in a dangerous condition. Of course, the right of action could not arise under the laws of North Carolina, when the causal negligence and the injury occurred in Virginia; and the absence of any mention of the laws of the latter state was, at least, consistent with their inapplicability. Besides, the allegation that the defendant was operating a railroad in states other than Virginia was superfluous if the right of action arose under the laws of that state, and was pertinent only if it arose in interstate commerce, and therefore under the act of Congress. In these circumstances, while the question is not free from difficulty, we cannot say that the court erred in treating the original complaint as pointing, although only imperfectly, to a cause of action under the law of Congress. And this being so, it must be taken that the amendment merely expanded or amplified what was alleged in support of that cause of action, and related back to the commencement of the suit, which was before the limitation had expired."

Although the language of the Federal Supreme Court in the Renn Case (U. S.) supra, seems to lend support to the view taken in the reported case (HOGARTY v. PHILADELPHIA & R. R. Co. ante, 1386), that an amendment of the complaint in an action for damages for injury to a railway employee, based on common-law liability, cannot, after the period of limitations prescribed by the Federal Employers' Liability Act has elapsed, be amended so as to predicate a cause of action on the Federal statute, it seems doubtful whether the United States Supreme Court would take this view in a case squarely presenting the question. And it seems clear that that court would be very liberal in its construction of the pleadings, as pointing to a cause of action under the Federal statute, where they do not state the nature of the commerce in which the parties were engaged. There seems much force in the statement made in Pope v. Kansas City, M. & O. R. Co. (1918) — Tex. —, 207 S. W. 514, that the decision of the United States Supreme Court in St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Smith (1916) 243 U. S. 630, 61 L. ed. 938, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 477, cited under II. b, supra, is adverse to the decisions of the courts which have construed the earlier opinions of the Federal court as requiring the holding that an amendment which shows that the cause of action arose under the Federal law presents a new or different cause of action from a petition stating a cause of action under the state law, though the facts showing the tort and the damages therefrom were the same in each pleading.

A writ of error in the HOGARTY CASE was dismissed by the Federal Supreme Court in (U. S. Adv. Ops. 1919-20, p. 49), 250 U. S. 650, 63 L. ed. 1189, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 12, for want of jurisdiction under the Amendment of 1916 to the Judicial Code. It may be noted as a possible ground for distinguishing the HOGARTY CASE from many of the other cases that the plaintiff in order to recover was obliged to take the position that the case was an interstate one and so within the provisions of the Federal Employers' Liability Act, relieving him of a defense which would have been fatal if the case had been an intrastate one and so governed by the state law. It should be observed that the Federal Employers' Liability Act makes the carrier liable for death to the personal representative of the employee, for the benefit of the surviving widow, or husband, and children, of such employee. And if an action is brought under a state statute for death to recover damages for the widow alone, it seems that an amendment which would attempt to set up a cause of action for the children would be subject to the limitations of the Federal statute. This was the situation in Lanis v. Illinois C. R. Co. (1916) 140 La. 1, 72 So. 788, where the widow of a railway employee, killed through the negligence of the company in interstate commerce, brought suit in her individual capacity for damages under a state statute, and the defendant excepted to the proceeding on the ground that the right of action under the Federal act precluded a right of action under the state statute. The court held that it was proper to allow the plaintiff to amend the petition by appearing in the capacity of administratrix for the benefit of herself and child, and that, as to the demand for the benefit of the widow, the amendment might be allowed, although more than two years had elapsed from the accrual of the cause of action. But the court was of the opinion, apparently, although it was unnecessary to decide the point, since the damages recovered for the child were purely nominal and did not affect the costs, that as to a demand for damages for the benefit of a child of the deceased, made for the first time in the amendment, a new cause of action was stated, which would be subject to the limitations of the Federal statute.

In Hughes v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. (1913) 158 App. Div. 443, 143 N. Y. Supp. 603, supra, the complaint in an action for injury to a railway conductor alleged that the defendant was organized under the laws of New York, and operated a railroad in various parts of that state and Pennsylvania, and that at the date of the accident the plaintiff was in the defendant's employ as a conductor on a train operated in Pennsylvania, and pleaded the statute of the latter state. Before trial the plaintiff died, and, more than two years after the cause of action accrued, a motion was made to substitute as plaintiff the decedent's widow, who had been appointed administratrix, and to permit her to serve an amended complaint, basing the action on the Federal Employers' Liability Act. In holding that the motion was properly denied, the court said: "The action was not brought under that act, but is specifically based on the common law, as modified by the statute of the state. An action under the Federal law must be begun within two years from the time the cause of action accrued, . . . but after nearly three years it is sought to convert the action under the state law into an action under the Federal law, thus extending the statute by a substituted cause of action. On April 5, 1910, the Federal act was amended so as to provide 'that any right of action given by this act to a person suffering injury shall survive.' . . . But the right cannot survive the time limited for its exercise, and when the person to whom the right is initially given elects to proceed under the law of the state, the right to proceed under the Federal statute is at least dormant, and ceases after the expiration of the two years. The Federal statute is tendered to him who, entitled, chooses to employ it. He may prefer the law of the state, as the injured person did in the present instance. But such law cannot be exploited and, upon emergency, the action be changed into one under the Federal law. There is not a suggestion of fact in the original complaint indicating intention to avail of the Federal statute."

The position taken by the New York court in Kinney v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (1917) 166 N. Y. Supp. 868, appears to be that where the complaint in an action for injury to a railway employee states no fact bringing the action under the provisions of the Federal Employers' Liability Act, but states a cause of action entirely under the common law or statutes of the state, while an amendment setting up the facts that the plaintiff, at the time of the accident, was engaged in interstate commerce, may properly be allowed although more than two years have elapsed after the accrual of the cause of action, such limitations, if pleaded and proved by the defendant, are a defense. The opinion relies largely on the decision of the Federal Supreme Court in Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Renn (1916) 241 U. S. 290, 60 L. ed. 1006, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 567, 17 N. C. C. A. 1, supra. Although the decision in the Kinney Case was affirmed without opinion in (1920) — App. Div. —, 179 N. Y. Supp. 929, it does not appear that the appellate division was of the same opinion as the lower court on the point under consideration, for it will be observed that the lower court decision is based also on other independent grounds.

The doctrine of Kinney v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. (N. Y.) supra, is opposed to the view taken on an earlier appeal in the same case, reported in (1916) 98 Misc. 11, 162 N. Y. Supp. 42, which is affirmed without opinion in (1917) 177 App. Div. 943, 164 N. Y. Supp. 1098. This earlier appeal makes a distinction between the case in question, which was an action for injuries to an employee, and Hughes v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. (N. Y.) supra, where the amendment attempted to set up a right in the administratrix, after the death of the employee, who had begun the action. It was said that the cases involving death claims were clearly distinguishable; that it was a well-known and conceded fact that all actions for damages for death caused by negligence were purely statutory; and that in every case where an action is brought by the injured person himself, or for his injury while living, and he afterward dies, and an amendment substituting and setting forth the new cause of action for his death is asked, it is plain that a new cause of action is sought to be interposed, and, if the Statute of Limitations has run against this new cause of action before the amendment is made, it is barred.

It was held in Hall v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1907) 157 Fed. 464, supra, that in an action for the death of a railway employee, brought by the widow under a state statute for her benefit alone, an amendment changing the character of the plaintiff from widow to administratrix introduced a new cause of action based on the Federal statute, which did not relate back to the beginning of the suit, and was subject to the defense of the Statute of Limitations. The court said: "The right of the plaintiff to recover in such actions as this was unknown to the common law. The right here asserted is entirely statutory. It becomes a matter of importance, therefore, to determine under which statute this suit was originally brought. To determine this fact, this court can only look to the plaintiff's own statement of her cause of action. . . . Wherever a right is conferred by a statute which is in derogation of the common law, such statute must be strictly construed. Under the state statute . . . the right to sue and recover in such a case as this is vested in the widow alone, there being a widow living. . . . Her recovery in the action would be for her benefit alone. . . . Under the Federal statute . . . the right of action is conferred upon the personal representative alone. The Federal statute effects radical changes in the liability, as it exists at common law or under the Florida statute, of common carriers engaged in interstate commerce, for injuries to their employees, in the disposition of the proceeds of the recovery when the injury results in death, and in the effect of the right of recovery for such injuries when the employee is guilty of negligence which directly contributes to his injury. There being, therefore, such marked distinctions between the two statutes, the conclusion is inevitable that the action, if brought under any authority at all, must have been brought under the state statute. Especially must this be the case when we consider the fact that at the time the suit was brought there was no personal representative in existence in whose name this suit could have been maintained under the Federal statute. . . . Here, under a suit in the name of the widow, she alone would be entitled to recover, and the measure of her damages would be such as the jury might determine that she alone had sustained on account of the death of her husband, . . . while under the Federal statute the administratrix would be entitled to recover for all damages sustained by her and her three children—probably just four times as much as she would recover in a suit as widow. Again, her recovery as widow would be no bar to a recovery under the Federal statute, at least in so far as her three children are concerned, who were neither a party to, nor interested in, any suit in the name of the widow as such. It seems, therefore, that the amendment presents an entirely new cause of action, to which the plea of the Statute of Limitations is a good defense."

Lucchetti v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. (1916) 233 Fed. 137, supports the view against the right to amend after limitations has run, the court stating that a party may have two causes of action, which, although growing out of the same facts, are distinct and separate, one of them, for illustration, arising out of the general principles of the law of negligence, and the other out of the provisions of a statute, state or Federal, and that, if he brings his action for the one cause, and wishes to change to the other, it is clear he is not amending the pleadings of the action brought, but is bringing in a new cause of action. But it was held that an amendment setting up other essential elements to bring the case within the Federal Employers' Liability Act was proper in this case, because it sufficiently appeared, both from the allegations of the statement of claim, and from the fact that the action was brought in a Federal court by one who could not have brought an action there except for a cause arising under the laws of the United States, that the cause of action meant to be set forth was one under the Federal statute.

And although it does not appear that the question of limitations was involved, attention is called to Molitor v. Wabash R. Co. (1914) 180 Mo. App. 84, 168 S. W. 250, where the petition in an action for injuries to a railroad employee did not state a case under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, but, the evidence showing that the plaintiff was, at the time of the injury, employed in interstate commerce, he contended that a recovery in his favor should be sustained on the theory that the Federal statute was applicable. The court in rejecting this view said that since the action, as stated in the pleading, was either under the common law or the statute of Missouri, and not under the Federal statute, the plaintiff could not recover under the latter statute without changing his cause of action from law to law, and that, it had been decided, he could not do.

See also among other cases not involving, so far as appears, the question of limitations. Creteau v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (1911) 113 Minn. 418, 129 N. W. 855, holding that where the action, by the allegations of the complaint, was founded entirely upon the state statute, and the trial proceeded throughout upon the theory of liability or nonliability thereunder, the action of the trial court in submitting the case to the jury under the Federal act was a clear departure from the issues presented, and the course of the trial, and was unauthorized.

Union P. R. Co. v. Wyler (1895) 158 U. S. 285, 39 L. ed. 983, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 877, is frequently cited in the cases on the present question which take the position that an amendment in an action for death or injury of a railway employee under a state statute or common law, so as to base the action on the Federal statute, presents a new cause of action against which limitations run until the amendment is offered. That case, however, decided before the enactment of the Federal Employers' Liability Act, seems clearly distinguishable from the class of cases covered by the present annotation. In that case, where the action for injury to a railway employee was brought in a Missouri court, the petition, which alleged that the injury occurred in Kansas, was based on the general law of master and servant, alleging that the injury occurred because of the retention by the railway company of an incompetent servant, with knowledge of such incompetency. It was held that an amendment to the petition, attempting to set up a liability under a Kansas statute, which made the railway company liable for the negligence of a fellow servant without regard to the rule regarding retention of an incompetent servant, was a departure from law to law, and presented a new cause of action against which the Statute of Limitations of the state of the action ran until the amendment was offered.

IV. Miscellaneous.

Where the complaint in an action for injuries to a railway employee alleged the circumstances of the injury, but omitted definite statement as to whether the plaintiff was at the time engaged in interstate commerce, and the railway company in its answer, filed within two years from the time of the accident, set up the interstate character of the commerce in which the parties were engaged, and issues were joined and the case tried as one arising under the Federal statute, it was held that the omission in the complaint to allege specifically the interstate character of the commerce in which the plaintiff and the railway company were engaged was cured; and that it was not erroneous for the court, at the close of the evidence, although more than two years had elapsed since the date of the injury, to permit the plaintiff to amend the complaint, by alleging that the plaintiff was injured while engaged in interstate commerce. King v. Norfolk-Southern R. Co. (1918) 176 N. C. 301, 97 S. E. 29. The court said that the omission by the plaintiff to make definite averment on the question of interstate commerce and applicability of the Federal statute was cured by the allegations of the answer and the treatment of the parties of the case, the amendment being without material significance, and only a formal statement of conditions which the parties had already created, and about which there was no dispute; that the parties were not only concluded by their treatment of the cause as one under the Federal statute, but the case properly called for the application of the doctrine of "aider" by the additional and supplemental averments in the adversary pleadings, by which a defective statement may be explained.

See also, among other cases not within the scope of the annotation because not involving the question of limitations, White v. Central Vermont R. Co. (1914) 87 Vt. 330, 89 Atl. 618, affirmed in (1915) 238 U. S. 507, 59 L. ed. 1433, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 252, 9 N. C. C. A. 8 A.L.R.—90.

265, holding that the defect in the original declaration in an action for death of a railway employee, in failing to allege the interstate character of the commerce in which the deceased and the railway company were engaged at the time of the accident, was cured by averments in the plea and admissions in the replication that the deceased was employed in interstate commerce.

As to whether a judgment in an action brought under the state law for the death of a railroad employee is a bar to a subsequent action brought for his death under the Federal statute, see Troxell v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (1913) 227 U. S. 434, 57 L. ed. 586, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 274, holding that a judgment in an action brought by a widow in her individual capacity, for herself and children, to recover damages from an interstate carrier for the death of her husband while in its employ, which was prosecuted and tried on the theory that it involved a cause of action under the state law, under which there could be no recovery for the negligence of the fellow servants of the deceased, was not a bar to a subsequent action by the widow as administratrix, brought against the carrier under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, in which recovery was asked because of the negligence of such fellow servant.

Among possibly other cases on the question whether counts at common law and under the Federal Employers' Liability Act may be joined in the same complaint, see Bouchard v. Central Vermont R. Co. (1914) 87 Vt. 399, L.R.A.1915C, 33, 89 Atl. 475, which holds in the affirmative on this proposition.

R. E. H.

DORIA RICHARD
v.
AMOSKEAG MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

New Hampshire Supreme Court — June 28, 1919.

(— N. H. —, 109 Atl. 88.)

Master and servant — disobedience of orders — effect.

1. A master may be liable for the act of his superintendent in using excessive force in compelling obedience to working rules, although he was expressly directed not to use such force, if the use of some force was necessary.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1432.]

— act of superintendent — use of unreasonable force.

2. That the foreman of a room in a shop uses unreasonable force to compel compliance with rules does not show that he was not negligent in the means he adopted to perform his service of superintendence.

Appeal — objection to theory of case.

3. The objection that the case was tried on the wrong theory cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.

[See 2 R. C. L. 183, 184.]

Master and servant — liability for wanton act of servant.

4. A master is answerable for the act of his superintendent in enforcing obedience to the rules of employment, although he acts with a wanton or reckless purpose to accomplish the end in an unlawful manner.

— assault by superintendent — liability.

5. A master is liable for assault by his superintendent upon a servant if the superintendent was doing what he was employed to do at the time of the injury.

[See 18 R. C. L. 810.]

Evidence — authority of superintendent to use force.

6. Authority of a superintendent of a mill to use some force to compel employees to remain at their work may be inferred from the fact that employees did not understand the language of the superintendent.

Master and servant — scope of employment — use of excessive force.

7. The use of excessive force by a factory superintendent in compelling obedience to working rules in the shop may be found to have been within the scope of his employment.

[See 18 R. C. L. 810.]

— authority to lay hands on employees.

8. The superintendent of a factory has implied authority to take hold of employees to lead them back to work when they leave it contrary to rules, if they cannot understand the language of the superintendent.

Appeal — erroneous expression in instruction — mode of preserving question for review.

9. To preserve for review on appeal error in the use of an expression in an instruction, the attention of the court must be expressly called to it.

[See 2 R. C. L. 75.]

On Petition for Rehearing.

Trial — waiver of defense.

10. The defense of fellow service is waived in an action against a master for assault by one servant upon another, by placing the defense upon the ground that assailant was not acting within the scope of his authority, without making reference to the question of fellow service.

[See 21 R. C. L. 584, 585.]

Appeal — ambiguous words in instruction — effect.

11. The use of the expression "apparent authority" in an instruction in an action against a master for assault by one employee upon another, that the jury must determine whether or not in the event of disobedience of orders assailant had apparent authority to enforce their execution, is not error if, when viewed in connection with the rest of the charge, it is evident that the court used the word in the sense of implied authority.

[See 14 R. C. L. 817.]

(Plummer, J., dissents.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Superior Court for Hillsborough County (Kivel, Ch. J.) made during the trial of an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries for which defendant was alleged to be responsible, which resulted in a verdict for plaintiff. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Warren, Howe, & Wilson and Louis A. Thorp for defendant.

Messrs. Taggart, Tuttle, Wyman, & Starr, for plaintiff:

Defendant was liable for the injury to plaintiff.

Grant v. Singer Mfg. Co. 190 Mass. 489, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 567, 77 N. E. 480, 20 Am. Neg. Rep. 351; Rogahn v. Moore Mfg. & Foundry Co. 79 Wis. 573, 48 N. W. 669; Jacques v. Great Falls Mfg. Co. 66 N. H. 482, 13 L.R.A. 824, 22 Atl. 552; Compher v. Missouri & K. Teleph. Co. 127 Mo. App. 553, 106 S. W. 536; Rowell v. Boston & M. R. Co. 68 N. H. 358, 44 Atl. 488; Rounds v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 64 N. Y. 129, 21 Am. Rep. 597, 8 Am. Neg. Cas. 536; Memphis & N. Packet Co. v. Hill, 58 C. C. A. 610, 122 Fed. 246; Avondale Mills v. Bryant, 10 Ala. App. 507, 63 So. 932; Jebeles-Coliss Confectionery Co. v. Booze, 181 Ala. 456, 62 So. 12; Nettle v. Flour City Ornamental Iron Works, 126 Minn. 530, 148 N. W. 43.

Mr. A. E. Boisvert also for plaintiff.

Walker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question is whether the defendant is responsible for the injuries sustained by the plaintiff in consequence of the act of Smith in forcing her back into the room where she was employed. The evidence justified the jury in finding that she was violating the rules of the defendant in leaving her work and standing in or near the door preparatory to leaving the factory when the noon signal should be given; that Smith had immediate charge of the room and was charged with the duty of requiring the help, including the plaintiff, "to stay in the room or near their work until the whistle blew at 12 o'clock;" that at the time of the assault he was attempting to enforce this rule, and not to punish the plaintiff to gratify his personal spite; and that while thus engaged in the defendant's service and in the performance of his duty of superintendent of the help he used more force upon the plaintiff than was reasonably necessary or justifiable, which resulted in the injuries complained of. Much of the argument for the defendant is based upon the assumption of facts which, upon the evidence, the jury were not only not bound to find, but were at liberty to negative; as, for instance, that Smith's assault upon the plaintiff was vindictive, and not resorted to as a means of performing his duty to the defendant. That there was evidence to the contrary is not open to doubt.

It is argued that the evidence does not warrant the finding of negligence on the part of the defendant. This contention is based upon the assumption that the use of any force by Smith was wilful and vindictive, and so an act of trespass, and not merely careless and unintentional and a negligent act. But the assumption is unsound. Because Smith used unreasonable force, it does not follow that he was not negligent, in the means he adopted to perform his service of superintendence. There was ample evidence that he was engaged in doing what he had a right to do, and that he was not actuated by malice toward the plaintiff or by a desire to punish her, or to inflict bodily injury upon her. The jury was justified in finding his use of unwarranted force was due to his want of ordinary care in rightfully attempting to use such force as his employment authorized. But the law of the trial was that the action was one for negligence, and no exception was interposed by the defendant to the charge of the court, which was clearly predicated upon that theory.

Master and servant—act of superintendent—use of unreasonable force.

Appeal—objection to theory of case.

To delay raising that objection until the case is before this court would seem to preclude the defendant from taking that position. Gage v. Boston & M. R. Co. 77 N. H. 289, 296, L.R.A.1915A, 363, 90 Atl. 855. The same ruling applies to the argument that Smith and the plaintiff were fellow servants. That point was not specifically referred to at the trial, was not submitted to the jury, and cannot now be profitably discussed. The inference is that it was understood the fellow-servant doctrine had no application. A forced construction of the language used by the court or by counsel does not overcome the conclusion that the case was not tried upon that theory, and that the jury did not understand that that issue was submitted. Nor was any request made for its submission.

The law applicable to the facts which the jury were justified in finding, upon the question of the defendant's liability, is not open to serious doubt in this jurisdiction.

"The master is responsible for the acts of the servant, while engaged in his master's work, which are done as a means and for the purpose of performing that work, and this is so whether the wrong is done by

Master and servant—liability for wanton act of servant.

the servant's performing his master's business in a negligent manner or by a wanton or reckless purpose to accomplish it in an unlawful manner." Rowell v. Boston & M. R. Co. 68 N. H. 358, 359, 44 Atl. 488; Cordner v. Boston & M. R. Co. 72 N. H. 413, 57 Atl. 234.

"However it may be in other jurisdictions, in this state the test to determine whether a master is liable to a stranger for the consequences of his servant's misconduct is to inquire whether the latter was doing what he was employed to do at the time he caused the injury complained of. If he was, the fact that he was not doing it in the way expected is immaterial." Danforth v. Fisher, 75 N. H. 111, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 93, 139 Am. St. Rep. 670, 71 Atl. 535; Patenaude v. Boston & M. R. Co. 77 N. H. 74, 87 Atl. 249.

The same principle is applicable when the assaulted party is a coem- <sup>—assault by superintendent
—liability.</sup> ployee, and not what is termed a stranger, or third party. 4 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 1466.

But it is argued that while this principle of law may be sound when the assaulting servant is authorized to use reasonable physical force upon or against a stranger to accomplish the master's purpose, as in the case of a railroad conductor in removing a trespasser from the train, it does not apply when the use of force is not authorized either expressly or impliedly by the master. But this is nothing more than saying that, when no degree of physical force is reasonable or to be expected in the proper or usual method of performing the required service or work, it would be unreasonable to infer that the use of force was authorized, or to hold that the jury could find that fact. This view of the law is illustrated by cases cited by the defendant; as in Crelly v. Missouri & K. Teleph. Co. 84 Kan. 19, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 328, 113 Pac. 386, 3 N. C. C. A. 854, when a local manager of a telephone exchange assaulted an operator because she refused to sign a voucher for her pay; and in Sunderland v. Northern Exp. Co. 133 Minn. 158, L. R. A. 1916E, 1151, 157 N. W. 1085, where a servant in seeking to collect a bill due his master assaulted the debtor because he used abusive language. If the master's liability is conceded to depend upon the question of authority reasonably incident to the work in hand, the jury might have found that the defendant authorized Smith to use some degree of force in keeping the help in the room engaged in the performance of their work. When the plaintiff quitted her work, it was Smith's duty to call her attention to her violation of the rule of the room and in some way to request her to resume her proper place. To make the request verbally would have been ineffective because she did not understand the English language, the only language he could use. He was obliged to resort to some other means of informing her of his request, as, for instance, by putting his hand upon her and leading or pushing her back to the position she had wrongfully left. The authority of superintendent

Evidence—
to use force.

use of some degree of physical force might reasonably be found to have been authorized by the defendant, and it follows, in accordance with the defendant's argument and the authorities above referred to, that the defendant would be liable for the excessive and unreasonable force used by Smith in the performance of his duty to the defendant.

But the principle applied in cases of this character has been stated to depend, not upon the question whether the master authorized the employee or agent to use force, but upon the question whether the latter used the force complained of as a means of doing what he was employed to do. Grant v. Singer Mfg. Co. 190 Mass. 489, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 567, 77 N. E. 480, 20 Am. Neg. Rep. 351; Patenaude v. Boston & M. R. Co. supra. When there is evidence that the assaulting party was engaged within the scope of his employment under his contract with the master, and some degree of physical force becomes reasonably necessary toward another servant for the accomplishment of the master's purpose, the use of excessive force may render the master liable, as it would in the case of a trespasser ejected by similar violent means; especially where the fellow-servant doctrine is not invoked, as it was not in the trial of this case.

Master and servant—scope of employment—use of excessive force.

The acts of the servant under such circumstances, though amounting to an unlawful assault in violation of the express orders of the master, may be found by the jury to be within the scope of his employment. "The simple test is, whether they were acts within the scope of his employment, not whether they were done while prosecuting the master's business, but whether they were done by the servant in furtherance thereof, and were such as may fairly be said to have been authorized by him. By authorized is not meant authority expressly conferred, but whether the act was such as was incident to the performance of the duties intrusted to him by the master, even though in opposition to his express and positive orders." Wood, Mast. & S. § 307.

If, on the other hand, it appears that the unlawful act was in no proper sense incident to the servant's employment, although it may have been with a purpose to promote the master's interest (Cordner v. Boston & M. R. Co. and Patenaude v. Boston & M. R. Co. supra), the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, in the absence of ratification by the master, for the reason that the servant's act was not within the scope of his employment even incidentally, and consequently was unauthorized.

The principal difficulty in cases of this character has arisen not so much in statements of the law involved, as in its application to the facts of particular cases. That the master is only liable when the servant's act was within the scope of his employment is recognized in practically all the cases: but the absence of a clear and definite definition of that phrase has caused much confusion and apparent conflict in the authorities. Penas v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 112 Minn. 203, 223, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 627, 140 Am. St. Rep. 470, 127 N. W. 926. See 27 L.R.A. 161, note. But since it presents a mixed question of law and fact it is doubtful if it is susceptible of exact definition as a legal proposition. Such acts as are reasonably incident to the service the servant is employed to render are within the scope of his employment, in the sense that the master's duty to a third party may be violated by the servant's negligent or malicious conduct in attempting to perform them. In this view it may not be inaccurate to say that as against the injured party the master authorized the servant to do the act causing the injury, although he may have expressly instructed the servant not to do it. If the act causing the injury is connected with or grows out of the service the servant is doing, the latter is within the scope of his employment and the master is liable. If —disobedience of orders—effect. therefore the service may reasonably require the exercise of force, under some circumstances force is authorized, and the master may be liable for its excessive or unreasonable use, upon the ground that the servant was within the scope of his employment, which has naturally resulted in injury to another, to whom the master owed the duty of abstaining from unnecessary violence.

In this connection it should be noted that while the use of reasonable force as a means of performing the required service may be incidental thereto, and while the use of an unreasonable degree of force could not be justified as an incident to the service, the master's liability rests on the theory that, having authorized the use of reasonable force as a means for the accomplishment of the service, he is responsible for its negligent or wilful abuse by the servant. He is responsible, not because the use of force was an incident of the service, but because its abuse caused the injury. In support of these general propositions the following additional authorities may be cited: Citizens' Assur. Co. v. Brown [1904] A. C. 423, 6 B. R. C. 675, 73 L. J. P. C. N. S. 102, 90 L. T. N. S. 739, 20 Times L. R. 497, 53 Week. Rep. 176; Dickson v. Waldron, 135 Ind. 507, 24 L.R.A. 483, 488, 41 Am. St. Rep. 440, 34 N. E. 506, 35 N. E. 1; Hudson v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 16 Kan. 470; Crelly v. Missouri & K. Teleph. Co. 84 Kan. 19, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 328, 113 Pac. 386, 3 N. C. C. A. 854; Sunderland v. Northern Exp.

Co. 133 Minn. 158, 159, L.R.A. 1916E, 1151, 157 N. W. 1085; Rogahn v. Moore Mfg. & Foundry Co. 79 Wis. 573, 48 N. W. 669; Rounds v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 64 N. Y. 129, 21 Am. Rep. 597, 8 Am. Neg. Cas. 536; Compber v. Missouri & K. Teleph. Co. 127 Mo. App. 553, 106 S. W. 536; Grant v. Singer Mfg. Co. 190 Mass. 489, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 567, 77 N. E. 480, 20 Am. Neg. Rep. 351; Searle v. Parke, 68 N. H. 311, 34 Atl. 744; Turley v. Boston & M. R. Co. 70 N. H. 348, 47 Atl. 261, 8 Am. Neg. Rep. 484; New Ellerslie Fishing Club v. Stewart, 123 Ky. 8, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 475, 93 S. W. 598. The case of Jones v. St. Louis, N. & P. Packet Co. 43 Mo. App. 398, holding that where the second mate of a boat assaulted a deck hand for the purpose of making him work, the defendant is not liable for the wrong done, is particularly relied upon by the defendant in support of the argument that Smith was not within the scope of his employment. But that case is not only distinguishable from the present case, but as an authority it has been repudiated in Collette v. Rebori, 107 Mo. App. 711, 720, 82 S. W. 552, and in Compber v. Missouri & K. Teleph. Co. 127 Mo. App. 553, 106 S. W. 536, and is contrary to the holdings in Jebeles-Colias Confectionery Co. v. Booze, 181 Ala. 456, 62 So. 12; Avondale Mills v. Bryant, 10 Ala. App. 507, 63 So. 932; Rogahn v. Moore Mfg. & Foundry Co. 79 Wis. 573, 48 N. W. 669; The General Rucker (D. C.) 35 Fed. 152.

Little doubt can be entertained upon the evidence that Smith at the time of the assault was in charge of the room as superintendent, and that it was one of his duties to the master to see that the help, including the plaintiff, attended to their work during working hours. When the plaintiff left her machine and stood in the door preparatory to leaving the mill, she was not attending to her work, as Smith understood the rules of the mill and the duties of her employment. It thereupon became his duty to insist upon her returning to her work and remaining at her machine until the noon signal was given. The use of reasonable physical force as a means of performing this duty was incidental thereto. If he had taken her by the arm and led her back without unnecessary violence, as he says he attempted to do, it could not be said that he was not acting within the scope of his employment as a superintendent. Especially is this true in view of the fact that a verbal request to her would have been ineffective as above suggested. The use of some degree of force would seem to be necessarily implied under such circumstances from his employment.

—authority to lay hands on employees.

The situation is no different in principle than it would have been if the plaintiff had been totally deaf, or if there had been so much noise and confusion in the room that Smith's voice was inaudible. Something more than verbal orders or requests would be necessary to induce the plaintiff to attend to the duties of her employment.

The act of Smith was an act of superintendence, performed for the benefit of the master, and was incidental to the work he was employed to do. Compher v. Missouri & K. Teleph. Co. 127 Mo. App. 553, 106 S. W. 536. It was not an act done merely to gratify his spite toward the plaintiff, nor was it done for the purpose of administering punishment to her. The verdict negatives any such inferences of fact. If Smith was authorized under the circumstances to use a reasonable degree of force to compel the plaintiff to attend to her work, there is no escape from the conclusion that the defendant is responsible for his negligence in using unreasonable force. The motions for a nonsuit and for a directed verdict were properly denied.

The defendant excepted to the instruction given to the jury that "if Smith had been invested with apparent authority to enforce discipline, the defendant is responsible for Smith's acts while he was engaged in the exercise of that authority."

In another place in the charge the question for the jury to decide was stated as follows: "In the event of disobedience of the orders, did Smith have the apparent authority to enforce their execution for the purpose of maintaining discipline in the room?"

The sense in which the word "apparent" was used was not explained; it was not defined; and the defendant now insists that the court erred in using the expression "apparent authority." It does not appear that the defendant asked for special instructions upon this point, or intimated to the court the ground upon which it was claimed the charge was wrong. It is evident if such an explanation had been made the court might have substituted other language for the expression now objected to by the defendant, and thus have cured the assumed error. As the defendant remained silent after taking a general exception and failed to call attention to this expression of which they now complain, so that the court might have corrected what appeared to have been said, the defendants take nothing by their general exception. Bourassa v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 75 N. H. 359, 362, 74 Atl. 590. Such is the general rule in this state, which has been applied in numerous cases, some of which are cited in the above case. Upon the ground of waiver the defendant's exception to the charge is unavailing.

Appeal—erroneous expression in instruction—mode of preserving question for review.

Exceptions overruled; judgment on the verdict.

Peaslee, J., did not sit.

Plummer, J., dissents. The others concur.

A motion for rehearing having been filed, Walker, J., on March 2, 1920, handed down the following additional opinion:

The amendments of the case desired by the defendant appear to be unnecessary. The facts are fully reported in the case, so far as they are material. A rehearsal of the evidentiary facts requested does not show that the court committed any error in denying the motion.

The defendant's argument that the fellow-servant doctrine is open for discussion, because its exception to the denial of its motion for a nonsuit nominally raised the question, is futile, for the reason that the grounds upon which it based the motion when it was made and the course of the trial do not indicate that it relied upon that defense, but upon the claim that at the time the plaintiff was injured Smith was not acting within the scope of his authority and did not represent the master. No specific reference to the defense of fellow service was made. Nor was any specific instruction on that point requested. It is clear that the defendant waived any right it might have had to present that view of the case. The brief remarks of the court in its charge upon the subject of vice principalship were not excepted to by the defendant. Indeed, it seems to have been conceded that Smith was the vice principal of the defendant, who was liable for Smith's acts of superintendence.

Trial-waiver of defense.

The alleged error of the court in using the expression "apparent authority" in the charge cannot now be taken advantage of by the defendant, for the reason stated in the former opinion. But in addition to that it appears that the defendant's position is unsound; for upon a reasonable interpretation of the language objected to, viewed in connection with the rest of the charge, it cannot be doubted that the court used the word "apparent" in the sense of the word "implied," and that the jury understood they might find from the character of the service Smith was employed to perform that the defendant invested him with authority to see that the regulations in regard to the time when the employees should be attending to their work should be observed by them; that is, that it was apparent to the defendant, as it would be to reasonable men in the same situation, that such authority, if not expressly given, existed as a necessary incident of the employment of Smith as a superintendent of the room.

Appeal—ambiguous words in instruction—effect.

As the defendant's last exception cannot be sustained, and as the motion for a rehearing is unavailing, the result is Exception overruled.

Former order affirmed.

Parsons, Ch. J., and Peaslee, J., did not sit.

Young, J., concurs.

Plummer, J., dissents on last order.

ANNOTATION.

Master's liability for injury of one servant by another in enforcing discipline.

- I. The general rule, 1432.
- II. Application of the rule, 1433.
- III. Miscellaneous, 1436.
- IV. Under maritime law, 1436.

I. The general rule.

The principle is well established that a master is liable for an injury wrongfully inflicted by one servant upon another, in an attempt to enforce discipline, where the act is done within the general scope of his employment.

In applying this rule to the divergent facts of the various cases there has been, as stated in the reported case (RICHARD V. AMOSKEAG MFG. CO. ante, 1426), some apparent conflict in the authorities, due to the absence of a clear and definite definition of the phrase "scope of employment." It may, however, be partially defined, in the light of the adjudged cases, as an act performed by the servant in the line of his duty as a means of furthering his master's business, and not for a purpose personal to himself. The master's liability, in this class of cases, rests on familiar principles drawn from the law of agency and on the ancient maxims "respondeat superior" and "qui facit per alium facit per se."

The general rule was recognized in the following cases:

United States.—Spencer v. Kelley (1887) 32 Fed. 838; The General Rucker (1888) 35 Fed. 152; Gabrielson v. Waydell (1895) 67 Fed. 342; Memphis & N. Packet Co. v. Hill (1903) 58 C. C. A. 610, 122 Fed. 246.

Alabama.—Palos Coal & Coke Co. v. Benson (1905) 145 Ala. 664, 39 So. 727; Jebeles-Colias Confectionery Co. v. Booze (1913) 181 Ala. 456, 62 So. 12; Avondale Mills v. Bryant (1913) 10 Ala. App. 507, 63 So. 932.

Arkansas.—Tillar v. Reynolds (1910) 96 Ark. 358, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1043, 131 S. W. 969.

Georgia.—Brown v. Smith & K. Co. (1913) 12 Ga. App. 214, 76 S. E. 1082; Smith v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. (1916) 18 Ga. App. 399, 89 S. E. 490.

Illinois.—Arasmith v. Temple (1882) 11 Ill. App. 39.

Kansas.—Crelly v. Missouri & K. Teleph. Co. (1911) 84 Kan. 19, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 328, 113 Pac. 386, 3 N. C. C. A. 854.

Louisiana.—Dyer v. Rieley (1876) 23 La. Ann. 6.

Minnesota.—Campbell v. Northern P. R. Co. (1892) 51 Minn. 488, 53 N. W. 768; Sunderland v. Northern Exp. Co. (1916) 133 Minn. 158, L.R.A.1916E, 1151, 157 N. W. 1085.

Mississippi.—McCoy v. McKowen (1853) 26 Miss. 487, 59 Am. Dec. 264; Alabama & V. R. Co. v. Harz (1886) 88 Miss. 681, 42 So. 201; Indianola Cotton Oil Co. v. Crowley (1920) — Miss. —, 83 So. 409.

Missouri.—Jones v. St. Louis, N. & P. Packet Co. (1891) 43 Mo. App. 398; Compher v. Missouri & K. Teleph. Co. (1907) 127 Mo. App. 553, 106 S. W. 536; Sooby v. Postal Teleg.-Cable Co. (1920) — Mo. App. —, 217 S. W. 877.

New Hampshire.—RICHARD v. AMOS-KEAG MFG. Co. (reported herewith) ante, 1426.

New York.—Gabrielson v. Waydell

(1892) 135 N. Y. 1, 17 L.R.A. 228, 31 Am. St. Rep. 793, 39 N. E. 969.

North Carolina.—Roberts v. Southern R. Co. (1906) 143 N. C. 176, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 798, 55 S. E. 509, 10 Ann. Cas. 375; Fleming v. Tarboro Knitting Mills (1913) 161 N. C. 436, 77 S. E. 309.

Tennessee.—Puryear v. Thompson (1844) 5 Humph. 397; Smith v. Memphis & A. C. Packet Co. (1886) — Tenn. —, 1 S. W. 104.

Texas.—Echols v. Dodd (1857) 20 Tex. 191.

Wisconsin.—Rogahn v. Moore Mfg. & Foundry Co. (1891) 79 Wis. 573, 48 N. W. 669.

II. Application of the rule.

In the following cases it was held that the assaults complained of were committed by the superior servant within the scope of his employment and in the furtherance of the master's business, and that the latter was liable therefor:

A general manager of a corporation who assaulted a bookkeeper when the latter hesitated to permit him to inspect the books and accounts of the company, and to leave the safe open and the books out for that purpose, was held in Indianola Cotton Oil Co. v. Crowley (1920) — Miss. —, 83 So. 409, to act within the scope of his employment and about the master's business in so doing, although the particular account that he desired to inspect was his individual account with the master.

In Fleming v. Tarboro Knitting Mills (1913) 161 N. C. 436, 77 S. E. 309, where a foreman violently assaulted an employee with whom he had just remonstrated about his work, and his failure to start up his machines, the test of the master's responsibility is said to be, not whether the act was done during the existence of the employment, but whether it was done in the prosecution of the master's business. The question was held properly submitted to the jury, which found in favor of the injured employee.

Evidence that an employee, directly after his discharge by the manager of a corporation because of the manner in which he performed his work, was assaulted by the manager while leaving the premises, was held in Jebeles-Colias Confectionery Co. v. Booze (1913) 181 Ala. 456, 62 So. 12, to authorize a finding that the assault was committed in the course of the manager's employment and in the line of his assigned duties, where it does not appear that the assault grew out of anything other than the dispute between them and some temper evolved from the fact and manner of the dismissal.

Of course, if the wrongful act committed by one servant against another is not done within the scope of his employment or the line of his duty, and has no relation to the business of the employer, it is an independent tort for which the latter is not liable.

Thus, a mining company is not liable in damages for an assault made by its general superintendent upon the driver of a car in the mine while the superintendent was riding upon the car, where supervision of the drivers formed no part of his duty. Palos Coal & Coke Co. v. Benson (1905) 145 Ala. 664, 39 So. 727.

Similarly, the owners of a steamboat are not liable for the acts of the mate who, observing some of the crew standing near whisky barrels forming part of the cargo, threw a pine knot which struck one of them in the eye, where it does not appear that it was part of the duty of the mate to guard the whisky or that he had orders to do so. Dyer v. Rieley (1876) 28 La. Ann. 6.

So, an employer was held not liable in Brown v. Smith & K. Co. (1913) 12 Ga. App. 214, 76 S. E. 1082, for an assault committed by its foreman upon an employee whom he had discharged because the latter demanded the wages due him and threatened to complain to the employer.

A railroad company is not liable in damages for an assault committed by a chief clerk upon a former employee whose discharge he had procured three days previously because of a dispute between them as to the payment of money. Alabama & V. R. Co. v. Harz (1906) 88 Miss. 681, 42 So. 201.

Similarly, a brakeman who was assaulted by the conductor while on his way to the cab to get a lantern belonging to him, after being discharged by the conductor for failure to stop a moving car in time to prevent it from striking another car, was held not entitled to recover damages from the railway company in Smith v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. (1916) 18 Ga. App. 399, 89 S. E. 490.

A railroad company is not liable for an assault made by a yardmaster upon an employee during a personal quarrel between them, because of a correction which the yardmaster had administered to the employee for a mistake in switching cars. Roberts v. Southern R. Co. (1906) 143 N. C. 176, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 798, 55 S. E. 509, 10 Ann. Cas. 375.

An express company is not liable for an act of its assistant auditor who, after an argument with an office clerk concerning a demand for more salary, in which warm words were used, followed the clerk and kicked him for language which he considered insolent. Sunderland v. Northern Exp. Co. (1916) 133 Minn. 158, L.R.A.1916E, 1151, 157 N. W. 1085.

Averments that a physician employed by a railroad beneficial association assaulted one of his assistants employed by the association, while both were in the performance of their several duties at a hospital, which act is alleged to have been done in the course of his employment and while in the discharge of his duty, and to have been the act of his principal, are insufficient on demurrer, since they do not show the assault to have been other than an independent tort. Campbell v. Northern P. R. Co. (1892) 51 Minn. 488, 53 N. W. 768.

In some of the earlier cases it was considered that a master was not liable for the torts of the servant committed without the master's authority, and on this principle it was determined in McCoy v. McKowen (1853) 26 Miss. 487, 59 Am. Dec. 264, that a master who hired a slave from another was not liable in damages for the death of the slave because of a beating inflicted upon her by an overseer whose violence was not authorized by the master, but was the result of the overseer's imprudence.

Similarly, one who directed his overseer to give a hired negro slave a good whipping, which would humble him, was held liable in damages to the owner of the slave in Puryear v. Thompson (1844) 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 397, where the latter died from the effects of the whipping administered, if the overseer intended only to chastise the negro until he be humbled, in pursuance of the master's directions; but if he abandoned the purpose to chastise until the negro should be humbled, and employed instruments of torture to gratify his malice, intending to kill him, it was determined that the master would not be liable.

The preceding case was followed in Smith v. Memphis & A. C. Packet Co. (1886) — Tenn. —, 1 S. W. 104, which held that a packet company was not liable for the unauthorized act of its mate who, after ordering a deck hand to walk faster in carrying in boxes of freight, engaged in an altercation with him and struck him.

But it is said in Avondale Mills v. Bryant (1913) 10 Ala. App. 507, 63 So. 932, that the later and better rule is that the master is liable for the acts of the servant wilfully and intentionally done in the general scope and line of his employment, although without the command, authorization, or ratification of the master, because he has failed to make good, to the party injured, his assumption, for the servant, that the latter would execute the master's service in a lawful manner. In this case the employer was held liable for an assault committed by its foreman upon an employee who had moved into one of the houses in the mill village without the permission of the foreman who had charge of them, since such wrongful act was done while the foreman was acting in the general line and scope of his employment in and about his duties as such foreman.

Similarly, a master is liable for the act of a servant who forcibly ejects another servant from the master's premises, if he acts therein bona fide as such servant and in the line of his employment, although the act may have been malicious and in the manner of doing it unlawful, and in fact against the master's will. Arasmith v. Temple (1882) 11 Ill. App. 39.

A master who directs his servant to render service which reasonably requires the exercise of force thereby impliedly authorizes him to use force when necessary, in executing the master's orders or in conducting and superintending his business, and necessarily leaves it to him to decide what degree of force he shall use, and the master is responsible in damages to another employee whom the servant injures by the use of excessive force.

This is the doctrine of the reported case (RICHARD v. AMOSKEAG MFG. CO. ante, 1426), in which the employer was held liable for the act of its superintendent in using unreasonable force in attempting to compel a female employee, in compliance with a rule of the employer, to return to her work and to remain at her machine until the noon signal was given.

So, in Rogahn v. Moore Mfg. & Foundry Co. (1891) 79 Wis. 573, 48 N. W. 669, an employer was held liable for an assault committed by its foreman upon an employee whom he had discharged on account of his refusal to do certain work, the assault being committed in an effort to remove the discharged employee from the shop upon his refusal to depart at once.

An overseer whose employment confers on him the right to decide when chastisement of a hired slave is necessary, and to inflict punishment when necessary, acts in the course of his employment when he beats the slave so negligently and recklessly that death ensues, and the master is liable in damages to the owner of the slave for the overseer's wrongful act. Echols v. Dodd (1857) 20 Tex. 191.

The owner of a convict farm was held liable in damages in Tillar v. Reynolds (1910) 96 Ark. 358, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1043, 181 S. W. 969, for the act of the warden in charge of the farm, and who had authority to punish, in chastising a convict so severely that he died from the effects thereof.

A telegraph company was held liable in Sooby v. Postal Telegr.-Cable Co. (1920) — Mo. App. —, 217 S. W. 877, for an injury to a messenger boy due to the acts of other messenger boys, who pushed him from his bicycle while trying to bring him back to the office in pursuance of a direction given by a telegraph operator that they compel him to return to work.

A telephone company is liable in damages for the act of its chief operator who, after being annoyed by the conduct of some of the employees who were laughing and talking, angrily took hold of the revolving chair of a switchboard operator and turned it about so as to make her face the switchboard, and, when so doing, inflicted severe injuries upon her when she collided with the substructure of the switchboard. Compber v. Missouri & K. Teleph. Co. (1907) 127 Mo. App. 553, 106 S. W. 536.

The decision in Jones v. St. Louis, N. & P. Packet Co. (Mo.) infra, was disapproved in this case in so far as it is inconsistent therewith.

When no degree of physical force is reasonable or to be expected in the proper or usual method of performing the required service or work, it cannot be inferred that the master has authorized the servant to use force, and the former is not liable for the use of force by the latter. This rule was applied in Crelly v. Missouri & K. Teleph. Co. (1911) 84 Kan. 19, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 328, 113 Pac. 386, 8 N. C. C. A. 854, which held that a telephone company was not liable for an assault committed by its local manager upon an operator who was about to quit the service, when she refused to sign a voucher for the compensation due her.

Similarly, the owners of a steamboat were held not liable for the acts of a mate in beating a deck hand for the purpose of making him work, in Jones v. St. Louis, N. & P. Packet Co. (1891) 43 Mo. App. 398, on the ground that the direction of one servant by another, where both are freemen, does not imply the use of force, and its exercise is not within the scope of the superior servant's employment.

III. Miscellaneous.

A master is under obligation to his servants to exercise due care and caution in the selection of his representative or alter ego, who orders, commands, and controls those committed to his charge.

So, it was held in Lamb v. Littman (1901) 128 N. C. 361, 53 L.R.A. 852, 38 S. E. 911, that an employer is liable for personal injuries inflicted upon a child in his employ, by his overseer, due to violent handling in urging the child to the proper performance of his work, where the overseer, by conduct extending back for a period of years, has established a reputation for being high tempered and cruel to children and other help, and who is therefore incompetent for the position in which he is placed.

A railway company is not liable under a statute declaring persons intrusted with the authority of superintendence, control, or command of other servants, or authority to direct them in the performance of their duties, to be vice principals, for an assault committed by the assistant foreman of a bridge gang upon a workman because of delay in the execution of a task, due to conflicting orders, where the assistant foreman was expected to lead in the work, and, in the absence of the foreman, tell the men what they should do in carrying out the instructions given him by the foreman, but who had no authority to employ or discharge men. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Day (1911) 104 Tex. 237, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 111, 136 S. W. 435.

IV. Under maritime law.

To make the owner of a vessel liable to a seaman for an assault committed upon him by the master, it must be shown that in the infliction of the injury the master was acting within the scope of his duty as master and in the exercise of his control over the seaman.

Thus, if a seaman is guilty of disobedience in refusing to leave the pilot house or change the position of the wheel, the master has a right to use such force as is reasonably necessary to remove him or compel change of the wheel, and if he uses more force than is reasonably necessary for that purpose, the shipowners will be liable; but the master has no right to punish a seaman for disobedience of orders or want of proper discharge of his duty after the acts have been done, nor has he a right to take the law into his own hands and punish a seaman for disobedience of orders that have passed by, and if he does so after the emergency has passed, he does not do it in the line of his duty, and the shipowners are not responsible therefor. Spencer v. Kelley (1887) 32 Fed. 838.

The liability of the owner of a vessel for the wilful torts of an officer of the ship was upheld in The General Rucker (1888) 35 Fed. 152, where it was decided that a roustabout employed in loading a vessel under the command of the mate, and who was wounded by the blows of the mate, given because he did not obey his orders, was entitled to recover from the shipowner, since that act was committed within the scope of the mate's employment.

The liability of the owner of a steamer for the wilful torts of an officer extends to the act of a deck hand who was placed in temporary command of the other hands, and who, for the purpose of making one of them work more rapidly, struck him on the arm with a heavy stick, breaking his arm. Memphis & N. Packet Co. v. Hill (1903) 58 C. C. A. 610, 122 Fed. 246.

In Gabrielson v. Waydell (1892) 135 N. Y. 1, 17 L.R.A. 228, 31 Am. St. Rep. 793, 31 N. E. 969, a wilful and malicious attack with kicks and blows made on the high seas by the captain of a vessel upon a seaman, merely because he said he was sick when ordered to go on deck, was held not within the scope of the captain's employment or authority so as to render the owners of the vessel liable therefor, where it did not appear that the act of the captain was required by the pressing emergencies of the occasion or that he had not indulged his passions by a vindictive treatment of the seaman. But in a subsequent action based on the same injuries the owners of the vessel were held liable as principals for the acts of their agent placed over others. Gabrielson v. Waydell (1895) 67 Fed. 342.

The ship is liable for the acts of the master in punishing a seaman with unnecessary cruelty by placing him in irons and making him fast to a stanchion, with his hands above his head, and striking him in the face while he is in that position. Belyea v. Cook (1908) 162 Fed. 180.

In The Eva B. Hall (1902) 114 Fed. 755, the owner of a vessel was held liable for the act of the master in compelling a seaman suffering from a broken arm to perform, under a threat of putting him in irons, duties about the ship which would naturally result in an aggravation of the injury. In this case it is said that the liability of a vessel to her crew ordinarily does not include any compensation or allowance for the resulting effects of an injury received while in her service, but is limited to the expenses of the care, attendance, and cure of the seaman. Where, however, there has been misconduct or neglect by the officers in the treatment of the seaman after he has been wounded in the service of the ship, an additional cause of action arises against the ship for consequential damages.

Under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4596, as amended by the Act of December 21, 1898, 30 Stat. at L. 760, chap. 28, § 19, Comp. Stat. § 8380, 9 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 215, authorizing the punishment of seamen by placing them in irons for wilful disobedience to any lawful command at sea, the ship is not liable for the act of the master, who punished a seaman who refused to scrub the mast, as a penalty for fighting, by placing him in irons with his wrists below his knees and a stick placed under his knees, where no appreciable suffering was caused the seaman, who was released after about forty-five minutes, at his own request and on promise of good behavior. The Thrasher (1909) 97 C. C. A. 424, 173 Fed. 258.

A ship is not liable for the act of the master, who placed seamen who refused to go to work, on bread and water, and confined them in irons, and thereafter ran a chain which was suspended 4 or 5 feet above deck, between the arms of each man, since such punishment was within the authority given by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4596, as amended by Act of December 21, 1898, chap. 28, § 19. The John and Winthrop (1910) 106 C. C. A. 1, 182 Fed. 380.

A ship is not liable in damages for the act of the master in placing in irons a seaman who returned from shore leave in an intoxicated condition and refused to go forward, or for forcibly resisting the attack which the seaman made upon him. The David Evans (1911) 109 C. C. A. 623, 187 Fed. 775. This action was brought upon a breach of the shipping articles and for not treating libellant with proper kindness. The assault was justified, not upon the authority of the captain to punish, but upon his right to repel the attack in defense of his person.

The liability of a ship for injuries sustained by a seaman because of the negligence of the master was affirmed in the earlier cases, but subsequently denied.

It was held in The Marion Chilcott (1899) 95 Fed. 688, that it is the duty of the captain to maintain proper discipline on the ship and protect a member of the crew from unnecessary and unjustifiable chastisement at the hands of a subordinate officer, and that neglect to perform his duty in that regard renders the ship liable for the effect of such abuse.

Similarly, it was decided in The Lizzie Burrill (1902) 115 Fed. 1015, that the failure of the master of the ship to protect an inexperienced seaman from bad treatment and violence committed by the mate and boatswain, such acts on occasion being encouraged by the master, renders the ship and its owners liable for the injuries sustained by the seaman. But these cases were both superseded by the later decision in The Osceola (1903) 189 U. S. 158, 47 L. ed. 760, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 483, which held, in an action to recover damages for injuries sustained by a seaman through the negligence of the master, that a seaman is not allowed to recover an indemnity for the negligence of the master or any member of the crew, but is entitled to maintenance and cure, whether the injuries were received by negligence or accident.

In conformity with this decision it has been held that the owners of a ship are not liable for the neglect of the master to protect a seaman from abuse at the hands of subordinate officers and from blows inflicted by them for alleged impertinence or failure to obey orders. The Astral (1905) 134 Fed. 1017.

A steamboat is not liable to seizure under the Water Craft Law of Ohio (Act of February 26, 1840) for a wilful assault committed by the mate of the boat upon a deck hand, when the act was in no way connected with the business of the boat or authorized by the owners. The Messenger v. Pressler (1862) 13 Ohio St. 255.

A. W. R.

---

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Plff. in Err.,

v.

UNION BANK OF CANADA.

---

SAME, Plff. in Err.,

v.

ROYAL DUTCH WEST INDIA MAIL COMPANY.

United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Second Circuit — December 10, 1910.

(262 Fed. 91.)

Allen — contract labor — what is.

An accountant in a bank and a clerk in a steamship office are not laborers within the meaning of the Act of Congress of 1907, penalizing anyone assisting the importation of contract labor.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1442.]

ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York to review judgments in favor of defendants in actions brought to recover penalties for violations of the contract labor provisions of the Immigration Acts. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Argued before Ward, Rogers, and Manton, Circuit Judges.

Messrs. Francis G. Caffey and Vincent H. Rothwell, for the United States:

Schilling was a contract laborer within the meaning of the Act of February 20, 1907, as amended by the Acts of March 26, 1910, and March 4, 1913.

Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States, 143 U. S. 457, 36 L. ed. 227, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 511; United States v. Laws, 163 U. S. 258, 41 L. ed. 151, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 998; Re Ellis, 124 Fed. 637; United States ex rel. Barlin v. Rodgers, 112 C. C. A. 382, 191 Fed. 970; United States ex rel. Buccino v. Williams, 190 Fed. 897; Nishimura Ekiu v. United States, 142 U. S. 651, 35 L. ed. 1146, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336; Ex parte Kunihiro Toguchi, 238 Fed. 632.

Schilling was not within one of the exempted classes.

United States ex rel. Barlin v. Rodgers, 112 C. C. A. 382, 191 Fed. 970; United States v. Great Falls & C. R. Co. 53 Fed. 77; Scharrenberg v. Dollar S. S. Co. 245 U. S. 122, 62 L. ed. 189, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28.

The answer admits a cause of action and the separate defense is sufficient in law.

United States v. Great Falls & C. R. Co. 53 Fed. 77.

Messrs. Carter, Ledyard, & Milburn and Walter F. Taylor, for defendant in error Union Bank:

Schilling was not a contract laborer within the meaning of the Act of February 20, 1907.

Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States, 143 U. S. 457, 36 L. ed. 227, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 511; United States v. Laws, 163 U. S. 258, 41 L. ed. 151, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 998; 27 Ops. Atty. Gen. 383; Scharrenberg v. Dollar S. S. Co. 245 U. S. 122, 62 L. ed. 189, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28.

Schilling was a member of a learned profession within the meaning of § 2 of the Act of February 20, 1907, excepting members of learned professions from the operation of the act.

United States v. Laws, 163 U. S. 258, 41 L. ed. 151, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 998.

Messrs. Burlingham, Veeder, Masten, & Fearey and William Paul Allen, for defendant in error mail company:

Mook, in respect of whose coming to this country the defendant is charged with violation of the provisions of § 5 of the Immigration Act, was not a "laborer," and did not come to this country to "perform labor" within the purview of that section.

United States v. Craig, 28 Fed. 795; United States v. Laws, 163 U. S. 258, 41 L. ed. 151, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 998; Re Ellis, 124 Fed. 637; Scharrenberg v. Dollar S. S. Co. 245 U. S. 122, 62 L. ed. 189, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28; Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States, 143 U. S. 463, 36 L. ed. 229, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 511, 36 Fed. 303.

The defendant did not prepay the transportation or in any way induce, assist, encourage, or solicit the transportation or migration of Mook within the intent of the prohibition of § 5.

Darnborough v. Joseph Benn & Sons, 109 C. C. A. 270, 187 Fed. 580; United States v. Harris, 177 U. S. 305, 44 L. ed. 780, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609; Johnson v. Southern P. Co. 196 U. S. 1, 17, 49 L. ed. 363, 369, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 158, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 412; Ex parte Kunihiro Toguchi, 238 Fed. 632; United States v. Great Falls & C. R. Co. 53 Fed. 77.

The coming of Mook to this country for a temporary stay only, for the purpose of gathering information as to the conditions at the New York office, and then proceeding to the post in Paramaribo, where he was to be employed as assistant local agent, did not constitute a migration to the United States, and any inducement by the defendant to come under such condition was not an inducement to migrate within the prohibition of § 5.

United States v. Michigan C. R. Co.
48 Fed. 365.

Ward, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

In the first case there is a writ of error to a judgment in favor of the defendant directed by Augustus N. Hand, J., in an action brought by the United States against the Union Bank of Canada to recover a penalty of $1,000 for violation of § 4 of the Immigration Act of February 20, 1907, which reads: "Section 4. That it shall be a misdemeanor for any person, company, partnership, or corporation, in any manner whatsoever, to prepay the transportation or in any way to assist or encourage the importation or migration of any contract laborer or contract laborers into the United States, unless such contract laborer or contract laborers are exempted under the terms of the last two provisos contained in § 2 of this act." [34 Stat. at L. 900, chap. 1134, Comp. Stat. § 4248, 3 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 654.]

Section 2 provides for the exclusion of contract laborers, the relevant portions being: "Section 2. That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: . . . Persons hereinafter called contract laborers, who have been induced or solicited to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment or in consequence of agreements, oral, written or printed, express or implied, to perform labor in this country of any kind, skilled or unskilled: . . . And provided further, That skilled labor may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed cannot be found in this country: And provided further, That the provisions of this law applicable to contract labor shall not be held to exclude professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, ministers of any religious denomination, professors for colleges or seminaries, persons belonging to any recognized learned profession, or persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants."

The defendant bank, a corporation of the Dominion of Canada, having opened a branch in New York city, brought from its branch in Toronto one Schilling, agreeing to employ him at a salary as assistant accountant in its New York office, and paying the cost of his transportation. The question is whether Schilling was a contract laborer within the meaning of the act.

The first legislation on the subject was in chapter 164, Laws 1885, § 3 of which made it an offense subject to a penalty of $1,000 to encourage in any way the importation of any alien "to perform labor or service of any kind under contract or agreement" in the United States.

Section 5 provided exceptions as follows: ". . . Nor shall this act be so construed as to prevent any person, or persons, partnership, or corporation from engaging, under contract or agreement, skilled workmen in foreign countries to perform labor in the United States in or upon any new industry not at present established in the United States: Provided, That skilled labor for that purpose cannot be otherwise obtained; nor shall the provisions of this act apply to professional actors, artists, lecturers, or singers, nor to persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants." [23 Stat. at L. 333, chap. 164.]

While this act was in force Reverend E. Walpole Warren was called by the Church of the Holy Trinity to the city of New York as its pastor. The government brought suit against the church for the penalty, and the defendant demurred. We overruled the demurrer (36 Fed. 303) in view of the language of the act—§ 3, "labor or service of any kind,"—and of the specific exceptions (§ 5) which did not include ministers. But the Supreme Court (143 U. S. 457, 36 L. ed 226, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 511) reversed the judgment, holding that the title of the act, "An Act to Prohibit the Importation and Migration of Foreigners and Aliens under Contract or Agreement to Perform Labor in the United States, Its Territories, and the District of Columbia," and the mischief which Congress intended to prevent, as shown by the reports of committees of Congress on the subject, demonstrated that only manual laborers were intended to be excluded.

Chapter 551, Laws 1891, § 5, amending § 5 of the Act of 1885, added to the exemptions these words: "Nor to ministers of any religious denomination nor to persons belonging to any recognized profession nor professors for colleges or seminaries."

In the case of United States v. Laws, 163 U. S. 258, 41 L. ed. 151, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 998, the defendant Laws brought a chemist from Germany to Louisiana, under contract to perform services there. The circuit court of appeals of the sixth circuit certified the question whether this was within the prohibition of the Act of 1885. The court answered the question in the negative, referring to the amendment of 1891, which had been subsequently passed, as making the intention of Congress, as found in the case of Holy Trinity Church, still plainer.

Chapter 1134, Laws 1907, entitled "An Act to Regulate the Immigration of Aliens into the United States," by § 2, prohibits the entry of aliens under contract "to perform labor in this country of any kind, skilled or unskilled;" the last two provisos being: "And provided further, That skilled labor may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed cannot be found in this country: And provided further, That the provisions of this law applicable to contract labor shall not be held to exclude professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, ministers of any religious denomination, professors for colleges or seminaries, persons belonging to any recognized learned profession, or persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants."

Section 4 made it a misdemeanor to assist the entry of such contract laborers in any way, "unless such contract laborer or laborers are exempted under the terms of the last two provisos contained in § 2 of this act."
8 A.L.R.—91.

These provisions, taken together, make a strong support for the argument that all contracts for labor are within the prohibition of the act, unless specifically exempted. This was the view taken by Judge Neterer in Ex parte Kunijiro Toguchi (D. C.) 238 Fed. 632. Nevertheless, we think the decision in Scharrenberg v. Dollar S. S. Co. 245 U. S. 122, 62 L. ed. 189, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28, holds that the Act of 1907, like the prior acts on the subject, prohibits only the entry of manual laborers under contract to perform labor in the United States. In that case the defendant brought nineteen Chinamen from Shanghai to San Francisco, there to ship as seamen on the American registered steamship Mackinaw. The court held, Mr. Justice Clarke writing, that these men were not under contract to perform labor in the United States, but on the high seas, which would have been enough to dispose of the case; but he also held as a second ground that a seaman was not a laborer. If so, an alien imported to perform labor as a seaman on vessels enrolled for the coasting trade or the inland waters of the United States would not be a contract laborer, within the prohibition of the act. Without inquiring whether an accountant, as defined by the defendant's rules, is a member of a learned profession, we affirm the judgment on the ground that Schilling was not a laborer within the meaning of the act.

Alien—contract labor—what is.

In the second case there is a writ of error to a judgment directed for the defendant by the same judge, in an action for a penalty under § 5 of chapter 29, Laws 1917 (Comp. Stat. § 4289½c, Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1918, p. 218), which differs in no material respect as to contract laborers from the Act of 1907. The defendant sent a clerk named Mook from its office in Amsterdam to be employed in its office in New York at a salary of $1,250 per annum, and paid the expenses of his transportation. There was an expectation to send him from New York to its office at Paramaribo, Dutch Guiana, after he had familiarized himself with the New York business. The grounds on which the verdict was directed were: First, that this employment at New York was a temporary one, in a business of an international character; and, second, that Mook was not a contract laborer at all. Without considering the first reason, we concur in the second.

Judgment affirmed in each case.

ANNOTATION.

Who is "laborer" within Federal acts excluding contract laborers.

- I. Introductory, 1442.
- II. Statutory provisions, 1442.
- III. Construction of statutes:
  - a. Generally, 1443.
  - b. Statutory exceptions, 1446.

I. Introductory.

The purpose of this annotation is to review the cases determining the question, who is a "laborer," within the provisions of the Federal Immigration Laws excluding alien contract laborers from admission into the United States. The latest statute on the subject is the Act of February 5, 1917 (Comp. Stat. § 4289½a, Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1918, pp. 212 et seq.), quoted infra, III. b. Most of the decisions reviewed were handed down in cases arising under earlier statutes, of which the Act of 1917 is a re-enactment. The re-enactment, however, has changed the earlier statutes, practically, only by addition, so that the decisions interpret provisions which are still law, and are, therefore, still of practical value.

II. Statutory provisions.

The provisions of the Act of 1917 pertinent to the subject of contract labor are as follows:

Classes of aliens excluded.

"Section 3. The following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: . . . Persons hereinafter called contract laborers, who have been induced, assisted, encouraged, or solicited to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment, whether such offers or promises are true or false, or in consequence of agreements, oral, written or printed, express or implied, to perform labor in this country of any kind, skilled or unskilled. . . . Provided further, That the provisions of this law applicable to contract labor shall not be held to exclude professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, nurses, ministers of any religious denomination, professors for colleges or seminaries, persons belonging to any recognized learned profession, or persons employed as domestic servants: Provided further, That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports issued by any foreign government to its citizens or subjects to go to any country other than the United States, or to any insular possession of the United States or to the Canal Zone, are being used for the purpose of enabling the holder to come to the continental territory of the United States to the detriment of labor conditions therein, the President shall refuse to permit such citizens or subjects of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States from such other country or from such insular possession or from the Canal Zone. . . . Provided further, That nothing in the contract labor or reading test provisions of this act shall be construed to prevent, hinder, or restrict any alien exhibitor, or holder of concession or privilege for any fair or exposition authorized by act of Congress, from bringing into the United States, under contract, such otherwise admissible alien mechanics, artisans, agents or other employees, natives of his country, as may be necessary for installing or conducting his exhibit or for preparing for installing or conducting any business authorized or permitted under any concession or privilege which may have been or may be granted by any such fair or exposition in connection therewith, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, may prescribe both as to the admission and return of such persons."

The foregoing section of the Act of 1917 is a re-enactment and extension of § 2 of the Act of February 20, 1907 (chap. 1134, 34 Stat. at L. 898, Comp. Stat. § 4244, 3 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 640), which act was itself an enlargement and re-enactment of the Act of March 3, 1903 (chap. 1012, 32 Stat. at L. 1213). Previous legislation, containing somewhat similar provisions as to the classes of aliens excluded, was the Act of March 3, 1875 (§§ 3, 5, 18 Stat. at L. 477, chap. 141); Act of August 3, 1882 (chap. 376, § 2, 22 Stat. at L. 214); Act of February 26, 1885 (chap. 164, §§ 1, 5, 6, 23 Stat. at L. 332, 333); and Act of March 3, 1891 (chap. 551, § 1, 26 Stat. at L. 1084).

Prohibition of importation of contract laborers.

"Section 5. It shall be unlawful for any person, company, partnership, or corporation, in any manner whatsoever, to prepay the transportation or in any way to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit, or attempt to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit the importation or migration of any contract laborer or contract laborers into the United States, unless such contract laborer or contract laborers are exempted under the fifth proviso of section three of this act, or have been imported with the permission of the Secretary of Labor in accordance with the fourth proviso of said section, and for every violation of any of the provisions of this section the person, partnership, company, or corporation violating the same shall forfeit and pay for every such offense the sum of $1,000, which may be sued for and recovered by the United States, as debts of like amount are now recovered in the courts of the United States. For every violation of the provisions hereof the person violating the same may be prosecuted in a criminal action for a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of $1,000, or by imprisonment for a term of not less than six months nor more than two years; and under either the civil or the criminal procedure mentioned separate suits or prosecutions may be brought for each alien thus offered or promised employment as aforesaid. The Department of Justice, with the approval of the Department of Labor, may from any fines or penalties received pay rewards to persons other than government employees who may furnish information leading to the recovery of any such penalties, or to the arrest and punishment of any person, as in this section provided."

The foregoing section is a re-enactment and enlargement of the corresponding section of the previous act (Act of February 20, 1907, chap. 1134, § 4, 34 Stat. at L. 900, Comp. Stat. § 4248, 3 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 654), which was as follows: "It shall be a misdemeanor for any person, company, partnership, or corporation, in any manner whatsoever, to prepay the transportation or in any way to assist or encourage the importation or migration of any contract laborer or contract laborers into the United States, unless such contract laborer or contract laborers are exempted under the terms of the last two provisos contained in section two of this act."

Similar provisions were contained in the Act of March 3, 1903, chapter 1012, § 4 (32 Stat. at L. 1214), which was repealed by § 43 of the Act of February 20, 1907.

III. Construction of statutes.

a. Generally.

The prevailing view seems to be that the intention of the various acts relating to the importation of contract labor has been to prohibit only the entry of manual laborers.

Act of 1885.

Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States (1892) 143 U. S. 457, 36 L. ed. 226, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 511; United States v. Laws (1896) 163 U. S. 258, 41 L. ed. 151, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 998; United States v. Gay (1899) 37 C. C. A. 46, 95 Fed. 226; (1901) 23 Ops. Atty. Gen. 331.

Act of 1907.

Scharrenberg v. Dollar S. S. Co. (1917) 245 U. S. 122, 62 L. ed. 189, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28, affirming (1916) 144 C. C. A. 252, 229 Fed. 970, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 258; (1907) 27 Ops. Atty. Gen. 383. And see the reported case (UNITED STATES v. UNION BANK, ante, 1438. Compare Ex parte Kunijiro Toguchi (1916) 238 Fed. 632.

Act of 1917.

Tatsukichi Kuwabara v. United States (1919) — C. C. A. —, 260 Fed. 104.

Thus, the Act of 1885, prior to its amendment so as to exempt "ministers of any religious denomination" from the excluded classes of aliens, was held not to include the case of a contract made by an incorporated religious society with an alien, by which he was to remove to this country and enter into the service of the society as its rector and pastor. Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States (U. S.) supra, wherein the court said: "It must be conceded that the act of the corporation is within the letter of this section, for the relation of rector to his church is one of service, and implies labor on the one side with compensation on the other. Not only are the general words, 'labor' and 'service,' both used, but also, as it were to guard against any narrow interpretation and emphasize a breadth of meaning, to them is added 'of any kind;' and further, as noticed by the circuit judge in his opinion, the 5th section which makes specific exceptions, among them professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, and domestic servants, strengthens the idea that every other kind of labor and service was intended to be reached by the 1st section. While there is great force to this reasoning, we cannot think Congress intended to denounce with penalties a transaction like that in the present case. It is a familiar rule that a thing may be within the letter of the statute, and yet not within the statute, because not within its spirit, nor within the intention of its makers. . . . Among other things which may be considered in determining the intent of the legislature is the title of the act. . . . Now, the title of this act is, 'An Act to Prohibit the Importation and Migration of Foreigners and Aliens under Contract or Agreement to Perform Labor in the United States, its Territories and the District of Columbia.' Obviously the thought expressed in this reaches only to the work of the manual laborer, as distinguished from that of the professional man. No one reading such a title would suppose that Congress had in its mind any purpose of staying the coming into this country of ministers of the Gospel, or, indeed, of any class whose toil is that of the brain. The common understanding of the terms, 'labor' and 'laborers,' does not include preaching and preachers; and it is to be assumed that words and phrases are used in their ordinary meaning. So whatever of light is thrown upon the statute by the language of the title indicates an exclusion from its penal provisions of all contracts for the employment of ministers, rectors, and pastors. Again, another guide to the meaning of a statute is found in the evil which it is designed to remedy; and for this the court properly looks at contemporaneous events, the situation as it existed, and as it was pressed upon the attention of the legislative body. United States v. Union F. R. Co. (1875) 91 U. S. 72, 79, 23 L. ed. 224, 228. The situation which called for this statute was briefly but fully stated by Mr. Justice Brown, when, as district judge, he decided the case of United States v. Craig (1886) 28 Fed. 795, 798: 'The motives and history of the act are matters of common knowledge. It had become the practice for large capitalists in this country to contract with their agents abroad for the shipment of great numbers of an ignorant and servile class of foreign laborers, under contracts by which the employer agreed, upon the one hand, to prepay their passage, while, on the other hand, the laborers agreed to work after their arrival for a certain time at a low rate of wages. The effect of this was to break down the labor market, and to reduce other laborers engaged in like occupations to the level of the assisted immigrant. The evil finally became so flagrant that an appeal was made to Congress for relief by the passage of the act in question, the design of which was to raise the standard of foreign immigrants, and to discountenance the migration of those who had not sufficient means in their own hands, or those of their friends, to pay their passage.' It appears also, from the petitions, and in the testimony presented before the committees of Congress, that it was this cheap unskilled labor which was making the trouble, and the influx of which Congress sought to prevent. It was never suggested that we had in this country a surplus of brain toilers, and, least of all, that the market for the services of Christian ministers was depressed by foreign competition. Those were matters to which the attention of Congress, or of the people, was not directed. So far, then, as the evil which was sought to be remedied interprets the statute, it also guides to an exclusion of this contract from the penalties of the act."

So, contract to work as a chemist on a sugar plantation in Louisiana was held not to be a contract to perform labor or services as prohibited by the Act of 1885. United States v. Laws (1896) 163 U. S. 258, 41 L. ed. 151, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 998.

Likewise, the Act of 1885 was held not to include the case of one engaged to work as a draper, window dresser, and dry goods clerk. United States v. Gay (1899) 37 C. C. A. 46, 95 Fed. 226.

In Scharrenberg v. Dollar S. S. Co. (1917) 245 U. S. 122, 62 L. ed. 189, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28, affirming (1916) 144 C. C. A. 252, 229 Fed. 970, Ann.

Cas. 1917C, 258, it was held that a seaman was not a laborer within the purview of the Act of 1907. See also United States ex rel. Anderson v. Burke (1899) 99 Fed. 895.

So, the Act of 1907 was held not to apply to an alien induced to come to the United States by promise of employment as superintendent of a lumbering company, conditioned that he must be a competent woodsman, logger, and mill man, and a first-class mechanic, provided the agreement did not require him to perform manual labor. (1909) 27 Ops. Atty. Gen. 383.

In the reported case (UNITED STATES v. UNION BANK, ante, 1438), it is held that the Act of 1907, like the prior acts on the subject, prohibits only the entry of manual laborers under contract to perform labor in the United States, and that neither an assistant accountant, imported for employment in a bank, nor a clerk, imported for employment in a business office, is a contract laborer within the statute. See also United States v. Royal Dutch West India Mail (1918) 250 Fed. 913.

An alien who seeks to enter the United States for the purpose of teaching "the Japanese language, history, geography, and arithmetic" cannot be excluded under the Act of 1917, since his purpose in entering the United States is not to perform "labor." Tatsukichi Kuwabara v. United States (1919) — C. C. A. —, 260 Fed. 104.

Manual labor, as used in the present connection, should be construed, according to an opinion given by the Attorney General in 1901, as including both skilled and unskilled labor. In that opinion, the decision in Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States (1892) 143 U. S. 457, 36 L. ed. 226, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 511, supra, was exhaustively considered, and it was declared that the proper distinction to be observed, founded on that case, was the distinction between manual labor, including the mechanical trades, on the one side, and the professions on the other. Accordingly, it was held that alien lace makers, if not entitled to admission into the United States under some special provision of the Act of 1885, or acts supplemental thereto, should be excluded as manual laborers, skilled or unskilled, who had come to this country in order to perform labor or service.

By one court, it has been urged with much force that all contracts for labor should be considered as within the prohibition of the statutes, unless specifically exempted. Thus, in Ex parte Kunihiro Toguchi (1916) 238 Fed. 632, which was an application for a writ of habeas corpus, it appeared that the petitioner came from Japan to the United States to take a position as salesman in the store of his uncle, who conducted a Japanese silk and dry goods and bamboo business in Detroit. The uncle sent to the petitioner $100 to apply on his expenses, and told him to apply for more money on landing, if needed. No salary was agreed on to be paid to the petitioner. The Board of Immigration found that he came to the United States in violation of the alien contract labor provision of the Immigration Act of 1907, rejected him on that ground, and ordered his deportation to Japan. The Secretary of Labor affirmed the finding of the board. It was contended that the intent of Congress was to restrict the prohibition to manual laborers, and not to apply it to those engaged in other employment. But, in denying the writ, the court held that all persons were excluded who did not come within the exemptions specified in the provisions of § 2; that the provisions were not limited to "labor" or "service," but were limited expressly by the exemptions; and that the fact that no salary was agreed on was immaterial, as a reasonable compensation would be implied.

In Ex parte George (1910) 180 Fed. 785, although the ground for the decision was not stated, it was declared that the evidence showed, without conflict, that the petitioner in the case was a "contract laborer" within the Act of 1907, the following facts appearing: The owner of a shoe-shining establishment agreed to employ the petitioner in his establishment if he would come to America, agreeing to pay him $20 a month, and to lend him the money needed for the trip, taking as security for the loan a mortgage on the petitioner's land in Greece, the loan to be repaid from his wages when employed. The lender and the petitioner came over together on the same steamship, and the petitioner continued in the lender's service for a year, repaying the loan.

b. Statutory exceptions.

The Act of 1903 expressly excepted from its provisions persons belonging to any "recognized learned profession," and an exactly similar exception is found in the Act of 1917. Expert accountants, it seems, are not within the exception. Re Ellis (1903) 124 Fed. 637. But it has been held that a teacher of the Japanese language, history, geography, and arithmetic may be properly regarded as belonging to a "recognized learned profession." Tatsukichi Kawabara v. United States (1919) — C. C. A. —, 260 Fed. 104.

An exception in the Act of 1885 (found also in the subsequent statutes), in favor of "professional artists," has been held not to apply to a milliner. United States v. Thompson (1889) 41 Fed. 28.

The exception in the Act of 1885, in favor of "persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants" (which exception appears in the Act of 1917, with a slight difference in the wording), was held not to include a person contracting to labor as a farm servant or dairyman. Re Cummings (1887) 32 Fed. 75. But it was held that an under coachman, who did no work on the farm, or in the garden, or in the dairy, but, under the direction of his employer's family, performed services which ministered exclusively to their personal comfort and enjoyment, was employed "strictly as a personal or domestic servant." Re Howard (1894) 63 Fed. 263.

H. N. G.

STEPHEN WHITTLE, Respt.,
v.
WILLIAM SCHLEMM, Appt.

New Jersey Court of Errors and Appeals — March 1, 1920.

(— N. J. —, 109 Atl. 305.)

Husband and wife — separation agreement — effect of adultery.

The right of a wife, while living separate and apart from her husband, to secure funds provided for her support in a separation agreement, persists even after the commission of an act of adultery by her, unless there is an express stipulation and limitation in the agreement that payment shall cease in the event that she becomes unchaste; for without such provision the common-law obligation of a husband to support his wife continues, unless and until he procures a divorce from her.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1452.]

Headnote by WALKER, Ch.

(Swayze, Minturn, White, and Heppenheimer, JJ., dissent.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Supreme Court affirming a judgment of the District Court of Hoboken in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover an amount alleged to be due under a claim entered into between defendant and his wife and plaintiff as trustee for the latter. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. J. Emil Walscheid, for appellant:

All rights of Louisa Schlemm and of her trustee under the agreement have been forfeited by the act of adultery committed by her on October 25, 1915.

Devine v. Devine 89 N. J. Eq. 51, 104 Atl. 370; Rennie v. Rennie, 85 N. J. Eq. 1, 95 Atl. 571; Galusha v. Galusha, 138 N. Y. 272, 33 N. E. 1062; Ireland v. Ireland, 43 N. J. Eq. 312, 12 Atl. 184; Calame v. Calame, 25 N. J. Eq. 548; Bradbury v. Bradbury, — N. J. Eq. —, 74 Atl. 150; Howey v. Howey, 77 N. J. Eq. 591, 78 Atl. 696; White v. White, 87 N. J. Eq. 355, L.R.A. 1917D, 639, 100 Atl. 235; Gill v. Read, 5 R. I. 343, 73 Am. Dec. 73; Hunter v. Boucher, 3 Pick. 289; Simpson v. Wood & Son, 57 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 485, 59 L. T. N. S. 218, 36 Week. Rep. 734, 52 J. P. 822; Culley v. Charman, L. R. 7 Q. B. Div. 489, O L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 111, 45 L. T. N. S. 28, 29 Week. Rep. 803, 45 J. P. 68; Bostock v. Smith, 34 Beav. 57, 55 Eng. Reprint, 553; Roth v. Roth, 77

Misc. 673, 138 N. Y. Supp. 573, 26 Cyc. 826, note; State v. Lash, 16 N. J. L. 380, 32 Am. Dec. 397.

The agreement is void and will not be enforced because it did not operate in præsenti, but dealt with a future separation.

Emmett v. Norton, 8 Car. & P. 506; Keller v. Phillips, 39 N. Y. 351; Zimmer v. Settle, 124 N. Y. 37, 21 Am. St. Rep. 638, 26 N. E. 341; Ireland v. Ireland, 43 N. J. Eq. 314, 12 Atl. 184; Mercein v. People, 25 Wend. 77, 35 Am. Dec. 653; Rex v. Mead, 1 Burr. 542, 97 Eng. Reprint, 440; Rogers v. Rogers, 4 Paige, 516, 27 Am. Dec. 84; Winter v. Winter, 191 N. Y. 470, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 710, 84 N. E. 382; Pettit v. Pettit, 107 N. Y. 677, 14 N. E. 500; Galusha v. Galusha, 116 N. Y. 635, 6 L.R.A. 487, 15 Am. St. Rep. 453, 22 N. E. 1114.

The agreement has been avoided by a reconciliation and resumption of the marital relation.

21 Cyc. 1597, notes 63 and 64; Zimmer v. Settle, 124 N. Y. 37, 21 Am. St. Rep. 638, 26 N. E. 341; Shelthar v.

Gregory, 2 Wend. 422; Carson v. Murray, 3 Paige, 482; Knapp v. Knapp, 95 Mich. 474, 55 N. W. 353.

Messrs. Weller & Lichtenstein, for respondent:

The district court has jurisdiction over a cause of action brought by a trustee for the nonpayment of money, under the terms of a separation agreement.

Buttlar v. Buttlar, 71 N. J. Eq. 671, 65 Atl. 485; Mockridge v. Mockridge, 62 N. J. Eq. 570, 50 Atl. 182; Emery v. Neighbour, 7 N. J. L. 142, 11 Am. Dec. 541; Carey v. Mackey, 82 Me. 516, 9 L.R.A. 113, 17 Am. St. Rep. 500, 20 Atl. 516; Patterson v. Patterson, 111 Ill. App. 342; Grime v. Borden, 166 Mass. 198, 44 N. E. 216; Nurse v. Craig, 2 Bos. & P. N. R. 155, 127 Eng. Reprint, 583.

The trustee in a separation agreement is the proper party to bring suit for its enforcement.

Clark v. Fosdick, 118 N. Y. 7, 6 L.R.A. 132, 16 Am. St. Rep. 733, 22 N. E. 1111, 23 N. E. 136; Dupre v. Rein, 56 How. Pr. 228; Galusha v. Galusha, 116 N. Y. 635, 6 L.R.A. 487, 15 Am. St. Rep. 453, 22 N. E. 1114; Lord v. Lord, 68 Hun, 537, 22 N. Y. Supp. 1004; 39 Cyc. 614; Hill, Trustees, 4th ed. p. 671; Grime v. Borden, 166 Mass. 198, 44 N. E. 216.

Adultery does not affect nor defeat recovery on a separation agreement.

Devine v. Devine, 89 N. J. Eq. 51, 104 Atl. 370; 15 Harvard L. R. pp. 638-656; 17 Am. L. Rev. 74; Rex v. Lister, 1 Strange, 478, 93 Eng. Reprint, 645; Fearon v. Aylesford, L. R. 14 Q. B. Div. 792, 54 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 33, 52 L. T. N. S. 954, 33 Week. Rep. 331, 49 J. P. 596; Hart v. Hart, L. R. 18 Ch. Div. 670, 50 L. J. Ch. N. S. 697, 45 L. T. N. S. 13, 30 Week. Rep. 8; Bradley v. Bradley, L. R. 7 Prob. Div. 237, 51 L. J. Prob. N. S. 87, 47 L. T. N. S. 355, 31 Week. Rep. 200; Charlesworth v. Holt, L. R. 9 Exch. 38, 43 L. J. Exch. N. S. 25, 29 L. T. N. S. 647, 22 Week. Rep. 94; Sweet v. Sweet [1895] 1 Q. B. 12, 64 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 108, 15 Reports, 146, 71 L. T. N. S. 672, 43 Week. Rep. 303, 59 J. P. 373; Galusha v. Galusha, 116 N. Y. 635, 6 L.R.A. 487, 15 Am. St. Rep. 453, 22 N. E. 1114; Halstead v. Halstead, 74 N. J. Eq. 596, 70 Atl. 928; Randolph v. Field, 165 App. Div. 279, 150 N. Y. Supp. 823, 84 Misc. 403, 146 N. Y. Supp. 247; Roth v. Roth, 77 Misc. 673, 138 N. Y. Supp. 573; 9 R. C. L. p. 532;

Devine v. Devine, 89 N. J. Eq. 51, 104 Atl. 370; Dixon v. Dixon, 24 N. J. Eq. 133, 23 N. J. Eq. 316; Lister v. Lister, 35 N. J. Eq. 49; Krug v. Krug, 81 Wash. 461, 142 Pac. 1136; Labbe v. Abat, 2 La. 553, 22 Am. Dec. 151; Babcock v. Smith, 39 Mass. 61; Bent v. Bent, 44 Vt. 555; Orr v. Orr, 8 Bush, 156; Kinzey v. Kinzey, 115 Mo. 496, 20 L.R.A. 222, 22 S. W. 497; Jackson v. Jackson, 91 U. S. 122, 23 L. ed. 258.

A separation agreement is not affected by a subsequent divorce, even though the divorce is for adultery.

Halstead v. Halstead, 74 N. J. Eq. 596, 70 Atl. 928; Buttlar v. Buttlar, 71 N. J. Eq. 671, 65 Atl. 485; Pryor v. Pryor, 88 Ark. 302, 129 Am. St. Rep. 102, 114 S. W. 700; Galusha v. Galusha, 116 N. Y. 635, 6 L.R.A. 487, 15 Am. St. Rep. 453, 22 N. E. 1114; Randolph v. Field, 84 Misc. 403, 146 N. Y. Supp. 247; Grant v. Budd, 80 L. T. N. S. 319, 22 Week. Rep. 544; Hunt v. Hunt [1897] 2 Q. B. 547, 67 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 18, 77 L. T. N. S. 421, 14 Times L. R. 52; Carey v. Mackey, 82 Me. 516, 9 L.R.A. 113, 17 Am. St. Rep. 500, 20 Atl. 84; Kremelberg v. Kremelberg, 52 Md. 553; 14 Cyc. 728.

A separation agreement providing for the care of the wife and minor child is a perfectly valid instrument.

People ex rel. Lee v. Lee, 93 Misc. 677, 157 N. Y. Supp. 821; Adams v. Adams, 32 Pa. Super. Ct. 353; Efray v. Efray, 110 App. Div. 545, 97 N. Y. Supp. 286; Titus v. Titus, 66 Wash. 345, 119 Pac. 813, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 343.

There was no reconciliation or resumption of marital relations after the separation agreement was entered into.

Daniels v. Benedict, 38 C. C. A. 592, 97 Fed. 367; Alleman v. Alleman, 2 Dauphin Co. Rep. 209; Hughes v. Cuming, 36 App. Div. 302, 55 N. Y. Supp. 260; Buttlar v. Buttlar, 70 N. J. Eq. 675, 64 Atl. 110; 9 R. C. L. 535.

Walker, Ch., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff-respondent commenced an action in the district court of Hoboken to recover sixteen weeks' instalments, of $25 each, due from the defendant-appellant to the plaintiff-respondent as trustee, named in articles of agreement for separation entered into between the defendant and his wife. The plaintiff recovered judgment for $400, and the defendant appealed to the supreme court, where the judgment was affirmed. Whittle v. Schlemm, — N. J. L. —, 106 Atl. 819. We agree with the conclusion reached by the supreme court for the reasons given in its opinion, except that we wish to emphasize the fact that a married man is, in law, bound to support his wife while the marital relation remains undissolved, and wish to correct certain mistakes in the opinion.

Aspinwall v. Aspinwall, 49 N. J. Eq. 302, 24 Atl. 926, was a suit in equity to specifically enforce articles of separation entered into between a husband and wife with a third party as trustee. The court of chancery decreed specific performance, which this court affirmed as to the payment of the allowance for the support of the wife and children stipulated in the agreement, but reversed as to enforcement of the agreement to separate. The decision in this court was unanimous, and the opinion was by Chief Justice Beasley. It is a leading case. The learned chief justice observed, at page 303 of 49 N. J. Eq.: "And it would be singular indeed if the court should refuse to carry into effect stipulations of this character, for as there is nothing illegal in the fact of the husband and wife living apart by mutual assent, and inasmuch as under such conditions the husband would be liable for the maintenance of the wife, it is difficult to see why equity should not enforce the payment of the sum of money that both parties have agreed to be a reasonable amount for that end."

The reference to equity enforcing such a stipulation was made because that suit was one brought in equity directly by the wife against the husband, ignoring the trustee, and she could not, and of course did not, sue at law. The trustee might have done that.

While courts will not compel a husband to pay maintenance to the wife, provided for in articles of separation, while the parties are living together, yet, when living separate under the articles, such payment will be enforced; and this notwithstanding the adultery of the wife, unless and until the husband obtains a divorce from her.

Husband and wife—separation agreement—effect of adultery.

The supreme court observed that the alleged adultery of the wife in the case at bar was no defense at law to the action on the contract, and differentiated this case from that of Devine v. Devine, 89 N. J. Eq. 51, 104 Atl. 370, remarking that that case dealt with an equitable situation, in which the court supplied by implication a condition not in the contract the wife was seeking to enforce, namely, that she would remain chaste, and observed that that case was not controlling, as it appeared to be inconsistent with Halstead v. Halstead, 74 N. J. Eq. 596, 70 Atl. 928, where the contract was enforced in equity after alleged adultery, and until the wife applied for and was allowed alimony in divorce proceedings pending against her. From this language of the supreme court it would appear that that tribunal's view of the Halstead Case was that the wife had committed adultery after entering into articles with her husband, and that the allowance was enforced after the adultery was shown to have been committed. This is incorrect. In the Halstead Case the wife sued on an agreement dated June 21, 1904, which the vice chancellor read in connection with a previous agreement, and which, taken together, he said, provided that the husband should pay to the wife $7 a week; that defendant made payments to October 31, 1904, and one in November; that on March 7, 1905, the wife commenced an action for divorce against the husband for desertion and adultery, and on November 20, 1905, an order was made in the divorce suit that the husband pay to the wife, pending the determination of that suit, the sum of $5 per week. The demand in the Halstead Case was for $7 per week from October 31, 1904 (with credit of $7), to October 20, 1905, and for the sum of $2 per week from the last-mentioned date to the filing of the bill, or the date of the final decree, as the court should determine; the sum of $2 being the difference between $7 provided in the agreement and the $5 provided in the order for alimony pendente lite in the divorce suit. The vice chancellor decided that the wife was entitled to the full amount under the agreement up to the order for temporary alimony, and that after that she could not enforce the agreement during the operation of that order.

In the Devine Case the vice chancellor, at page 55 of 89 N. J. Eq., at page 371 of 104 Atl., observed that the legal obligation of a husband to support his wife exists only as long as she shall remain chaste, citing Bradbury v. Bradbury, — N. J. Eq. —, 74 Atl. 150. He goes on to say that this is so unless it shall be held that the burden of the agreement for support contained in a separation agreement survives that period, namely, the period of chastity. In our judgment the Bradbury Case is not authority for the proposition of the learned vice chancellor. In the first place, there was no agreement for maintenance involved. In the second place, the case was on final hearing on bill for alimony, in which adultery was not pleaded as a defense. It was observed by the vice chancellor in the Bradbury Case that adultery, if pleaded and proved, is a good defense to a bill for maintenance without a divorce being procured, — citing Maas v. Maas, 34 N. J. Eq. 113; Perkins v. Perkins, 59 N. J. Eq. 515, 46 Atl. 173. The assertion was dictum; and each of the cases cited was a suit for maintenance, and in each the defense of adultery was set up, but failed of proof. In neither was there an adjudication in terms that adultery was a good defense in such suits, although it was treated as valid. That question is not involved in the case sub judice. The proceedings in the Bradbury, Maas, and Perkins Cases were ones for maintenance under the statute, now § 26 of the Divorce Act (Pamph. Laws 1907, p. 482, 2 Comp. Stat. p. 2038, § 26), and were governed by the statutory provisions.

The section referred to provides as follows: "In case a husband, without any justifiable cause, shall abandon his wife or separate himself from her, and refuse or neglect to maintain and provide for her, it shall be lawful for the court of chancery to decree and order such suitable support and maintenance, to be paid and provided by the said husband for the wife and her children or any of them, by that marriage, or to be made out of his property, and for such time as the nature of the case and circumstances of the parties render suitable and proper in the opinion of the court."

It may well be that the adultery of the wife is a good defense in a proceeding brought under this section, because, if a wife commits adultery, her husband is justified in separating from her and bringing suit for divorce. So, even if adultery of the wife be a good defense by the husband, when he is sued by her for maintenance under § 26 of the Divorce Act, that does not alter the rule which obtains in reference to a suit by a wife to enforce the terms of an agreement for maintenance while the parties are living in a state of separation.

The learned vice chancellor who wrote the opinion in Devine v. Devine concedes that in England the adjudications from an early date have been to the effect that the adultery of the wife, committed after the execution of a separation agreement, would not deny to her the right of recovery of the stipulated payments falling due after the fact, unless the agreement expressly provided that they should be made only so long as she remained chaste, and that no such covenant would be imported into the agreement by implication; and he adds that those adjudications cannot be appropriately disregarded, unless conditions exist in our state which deny to them the force they would otherwise possess. The difference between our law and that of England, laid hold of by the vice chancellor as making a different rule here than that in England, is that a contract between husband and wife to live apart is not here restricted to the period of their mutual assent, and that such contract for separation may there be specifically enforced; while in New Jersey an agreement for separation cannot confer on either party the right to live away from the other against the other's will. He deduces from this that it is the policy of the law that the period for which persons in this jurisdiction may contract, touching their separation, is limited to the period of their future mutual assent, and that accordingly, in the absence of wrongdoing on the husband's part, he may require his wife's return to his bed and board, and her refusal will not only constitute her an obstinate deserter, but will operate to deny her any right to support from him, notwithstanding the existence of an agreement; and that the wife's act of adultery, while thus living separate from her husband pursuant to the terms of a separation agreement, operates to deny to her husband the right to require her return to him unless he condones the act; and that, therefore, the legal obligation of the husband to support his wife exists only so long as she shall remain chaste.

We are unable to concur in the reasoning of the learned vice chancellor, or to agree that there is any different rule in New Jersey from that which obtains in England with reference to the right of the wife, while living separate and apart from her husband, to secure the funds provided for her support in a separation agreement, even after the commission of an act of adultery by her, because, in our opinion, the husband's liability persists, unless there is an express stipulation and limitation in the separation agreement that payment shall cease in the event of her becoming unchaste; for, without such provision, the common-law obligation of a husband to support his wife continues, unless and until he procures a divorce from her. The question is one of construction of the agreement, and where husband and wife are living apart under separation articles, there is nothing in the situation which calls for the importation into their contract of a dum casta clause, as it is called; on the contrary, the situation, namely, the wife's dependence and the husband's liability for her support while she continues to be his wife, repels such a construction.

At the conclusion of its opinion the supreme court states that it is urged that the trial court refused to charge certain specific requests, and observes that there is nothing in that, because the reviewing court has assumed that all of the requests were charged favorably to the plaintiff. This is a mistake. If they were charged favorably to the plaintiff they would have to be reviewed, as it is the defendant who appeals; but there were no requests to charge, for there was no charge, the case having been submitted to the district court without a jury. What occurred was that the defendant requested a finding of certain facts, which the court did not do, but gave a general judgment for plaintiff. We think there is no doubt but that the district court would have rendered the judgment it did, even if specific findings were made in favor of defendant, as requested. And if such were the state of the record before us we would affirm the Supreme Court. This gives the defendant the benefit of the finding he requested, and he is therefore not harmed on this branch of the case.

The judgment under review will be affirmed, with costs.

Swayze, Minturn, White, and Heppenheimer, JJ., dissent.

Swayze, J., dissenting:

My vote for reversal is solely upon the ground that I think the separation agreement is either an attempt at a contract with the wife alone, or, at best, for the plaintiff, with the wife and trustee jointly. In either case it seems to me unenforceable at law. Recourse, I think, must be had to the court of chancery, as in Aspinwall v. Aspinwall, 49 N. J. Eq. 302, 24 Atl. 926, and Buttler v. Buttler, 57 N. J. Eq. 645, 73 Am. St. Rep. 648, 42 Atl. 755.

ANNOTATION.

Unchastity of wife as affecting prior separation agreement.

As to defenses available to husband in civil suit by wife for support, see note to Hubbard v. Hubbard, 6 A.L.R. 6.

It was held in the reported case (WHITTLE v. SCHLEMM, ante, 1447) that the right of a wife, while living separate and apart from the husband, to secure funds provided for her support in a separation agreement, persists even after the commission of an act of adultery by her, unless there is an express stipulation and limitation in the agreement that payment shall cease in the event that she becomes unchaste; for, without such a provision the common-law obligation of a husband to support his wife continues, unless and until he procures a divorce from her. The court said that the question was one of construction of the agreement, and that, where husband and wife were living apart under separation articles, there was nothing in the situation which called for the importation into the contract of a dum casta clause. The holding in this case is supported by the following authorities, to the effect that the subsequent unchastity of the wife does not relieve the husband from his obligations under a separation agreement, if there is no express provision in this regard in the agreement: Dixon v. Dixon (1873) 23 N. J. Eq. 316, subsequent proceedings to same effect in (1873) 24 N. J. Eq. 133; Forrest v. Forrest (1859) 9 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 289 (obiter); Hann v. De Freest (1919) 178 N. Y. Supp. 414; Randolph v. Field (1914) 165 App. Div. 279, 150 N. Y. Supp. 822, affirming on this point in (1914) 84 Misc. 403, 146 N. Y. Supp. 247; A. v. C. (1908) 18 Pa. Dist. Ct. 88; Muhr's Estate (1915) 59 Pa. Super. Ct. 393; Field v. Serres 1804) 1 Bos. &

P. N. R. 121, 127 Eng. Reprint, 405; Jee v. Thurlow (1824) 2 Barn. & C. 547, 107 Eng. Reprint, 487, 4 Dowl. & R. 11, 2 L. J. K. B. 81, 26 Revised Rep. 453; Baynon v. Batley (1832) 8 Bing. 256, 131 Eng. Reprint, 400, 1 L. J. C. P. N. S. 75, 1 Moore & S. 339; Evans v. Carrington (1860) 2 De G. F. & J. 481, 45 Eng. Reprint, 707, 7 Jur. N. S. 197, 30 L. J. Ch. N. S. 364, 4 L. T. N. S. 65; Charlesworth v. Holt (1873) 43 L. J. Exch. N. S. (Eng.) 25, L. R. 9 Exch. 38, 29 L. T. N. S. 647, 22 Week. Rep. 94; Fearon v. Aylesford (1884) L. R. 14 Q. B. Div. (Eng.) 792, 49 J. P. 596, 54 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 33, 52 L. T. N. S. 954, 33 Week. Rep. 331; Sweet v. Sweet [1895] 1 Q. B. (Eng.) 12, 59 J. P. 373, 43 Week. Rep. 303, 71 L. T. N. S. 672, 64 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 108, 15 Reports, 146; Wasteney v. Wasteney [1900] A. C. (Eng.) 446, 69 L. J. P. C. N. S. 83; Gordon v. Gordon (1916) — Ont. —, 32 D. L. R. 626.

Roth v. Roth (1912) 77 Misc. 673, 138 N. Y. Supp. 573, is in conflict with the above cases, it being held in this case that the adultery of the wife was a defense to an action brought by her for an instalment due on a separation agreement. But this case was disapproved in Randolph v. Field (1914) 165 App. Div. 279, 150 N. Y. Supp. 822, supra.

The case of Devine v. Devine (1918) 89 N. J. Eq. 51, 104 Atl. 370, holding that in separation agreements between husband and wife there is an implied condition that the wife should remain chaste, is overruled by the reported case (WHITTLE v. SCHLEMM, ante, 1447).

A separation deed, if good at its execution and delivery, will not be set aside for adultery or any misconduct of the wife thereafter. Dixon v. Dixon (1873) 23 N. J. Eq. 316, supra.

In A. v. C. (Pa.) supra, the court took the view that the covenant for support, contained in articles of separation between husband and wife, is the affirmance of an existing obligation on the part of the husband to support the wife rather than the creation of a new obligation, and that, however bad her conduct, this primary duty of support remains until legally discharged by divorce.

It was held in Field v. Serres (1804) 1 Bos. & P. N. R. 121, 127 Eng. Reprint, 405, supra, in an action of debt on a bond given to secure an annuity to the defendant's wife, that the defendant, having pleaded the general issue, should not be permitted to withdraw that plea, and plead, first, that the wife for whose maintenance the annuity was given had committed adultery, and at the time the action was begun was living in adultery, and, second, that before the making of the bond the wife had committed adultery, and that the bond was given by the defendant in ignorance of such adultery, since the pleas proposed would not be a defense to the action.

That the wife, subsequent to execution of the agreement for separate maintenance, has committed adultery, in consequence of which the husband has secured a divorce, was held in Hann v. De Freest (1919) 178 N. Y. Supp. 414, supra, not to be a defense to an action by her on the agreement.

And a divorce obtained by the husband on the ground of the wife's adultery was held in Muhr's Estate (1915) 59 Pa. Super. Ct. 393, supra, not to terminate the separation agreement.

It will be observed that the two preceding decisions go farther than is necessary to the determination of the question herein considered, the annotation not covering the effect of divorce, even though it is obtained on the ground of the wife's adultery. See also Goslin v. Clark (1862) 12 C. B. N. S. 681, 142 Eng. Reprint, 1310, 31 L. J. C. P. N. S. 330, 9 Jur. N. S. 520, 6 L. T. N. S. 824, holding that a divorce obtained by the husband on the ground of the wife's adultery did not relieve him from payment of an annuity, according to the terms of a separation deed; but in this case the deed expressly referred to the adultery as the cause of the separation, and contained a provision for future chastity on the part of the wife, which it was not shown she had violated.

The adultery of the wife after the execution of the separation agreement, although followed by the birth of a spurious child, is not a defense to an action by the wife to recover arrears due on the agreement, there being no implied term in such an agreement that the wife shall remain chaste. Fearon v. Aylesford (1884) L. R. 14 Q. B. Div. (Eng.) 792, 49 J. P. 596, 54 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 83, 52 L. T. N. S. 954, 33 Week. Rep. 331, supra.

Nor is such adultery or the birth of a spurious child a breach of a covenant in the agreement against molestation, although it seems that, if the wife holds out the child as that of the husband, the jury may find that there has been a breach of the covenant against molestation. Ibid.

It was held also in Sweet v. Sweet [1895] 1 Q. B. (Eng.) 12, 59 J. P. 373, 43 Week. Rep. 308, 71 L. T. N. S. 672, 64 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 108, 15 Reports, 146, supra, that, in an action for arrears of an annuity payable under a separation deed, it was not a defense that the wife had been guilty of adultery, resulting in the birth of a child.

And adultery, resulting in the birth of a child, was held in Sweet v. Sweet (Eng.) supra, not a breach of a provision in the agreement by which the wife covenanted not to molest, annoy, or interfere with the husband.

The court in Seagrave v. Seagrave (1807) 13 Ves. Jr. 439, 33 Eng. Reprint, 358, apparently considered the subsequent adultery of the wife as not relieving the husband from liability on a separation bond executed by the husband and a trustee for the wife. The court retained the bill with liberty to the plaintiff to bring an action at law in the name of her trustee who, it was admitted, had destroyed the bond on the ground that the wife had forfeited her rights because of the adultery.

Where the husband and wife compromised a divorce suit, under an arrangement by which a deed of separation should be executed "with usual covenants," it was held that the term "usual covenants" did not include a provision that the annuity for which the husband became liable by the deed should be payable only while the wife remained chaste. Hart v. Hart (1881) L. R. 18 Ch. Div. (Eng.) 670, 50 L. J. Ch. N. S. 697, 45 L. T. N. S. 13, 30 Week. Rep. 8.

And where the court, after dissolution of the marriage, ordered the preparation of a deed for securing an annuity to the wife, and refused to order the inclusion in the deed of a dum casta clause, it was held in Bradley v. Bradley (1883) 51 L. J. Prob. N. S. (Eng.) 87, L. R. 7 Prob. Div. 237, 47 L. T. N. S. 355, 31 Week. Rep. 230, that the court did not have the power later to order the cancelation of the deed, on account of the subsequent unchastity of the wife.

In Scholey v. Goodman (1823) 1 Car. & P. 36, 8 J. B. Moore, 350, 1 Bing. 349, 130 Eng. Reprint, 141, the defense of the wife's subsequent adultery was set up in an action for breach of a separation agreement, but the decision turns on questions of pleading and the admissibility of evidence.

It was held in Gordon v. Gordon (1916) — Ont. —, 32 D. L. R. 626, that, as adultery did not, in Ontario, entitle the husband or wife to a dissolution of the marriage, the adultery of the wife, after the execution of a separation deed, did not terminate the deed, under a clause therein that in case the marriage should at any time thereafter be dissolved, or in case the wife should be guilty of any act which should entitle the husband to obtain a dissolution of the marriage, the payments provided therein should cease.

Attention is called to the ruling in several cases, among possibly others, on the question of the effect of the wife's prior unchastity on the validity of the separation agreement.

Thus, in addition to holding that the wife's adultery subsequent to the making of the agreement was not a defense to an action by her on the agreement, the court, in Randolph v. Field (1914) 165 App. Div. 279, 150 N. Y. Supp. 822, supra, held that in such an action a defense was insufficient, which alleged that the wife had committed adultery before the execution of the agreement, and that this fact was unknown to the defendant; since such an allegation was not the equivalent of an allegation of fraud perpetrated by direct representation or concealment, and the court would not assume as matter of law that, had the defendant known the truth, he would not have entered into the agreement.

The deed of separation between husband and wife was held fraudulent and void in its inception, in Evans v. Carrington (1860) 2 De G. F. & J. 481, 45 Eng. Reprint, 707, 7 Jur. N. S. 197, 30 L. J. Ch. N. S. 364, 4 L. T. N. S. 65, supra, on the ground that the wife, who before the marriage had had illicit intercourse, induced the husband to execute the deed in contemplation of a renewal of that intercourse, that she might carry it on with more facility. And the court was of the opinion that the deed would be invalidated also if the wife committed adultery between the time of the marriage and the date the deed was executed, if the husband was ignorant of the adultery at the time of making the deed. The latter question was not, however, expressly decided, as it was held that the evidence was insufficient to show such adultery.

For a case where fraudulent representations as to the wife's chastity at the time the agreement was made were held to be a defense to an action on a separation agreement, see Evans v. Edmonds (1853) 13 C. B. 777, 138 Eng. Reprint, 1407, 1 C. L. R. 653, 22 L. J. C. P. N. S. 211, 17 Jur. 883, 1 Week. Rep. 412.

The general proposition that a separation agreement is not affected by a subsequent act of adultery of one of the parties is supported by Galusha v. Galusha (1889) 116 N. Y. 635, 6 L.R.A. 487, 15 Am. St. Rep. 453, 22 N. E. 1114, the court stating that as to the making of the agreement, it was not in the power of either party, acting alone and against the will of the other, to do an act which would destroy or affect the contract. But in this case the adultery was on the part of the husband, and the action was by the wife for divorce.

And although not strictly in point, attention is called to Ross v. Ross [1908] 2 Ir. R. 339, holding that the subsequent adultery of the husband would not prevent him from enforcing the covenants in a separation deed, by which the wife, in consideration of the payment of a certain sum, released the husband from all claims for support, and agreed not to molest or disturb him.

Also in Gandy v. Gandy (1882) L. R. 7 Prob. Div. (Eng.) 168, 51 L. J. Prob. N. S. 41, 46 L. T. N. S. 607, 30

Week. Rep. 673, it was held that the husband, because of his subsequent adultery, did not forfeit his rights under a separation deed.

But see Morrall v. Morrall (1881) L. R. 6 Prob. Div. (Eng.) 98, 50 L. J. Prob. N. S. 62, 29 Week. Rep. 897, holding that the incestuous adultery of the husband created a state of things not in contemplation of the parties when the deed of separation was executed, and that the wife was not, therefore, by a provision in the deed against suing the husband for support or alimony except as therein provided, restrained from suing for a dissolution of the marriage, and might be entitled to all the incidents of that suit, including an allowance based on the husband's income R. E. H.

---

MILDRED MULLER, by Guardian ad Litem, Respt.,
v.

FRANCIS HILLENBRAND, Appt.

---

MARY FINK, Respt.,

v.

SAME, Appt.

New York Court of Appeals—January 6, 1920.

(227 N. Y. 448, 125 N. E. 808.)

Master and servant — authority of janitor — ejecting child from sidewalk.

1. The janitor of an apartment building has no implied authority to eject from the sidewalk in front thereof children using the walk for roller skating, which will render the owner of the property liable for injury caused by his attempt to exercise such authority.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1458.]

Highway — right of property owner from the sidewalk in front of his — ejecting child from sidewalk. property a child using it for roller

2. One has no authority to eject skating.

---

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, modifying and affirming a judgment of a Trial Term for New York County, Part IX. (Platzek, J.) in favor of plaintiffs, in consolidated actions brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by an assault by defendant's servant, and for damages for loss of services resulting from such injuries; and from orders denying motions for new trial. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Stephen P. Anderton and Ewing R. Philbin, with Mr. Alfred W. Meldon, for appellant:

In determining whether an assault committed by a servant was within the scope of his employment, the law considers only the precise situation at the time of the assault itself.

Girvin v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 166 N. Y. 289, 59 N. E. 921, 9 Am. Neg. Rep. 547; McKay v. Hudson River Line, 56 App. Div. 201, 67 N. Y. Supp. 651; Sharp v. Erie R. Co. 184 N. Y. 100, 76 N. E. 923, 6 Ann. Cas. 250, 19 Am. Neg. Rep. 448.

Neither Friedman's assumed "desire to further the interests of his employer by preventing the annoyance of the tenants of which they had complained, and endeavoring to promote their comfort and to keep them contented," nor the supposed benefit to defendant of his assault, suffice to bring his act within the scope of his employment.

Kaiser v. McLean, 20 App. Div. 326, 46 N. Y. Supp. 1038; Kennedy v. White, 91 App. Div. 475, 86 N. Y. Supp. 852; Connor v. Benenson Realty Co. 152 N. Y. Supp. 700; Grimes v. Young, 51 App. Div. 239, 64 N. Y. Supp. 859; Brown v. Jarvis Engineering Co. 166 Mass. 75, 32 L.R.A. 605, 55 Am. St. Rep. 382, 43 N. E. 1118; Limpus v. London General Omnibus Co. 1 Hurlst. & C. 526, 158 Eng. Reprint, 993, 32 L. J. Exch. N. S. 34, 9 Jur. N. S. 333, 7 L. T. N. S. 641, 11 Week. Rep. 149, 17 Eng. Rul. Cas. 258; 26 Cyc. 1534; Katz v. Lutz, 176 App. Div. 460, 163 N. Y. Supp. 562.

Mr. Henry Siegrist, with Messrs. Hoody, Lauterbach, & Johnson, for respondents:

The question was properly submitted to the jury, whose province it was to choose between conflicting inferences, if any there were, and to determine as a fact whether Friedman was acting within the scope of his employment and in the furtherance of his master's business.

Mott v. Consumers' Ice Co. 73 N. Y. 543; Rounds v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 64 N. Y. 129, 21 Am. Rep. 597, 8 Am. Neg. Cas. 536; Girvin v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 166 N. Y. 289, 59 N. E. 921, 9 Am. Neg. Rep. 547; Sharp v. Erie R. Co. 184 N. Y. 100, 76 N. E. 923, 6 Ann. Cas. 250, 19 Am. Neg. Rep. 448; Magar v. Hammond, 183 N. Y. 387, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1038, 76 N. E. 474, 19 Am. Neg. Rep. 445;

Craven v. Bloomingdale, 171 N. Y. 439, 64 N. E. 169; Palmeri v. Manhattan R. Co. 133 N. Y. 261, 16 L.R.A. 136, 23 Am. St. Rep. 632, 30 N. E. 1001; Lynch v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 77, 43 Am. Rep. 141; Becker v. Borck, 157 N. Y. Supp. 505; Herrman v. New York Edison Co. 175 App. Div. 535, 162 N. Y. Supp. 145; Katz v. Lutz, 176 App. Div. 460, 163 N. Y. Supp. 562; Kennedy v. White, 91 App. Div. 475, 86 N. Y. Supp. 852; Kurland v. Roche, 165 N. Y. Supp. 807; 6 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 2364; Dealy v. Coble, 112 App. Div. 296, 98 N. Y. Supp. 452.

If Friedman lost his temper, as his language seems to indicate, that does not relieve his master of liability.

Rounds v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 64 N. Y. 129, 21 Am. Rep. 597, 8 Am. Neg. Cas. 536; Dealy v. Coble, 112 App. Div. 296, 98 N. Y. Supp. 452.

McLaughlin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The infant plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by reason of an assault committed upon her by defendant's janitor. The other action is by the infant's mother, to recover damages resulting from such injuries. Each plaintiff had a verdict upon which judgment was entered for a substantial amount, and which, in each case was modified by the appellate division, and, as modified, affirmed. Defendant appeals to this court.

On the 9th of September, 1914, the defendant was the owner of two seven-story apartment houses in the city of New York, of which one Friedman was the janitor. His duties, as such, were those usually performed by a janitor, and included keeping the halls and sidewalks clean, washing the windows, and showing the apartments to prospective tenants. The infant plaintiff, at the time of the assault, was eleven years of age. No testimony was offered at the trial as to the actual authority conferred upon the janitor by the defendant, except that the janitor testified, on one occasion when he informed defendant that boys playing ball on the sidewalk had broken some windows, the defendant then instructed him that at any time thereafter, when he saw boys playing ball and breaking windows, to call a police officer on the beat.

The evidence adduced at the trial tended to establish, and justified the jury in finding, that the tenants had been annoyed by the noise caused by children roller skating on the sidewalk in front of the apartments, and had complained to the janitor and his wife with reference thereto. Acting on such complaints, he had endeavored to prevent children from roller skating on the walks. On the day named the testimony on the part of the plaintiff, which is corroborated by two of her companions, shows that immediately prior to the assault, she and three girls about her own age had been roller skating on the sidewalk for some considerable time; that the janitor went upon the sidewalk, and, addressing the plaintiff, who was then standing on the walk with her roller skates on, told her to get off the walk; that she refused to do so; that he then told her if she did not get off he would throw her off, and her reply was, "I would like to see you;" that he then grabbed her by the arm, threw or shoved her from the walk to the street, causing her to fall, and as she did so her back struck the curbstone and inflicted very serious injuries. Actions were thereafter brought against the owner of the apartment houses, with the result as above indicated.

The janitor, in assaulting the infant plaintiff, was not acting within Highway—right of property owner—ejecting child from sidewalk.

the actual or apparent scope of his employment. Had the defendant been present he would have had no authority to do what the janitor did, and what he could not legally do he could not, in a legal sense, authorize the janitor to do for him. Poulton v. London & S. W. R. Co. (1867) L. R. 2 Q. B. 534, 8 Best & S. 616, 36 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 294, 17 L. T. N. S. 11, 16 Week. Rep. 309; Pollock, Torts, 10th ed. 97, 98.

8 A.L.R.—92.

The rule of liability of a master for the acts of his servant is tersely stated in Mott v. Consumers' Ice Co. 73 N. Y. 543, 547. It is that "for the acts of the servant within the general scope of his employment, while engaged in his master's business, and done with a view to the furtherance of that business and the master's interest, the master will be responsible, whether the act be done negligently, wantonly, or even wilfully. . . . But if a servant goes outside of his employment, and without regard to his service, acting maliciously, or in order to effect some purpose of his own, wantonly commits a trespass, or causes damage to another, the master is not responsible."

To the same effect is Girvin v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 166 N. Y. 289, 59 N. E. 921, 9 Am. Neg. Rep. 547.

The infant plaintiff had a right to be upon the sidewalk, and, so far as appears, to use it for roller skating, though she was not, at the time the assault was committed, using it for that purpose. If the act of their skating created such an annoyance to tenants as to, in effect, amount to a nuisance, then the janitor, if authorized by the owner of the apartments so to do, should have proceeded in a lawful way to abate the nuisance, instead of taking the law into his own hands and committing the assault which he did. He appreciated, on a former occasion, when boys were playing ball on the sidewalk, that he had no authority to throw them off, and when the master's attention was called to it, he told him what to do in the future.

It may very well be that the noise caused by roller skating on the sidewalk was annoying to the tenants, and that the janitor supposed he was furthering the master's interests by trying to prevent the annoyance, but this did not change the legal relation of the parties, or confer upon him authority which the master himself did not possess. As the janitor was not engaged in performing any act connected with his employment, at the time of the assault, his act is not chargeable to the defendant. The plaintiff's remedy, if they have any, is against the janitor, and not the defendant.

Master and servant—authority of janitor—ejecting child from sidewalk.

Each judgment, therefore, should be reversed, and each complaint dismissed, with costs in all courts.

Collin, Hogan, Cardozo, Pound, and Elkus, JJ., concur.

Hiscock, Ch. J., absent.

Petition for rehearing denied.

ANNOTATION.

Liability of employer for acts of janitor.

The general principles applicable to cases under consideration in the present annotation are comparatively simple and well established, it being generally conceded that a master is responsible for injuries occasioned to third persons by any negligence or wilful misconduct upon the part of his servant, while acting within the scope of his employment, and that the master is not responsible when the act of the servant is not within the scope of his employment or in obedience to the master's orders.

Applying this rule, the following cases hold that a master is liable for the acts of his janitor which are within the scope of his employment while engaged in his master's business, and done with a view to the furtherance of that business and the master's interest: Dickson v. Waldron (1893) 135 Ind. 507, 24 L.R.A. 483, 41 Am. St. Rep. 440, 34 N. E. 506, 35 N. E. 1; Stevenson v. Joy (1890) 152 Mass. 45, 25 N. E. 78; Montgomery v. Sartirano (1897) 16 App. Div. 95, 44 N. Y. Supp. 1066, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 758; Ellefson v. Singer (1909) 132 App. Div. 89, 116 N. Y. Supp. 453; Kavanagh v. Vollmer (1903) 84 N. Y. Supp. 475; Foley v. Y. M. C. A. (1904) 90 N. Y. Supp. 406; Kurland v. Roche (1917) 165 N. Y. Supp. 807; Whaley v. Citizens' Nat. Bank (1905) 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 531; McDermott v. Consolidated Ice Co. (1910) 44 Pa. Super. Ct. 445; McDermott v. Consolidated Ice Co. (1910) 44 Pa. Super. Ct. 454; Malcolm v. McNichol (1906) 16 Manitoba L. R. 411. And this "whether the particular act was or was not directly authorized, and whether it was or was not lawful." Dickson v. Waldron (1893) 135 Ind. 507, 24 L.R.A. 483, 41 Am. St. Rep. 440, 34 N. E. 506, 35 N. E. 1, supra. And notwithstanding the injury was the result of a wrongful act of one hired by the janitor to do his work without the knowledge or consent of the master (Ellefson v. Singer (1909) 132 App. Div. 89, 116 N. Y. Supp. 453), as well as where the master knows of the hiring (Foley v. Y. M. C. A. (1904) 90 N. Y. Supp. 406). And it has been held that the fact that the janitor had positive orders not to touch the appliance or do the act which caused the injury does not change the situation, provided, of course, that the act was one within the general course of his employment. Whaley v. Citizens' Nat. Bank (1905) 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 531; McDermott v. Consolidated Ice Co. (1910) 44 Pa. Super. Ct. 445.

The following cases, which involve the question of the liability of an employer for the acts of his janitor, lay down and apply that part of the general rule which excuses the master from responsibility where the act complained of was regarded as outside of the janitor's employment: Sherwood v. Warner (1906) 27 App. D. C. 64, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 651, 7 Ann. Cas. 98; Gibson v. International Trust Co. (1900) 177 Mass. 100, 52 L.R.A. 928, 58 N. E. 278; MULLER v. HILLENBRAND (reported herewith) ante, 1455; Montgomery v. Sartirano (1897) 16 App. Div. 95, 44 N. Y. Supp. 1066, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 758; Kennedy v. White (1904) 91 App. Div. 475, 86 N. Y.

Supp. 852; Foley v. Y. M. C. A. (N. Y.) supra.

However, the real difficulty consists in the proper application of the general rule to the facts and circumstances of the individual cases. In other words, the task is to determine what acts are to be regarded as within the scope of a janitor's employment so as to render the master liable, and what acts are outside of his employment so as to excuse the master from liability. Each decision, of course, depends largely upon the particular facts and circumstances involved in the case, so that little more can be done than to set out the cases by way of illustration.

Taking up those cases which have determined that the specific act or acts under consideration were done while the janitor was acting within the general scope of his employment and in the interest of his master, it was held in Montgomery v. Sartirano (1897) 16 App. Div. 95, 44 N. Y. Supp. 1066, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 758, that if the porter of a lodging house, in discharging his duty to his master to maintain order and eject intruders, violated his instructions and used excessive force in ejecting a drunken person, the master would be liable for the resulting injury. And again, in Kurland v. Roche (1917) 165 N. Y. Supp. 807, it was held that the owner of an apartment house was liable for an assault by his janitor upon a deliveryman who, at the request of a tenant, had delivered goods by the front entrance in violation of a rule requiring deliveries to be made through the basement, and was leaving the building at the time of the assault. In this case, it was the duty of the janitor to enforce the rules of the building, and the court held that the assault was done in the prosecution of the work for which the janitor was hired, even though it did not prevent the breaking of the rule in the instant case, saying: "The defendant seeks to sustain this judgment on the ground that, at the time the assault was made, the plaintiff had already delivered the beer, and that consequently the janitor did not make the assault for the purpose of preventing the plaintiff from breaking a rule of the defendant's apartment house, and that only if the assault was made for this purpose would it be within the scope of his authority. The defendant is, however, responsible if the assault was done in the prosecution of the work for which the janitor was employed. That work included the care of the house and, in general, the enforcement of the rules governing the rights of people to come on the premises. In the absence of any other explanation, it certainly seems a fair inference that, when the janitor took away the case of empty bottles and assaulted the plaintiff, he was acting in attempted pursuance of his duties to see that 'people do not come into the house that do not belong there,' and to enforce the rule of deliveries through the dumb-waiter by violently driving out one who made the delivery in a different manner, even if he could not act in time to stop such delivery."

And in Dickson v. Waldron (Ind.) supra, the proprietor of a theater was held liable for the acts of his janitor and door man in wrongfully assaulting a person who, following a dispute, was being beaten by the ticket seller. In this case it appeared that one of the duties of the offending servant was to preserve order in the theater and to remove offensive persons, and the court, in holding that the injuries were inflicted by the servant while acting in the course of his employment, said: "The trouble was occasioned entirely by a dispute as to the purchase of tickets, and both the ticket seller and the doorkeeper acted within the business of their employment, maintaining that side of the controversy which was in their master's interest." It further appears in this case that the servant who made the assault was a special or house policeman, but this element did not enter into the decision, for the reason, as stated by the court, that the assault was made while the servant was acting as janitor and door man, and before he attempted to exercise any of his powers as an officer.

So, in Whaley v. Citizens' Nat. Bank

(1905) 28 Pa. Super. Ct. 531, where defendant bank extended a brass rail across the front of its building to protect it from persons congregating on the sidewalk, and connected the same with an electric current with a control inside of the building, and a person was injured at night by a shock received on coming in contact with the rail, the court went so far as to hold that the bank could be held liable for the injury, where the current had been turned on by the janitor, although he had been instructed not to use or meddle with the apparatus. It argued that the rule as to scope of employment was "broad enough to make the appellant [bank] liable, even though the janitor turned on the electricity contrary to positive orders," it being said that "the janitor had charge of the bank building, and the battery was one of the appliances therein, and it was used for the purpose of shocking people on the street." And the rule that a violation of instructions does not necessarily exonerate the master was again applied in McDermott v. Consolidated Ice Co. (1910) 44 Pa. Super. Ct. 445, and McDermott v. Consolidated Ice Co. (1910) 44 Pa. Super. Ct. 454, where the janitor of a building, whose duty it was to gather and burn waste paper, in violation of the master's instructions to burn the same in the furnace, burned them in a near-by vacant lot, to the serious injury of a child playing near by. The court said: "That the master must answer for the act of his servant, done by his order or direction, is a principle so widely recognized that none will gainsay it. But the people generally who deal with such servant, or are affected by his acts, cannot know the nature of the instructions specially given by the master. If it be true that, where the master directs his servant to perform all the duties of his employment with diligence and care, he thereby relieves himself from any liability for the failure of the servant to obey such instructions, the general principle already adverted to would have but little force or significance. The law whose life resides in the spirit, rather than in the letter of the language in which its principles are expressed, places a broader construction on the obligations of the master. Where the act of the servant complained of is done in the performance of the duty he owes to his master or in furtherance of the business of the latter, in legal contemplation he is acting under the direction of the master, and the latter cannot escape liability for the consequences of such act, even though the manner of doing it violated the instructions which the servant had received. If, therefore, it appears that the act from which the injury resulted was one done in execution of the duty which the master had imposed on his servant, it is no defense for the former to show that the manner of doing the act was without his knowledge or assent, or, indeed, against his positive direction. And this conclusion seems to follow from two considerations. If the master leave to his servant a discretion as to the manner in which his duty is to be performed, he must be responsible for the manner in which that discretion is exercised. If he undertake to determine for himself the manner in which his servant shall perform his prescribed duties, the obligation is on him to see that such instructions are carried out, and that the servant does not substitute his own methods for those of his master. . . . Applying this principle to the case in hand, we are met at once with the conceded fact that the gathering of the waste papers and the burning of them was the very work which the defendant's servant was employed to do. It was while doing this act, to wit, burning the papers that he had gathered, that he caused the injury complained of. The servant was performing the duty for which he was employed. He was doing it in obedience to the direction of his master and in discharge of the duties imposed on him, and it was only in the manner of the performance of this duty that he failed to obey his master's directions. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the master is not exempted from liability for the consequences of his servant's act on this account."

In Stevenson v. Joy (1890) 152 Mass. 45, 25 N. E. 78, supra, where plaintiff fell through a coalhole in the sidewalk in front of defendant's building, which coalhole and building were admittedly under the care of a janitor, the defendant was held liable for the janitor's negligent performance of his duty with respect to the use and care of the coalhole.

And in Kavanagh v. Vollmer (1903) 84 N. Y. Supp. 475, the master was held liable to a pedestrian who was injured by falling upon the sidewalk as a result of slipping on ice formed through the use of water by defendant's servant, whose duty it was to keep the walk cleaned, and this although the defendant had not directed that water be used. In the latter connection the court said: "While the defendant did not direct the use of water, the servant made use of it not in the course of a departure from her duties, but simply because she saw other servants do the same thing, and to facilitate the cleaning. Her general duty being to sweep, and the object of sweeping being to clean, the use of water for that object, and concededly to no other end, was within the scope of the employment, under well-settled rules."

In Ellefson v. Singer (1909) 132 App. Div. 89, 116 N. Y. Supp. 453, the master was held liable for damages caused by a board being thrown from the roof of the defendant's tenement house.

In Malcolm v. McNichol (1906) 16 Manitoba L. R. 411, the janitor neglected to see that the valves on the steam pipes were closed before turning on the steam, and plaintiff's goods were damaged by escaping steam. This neglect of duty was held to render the master liable.

In a considerable number of the cases a contrary conclusion has been reached, it having been held that the act or acts complained of were outside of the servant's scope of employment as janitor, and without regard to the interests of the master. Thus, in Herwood v. Warner (1906) 27 App.

D. C. 64, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 651, 7 Ann. Cas. 98, the court, in applying the general rule that to make a master liable for an injury caused by his servant's negligence the servant must either have done the act causing the injury in the service of the master, or by his direction, held that the owner of a building was not liable for the negligent act of his janitor, who, at the request of persons sent by a contractor to repair the elevator, undertook to aid in releasing one of them, who had been caught in the machinery. This was upon the theory that where a general employee assists a third person in doing an act which the master is not bound to do, without the latter's knowledge or consent, the servant cannot be regarded as having acted within the scope of his authority. The court said: "The case under the evidence presents but one question necessary for determination: Was Conn, the janitor, the servant of the appellee in endeavoring to release the appellant, so as to make appellee liable for his negligence? That he was in the general employ of the appellee is admitted; yet such a service does not make the master liable except for acts done for the master. While rendering such general service he may be the servant of another. As the New York court of appeals said, in Wyllie v. Palmer (1893) 137 N. Y. 248, 19 L.R.A. 285, 33 N. E. 381: 'Servants who are employed and paid by one person may, nevertheless, be ad hoc the servants of another in a particular transaction, and that, too, where their general employer is interested in the work.' We think the proposition founded on reason and well established that, to make a master liable for an injury caused by his servant's negligence, the servant must either have done the act causing the injury in the service of the master, and in doing an act which the master was bound to perform, or which was done by his direction. The evidence in this case fails to show that the act done by appellee's servant was done in appellee's service, and was either one which appellee was bound to perform or directed by him to be performed. Conn was not employed by appellee to assist in repairing the elevator, or, while the elevator was out of service, to operate it, or try to operate it. On the other hand, it is clear that he was acting under the direction of appellant, or appellant's assistant. His movements were directed by them. In Higgins v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (1898) 156 N. Y. 75, 66 Am. St. Rep. 537, 50 N. E. 500, it was said, in speaking of a case very similar to this: "The true test in such cases is to ascertain who directs the movements of the person committing the injury." . . . If Conn was not loaned to appellant, he, so far as the appellee is concerned, acted as a volunteer in coming to appellant's assistance, and at appellant's request. Appellee was under no obligation to furnish his servants as assistants to those engaged in making repairs. There is no evidence to warrant such a conclusion. . . . In the case at bar appellant was not being carried as a passenger when the accident occurred, and the elevator was not being used by appellee for any purpose whatever. The facts are not such as require us to determine the measure of the liability of the owner of a passenger elevator to the passengers carried therein. The elevator was in the hands of appellant, or his employers, for repairs, and so far as shown, appellee had no control over it, and his servants were not engaged in operating it for him, or in their regular line of employment. Owners of buildings are daily engaging parties to make repairs to the apparatus and fixtures in them, and, in the absence of any agreement to furnish their servants as assistants to the parties making repairs, it would be carrying the rule applicable to the liability of masters for the negligence of their servants altogether too far to extend their liability to cases where the repairers solicit such servants to aid them in their work. If my servant, who takes charge of my furnace, happens to be around when repairs are being made to it by a contractor employed for that purpose, and at the request of the contractor, assists him in the repairs, without my agreement to furnish his aid, it would be unjust to hold me responsible for his negligence. In rendering such assistance he becomes the servant of the contractor. . . . The facts in the present case make it comparatively easy to apply the legal principle to them. As we have said, the elevator was incapable of use as a passenger elevator when the accident occurred; and was not in use. The appellee was under no agreement to furnish any assistance in making the repairs. The janitor acted solely upon the request of appellant or his representative, and appellee's servant was not in the regular line of his employment when he rendered the service which resulted in the injury. Under this state of facts the rule is that the general employer is not liable." And in Gibson v. International Trust Co. (1900) 177 Mass. 100, 52 L.R.A. 928, 58 N. E. 278, it was held that the removal of the chair of an elevator conductor from its place by a janitor, who was not in control of the elevator, but was merely riding in it as a passenger, was not an act within the scope of his employment so as to render the proprietor liable for an injury to another passenger caused by the involuntary starting of the elevator by the conductor as he grasped the mechanism to save himself from falling, as he attempted to sit down without knowing that his chair had been removed.

And in the reported case (MULLER v. HILLENBRAND, ante, 1455) it is held that the janitor of an apartment building had no actual or implied authority to eject from the sidewalk in front thereof children using the walk for roller skating, so as to render the owner of the property liable for an assault in throwing a child off the sidewalk, even though the skating was annoying to the tenants, who had complained to the janitor, who supposed that he was furthering the master's interest by trying to prevent the annoyance. It will be remembered that the court pointed out that the owner himself could not have ejected the child from the walk, and therefore that he could not have authorized the janitor to do so; that the latter, in ejecting the child, was not engaged in performing any act connected with his employment. So in Kennedy v. White, (1904) 91 App. Div. 475, 86 N. Y. Supp. 852, where a crowd of boys were creating a disturbance in front of a tenement building, and the janitor ran out and hurled a stick at and struck a boy on the opposite side of the street, who he must have known was a mere onlooker, it was held that no inference could be drawn that the janitor was acting or intended to act for his master in striking the injured boy, who had not even participated in the disturbance, but rather that it must be assumed that he went outside his employment and, without regard to his service, committed a trespass.

And in Montgomery v. Sartirano (1897) 16 App. Div. 95, 44 N. Y. Supp. 1066, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 758, where plaintiff was injured by being violently pushed down the stairs of a lodging house by the porter, whose duty it was to maintain order and eject intruders, it was held that if the injury resulted from the wanton act of the porter acting in anger at insults heaped upon him by the plaintiff, rather than in the service of the master in ejecting him, the defendant was not liable.

Of course, where the evidence as to authority, scope of duty, etc., of the janitor is conflicting, the question is one for the jury. A case of this kind is Foley v. Y. M. C. A. (1904) 90 N. Y. Supp. 406. G. J. C.

CHARLES S. ASHLEY
v.
WILLIAM C. WAIT et al.

Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court—July 30, 1917.

(Ashley v. Three Justices, 228 Mass. 63, 116 N. E. 961.)

Jury — suit between persons — contesting election.

1. An election contest provided by statute is not a suit between two or more persons within the meaning of a constitutional provision preserving the right of trial by jury in such suits, where the contest is brought by persons who are merely qualified voters.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1476.]

Pleading — complaint — election contest — interest of petitioners.

2. An allegation in a petition to contest an election that petitioners are inhabitants, taxpayers, and qualified voters in the election district is sufficient to show the right to vote for the officer whose election is contested, where the petition must be filed within two months of the election by qualified voters.

Election — contest — appointment of judges.

3. Failure to appoint judges to hear election contests until a contest is suggested does not destroy the jurisdiction of the judges, although the statute provides that such contests shall be heard by judges who shall be appointed immediately after the election.

Judges — appointment — chief judge.

4. Providing for the assignment by the chief justice of judges to hear election contests does not contravene a constitutional provision that all judicial officers shall be appointed by the governor.

Jury — election contest.

5. An election contest is not within a constitutional provision preserving the right of trial by jury in all controversies concerning property.

[See 16 R. C. L. 205.]

— criminal proceeding.

6. That the penalty for corrupt practice at an election is forfeiture of the right to hold office and disqualification to vote does not make an election contest a criminal proceeding, within the provision of the Constitution preserving jury trial in such proceedings.

Venue — election contest — power of legislature.

7. Constitutional power conferred upon the legislature to erect and constitute judicatories and courts of record authorizes it to require all election contests in the state to be tried in one county.

— right to justice.

8. The constitutional right of a successful candidate for office to obtain right and justice freely is not impaired by requiring him to go to another county to answer an election contest.

Election — qualification — corrupt practices.

9. Providing for disqualification for office of one guilty of corrupt practices does not contravene a constitutional provision that all qualified inhabitants have an equal right to be elected for public employment.

Constitutional law — equal protection — law applicable only to successful candidate.

10. Providing disqualification for office and disfranchisement only for successful candidates for public office who are guilty of corrupt practices does not deprive them of the equal protection of the laws.

— venue of different proceedings.

11. There is no deprivation of the equal protection of the laws by requiring election contests to be heard only in one county of the state, while criminal proceedings for violation of the Election Laws may be heard in the counties where the offenses occur.

— exemption of town officers.

12. Exempting from a Corrupt Practices Act town officers elected in towns of less than 10,000 inhabitants does not violate the constitutional guaranty of equal protection of the laws.

[See 6 R. C. L. 388.]

Courts — constitutional power — supreme court.

13. The constitutional power of the supreme judicial court is not impaired by a provision conferring final authority in election contests upon judges of the superior court, unless they report questions for the consideration of the supreme court.

Jury — Federal Constitution — state courts.

14. The 7th Amendment of the Federal Constitution, preserving trial by jury, applies only to Federal courts.

[See 6 R. C. L. 458; 16 R. C. L. 201.]

— due process of law.

15. Trial by jury is not essential to the due process of law guaranteed by the 14th Amendment of the Federal Constitution.

[See 6 R. C. L. 458.]

Constitutional law — due process — office as property.

16. The right to hold a public office and to vote is not property within the meaning of the 14th Amendment of the Federal Constitution, so as to require due process of law for deprivation thereof.

[See 6 R. C. L. 461.]

Statute — invalid in part — validity of remainder.

17. The invalidity of a portion of a statute conferring jurisdiction upon the courts of contests of elections to the legislature, for corrupt practices, does not invalidate the portions relating to other offices.

[See 6 R. C. L. 121, 133.]

Prohibition — when lies — interfering with jurisdiction.

18. Prohibition does not lie to prevent a court taking jurisdiction of a proceeding merely because the subpoena was made returnable later than the date prescribed by statute, where the tribunal before which the proceeding is pending has not passed upon that objection.

REPORT by the Supreme Judicial Court for Bristol County for determination by the full court of a petition for a writ of prohibition to enjoin respondents from proceeding to hear an election petition brought against petitioner. Petition dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. John W. Cummings and Charles R. Cummings, for petitioner:

The tribunal deciding election petitions is a summary and special one.

State ex rel. Schumacher v. Markham, 162 Wis. 55, 155 N. W. 917; Douglas v. Hutchinson, 183 Ill. 323, 55 N. E. 628; Devous v. Gallatin County, 244

(Ashley v. Three Justices, 228 Mass. 63, 116 N. E. 961.)

Ill. 40, 91 N. E. 102, 18 Ann. Cas. 422; Wade v. Murry, 2 Sneed, 50; Harmon v. Tyler, 112 Tenn. 8, 83 S. W. 1041.

Prohibition is the proper remedy.

Connecticut River R. Co. v. Franklin County, 127 Mass. 50, 34 Am. Rep. 338; Ex parte Roundtree, 51 Ala. 42; Chambers v. Jennings, 2 Salk. 553, 91 Eng. Reprint, 469, 8 Bacon, Abr. 228; London v. Cox, L. R. 2 H. L. 239, 36 L. J. Exch. N. S. 225, 16 Week. Rep. 44; Appo v. People, 20 N. Y. 531; State ex rel. Funkhouser v. Spencer, 166 Mo. 271, 65 S. W. 981; Ramsey v. Huck, 267 Mo. 333, 184 S. W. 966; Crisler v. Morrison, 57 Miss. 791.

The petitioners, having failed to make the necessary averments, cannot now supply the lack by introducing evidence, or by amending their petition or their application.

Morse v. Presby, 25 N. H. 302; Greenough v. Police Comrs. 30 R. I. 212, 136 Am. St. Rep. 953, 74 Atl. 785; Edwards v. Knight, 8 Ohio, 375; Minor v. Kidder, 43 Cal. 229; People ex rel. Rogers v. Spencer, 55 N. Y. 1; People ex rel. Green v. Smith, 55 N. Y. 135; Wellsborough v. New York & C. R. Co. 76 N. Y. 182; Sawyer v. Frankson, 134 Minn. 258, 159 N. W. 1; Batterton v. Fuller, 6 S. D. 257, 60 N. W. 1071; Schwarz v. County Ct. 14 Colo. 44, 23 Pac. 84; Smith v. Smith, — N. J. L. —, 41 Atl. 753; Daugherty v. Carnine, 61 Ill. 366, 103 N. E. 1003; Masteron v. Reed, 172 Ill. 37, 49 N. E. 488; Ramsey v. Huck, 267 Mo. 333, 184 S. W. 966; Gillespie v. Dion, 18 Mont. 83, 33 L.R.A. 703, 44 Pac. 954.

A subpoena not returnable at the statutory time is void; the court issuing it does not have jurisdiction; and the defect cannot be supplied by an amendment or a new writ.

Whittier v. Farmington, 115 Minn. 32, 131 N. W. 1079; Odegard v. Lequire, 107 Minn. 315, 119 N. W. 1057;avanaugh v. McConochie, 134 Ill. 516, 5 N. E. 674; Greenwood v. Murphy, 31 Ill. 604, 23 N. E. 421; Vigil v. Radt, 5 N. M. 161, 20 Pac. 795; Ramsey v. Huck, 267 Mo. 333, 184 S. W. 966; Insurance Co. of Valley of Virginia v. Mordecai, 21 How. 195, 16 L. l. 94; Puget Sound Agri. Co. v. Pierce county, 6 Wall. 246, 18 L. ed. 739; nited States v. Curry, 6 How. 106, L. ed. 363; Bell v. Austin, 13 Pick. 1; Bergen v. Jones, 4 Met. 371; Crisler v. Morrison, 57 Miss. 791; Williams Tenby, L. R. 5 C. P. Div. 135, 49 L.

J. C. P. N. S. 325, 42 L. T. N. S. 187, 28 Week. Rep. 616, 44 J. P. 348.

The remedy by election petition is not exclusive.

McCrary, Elections, 4th ed. p. 294.

The statute is unconstitutional.

Ex parte Roundtree, 51 Ala. 42; Com. ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Conyngham, 65 Pa. 76; Com. v. Anthes, 5 Gray, 185.

Disqualification imposed by statute is an infamous punishment.

United States v. Waddell, 112 U. S. 76, 28 L. ed. 673, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 35; People ex rel. Akin v. Kipley, 171 Ill. 44, 41 L.R.A. 775, 49 N. E. 229; Ex parte Wilson, 114 U. S. 417, 29 L. ed. 89, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 935, 4 Am. Crim. Rep. 283.

Since the suit is between two or more persons petitioner is entitled to a jury trial.

Worcester Color Co. v. Henry Wood's Sons Co. 209 Mass. 105, 95 N. E. 392; State ex rel. Schumacher v. Markham, 160 Wis. 431, 152 N. W. 161; Atty. Gen. v. Sullivan, 163 Mass. 446, 28 L.R.A. 455, 40 N. E. 843; 15 Cyc. 402.

The petitioner's right to vote for Representatives and for Senators in Congress, and to vote in presidential elections, is protected by the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Crandall v. Nevada, 6 Wall. 36, 18 L. ed. 745; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394.

Mr. H. E. Woodward for respondent Hathaway.

Mr. C. W. Mulcahy, Assistant Attorney General, for the Attorney General.

Rugg, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a petition for a writ of prohibition. The petitioner is the respondent in an election petition filed under the Corrupt Practices Act. Stat. 1913, chap. 835, as amended by Stat. 1914, chap. 783. That election petition charged the respondent therein, the present petitioner, who hereafter will be called the petitioner, with having violated provisions of the Corrupt Practices Act in connection with his election in December, 1916, as mayor of New Bedford. The respondents are three judges of the superior court who have been assigned to hear such election petitions. The grounds alleged for the issuance of the writ of prohibition in the petition at bar, succinctly stated, are:

(1) That the election petition is fatally defective in jurisdictional allegations not susceptible of being cured by amendment; (2) that the respondents have no jurisdiction to hear the election petition because not legally assigned therefor in accordance with the statute; (3) that the statute under which the election petition is brought is unconstitutional in several respects; (4) that no legal subpoena issued to summon the respondent into court, in that, while the statute required that the subpoena "be returnable fourteen days after the date on which the petition is filed," it was in fact made returnable fifteen days thereafter.

In their answer the respondents admit that the petitioner was declared elected, and was inaugurated mayor of New Bedford, and aver that they were assigned in accordance with the statutes to hear election petitions, that they were at the time of the filing of the present petition intending and proceeding to hear the election petition brought against the present petitioner, and that the papers on file show that the subpoena on the election petition was returnable fifteen days after the filing of the petition, and that the petitioner, as respondent therein, appeared specially, and filed a motion to dismiss the election petition on the ground that the subpoena was not issued according to the statute, and he had not been rightly summoned, and that no action has been taken by them upon his motion to dismiss, only seven days having elapsed between its filing and the bringing of the present petition, whereupon they immediately directed all proceedings in the election petition case to be suspended until the further order of the supreme judicial court on the present petition.

The first of the petitioners in the election petition, and the attorney general, have been allowed to intervene. The case was reserved upon the petition and answer for the determination of the full court.

These several grounds urged in support of the issuance of prohibition will be examined in the order stated above.

1. The first is the fatally defective nature of the election petition.

That petition alleges that the petitioners therein named are "inhabitants, taxpayers, and qualified voters in the city of New Bedford." This is a sufficient averment that the petitioners had a right to vote for mayor at the election in question in a proceeding of this sort, where the petition, by Stat. 1914, chap. 783, § 10 (b), must be filed within two months after the date of the election to which it relates, in view of other requirements of law as to registration of voters and the well-known customs of registrars. But if the allegations were not sufficient, they might be corrected by amendment. See Tucker v. Fisk, 154 Mass. 574, 578, 28 N. E. 1051; Dartmouth v. Bristol County, 153 Mass. 12, 26 N. E. 425; Crafts v. Sikes, 4 Gray, 194, 64 Am. Dec. 62. The decisions relied on by the petitioner need not be reviewed. They are by courts of other jurisdictions, where doubtless the policy of the law is more insistent upon niceties of pleading than it is in this commonwealth.

Pleading—complaint—election contest
—interest of petitioners.

2. The second ground urged by the petitioner is that the respondents have not been legally assigned as the three judges to hear election petitions in accordance with the statute, and hence are without jurisdiction in the premises.

The words of Stat. 1914, chap. 783, § 10 (c), are that "election petitions . . . shall be heard and determined by three justices of the superior court who shall each year, immediately following the annual state election, be assigned by the chief justice of said court for the hearing and determination of all matters arising under election petitions during the ensuing year."

The annual state election in 1916 was held on November 7. The three judges were not assigned by the chief justice of the superior court until January 27, 1917, which was the day following the granting of the order by the superior court judge to the effect that there was reasonable cause to believe that a corrupt practice had been committed by the petitioner. It does not appear that there had been any occasion for the assignment of the three judges earlier than this date, or that there had been any suggestion upon the records of the court that any corrupt practice had been committed in the commonwealth. The word "shall," as used in this statute, cannot be thought to have compulsory signification in the sense that the rights of parties and the public fail utterly of possibility of enforcement if there has been a delay in making the assignment of the judges. Important public and private interests ordinarily are not intended to be made dependent wholly upon the performance of a duty by a public officer at a given moment of time. When the word "shall" is used for fixing the time for the performance of official duty, where private rights are not directly concerned, it commonly is construed to be directory rather than mandatory. The act imposes an imperative obligation upon the chief justice to make the assignment. It indicates the time when the assignment ought to be made. But the jurisdiction of the court over the parties is not impaired if the assignment of the three judges is made in season to perform the duties established by the statute. Cheney v. Coughlin, 201 Mass. 204, 211, 212, 87 N. E. 744, where earlier cases of this and other courts are collected and reviewed. Rutter v. White, 204 Mass. 59, 90 N. E. 401; Pevey v. Aylward, 205 Mass. 102, 91 N. E. 315; Rea v. Everett, 217 Mass. 427, and cases cited at 430, 105 N. E. 618.

It follows that the respondents are not without jurisdiction on this ground to consider the election petition.

3. It is argued that the Corrupt Practices Act is unconstitutional on several grounds.

(a) The provision that three judges of the superior court "for the hearing and determination of all matters arising under election petitions during the ensuing year," "shall each year, immediately following the annual state election," "be assigned by the chief justice of said court," does not contravene chap. 2, § 1, art. 9, of the Constitution, to the effect that "all judicial officers . . . shall be nominated and appointed by the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the council."

The election petitions established by the Corrupt Practices Act are proceedings in the superior court. The act provides that all election petitions shall be brought in the superior court in the county of Suffolk, that they can be brought only by permission granted by a superior court judge after an ex parte preliminary hearing, and that they shall be entered in a separate docket by the clerk of the superior court for Suffolk county. They are to be heard and determined by three judges of the superior court. From beginning to end the matter is conducted by the judges, recorded upon the records, and the papers are kept in the custody of the clerk, of the superior court. No new court is established. No new tribunal is created. A new kind of procedure is created. In some respects the practice is regulated in considerable detail, and is made radically different from that heretofore prevailing in more familiar classes of litigation. But the jurisdiction is conferred upon an existing court.

The legislature may provide that particular causes may be tried before one or more judges of any court. The history of statutory Judges—appointment—chief judge.

changes respecting the trial of indictments for capital offenses, from the original requirement that all such trials must be before this court sitting in contest.

Jury—election

banc, to the present provision that they be had before a single judge of the superior court, is an illustration of the power of the legislature in this regard. Com. v. Phelps, 210 Mass. 78, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 567, 96 N. E. 349, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1119. The authority of the legislature to transfer jurisdiction from justices of the peace to the judges of the police court and conferring upon the latter a new name was confirmed by Wales v. Belcher, 3 Pick. 508. Brien v. Com. 5 Met. 508. It was held in Dearborn v. Ames, 8 Gray, 1, that jurisdiction over insolvency matters, previously vested in elective officers whose election was provided for by the Constitution, might be transferred to a regularly constituted court.

There are numerous instances where the hearings must be had before two or more judges. Allusion has already been made to trials of capital cases. Jurisdiction was conferred by Rev. Laws, chap. 201, § 2, upon three judges of the superior court, to hear claims against the commonwealth in excess of $1,000. Provision is made by Rev. Laws, chap. 157, § 5, for trial of certain civil causes before three judges of the superior court. The assignments of the judges to hold the court in all these cases must of necessity be made by the chief justice. It is expressly provided by Stat. 1912, chap. 649, § 8, that the three judges of the municipal court of the city of Boston, to hold that appellate division of that court thereby established, shall "be designated from time to time by the chief justice" of that court. It never has been suggested in any of the numerous cases which have been appealed from the appellate division of that court that there was anything unconstitutional in its organization. The most ancient and familiar illustration of division of work is in the supreme judicial court, where constantly certain justices are sitting as the quorum of the full court and others are holding court as single justices. It requires no argument to demonstrate that the designation of the justices to sit as the full court is a judicial duty.

The circumstance, that under the instant statute the three judges assigned are to hear all the election petitions brought during the year, is immaterial in this connection. It is a well-known practice for the assignments of judges to specific duties to be made for the period of a year.

It is an appropriate function of the office of chief justice to make such assignments as are required by this statute. It is a detail in the efficient administration of justice by courts composed of several judges that the chief justice should arrange a division of work among the different judges in such way as to promote the transaction of the business of the court in the most satisfactory manner. It is the performance of a strictly judicial duty.

No new court is established and no new judges are required by the Corrupt Practices Act. An existing court is given jurisdiction of a new kind of litigation, and provision is made for designation in the ordinary way of judges already commissioned, to perform the duties arising from the new kind of jurisdiction. The conclusion is imperative that the act is not violative of the constitutional requirement that all judges shall be appointed by the governor.

It is not necessary to inquire whether the subject of elections is so much in the nature of a political question that the legislature is unlimited in its power to establish tribunals and fix their jurisdiction to deal with election to public office, and may even treat it as an executive or administrative function and not so judicial in character as necessarily to be vested in the courts.

See in this connection, State v. Lewis, 51 Conn. 118; Williamson v. Lane, 52 Tex. 335; Lynch v. Chase, 55 Kan. 367, 371, 40 Pac. 666; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Hawkins, 44 Ohio St. 98, 109, 5 N. E. 228; Ewing v. Filley, 43 Pa. 384, 390. Nor is it necessary to consider whether the principle of Young v. Blaisdell, 138 Mass. 344, may be applicable.

(b) The right of trial by jury, as secured by the Constitution, is not denied by the act. The Declaration of Rights by art. 15 holds —suit between persons—contesting election.

sacred the right to a trial by jury,
“in all controversies concerning property and in all suits between two or more persons, except in cases in which it has heretofore been otherwise used and practised.” It was decided in Atty. Gen. v. Sullivan, 163 Mass. 446, 451, 452, 28 L.R.A. 455, 40 N. E. 843, that a public office like that of mayor is not “property,” as that word is used in the Declaration of Rights. A public office does not possess the attributes of private property. Any office created by the general court, and not established by name or tenure by the Constitution, “may be regulated, limited, enlarged, or terminated by law, as public exigency or policy may require.” Taft v. Adams, 3 Gray, 126, 130. A public office is not the private property of the person elected to it. It is a public trust, to be held and administered entirely and absolutely for the benefit and in the interest of the people. This rule prevails generally. Atty. Gen. ex rel. Rich v. Jochim, 99 Mich. 358, 367, 23 L.R.A. 399, 41 Am. St. Rep. 606, 58 N. W. 311; People ex rel. Devery v. Coler, 173 N. Y. 103, 65 N. E. 956; Prince v. Skillin, 71 Me. 361, 365, 36 Am. Rep. 325; Donahue v. Will County, 100 Ill. 94; Taylor v. Carr, 125 Tenn. 235, 141 S. W. 745, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 155; Mason v. State, 58 Ohio St. 30, 41 L.R.A. 291, 50 N. E. 6; Moore v. Strickling, 46 W. Va. 515, 518, 50 L.R.A. 279, 33 S. E. 274; State v. Douglas, 26 Wis. 428, 432, 7 Am.

Rep. 87; Hawkins v. Roberts & Son, 122 Ala. 130, 27 So. 327; Gray v. McLendon, 134 Ga. 224, 251, 252, 67 S. E. 859. Therefore, it follows that so far as concerns the question of property no jury trial need be provided in trials as to the title to a public office.

The right to vote also is in its nature political, and not property. Kinneen v. Wells, 144 Mass. 497, 59 Am. Rep. 105, 11 N. E. 916; Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. 901. See cases collected in 1 L.R.A. 111, note.

The election petition provided by the Corrupt Practices Act is not a “suit between two or more persons” in the sense in which those words are used in the Declaration of Rights. The right to contest an election in the manner and to the extent set forth in the instant statute is not, either in form or in substance, a common-law right. It is not in its essence a controversy between two parties in the sense of ordinary litigation. It is in its nature an inquiry into the purity of the election. A corrupt practice is defined by § 368 of the act as amended.<sup>1</sup>

The election petition must be confined to a request for an investigation respecting the matters enumerated in this section of the act. It must be brought by five persons, whose only qualification as petitioners is that they were voters qualified by law to vote at the election as to which complaint is made. They have no private interest to subserve. The purity and freedom of elections are fundamental in a republican form of government. Scarcely anything can be conceived of more vital to the public welfare than free and honest elections. An election petition cannot be brought without leave first obtained from a judge, who must certify after hearing that he is satisfied that there is reasonable cause not only to believe that a corrupt practice was committed with reference to the particular election, but also that upon the evidence obtainable the corrupt practice may be successfully proved. An election petition once entered in court cannot be discontinued without the consent of the attorney general. § 366. The judgment entered at the conclusion of the proceeding, if a corrupt practice is found to have been committed, is not in the nature of a remedy for a private wrong, but a vindication of an outrage upon the public and a purging of public office from a foul stain. The election is to be declared void, and the respondent ousted from office and the office declared vacant. Section 369, as amended by Stat. 1914, chap. 783, § 10. The whole proceeding, throughout, is public rather than private in character. It is in the nature of a quo warranto proceeding. The public, instead of being —criminal proceeding.

<sup>1</sup> The provisions referred to are as follows: “A candidate shall be deemed to have committed a corrupt practice who shall, either by himself or by another, violate the provisions of section three hundred and forty-eight relative to the expenditure of money in excess of the amounts therein authorized; who shall

represented at the initiatory stages by the attorney general, is in effect represented by the five voters, acting not wholly upon their own volition, but upon authorization from the court; and after the bringing of the petition the attorney general has a limited control over the proceedings. It is no more a suit between persons than is a petition for quo warranto, which in Atty. Gen. v. Sullivan, 163 Mass. 446, 451, 28 L.R.A. 455, 40 N. E. 843, was held not to be such suit. In this respect the case at bar is governed by that decision, and the petitioner has suffered no legal wrong in being denied a trial by jury. Kansas v. Ziebold, 123 U. S. 623, 673, 31 L. ed. 205, 214, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273. See also Carleton v. Rugg, 149 Mass. 550, 5 L.R.A. 193, 14 Am. St. Rep. 446, 22 N. E. 55. Since this is not a pursuit of an individual right, but essentially an inquest into a matter of public import, it does not come within the definition of suit given in Worcester Color Co. v. Henry Wood's Sons Co. 209 Mass. 105, 95 N. E. 392.

(c) The election petition is not criminal in its form. It is expressly provided that such petitions shall be governed by the rules of equity practice and procedure, so far as applicable, in the absence of special rules of court. The act makes distinct provisions in other sections for criminal prosecutions, and the election petition throughout is treated as civil in its nature. Since it is in the nature of a quo warranto, it is a civil proceeding and not a criminal prosecution. That has been decided. Atty. Gen. v. Sullivan, 163 Mass. 446, 449, 28 L.R.A. 455, 40 N. E. 843; Ames v. Kansas, 111 U. S. 449, 460, 28 L. ed. 482, 487, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 437. See also State ex rel. Brandt v. Thompson, 91 Minn. 279, 97 N. W. 887, and State ex rel. Broatch v. Moores, 56 Neb. 1, 76 N. W. 530. But it is contended that a punishment criminal and infamous in its nature is imposed by the act, and hence that it is obnoxious to art. 12 of the Declaration of Rights, which guarantees a trial by jury in such cases. It is provided by § 497 of the act as amended make a false return in any statement filed in accordance with sections three hundred and sixty-two and three hundred and sixty-three of this act; who shall, either by himself or another, pay or give, or directly or indirectly promise to a voter any gift or reward to influence his vote or to induce him to withhold his vote; who shall, either by himself or another, aid or abet a person, who is not entitled to vote, in voting or attempting to vote at a primary or election, or in voting or attempting to vote under a name other than his own, or in casting or attempting to cast more than one ballot; who shall, either by himself or another, fraudulently and wilfully obstruct and delay a voter; who shall, either by himself or another, interfere with, hinder or prevent an election officer from performing his duties; forge an indorsement upon, or alter, destroy or deface a ballot; or who shall, either by himself or another, tamper with or injure or attempt to injure any voting machine or ballot box to be used or being used in an election, or shall prevent or attempt to prevent the correct operation of such machine or box."

(Ashley v. Three Justices, 228 Mass. 63, 116 N. E. 961.)

by Stat. 1914, chap. 783, § 12, that 'whoever is found by final judgment upon an election petition . . . to have committed a corrupt practice, and shall, in accordance with such finding, forfeit the office to which he has been elected, or whoever is convicted in a criminal proceeding of violating any provision of law relating to corrupt practices in elections shall be disqualified as a voter for a period of three years following the date of his conviction, and shall be deemed ineligible to hold public office for the said period.'

It is urged that deprivation of the right to vote and to hold public office for a period of three years, as a consequence of the finding of a corrupt practice having been committed by the defendant in an election petition, is a criminal or infamous punishment.

This question must not be treated by itself alone, but must be considered in connection with the 40th amendment to the Constitution, which became operative in 1912. That amendment added a new class to those citizens from whom the right of franchise is withheld by art. 3 of the amendments, namely, 'persons temporarily or permanently disqualified by law because of corrupt practices in respect to elections.' The effect of this amendment was to confer upon the general court power to declare by general law disfranchisement as an accompaniment to the commission of corrupt practices in elections. It did not confine or limit its powers in this respect to the establishment of the fact of corrupt practice by criminal rather than by civil proceedings. It conferred by implication the power in broad terms. It gave ample discretion to the legislature as to the means to be employed for the ascertainment of the fact, by any constitutional means, of a corrupt practice having been committed. It authorized the legislature to attach disfranchisement to one who had been found by any constitutional means, to have violated his public duty by corrupt practices. It places disfranchisement for corrupt practices in connection with elections upon the same footing as disfranchisement because of being a pauper or under guardianship. Manifestly, a trial by jury is not required to determine whether one shall be a pauper or placed under guardianship, simply because deprivation of the right to vote follows as a result of that status. See Re Dowdell, 169 Mass. 387, 61 Am. St. Rep. 290, 47 N. E. 1033; Sporza v. German Sav. Bank, 192 N. Y. 8, 84 N. E. 406. Pauperism and guardianship as matter of common knowledge have been generally established by proceedings in which there is no trial by jury. The circumstance that the 40th amendment does not automatically attach disqualification from voting to all persons found to have committed corrupt practices, but leaves that matter to be settled from time to time by general law, gives no additional constitutional rights to the individual. He cannot demand on that account, as a constitutional right, that this matter be settled by a jury when he is not otherwise entitled to it. Therefore, it is needless to consider the bearing in this connection of United States v. Waddell, 112 U. S. 76, 28 L. ed. 673, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 35; Ex parte Wilson, 114 U. S. 417, 29 L. ed. 89, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 935, 4 Am. Crim. Rep. 283, and People ex rel. Akin v. Kipley, 171 Ill. 44, 72, 41 L.R.A. 775, 49 N. E. 229, relied on by the petitioner, or to discuss whether deprivation of the right to vote and to hold office, as an isolated factor, without the imposition of fine or imprisonment, constitutes infamous punishment.

Of course the legislature cannot, by a mere change of name or of form, convert that which is in its nature a prosecution for a crime into a civil proceeding, and thus deprive parties of their right to a trial by jury. The Constitution cannot thus be trifled with. Stockbridge v. Mixer, 215 Mass. 415, 102 N. E. 646.

Venue—election contest—power of legislature.

But there is nothing to prevent the legislature from enlarging proceedings and remedies in their nature civil, so as to include new matters of the same general character. Brown's Case, 173 Mass. 498, 53 N. E. 998; Young v. Blaisdell, 138 Mass. 344; Renado v. Lummus, 205 Mass. 155, 158, 91 N. E. 144. In view of the principles declared in Atty. Gen. v. Sullivan, 163 Mass. 446, and Ames v. Kansas, 111 U. S. 449, 28 L. ed. 482, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 437, and in other cases before cited, it is unnecessary to examine State ex rel. Schumacher v. Markham, 160 Wis. 431, 152 N. W. 161, s. c. 162 Wis. 55, 155 N. W. 917, and kindred decisions, or to determine whether, in the light of differing constitutional provisions, they are inconsistent with the conclusion here reached.

(d) Nothing contrary to the Constitution is perceived in the further provision that one found to have committed corrupt practices shall be deemed ineligible to hold public office. The privilege of voting is so closely connected with the right to hold office that power to deprive of the former may well include the latter. See opinion of Justices, 7 Mass. 523; State ex rel. Perine v. Van Beek, 87 Iowa, 569, 19 L.R.A. 622, 43 Am. St. Rep. 397, 54 N. W. 525; State ex rel. Off v. Smith, 14 Wis. 497. Moreover, the power of the legislature to determine the qualifications required of those elected to fill municipal offices is ample, and need not be uniform throughout the commonwealth. Graham v. Roberts, 200 Mass. 152, 154, 155, 85 N. E. 1009; Cole v. Tucker, 164 Mass. 486, 29 L.R.A. 668, 41 N. E. 681. It follows that the act imposes no unconstitutional limitations upon the right to vote or to hold office.

(e) It is not open to serious question that the acts described in the statute as corrupt practices are well within the scope of those words as used in the 40th amendment.

(f) The provision that election petitions shall be entered in the superior court in Suffolk county is not violative of any constitutional provision. The general court is given full power and authority by chap. 1, § 1, art. 3, of the Constitution, "to erect and constitute judicatories and courts of record or other courts."

This ample grant includes by necessary implication power to fix the territorial limits within which such courts shall exercise jurisdiction and the places in which they shall <sup>—right to justice.</sup> be held. Having created by the instant statute a new kind of civil litigation, there is no basis in the Constitution for limiting the right of the legislature to say that such causes shall be entered in Suffolk county, where the superior court always is in session. The right of the petitioner "to obtain right and justice freely," as guaranteed by art. 11 of the Declaration of Rights, is not impaired thereby. The superior court being a court of general jurisdiction, there is nothing to prevent the respondents, in the exercise of their discretion, from hearing election petitions where the public interests require.

(g) It follows from what has been said, without further discussion, that there is nothing in the challenged portions of the act which is in conflict with art. 9 of the Declaration of Rights to the effect that "all elections ought to be free; and all the inhabitants of this commonwealth, having such qualifications as they shall establish by their frame of government, have an equal right to elect officers, and to be elected, for public employments." The whole purpose of the act is to promote and insure the freedom of elections by discouraging the improper influence of elections and the pollution of the ballot through corrupt practices. <sup>Election—qualification—corrupt practices.</sup>

(h) The contention that the petitioner is denied the equal protection of the laws is untenable. It is elementary that the general court may make reasonable classifications in selecting the subjects of legislation and determining what shall be included within designated inhibitions. Such classification does not violate the constitutional requirement for equal protection of the laws, unless "plainly and grossly oppressive and unequal, or contrary to common right." Oliver v. Washington Mills, 11 Allen, 268, 279. A classification, general in its nature, will not be held to be unequal when there appears to be reasonable ground for it, but only when it seems to be simply arbitrary, based upon no sound distinction, and not founded upon any natural difference or rational discrimination. See Com. v. Libbey, 216 Mass. 356, 358, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 379, 103 N. E. 923, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 659; Young v. Duncan, 218 Mass. 346, 353, 106 N. E. 1; Bogni v. Perotti, 224 Mass. 152, 157, L.R.A. 1916F, 831, 112 N. E. 853; Tax Comr. v. Putnam (Trefry v. Putnam) 227 Mass. 522, L.R.A. 1917F, 806, 116 N. E. 904, and cases cited in each of these decisions. It is impossible, in the nature of things, to remove from office as a consequence of corrupt practices any except those who have been elected. Disfranchisement and ineligibility to hold office attach equally to everybody convicted of the violation of the criminal provisions of the act. The circumstance that no like civil proceeding is provided against defeated candidates for public office does not render the act unequal in a constitutional sense. The successful perpetration of a wrong ordinarily is punished in law by a more severe penalty than a thwarted attempt to commit the same wrong. This is true even in prosecutions for crimes, although the moral turpitude may be as great in one case as in the other.

Constitutional law—equal protection—law applicable only to successful candidate.

(i) There is no constitutional inequality in the provision that election petitions shall be brought and may be heard in Suffolk county, while prosecutions for criminal violation of the Election Laws must be <sup>—venue of different proceedings.</sup> in the county where the crime is alleged to have been committed. Misdemeanors may be tried and finally disposed of in local courts, while felonies of a certain magnitude can be disposed of finally only at the county seat, even upon plea of guilty. Similar differences as to places of trial are found between the probate courts, the land court, the superior court, and the supreme judicial court sitting at nisi prius.

(j) The limitation in § 371 of the act as amended by Stat. 1914, chap. 783, § 11, excepting from its operations elections of town officers in towns of less than 10,000 inhabitants, does not impair the constitutional validity of the act. The New England town meeting system of elections and government in comparatively small communities is proverbial as one of the finest illustrations of practical democracy. The intimate knowledge that each voter in such comparatively small communities is likely to possess, touching the honesty and general qualifications of his fellows and of all candidates for <sup>—exemption of town officers.</sup> election to public office well may have been regarded as the best security against political corruption. The difference in this respect between large and small municipalities furnishes a manifestly reasonable line of demarcation. The precise point at which that line is drawn in the present instance clearly is not irrational. Cole v. Tucker, 164 Mass. 486, 29 L.R.A. 668, 41 N. E. 681; Opinion of Justices, 138 Mass. 601, 603; Cunningham v. Cambridge, 222 Mass. 574, 577, 111 N. E. 409, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 1100; Brown's Case, 173 Mass. 498, 53 N. E. 998; Hayes v. Missouri, 120 U. S. 68, 30 L. ed. 578, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350; Mallett v. North Carolina, 181 U. S. 589, 45 L. ed. 1015, 21 Sup.

Ct. Rep. 730, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 241; Ocampo v. United States, 234 U. S. 91, 58 L. ed. 1231, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 712.

(k) The act is not in derogation of the constitutional powers of the supreme judicial court. It is not necessary to discuss this subject at large. This court is recognized as the court of highest final decision by § 10 (d) of said chap. 783. It is not necessary to determine the extent or nature of the powers of this court to correct errors of law committed by the judges of the superior court, if in any case there should be an unreasonable refusal constitutional power—

Courts—
supreme court.

to report a question to this court. This conclusion does not shake in any degree what was said by Chief Justice Shaw in Com. v. Anthes, 5 Gray, 185, 232-236, as to the basis in the Constitution for the supreme judicial court and the scope of its general powers. The strength of that discussion and reasoning stands unimpaired.

(l) The act is not in conflict with any provision of the Federal Constitution.

The trial by jury secured by the 7th Amendment to the Federal Constitution relates only to the courts of the United States. Bothwell v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 215 Mass. 467, and cases cited at page 471, L.R.A.1917F, 167, 102 N. E. 665, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 275; Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90, 23 L. ed. 678.

(m) Trial by jury is not essential to the due process of law secured by the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution.

Montana Co. v. St. Louis Min. & Mill. Co. 152 U. S. 160, 171, 38 L. ed. 398, 400, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 506; Re Dowdell, 169 Mass. 387, 61 Am. St. Rep. 290, 47 N. E. 1033. The instant act purports to afford to all defendants in election petitions a full and fair trial before impartial judges according to fixed laws, applicable alike to all persons similarly situated. This is a sufficient compliance with the 14th Amendment. Marchant v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 153 U. S. 380, 38 L. ed. 751, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 894.

(n) The right to hold an elective public office is not a property right within the meaning of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution. If the petitioner should be deposed from the office of mayor by act of the legislature, or by any judicial proceeding in the courts founded on such act, no property right secured by that amendment would be invaded. That was settled after great deliberation, with ample review of the authorities and a full discussion of fundamental principles, in Taylor v. Beckham, 178 U. S. 548, 575, 577, 44 L. ed. 1187, 1199, 1200, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 890; 1009; Atty. Gen. v. Tillinghast, 203 Mass. 539, 545, 89 N. E. 1058, 17 Ann. Cas. 449.

Constitutional law—due process
—office as property.

(o) It was said by Chief Justice Field in Stone v. Smith, 159 Mass. 413, 34 N. E. 521: "It is settled that the right to vote is not one of the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States within the meaning of art. 14 of the Amendments to the Constitution of the United States. United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. ed. 588; United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 23 L. ed. 563; Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U. S. 651, 28 L. ed. 274, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152; Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. 162, 22 L. ed. 627." It follows that the provisions of the present act as to deprivation of the right to vote and to hold office are not in contravention of the United States Constitution. Guinn v. United States, 238 U. S. 347, 362, 363, 59 L. ed. 1340, 1346, 1347, L.R.A. 1916A, 1124, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 926; Myers v. Anderson, 238 U. S. 368, 59 L. ed. 1349, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 932.

(p) It was held in Dinan v. Swig, 223 Mass. 516, 112 N. E. 91, that so much of Stat. 1914, chap. 783, § 10, as undertakes to impose upon the courts the duty of inquiry into corrupt practices of members of the general court, was contrary to chap. 1, § 3, art. 10 (and see chap. 1, § 2, art. 4), of the Constitution, which makes each branch of the general court the final judge of the returns, elections, and qualifications of its own members. It is a well settled principle of constitutional law that one part of a statute may be contrary to the Constitution, while the rest may stand as valid, provided the two parts are distinct and in their nature separable the one from the other, and are not so interwoven and mutually dependent as to require the belief that the legislature would not have enacted the one without the other.

(Ashley v. Three Justices, 228 Mass. 63, 116 N. E. 961.)

Statute—invalid in part—validity of remainder.

Warren v. Charlestown, 2 Gray, 84, 98, 99; Com. v.

Petranich, 183 Mass. 217, 220, 66 N. E. 807; Berkshire County v. Cande, 222 Mass. 87, 90, 91, 109 N. E. 838; Salisbury Land & Improv. Co. v. Com. 215 Mass. 371, 380, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1196, 102 N. E. 619; Berea College v. Kentucky, 211 U. S. 45, 55, 53 L. ed. 81, 85, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 33; International Textbook Co. v. Pigg, 217 U. S. 91, 113, 54 L. ed. 678, 688, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 493, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 481, 18 Ann. Cas. 1103. It seems plain that the provisions as to corrupt practices of members of the general court are quite distinct and separable from the rest of the act, and have no necessary and inherent connection with its other parts. The section in question dealt with that matter differently from the way in which the act dealt with other corrupt practices. The legislature evidently recognized that they constituted two different classes of officers under the Constitution, and must be treated differently. The failure of the effort to include members of the legislature has little connection with the rest of the statute, which can stand precisely as enacted in its application to a large number of highly important offices. A similar decision upon this point was made in Diehl v. Totten, 32 N. D. 131, 155 N. W. 74, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 884.

It is manifest that the election petition against the petitioner does not raise questions as to the right to free speech and freedom of the press. Although he has referred to these questions, he has not argued them at any length, and doubtless they are not open to him. McGlue v. Essex County, 225 Mass. 59, and cases collected at page 60, 113 N. E. 742; Rail & River Coal Co. v. Yapple, 236 U. S. 338, 349, 59 L. ed. 607, 615, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 359. It is, therefore, unnecessary to consider them. See Adams v. Lanadon, 18 Idaho, 483, 110 Pac. 280; State v. Pierce, 163 Wis. 615, 158 N. W. 696; Ex parte Harrison, 212 Mo. 83, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 950, 126 Am. St. Rep. 557, 110 S. W. 709, 15 Ann. Cas. 1.

4. It has been assumed in favor of the petitioner in the discussion thus far, but without examining critically the matter of remedy, that prohibition would be open to him. But it is plain that the fourth general point urged by him—namely, that, the subpoena having been made returnable fifteen instead of fourteen days after the filing of the petition, he cannot be held to answer the election petition—cannot properly be considered on a petition for a writ of prohibition. The principles which govern the issuance of that extraordinary writ are well settled. It will not be granted if the court or tribunal against which it is sought has jurisdiction of the cause or matter which it proposes to adjudicate. Prohibition lies only to restrain a clear excess of jurisdiction about to be committed against one who has not submitted thereto, where there is no other adequate remedy. It does not issue to correct or restrict errors or irregularities of a tribunal which is acting within its jurisdiction, although proceeding improperly in the exercise of that jurisdiction. It can be invoked to

Prohibition—
when intervening with jurisdiction.

prevent a court from exercising a jurisdiction which it does not possess. It will not be granted to remedy the errors of a judicial tribunal acting within its jurisdiction, but lies only to restrain such tribunal from acting outside its jurisdiction. Washburn v. Phillips, 2 Met. 296, 298, 299; Connecticut River R. Co. v. Franklin County, 127 Mass. 50, 34 Am. Rep. 338; Hyde Park v. Wiggin, 157 Mass. 94, 99, 31 N. E. 693; Tehan v. Justices of Municipal Ct. 191 Mass. 92, 77 N. E. 313; Welch v. Fox, 205 Mass. 113, 91 N. E. 145; Somerville v. Justices of Police Ct. 220 Mass. 393, 396, 107 N. E. 937; Re Oklahoma, 220 U. S. 191, 208, 55 L. ed. 431, 435, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426. It has been held in the application of these principles that, where a tribunal is acting under an unconstitutional statute, it may thus be restrained. Connecticut River R. Co. v. Franklin County, 127 Mass. 50, 34 Am. Rep. 338. It already has been pointed out that the election petition here complained of is pending before a legally constituted court, which has jurisdiction over the subject-matter. The petitioner has appeared specially in answer to the election petition and has pleaded specially the matter of which he here complains. But he brought his present petition within a few days after filing that special appearance and plea, without waiting for the superior court to pass upon its merits. It appears from the record that immediately upon the filing of the present petition all proceedings upon the election petition were suspended. The matters set out in the special plea of the petitioner in the election petition are clearly within the jurisdiction of that court. It is provided by the Corrupt Practices Act, § 369, as amended by Stat. 1914, chap. 783, § 10 (d), that "upon an election petition the decision of the three justices of the superior court assigned as aforesaid, or of a majority of them, shall be final and conclusive upon all matters in controversy, whether interlocutory or final, and whether in matters of fact or matters of law. But the said justices, or a majority of them, may in their discretion, after a finding of facts, either of their own motion or at the request of either party, report the case to the supreme judicial court for determination by the full court." Without passing upon the scope or signification of these provisions, it is not open to question that jurisdiction of this matter is vested in the superior court. There is no suggestion that the petitioner's special plea will not be considered on its merits by the superior court and decided according to its view of the law. It is an indubitable result of well-settled principles that this point is not open to the petitioner in this proceeding. Petition dismissed.

Dismissed by the Supreme Court of the United States, November 10, 1919. (U. S. Adv. Ops. 1919-20, p. 63) 250 U. S. 652, 68 L. ed. 1190, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 53.

ANNOTATION.

Right to jury trial in proceeding for removal of public officer.

There seems to have been no decision, since the preparation of the note in 3 A.L.R. 282, with respect to the right to a jury trial in a proceeding to remove a public officer. The decision in the reported case (ASHLEY v. WAIT) that there is no right to a trial by jury in such a proceeding has, since the publication of that note, become final by the dismissal of proceedings for review. In Oklahoma, it would seem from the recent case of Phillips v. State (1919) 75 Okla. 46, 181 Pac. 713, that proceedings for the removal of a public officer may be initiated by an accusation by the grand jury, and that a jury trial is had thereon. No question as to the right to a jury was, however, determined in that case. W. A. S.

COPPER PROCESS COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
CHICAGO BONDING & INSURANCE COMPANY.

United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Third Circuit — January 5, 1920.

(262 Fed. 66.)

Fraud — denial of advances — fraud on bonding company.

1. One having a contract for purchase of pig iron from a manufacturer is guilty of fraud when, in giving personal and financial aid to the manufacturer in securing a bond against breach of the contract, it assures the bonding company that it has made no advances to the manufacturer under the contract, when in fact it has permitted a large amount of its funds to be placed to the credit of the manufacturer in a bank, which fact the bank uses to aid in establishing its reliability.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1485.]

Appeal — wrong conception of case by trial judge.

2. When a trial judge is wrong in his conception of the issues, or of the principles of law applicable to them, his errors are likely to be many and also to be prejudicial.

Evidence — proof of fraud.

3. When fraud is alleged great latitude of proof is allowed, and every fact or circumstance from which a legal inference of fraud may be drawn is admissible.

[See 12 R. C. L. 429.]

Fraud — how committed.

4. Fraud may be committed by the suppression of truth as well as by the suggestion of falsehood.

[See 12 R. C. L. 305.]

— concealment.

5. As a general rule, to constitute fraud by concealment or suppression of truth there must be something more than mere silence or a mere failure to disclose known facts.

[See 12 R. C. L. 306.]

Evidence — to prove fraud — agreement for advances.

6. Upon the question of fraud by a purchaser from a manufacturer, in denying advances under the contract to a bonding company from which it was aiding the manufacturer to secure bonds to insure performance of the contract, an agreement between purchaser and manufacturer, under which the former had placed in bank to the credit of the latter a large amount of its own funds, is admissible in evidence.

Trial — order of proof — proof of fraud.

7. Upon the question of fraud on the part of a purchaser from a manufacturer in aiding the latter in defrauding a bonding company into issuing bonds to secure performance of the contract, evidence of misrepresentations by the manufacturer without the knowledge of the purchaser is admissible, before showing the purchaser's connivance in the fraud.

Evidence — fraud — subsequent acts of parties.

8. To show the relation between a purchaser and manufacturer at the time they are alleged to have defrauded a bonding company into executing a bond to secure performance of the contract by the manufacturer, evidence is admissible of subsequent acts between purchaser and manufacturer.

Appeal — harmless error — effect.

9. A judgment will not be disturbed for the erroneous admission of evidence which is harmless.

[See 2 R. C. L. 247.]

ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania (Thompson, J.) to review a judgment in favor of defendant in consolidated actions brought to recover on five certain bonds given by defendant to plaintiff to secure performance of five certain contracts for the delivery of pig iron. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Argued before Buffington and Woolley, Circuit Judges, and Morris, District Judge.

Messrs. William Findlay Brown and Francis Shunk Brown, for plaintiff in error:

If there is nothing in the circumstances to indicate that the surety is being misled or deceived, or is ignorant of facts materially affecting the risk, the creditor is not bound to seek the surety and inform him of the facts, but he may assume that the surety has obtained information for his guidance from other sources, or that he has chosen to assume the risks of the undertaking, whatever they may be.

Pingrey, Suretyship, 2d ed. §§ 141, 142; Young v. American Bonding Co. 228 Pa. 373, 77 Atl. 623; Loughney v. Huntsman Constr. Co. 252 Pa. 131, 97 Atl. 179; Fels v. Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co. 48 Pa. Super. Ct. 27; Whitcomb v. Shultz, 138 C. C. A. 510, 223 Fed. 269; Hamilton v. Watson, 12 Clark & F. 109, 8 Eng. Reprint, 1339; Pidcock v. Bishop, 3 Barn. & C. 605, 107 Eng. Reprint, 857, 5 Dowl. & R. 505, 3 L. J. K. B. 109, 27 Revised Rep. 430; North British Ins. Co. v. Lloyd, 10 Exch. 523, 156 Eng. Reprint, 545, 3 C. L. R. 264, 24 L. J. Exch. N. S. 14, 1 Jur. N. S. 45; Stone v. Compton, 5 Bing. N. C. 142, 132 Eng. Reprint, 1059, 6 Scott, 846; Barclay v. Deckerhoof, 151 Pa. 374, 24 Atl. 1067; National Surety Co. v. Lincoln County, 151 C. C. A. 555, 238 Fed. 705; Atlantic Trust & D. Co. v. Laurinberg, 90 C. C. A. 274, 163 Fed. 690; Baglin v. Title Guaranty & S. Co. 16 Fed. 356, affirmed in 102 C. C. A. 182, 178 Fed. 682; United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. United States, 102 C. C. A. 192, 178 Fed. 692; Pittsburg-Buffalo Co. v. American Fidelity Co. 135 C. C. A. 488, 219 Fed. 818; American Bonding Co. v. United States, 147 C. C. A. 300, 233 Fed. 364; United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Golden Pressed Brick Co. (United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. United States) 191 U. S. 416, 48 L. ed. 242, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 142; Young v. American Bonding Co. 228 Pa. 373, 77 Atl. 623.

Fraud practised by the principal alone upon the surety will not affect the surety's liability, as no duty is imposed upon the obligee to seek out the surety and ascertain whether it has been misled.

32 Cyc. 64; Pingrey, Suretyship, § 126; Rothermal v. Hughes, 134 Pa. 510, 19 Atl. 677; Stearns, Suretyship, § 108; Wallace v. Wilder, 13 Fed. 707; Evans v. Kister, 35 C. C. A. 28, 92 Fed. 828; Mason Lumber Co. v. Buchtel, 101 U. S. 638, 25 L. ed. 1072; Johnston v. Patterson, 114 Pa. 398, 6 Atl. 746; Kulp v. Brant, 162 Pa. 222, 29 Atl. 729.

Messrs. Layton M. Schoch and Harry S. Ambler, Jr., for defendant in error.

Woolley, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

These writs of error bring here for review five judgments of the district court, entered on verdict in a proceeding wherein five actions were consolidated and tried as one. The Copper Process Company was plaintiff; the Chicago Bonding & Insurance Company was defendant. The actions were on bonds of the defendant company, each for $52,400, given the plaintiff company to assure performance by the Bird Coal & Iron Company of its undertakings in the same number of contracts between it and the copper company, for the sale and delivery of pig iron. The iron company defaulted on all five contracts. The copper company sued the bonding company on all its corresponding bonds; verdicts were rendered and judgments entered for the bonding company, whereupon the copper company sued out these writs of error.

The record is a large one; the specifications of error are fifty-nine in number. Of these, twelve are directed to the judge's charge; the remaining forty-seven concern rulings on the admission and exclusion of testimony. Whether any particular ruling or instruction involved error, and if so, whether such error was prejudicial or harmless, it is impossible to determine by considering each ruling or instruction separately and alone. It is only possible after reading the whole record in order to ascertain the real issues and to find the theory on which the trial judge tried them. Experience shows that when a trial judge is wrong in his conception of the issues, or of the principles of law applicable to them, his errors are likely to be many and also to be prejudicial; but if, on the other hand, the trial judge has properly grasped the issues, and has tried them under applicable law, his errors are likely to be few and harmless.

On this theory of review, we shall follow the case in outline as pleaded and tried.

The copper company's statements of claim filed in the five actions are identical, except as the contracts for whose performance the several bonds were given called for pig iron deliveries in different months of the year 1917, beginning with the month of June and ending with the month of October. In each statement of claim it appears that the copper company declared on the indemnity bond of the iron company, as principal, and the bonding company, as surety, for $52,400, alleging, first, the execution of the bond, and, second, its breach by the iron company, making the bond, by reference, a part of the pleading. The bond assures the performance of the contract in customary terms, and by reference embodies the contract. The contract provides for the purchase by the copper company and sale by the iron company of 4,000 tons of Talladega pig iron of a given analysis during a given month, at the price of $13.10 per ton, delivered f. o. b., Talladega, Alabama, payments to be made on a given date.

The contracts bear date March 13, 1917; the bonds April 3, 1917.

Turning to the record, it appears that at the trial the copper company, to support the averments of its pleadings, formally and briefly proved the execution of the bonds, the breach of the contracts by the iron company, and the resultant damages, and rested on the liability of the bonding company for indemnity.

The copper company has assigned but one error in the trial of its case in chief. This relates to a ruling of the trial judge in allowing the bonding company to lay grounds for contradiction. We dispose of this assignment here as involving no error.

So far, there was nothing in the case out of the ordinary. The trouble began with the bonding company's defense, and its defense began with its pleadings.

The defense of the bonding company, as pleaded, was, in the main, twofold:

First. That the contracts appended to the bonds, when sued on, were not the contracts appended to and covered by the bonds when issued; and that, in consequence, the contracts of indemnity sued on are not the contracts of indemnity which it executed and delivered.

Second. That it was induced to enter into the bonds by fraud of the iron company, with the knowledge and connivance of the copper company.

These defenses, as pleaded, were, in a word, non est factum and fraud.

To sustain the first defense, the bonding company introduced evidence tending to show that the bonds of indemnity into which it entered with the copper company did not cover contracts between the copper company and the iron company for the purchase and sale monthly, of 4,000 tons of pig iron, at $13.10 a ton, as declared by the copper company in its pleadings; but covered, on the contrary, other contracts purported to have been entered into by the copper company and iron company, for the purchase and sale, monthly, of 2,000 tons of pig iron at $26.20 a ton; that copies of the supposed contracts between the two companies, containing the items last given, were certified to the bonding company by the iron company, and were appended to the bonds when they were executed and delivered to the copper company; that between the time of their delivery and the bringing of these suits, the copies of the contracts so appended were removed from the bonds and copies of the real contracts substituted for them, during all of which time the bonds and accompanying copies of contracts were in the possession and control of the copper company. By this evidence, the bonding company offered to support its charge that there was a substitution of contracts, and that the substitution was the act of the copper company. This evidence was, of course, controverted. On this issue of substitution there was ample evidence, properly admitted under the pleadings, for a finding by the jury in favor of the bonding company. As the jury's verdict for the bonding company was based either on this issue of substituted contracts or on the next issue of fraud, the copper company is concluded by the verdict on this issue.

That the bonding company was induced to enter into its indemnifying undertakings by fraud and gross misrepresentations of the iron company is not seriously disputed by the copper company. Its position is that it was not a party to the fraud and was ignorant of the misrepresentations. In its case in chief, the bonding company, in order to sustain its defense of fraud by the iron company and connivance by the copper company, first introduced testimony of the iron company's fraud and misrepresentations, to which many of the copper company's exceptions were noted and errors assigned, and then introduced testimony to show the relation of the copper company to the iron company by the acts of their officers and to show also the part which the copper company, through its officers, took in conniving at the fraud of the iron company. Obviously, no exception can be taken to this order of establishing connivance by one party in the fraud of another.

The substance of this testimony was that the copper company was not at any time concerned in any business other than its transactions with the iron company; and that the iron company had as its one asset an interest in an option or arrangement with Ladenburg, Thalman & Company of New York, for the operation of a blast furnace at Talladega, Alabama, which had long been out of use. When the iron company was practically without funds or tangible assets, it entered into the five contracts with the copper company on March 13, 1917, whereby it undertook to sell and deliver to the copper company, monthly, for a period of five months, 4,000 tons of pig iron at $13.10 a ton; a price, in the Birmingham district, little, if any, above cost of production. With these contracts made, the two companies entered into another contract, referred to at the trial as the "underlying agreement," or the "Y" agreement, reciting the five contracts just mentioned, and providing, in consideration thereof, for an advance or payment by the copper company to the iron company of the sum of $50,000, and a further sum of $25,000, both sums to be placed to the credit of the iron company in the Commercial Trust Company at Philadelphia; the latter sum, however, to be drawn on by the iron company by voucher checks, showing that the money was to be paid for certain purposes specified in the agreement, the one pertinent to this case being "Premium on surety bond, believed to be $2,700." This agreement, the one pertinent to this the iron company should be prevented by fire, strikes, riot, mob, or earthquake from making deliveries on the 20,000 tons of pig iron covered by the five contracts referred to, then the iron company would sell and deliver to the copper company its full production of pig iron of whatever grade and quality, at a price of $7.50 per ton below the market price. The curious feature of this agreement is that nowhere in it is there provision for repayment or return to the copper company of the moneys it agreed to advance to the iron company.

This agreement was signed sometime in March, 1917, and in part performance the copper company placed $75,000 in bank to the credit of the iron company.

With these contracts made and outstanding, the iron company, in carrying out its undertaking to give the copper company bonds assuring the performance of its sales contracts, applied to the bonding company for five bonds of $52,400 each. To induce the bonding company to enter into these bonds, an officer of the iron company supplied the bonding company with certified copies of what purported to be its pig iron contracts with the copper company, which showed that the sale and delivery covered, not 4,000 tons a month at the suspiciously low price of $13.10 a ton, as actually called for by the contracts, but 2,000 tons a month at what was then about the market price of $26.20 a ton. On this representation, Evans, an agent of the bonding company, went to Philadelphia and met one Wilson, an insurance broker, through whom the iron company was negotiating for bonds. Evans was shown what purported to be an engineer's report of the property, and an inventory and a financial statement of the iron company. He was informed that the iron company had $75,000 to its credit in the Commercial Trust Company (verified by letter from the depository), which was represented as money arising from the sale of stock; owned 2,511.5 acres of ore land; and possessed total assets of $1,360,650. In addition to statements previously made by the iron company in its application for bonds, and by Wilson, the insurance broker, that no advance of any character had been made the iron company by the copper company under the contracts, an officer of the bonding company asked the secretary of the copper company, prior to the delivery of the bonds, whether his company had made any advance payments against iron deliveries under these contracts, to which the secretary replied, "Absolutely not."

To aid the iron company in carrying out its undertaking in the "Y" agreement, to obtain indemnity bonds for the protection of the copper company on the sales contracts, for which the copper company had provided $2,700, the president and secretary of the copper company went to the bank with Wilson, who had received from the iron company a check drawn to his order for $6,000. There the president of the copper company indorsed Wilson's $6,000 check, and got from the bank a draft for a like sum. With the bonds prepared for signature, and with this $6,000 draft, the secretary of the copper company accompanied Wilson to Detroit. On arriving in that city, the secretary had the draft cashed at a local bank, and turned the whole $6,000 over to Wilson. What Wilson did with it does not appear. This large sum of money was drawn and disbursed supposedly for the payment of premiums on the bonds, when, in fact, the aggregate amount of all premiums was but $655. Only this sum reached the bonding company. After the money had been paid Wilson, Evans, an agent of the bonding company at its Detroit office, delivered the bonds to the secretary of the copper company, in the possession of which concern they remained until suit. The bonds were executed on or about April 3.

When the transactions were reported to its home office on or about May 1, 1917, the bonding company immediately made disclaimer, and also made formal tender of the premiums paid.

The iron company breached its first contract in June; in fact, it delivered no iron under any of the five contracts. Testimony was offered and admitted of acts and conduct of officers of the copper company, following the transactions concluded by the bonding company's disclaimer and the iron company's breaches, tending to show the close relationship of the two companies and their control by the same officers. The evidence was, substantially, that the president of the copper company assumed control of the funds of the iron company on its failure to perform its sales contracts; stopped payment on checks at his will; controlled its directorate by his nominees; and in July and August caused it to vote for his protection a bond issue of $500,000, and notes to the amount of $750,000.

It was in the admission of evidence tending to establish these facts that most of the court's rulings now assigned as error were made. While there is a great number of assignments of error, the errors assigned may fairly be grouped, as was done in the plaintiff's brief, according to the subject-matter to which they relate, as follows:

(1) Exception to the so-called "underlying agreement," admission of evidence relating thereto, and charge to the jury as to the effect thereof.

(2) Exceptions to admission of evidence of misrepresentations made to the bonding company by officers and agents of the iron company, without the copper company's knowledge, and charge to the jury as to the effect thereof.

(3) Exceptions to admission of evidence of subsequent transactions between the copper company and the iron company, and charge to the jury as to the effect thereof.

The record shows that the judge had a thorough grasp of the case; that he carefully kept in mind throughout the trial the precise issues made by the pleadings; and that in his rulings he was liberal in admitting testimony to sustain them. These issues and the manner in which they should be tried are nowhere better stated than by counsel for the copper company himself, when addressing the judge on an objection to an offer of testimony. He said: "The questions that arise in this case are these: First, as I understand it, were the bonds executed? Second, was there any fraud in the procurement of the bonds? Third, has there been any variation of the terms of the contract since the bonds were executed, to release the surety? These are the three questions involved in this case, and any evidence that directly or indirectly bears on that is entirely appropriate."

This statement is in accord with the practice everywhere that, when fraud is alleged, <sup>Evidence—proof of fraud.</sup> great latitude of proof is allowed, and every fact or circumstance from which a legal inference of fraud may be drawn is admissible. Any such fact, no matter how insignificant, may be shown, provided it bears at all on the point in issue. Accordingly, it is proper to prove a party's participation in the fraud by showing what was said and done leading up to the transaction. (DeRuiter v. DeRuiter, 28 Ind. App. 9, (91 Am. St. Rep. 107, 62 N. E. 100) what was said and done at the time the fraud was committed (Crump v. United States Min. Co. 7 Gratt. 352, 56 Am. Dec. 116, 3 Mor. Min. Rep. 454), and, within certain limits, what was said and done after the commission of the fraud (Salmon v. Richardson, 30 Conn. 360, 79 Am. Dec. 255; 12 R. C. L. 429, 430, and cases).

It is of the manner in which the trial judge applied these familiar principles of law in his rulings that the copper company complains. Its most serious complaint relates to the admission in evidence of the "Y" agreement, which, it asserts, was error, first, because the agreement had no relation to the fraud and misrepresentations of the iron company; and, second, because no duty rested on the copper company voluntarily to disclose its existence or its provisions to the bonding company. This contention—which covers the first group of assignments of error—raises the question whether the copper company was guilty of fraud by suppressing facts which the bonding company was entitled to know.

Fraud may be committed by the suppression of truth as well as by the suggestion of falsehood. 12 R. C. L. 305, and cases.

But the law distinguishes between passive concealment and active concealment, the distinction being that in active concealment there is implied a purpose or design. As a general rule, to constitute fraud by concealment or suppression of the truth, there must be something more than mere silence, or a mere failure to disclose known facts. There must be some occasion or some circumstance which imposes on one person the legal duty to speak, in order that another dealing with him may be placed on an equal footing. Then a failure to state a material fact is equivalent to concealment of the fact, and amounts to fraud equally with an affirmative falsehood. Pickering v. Day, 3 Houst. (Del.) 474, 95 Am. Dec. 291; 12 R. C. L. 305-308, and cases.

We are not prepared to say—assuming the relations of the two companies otherwise free from fraud—that, if the copper company had allowed the iron company to negotiate alone for the bonds, it would have been its duty to seek out the bonding company and inform it of the “Y” agreement. But that was not what happened. The copper company was rendering personal as well as financial aid to the iron company in securing the bonds which it exacted for its own benefit. Its officer came into direct communication with an officer of the bonding company, and discussed the bonds. In that discussion, the bonding company was endeavoring to ascertain what risks it would incur on entering into the proposed indemnifying obligations. The bonding company, speaking through an officer, asked the copper company, addressing its secretary, whether any advances had been made against the contracts it was about to assure. To that question, the copper company, through its secretary, responded: “Absolutely not.” If the secretary made that reply (which he denied), he made it with full knowledge of the “Y” agreement.

What bearing had the “Y” agreement on the bonding company’s indemnity risks? That agreement provided for an advance by the copper company to the iron company of $75,000. Just the character of the agreement it is difficult to define—whether an advance against contract deliveries of pig iron, an out-and-out loan of money, or a partnership contribution; at any event, the copper company paid the iron company $75,000, and recited as a “consideration” for this payment the five sales contracts in question.

These facts appearing in the “Y” agreement itself, connected with the unusual feature that nowhere in it was there provision for the repayment or return of the money so advanced, show several things. Linking the sales contracts to the “Y” agreement by express recital, and making the sales contracts a consideration for the “Y” agreement, show an intimate relation between them. But for the existence of the five sales contracts there would have been no reason for making the “Y” agreement. Whatever its character, whether an advance against iron deliveries, or a loan, the copper company was in position, when monthly deliveries began, to deduct at will from its monthly payments the sum or parts of the sum the iron company owed it. If, in the last analysis, the advance was in the nature of a partnership contribution, it was even more material to the risk. With a contract outstanding, having all these provisions and possible constructions, the copper company, when asked by the bonding company concerning advances, was under legal obligation to tell about it. That question was the circumstance that raised in the copper company a legal duty to speak, and, on its failure, transformed what otherwise might have been passive silence into active concealment. The bonding company fraud on bonding company.

Fraud—how committed.

—concealment.

—denial of advances—

was seeking facts affecting the degree of its responsibility. The "Y" agreement was such a fact. It was, therefore, the legal duty of the copper company, when responding to the inquiry, to disclose it and to disclose it fully. The question having been asked for the purpose of ascertaining the risks involved in the situation, any equivocal, evasive, or misleading answer, calculated to convey a false impression, even though literally true as far as it went, was fraud. Pidcock v. Bishop, 3 Barn. & C. 605, 107 Eng. Reprint, 857, 5 Dowl. & R. 505, 3 L. J. K. B. 109, 27 Revised Rep. 430, 12 R. C. L. 309-311, and cases. It will not do for the copper company to say that it answered correctly when its secretary said, on his own construction of the instrument, that no advances had been made against iron deliveries. Even if this be its correct construction, the answer given was but a half truth, for the "Y" agreement was a fact which showed the financial and contractual relations of the two companies. As such, it was material to the risks which the bonding company would incur in assuring to one the undertaking of the other. Failure to disclose this fact, under the circumstance of being asked for it, was an active concealment of the fact. As the fraudulent character of the concealment was provable only by the admission in evidence of the thing concealed, we are of opinion that admission of the agreement was not error, and that the agreement, together with the circumstance of its concealment, constituted evidence sufficient to sustain a finding of fraud by the jury.

Evidence—to prove fraud—agreement for advances.

In the second group of exceptions we find no error in the admission of evidence of misrepresentations made by the iron company without the plaintiff's knowledge. This, because it was necessary, first, to show the iron company's fraud and misrepresentations before it was possible to show the copper company's connivance therein. Evidence of connivance was present, and was sufficient, we think, to submit to the jury.

Trial—order of proof—proof of fraud.

In the third group of exceptions, covering the admission of evidence of subsequent acts of the copper company and the iron company, we find no error. The admission of evidence of this kind must ordinarily be guarded, but it was admissible in this case for the purpose of showing by its outgrowth what was the relation of the two companies at the time the fraud was committed. Salmon v. Richardson, 30 Conn. 360, 379, 79 Am. Dec. 255.

Evidence—fraud—subsequent acts of parties.

In our review of this entire record, we have considered singly and in groups the rulings of the court assigned as error, and find only a few open to question, any one of which, if technically error, is harmless error. We recognize that in the theory of the law, erroneous rulings in jury trials are presumptively injurious, yet the tendency is to enlarge the sphere of the trial judge in the admission and exclusion of testimony, and not to disturb the judgment when it affirmatively appears that his rulings, if erroneous, were harmless. Fillippon v. Albion Vein Slate Co. 250 U. S. 76, 63 L. ed. 853, 39 Sup. Ct. Rep. 435; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Gillespie, 139 C. C. A. 552, 224 Fed. 316, 320, 11 N. C. C. A. 981.

Appeal—harmless error—effect.

The judgment below is affirmed.

ANNOTATION.

Obligee's concealment of facts or evasive answers as fraud against surety.

- I. Introduction, 1485.
- II. Statement of rules in general:
  - a. Duty to disclose, 1485.
  - b. Absence of duty to disclose; nondisclosure not amounting to fraud, 1490.
  - c. Applicability to sureties for consideration, 1498.
- III. Opportunity for disclosure, 1494.
- IV. Duty of surety to make inquiry; obligee's duty when inquiry is made, or information volunteered, 1495.

I. Introduction.

The present annotation treats of the general principles relating to the discharge of sureties through the concealment or nondisclosure of information by the obligee, and shows the application of these principles in various classes of contracts of suretyship. It does not cover cases, generally, dealing with fidelity bonds and insurance, or security for agents and employees, except as these cases are of general value on the principles of fraudulent concealment, the application of the principles herein considered to fidelity bonds and insurance being reserved for future annotation. Fraudulent concealment, as herein considered, should be distinguished from the making of direct positive affirmations which are untrue. The subject under annotation is a phase of the question of release of the surety by the fraud of the obligee; another phase, which is not therein treated, being affirmative assertions, by word or conduct, which prove to be false. The annotation does not cover such cases as National Provincial Bank v. Glanusk [1913] 3 K. B. (Eng.) 385, 82 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1033, 109 L. T. N. S. 108, 29 Times L. R. 593, involving the question of the duty of the obligee to make disclosures to the surety of facts arising after the making of the contract of suretyship.

As a matter of convenience in following the practice of the courts, the terms "discharged" and "released" are used in the annotation to indicate

- V. Motive for nondisclosure, 1497.
- VI. Nature of information concealed, 1497.
- VII. Illustrations:
  - a. Matters relating to solvency and credit of principal in general, 1498.
  - b. Contractors' bonds, 1502.
  - c. Contracts of sale, 1503.
  - d. Loans; usury or secret commission, 1505.
  - e. Composition agreements, 1507.
  - f. Miscellaneous, 1507.

that the surety is not liable on the contract, although the terms are more appropriately used, it would seem, where there was originally a liability, rather than where, as in the class of cases under consideration, the contract, if void or voidable, is so in its inception, and the surety is never liable thereon.

II. Statement of rules in general.*a. Duty to disclose.

It is well settled that fraud on the part of the obligee such as will avoid the contract of suretyship is not confined to positive affirmations which are untrue, but may consist in the concealment or withholding by him from the surety, at the time the contract of suretyship is executed, of material facts affecting the risk, which the obligee has the opportunity, and which it is his duty, to disclose.

United States.—Magee v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. (1876) 92 U. S. 93, 23 L. ed. 699 (see also Rose's Notes to this case); First Nat. Bank v. Terry (1905) 135 Fed. 621; COPPER PROCESS Co. v. CHICAGO BONDING & INS. Co. (reported herewith), ante, 1477.

Alabama.—Evans v. Keeland (1846) 9 Ala. 42.

California.—Guardian Fire & Life Assur. Co. v. Thompson (1885) 68 Cal. 208, 9 Pac. 1; Union Oil Co. v. Pacific Surety Co. (1920) — Cal. —, 187 Pac. 14.

Colorado.—First Nat. Bank v. Clark (1915) 59 Colo. 455, 149 Pac. 612.

Connecticut.—Doughty v. Savage

(1859) 28 Conn. 146; Watertown Sav. Bank v. Mattoon (1905) 78 Conn. 388, 62 Atl. 722.

Delaware.—Pickering v. Day (1867) 3 Houst. 474, 95 Am. Dec. 291.

Georgia.—Lewis v. Brown (1892) 89 Ga. 115, 14 S. E. 881; Harrington v. Findley (1892) 89 Ga. 385, 15 S. E. 483; Howard v. Johnson (1892) 91 Ga. 319, 18 S. E. 132; Denton v. Butler (1896) 99 Ga. 264, 25 S. E. 624; Prather v. Smith (1897) 101 Ga. 283, 28 S. E. 857; Vaughan v. Farmers & M. Bank (1916) 146 Ga. 51, 90 S. E. 478; Whilden v. Milledgeville Bkg. Co. (1907) 3 Ga. App. 69, 59 S. E. 336; Hancock v. Bank of Tifton (1909) 6 Ga. App. 678, 65 S. E. 784; Morris v. Reed (1914) 14 Ga. App. 729, 82 S. E. 314; Bank of Omega v. Ford (1917) 20 Ga. App. 496, 93 S. E. 106; Duckett v. Martin (1919) 28 Ga. App. 630, 99 S. E. 151.

Illinois.—Booth v. Storrs (1874) 75 Ill. 438; Comstock v. Gage (1878) 91 Ill. 328; Roper v. Sangamon Lodge (1879) 91 Ill. 518, 33 Am. Rep. 60; Drabek v. Grand Lodge, B. S. B. S. (1887) 24 Ill. App. 82.

Indiana.—Wilson v. Monticello (1882) 85 Ind. 10; Springfield Engine & Thresher Co. v. Park (1891) 3 Ind. App. 173, 29 N. E. 444; Fasanacht v. Emsing Gagen Co. (1897) 18 Ind. App. 80, 63 Am. St. Rep. 322, 46 N. E. 45, 47 N. E. 480; Indiana & O. Live Stock Ins. Co. v. Bender (1904) 32 Ind. App. 287, 69 N. E. 681.

Iowa.—Miller v. Gardner (1878) 49 Iowa, 234; Conger v. Bean (1882) 58 Iowa, 321, 12 N. W. 284; Klamman v. Malvin (1883) 61 Iowa, 752, 16 N. W. 356; Bank of Monroe v. Anderson Bros. Min. & R. Co. (1885) 65 Iowa, 692, 22 N. W. 929, later appeal (1887) 72 Iowa, 750, 32 N. W. 669; Benton County Sav. Bank v. Boddicker (1898) 105 Iowa, 548, 45 L.R.A. 321, 67 Am. St. Rep. 316, 75 N. W. 632; Barnes v. Century Sav. Bank (1910) 149 Iowa, 367, 128 N. W. 541; Lingenfelter Bros. v. Bowman (1912) 156 Iowa, 649, 137 N. W. 946; Selma Sav. Bank v. Harlan (1914) 167 Iowa, 673, 149 N. W. 882; Sherman v. Smith (1918) — Iowa, —, 169 N. W. 216.

Kentucky.—Peck v. Durett (1840) 9

Dana, 486; Burks v. Wonterline (1869) 6 Bush, 20; Graves v. Lebanon Nat. Bank (1873) 10 Bush, 23, 19 Am. Rep. 50; Hubble v. First Nat. Bank (1888) 9 Ky. L. Rep. 766; First Nat. Bank v. Mattingly (1892) 92 Ky. 650, 18 S. W. 940; Gano v. Farmers' Bank (1898) 103 Ky. 508, 82 Am. St. Rep. 596, 45 S. W. 519; Smith v. First Nat. Bank (1899) 107 Ky. 257, 53 S. W. 648; Julius Winter, Jr. & Co. v. Forrest (1911) 145 Ky. 581, 140 S. W. 1005.

Louisiana.—See Lachman v. Block (1895) 47 La. Ann. 505, 28 L.R.A. 255, 17 So. 153 (on rehearing judgment was set aside on other grounds, without determination of point).

Maine.—Franklin Bank v. Cooper (1853) 36 Me. 179, later appeal in (1855) 39 Me. 542; Bryant v. Crosby (1853) 36 Me. 562, 58 Am. Dec. 767; Franklin Bank v. Stevens (1855) 39 Me. 532.

Maryland.—Lake v. Thomas (1897) 84 Md. 608, 36 Atl. 437; Wright v. German Brewing Co. (1906) 103 Md. 377, 63 Atl. 807.

Michigan.—Beath v. Chapoton (1898) 115 Mich. 506, 69 Am. St. Rep. 589, 73 N. W. 806.

Minnesota.—Traders' Ins. Co. v. Herber (1897) 67 Minn. 106, 69 N. W. 701; Powers Dry-Goods Co. v. Harlin (1897) 68 Minn. 193, 64 Am. St. Rep. 460, 71 N. W. 16; Capital F. Ins. Co. v. Watson (1899) 76 Minn. 387, 77 Am. St. Rep. 657, 79 N. W. 601.

Missouri.—Third Nat. Bank v. Owen (1890) 101 Mo. 558, 14 S. W. 632; Home Sav. Bank v. Traube (1878) 6 Mo. App. 221; Harrison v. Lumbermen & M. Ins. Co. (1879) 8 Mo. App. 87.

Montana.—Palatine Ins. Co. v. Crittenden (1896) 18 Mont. 413, 45 Pac. 555.

New Mexico.—Wells, F. & Co's Exp. v. Walker (1897) 9 N. M. 170, 50 Pac. 353, 923, later appeal in (1898) 9 N. M. 456, 54 Pac. 875; Putney v. Schmidt (1911) 16 N. M. 400, 120 Pac. 720.

New York.—Howe Mach. Co. v. Farrington (1880) 82 N. Y. 121; Bestwick v. Van Voorhis (1883) 91 N. Y. 353; Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Van Slyke (1888) 49 Hun, 7, 1 N. Y. Supp. 503;

United States L. Ins. Co. v. Salmon (1895) 91 Hun, 535, 36 N. Y. Supp. 380, affirmed without opinion in (1898) 157 N. Y. 682, 51 N. E. 1094; Damon v. Empire State Surety Co. (1914) 161 App. Div. 875, 146 N. Y. Supp. 996.

North Dakota.—Ætna Indemnity Co. v. Schroeder (1903) 12 N. D. 110, 95 N. W. 436.

Ohio.—Dinsmore v. Tidball (1878) 34 Ohio St. 411; Smith v. Josselyn (1884) 40 Ohio St. 409; Commonwealth Bldg. & L. Co. v. Fromlet (1897) 7 Ohio N. P. 194, 6 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 184.

Pennsylvania.—Frisch v. Miller (1847) 5 Pa. 310; Wayne v. Commercial Nat. Bank (1866) 52 Pa. 343; Laver Brewing Co. v. Riley (1900) 195 Pa. 449, 46 Atl. 71; Park Paving Co. v. Kraft (1918) 262 Pa. 178, 105 Atl. 39; Bolz v. Stuhl (1896) 4 Pa. Super. Ct. 52; Goebel Brewing Co. v. McLean (1900) 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 38.

Rhode Island.—Atlas Bank v. Brownell (1869) 9 R. I. 169, 11 Am. Rep. 231.

South Carolina.—Wilmington, C. & A. R. Co. v. Ling (1882) 18 S. C. 116; Greenville-Carolina Power Co. v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. (1909) 83 S. C. 90, 64 S. E. 518, 964.

Tennessee.—Johnson v. Ivey (1867) 4 Coldw. 608, 94 Am. Dec. 206; Bradley v. Kesse (1867) 5 Coldw. 223, 94 Am. Dec. 246; Domestic Sewing Mach. Co. v. Jackson (1885) 15 Lea, 418; Hebert v. Lee (1906) 118 Tenn. 183, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 247, 121 Am. St. Rep. 989, 101 S. W. 175, 11 Ann. Cas. 1029.

Texas.—Screwmen's Benev. Asso. v. Smith (1888) 70 Tex. 168, 7 S. W. 793.

Utah.—Jungk v. Holbrook (1897) 15 Utah, 198, 62 Am. St. Rep. 921, 49 Pac. 305.

Vermont.—Richmond v. Standclift (1842) 14 Vt. 258; Connecticut General L. Ins. Co. v. Chase (1900) 72 Vt. 176, 53 L.R.A. 510, 47 Atl. 825.

Virginia.—Atlantic Trust Co. v. Union Trust & T. Corp. (1909) 110 Va. 286, 135 Am. St. Rep. 937, 67 S. E. 182.

West Virginia.—Warren v. Branch (1879) 15 W. Va. 21.

Wisconsin.—Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Mabbett (1864) 18 Wis. 667; Remington Sewing Mach. Co. v. Kezertee (1880) 49 Wis. 409, 5 N. W. 809; Brillion Lumber Co. v. Barnard (1907) 131 Wis. 284, 111 N. W. 483.

England.—Cecil v. Plaistow (1793) 1 Anstr. 203, 145 Eng. Reprint, 845; Pidcock v. Bishop (1825) 3 Barn. & C. 605, 107 Eng. Reprint, 857, 5 Dowl. & R. 505, 3 L. J. K. B. 109, 27 Revised Rep. 430; Stone v. Compton (1838) 5 Bing. N. C. 142, 132 Eng. Reprint, 1059, 6 Scott. 846; Pendlebury v. Walker (1841) 4 Younge & C. Exch. 424, 160 Eng. Reprint, 1072; Railton v. Mathews (1844) 10 Clark & F. 934, 8 Eng. Reprint, 993; Hamilton v. Watson (1845) 12 Clark & F. 109, 8 Eng. Reprint, 1339; Willis v. Willis (1850) 17 Sim. 218, 60 Eng. Reprint, 1112, 14 Jur. 404; Stokesleigh Parish v. Stoddart (1853) 2 Week. Rep. 14; Owen v. Homan (1853) 4 H. L. Cas. 997, 10 Eng. Reprint, 752, 17 Jur. 861, 1 Eq. Rep. 370; Small v. Currie (1853) 2 Drew, 102, 61 Eng. Reprint, 657, appeal in (1854) 5 De G. M. & G. 141, 43 Eng. Reprint, 824, 2 Eq. Rep. 639, 23 L. J. Ch. N. S. 746, 18 Jur. 731; Wythes v. Labouchere (1859) 3 De G. & J. 593, 44 Eng. Reprint, 1397, 5 Jur. N. S. 499, 7 Week. Rep. 271; Pledge v. Buss (1860) Johns. V. C. 663, 70 Eng. Reprint, 585, 6 Jur. N. S. 695; Blest v. Brown (1862) 3 Giff. 450, 66 Eng. Reprint, 486, 8 Jur. N. S. 187, 5 L. T. N. S. 663, affirmed in (1862) 8 Jur. N. S. 602, 4 De G. F. & J. 367, 45 Eng. Reprint, 1225, 6 L. T. N. S. 620, 10 Week. Rep. 569; Lee v. Jones (1864) 17 C. B. N. S. 482, 144 Eng. Reprint, 194, 34 L. J. C. P. N. S. 131, 11 Jur. N. S. 81, 12 L. T. N. S. 122, 13 Week. Rep. 318; Greenfield v. Edwards (1865) 2 De G. J. & S. 582, 46 Eng. Reprint, 501, 11 Jur. N. S. 419, 12 L. T. N. S. 411, 13 Week. Rep. 668; Stiff v. Eastbourne (1867) 17 Week. Rep. 68, 19 L. T. N. S. 408, on appeal (1869) 17 Week. Rep. 428, 20 L. T. N. S. 339; Phillips v. Foxall (1872) L. R. 7 Q. B. 666, 41 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 293, 27 L. T. N. S. 231, 20 Week. Rep. 900; Davies v. London & P. M. Ins. Co. (1878) L. R. 8 Ch. Div. 469, 47 L. J. Ch. N. S. 511, 38 L. T. N. S. 478, 26 Week. Rep. 794; Mackreth v. Walmesley (1884) 51 L. T. N. S. 19, 32 Week. Rep. 819; Welton v. Somes (1888) 5 Times L. R.

46; Seaton v. Heath [1899] 1 Q. B. 782, 68 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 631, 47 Week. Rep. 487, 80 L. T. N. S. 579, 15 Times L. R. 297, 4 Com. Cas. 193, per Romer, L. J., reversed on other grounds in [1900] A. C. 135; London General Omnibus Co. v. Holloway [1912] 2 K. B. 72, 81 L. J. K. B. N. S. 603, 106 L. T. N. S. 502, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1280.

Scotland.—Smith v. Bank of Scotland (1818) 1 Dow, P. C. 272, 3 Eng. Reprint, 697.

Canada.—Cashin v. Perth (1859) 7 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 340; Cunningham v. Buchanan (1864) 10 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 523; East Zorra Twp. v. Douglas (1870) 17 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 462; Peers v. Oxford County (1870) 17 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 472; British Empire, etc., Assur. Co. v. Luxton (1893) 9 Manitoba L. R. 169; Niagara Dist. Fruit Growers Stock Co. v. Stewart (1896) 26 Can. S. C. 629.

Very little said by the obligee which ought not to have been said, and very little left unsaid which ought to have been said to a surety, are sufficient to discharge the latter, especially where there is no consideration for the contract of suretyship. Davies v. London & P. M. Ins. Co. (1878) L. R. 8 Ch. Div. (Eng.) 469, 47 L. J. Ch. N. S. 511, 38 L. T. N. S. 478, 26 Week. Rep. 794.

It is a well-known rule of equity that if the creditor conceals from one about to become a surety any material facts, whereby his risk is increased, and suffers the surety to enter into the contract under a false impression as to the real state of facts, such concealment will amount to a fraud, and will release the surety. Springfield Engine & Thresher Co. v. Park (1891) 3 Ind. App. 173, 29 N. E. 444.

And in Home Sav. Bank v. Traube (1878) 6 Mo. App. 221, it was said: "To accept a surety known to be acting on a belief that there are no unusual circumstances by which his risk is materially increased, whilst the party thus accepting him knows that there are such circumstances and withholds the knowledge from the surety, is a legal fraud by which the surety is discharged."

If the circumstances are such that it can be clearly inferred that the surety imposed confidence in the obligee, and the latter suffered the former to act under a material delusion, the contract of suretyship will be avoided. Harrison v. Lumberman & M. Ins. Co. (1879) 8 Mo. App. 37.

It is a clear and well-settled principle, said the court in Doughty v. Savage (1859) 28 Conn. 146, that a security given by a surety is voidable on the ground of fraud, if there is, with the knowledge or assent of the creditor, such a concealment from the surety of the transaction between the creditor and his debtor that, but for the same having taken place, either the suretyship would not have been entered into at all, or, being entered into, the extent of the surety's liability might be thereby increased. The rule laid down in this case was approved in Powers Dry-Goods Co. v. Harlin (1897) 68 Minn. 193, 64 Am. St. Rep. 460, 71 N. W. 16.

It is elementary that fraudulent concealment of material matters is equivalent to affirming a fact that does not exist; and this doctrine applies quite strictly in favor of sureties. Sherman v. Smith (1918) — Iowa, —, 169 N. W. 216.

To accept a surety known to be acting on the belief that there are no unusual circumstances by which his risk will be materially increased, while the party thus accepting knows there are such circumstances and withholds the knowledge from the surety, although having suitable opportunity to communicate it, will release the surety. Franklin Bank v. Cooper (1853) 36 Me. 179, later appeal in (1855) 39 Me. 542.

The rule that concealment by the obligee of material facts affecting the risk may amount to fraud, discharging the surety, seems especially applicable where the circumstances are such as raise, or should raise, a suspicion in the mind of the obligee that the principal has obtained the surety's signature by fraud. In this connection, attention is called to the fact that there are some cases which approach somewhat closely the class of cases herein considered, but which lead beyond the scope of the present annotation. Reference is made to those cases involving the release of the surety who, to the knowledge of the obligee, occupies a confidential relationship to the principal, and is induced to sign the contract by the principal's undue influence or fraud. For example, see Canada Furniture Co. v. Stephenson (1910) 19 Manitoba L. R. 618, where a wife signed as surety for her husband, at his request, knowing that the document which she signed was in some way one purporting to assist him in his business, and without asking any questions about it, and the obligee knew that she was not at that time in a condition physically to take much interest in any document presented to her for signature.

The rule was laid down in Warren v. Branch (1879) 15 W. Va. 21, that if the dealings are such as clearly to lead the creditor, if a reasonable man, to believe that the principal must have used fraud in procuring the surety to enter into the contract, and such fraud has been used, it will vitiate the contract as to the surety, although actual fraud is not traced to the creditor.

If the obligee knows, or has good grounds for believing, that the surety is being deceived or misled, and that he was induced to enter into the contract in ignorance of facts materially increasing the risks, of which he has knowledge, and the obligee has opportunity, before accepting the undertaking, to inform the surety of such facts, good faith and fair dealing demand that he should make the disclosure; and if he accepts the contract without doing so, the surety may afterward avoid it. Bank of Monroe v. Anderson Bros. Min. & R. Co. (1885) 65 Iowa, 692, 22 N. W. 929.

See, in this connection, Fassnacht v. Emsing Gagen Co. (Ind.) under VII. c, infra, where the obligee in a sales contract knew that the surety was acting under a misunderstanding.

So, although a creditor may not be bound to inquire in every case under what circumstances the debtor has obtained the concurrence of a surety, yet if the dealings are such as fairly to lead a reasonable man to believe that fraud must have been used in order to obtain such concurrence, the creditor is bound to make inquiry, and cannot shelter himself under the plea that he was not called on to ask, and did not ask, any questions on the subject; if one abstains from inquiry because he sees that the result of inquiry will probably be to show that a transaction in which he is engaged is tainted with fraud, his want of knowledge of the fraud will afford no excuse. Owen v. Homan (1853) 4 H. L. Cas. 997, 10 Eng. Reprint, 752, 17 Jur. 861, 1 Eq. Rep. 370.

And in Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Van Slyke (1888) 49 Hun, 7, 1 N. Y. Supp. 508, the court said: "Where a person taking security knows the facts and is personally present, having an opportunity to inform the proposed surety, and having reason to believe that the proposed surety does not know the facts and is being deceived and defrauded into becoming such, it is his duty to post him, and the acceptance of him as surety or indorser under such circumstances would be a fraud which would avoid the contract."

The surety is discharged where the agreement guaranteed, because of omissions or otherwise, is materially different from that which the written contract executed by him purports on its face, and the surety is ignorant of the real contract. Union Oil Co. v. Pacific Surety Co. (1920) — Cal. —, 187 Pac. 14; Damon v. Empire State Surety Co. (1914) 161 App. Div. 875, 146 N. Y. Supp. 996; Park Paving Co. v. Kraft (1918) 262 Pa. 178, 105 Atl. 39; Atlantic Trust Co. v. Union Trust & T. Corp. (1909) 110 Va. 286, 185 Am. St. Rep. 937, 67 S. E. 182.

And even though, before the execution of the contract by the surety, he and the obligee have no direct dealings, it seems that the circumstances may be such as to require the obligee to disclose to the surety the real situation, where the obligee knows that the contract, the performance of which is secured, is, on its face, calculated to mislead the surety to his prejudice. This appears to be the situation in

Damon v. Empire State Surety Co. (1914) 161 App. Div. 875, 146 N. Y. Supp. 996, supra, where the contract purported an agreement made as of the date of the contract, whereas it was but a renewal agreement of a previous contract, as to which the principal was in default.

The court in Jungk v. Holbrook (1897) 15 Utah, 198, 62 Am. St. Rep. 921, 49 Pac. 305, approved the rule laid down in Brandt on Suretyship, that "one who becomes surety for another must ordinarily be presumed to do so upon the belief that the transaction between the principal parties is one occurring in the usual course of business of that description, subjecting him only to the ordinary risks attending it; and the party to whom he becomes a surety must be presumed to know that such will be his understanding, and that he will act upon it unless he is informed that there are extraordinary circumstances affecting the risk. To receive a surety known to be acting upon the belief that there are no unusual circumstances by which his risks will be materially increased, well knowing that there are such circumstances, and having an opportunity to make them known, and withholding them, must be regarded as a legal fraud, by which the surety will be relieved from his contract."

b. Absence of duty to disclose; nondisclosure not amounting to fraud.

To discharge the surety on the ground that the obligee has concealed or withheld from him material facts affecting the risk, there must be a duty on the part of the obligee to make disclosure, it being well settled that, unless this duty arises under the circumstances of the particular case, the surety will not be released from his obligation by the mere fact that he did not have information which the obligee possessed, affecting the risk, and which would have probably prevented his signing the contract; in other words, there is nothing in the mere nature of the contract of suretyship itself which requires the obligee to disclose to the proposed surety all the material facts affecting the risk.

United States.—Magee v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. (1876) 92 U. S. 93, 23 L. ed. 699 (see also Rose's Notes to this case); Frelinghuysen v. Baldwin (1883) 16 Fed. 452; Citizens' Trust & G. Co. v. Globe & R. F. Ins. Co. (1915) 143 C. C. A. 446, 229 Fed. 326, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 416; Whitcomb v. Shultz (1915) 138 C. C. A. 510, 223 Fed. 268, petition for a writ of certiorari denied in (1915) 238 U. S. 682, 59 L. ed. 1493, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 937; COPPER PROCESS CO. v. CHICAGO BONDING & INS. CO. (reported herewith) ante, 1477.

Alabama.—Van Arsdale v. Howard (1843) 5 Ala. 596.

Connecticut.—Watertown Sav. Bank v. Mattoon (1905) 78 Conn. 388, 62 Atl. 622.

Delaware.—Pickering v. Day (1867) 3 Houst. 474, 95 Am. Dec. 291.

Illinois.—Booth v. Storrs (1874) 75 Ill. 438; Roper v. Sangamon Lodge (1879) 91 Ill. 518, 33 Am. Rep. 60.

Indiana.—Coats v. McKee (1886) 26 Ind. 223; Ham v. Greve (1870) 34 Ind. 18; Stedman v. Boone (1875) 49 Ind. 469.

Iowa.—Home Ins. Co. v. Holway (1881) 55 Iowa, 571, 39 Am. Rep. 179, 8 N. W. 457; Bank of Monroe v. Anderson Bros. Min. & R. Co. (1885) 65 Iowa, 692, 22 N. W. 929, later appeal in (1887) 72 Iowa, 750, 32 N. W. 669; Sherman v. Harbin (1904) 125 Iowa, 174, 100 N. W. 629; Selma Sav. Bank v. Harlan (1914) 167 Iowa, 673, 149 N. W. 882.

Kentucky.—Burks v. Wontersline (1869) 6 Bush, 20; Hubble v. First Nat. Bank (1888) 9 Ky. L. Rep. 766; Smith v. First Nat. Bank (1899) 107 Ky. 257, 53 S. W. 648; Sebald v. Citizens' Deposit Bank (1907) 31 Ky. L. Rep. 1244, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 376, 105 S. W. 130.

Louisiana.—Tooke v. Burke (1917) 141 La. 746, 75 So. 668.

Maryland.—Lake v. Thomas (1897) 84 Md. 624, 36 Atl. 437; Wright v. German Brewing Co. (1906) 103 Md. 377, 63 Atl. 807.

Mississippi.—Southwestern Co. v. Wynnegar (1916) 111 Miss. 412, 71 So. 737.

Missouri.—Harrison v. Lumbermen & M. Ins. Co. (1879) 8 Mo. App. 37.

Montana.—Palatine Ins. Co. v. Crittenden (1896) 18 Mont. 413, 45 Pac. 555.

New York.—Western New York L. Ins. Co. v. Clinton (1876) 66 N. Y. 326; Howe Mach. Co. v. Farrington (1880) 82 N. Y. 121; Bostwick v. Van Voorhis (1883) 91 N. Y. 353.

North Dakota.—Ætna Indemnity Co. v. Schroeder (1903) 12 N. D. 110, 95 N. W. 436.

Ohio.—Higgins v. Drucker (1901) 22 Ohio C. C. 112, 12 Ohio C. D. 220.

Pennsylvania.—Goebel Brewing Co. v. McLean (1900) 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 38.

Rhode Island.—Atlas Bank v. Brownell (1869) 9 R. I. 169, 11 Am. Rep. 231.

South Carolina.—Greenville-Carolina Power Co. v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. (1909) 83 S. C. 90, 64 S. E. 518, 964.

Tennessee.—Hubbard v. Fravell (1883) 12 Lea, 304; Domestic Sewing Mach. Co. v. Jackson (1885) 15 Lea, 418.

Texas.—Screwmen's Benev. Asso. v. Smith (1888) 70 Tex. 168, 7 S. W. 798; United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Means & F. Iron Works (1910) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 132 S. W. 536.

Virginia.—Atlantic Trust & D. Co. v. Union Trust & Title Corp. (1909) 110 Va. 286, 135 Am. St. Rep. 937, 67 S. E. 182.

Washington.—Oregon Nat. Bank v. Gardner (1895) 13 Wash. 154, 42 Pac. 545.

West Virginia.—Warren v. Branch (1879) 15 W. Va. 21.

Wisconsin.—Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Mabbett (1864) 18 Wis. 667.

England.—Hamilton v. Watson (1845) 12 Clark & F. 109, 8 Eng. Reprint, 1839; Stokesleigh Parish v. Stoddart (1853) 2 Week. Rep. 14; North British Ins. Co. v. Lloyd (1854) 10 Exch. 523, 156 Eng. Reprint, 545, 3 C. L. R. 264, 24 L. J. Exch. N. S. 14, 1 Jur. N. S. 45; Wythes v. Labouchere (1859) 3 De G. & J. 593, 44 Eng. Reprint, 1897, 5 Jur. N. S. 499, 7 Week. Rep. 271; Pledge v. Buss (1860) Johns. V. C. 663, 70 Eng. Reprint, 585, 6 Jur. N. S. 695; Greenfield v. Edwards (1865) 2 De G. J. & S. 582, 46 Eng.

Reprint, 501, 11 Jur. N. S. 419, 12 L. T. N. S. 411, 18 Week. Rep. 668; Davies v. London & P. M. Ins. Co. (1878) L. R. 8 Ch. Div. 469, 47 L. J. Ch. N. S. 511, 38 L. T. N. S. 478, 26 Week. Rep. 794; Welton v. Somes (1888) 5 Times L. R. 46; Seaton v. Heath [1899] 1 Q. B. 782, 68 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 631, 47 Week. Rep. 487, 80 L. T. N. S. 579, 15 Times L. R. 297, 4 Com. Cas. 193, per Romer, L. J., reversed on other grounds in [1900] A. C. 135.

Ireland.—Roper v. Cox (1882) Ir. L. R. 10 C. L. 200.

Scotland.—Royal Bank v. Green-shields [1914] S. C. 259, 51 Scot. L. R. 260 [1914] 1 Scot. L. T. 74, Scots Dig. 1904-14, col. 142, Mews, Eng. Case Law Dig. 1911-15, col. 1213.

Canada.—Cunningham v. Buchanan (1864) 10 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 523; East Zorra Twp. v. Douglas (1870) 17 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 462; Peers v. Oxford County (1870) 17 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 472; British Empire, etc., Assur. Co. v. Luxton (1893) 9 Manitoba L. R. 169; Niagara Dist. Fruit Growers Stock Co. v. Stewart (1896) 26 Can. S. C. 629.

We think, said the court in Atlas Bank v. Brownell (1869) 9 R. I. 169, 11 Am. Rep. 231, that it is going too far to say that the creditor is in all cases, and without being inquired of, bound to communicate everything that it is important for the surety to know, and that would increase his risk; that the safe rule is that, to avoid the bond, there must be, on the part of the creditor, a fraudulent concealment or withholding of something material for the surety to know; and that ordinarily, the concealment, to make void a contract, must amount to the suppression of facts which one party is bound in conscience and duty to disclose to the other, and in respect to which he cannot innocently be silent.

So, it was said in Harrison v. Lumbermen & M. Ins. Co. (1879) 8 Mo. App. 37, that although passages not infrequently occur in the authorities apparently supporting the statement that the duty of the obligee is to disclose to the surety every fact that materially affects the latter's risk, or that is of a nature to prevent a prudent man from undertaking the obligation, this is certainly not the rule.

It is well settled that, to discharge the surety on the ground of the concealment or withholding of information by the obligee, the concealment must in fact or in law be fraudulent, and unless the nondisclosure amounts to fraud the surety is not released. This proposition is supported by the cases generally, being frequently implied rather than directly stated. See, on the point, the following authorities:

United States.—Magee v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. (1876) 92 U. S. 93, 23 L. ed. 699.

Alabama.—Van Arsdale v. Howard (1843) 5 Ala. 596.

California.—Anaheim Union Water Co. v. Parker (1894) 101 Cal. 483, 35 Pac. 1048.

Connecticut.—Watertown Sav. Bank v. Mattoon (1905) 78 Conn. 388, 62 Atl. 622.

New York.—Howe Mach. Co. v. Farrington (1880) 82 N. Y. 121; Bostwick v. Van Voorhis (1883) 91 N. Y. 353.

North Dakota.—Ætna Indemnity Co. v. Schroeder (1903) 12 N. D. 110, 95 N. W. 436.

Rhode Island. — Atlas Bank v. Brownell (1869) 9 R. I. 169, 11 Am. Rep. 231.

Tennessee.—Domestic Sewing Mach. Co. v. Jackson (1885) 15 Lea, 418.

Texas.—Screwmen's Benev. Asso. v. Smith (1888) 70 Tex. 168, 7 S. W. 793; United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Means & F. Iron Works (1910) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 132 S. W. 536.

England. — Hamilton v. Watson (1845) 12 Clark & F. 109, 8 Eng. Reprint, 1339; Stokesleigh Parish v. Stoddart (1853) 2 Week. Rep. 14; Wythes v. Labouchere (1859) 3 De G. & J. 593, 44 Eng. Reprint, 1397, 5 Jur. N. S. 499, 7 Week. Rep. 271; Pledge v. Buss (1860) Johns. V. C. 663, 70 Eng. Reprint, 585, 6 Jur. N. S. 695; Welton v. Somes (1888) 5 Times L. R. 46.

Ireland.—Roper v. Cox (1882) Ir. L. R. 10 C. L. 200.

Canada.—East Zorra Twp. v. Doug- las (1870) 17 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 462; Peers v. Oxford County (1870) 17 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 472; British Empire, etc., Assur. Co. v. Luxton (1893) 9 Manitoba L. R. 169.

And the rule which prevails in some classes of contracts, such as those of marine insurance, that all material circumstances known to the assured must be disclosed, and that the omission to do so avoids the policy, though the concealment is not fraudulent, does not apply to an ordinary contract of guaranty or suretyship. Whitcomb v. Shultz (1915) 138 C. C. A. 510, 223 Fed. 268, petition for a writ of certiorari denied in (1915) 238 U. S. 632, 59 L. ed. 1498, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 937; Howe Mach. Co. v. Farrington (1880) 82 N. Y. 121; Domestic Sewing Mach. Co. v. Jackson (1885) 15 Lea (Tenn.) 418; North British Ins. Co. v. Lloyd (1854) 10 Exch. 523, 156 Eng. Reprint, 545, 3 C. L. R. 264, 24 L. J. Exch. N. S. 14, 1 Jur. N. S. 45; Davies v. London & P. M. Ins. Co. (1878) L. R. 8 Ch. Div. (Eng.) 469, 47 L. J. Ch. N. S. 511, 38 L. T. N. S. 478, 26 Week. Rep. 794; Niagara Dist. Fruit Growers Stock Co. v. Stewart (1896) 26 Can. S. C. 629; British Empire, etc., Assur. Co. v. Luxton (Manitoba) supra.

The basis of the defense of nondisclosure is fraud, and if the noncommunication is not fraudulent in fact or law, the defense is not established. Howe Mach. Co. v. Farrington (1880) 82 N. Y. 121.

"Concealment or failure to disclose becomes fraudulent only when it is the duty of a party having knowledge of the facts, to discover them to the other party." Domestic Sewing Mach. Co. v. Jackson (1885) 15 Lea (Tenn.) 418.

And concealment, to be fraudulent and material, it was said in Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Mabbett (1864) 18 Wis. 667, must be a concealment of something which the party concealing is bound to disclose; in order that he may be so bound, there must, in general, exist some relation of trust and confidence between the immediate parties; and in most cases, at least, the silence of the party must import as much as a direct affirmation, and must be deemed the equivalent thereof.

"The concealment or nondisclosure of facts, which amounts to a fraud, must be of those facts and circumstances which one party is under some legal or moral obligation to communicate to the other; and which the latter has a right, not merely in foro conscientie, but juris et de jure, to know." Van Arsdale v. Howard (1843) 5 Ala. 596.

And it was said in Watertown Sav. Bank v. Mattoon (1905) 78 Conn. 388, 62 Atl. 622, that the term "conceal" implies something more than a mere failure to disclose; that we do not in general speak of a person's concealing a thing, unless he is in some way called upon to produce it; that, as a general rule, mere nondisclosure of a fact does not amount to fraud, unless the party not disclosing was called upon by the other party to disclose, or his relation to that party was such as to make it his legal or equitable duty to disclose, all material facts. And it was held in this case that the facts showed the nondisclosure of a material fact, rather than the concealment of it.

To discharge the surety because of the concealment of the obligee, the facts concealed must be such as are peculiarly within the knowledge of the obligee, and such as the surety has the right to rely upon the obligee for information concerning. Hubble v. First Nat. Bank (1888) 9 Ky. L. Rep. 766.

Where parties are contracting, each may, unless there is a duty to disclose, observe silence even in regard to facts which he believes would be operative upon the mind of the other, and it rests upon those maintaining the duty to disclose, to show that such duty existed. This duty may, however, arise from pre-existing relationship between the parties, or from circumstances which occurred during the negotiation, as, for example, if during the negotiations one party discovers that a statement which he has made, and which at the time he believed was true, is in fact false, he is under an obligation to correct the erroneous statement; or if a statement, which at the time he made it was true, has become untrue during the course of the negotiations because of a change of circumstances, he is under the duty to disclose such change to the other party. Davies v. London & P. M. Ins. Co. (1878) L. R. 8 Ch. Div. (Eng.) 469, 47 L. J. Ch. N. S. 511, 38 L. T. N. S. 478, 26 Week. Rep. 794.

Usually, it was said in British Empire, etc., Assur. Co. v. Luxton (1893) 9 Manitoba L. R. 169, the question whether the concealment is fraudulent is one of fact for the jury.

It was held in Burks v. Wonterline (1869) 6 Bush (Ky.) 20, that general allegations of concealment in a pleading are insufficient, it being necessary also to aver that the creditor either procured the surety's signature, or was present when the instrument was executed, and then misrepresented or concealed essential facts which should have been disclosed; that otherwise an allegation merely of fraudulent concealment is only the pleader's deduction. To the same effect is Lake v. Thomas (1897) 84 Md. 608, 36 Atl. 437.

The obligee is not, in the absence of special circumstances, bound to explain to the surety the terms or effect of the proposed obligation. Small v. Currie (1853) 2 Drew. 102, 61 Eng. Reprint, 657, affirmed on this point on appeal in (1854) 5 De G. M. & G. 141, 43 Eng. Reprint, 824, 2 Eq. Rep. 639, 23 L. J. Ch. N. S. 746, 18 Jur. 731.

c. Applicability to sureties for consideration.

Many of the cases cited in the annotation involve sureties for hire, and it is assumed, apparently, that the rules herein set forth are applicable to this class of sureties. The assumption that the ordinary rules apply in the case of a surety for consideration seems important, in view of the possible ground for contention that the duty of disclosure on the part of the obligee does not arise, to the same extent at least, in the case of a surety for hire, as in the case of a voluntary surety. The point was made in Barnes v. Century Sav. Bank (1910) 149 Iowa, 367, 128 N. W. 541, that a distinction should be made in the case of a surety for hire, as regards the application of the rule that concealment by the obligee may amount to fraud discharging the surety; but the court overruled the contention, and regarded the ordinary rules as applicable.

III. Opportunity for disclosure.

Whether or not the obligee is bound to make disclosure to the surety of facts affecting the risk may depend largely on the obligee's opportunity to make disclosure. The same duty may not rest upon the obligee where the surety is procured by the principal, and the obligation, signed by the surety, is delivered by the principal to the obligee, without any communication between the latter and the surety, as where the parties are all present at the time the contract of suretyship is signed. And if, in the obligee's presence, the principal makes false statements to the surety, good faith, of course, requires the obligee to speak and disclose the true situation. The same is true where the surety, by a statement made in the obligee's presence at the time of signing the contract of suretyship, shows that he is laboring under a false impression of a material fact affecting the risk. In other words, while, as a general rule, it cannot be said abstractly that as matter of law the obligee is bound to disclose to the proposed surety all the material facts affecting the risk, yet the obligee is held to a very high degree of good faith, and his opportunity to make disclosure may be a material element in the determination of the question whether he has exercised that good faith toward the surety which the law requires.

The obligee is not required ordinarily to search for the surety and inform him of facts affecting the risk, or warn him of the danger of the step he is about to take. Magee v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. (1876) 92 U. S. 93, 23 L. ed. 699; Sherman v. Harbin (1904) 125 Iowa, 174, 100 N. W. 629; Howe Mach. Co. v. Farrington (1880) 82 N. Y. 121; Wythes v. Labouchere (1859) 3 De G. & J. 593, 44 Eng. Reprint, 1897, 5 Jur. N. S. 499, 7 Week.

Rep. 271; Welton v. Somes (1838) 5 Times L. R. (Eng.) 46; Cunningham v. Buchanan (1864) 10 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 523.

Nor is the obligee ordinarily bound to seek out the sureties and explain to them the nature and extent of their obligations, at the risk of losing the security. Western New York L. Ins. Co. v. Clinton (1876) 66 N. Y. 326; Atlantic Trust & D. Co. v. Union Trust & Title Corp. (1909) 110 Va. 286, 135 Am. St. Rep. 937, 67 S. E. 182.

It was said in Bank of Monroe v. Anderson Bros. Min. & R. Co. (1885) 65 Iowa, 692, 22 N. W. 929: "If there is nothing in the circumstance to indicate that the surety is being misled or deceived, or that he is entering into the contract in ignorance of facts materially affecting its risks, the creditor is not bound to seek him out, or, without being applied to, communicate to him information as to the facts within his knowledge. But in such case he may assume that the surety has obtained information for his guidance from other sources, or that he has chosen to assume the risks of the undertaking, whatever they may be."

To discharge the surety because of the obligee's concealment, there must be opportunity for disclosure. Lachman v. Block (1895) 47 La. Ann. 505, 28 L.R.A. 255, 17 So. 153; Burks v. Wonerline (1869) 6 Bush (Ky.) 20.

All authorities are agreed, said the court in Sherman v. Harbin (1904) 125 Iowa, 174, 100 N. W. 629, that nothing need be done by the obligee, unless a fit opportunity is afforded.

The duty of the obligee is to make disclosure where proper opportunity is presented. Julius Winter, Jr. & Co. v. Forrest (1911) 145 Ky. 581, 140 S. W. 1005; Graves v. Lebanon Nat. Bank (1873) 10 Bush (Ky.) 23, 19 Am. Rep. 50.

And the rule was laid down in Bryant v. Crosby (1858) 36 Me. 562, 58 Am. Dec. 767, that a concealment which discharges a surety is one of facts known to the other party, and not known to the surety, and known to be of a character to increase materially the risk beyond that assumed in the usual course of business of that kind, where there is a suitable opportunity to make known such facts to the surety.

Where the obligee resides in a city distant from that of the residence of the principal and the sureties, and the contract of suretyship is procured by the principal, and no inquiry made by the surety of the obligee, the latter is not ordinarily required to volunteer information to the surety, but may assume that the principal has disclosed the facts. Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Mabbett (1864) 18 Wis. 667.

To a similar effect is Booth v. Storrs (1874) 75 Ill. 438, holding that where the surety and the obligee reside in distant cities, the one from the other, and the obligee accepts the contract from the principal, signed by a surety, in the usual course of business, the obligee may presume ordinarily, in the absence of inquiry, that the surety is informed of the facts.

Also in Magee v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. (1876) 92 U. S. 98, 28 L. ed. 699, it was held that if there is no opportunity for the obligee to make disclosures, or any inquiry by the surety, before the delivery of the obligation, as, for instance, if the obligee resides in a distant city, and the contract, executed by the principal and surety, is sent to the obligee by mail, the latter may presume that the surety knew all that he desired to know, and was content to give the instrument without further information, and he is not under an obligation to make any communication to the surety; in other words, if there is no misrepresentation by the obligee, mere nondisclosure under these circumstances will not amount to a fraud on the surety.

And where the surety's signature was procured by the principal, who delivered the contract to the obligee, and the surety and the obligee were not in each other's presence, and had no communication, it was held in Smith v. First Nat. Bank (1899) 107 Ky. 257, 53 S. W. 648, that the surety was not released on the ground of concealment by the obligee.

But whether a failure of an obligee to disclose facts known to him is fraudulent depends largely on the character of the facts concealed, and cases may arise in which it is the duty of an obligee to disclose to the surety facts known to the former, notwithstanding the surety makes no inquiry. Screwmen's Benev. Asso. v. Smith (1888) 70 Tex. 168, 7 S. W. 793.

And that the nondisclosure by the obligee may amount to fraud, discharging the surety, even though there is no prior communication between them, if the contract signed by the surety is on its face such as would likely mislead the surety, see Damon v. Empire State Surety Co. (1914) 161 App. Div. 875, 146 N. Y. Supp. 996, under II. supra.

And if the obligee stands by in silence when in its presence, at the time of executing the contract of suretyship, material misrepresentations are made by the principal to the surety, to induce him to sign the contract, and the statements made are known to the obligee to be false, the surety is discharged. First Nat. Bank v. Terry (1905) 135 Fed. 621.

So, if the obligee stands by in silence when the surety, at the time of executing the contract, shows by statements that he is under a misapprehension of a material fact affecting the contract of suretyship, the nondisclosure by the obligee of the truth is a fraud on the surety, and may relieve him from the contract. Selma Sav. Bank v. Harlan (1914) 167 Iowa, 673, 149 N. W. 882.

And if the obligee and surety were brought into such connection with each other as to make the concealment of material facts on the part of the former equivalent to an assertion by him of the nonexistence of the facts concealed, the contract of suretyship will be avoided. Harrison v. Lumbermen & M. Ins. Co. (1879) 8 Mo. App. 37.

IV. Duty of surety to make inquiry; obligee's duty when inquiry is made, or information volunteered.

While the obligee must act in entire good faith, yet the surety has no right ordinarily to rely for information upon the obligee's duty to make disclosure of all the facts affecting the risk, but must himself make inquiry. The authorities generally support the view that the surety must make inquiry, ordinarily, if he desires further information. See on this point the following, among other cases:

United States.—Magee v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. (1876) 92 U. S. 93, 23 L. ed. 699.

New Mexico.—Wells, F. & Co's Exp. v. Walker (1898) 9 N. M. 456, 54 Pac. 875.

New York.—Western New York L. Ins. Co. v. Clinton (1876) 66 N. Y. 326; Howe Mach. Co. v. Farrington (1880) 82 N. Y. 121; Bostwick v. Van Voorhis (1883) 91 N. Y. 853.

Ohio.—Higgins v. Drucker (1901) 12 Ohio C. D. 220, 22 Ohio C. C. 112.

Texas.—United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Means & F. I. Works (1910) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 132 S. W. 536.

Washington.—Oregon Nat. Bank v. Gardner (1895) 13 Wash. 154, 42 Pac. 545.

West Virginia.—Warren v. Branch (1879) 15 W. Va. 21.

England.—Kirby v. Duke of Marlborough (1831) 2 Maule & S. 18, 105 Eng. Reprint, 289, 14 Revised Rep. 573; Stokesleigh Parish v. Stoddart (1853) 2 Week. Rep. 14; Welton v. Somes (1888) 5 Times L. R. 46; Seaton v. Heath [1899] 1 Q. B. 782, 68 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 631, 47 Week. Rep. 487, 80 L. T. N. S. 579, 15 Times L. R. 297, 4 Com. Cas. 193, per Romer, L. J., reversed on other grounds in [1900] A. C. 135.

Canada.—Cunningham v. Buchanan (1864) 10 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 523.

It was said in Magee v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. (U. S.) supra, that while the rights of the surety are zealously guarded, and the slightest fraud on the part of the obligee, touching the contract of suretyship, annuls it, there is a duty on the part of the surety to make inquiry; he must not rest supine, close his eyes, and fail to seek important information within his reach; and if he does this, and a loss occurs, he cannot, in the absence of fraud on the part of the obligee, set up as a defense facts then first learned, which he ought to have known and considered before entering into the contract.

And it is said in Stedman v. Boone (1875) 49 Ind. 469, that while strict integrity and complete fairness are, as a rule of law, due from creditors to one who is about to become surety for the debtor, yet this does not excuse the surety from reasonable attention to the circumstances and reasonable diligence to inform himself as to the prudence of the act he is about to do; and that where he may ascertain from those present all the facts necessary to shield himself from fraud, and is put on his guard by the circumstances, he should make inquiry.

The fact that a guaranty is required should put the guarantor on the alert, unless he is prepared to place entire confidence in the principal. Cunningham v. Buchanan (1864) 10 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 523.

And in Screwmen's Benev. Asso. v. Smith (1888) 70 Tex. 168, 7 S. W. 793, approved in United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Means & F. I. Works (Tex.) supra, it was said that the fact that surety is required, of itself, would seem to be sufficient notification, to one proposing to become surety, that the obligee is not willing to trust solely to the skill, diligence, or honesty of the person of whom security is required.

Where the surety was put on inquiry, and referred by the obligee to persons from whom he could have obtained information regarding a transaction between the principal parties, on which he relied for release from liability subsequently incurred, but neglected to investigate, it was held that he was not discharged. Wason v. Wareing (1852) 15 Beav. 151, 51 Eng. Reprint, 494.

But where the obligee is applied to by the proposed surety for information, and he assumes to answer the inquiry at all, or where the obligee volunteers information to the surety, he must make a full and frank communication of the material facts within his knowledge bearing on the risk; otherwise, the surety may avoid liability on the ground of fraud. Magee v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. (1876) 92 U. S. 93, 23 L. ed. 699; COOPER PROCESS CO. v. CHICAGO BONDING & INS. CO. (reported herewith), ante, 1477; Bank of Monroe v. Anderson Bros. Min. & R. Co. (1885) 65 Iowa, 692, 22 N. W. 929; Barnes v. Century Sav. Bank (1910) 149 Iowa, 367, 128 N. W. 541; Lingenfelter Bros. v. Bowman (1912) 156 Iowa, 649, 187 N. W. 946; Putney v. Schmidt (1911) 16 N. M. 400, 120 Pac. 720; Domestic Sewing Mach. Co. v. Jackson (1885) 15 Lea (Tenn.) 418; Remington Sewing Mach. Co. v. Kezer-tee (1880) 49 Wis. 409, 5 N. W. 809; Brillion Lumber Co. v. Barnard (1907) 131 Wis. 284, 111 N. W. 483.

V. Motive for nondisclosure.

While, as above shown, to discharge the surety the nondisclosure on the part of the obligee must amount to fraud, yet it is not necessary that he should be guilty of actual fraud. If he conceals facts which under the particular circumstances it is his duty to disclose, the concealment will be deemed fraudulent in law, though it may not be so in fact.

If facts material to the surety are concealed by the obligee when it is his duty to disclose them, his motive in concealing the same is immaterial; and an instruction is erroneous that the concealment, to discharge the surety, must be wilful and intentional, with a view to the obligee's advantage. Railton v. Mathews (1844) 10 Clark & F. 934, 8 Eng. Reprint, 993.

And the rule is recognized in Jungk v. Holbrook (1897) 15 Utah, 198, 62 Am. St. Rep. 921, 49 Pac. 305, that the surety may be discharged because of the fraudulent concealment of material facts by the obligee, although the concealment was not wilful or intentional on the part of the obligee, or with a view of advantage to himself.

To the same effect is Harrison v. Lumbermen & M. Ins. Co. (1879) 8 Mo. App. 37.

The concealment which will avoid a guaranty need not necessarily have been with a view to the advantage of the obligee, if it prejudices the surety. Howe Mach. Co. v. Farrington (1880) 82 N. Y. 121; Damon v. Empire State Surety Co. (1914) 161 App. Div. 875, 146 N. Y. Supp. 996.

See also Warren v. Branch (1879) 15 W. Va. 21, to the effect that if the dealings between parties are such as to lead the obligee, if a reasonable man, to believe that the principal must have used fraud in procuring the surety to enter into the contract, and such fraud has been used, it will vitiate the contract as to the surety, although actual fraud is not traced to the obligee.

VI. Nature of information concealed.

There are a number of cases to the effect that the obligee is not bound voluntarily to communicate to the surety circumstances not connected with the transaction between the obligee and principal, to which the suretyship relates; and this seems ordinarily to be the rule, even though the extraneous facts not disclosed might render the position of the surety more hazardous, and would, if known by him, probably have an important influence on his decision whether or not to execute the contract. Magee v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. (1876) 92 U. S. 93, 23 L. ed. 699; Harrison v. Lumbermen & M. Ins. Co. (1879) 8 Mo. App. 37; Domestic Sewing Mach. Co. v. Jackson (1885) 15 Lea (Tenn.) 418; Jungk v. Holbrook (1897) 15 Utah, 198, 62 Am. St. Rep. 921, 49 Pac. 305; Warren v. Branch (1879) 15 W. Va. 21; Wythes v. Labouchere (1859) 3 De G. & J. 593, 44 Eng. Reprint, 397, 5 Jur. N. S. 499, 7 Week. Rep. 271. See, in this connection, VII. a, supra.

The facts concealed must, of course, be material. Chace v. Brooks (1849) 5 Cush. (Mass.) 43; Whitcomb v. Shultz (1915) 138 C. C. A. 510, 223 Fed. 268, petition for a writ of certiorari denied in (1915) 238 U. S. 632, 59 L. ed. 1498, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 987.

And in order for the concealment to be material so as to release the surety, it must be of some fact or circumstance immediately affecting the liability of the surety, and bearing directly upon the particular transaction to which the suretyship attaches. Franklin Bank v. Stevens (1855) 39 Me. 532; Hubble v. First Nat. Bank (1888) 9 Ky. L. Rep. 766; Lachman v. Block (1895) 47 La. Ann. 505, 28 L.R.A. 255, 17 So. 153.

Neither misrepresentation as to, nor concealment of, an immaterial matter, will release a surety; the concealment must be material or inducing. Sherman v. Smith (1918) — Iowa, —, 169 N. W. 216, where the indebtedness not disclosed was trifling in comparison with the amount of the business.

If the facts concealed do not increase the surety's risk, and cannot fairly be considered as likely to influence the surety in deciding whether or not it would accept the risk, failure of the obligee to disclose such facts cannot be regarded as fraud. Baglin v. Title Guaranty & S. Co. (1909) 166 Fed. 356, affirmed in (1909) 102 C. C. A. 182, 178 Fed. 682. See this case, under VII. f, infra.

Before the omission to disclose a material fact by the creditor will operate as a fraud and discharge the surety for the debtor, the fact must be such as in some way to affect the liability of the surety, to his detriment. Springfield Engine & Thresher Co. v. Park (1891) 3 Ind. App. 173, 29 N. E. 444.

And it was said in Comstock v. Gage (1878) 91 Ill. 328, that in order that failure to communicate a fact to a surety should have the effect of a fraud upon him, and vitiate the contract, it must be a fact which necessarily would have the effect of increasing the responsibility of the surety, or operating to the prejudice of his interests.

VII. Illustrations.

a. Matters relating to solvency and credit of principal in general.

As to failure of the obligee to disclose to a proposed surety for a contractor that the latter was already in default, see VII. b, infra; and as to undisclosed pre-existing debts, see, for cases of contracts of sale, VII. c, infra, and, for cases of loans generally, VII. d, infra. In this connection, see also VI. supra.

The cases in general hold that the obligee is not ordinarily bound voluntarily to communicate to a proposed surety matters affecting the credit and solvency of the principal.

In Van Arsdale v. Howard (1843) 5 Ala. 596, the court declined to adopt the broad principle, assumed in an instruction, that when one is taking a note or obligation with security, and happens to know circumstances unfavorable to the credit, solvency, or responsibility of the principal, which are unknown to the person becoming security, and does not communicate them to the latter, such omission to make disclosure is a fraud which vitiates the contract.

The obligee is not bound voluntarily to inform the surety of any matter affecting the general credit of the principal. Domestic Sewing Mach. Co. v. Jackson (1885) 15 Lea (Tenn.) 418.

The rule that mere nondisclosure on the part of the obligee will not discharge the surety, even though the latter acts in ignorance of the true situation, unless there is a duty under the particular circumstances for the obligee to make disclosure, is illustrated in cases involving the question of the duty of one taking a note to communicate the fact of the principal's insolvency to one assuming the obligation of surety. The authorities hold that there is no duty on the payee of a note, unsolicited, to communicate to an intended surety the fact of the principal's insolvency. Ham v. Greve (1870) 34 Ind. 18; Sebald v. Citizens Deposit Bank (1907) 31 Ky. L. Rep. 1244, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 376, 105 S. W. 130; First Nat. Bank v. Johnson (1903) 133 Mich. 700, 103 Am. St. Rep. 468, 95 N. W. 975; Farmers' & D. Nat. Bank v. Braden (1891) 145 Pa. 473, 22 Atl. 1045. See also Palatine Ins. Co. v. Crittenden (1896) 18 Mont. 413, 45 Pac. 555, and Warren v. Branch (1879) 15 W. Va. 21.

The rule is stated in Roper v. Sangamon Lodge (1879) 91 Ill. 518, 33 Am. Rep. 60, as follows: "If a person, knowing another to be utterly insolvent, proposed to credit him if he would procure sureties, he cannot be held to have acted in bad faith by failing to apprise the surety that his principal is utterly insolvent. We presume no one would regard such a failure to apprise the surety of the fact of the insolvency of the principal, as a fraud, and yet, had the surety known the fact, he would probably not have indorsed for the principal. And this is held not to be a fraud, because it was the folly of the surety not to have learned the financial standing of the principal. The avenues of information were open to him, and it was his duty to have used the means to inform himself, and, failing to do so, he must suffer the consequences of his inaction. In such a case, however, if the person extending the credit were to use any artifice to throw the surety off his guard, and to lull him into a false security, and he was thereby deceived, that would amount to a fraud. But mere failure to communicate the fact in such a case does not amount to bad faith."

The principle was applied in Bank of Monroe v. Gifford (1887) 72 Iowa, 750, 32 N. W. 669, in holding that the apprehended or known insolvency of a stockholder and manager of a corporation, who procured the signature of another as surety to a promissory note made by the corporation, and to which the manager was not a party, did not affect with suspicion the undertaking of the surety so as to charge the creditor receiving the note with any duty to inform the surety as to the extent of the risk he was about to assume.

In Farmers' & D. Nat. Bank v. Braden (Pa.) supra, it was held that, where a bank took a note from one of its depositors to cover an overdraft of his account, it was not bound to communicate the depositor's impaired credit to the sureties on the note, where they made no inquiry of the bank as to their principal's financial condition, or the state of his account.

So, in First Nat. Bank v. Johnson (1903) 133 Mich. 700, 103 Am. St. Rep. 468, 95 N. W. 975, supra, the liability, on a renewal note, of a surety who had also signed the original note, was held not to be affected by the payee's failure to inform him that one of the principals had lost her property since the making of the first note.

So far as the general character or reputation of the principal is concerned, it is to be assumed that the surety has informed himself, or, if not, that he is willing to take the risk involved in such knowledge as he may have. Sebald v. Citizens Deposit Bank (1907) 31 Ky. L. Rep. 1244, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 376, 105 S. W. 130, supra.

And the mere fact that the principal is indebted to the obligee does not impose on the latter the duty to volunteer information thereof to the surety. Goebel Brewing Co. v. McLean (1900) 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 38.

That the obligee did not disclose to the surety, when the latter guaranteed an account, that the principal was already indebted to the obligee in a large sum on account of default in a previous contract, for the performance of which also the same sureties were responsible, no inquiry with reference thereto having been made, was held in Southwestern Co. v. Wynnegar (1916) 111 Miss. 412, 71 So. 737, not to discharge the surety, for the obligee had the right to presume that the surety had ascertained from the principal the state of the previous contract.

The surety on a bond given to secure advances to the principal should make inquiry at the time he executes the bond, if he desires to know whether the account between the parties is clear at that time, and it seems that he is not discharged on account of the existence of a debt between the parties which is not disclosed to him, in the absence of inquiry. Kirby v. Marlborough (1813) 2 Maule & S. 18, 105 Eng. Reprint, 289, 14 Revised Rep. 573.

And it was held in Cunningham v. Buchanan (1864) 10 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 523, that in the absence of inquiry by the surety, or evidence of communication between him and the obligee, or of the wilful or designed suppression of facts by the obligee, the surety was not discharged because of the nondisclosure of an indebtedness from the principal to the obligee, at the time the contract of suretyship was executed.

So, the fact that the obligee did not disclose to the surety, at the time the contract of suretyship was made, that the principal was indebted to the obligee, was held in Stokesleigh Parish v. Stoddart (1853) 2 Week. Rep.

(Eng.) 14, not to discharge the surety, if the obligee was not guilty of falsehood or deception.

It was held also in Domestic Sewing Mach. Co. v. Jackson (1885) 15 Lea (Tenn.) 418, that fraud could not be inferred so as to discharge the surety, from the fact that the obligee did not disclose an indebtedness of the principal existing at the time the contract of suretyship was made, on a prior transaction between the principal and obligee, in the absence of inquiry by the surety on the matter, even though the obligee had opportunity to make the disclosure.

Mere nondisclosure of a bank to a surety on a cash account of its customer, of a prior indebtedness from the customer to the bank, which the latter anticipated would be paid through the opening of the new account, it was held in Hamilton v. Watson (1845) 12 Clark & F. 109, 8 Eng. Reprint, 1839, would not discharge the surety, in the absence of allegations and proof that there was a secret contract that the new credit should be applied on the old debt.

And it was held that there was no duty of disclosure on the part of the obligee, and that the surety was not discharged, where one whose bank account was overdrawn, and who was also indebted to the bank in a large amount in respect to certain accommodation bills, requested an acquaintance, having no knowledge of the former's financial position nor his indebtedness to the bank, to guarantee his account to the bank, and the surety signed the contract, believing that the overdraft was the sole debt, the bank not disclosing the indebtedness on the bills. Royal Bank v. Greenshields [1914] S. C. 259, 51 Scot. L. R. 260, [1914] 1 Scot. L. T. 74, Scot's Dig. 1904-14, col. 142, Mews, Eng. Case Law Dig. 1911-15, col. 1213.

It was held that a surety who guaranteed payment of any deficiency in sums advanced by a bank to a planter was not discharged by failure of the bank to disclose to the surety, at the time the contract of suretyship was executed, that the principal had written to the bank, informing it of an estimated deficiency, where the surety was procured by the principal, and not by the bank, and made no inquiry of the latter. Welton v. Somes (1888) 5 Times L. R. (Eng.) 46.

And it was held in Van Arsdale v. Howard (1843) 5 Ala. 596, that a surety whose signature to a note was obtained by the principal was not discharged from his obligation, by the mere fact that one who was agent of the obligee to obtain the security permitted the surety to sign the contract, without disclosing to him the fact that he, the agent, had a mortgage on the property of the principal to secure himself personally, of which mortgage the surety was not aware.

The obligee is under no obligation to inform the intended surety of matters affecting the credit of the principal, not connected with the transaction in question. Wythes v. Labouchere (1859) 3 De G. & J. 593, 44 Eng. Reprint, 1397, 5 Jur. N. S. 499, 7 Week. Rep. 271.

Where a creditor agreed to continue an action brought by him against the debtor, if the latter would procure sureties for the debt, which he did, it was held that the sureties were not discharged because the obligee did not disclose to them the fact that he had already obtained a judgment against the debtor in another court, since the duty to make disclosure did not arise in the absence of inquiry by the sureties. Oregon Nat. Bank v. Gardner (1895) 13 Wash. 154, 42 Pac. 545.

The rule that before the omission to disclose a material fact by the creditor will operate as a fraud and discharge the surety for the debtor, the fact must be such as in some way to affect the liability of the surety to his detriment, was applied in Springfield Engine & Thresher Co. v. Park (1891) 3 Ind. App. 173, 29 N. E. 444, where it was held that a surety on a note was not discharged by the concealment by the payee, at the time of its execution, that the latter had taken other notes from the debtor, all of which, including the note signed by the surety, were secured by a chattel mortgage of certain property of the debtor, the mortgage providing that, in the event any of the notes should not be fully paid at maturity, all the notes should, at the option of the mortgagee, become due, even though, on the failure to pay one of the other notes, this option was exercised and the mortgage foreclosed prior to the maturity of the surety's obligation.

And an accidental omission by the creditor of a small amount from the statement of indebtedness, when applied to by the intending guarantor, which does not increase the latter's liability nor affect the guaranty, will not discharge him. Chace v. Brooks (1849) 5 Cush. (Mass.) 43.

It was held that the surety was not discharged, where the obligee's agent represented to the proposed surety that the principal was indebted to it in the sum of $4,500 only, whereas the principal had, without the knowledge of the obligee or its agent, unlawfully obtained possession of personal property of the obligee in a large amount, and was liable to it in an action for tort or on indebitatus assumpsit, since such liability was not, strictly speaking, a debt, and, the obligee not being aware of it, but having, in good faith, stated the amount of the indebtedness of the principal, the language used should be construed in its natural meaning, and not as evasive or fraudulent through concealment of the facts. Isaac Harter Co. v. Pearson (1904) 26 Ohio C. C. 601.

In an action against a surety who had guaranteed payment of rent, it was held in Roper v. Cox (1882) Ir. L. R. 10 C. L. 200, that a plea was subject to demurrer, which alleged that prior to the making of the contract of guaranty the principal had been a tenant of the obligee for the same premises, and had been guilty of gross irregularities and delay in payment of rent, and, at the time of the making of the guaranty, was in arrears in a large sum, all of which was known to the obligee, who did not disclose it to the surety, although the latter was ignorant of the same and would not have entered into the contract had he known of it. The decision is based on the ground that the plea did not show a fraudulent concealment necessary to avoid the contract.

But it was held in Cashin v. Perth (1859) 7 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 340, that the surety on a bond of a lessee of tolls was entitled to have the bond delivered up for cancelation because of the nondisclosure by the obligee, at the time the contract of suretyship was made, that the principal was in default for the same tolls during the preceding year.

If the obligee undertakes to give proposed sureties information in regard to the principal's financial condition, he must disclose all the facts and circumstances affecting the risk, within his knowledge. Putney v. Schmidt (1911) 16 N. M. 400, 120 Pac. 720. See, in this connection, IV. supra.

And in some other cases of the class considered at this point, the circumstances have been such that the obligee's nondisclosure has been held to discharge the surety.

Thus, it was held in First Nat. Bank v. Terry (1905) 135 Fed. 621, that a creditor of a corporation, which stood by in silence and permitted a stockholder to sign an agreement securing the debt, in reliance on representations made by the president of the corporation in the creditor's presence, as to the corporation's solvency, which, to the knowledge of the creditor, were false and fraudulent, could not hold the stockholder liable on the contract.

And where a bank, upon discovering that notes held by it contained a forged indorsement, investigated the financial condition of the maker of the notes, whom it found to be insolvent, and had opportunity to disclose the fact of the forgery to a third person proposed by the maker as surety for other notes, but did not make the disclosure, although there was evidence from which the jury might have found that the bank had reason to believe that the proposed surety thought he was indorsing merely renewal notes in the ordinary course of business, by one in good standing at the bank, it was held error to direct a verdict for the bank in an action against the surety. Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Van Slyke (1888) 49 Hun, 7, 1 N. Y. Supp. 508. The court applied the rule that, where one taking security knows the facts and is personally present, having an opportunity to inform the proposed surety, and having reason to believe that the latter does not know the facts and is being deceived and defrauded into becoming a surety, it is the obligee's duty to inform him of the facts, and the acceptance of him as surety without such disclosure is a fraud availing the contract.

Also, where a bank made an additional loan to its creditor, knowing that he was insolvent, for the purpose of securing an illegal preference and of obtaining security for prior unsecured indebtedness, and, as a part of the new loan, accepted notes of the debtor with surety, without disclosing to the latter the circumstances of the transaction, it was held that the latter would be presumed to have acted on the belief that the transaction was one occurring in the usual course of business, subjecting him to the ordinary risk attending it, and that the failure of the bank to advise the surety of the facts, which materially increased his risk, was such a fraud on the surety as released him from the contract. First Nat. Bank v. Clark (1915) 59 Colo. 455, 149 Pac. 612.

So, it was held that the surety was discharged, where the contract of suretyship purported to have reference to an agreement made as of the date of the contract, whereas in fact the agreement was merely a renewal of a previous contract, as to which the principal was in default. Damon v. Empire State Surety Co. (1914) 161 App. Div. 875, 146 N. Y. Supp. 996.

If the obligee stands by in silence when the surety, at the time of executing the contract, by a statement as to the principal's indebtedness, shows that he is laboring under a misapprehension as to the amount of such indebtedness, which is known to the obligee to be a much larger amount, such concealment amounts to a fraud on the surety, relieving him from his contract. Selma Sav. Bank v. Harlan (1914) 167 Iowa, 673, 149 N. W. 882, where a statement as to the amount of the principal's indebtedness was made in the presence of a bank cashier, by one signing as surety on a note to the bank.

And where the obligee concealed material facts so that the principal was held out as a trustworthy person about to embark in a profitable business, whereas the business had been in existence for some time, and had been so disastrous as to extinguish the principal's credit, and, when the surety hesitated to sign the obligation, the obligee, anticipating further inquiry, represented that it was "all right," it was held that the surety was discharged. Goebel Brewing Co. v. McLean (1900) 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 38.

b. Contractors' bonds.

Different conclusions have been reached on the question whether a surety on a contractor's bond is discharged because of the nondisclosure by the obligee of facts known to him, the result being dependent on the application of the rules previously considered, to the circumstances of the particular case.

Where a guaranty company became surety on a contractor's bond four months after the date for completion of the contract, performance of which the company guaranteed, it was held that the surety was put on notice of nonfulfilment of the contract up to that time, and it was its duty to make inquiry if it desired further information as to the reasons therefor, and was not discharged because the obligee failed to disclose circumstances known to it, tending to show that the contractor was negligent, dilatory, or unskilful. United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. Means & F. Iron Works (1910) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 132 S. W. 536.

And sureties on a contractor's bond were held liable in Tooke v. Burke (1917) 141 La. 746, 75 So. 668, where the contractor's bid of $4,640 was considerably less than any other bid, and the architects had informed the obligee that the building could not be constructed for less than $7,000, and that the materials alone would cost as much as the bid, there being no misrepresentation on the obligee's part, although she had reason to know, because of the circumstances stated, that the contractor was bound to lose. The obligee, under these circumstances, upon the delivery to her of the bond for the building contract, was held not bound to investigate to ascertain whether the signatures of the sureties had been obtained by fraud.

So, where a surety on a contractor's bond had its expert make an estimate of the value of the work which the principal had undertaken to perform, and could, as well as the obligee, have determined whether the principal was liable to default because of too low a contract price, it was held that the surety could not be discharged on the ground that the obligee was aware that the price was too low, and withheld this information from the surety at the time the latter executed the bond. Higgins v. Drucker (1901) 22 Ohio C. C. 112, 12 Ohio C. D. 220.

But it was held in Stiff v. Eastbourne (1868) 17 Week. Rep. (Eng.) 68, 19 L. T. N. S. 408, that a surety on a contractor's bond for the construction of drainage works was discharged, where the contract provided for the making of payments on the certificate of the surveyor of the obligee, and the latter did not disclose to the surety the existence of a prior contract made by it with a third person interested in the property through which the drain passed, by which the latter's surveyor was to be associated with that of the obligee in joint superintendence and control. The injunction granted against enforcement of the bond was dissolved on appeal, reported in (1869) 17 Week. Rep. 428, 20 L. T. N. S. 339, on the ground, among others, that the defense of concealment was equally open at law by way of plea.

And it was held that the surety was discharged, where a bond given to secure performance of a street paving contract on its face indicated that it was given to secure faithful performance of future work, and neither the principal nor the obligee, although they both had knowledge thereof, informed the surety, who was ignorant of that fact, that the contractor had already defaulted. Park Paving Co. v. Kraft (1918) 262 Pa. 178, 105 Atl. 39.

The question whether the surety company's risk was so increased by concealment of the amount of the contract price as to relieve the company from liability on the contractor's bond, it was held in Equitable Surety Co. v. Muddy Bottom Swamp Land Dist. (1916) 145 C. C. A. 221, 231 Fed. 38, should have been submitted to the jury, where there was evidence tending to show that the written contract, which specified a price of $19,500, was shown to the surety company before it executed the bond, when, as a matter of fact, the principal was to be paid only $18,000.

The principle that a surety on a contractor's bond, guaranteeing performance of the contract, is discharged if the obligee fails to disclose the existence of a "side agreement," varying the time and amount of the instalment payments fixed in the disclosed contract, is approved in Union Oil Co. v. Pacific Surety Co. (1920) — Cal. —, 187 Pac. 14. But in this case it was held that the "side agreement" was not that of the obligee, an oil company, but that of another corporation, a transportation company, although 60 per cent of the stock of the latter was owned by the oil company, and the same person was vice president and general manager of both corporations; so that the evidence did not justify the finding that the real terms of payment to be made by the obligee were not those disclosed.

c. Contracts of sale.

The doctrine that the failure to state a material fact, when there is some occasion or circumstance imposing the legal duty to speak, is equivalent to concealment of the fact and amounts to fraud equally with an affirmative falsehood, was applied in the reported case (COPPER PROCESS CO. v. CHICAGO BONDING & INS. CO. ante, 1477), to a case where an obligee in a bond for the performance of a contract of sale failed to disclose, when asked by the bonding company whether any advances had been made against the contract it was about to assure, an underlying agreement by which the purchaser had deposited a large sum of money to the credit of the seller, even if, on the purchaser's construction of this contract, it had not made advances to the seller and its answer that no advance had been made might be literally true. The court said that, the question having been asked for the purpose of ascertaining the risks involved in the situation, any equivocal, evasive, or misleading answer, calculated to convey a false impression, even though literally true as far as it went, was fraud; that the agreement was a fact which showed the financial and contractual relations of the two companies, material to the risks which the bonding company incurred, and that failure to disclose this fact, under the circumstances of being asked for it, was an active concealment of the fact.

In the case of a contract of sale on credit, if a secret bargain is made between the creditor and principal, based upon the consideration of the sale, or upon any other valuable consideration, whereby a longer time is to be given for payment than that stipulated in the contract seen and signed by the surety, the concealment of such bargain will discharge the surety from his obligation. Peck v. Durett (1840) 9 Dana (Ky.) 486.

And it was held that the surety was discharged where one who guaranteed payment by the vendee, in a contract for the purchase of iron, was not informed of a secret agreement between the vendor and the vendee for payment by the latter of 10 shillings per ton beyond the market price, the extra payment to be applied on an old debt between the parties, since the effect of this secret agreement was to divert a portion of the vendee's funds, rendering him less able to perform the contract, and thereby increasing the responsibility of the surety. Pidcock v. Bishop (1825) 3 Barn. & C. 605, 107 Eng. Reprint, 857, 5 Dowl. & R. 505, 3 L. J. K. B. 109, 27 Revised Rep. 430.

It was held in Jackson v. Duchaire

(1790) 3 T. R. 551, 100 Eng. Reprint, 727, that a private agreement between a vendor and purchaser for payment of a larger sum, not disclosed to one who advanced money to the purchaser under the belief that the sum advanced was the entire purchase price, was a fraud on the party making the advancement, and was not enforceable.

And where a surety on a bond for purchase money set up as a defense to an action on the bond that the principal had given a bond for an additional sum, which he and the obligee agreed should be kept secret from the surety, the jury were instructed that if the surety was induced to execute the contract by the concealment of the other bond, and the obligee was a party to the concealment, the surety was not liable. Spencer v. Handley (1842) 4 Mann & G. 414, 134 Eng. Reprint, 169, 11 L. J. C. P. N. S. 250. In this case, however, the surety was held liable on the ground that the obligee was not shown to be a party to the fraud.

It was held also that the surety was discharged, where a secret partner in two firms negotiated a contract of sale and purchase between the firms, and obtained a surety for the performance of the contract who was ignorant of the double relationship, the obligee being chargeable with notice thereof, but concealing it from the surety. Jungk v. Holbrook (1897) 15 Utah, 198, 62 Am. St. Rep. 921, 49 Pac. 305.

If the payee of a note obtains the signature of a surety thereto, knowing that the latter believes that she is executing a note which, for its full amount, is for goods then purchased by her son, the principal debtor, from the payee, when the note in fact includes a pre-existing debt owing by the principal to the payee, the failure to disclose the facts amounts to a fraud on the surety, releasing her from the contract. Fassnacht v. Emsing Gagen Co. (1897) 18 Ind. App. 80, 63 Am. St. Rep. 322, 46 N. E. 45, 47 N. E. 480.

But the rule that, to discharge the surety because of the concealment of the obligee, the facts concealed must be such as are peculiarly within the knowledge of the obligee, and such as the surety has the right to rely on the obligee for information regarding, was applied in Hubble v. First Nat. Bank (1888) 9 Ky. L. Rep. 766, in holding that the contract of suretyship was enforceable where a surety for money advanced by the seller of a mill for use in stocking the mill relied on false representations of the seller, made to him in another independent transaction, as to the value and earning capacity of the mill, although the surety was ignorant of the facts and relied on the representations, since the true value of the property and its unfitness for successful operation were matters about which the surety could inform himself, and it was his duty to investigate.

And where there was nothing on the face of the bond given by a surety to secure the purchase price of land, which would naturally induce him to believe that the vendor's lien was to be reserved, it was held that the contract of suretyship was not vitiated as to the surety by failure of the vendor, unsolicited, to communicate to the surety the fact of waiver of the lien, if the vendor had no fraudulent motive in withholding the information. Warren v. Branch (1879) 15 W. Va. 21.

d. Loans; usury or secret commission..

It was held that the surety was discharged, where one who guaranteed repayment of a loan was not informed that the entire amount of the loan was not advanced to the principal, but that approximately one third of it was retained by the lender in payment of an old debt to him, and the surety was led to believe, through the reading to him in the presence of the principal and the obligee, of recitals on a deed given to secure the loan, that the old debt had been paid. Stone v. Compton (1838) 5 Bing. N. C. 142, 182 Eng. Reprint, 1059, 6 Scott, 846. It will be observed that this case presents a situation in which it seems that the obligee might be said not only to have concealed material facts, but to have fraudulently misrepresented the facts.

And it was held that the surety was discharged, where the obligee, which had made a loan of $70,000, at 6 per cent, entered into a contract with a surety for repayment of the loan, the contract reciting the above facts, but failing to disclose the additional fact, of which the surety was ignorant, that the obligee had retained the sum of $1,400 as a commission for making the loan. Atlantic Trust & D. Co. v. Union Trust & Title Corp. (1909) 110 Va. 286, 135 Am. St. Rep. 937, 67 S. E. 182.

But it is held in Coats v. McKee (1866) 26 Ind. 223, that the fact that a lender of money accepts a note of the borrower with surety, without volunteering information to the latter that the borrower has given or is to give another note for interest on the first note, at the rate of 14 per cent, will not discharge the surety.

And an alleged secret agreement by the principal of a note, to pay 10 per cent interest instead of 8 per cent, as stipulated in the note, was held in Fisher v. Denver Nat. Bank (1896) 22 Colo. 373, 45 Pac. 440, not to release the surety on the note, among the grounds of the decision being the fact that the payee was not shown to be a party to the fraud, if there was any, and was justified in supposing that the surety knew of the arrangement for the payment of extra interest.

It should be observed that consideration of the question whether secret usury will discharge the surety leads beyond the scope of the present annotation, because the question may apparently depend on the effect of usury rather than on the effect of the concealment. For instance, if the usury merely renders the contract void as to any claim for payment beyond the legal rate, the surety may not be discharged, as some courts have held, because his risk is not thereby increased. The usurious part of the contract may seemingly, so far as the surety is concerned, be disregarded as surplusage. Attention is called to this class of cases, without any intention to cover exhaustively the question of the effect on the surety of undisclosed usury.

Thus, in Richmond v. Standclift (1842) 14 Vt. 258, it was held that the surety on a note was not discharged by the fact that the principal and the payee had made a secret agreement for the payment of usurious interest, since the agreement to pay the additional interest beyond the legal rate was not a valid agreement, and did not increase the risk or responsibility of the surety.

And the concealment from the surety of the fact that usurious interest was calculated on the amount borrowed, and included in the amount shown on the face of the note given by the borrower, was held in Samuel v. Withers (1852) 16 Mo. 532, not to discharge the surety on the note.

But it was held in Denton v. Butler (1896) 99 Ga. 264, 25 S. E. 624, that a surety on a promissory note secretly tainted with usury, of which fact the surety had no knowledge, is discharged from liability, if the note contains a waiver of homestead, because the usury makes the waiver void, and thus renders the surety's risk greater than it would otherwise have been. To a similar effect are Lewis v. Brown (1892) 89 Ga. 115, 14 S. E. 881; Harrington v. Findley (1892) 89 Ga. 385, 15 S. E. 483; Howard v. Johnson (1892) 91 Ga. 319, 18 S. E. 132; Prather v. Smith (1897) 101 Ga. 283, 28 S. E. 857; Vaughan v. Farmers & M. Bank (1916) 146 Ga. 51, 90 S. E. 478; Whilden v. Milledgeville Bkg. Co. (1907) 3 Ga. App. 69, 59 S. E. 336; Hancock v. Bank of Tifton (1909) 6 Ga. App. 678, 65 S. E. 784; Norris v. Reed (1914) 14 Ga. App. 729, 82 S. E. 314; Bank of Omega v. Ford (1917) 20 Ga. App. 496, 93 S. E. 106; Duckett v. Martin (1919) 23 Ga. App. 630; 99 S. E. 151.

Among possibly other cases in Georgia, supporting the proposition that in an action on such a note it is incumbent on the plaintiff, in order to hold a surety liable, to prove affirmatively that the surety signed the note with knowledge of the usury, are Denton v. Butler (Ga.) supra; Prather v. Smith (1897) 101 Ga. 283, 28 S. E. 857, and Bank of Omega v. Ford (1917) 20 Ga. App. 496, 93 S. E. 106, supra.

It was held also in Harrington v. Findley (1892) 89 Ga. 385, 15 S. E. 483, supra, that the discharge of the surety in such a case did not depend on actual loss, but on the risk of loss to which he was exposed by reason of the concealed usury, and that therefore the surety was not prevented from taking advantage of the usury as a ground of discharge by the fact that the principal failed to plead it, or to assert his right to homestead and exemption on account of it, but submitted to a judgment against himself for the whole debt.

The above cases turn not so much on the duty of the obligee to disclose to the surety the real transaction, as on the effect on the contract of the facts concealed. This distinction is close in some cases, but it should be observed that it is impracticable in the present annotation to cover the various phases of the question as to the effect on the surety's contract of the concealed matter. There are other cases in Georgia which make this clearer. For example, see First Nat. Bank v. McEntire (1900) 112 Ga. 232, 37 S. E. 381, which holds that a surety who signs a note containing a waiver of homestead, and secretly tainted with usury, is not discharged from liability when the note is payable to a national bank, since his risk has not been increased, in view of the fact that the law of the state, to the effect that a waiver of homestead, when part of a usurious contract, is void, is not applicable to national banks.

See also Weldon v. Ayers (1902) 116 Ga. 181, 42 S. E. 473, holding that a surety on a note, who signs the same in ignorance of the fact that the contract between the payee and the maker is one providing for the payment of usury, is not, because this fact is concealed from him, discharged altogether from liability on the note; although, by a plea of usury, he may prevent a recovery against him of a sum greater than the principal of the debt and legal interest thereon.

c. Composition agreements.

Where a bank pretended to accept a certain percentage of its debt, the same as other creditors, with a view to induce them to enter into a composition, representing its willingness to advance, on security, a sum of money to pay the composition and to enable the debtor to carry on business, but secretly stipulated for payment of its debt in full, it was held that the concealment amounted to a fraud on the other creditors and on the guarantors, entitling the latter to release from the contract. Pendlebury v. Walker (1841) 4 Younge & C. Exch. 424, 160 Eng. Reprint, 1073.

So, it was held that the surety on a note, given by a debtor pursuant to a composition agreement with creditors, was discharged, where the basis of the settlement included a liability of a third party for which the debtor was not liable, and the debtor also gave his note for the balance of the amount which he owed, in addition to the percentage specified in the composition agreement, these facts not being disclosed to the surety. Doughty v. Savage (1859) 28 Conn. 146.

And it was held that the surety was discharged where an insolvent debtor entered into a composition agreement with all of his creditors, one of whom, instead of receiving his percentage in cash, as did the other creditors, accepted notes of the debtor, with sureties, and, by a secret agreement, concealed from the sureties, who were induced to sign in the belief that by the composition the debtor was released from the indebtedness, that the creditor received from the debtor a note for the balance of the indebtedness, with an agreement to surrender such note on being paid 25 per cent of its face value. Powers Dry-Goods Co. v. Harlin (1897) 68 Minn. 193, 64 Am. St. Rep. 460, 71 N. W. 16.

But where the surety, who resided in Chicago, solicited no information from the creditor, who resided in New York, and took the debtor's note, indorsed by the surety, in the usual course of business, it was held that the creditor had the right to suppose that the surety was informed of all the facts, and was not guilty of fraud in not disclosing to the surety that he had not entered into an agreement, as most of the other creditors had done, to compromise his claim on a 50 per cent basis by accepting notes of the debtor indorsed by the surety, but had accepted the debtor's individual note for the balance of his claim. Booth v. Storrs (1874) 75 Ill. 438.

And where an arrangement was made between a debtor and his creditor that the debtor should give a note with surety for 60 per cent of the indebtedness, and his individual note for the remaining 40 per cent, it was held that the sureties were not discharged by the failure of the creditor, of whom no inquiries were made by the sureties, to disclose the fact to the sureties that the debtor had given his individual note for the remainder of the indebtedness. Hubbard v. Fravell (1883) 12 Lea (Tenn.) 304.

f. Miscellaneous.

The rule that if an obligee makes a statement to a surety which, at the time it is made, is true, but which becomes untrue during the course of the negotiations because of a change of circumstances, the obligee, if aware of the change, is under a duty to disclose the same to the proposed surety, was applied in Davies v. London & P. M. Ins. Co. (1878) L. R. 8 Ch. Div. (Eng.) 469, 47 L. J. Ch. N. S. 511, 38 L. T. N. S. 478, 26 Week. Rep. 794, so as to discharge the sureties, where an insurance company, having discovered that one of its agents had failed to account for premiums collected, ordered the agent's arrest, whereupon friends of the latter offered to deposit a sum of money with the company to indemnify it, all the parties believing that there was probable cause for prosecution, and the company permitted the sureties to consummate the contract without disclosing to them a change of circumstances occurring during the negotiations, in that the company was advised by counsel that there was not ground for prosecution, and had withdrawn orders for the arrest.

The rule that the surety must make inquiry, where he may ascertain from those present at the time the contract is executed all the facts necessary to shield himself from fraud, and is put on his guard by circumstances, was applied in Stedman v. Boone (1875) 49 Ind. 469, where the surety for a debtor alleged fraud in the execution of the contract, in that he was not informed that the debtor at the time was under arrest.

And the rule that if the fact concealed does not increase the surety's risk, and is one that cannot fairly be considered as likely to influence the surety in deciding whether it would accept the risk, failure of the obligee to disclose the same cannot be regarded as fraud, was applied in Baglin v. Title Guaranty & S. Co. (1909) 166 Fed. 356, affirmed in (1909) 102 C. C. A. 182, 178 Fed. 682, where, a surety company having become bound for the return to the plaintiff of certain government bonds, it was held that failure of the plaintiff to disclose to the company an agreement that the principal might pay cash instead of returning the bonds would not relieve the surety, since the existence of this option on the part of the principal was not a material fact, and did not increase the risk, and since the surety company, even in the absence of such an agreement, would have had the option of payment in cash.

In an action by the payee against the surety of a note, it was held in Miller v. Gardner (1878) 49 Iowa, 234, that the surety was not liable if he signed the note, thinking that it was a renewal merely of other notes on which he was liable as surety, and which were renewed on the same day, if the plaintiff knew, or had good reason to believe, that he was signing the note under this mistake, and did not disclose the facts to him.

It was held in Conger v. Bean (1882) 58 Iowa, 321, 12 N. W. 284, that one who signed a note as surety after it had been executed by the principal was not liable thereon, if the payee, at the time he obtained the surety's signature, concealed from him the fact that the maker had refused to give a note with him as surety.

And in the absence of evidence of fraud on the part of the obligee in withholding information of the change of suretyship, it was held in North British Ins. Co. v. Lloyd (1854) 10 Exch. 523, 156 Eng. Reprint, 545, 3 C. L. R. 264, 24 L. J. Exch. N. S. 14, 1 Jur. N. S. 45, that the nondisclosure to a proposed surety of the fact that he was becoming surety in place of the brother of the principal, who had requested the obligee to release him, would not discharge the surety, although he was ignorant of the former suretyship, where he executed the contract at the request of the principal, on representation by the latter that, unless additional security was procured, shares of stock owned by him and held as collateral would be sacrificed, although the form of the contract was prepared by the obligee.

The fact that the surety was misled as to the legal effect of the bond cannot be shown under the plea of non est factum. Edwards v. Brown (1831) 1 Comp. & J. 307, 148 Eng. Reprint, 1436, 1 Tyrw. 182, 9 L. J. Exch. 84, 3 Younge & J. 423, 148 Eng. Reprint, 1244. R. E. H.

---

CHARLES F. BOSS, SR., Appt.,

v.

HARLAN W. HAGAN et al.

District of Columbia Court of Appeals—November 3, 1919.

(— App. D. C. —, 261 Fed. 254.)

Costs — security by nonresident — waiver.

1. The statutory provision requiring security for costs as a condition to the commencement of an action by a nonresident is waived by pleading to the merits.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1510.]

Pleading — variance — description of tenant.

2. Proof of tenancy by sufferance is not a variance from an allegation of monthly tenancy in a complaint to recover possession of leased property.

Landlord and tenant — notice to quit — excessive time — effect.

3. A tenant cannot complain that he is given longer notice to quit than the law requires.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Supreme Court affirming a judgment of the Municipal Court in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover possession of certain leased property. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. P. H. Marshall and C. H. Merillat for appellant.

Mr. Charles Linkins for appellees.

Mr. Chief Justice Smyth delivered the opinion of the court:

The Hagans brought action in the municipal court against Boss to recover possession of certain premises, alleging that their vendor had rented the premises to Boss as a monthly tenant; that the premises had been purchased by them for their home and were necessary for that purpose; that one of them was a war worker; and that the tenancy had been terminated by a due notice to quit.

Boss appeared specially and asserted that the Hagans were non-residents of the District of Columbia, and moved to dismiss the complaint because they had failed to give security for costs. The motion was overruled, and he entered a general appearance and defended on the merits. There was a judgment for the plaintiffs, and Boss appealed to the supreme court of the District.

The Hagans filed in that court an affidavit of merit under rule 19, and asked for judgment. To this Boss responded with an answering affidavit in which he renewed his claim that the Hagans were nonresidents of the District at the time of commencing the action in the lower court, and denied the jurisdiction of that court to try the case, because of their failure to give security for costs. He also challenged the sufficiency of the notice to quit; asserted that there was a material variance between the tenancy as alleged in the complaint and the one disclosed in the Hagan affidavit, and attacked the sufficiency of the affidavit under rule 19. The supreme court held that his affidavit was insufficient to raise any question of fact, and gave judgment for the Hagans.

The first question presented relates to the jurisdiction of the municipal court. Section 11 of the Code provides that "nonresidents shall not commence a suit before a justice of the peace [now municipal court] without first giving security for costs." This goes to the jurisdiction of the court over the person of the defendant, and he has a right to insist upon it; but it is a personal privilege which may be waived by him, Costs—security by nonresident—waiver. and this Boss did by pleading to the merits. "The defendant had a right," said this court in Guarantee Sav. Loan & Invest. Co. v. Pendleton, 14 App. D. C. 387, "to appear specially to take the objection to the proceeding of the justice, without the condition precedent having been complied with by the plaintiff. But having interposed that objection, he could not go farther and plead to the merits of the case, without thereby waiving compliance by the plaintiff with the condition which required him to give security for the costs before bringing his suit." See also St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. McBride, 141 U. S. 127, 35 L. ed. 659, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 982; Central Trust Co. v. McGeorge, 151 U. S. 129, 133, 38 L. ed. 98, 100, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 286; Costello v. Palmer, 20 App. D. C. 210.

In many jurisdictions it is the law that a person who in proper time challenges the jurisdiction of the court over his person, and after the challenge has been overruled preserves the objection in his answer, does not waive it by answering over and going to trial on the merits. Arroyo Ditch Co. v. Superior Ct. 92 Cal. 47, 27 Am. St. Rep. 91, 28 Pac. 54; 7 R. C. L. 78; Lower v. Wilson, 62 Am. St. Rep. 865, and note (9 S. D. 252, 68 N. W. 545). But this is not the Federal rule, as is pointed out by Mr. Chief Justice Alvey in the Pendleton Case, supra. It was there urged that, since the objection was renewed and preserved in the subsequent proceeding, the defendant had not waived it by defending on the merits. The learned chief justice said that the defendant, by appearing and contesting the case on the merits, lost "his right to contest the ruling of the court below on his objection to the jurisdiction on appeal."

If the defendant desired to have the ruling of the court reviewed he should have applied to the supreme court for a writ of certiorari. Degge v. Hitchcock, 35 App. D. C. 218; United States v. West, 34 App. D. C. 12; Bond v. Carter Hardware Co. 15 App. D. C. 72.

Nor do we think that there is any merit in the contention that there is a variance between the allegations of the complaint and those of the Hagan affidavit with respect to the character of the tenancy. The complaint alleges that Boss was "a monthly tenant," while the affidavit asserts that he held the property "as a monthly tenant." Boss, on the other hand, says that while he entered into the occupancy of the premises under a written agreement as a monthly tenant, the agreement was subsequently changed, and an oral arrangement was made by which the amount of his rent was increased $2 a month, and that by virtue of this he became a tenant by sufferance. If we concede his claim he could still be described with accuracy as a monthly tenant, for

Pleading—
variance—description of tenant.

§ 1034 of the Code provides that "all verbal hirings by the month, or at any specified rate per month, shall be deemed estates by sufferance." But the tenant is nevertheless a monthly tenant, for he holds "by the month."

The argument with respect to the alleged insufficiency of the notice is based on the fact that it gave Boss a longer time than the required thirty days. The tenancy, it was conceded, commenced on the first day of the month, and the notice to quit expired on the first day of the following month instead of the last day of the month in which it was given, thus allowing the tenant one day more than the law required. We have held that a notice which gave the tenant more than thirty days (the time required by the Code) to surrender the premises was valid. Bliss v. Duncan, 44 App. D. C. 93. The giving of the additional day was an advantage to the defendant; of this he has no just cause for complaint.

Landlord and tenant—notice to quit—excessive time—effect.

The judgment must be affirmed with costs.

ANNOTATION.

Waiver of statute or court rule requiring nonresident plaintiff to give security for costs.

I. Waiver of right to security:

- a. Generally, 1511.
- b. Application after extension of time to answer, 1511.
- c. Application after demurrer, 1512.
- d. Application after answer, 1512.

I.—continued.

- e. Application after case ready for trial, 1517.
- f. Application after case called for trial, 1521.
- g. Application during progress of trial, 1522.

I.—continued.

h. Application after judgment or decree, 1525.

i. Application after judgment opened to permit defendant to plead, 1525.

j. Application after appeal, 1526.

k. Rule in New York, 1527.

II. Waiver of right to dismissal:

a. Application after continuance, 1528.

b. Application after demurrer, 1529.

c. Application after answer, 1530.

d. Application after case ready for trial, 1532.

e. Application after verdict, 1533.

f. Application after appeal, 1533.

I. Waiver of right to security.

a. Generally.

In England, and in practically every American jurisdiction, a nonresident plaintiff is required by statute or rule of court to give a bond for costs. These statutes and rules are ordinarily deemed to be directory, and the benefit thereof is waived by the failure of the defendant to make prompt application for an order for such a bond. See 7 R. C. L. p. 786.

Both by the express terms of the statutes or rules, and in the absence of any express provision, the rule in most jurisdictions seems to be that a cost bond is waived by a failure to apply therefor before the expiration of the time allowed to the defendant to plead, and before any defensive pleading is filed. See the cases cited throughout this note. Consequently, in most of the cases within the scope of this note, the right to a bond has been held to have been waived, and for illustrative purposes the cases are arranged with reference to the time when the application for a bond was actually made.

b. Application after extension of time to answer.

It has been held in England and Canada that the right to a cost bond from a nonresident plaintiff is waived if the bond is not applied for before obtaining an extension of the time to answer. Wood v. Reg. (1876) 7 Can. S. C. 631; Meliorucchy v. Meliorucchy (1750) 2 Ves. Sr. 24, 28 Eng. Reprint, 17; Craig v. Bolton (1789) 2 Bro. Ch. C. 609, 29 Eng. Reprint, 334; Anonymous (1804) 10 Ves. Jr. 287, 32 Eng. Reprint, 854. Compare Swanzy v. Swanzy (1858) 4 Kay & J. 237, 70 Eng. Reprint, 99, 27 L. J. Ch. N. S. 419, 4 Jur. N. S. 1013, 6 Week. Rep.

414; Fry v. Wills (1834) 3 Dowl. P. C. (Eng.) 6; Wilson v. Minchin (1831) 1 Dowl. P. C. (Eng.) 299, 2 Crompt. & J. 87, 149 Eng. Reprint, 37, 2 Tyrw. 166, 1 L. J. Exch. N. S. 39; Gurney v. Key (1835) 3 Dowl. P. C. (Eng.) 559, 1 Harr. & W. 203; Dowling v. Harman (1840) 6 Mees. & W. 131, 151 Eng. Reprint, 352, 8 Dowl. P. C. 165, 9 L. J. Exch. N. S. 53, 4 Jur. 43.

The reason for this view was thus stated in Atkins v. Cook (1857) 3 Jur. N. S. (Eng.) 283: "What is the principle upon which a defendant who is entitled to require the plaintiff to give security for costs waives that right by moving for time to answer? It is this, that the very ground is that the defendant has the right to say: 'I am not to enter the lists with you until you have given security for costs.' And if he does take any step, it is held that he is inconsistent in saying: 'Give me security for costs.' He has waived all right, and has prepared himself for the combat. That, I believe, is the reason upon which it is held that a defendant waives his right to security by taking the least step in the cause."

So, where an application for security for costs was not made within the time allowed for filing the statement of defense, but an extension was obtained, and thereafter the Crown moved for security, it was held that the right had been waived. Wood v. Reg. (Can.) supra.

Similarly, in the case of Anonymous (1804) 10 Ves. Jr. 287, 32 Eng. Reprint, 854, it was held that where a defendant had secured an order for an extension of time, he had waived his right to demand security of a nonresident plaintiff.

On the other hand, in Swanzy v. Swanzy (1858) 4 Kay & J. 237, 70

Eng. Reprint, 99, the defendant, in applying for time to answer, discovered from information contained in affidavits used in connection with that motion that the plaintiff was a non-resident. It was held that the defendant had not waived his right to obtain security for costs by application made after the order extending the time to answer had been granted. The court said: "There can be no doubt that after a defendant has taken active steps in a cause, with the knowledge of his right to have security for costs, it is too late for him to avail himself of a right which would have been of course at an earlier stage. . . . In this case it does not necessarily appear upon the face of the bill that the defendant is entitled to security for costs. If he had made inquiry, and coupled the result of that inquiry with the statement in the bill of permanent residence, and discovered that the residence was only for a limited period, no doubt he would have been entitled to come here and make this application; but if the facts on which the right to security rests do not appear upon the face of the bill, an application cannot be made except upon affidavit. The defendant says when he made the application for time to answer he heard that the plaintiff intended to go away as soon as the matter was disposed of, and that put him upon inquiry. I am not prepared to say that he was bound to make that inquiry before. Upon the facts as they originally stood at the filing of the bill, he would have been entitled to security for costs if he had come here at once; but now, in addition to those, there is the fact that the plaintiff has changed her quarters and her name. The only doubt was whether the defendant had waived his right by taking a step before he ascertained all this. I think the application for time ought not to prejudice this application. He comes here the moment he finds the difficulty, and I shall direct the plaintiff to give security for costs."

Similarly, in Fry v. Wills (1834) 3 Dowl. P. C. (Eng.) 6, it was held that although the defendant had obtained an extension of time to plead he had not waived his right to demand security for costs. The court said: "I think the rule of Hilary term gives the court a discretion, although a fresh step has been taken by the defendant after a knowledge of the plaintiff's absence from the country has reached him. I do not think the defendant was bound to take any step towards obtaining security for costs until he perceived that the plaintiff, by declaring, was in earnest. Here the plaintiff sued out his writ in the month of June, and never declared until the month of October. I think, therefore, the defendant is entitled to have his rule made absolute." See to the same effect, Wilson v. Minchin (1831) 1 Dowl. P. C. (Eng.) 299, 2 Crompt. & J. 87, 149 Eng. Reprint, 37, 2 Tyrw. 166, 1 L. J. Exch. N. S. 39; Gurney v. Key (1835) 3 Dowl. P. C. (Eng.) 559, 1 Harr. & W. 203; Dwelling v. Harman (1840) 6 Mees. & W. 131, 151 Eng. Reprint, 352, 8 Dowl. P. C. 165, 9 L. J. Exch. N. S. 53, 4 Jur. 43.

c. Application after demurrer.

A motion to require security for costs will be denied where the defendant has demurred before the motion was made. Randolph v. Emerick (1851) 13 Ill. 344. In that case, an action of assumpsit, the defendant demurred to the complaint, and subsequently, the demurrer being overruled, a motion was made to require the plaintiff, a nonresident, to give security for costs. It was held that, the objection being of a dilatory character, it was to be considered as waived if not insisted on at the proper time, and that the motion came too late.

d. Application after answer.

Where a defendant delays moving for security for costs until after the service of his answer, the right to require the security is waived.

Arkansas. — Lincoln v. Hancock (1844) 5 Ark. 703.

Connecticut. — Ormsbee v. Davis (1844) 16 Conn. 567.

Illinois. — Dunning v. Dunning (1865) 37 Ill. 306. Compare Kimbark v. Blundin (1880) 6 Ill. App. 539.

Indiana.—Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Hendricks (1872) 41 Ind. 48, 3 Am. Neg. Cas. 106.

Iowa.—Sprague v. Haight (1880) 54 Iowa, 446, 6 N. W. 693; Gilbert v. Hoffman (1885) 66 Iowa, 205, 55 Am. St. Rep. 263, 23 N. W. 632.

Kentucky.—Tibbs v. Clarkson (1841) 2 B. Mon. 34.

Maryland.—Compare Watson v. Glassie (1902) 95 Md. 658, 53 Atl. 428.

New Jersey.—Roumage v. Mechanics Ins. Co. (1830) 12 N. J. L. 95; Newman v. Landrine (1862) 14 N. J. Eq. 291, 82 Am. Dec. 249. See also Reed v. Benzine-ated Soap Co. (1907) 72 N. J. Eq. 622, 65 Atl. 1008.

North Dakota.—Compare Naderhoff v. Benz (1913) 25 N. D. 165, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 852, 141 N. W. 501.

Ohio.—See Johnson v. Ralph (1817) Tappan, 133

Pennsylvania.—Bickford v. Ice Co. (1880) 8 W. N. C. 106.

England.—Dyott v. Dyott (1815) 1 Madd. Ch. 187, 56 Eng. Reprint, 70; Kasten v. Plaw (1827) 1 Moore & P. 30; Watson v. Pim (1839) 2 Ir. Eq. Rep. 26, Sausse & Sc. 642; Eyre v. Dwyer (1840) Sausse & Sc. 653; Whitehead v. Murat (1724) Bunbury, 183, 145 Eng. Reprint, 641; Atkins v. Cook (1857) 3 Jur. N. S. 283, 3 Drew. 694, 61 Eng. Reprint, 1068, 26 L. J. Ch. N. S. 353, 5 Week. Rep. 381. See also White v. Greathead (1808) 15 Ves. Jr. 2, 33 Eng. Reprint, 655. Compare Duncan v. Stint (1822) 5 Barn. & Ald. 702, 106 Eng. Reprint, 1347, 1 Dowl. & R. 348; Ex parte Siedler (1841) 12 Sim. 106, 59 Eng. Reprint, 1071; Murrow v. Wilson (1850) 12 Beav. 497, 50 Eng. Reprint, 1151; Fletcher v. Lew (1835) 5 Nev. & M. 351, 3 Ad. & El. 551, 111 Eng. Reprint, 523, 1 Harr. & W. 430; Ex parte Tull (1833) 3 Deac. & C. Bankr. Cas. 503, 1 Mont. & Ayr. 80, 3 L. J. Bankr. 30; Edinburgh & L. R. Co. v. Dawson (1839) 7 Dowl. P. C. 573, 1 W. W. & H. 561, 3 Jur. 55; Re Smith (1896) 75 L. T. N. S. 46; Wyllie v. Ellice (1848) 11 Beav. 99, 50 Eng. Reprint, 754.

Canada.—Tiers v. Triggs (1860) 5 Lower Can. Jur. 25; Smith v. Dey (1869) 2 Ch. Chamb. Rep. (U. C.) 456; Rousseau v. Trudeau (1869) 13

Lower Can. Jur. 138; Melles v. Swales (1878) 22 Lower Can. Jur. 271; Cruickshank v. Lavoie (1880) 24 Lower Can. Jur. 59. Compare Stalker v. Hammond (1864) 8 Lower Can. Jur. 137; Ganson v. Finch (1871) 3 Ch. Chamb. Rep. (U. C.) 296; Smerling v. Kennedy (1903) 5 Ont. L. Rep. 430.

The reason for the rule was aptly stated by way of dictum in the case of Re Smith (1896) 75 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 47, wherein the court said: "The old practice of the court of chancery was perfectly well settled as to this matter, and was founded on common sense, and in effect it was this: A defendant sued by a plaintiff out of the jurisdiction was entitled to say: 'I will not engage in litigation with you because if your bill is ultimately dismissed with costs I shall have no means of enforcing the payment of those costs against you out of the jurisdiction.' Of course there are answers to that such as, 'There is a share of the estate, or there is available property in this country, and there is no substance in the statement.' The point was that the defendant was entitled to say, 'I will not engage in litigation with you.' If, therefore, the defendant making the objection took any step, he had commenced to engage in litigation, and he was not allowed to go back. It was not really an application of the doctrine of election, but it was something of a similar character, and that frequently operated with great hardship."

In Ormsbee v. Davis (1844) 16 Conn. 567, a nonresident plaintiff brought an action without filing the necessary bond for costs. The defendant failed to make any objection, but pleaded to the merits of the action. In holding the statutory provision to have been waived, the court said: "The provision was made solely for the benefit of the defendant in that suit; and the omission to give such bond, being merely an irregularity in the process which, at most, made it voidable only, and not void, was a matter pleadable only in abatement. By not interposing such plea, but pleading to the merits of the action, the defendant waived the irregularity, which he clearly had a right to do."

In Dunning v. Dunning (1865) 37 Ill. 306, wherein a defendant, after pleading to the merits, objected that the plaintiff, a nonresident, had filed no cost bond, it was held that the motion was made at too late a date, and had been waived by pleading to the merits. It may be noted, however, that in Kimbark v. Blundin (1880) 6 Ill. App. 539, under a statute expressly providing that "the right to require security for costs shall not be waived by any proceeding in the cause," it was held that the right of the defendant to apply for a rule to compel the plaintiff to give security was not waived by his having pleaded to the action.

In Jeffersonville, M. & I. R. Co. v. Hendricks (1872) 41 Ind. 48, 3 Am. Neg. Cas. 106, at the time the action was commenced, a rule of the trial court required "application for security for costs to be made before answering to the complaint, unless answer is made in ignorance of the nonresidence, or the plaintiff has become a nonresident since answering." The defendant, subsequent to the service of an amended complaint, moved to require the plaintiff to give bond for costs, which motion was overruled. On appeal the court held that the decision was correct, as the defendant had answered the original complaint, and therefore did not come within any of the exceptions to the rule. The counsel for the defendant contended that "the rule is an unreasonable, arbitrary, and harsh rule,—one not fit to be made." In discussing this contention the appellate court said: "The 14th section of the act organizing circuit courts provides that the said courts shall adopt rules for conducting the business therein, not repugnant to the laws of this state, etc. 2 Gavin & H. 8. . . . A rule might be 'repugnant to the laws of this state,' which was not in conflict with any statute of the state. A rule which would deprive a party of any right secured to him by the Constitution or the principles of the common law in force in this state would be repugnant to the laws of this state. A rule of court should be reasonable, and adapted to a prompt and just administration of justice. The statute requires many things to be done, without prescribing the time when, or the manner in which, they shall be done, such as granting continuances, and changing the venue, and the filing of pleadings, or the like. It is also competent for the court to determine by rule when an application for security for costs shall be made. If the court below had adopted a rule that 'no application for security for costs should be made after an answer had been filed,' we should have regarded such a rule as unreasonable and repugnant to every principle of justice, and therefore repugnant to the laws of this state; for under such a rule a defendant might answer honestly, believing that the plaintiff was still a resident of the state, when in fact he had become a nonresident of the state, without the knowledge of the defendant, before he had commenced his action; or he might remove from the state after an answer had been filed. The rule of the court below properly guards against such contingency. We cannot see that any injustice is done to a defendant who has full knowledge that the plaintiff is a nonresident of the state, but answers the complaint without asking an order for security for costs, by depriving him of the right of making an application for such order afterwards."

In Sprague v. Haight (1880) 54 Iowa, 446, 6 N. W. 693, an action to foreclose a mortgage, some of the defendants appeared and asked for an extension of time until the following morning to file a motion for security for costs, which time was given by the court. They failed to file the application for security in the time given them, and the court required them to answer by noon of the same day. They did not comply with this order, but on the next day filed the motion, which was overruled because not filed within the time fixed by the court. On appeal the ruling was held to be correct, the appellate court saying: "The ruling of the court in refusing to entertain a motion for security for costs, filed after the time fixed therefor, was undoubtedly correct. Counsel for appellants contends that under § 2927 of the Code they had the right to file such motion at any time before answering. But when some pleading was required on the second day of the term, the defendants neither filed their answer nor motion, but the case passed till the next day without either. On the third day they were given until the morning of the fourth to file their motion. This they did not do, and they were ordered to answer. The statute does not mean that a party may have his own time to file the motion. When the time arrives for an answer, demurrer, or motion, he may properly be required to do something. If he chooses to make the motion, he must make it instant, or within such time as is given him by the court. If he fails without sufficient excuse, he may properly be held to have waived his right to file the motion, and may be required to answer or demur."

In Roumage v. Mechanics Ins. Co. (1830) 12 N. J. L. 95, an application was made to require the plaintiff to furnish costs, the affidavit stating that the plaintiff had left the state and resided out of the same. It was held that the application was made too late, as the affidavit did not show that the plaintiff had left the state since the issue was joined, or that the application might not have been made at the usual time. Newman v. Landrine (1862) 14 N. J. Eq. 291, 82 Am. Dec. 249, presented a similar question. At the commencement of the suit the complainant resided in the state, but subsequently removed to a foreign state. About three months after his removal from the state, the defendant obtained an order extending the rule for closing testimony. From the statements in the defendant's affidavit it did not appear whether he had notice of the complainant's removal before obtaining that order. The court held that under the circumstances there should have been a full and explicit denial by the defendant, of notice of the complainant's change of residence at the time of taking the last order in the cause, and the motion to require security was denied.

In Tibbs v. Clarkson (1841) 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 34, an action of ejectment, the defendant was admitted to defend in the place of the casual ejector, under an agreement to confess lease, entry, and ouster, and plead the general issue, and rely on his title only. Subsequently he exhibited and filed a plea in abatement, alleging that the lessors of the plaintiffs were nonresidents and had not given security for costs. It was held that, while as a general rule plaintiffs who were nonresidents could be required to execute a bond with security for costs, such a motion should not be allowed after the defendant had appeared and been admitted to defend on the terms of defending on the merits. The court said: "Had he desired to plead in abatement, he should have asked leave of the court to appear specially, or to have him admitted a defendant upon the usual confession of lease, entry, and ouster, with the reservation of his right to plead in abatement the matter presented in his plea. To allow him to plead this matter, after he has been admitted a defendant upon the express terms of relying upon his title only, is to allow him to contradict his own agreement, previously entered on the record. We do not feel disposed to extend the privilege of pleading such matter in abatement farther than it has already been carried, especially as the defendant at any time, upon motion, might have availed himself of it."

Where a notice that motion for security for costs would be made on the first day of an ensuing term of court was given after the fourth day from the date of appearance, it was held that the motion came too late and should be rejected. Tiers v. Trigg (1860) 5 Lower Can. Jur. 25. See to the same effect, Rousseau v. Trudeau (1869) 13 Lower Can. Jur. 138; Melles v. Swales (1878) 22 Lower Can. Jur. 271; Cruickshank v. Lavoie (1880) 24 Lower Can. Jur. 59.

In Kasten v. Plaw (1827) 1 Moore & P. (Eng.) 30, where a motion requiring the plaintiff to give security for costs was not made until after the plea was filed, the motion was discharged because of delay. See to the same effect, Whitehead v. Murat (1724) Bunbury, 183, 145 Eng. Reprint, 641. So, where an answer was filed by mistake, it was held that the defendant had waived his right to require security of the plaintiff, who had gone abroad. Dyott v. Dyott (1815) 1 Madd. Ch. 187, 56 Eng. Reprint, 70. However, it has been held that a defendant was entitled to security on filing an affidavit stating that, at the time he pleaded, he was unaware that the plaintiff was a non-resident. Duncan v. Stint (1822) 5 Barn. & Ald. 702, 106 Eng. Reprint, 1347, 1 Dowl. & R. 348. See to the same effect, Ex parte Tull (1833) 3 Deacon & C. Bankr. (Eng.) Cas. 503, 1 Mont. & Ayr Bankr. 80, 3 L. J. Bankr. N. S. 30. So, where a petitioner was out of the jurisdiction of the court, and the respondent had answered the affidavit in support of the petition, it was held that the latter had not waived the right to require the petitioner to give security for costs. Ex parte Siedler (1841) 12 Sim. 106, 59 Eng. Reprint, 1071. See to the same effect, Murrow v. Wilson (1850) 12 Beav. 497, 50 Eng. Reprint, 1151. Likewise, in Wyllie v. Ellice (1848) 11 Beav. 99, 50 Eng. Reprint, 754, 12 Jur. 711, 17 L. J. Ch. N. S. 378, it appeared that, when the original bill was filed, the defendant served notice of motion for security for costs, on the ground that the plaintiff resided out of the jurisdiction, but the motion was abandoned and the defendant filed an answer, it appearing that the plaintiff was within the jurisdiction. Subsequently, the plaintiff amended his bill, describing himself as a nonresident, whereupon the defendant applied for and obtained an order requiring the plaintiff to furnish security for costs. The court held that there had been no waiver by the defendant. In Fletcher v. Lew (1835) 3 Ad. & El. 551, 111 Eng. Reprint, 523, 1 Harr. & W. 430, 5 Nev. & M. 351, a stay of proceedings was obtained until the plaintiff should give security for costs. The evidence showed that the plaintiff was a resident abroad, and the defendant, after service of the summons, had entered an appearance. Under the rule of court then in force it was provided that "an application to compel the plaintiff to give security for costs must, in ordinary cases, be made before issue joined." The court accordingly made the rule absolute, although the defendant had pleaded. See to the same effect, Edinburgh & L. R. Co. v. Dawson (1839) 7 Dowl. P. C. (Eng.) 573, 1 W. W. & H. 561, 3 Jur. 55. And in the case of Re Smith (1896) 75 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 46, it was held that, although the old rule in chancery provided that an order for security for costs must be applied for before the answer to a bill was delivered, under order 65, there was no hard-and-fast rule to prevent an application for security for costs from being made at any stage of the proceedings. The court reversed a decision denying a motion for security for costs from a nonresident plaintiff, although the defendant had delivered his statement of defense.

In Maryland, a statutory provision that "in all cases in chancery a rule security for costs may be laid at any time before decree is passed" has been held to entitle the defendant to such security, although the bill has been answered. Watson v. Glassie (1902) 95 Md. 658, 53 Atl. 428.

In Naderhoff v. Benz (1913) 25 N. D. 165, 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 853, 141 N. W. 501, the summons had been served on the defendant by service on the secretary of state. The defendant appeared by its attorney, and served a motion for dismissal of the action on the ground that the plaintiff was a nonresident of the state and had not filed security for costs as required by law. The time for the hearing of the motion was fixed two days after the expiration of the thirty-day period for service of answer or demurrer, and, neither of these papers being served by the defendant, the plaintiff took judgment by default. The defendant promptly moved to open the judgment, which motion was granted, and the plaintiff appealed. In holding the defendant not to be entitled to security for costs after having failed to plead, the court said: "The only way, under our practice, defendant could avail himself of this right to security for costs at any time before judgment, was by motion, which, when made, was the assertion by him of the legal right in the manner prescribed by statute, and upon which he had a right to be heard at any time before judgment. But proper practice on defendant's part would have been to have answered, or demurred, or procured additional time within which to have pleaded after the ruling on the motion to dismiss for want of security for costs. The period for answer and demurrer expiring before the time at which the motion for security for costs was noticed for hearing and argument, the right of defendant to require of plaintiff such security lapsed and expired immediately when he became in default in answer. The right to security for costs is that defendant may recover his costs and disbursements assessable at law should his defense prevail or plaintiff's cause of action fail, and to urge the right for such purposes he must be in a position to interpose a defense or question the right of plaintiff to prevail on the merits, which he cannot do when he is in default in answer or demurrer. . . . For the foregoing reasons, and on an analysis of the authorities, we decide that the pendency of this motion for security for costs undisposed of would not, of itself, extend the time within which defendant was obliged to answer or demur, or stand in default thereof; and when he is so in default because of his failure to present an issue on the merits, thereby conceding the merit of plaintiff's cause of action and his right of recovery, a defendant, then, has no right to ask or be heard to insist upon security for costs, when, under every presumption, plaintiff is then entitled to judgment against him, and defendant would be asking for something which could avail him nothing, and for something concerning which he then could have no rights, having waived his defense by failure to plead or demur."

e. Application after case ready for trial.

Where a defendant in an action commenced by a nonresident plaintiff neglects to move for security for costs until the case is ready for trial, the right is held to be waived.

United States.—Prince v. Towns (1887) 33 Fed. 161.

Delaware.—Bennett v. Shute (1837) 2 Harr. 197.

Montana.—Brazell v. Cohn (1905) 32 Mont. 556, 81 Pac. 339.

New Jersey.—Compare Den v. Wilson (1819) 5 N. J. L. 680.

Ohio.—Boucher v. Lindsley (1851) 1 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 457.

Pennsylvania.—Castelo v. Binns (1837) 2 Miles, 86; M'Garry v. Crispin (1845) 3 Clark, 25; Bogardus v. Williams (1873) 1 Pa. Co. Ct. 673; Fuchs v. Wright (1878) 6 W. N. C. 157; Southmayd v. Henderson (1883) 13 W. N. C. 78; Mason v. Frick (1883) 12 W. N. C. 570; Smart v. Chamberlin (1890) 26 W. N. C. 272; Voss v. Sensenig (1894) 14 Pa. Co. Ct. 631. Compare Hallahan v. Murray (1876) 3 W. N. C. 44; Rathbone v. Stetson (1877) 4 W. N. C. 55; Kirk v. Korn (1883) 13 W. N. C. 281; Hickok v. Park Asso. (1883) 14 W. N. C. 12; Germain Fruit Co. v. Roberts (1896) 18 Pa. Co. Ct. 144; Shaw v. Wallace (1792) 2 Dall. 179, 1 L. ed. 339, 1 Yeates, 176.

Texas.—See International & G. N. R. Co. v. Williams (1891) 82 Tex. 342, 18 S. W. 700.

Washington.—Swift v. Stine (1888) 3 Wash. Terr. 518, 19 Pac. 63.

Canada.—Fogo v. Pypher (1864) 3 Ont. Pr. Rep. 309. Compare Baynes v. Metcalf (1886) 6 Can. L. T. 310; Gumm v. McDonald (1906) 4 West. L. R. 149; Dodd v. Mathieson (1913) — Sask. —, 9 D. L. R. 636, 23 W. L. R. 711; Wood v. Bellisle (1849) 1 C. L. Chamb. Rep. (U. C.) 130; Cameron v. Royal Bank (1914) 7 Sask. L. R. 301, 30 West. L. R. 157.

England.—Muller v. Gernon (1810) 3 Taunt. 273, 128 Eng. Reprint, 108; Montellano v. Garcias (1822) 1 Bing. 67, 130 Eng. Reprint, 28; Michel v. Pareski (1796) 2 H. Bl. 593, 126 Eng. Reprint, 722, 3 Revised Rep. 512. Compare West v. Cooke (1845) 1 C.

B. 312, 135 Eng. Reprint, 560, 2 Dowl. & L. 834, 14 L. J. C. P. N. S. 151.

In Bennett v. Shute (Del.) supra, the defendant moved for an order to stay proceedings until the plaintiff gave security for costs. The plaintiff objected to the granting of the order on the ground that the application for it was too late, as the defendant had appeared and pleaded, issue had been joined, the witnesses were summoned, and the case stood for trial at the next term. The court denied the motion, stating that the rule was in the discretion of the court, and although the rule would not be established that application for security for costs must be made at the appearance term, yet a motion would not be granted to the delay or prejudice of the other party, and as the granting of the motion would necessarily continue the cause and increase the expense, it should be denied.

So, in Brazell v. Cohn (Mont.) supra, after the cause was set for trial, the defendants filed and served on the plaintiff a written demand for security for costs, supported by affidavit showing that the plaintiff was then a nonresident, and asked the court to stay all proceedings until such security should be given. The plaintiff thereupon agreed to give security for costs as required by law, within thirty days, whereupon the court overruled the motion for a stay and proceeded with the trial. The Code provided for security for costs in case the plaintiff was a nonresident of the state, and that, when required, all proceedings in the action must be stayed until an undertaking was given. It was also provided that, after the lapse of thirty days from the service of notice that security was required, the action must be dismissed if the security was not given. The court, in affirming a judgment for the plaintiff, held that as the application for security was not made until the day set for trial, and no previous notice of the demand had been given, the trial court was justified in denying the motion as coming too late.

In Shaw v. Wallace (1792) 2 Dall. (Pa.) 179, 1 L. ed. 339, 1 Yeates, 176, a motion to require the nonresident plaintiff to file security for costs was made after the cause was set down for trial and a continuance had. The court, in granting the order, stated that it was never too late to grant the motion when it would not delay the trial. See to the same effect, Rathbone v. Stetson (1877) 4 W. N. C. (Pa.) 55; Hallahan v. Murray (1876) 3 W. N. C. (Pa.) 44. The rule as established in the three foregoing cases was not followed in M'Garry v. Crispin (1845) 3 Clark (Pa.) 25, wherein a rule on the plaintiff to give security for costs was not made until after an award of arbitrators against the defendant, and judgment thereon. It was held that the defendant's application was made too late. In delivering the opinion of the court, Judge King said: "The rule giving the defendant security for costs has been transplanted into common law from the practice in equity. In courts of equity it has long been held that, if the plaintiff is resident abroad, the court will, on the application of the defendant, order him to give security for costs, and in the meantime direct all proceedings to be stayed. . . . But in order to entitle a defendant to require security for costs from a plaintiff, he must make his application at the earliest possible time after the fact has come to his knowledge, and before he takes any further step in the cause. Should the plaintiff's nonresidence appear from the face of his bill, the defendant must make his motion before he puts in his answer or applies for time, either of which acts will be considered as a waiver of his right to security. . . . In the case before us, the affidavit does not sufficiently declare when the plaintiff's removal from the state came to the knowledge of the defendant. This is required in order to enable us to judge whether the defendant has manifested the alacrity necessary to entitle him to the indemnity against loss, which he invokes by his rule for security for costs. But what is decisive of the application at this time is the fact that it is made after an award of arbitrators against the defendant, and judgment thereon, which award remains unappealed from, and which we do not know ever will be appealed from. Until the cause is brought back to us on such appeal, we have no right to interfere with the plaintiff's realization of the fruit of his judgment. He has established his right as well to his debt as his costs of suit. To require him to give security for costs to his adversary, against whom he has prevailed, and to stay his further procedure until such security is entered, would be a somewhat anomalous proceeding." A like decision was made in Bogardus v. Williams (1878) 1 Pa. Co. Ct. 673, wherein the court expressly overruled the cases, beginning with Shaw v. Wallace (Pa.) supra, which held that it was never too late to grant the rule when it would not delay the trial. In the Bogardus Case, suit was commenced more than nine years before the motion was made. In holding the defendant not to be entitled to security, the court said: "The present action was brought more than nine years ago. At that time the plaintiff resided in the state. The affidavit recites that since then he has removed from the state. When he thus removed we are not informed, and, for all that we know to the contrary, it may have been the next day after the bringing of the suit. If he did, and the defendant then knew of his removal, as we have a right to infer in the absence of any statement to the contrary, then the present application comes very late,—too late, we think, to entitle the defendant to the security he asks for. Having slept for so long a time upon a right which he might have had for the asking, we do him no injustice by holding that he must be considered as having waived it. It follows that the rule upon the plaintiff to give security for costs must be discharged." But in Kirk v. Korn (1883) 13 W. N. C. (Pa.) 281, the defendant moved to require the plaintiff to give security for costs, and the evidence showed that the case had been set down for trial, but was not reached, owing to the illness of the judge who was to preside. In holding the defendant to be entitled to security, the court said: "This application comes after the time when it would usually be allowed; but it appears that defendant, having once prepared for trial and brought his witnesses to court, is now, without any fault of his and from causes beyond his control, compelled to undergo the same expense a second time. This being an unexpected and future expense, we think it reasonable that he should be allowed to secure himself as to costs." See to the same effect, Hickok v. Park Asso. (1883) 14 W. N. C. (Pa.) 12; Germain Fruit Co. v. Roberts (1896) 18 Pa. Co. Ct. 144.

In Boucher v. Lindsley (1851) 1 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 457, the defendant moved to have security for costs furnished by the plaintiff. The motion was denied by the court, not having been made until the afternoon of the day preceding the trial.

In International & G. N. R. Co. v. Williams (1891) 82 Tex. 342, 18 S. W. 700, the plaintiff announced ready for trial, and the defendant presented a motion for a rule requiring the plaintiff to give security for costs, which was denied. It was held that, although the statute provided that such motions could be made at any time before final judgment, it would seem that since judgment went against the defendant, fixing on it liability for all costs, there should not be a reversal unless it was shown that some injury resulted from the ruling.

In Swift v. Stine (1888) 3 Wash. Terr. 518, 19 Pac. 63, a motion requiring the plaintiff to file security for costs was made after issue was joined and the cause had been sent to a referee for trial. The Code provided that a plaintiff could give security for costs, "when required to do so by defendant." The plaintiff claimed that the motion was made at too late a date, but the defendant contended that the motion could be made at any time. The court held that this latter contention was not correct, stating that if such were the case a defendant could wait until a jury had been called and sworn, and then require security for costs and obtain a stay of proceedings. The court said: "The defendant may require security for costs of a nonresident, but he must exercise his right in time and before answer, or at least with diligence. He cannot delay until, from the developments of the trial, he seriously apprehends defeat, and then assert it. His application then becomes dilatory, and cannot be favored. He must be held, under such circumstances, to have waived it. It is true that in a case where the fact came to his knowledge after answer to the merits, it would excuse his neglect, and his right would remain unimpaired; but as such showing was made here, and the application on which the judgment was granted being certified to this court and recited in the judgment, we cannot presume it was made on other ground. Upon the merits here disclosed, we cannot give our assent to the judgment made, or to the order preceding it, requiring security for costs; and it is directed that said judgment and order be vacated and the cause be remanded for further proceedings."

In New Jersey, in an action of ejectment, an order for security for costs may be entered at any time, unless the purpose is delay or oppression. It was accordingly held in Den v. Wilson (1819) 5 N. J. L. 680, that a rule for such security was properly granted after issue was joined.

In Fogo v. Pypher (1864) 3 Ont. Pr. Rep. 309, it was held that a delay of nearly three years after the defendant demanded security for costs precluded him from obtaining the security after the plaintiff had given notice of trial. However, there is a class of cases beginning with Wood v. Bellisle (1849) 1 C. L. Chamb. Rep. (U. C.) 130, wherein the delay was satisfactorily accounted for, and the plaintiff was required to furnish security. In that case the court said: "The usual practice with us is to require the application to be made before plea, unless the delay be satisfactorily accounted for. Here a conflict of proceeding has arisen by reason of the cause being conducted in the district office at Sandwich, western district, and particular steps necessarily taken here, without time to communicate.

Measures appear to have been taken in due time and bona fide to apply for security for costs; but the state of the proceedings at Sandwich may have constrained the defendant to plead before the application was made; and Mr. Reid [defendant] gives a good reason for its not being made earlier here. . . . The application should be made as soon as the defendant can reasonably do it after knowledge of the fact of the plaintiff's residence abroad. And, governed by this rule, I think that the present application is not too late under the circumstances." Similarly, in Cameron v. Royal Bank (1914) 7 Sask. L. R. 301, 30 West. L. R. 157, an application for security for costs by the defendant was denied by the judge to whom the application was made. On appeal it did not appear from the record why the application was refused, but the court dealt with it as having been denied because made at too late a date. The evidence showed that security was applied for eleven days before the date fixed for the trial of the action. The court held that the plaintiff would not be inconvenienced by having to give security for costs at that stage of the proceedings, and the order dismissing the application was reversed. It was said: "In Lydney & W. Iron Ore Co. v. Bird (1883) L. R. 23 Ch. Div. (Eng.) 358, 52 L. J. Ch. N. S. 640, it was made after notice of trial was given, that being the stage in this case when the application was made, and in Re Smith (1896) 75 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 46, the court of appeal came to the same decision. Lopes, L. J., says, at p. 48: 'I do not think that under order 65 there is any hard-and-fast rule to prevent an application for security for costs from being made at any stage of the proceedings. Nothing here has happened to preclude the propriety of ordering security for costs to be given.' I am of the opinion that this language applies to this case. It might have been in this case that, if the learned judge had granted the order, he might have exercised his discretion in not staying proceedings, the plaintiff having made arrangements for his witnesses in Manitoba to attend the trial, which was fixed for the 20th October, 1914, the application having been made on the 9th of that month; but that time having now passed, there is no necessity for considering the making of that a term of the order." And in Baynes v. Metcalf (1886) 6 Can. L. T. 310, the defendant obtained a præcipe order for security for costs, with a stay of proceedings. The plaintiff, treating the order as a nullity, noted the bill pro confesso, whereupon the defendant applied to the referee for another order of security, which was granted, and from it the plaintiff appealed on the ground that the bill was taken pro confesso against the defendant, and that the defendant had waived his right to security. It was held that the defendant had not waived his right to security by having moved to stay proceedings until the costs of a prior suit had been paid. So, in Dodd v. Mathieson (1913) — Sask. —, 9 D. L. R. 636, 23 West. L. R. 711, it appeared that the pleadings had been closed, and the case was on the trial list, when a motion was made by the defendant for an order requiring the plaintiffs to give security for costs. The plaintiffs contended that the defendant was too late in making the motion, and that security should not be ordered at that stage of the proceedings. The court disagreed with this contention, and in granting an order for security said: "Our rules 714 and 715 are similar to English rule 981. Under that rule, in Lydney & W. Iron Ore Co. v. Bird (Eng.) supra, security for costs was ordered after the defense was filed and notice of trial given. This case was followed in Re Smith (Eng.) supra, where the court of appeal held that security for costs might be ordered at any stage of the proceedings. There is also an unreported judgment of Newlands, J., in St. John v. Friel, decided on the 23d December, 1905, in which the above cases were followed and security ordered, although the defense was filed and the action set down for trial. There will, therefore, be an order that the plaintiffs give security for the defendant's costs in the sum of $300, either by bond or by cash deposit." Gumm v. McDonald (1905) 4 West. L. R. (Can.) 149, presented a somewhat similar case, the evidence showing that the plaintiff was a resident of the territory when the action was commenced, but that he subsequently removed therefrom. The action had been ready for trial, but had been postponed because of the defendant's illness. Several months later a motion was made by the defendant to require security for costs. The court held that the defendant's delay had not been such as to deprive him of costs to accrue subsequently to the time of making the motion.

In Muller v. Gernon (1810) 3 Taunt. 272, 128 Eng. Reprint, 108, the plaintiff, who was a foreigner and the captain and owner of a ship trading between England and the Baltic, brought suit and then sailed with his vessel. Thereafter the defendant obtained a judge's order for time to plead, on the usual terms of pleading issuably and taking short notice of trial. Subsequently the defendant pleaded, and the plaintiff gave notice of trial. The court held that as the defendant had undertaken to accept short notice of trial, the nonresident plaintiff could not be compelled to furnish security for costs. See to the same effect, Montellano v. Garcias (1822) 1 Bing. 67, 130 Eng. Reprint, 28; Michel v. Pareski (1796) 2 H. Bl. 593, 126 Eng. Reprint, 722, 3 Revised Rep. 512. But in West v. Cooke (1845) 1 C. B. 312, 135 Eng. Reprint, 560, 2 Dowl. & L. 834, 14 L. J. C. P. N. S. 151, the court held that the general rule was that a defendant could move for security for costs at any time before issue was joined, and as issue had not been joined, the rule requiring security would be made absolute, although the defendant had taken short notice of trial.

1. Application after case called for trial.

The right given by a statute or court rule requiring security for costs from a nonresident plaintiff is waived if not taken advantage of before the case is called for trial. Hawkins v. Willbank (1822) 4 Wash. C. C. 285, Fed. Cas. No. 6,247; Wilkinson v. Cox (1907) 228 Ill. 306, 81 N. E. 1020; Beymer v. Endly (1817) Tappan (Ohio) 184; Wheeler v. Taylor (1859) 2 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 96; Sciutti v. Union P. Coal Co. (1906) 30 Utah, 462, 85 Pac. 1011, 8 Ann. Cas. 942.

In Sciutti v. Union P. Coal Co. (Utah) supra, an action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained through the negligence of the defendant, it appeared by the complaint that the plaintiff was a nonresident, but the defendant filed an answer on the merits without making any demand for security. When the case was called for trial the defendant moved to require the plaintiff to give security for costs, and on such motion being overruled the defense proceeded to trial without further objection. The court held that under the circumstances the defendant had waived the statutory right to demand security for costs.

In Wilkinson v. Cox (1907) 228 Ill. 306, 81 N. E. 1020, a motion was made after the case had been taken on the regular call of the docket, for a rule on the plaintiff to give security for costs as a nonresident, and for an order of dismissal against the plaintiff on failure to comply with such rule. The court held that the motion, being a dilatory one, and having been made when the case was in too advanced a stage, the rule was properly refused.

In Beymer v. Endly (1817) Tappan (Ohio) 134, the defendant, knowing the plaintiff to be a nonresident, appeared, entered into the common rule, pleaded to the cause of action, consented to one or more continuances, and when the cause came to trial interposed a motion requiring the plaintiff to give security. The court held that the motion came too late, having been waived by the defendant's laches. So, in Wheeler v. Taylor (1859) 2 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 96, the record showed that the action was brought before a justice and summons issued. At the time fixed for trial the parties appeared and on motion of the defendant, it appearing that the plaintiff was a nonresident of the township, the plaintiff was ruled to give security for costs, and such security not being given, the action was dismissed. The present appeal was the result of such order and judgment, and the court, in reversing the judgment and holding that the defendant was not entitled to security for costs, said: "This power is not peremptory; it is discretionary with the justice whether he shall require such security; he may or may not require this security for costs in the case of a nonresident plaintiff. And this discretion is to be exercised before he issues the process; when he has once issued the process the action is rightly brought. . . . A nonresident plaintiff is not absolutely required to give this security; he is to give it if the justice sees fit, before issuing process, to require it; but if the justice does not require it, then a nonresident plaintiff is under no obligation to give such security. The justice must exercise this discretion before the process is issued; if he then fails to require this security, he decides that the plaintiff may sue without giving it. When the justice once issues the process without requiring this security, his jurisdiction over the matter is at an end; he cannot afterwards require the plaintiff to give security, and, on his failure to do so, dismiss his action."

In Hawkins v. Willbank (Fed.) supra, a demand for security for costs, made when a cause was brought up for trial, was held to be made at too late a date to entitle the defendant to have security furnished.

g. Application during progress of trial.

Where a defendant waits until the trial of the action is commenced before moving for security for costs, the right is deemed to have been waived and the motion is properly refused.

United States.—Foster v. Swasey (1846) 2 Woodb. & M. 217, Fed. Cas. No. 4,984 (Massachusetts); Karns v. W. L. Imlay Rapid Cyanide Process Co. (1910) 181 Fed. 751 (Pennsylvania).

Arkansas.—Wallace v. Collins (1848) 5 Ark. 41, 39 Am. Dec. 359.

Connecticut.—Phelps v. Phelps (1787) Kirby, 344.

Illinois.—Edwards v. Helm (1842)

5 Ill. 143; Frasure v. Zimmerly (1860) 25 Ill. 202.

Indiana.—Pancoast v. Travelers Ins. Co. (1881) 79 Ind. 172.

Iowa.—Adae v. Zangs (1875) 41 Iowa, 586.

Kentucky. — Wheelin v. Kertley (1808) Hardin, 540.

Maryland. — Spencer v. Trafford (1875) 42 Md. 1.

Michigan.—Harris v. Doyle (1902) 130 Mich. 470, 90 N. W. 293; Hirsh v. Fisher (1904) 138 Mich. 95, 101 N. W. 48.

Mississippi. — Welch v. Hannie (1916) 112 Miss. 79, 72 So. 861, Ann. Cas. 1918C, 325.

West Virginia.—Hulings v. Jones (1908) 63 W. Va. 696, 60 S. E. 874; Murphy v. Fairweather (1913) 72 W. Va. 14, 77 S. E. 321. See also Rutter v. Sullivan (1885) 25 W. Va. 427.

Wisconsin.—Conrad v. Cole (1862) 15 Wis. 547.

England. — Wainwright v. Bland (1835) 2 Crompt. M. & R. 740, 150 Eng. Reprint, 313, 4 Dowl. P. C. 547, 1 Tyrw. & G. 137, 1 Gale, 383.

In Foster v. Swasey (Fed.) supra, a suit in equity based on fraud, a motion was made by the defendant before argument on the merits, but after the close of the pleadings and publication of the evidence, to require the nonresident plaintiff to give security for costs. The court denied the motion because of the delay in moving, as it appeared that the place of the plaintiff's residence appeared in the bill, and was known several terms before the motion was made. The court said: "Cases exist where being resident in Ireland or Scotland has been regarded as 'abroad' for this purpose. But those countries are under distinct judicial tribunals, and in some respects under different laws; while in this case the plaintiff resides not out of the United States, nor even out of this circuit, but in the state of Maine. I think it would, at this late day in the case, and under the circumstance of his living within this circuit, be unjustifiable to require him to furnish security, as coming either within our practice or that of England. The 44th rule provides, if the plaintiff lives without the state, the defendant may require security for cost, if moving it at the first term. But the motion is not made in season to come within this rule, and, being founded only on the general practice in chancery, must by that be refused."

Similarly, in Karns v. W. L. Imlay Rapid Cyanide Process Co. (1910) 181 Fed. 751, it was held that the defendant's right to have security for costs furnished by a nonresident plaintiff was waived, where the motion therefor was not made until after issue was joined and the taking of testimony was nearly completed. The court said: "A defendant's right or privilege to ask for security may undoubtedly be waived by laches, as clearly appears in several of the foregoing references; and, while the decisions differ concerning the point of time at which the defendant's delay will bar his right or privilege, I am not advised of any case in which security was exacted at so late a stage of the proceeding as the present controversy had attained when the motion under consideration was made. The foreign residence of the plaintiff appeared on the face of his bill; but, although the case has been pending for several months, and the defendants have answered fully, and although an unusual number of motions have been presented to the court for decision, and although the parties have taken several hundred pages of testimony and have almost finished the preparation of the case for final hearing, no effort was made until very recently to require the entry of security. If a real need for security existed, it must have been apparent long ago. No peculiar situation and no special circumstances are averred; and in my opinion, therefore, the defendants must be held to have waived whatever right they may have had originally to ask for protection."

A court rule was invoked in Pancoast v. Travelers Ins. Co. (1881) 79 Ind. 172, which provided as follows: "Motions to require security for costs must be made at the first calling of the docket, unless the affidavit upon which the motion is based shows that the plaintiff's nonresidence was not known to the defendant or his attorney, and that it is made as soon as the fact of such nonresidence comes to his knowledge." The evidence showed that the cause was called in court on the forenoon of the second day of a term of court, and the defendant was ruled to answer. In the afternoon of the same day the defendant moved for a rule to require the plaintiff to file security for costs, which was overruled by the court. It was held that the motion was properly overruled, as the court rule in question was not repugnant to the laws of the state, and should be enforced.

In Murphy v. Fairweather (1913) 72 W. Va. 14, 77 S. E. 321, the defendant did not move to require the plaintiff to give security for costs until all the proof had been taken and the case was ready for submission. It was held that the motion was made at too late a date and was properly overruled. The court said: "Having waived, until that late hour, any right to security for costs he may have had, Hart had no just ground for complaint as to the ruling on his motion. As the statute allows sixty days in which to give security for costs after the motion has been made, to allow it to be made on the hearing, when all costs have been incurred, and delay the decision during the period allowed in which to give security, would be a perversion of the statute to a purpose for which it was never intended."

In Spencer v. Trafford (1875) 42 Md. 1, it appeared that during the progress of the trial, and after the plaintiff had closed his testimony, the defendants asked the court to stop the trial until the plaintiff had complied with the act requiring a nonresident plaintiff to give security for costs. The motion was denied, and on appeal it was held that the trial court had ruled correctly, as the defendants had waived their right to insist on the security by pleading to the merits and going to trial. It was said: "The law encourages diligence on the part of suitors in the maintenance of their rights, and laches is discountenanced. The rule did not pertain to the merits of the case, but was prescribed for the protection of the defendants. It did not give them the power to use it ad libitum. It was the defendants' duty to have insisted more promptly, after the expiration of the time allowed the plaintiff to give security, for the enforcement of the rule. That should have been done before going to the trial of the cause."

In Harris v. Doyle (1902) 130 Mich. 470, 90 N. W. 293, the statute provided that in all suits before justices of the peace "plaintiffs who are not residents of the county in which the suit is brought shall give security for costs before process shall issue." At the close of the plaintiff's testimony, the defendant's counsel moved for an order requiring the plaintiff to file security for costs, on the ground that the plaintiff was a nonresident. The court refused to require the security, and the appellate tribunal in affirming the judgment said: "There can be no doubt of the power of a defendant to waive his right to security for costs. In this case the motion was not made until all of plaintiff's testimony was in. It does not appear to have been claimed that defendant's omission to move earlier was due to the belief that the plaintiff or Doyle resided in said county, nor is there any showing that he had been misinformed on the subject and misled. . . . A reversal in this case would annul the proceedings, if it did not prevent any remedy upon the lien. We must presume that the justice found that defendant's motion was unseasonable, and we will not review his action."

In Conrad v. Cole (1862) 15 Wis. 547, the defendant answered the complaint of a nonresident plaintiff, and went to trial without requiring security for costs from the plaintiff. It was held that the defendant had waived the right to such security, the court saying: "Security for the costs was evidently a matter for the benefit of the defendant. The object in requiring it in any case is that the defendant may have some responsible party within the jurisdiction of the court to whom he can look for the payment of his costs in the event he succeeds in the action. If he chooses to appear and go to trial without demanding security for costs, or taking any objection to that which is given, he must be deemed to have waived it. It is certainly a defect or error which he may waive. This is obvious. And ought he not to be held to have waived it, when he appears and goes to trial before the justice, without making any objection that the proper security for costs is not filed? We think he ought. If security for costs had been required before the justice, and the plaintiff had refused or neglected to give it, the justice might have dismissed the suit. But when no objection is taken for the want of security, and the parties appear and go to trial, it must be deemed to have been waived."

In Wallace v. Collins (1843) 5 Ark. 41, 39 Am. Dec. 359, the plaintiff was nonresident. After the jury were sworn the defendant moved to require the plaintiff to give security for costs. In holding that the defendant had waived the statutory provision, the court said: "If the motion may properly be made after the jury are sworn, we can see no good reason why such motion may not be made after they have retired from the box, and before they render their verdict. The question is one of practice, left to the sound, but not arbitrary, discretion of the court. We hold the better rule to be to hear the evidence on such motion at any time before the jury are summoned in the case. Such a rule would doubtless be more in conformity with the intention of the legislature. In our opinion, therefore, the circuit court did right in overruling the motion of the defendant below to rule the plaintiff to security for costs."

h. Application after judgment or decree.

Where a judgment or decree has been obtained, the defendant has waived his right to demand security for costs. Lytle v. Fenn (1844) 3 McLean, 411, Fed. Cas. No. 8,651 (Ohio); United States ex rel. Shelly v. St. Charles County (1887) 31 Fed. 442 (Missouri); Borhs v. Sessions (1834) 2 Dowl. P. C. (Eng.) 710.

Thus, where a motion was made for security for costs after judgment was obtained and process in the nature of execution was issued, it was held that at that stage of the case the motion should be overruled. United States ex rel. Shelly v. St. Charles County (Fed.) supra.

i. Application after judgment opened to permit defendant to plead.

A motion to require a nonresident plaintiff to give security for costs is properly denied, when made after a judgment has been opened to permit the defendant to plead. Thus, in Firestone v. Christ (1886) 2 Pa. Co. Ct. 413, a judgment was entered on a note, and subsequently the judgment was opened and the defendant let in to defend, the defense to be confined to a failure of consideration. It was held that the defendant was not entitled to security for costs at this stage of the proceedings, the court stating that he was in the position of a plaintiff, in a bill asking the court to enjoin the plaintiff from collecting the judgment, and the application was not within the reason or spirit of the rule entitling defendants to ask security for costs.

Likewise, in Booth v. Lawton (1869) 13 Lower Can. Jur. 59, the defendant was served and allowed judgment to go against him by default. Subsequently he filed an apposition and plea, and on the same day gave notice to the plaintiff of his intention to move for security for costs, since the plaintiff was a nonresident. The motion was rejected on the ground that the rules of practice provided that a motion for security must be made on the first day of the term following the return, on notice to be given within four days after the return.

So, in Applegate v. Railroad Co. (1883) 12 W. N. C. (Pa.) 406, a judgment by default was taken and the defendants subsequently obtained a rule to open the judgment and permit them to defend. It was held to be too late to ask for security for costs.

J. Application after appeal.

A motion to require a nonresident plaintiff to furnish security for costs is properly refused after an appeal has been taken. Ruckman v. Allwood (1867) 40 Ill. 128; Hatton v. Weems (1841) 12 Gill & J. (Md.) 83; Frantz v. Dehart (1881) 1 Pa. Co. Ct. 4; Montpelier Carriage Co. v. Lowenstein (1887) 4 Kulp (Pa.) 359; Hebblewhite Mfg. Co. v. White Co. (1900) 24 Pa. Co. Ct. 82; Farmers' Nursery Co. v. Harshberger (1901) 25 Pa. Co. Ct. 456. See also Kolbe v. People (1877) 85 Ill. 336, 2 Am. Crim. Rep. 177.

In Hatton v. Weems (1841) 12 Gill & J. (Md.) 83, the court held that the defendant had waived the right to demand security for costs by praying an appeal, as the settled doctrine was that any proceeding in a cause recognizing the complainant's right to sue, took away the defendant's right to have security for costs.

So, in Frantz v. Dehart (1881) 1 Pa. Co. Ct. 4, it was held that the defendant's delay for a year and a half after the entry of an appeal from a judgment of a justice of the peace was a waiver of his right to ask that security for costs be entered under the rule.

Similarly, in Montpelier Carriage Co. v. Lowenstein (1887) 4 Kulp (Pa.) 359, the defendant did not make the motion to require the plaintiff to give security until a considerable time after the cause was at issue, had been arbitrated, and the defendant had appealed from the award. In holding the motion to have been made at too late a date, the court said: "It is a general rule of practice that a nonresident plaintiff may, at the instance of the defendant, be compelled to give security for costs. But it is equally well settled that the defendant may forfeit his right to such an order by his laches. Some courts have held that if he delays his motion until after pleading, or ruling the plaintiff to declare, he waives his right to the order. But we do not think the weight of authority is in favor of the rule that pleading is in itself conclusive against the defendant, and we do not see why it should be, if the motion does not delay the trial. But where he does not make the motion until a considerable time after the cause is at issue, has been arbitrated, and he has appealed from the award, it seems to us that he is too late. If he had made his motion promptly the plaintiff might have pursued a different course. Under such circumstances the defendant should show some cause for the order, in addition to the mere fact of nonresidence."

Likewise, in Hebblewhite Mfg. Co. v. White Co. (1900) 24 Pa. Co. Ct. 82, judgment was taken against the defendants by default. They appealed, and asked that the plaintiffs be required to give security for costs, under a court rule which required such security to be given where the plaintiff resided out of the state. The plaintiffs contended that the defendants had lost by laches the right to invoke the rule. In holding the right to require security to have been waived, the court said: "Why should not an appeal from the judgment of a magistrate be as much of a bar as an appeal from an award of arbitrators? Magistrates were given jurisdiction and provision was made for arbitration for a twofold reason: First, to expedite and cheapen litigation; second, to relieve the burden of courts. If defendants choose to lose sight of, or disregard, the objects intended by magistrates' courts, and fail to appear therein and make defense, it may be their legal right to appeal and throw the case to court, but certainly courts should not put a premium on such practice. Such appeal, without making a defense before the magistrate, is, I think, a waiver of the right to demand security for costs. Had defendants made defense before the magistrate, the case might present a different aspect. A defendant, sued before a magistrate by a nonresident, should at least appear before the magistrate and warn the plaintiff that if the case reaches the courts security for costs will be demanded."

In Farmers' Nursery Co. v. Harshberger (1901) 25 Pa. Co. Ct. 456, there was a rule to show cause why the plaintiff, a nonresident, should not give security for costs under the following rule of the court: "In cases where the plaintiff resides out of the state, the defendant, on motion and affidavit of a just defense against the whole demand, may have a rule that the plaintiff give security for costs within twenty days after service of rule." The record showed that suit was brought before a justice of the peace, and judgment entered in favor of the plaintiff on May 21. The defendant took an appeal on June 4, and the application for security was made and the rule granted on July 5. It was held that the defendant had delayed unreasonably in applying for the security, and the rule should be discharged.

Similarly, in Ruckman v. Allwood (1867) 40 Ill. 128, it was held that where a cause had been tried, the verdict of the jury certified back to the appellate court, and other proceedings taken, a motion to require a nonresident plaintiff to furnish security for costs was made too late to be granted.

k. Rule in New York.

By the New York Code of Civil Procedure (§ 3272), as amended in 1915, it is provided that where security for costs is required to be given the court, on proof "at any time" of the facts, "must" make an order requiring the plaintiff to give security. See Belch v. Delaware & H. Co. (1916) 173 App. Div. 867, 160 N. Y. Supp. 74, holding that the right to security was not waived by answering the complaint before moving for security.

Prior to the Code provision referred to, the New York rule was that a cost bond was waived unless application was made before answer or demurrer. Long v. Majestre (1814) 1 Johns. Ch. 202; Johnson v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. (1900) 56 App. Div. 286, 67 N. Y. Supp. 855. Thus, in each of the following cases it was held that an application after answer was too late. Goodrich v. Pendleton (1818) 3 Johns. Ch. 520; Buckley v. Gutta Percha & Rubber Mfg. Co. (1883) 3 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 429, affirmed in (1883) 93 N. Y. 637; Stevenson v. New York L. E. & W. R. Co. (1888) 49 Hun, 169, 14 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 384, 1 N. Y. Supp. 670; Segal v. Cauldwell (1897) 22 App. Div. 95, 47 N. Y. Supp. 839; Schwartz v. Scott (1895) 25 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 53, 35 N. Y. Supp. 607; Willson v. Eveline (1899) 39 App. Div. 129, 56 N. Y. Supp. 632; Corbett v. Brantingham (1901) 65 App. Div. 335, 72 N. Y. Supp. 763, 10 N. Y. Anno. Cas. 297; Boyd v. United States Mortg. & T. Co. (1904) 90 App. Div. 32, 85 N. Y. Supp. 589; Nimkie v. New York Evening Journal Pub. Co. (1912) 133 N. Y. Supp. 1075; Smiley v. Finucane (1911) 134 N. Y. Supp. 59; Knaggs v. Easton (1907) 54 Misc. 51, 104 N. Y. Supp. 508; Denison v. Denison (1914) 85 Misc. 498, 147 N. Y. Supp. 575; Tedeschi v. Bacigalupo (1915) 89 Misc. 153, 151 N. Y. Supp. 649, affirmed without opinion in (1915) 169 App. Div. 960, 153 N. Y. Supp. 1147. See also Teal v. Yost (1889) 16 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 367, 5 N. Y. Supp. 777.

An early Federal case, however, interpreted differently the New York practice. Huginin v. Thatcher (1883) 21 Blatchf. 497, 18 Fed. 105. That decision was followed in other Federal cases in the same state. Stewart v. The Sun (1888) 36 Fed. 307; Uhle v. Burnham (1891) 46 Fed. 500; O'Brien v. Hearn (1903) 125 Fed. 95. However, in Winkley Co. v. Bowen Mfg. Co. (1910) 180 Fed. 624, a Federal court, sitting in New York, refused to order security eighteen months after issue was joined, citing and following the state decisions.

So, in each of the following cases it was held that a cost bond was waived by failure to apply therefor until after the case was ready for trial: Robinson v. Sinclair (1845) 1 Denio, 628; Swan v. Mathews (1854) 3 Duer, 613; Fearn v. Gelpcke (1862) 13 Abb. Pr. 473; McDonald v. Peet (1884) 7 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 200; Dunaway v. Terry (1902) 37 Misc. 510, 75 N. Y. Supp. 974; Hopkins v. Cohen (1916) 96 Misc. 657, 161 N. Y. Supp. 1104; Ampel v. Seifert (1904) 86 N. Y. Supp. 17. See also Boyce v. Bates (1853) 8 How. Pr. 495.

Similarly, it was held that an application for a cost bond could not be made at the trial. Fitzsimmons v.

Curley (1884) 6 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 156.

In like manner an application after judgment was held to be too late. Abel v. Bradner (1888) 15 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 241, 3 N. Y. Supp. 20; Brackett v. Griswold (1887) 46 Hun, 442; Wood v. Blodgett (1888) 49 Hun, 64, 2 N. Y. Supp. 304; Turell v. Erie R. Co. (1899) 46 App. Div. 296, 61 N. Y. Supp. 308; Nassar v. Elias (1908) 1 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. N. S. 274, 115 N. Y. Supp. 106.

So too, a motion to require security for costs after the taking of an appeal was held to be out of time. Flint v. Van Deusen (1881) 24 Hun, 440.

II. Waiver of right to dismissal.

a. Application after continuance.

Where a defendant secures the continuance of a cause, the right to have the cause dismissed for failure of the plaintiff to furnish security for costs is waived. Lavage v. Burke (1873) 50 Ala. 61; Shuttleworth v. Dunlop (1881) 34 N. J. Eq. 488; Enos v. Stansbury (1881) 18 W. Va. 477. See also Ex parte Jones (1887) 83 Ala. 587, 3 So. 811. Compare Burke v. Dillingham (1885) 42 S. C. L. (8 Rich.) 256.

In Shuttleworth v. Dunlop (1881) 34 N. J. Eq. 488, the defendant asked the dismissal of the complainant's bill, because he had failed to obey an order requiring him to give security for costs. The complainant applied for the appointment of a receiver, and on the return day of the order the defendant asked for a continuance, which was granted. Subsequently, the defendant obtained the order requiring the complainant to give security for costs. On appeal, the court held that the defendant, by obtaining a continuance, had taken such steps as to disentitle him to security, saying: "A proper regard for the rights growing out of an enlightened comity requires the courts of this state to treat the citizens of other states or nations, who appeal to them for justice against our own citizens, with considerate liberality. A defendant, in case his adversary is nonresident, has an unquestionable right to security for costs, but inasmuch as it is a right which may be used to delay or obstruct justice, he should be required to insist upon it promptly, and to adhere to it persistently, or otherwise be held to have lost it."

In Enos v. Stansbury (1881) 18 W. Va. 477, the defendants appeared and pleaded, and also moved to require the plaintiff to furnish security for costs, which motion was granted, it being ordered that security for costs should be furnished within sixty days, or the suit dismissed. After the lapse of the required sixty days, no security having been furnished, the defendants moved to continue the case, which motion was granted. The statute (Code 1869, chap. 38, § 2) provided as follows: "No person, who is a nonresident of this state, shall hereafter prosecute any action or suit in any court in this state, until he has (if required by the defendant) filed with the clerk of the court security for the costs in the manner prescribed." In holding the defendants to have waived the statutory requirement, the court said: "It is much clearer under our statute than it was under the Virginia statutes that the suit, after the expiration of the time allowed by the court for giving security for costs, did not stand dismissed, and that it required an order subsequently to dismiss it, if the security was not given. Our law simply provides, not that the case shall be dismissed, but only that it shall not be prosecuted until the security is given. This law is for the benefit of the defendants, and they of course can waive the benefit of it; and this they do when they, without objection, permit the suit to be further prosecuted without the security for costs being given. In the case before us, they actually, after the expiration of the sixty days, asked the court to continue the case, instead of asking it to dismiss the case. This was an express waiver of their right then to have it dismissed. They could, of course, afterwards have withdrawn this waiver, and required the giving of the security for costs; but they never did so."

In the case of Ex parte Jones (1887) 83 Ala. 587, 3 So. 811, an application by petition was made to show cause why a peremptory mandamus should not be issued, requiring the dismissal of the suit for failure of the plaintiffs, who were nonresidents, to give security for costs as prescribed and required by a former order in the cause. The statute provided that actions by a nonresident must be dismissed if security was not given when the suit was commenced, or within such time thereafter as the court might direct. It appeared that the court had made the order allowing the plaintiff until the first day of a subsequent term to give security, and when this day arrived the judge, in effect, extended the time, by continuing the cause, and on the third day of the term the proper security was furnished. It was held that the right to dismiss was discretionary with the trial judge, and as he effectually extended the time for furnishing the security the action could not be dismissed.

Compare Burke v. Dillingham (1855) 42 S. C. L. (8 Rich.) 256, wherein, on motion of the defendant, an order was made, requiring the plaintiff to give security for costs on or before the ensuing term. The plaintiff defaulted from this order, but the case was marked continued, and remained on the docket until the fourth term after the order had been entered, when the plaintiff moved for leave to enter security for costs nunc pro tunc, alleging that he had never had notice of the application for the order, nor of the order itself. The court held that the defendant had not waived the right to dismissal by having failed to enter a judgment of nonsuit, or by continuing the cause on the calendar, and nonsuit was ordered.

b. Application after demurrer.

The right to have a case dismissed for failure of a plaintiff to furnish security for costs is waived by the entry of a demurrer to the complaint. Muldoon v. Place (1885) 2 Ariz. 4, 6 Pac. 479; Clark v. Gibson (1840) 2 Ark. 109; Webb v. Jones (1840) 2 Ark. 330; Kittlewell v. Scull (1841) 3 Ark. 474. Compare Dean v. Cannon (1892) 37 W. Va. 123, 16 S. E. 444.

In Webb v. Jones (1840) 2 Ark. 330, it was held that the failure or omission of a nonresident plaintiff to file a bond for costs before the instituted suit was waived by the defendant demurring to the petition, although the defendant's motion for dismissal because of such failure had been previously overruled.

So, in Clark v. Gibson (1840) 2 Ark. 109, an action for money had and received, the defendant moved to dismiss the declaration because of the failure of the nonresident plaintiff to file a bond for costs. The motion was overruled, whereupon the defendant demurred to the declaration, which demurrer was also overruled, and judgment was entered for the plaintiff. It was held that, by demurring, the defendant waived the failure to furnish the bond for costs. The court said: "If the defendant, instead of availing himself of this defense at the proper time, interposes a defense to the merits of the action, the law regards him as waiving the objection altogether, upon the same principle by which the defendant is precluded by law from insisting upon any other matter of defense in abatement, if he omits to take advantage of it in the established order of pleading, or pleads to the action itself, in bar thereof, either before or after presenting the matter in abatement; and upon this principle the defendant below must be considered as waiving upon the record his motion to dismiss, when he demurred to the declaration, and his adversary joined in the demurrer." See to the same effect, Kittlewell v. Scull (1841) 3 Ark. 474.

Similarly, in Muldoon v. Place (Ariz.) supra, an action to recover possession of a mining claim, a demurrer to the complaint was filed, and about a month subsequently a motion was made to dismiss the case for failure of the plaintiff to give a bond for costs before commencing suit, as required by statute. It was held that the motion was made at too late a date, the court stating that all dilatory pleas or motions must be pleaded in apt time, that is, at the earliest practicable moment, or the right to plead them or make the motion would be waived. The motion to dismiss for want of security for costs being such a motion, it was held that after filing a demurrer it was then too late to ask for and require the plaintiff to file a bond for costs. A judgment of dismissal was accordingly reversed.

Compare Dean v. Cannon (1892) 37 W. Va. 123, 16 S. E. 444, wherein the defendants filed an answer to the complaint of a nonresident plaintiff, and during the same term obtained an order requiring the plaintiff to furnish security for costs. Before the expiration of the time given to furnish security, the defendants demurred to the complaint and the demurrer was overruled. The court held that under the circumstances the defendants had not waived their right to have the case dismissed for failure to furnish security.

c. Application after answer.

A defendant, by answering, waives his right to a dismissal of the action for failure of the plaintiff to furnish security for costs.

Alabama.—Heflin v. Rock Mills Mfg. Lumber Co. (1877) 58 Ala. 613.

Arkansas.—Ormsby v. Kendall (1840) 2 Ark. 338.

Colorado.—Compare Edgar Gold & S. Min. Co. v. Taylor (1887) 10 Colo. 110, 14 Pac. 113.

District of Columbia.—Guarantee Sav. Loan & Invest. Co. v. Pendleton (1894) 14 App. D. C. 384. And see the reported case (BOSS v. HAGAN, ante, 1508).

Idaho.—Compare Kissler v. Budge (1913) 24 Idaho, 246, 133 Pac. 125.

Illinois.—Roberts v. Fahs (1863) 32 Ill. 474.

Indiana.—Lindley v. Kindall (1836). 4 Blackf. 189.

Iowa.—Randolph v. Cottage Hospital (1905) — Iowa, —, 103 N. W. 157.

Massachusetts.—Carpenter v. Aldrich (1841) 3 Met. 58. Compare Keown v. Trudo (1919) 233 Mass. 19, 123 N. E. 99; Keown v. Hughes (1919) 233 Mass. 1, 123 N. E. 98.

Michigan.—Lacomb v. Godkin (1906) 143 Mich. 193, 106 N. W. 702.

South Carolina.—Fonville v. Richey (1845) 31 S. C. L. (2 Rich.) 10; Garratt v. Niel (1897) 49 S. C. 560, 27 S.

E. 512; Ex parte Hill (1899) 55 S. C. 446, 33 S. E. 483.

In Guarantee Sav. Loan & Invest. Co. v. Pendleton (1894) 14 App. D. C. 384, the plaintiff, a nonresident, brought an action without first giving security for costs, as required by statute. The defendant appeared and moved to dismiss the suit because of the failure of the plaintiff to give the security, but the justice allowed the plaintiff to file a bond and overruled the defendant's motion. Thereupon, the defendant appeared generally, and pleaded to the merits of the case. The court held that the action of the defendant amounted to a waiver of the positive condition that the plaintiff should not commence his suit without first giving security for costs.

Similarly, in Lindley v. Kindall (Ind.) supra, on the motion of the defendant, an order was entered for the nonresident plaintiff to show cause why the suit should not be dismissed for want of security for costs. At the following term, however, the defendant pleaded to the merits, without any notice being taken of the rule requiring security for costs. The court held that the defendant had waived the right to security for costs.

In the reported case (BOSS v. HAGAN, ante, 1508) the defendant, when served with the complaint, moved to dismiss the suit on the ground that the plaintiff was a nonresident, and had filed no security for costs as required by statute. The motion was overruled, whereupon the defendant entered a general appearance and defended on the merits. The court holds that the statutory requirement was a privilege personal to the defendant, which he waived by pleading to the merits.

The defendant in Ormsby v. Kendall (1840) 2 Ark. 338, moved to dismiss the cause because of the failure of the plaintiff, a nonresident, to furnish a bond for costs, and the motion was overruled. It was held that the defendant, by pleading to the merits, had waived the right to have the bond furnished.

In Heflin v. Rock Mills Mfg. & Lumber Co. (Ala.) supra, the defendant appeared before a circuit judge and moved to dismiss the plaintiff's petition on several grounds, none of which raised the question of the want of security for costs. His motion was overruled, and he then applied to the supreme court for a mandamus to compel the lower tribunal to dismiss the petition on the grounds previously set forth. On denial of the motion, the defendant moved to dismiss for want of security for costs. The court held that, by entering on a defense, the defendant had waived the right to have the suit dismissed for failure to give security for costs.

In Fonville v. Richey (S. C.) supra, an order was entered that the plaintiff should give security for costs. Subsequently the plaintiff filed a declaration without having filed the security as ordered. The defendants filed their plea and issue was joined. When the case came on for trial, defendants moved for a nonsuit, which was denied by the court. It was held that the defendants, by filing their plea, had waived the right to have the suit dismissed by reason of the plaintiff's failure to file the necessary security.

In Carpenter v. Aldrich (1841) 3 Met. (Mass.) 58, the defendants moved that the action should be dismissed, because it appeared on the writ that although the plaintiff, when the same was made and served, was an inhabitant of Pennsylvania, yet it was not indorsed by an inhabitant of Massachusetts under the terms of a statute which provided that "all original writs in which the plaintiff is not an inhabitant of the state shall, before the entry thereof, be indorsed." The court held that the manifest intention of the provision was to give security to the defendants, and that they had waived the statutory requirement by pleading to the merits. See to the same effect, Ripley v. Warner (1824) 2 Pick. (Mass.) 592.

However, in Keown v. Hughes (1919) 233 Mass. 1, 123 N. E. 98, an action on contract, the defendant moved that the plaintiff, not being an inhabitant of the commonwealth, should be nonsuited because his writ had not been indorsed for costs in compliance with the statute. The motion was not made until a year after the date of the writ, but it was alleged in the motion that the fact that the plaintiff was a nonresident was not disclosed on the face of the pleadings, and that it was a fact which had only recently come to the knowledge of the defendant. The motion was allowed and an order granted requiring the plaintiff to furnish an indorser for costs within ten days. On failure of the plaintiff to furnish the indorser a nonsuit was granted. The court stated that under ordinary circumstances the failure of a nonresident to furnish an indorser for costs is taken to have been waived if the objection is not made at the first term of court, but where the fact that the plaintiff is not an inhabitant is not disclosed on the pleadings, and is known to the defendant, this rule does not apply and the motion is properly allowed. See to the same effect, Keown v. Trubo (1919) 233 Mass. 19, 123 N. E. 99.

In Edgar Gold & S. Min. Co. v. Taylor (1887) 10 Colo. 110, 14 Pac. 113, it appeared that a nonresident plaintiff commenced an action, but failed to file the necessary cost bond until several weeks had elapsed. The statute provided that such a bond should be filed before the institution of an action by a nonresident plaintiff. On appearing, the defendant moved to dismiss the action, and on denial of the motion he answered the complaint. It was held that the defendant had not waived the statutory requirement by answering after his motion for dismissal had been denied.

So, in Kissler v. Budge (1913) 24 Idaho, 246, 133 Pac. 125, the defendant filed an answer and shortly thereafter moved to require the nonresident plaintiff to furnish security for costs. He subsequently moved for a dismissal of the action on the ground that no bond had been given. The court held that although the undertaking could be waived by the defendant, either by failing to demand the same or by proceeding in the action to such an extent as to make it inequitable thereafter to make the demand, the evidence showed conclusively that the defendant had not waived his right to dismissal for failure to give the security.

d. Application after case ready for trial.

Where a case is ready for trial, a motion to dismiss because of the failure of a nonresident plaintiff to furnish security for costs will be denied. Thus, in Weeks v. Napier (1859) 33 Ala. 568, the plaintiff, having obtained a judgment, summoned another by process of garnishment, as the debtor of the judgment debtor. The garnishee answered, excepted to the action of the court in several particulars, and at a subsequent term, after having been examined, moved to dismiss the garnishment proceedings, it appearing that the plaintiff was a nonresident and had not given security for the costs. It was held that the garnishee had waived his right to have the case dismissed, the court saying: "He [the garnishee] will not be permitted to deal with the case as one rightly in court, continue, or contribute to the continuation of, the litigation, and after heavy costs have been incurred, or, perhaps, after he makes the discovery that his defense will be unavailing, then for the first time raise the objection that he had been improperly sued, without security for costs; and for this omission have the cause repudiated. Such practice would work the grossest injustice."

In Cator v. Collins (1876) 2 Mo. App. 225, the defendant moved on the trial to dismiss the suit for want of security for costs, it appearing that the plaintiff was a nonresident. In holding the refusal of the trial court to grant such motion to be correct, the court said: "Obviously the person who, as attorney, brings a suit in behalf of a nonresident, without filing an undertaking for costs, commits what may be termed an impropriety; but it is one which has been so long acquiesced in that it would be extremely harsh peremptorily to enforce against him the extreme consequences of his irregularity; and if the defendant, who, of course, is aware of the nonresidence of the plaintiff, continues silent until the cause is reached for trial, and then attempts for the first time to exact these extreme consequences, he is guilty of at least as great an impropriety, and will have only himself to blame if his application be treated as the court in this case treated it."

Similarly, in Wheelin v. Kertley (1808) Hardin (Ky.) 540, the trial court below dismissed the suit on the motion of the defendant for want of security for costs, the motion not being made until after the jury were sworn. In holding the motion to have been made at too late a date, the court said: "We are also of opinion that the motion to dismiss for want of security came too late, after the jury was sworn, and that it ought not then to have been heard by the court. The plaintiff has the right of contesting the fact of nonresidence, and it would give the defendant a most unreasonable advantage over him if the motion were permitted to be made after the jury was sworn, when, in general, the plaintiff could not have reasonable time or opportunity of making defense to the motion."

The question was raised in Miami Copper Co. v. Strohl (1913) 14 Ariz. 410, 130 Pac. 605, whether the right to a dismissal for failure to give security had been waived by delaying the motion until after the first trial of the action, in which the jury disagreed. The court made an order requiring such security, but the plaintiff filed an affidavit alleging his inability to do so. The defendant questioned the sufficiency of the showing made by the plaintiff, and moved to dismiss the suit for failure to comply with the order of the court. The court held that the motion to dismiss was properly denied, as the defendant had unduly delayed in making his application for security. It was said: "Under the view we take of it, the sufficiency of the showing for and against the giving of the security is not necessary to determine. On the proper showing, the defendant may require the security at any time before trial. Ariz. Rev. Stat. 1901, § 1551. The motion for the security was not made until one trial of the cause was had. This, we think, was too late. . . . In view of such an application being considered a personal privilege, and being looked upon with disfavor as dilatory, it behooves the defendant who requires the security to bring his application clearly within the terms of the statute. The appellant has not done so in this case."

e. Application after verdict.

After a verdict has been rendered, it is too late for the defendant to move for a dismissal of the cause because of the plaintiff's failure to furnish security for costs. Thus, in Furnan v. Harman (1823) 13 S. C. L. (2 M'Cord) 436, when the case was called for trial, a motion was made for a nonsuit on the ground that security for costs had not been given within the time prescribed by an order of court, previously made for that purpose. The motion was overruled, on the ground that the question had been decided at a former court, but it was said obiter: "But even if the fact were otherwise, it would furnish no ground for setting aside the verdict. There is no law in this state requiring persons residing out of the state to give security for the costs when they bring an action in our courts. It is merely a practice introduced by the court for the security of the defendant; and after a verdict has been obtained, the court will not set it aside, even if no security has been given. The object of it ceases as soon as it is discovered that the plaintiff's case has merits, and a verdict has been obtained."

So, in Grimball v. Mississippi & A. R. Co. (1844) 3 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 38, wherein a rule was made against the plaintiff in the lower court, for security for costs, with which there was no compliance. The defendants permitted the case to go to trial and judgment, without objection. The court held that the defendants' want of action below was a waiver of their right to a dismissal of the cause.

In Davies v. Graham (1820) 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 540, an action for breach of contract, the defendants answered the complaint, alleging fraud and deceit, to which the plaintiffs demurred, and issue being joined, judgment was rendered by the court in favor of the plaintiffs. Subsequently the defendants moved to set aside the judgment and dismiss the suit on the ground that the plaintiffs, who were nonresidents, had failed to give security for costs, but the motion was overruled. It was held that the requirement had been waived by neglecting to make the motion in due time, the appellate court saying: "With respect to the court's refusal to set aside the verdict and dismiss the suit, it need only be remarked that the application came too late to authorize the interposition of the court. For whilst the law properly guards the interests of the defendant and that of the officers of the court, by requiring the nonresident plaintiff to give bond and security for cost, it would be a palpable violation of the established rules of practice to permit the defendant, after verdict against him, for the first time to urge the failure to give bond for costs as a cause for overturning the verdict and dismissing the suit."

f. Application after appeal.

A motion for the dismissal of an action for failure of a nonresident plaintiff to furnish security for costs will be denied, when it is not made until after an appeal has been taken.

Alabama.—Duncan v. Richardson (1859) 34 Ala. 117.

California.—Comstock v. Clemens (1861) 19 Cal. 77.

Illinois.—Ripley v. Morris (1845) 7 Ill. 381.

Indiana.—Coffey v. Collier (1859) 12 Ind. 565.

Kentucky.—Shelley v. Newport Sav. Asso. (1875) 11 Bush, 305.

Massachusetts.—Whiting v. Hollister (1806) 2 Mass. 102; Gilbert v. Nantucket Bank (1809) 5 Mass. 97.

Michigan.—Bay City v. Bay Circuit Judge (1901) 126 Mich. 50, 85 N. W. 263.

In Bay City v. Bay Circuit Judge (Mich.) supra, an application was made for an order requiring a circuit judge to vacate an order refusing to grant a dismissal of a case on the defendant's motion, because of the plaintiff's failure to furnish security for costs. The suit was commenced in April of one year and the judgment was reversed in May of the year following. In August of the same year the motion was made to dismiss the cause because of the plaintiff's failure to furnish security for costs. The court, in denying the application, stated that the motion was made at too late a day, there being no apparent excuse for the delay.

So, in Duncan v. Richardson (Ala.) supra, the defendant entered on the trial of the case before a justice of the peace, and succeeded in establishing a defense on the merits. After the case was carried by appeal to an intermediate court, he moved to dismiss the suit because of the failure of the plaintiff to give security for costs. It was held that he had waived his right to make such a motion.

Likewise, in Coffey v. Collier (Ind.) supra, an action on a promissory note, the defendants appeared in the lower court and defended the action unsuccessfully. On appeal, a motion was made to dismiss the cause on the ground that the plaintiff had not complied with the statutory requirement that nonresident plaintiffs should furnish security for costs. It was held that the defendant had waived the requirement.

Similarly, in Whiting v. Hollister (1806) 2 Mass. 102, the original writ was not indorsed, as required by statute, and at a subsequent term the plaintiff obtained leave to indorse the writ. On appeal the defendant moved to dismiss the appeal on the ground that the indorsement had not been made at the proper time. In holding that the defendant had waived the right to enforce the statutory requirement, the court said: "This provision [for the indorsement of the writ] was made, for the security of the defendant, which, if he pleased, he might waive; and if, at the term the writ is returned, he does not except to the want of an indorser, either by a plea in abatement, or perhaps by moving the court to nonsuit the plaintiff, he must be considered as having waived the security provided for his benefit." See to the same effect, Gilbert v. Nantucket Bank (1809) 5 Mass. 97.

In Shelley v. Newport Sav. Asso. (1875) 11 Bush (Ky.) 305, under a statute which gave to a defendant the unqualified right to have an action dismissed if it was begun by a nonresident without giving a bond for costs, it was held that the right, like all similar rights, could be waived, and if the defendant took no steps to enforce it before judgment, the defendant would be held to have waived the right, and could not raise the question for the first time, after an appeal to the court of last resort. E. C. B.

STELLA WINIFRED HOLMES

v.

FRANK A. HOLMES, Appt.

Iowa Supreme Court — February 18, 1919.

(— Iowa, —, 170 N. W. 798.)

Divorce — cruel and inhuman treatment — communicating venereal disease.

1. Communicating a venereal disease to one's wife is within a statute allowing a divorce for cruel and inhuman treatment.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1540.]

— effect of existence of disease.

2. The mere fact that a wife is, after marriage, found to be infected with a venereal disease, is not in itself sufficient to justify granting her a divorce, but her case must be supported by negative testimony that she was not exposed in any manner other than through her husband.

Evidence — communication of disease — sufficiency.

3. That a man communicated venereal disease to his wife may be found from testimony that she was chaste and not affected at time of marriage, that she developed the disease within a few weeks thereafter without other exposure than through her husband, and that he was circumcised just prior to the marriage, although he denies that he had ever been afflicted with the disease.

Divorce — knowingly communicating disease.

4. A man, knowing the possibility of communicating venereal disease to his wife by intercourse with her, will, in case she contracts the disease from him, be held to have communicated the disease to her knowingly so as to entitle her to a divorce, although he hoped, because of precautions taken, to avoid such result from his act.

[See 9 R. C. L. 351.]

Courts — jurisdiction — action for divorce.

5. Plaintiff's residence in the county in which an action for divorce is brought at the time the action is commenced, with the intention then to remain permanently in that county, gives the courts of that county jurisdiction under a statute providing that the court in the county in which either party resides has jurisdiction of the subject-matter of divorce.

[See 9 R. C. L. 400, 403, 545.]

APPEAL by defendant from a decree of the District Court for Fayette County (Hobson, J.) in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to secure a divorce because of alleged cruel and inhuman treatment. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Ainsworth & Antes, E. R. O'Brien, W. W. Woolley, and Bailie & Edson, for appellant:

No court would be justified in finding a defendant guilty of cruel and inhuman treatment based upon the inference of such guilt, to be drawn simply from the fact that the wife was shown to have been infected with a venereal disease after her marriage, even though she had been shown as being of previously chaste character and to have had sexual relations with no other man.

Holthoefer v. Holthoefer, 47 Mich. 260, 11 N. W. 150; Foss v. Foss, 12 Allen, 26; 2 Bishop, Marr. Div. & Sep. § 1398; Nelson, Div. & Sep. § 272; N. v. N. 8 Swabey & T. 234, 9 Jur. N. S. 1203, 9 L. T. N. S. 265; Morphett v. Morphett, L. R. 1 Prob. & Div. 702, 38 L. J. Prob. N. S. 23, 19 L. T. N. S. 801, 17 Week. Rep. 471; Mount v. Mount, 15 N. J. Eq. 162, 82 Am. Dec. 276; Collett v. Collett, 35 Beav. 312, 55 Eng. Reprint, 916, 12 Jur. N. S. 180, 14 L. T. N. S. 94, 14 Week. Rep. 446; Summerbell v. Summerbell, 37

N. J. Eq. 617; Mack v. Handy, 39 La. Ann. 491, 2 So. 181.

This charge of cruel and inhuman treatment is not substantiated unless it appears that the communication was knowingly, wilfully, and intentionally accomplished.

Jones v. Jones, Searle & S. 137; Collett v. Collett, 1 Curt. Eccl. Rep. 678; Abramowitz v. Abramowitz, 140 N. Y. Supp. 275; Anonymous, 17 Abb. N. C. 231; Hooe v. Hooe, 122 Ky. 590, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 729, 92 S. W. 317, 13 Ann. Cas. 214; Morehouse v. Morehouse, 70 Conn. 420, 39 Atl. 516; Wagner v. Wagner, 80 Or. 256, 156 Pac. 1037; Ryder v. Ryder, 66 Vt. 159, 44 Am. St. Rep. 833, 28 Atl. 1029; Carbajal v. Fernandez, 130 La. 812, 58 So. 581; Leach v. Leach, — Me. —, 8 Atl. 349; Rehart v. Rehart, — Or. —, 25 Pac. 775; Venzke v. Venzke, 94 Cal. 225, 29 Pac. 499; McMahan v. McMahan, 186 Pa. 485, 41 L.R.A. 802, 40 Atl. 795; Smith v. Smith, 171 Mass. 404, 41 L.R.A. 800, 68 Am. St. Rep. 440, 50 N. E. 933.

Messrs. E. H. Estey, W. B. Ingersoll, and J. R. Bane for appellee.

Gaynor, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff and defendant were married in the city of Oelwein, in this state, on the 5th day of October, 1916. At the time of the marriage plaintiff was residing at Minneapolis, Minnesota, and the defendant was a resident of Sioux City, Iowa. During the ten days following their marriage they visited the cities of Cedar Falls and Sioux City, and on October 16th returned to Minneapolis, where plaintiff formerly resided. Six acts of copulation are shown to have taken place during this time. While at Sioux City, one Dr. Lawrence was consulted concerning the condition of the plaintiff. She was then suffering from nausea, a symptom of pregnancy. The evidence shows that nausea may follow as a consequence within that time, but it is of rather unfrequent occurrence. On her return to Minneapolis she immediately consulted one Dr. Ida MacKeen, who gave her electric treatments and manipulation, but made no physical examination of her. On the 23d of October she again consulted this same doctor, and was found having difficulty in urination, attended with scalding and burning. This doctor made an examination of her, and found her private parts inflamed with a serous, sanguineous, purulent, profuse, inflammatory exudate, attended by a discharge of pus from the urethra and from the vagina. The doctor took four slides of the exude and made four smears upon the slides. Two of the slides she examined under a microscope, and found the presence of gonococcus, a gonorrhea-producing germ. On the 29th day of November following she was examined by Dr. Emmons, of Burr Oak, who pronounced her trouble gonorrhea. On the 13th day of December, 1916, she was again examined by Dr. Alford, of Waterloo, who said that he made a thorough vaginal examination, took smears from the cervix and urethra, and examined them. The examination disclosed that she was suffering from gonorrheal infection of the urethra, also of the cervix, uterus, and both Fallopian tubes, and he treated her for that.

The testimony discloses that before the marriage the plaintiff was a perfectly healthy woman, and her private parts in normal condition; that within less than two weeks after her marriage she was suffering from gonorrhea, which continued to develop until it reached an exaggerated form of the disease. Her contention is that the defendant knowingly communicated it to her. On this she bases her right to a divorce.

The authorities are uniform that an act such as is complained of here, if proven, constitutes cruel and inhuman treatment, under the statute, such as justifies the granting of a divorce. The holding is that the communication by a husband of a venereal disease to his wife, knowingly, is good and sufficient cause for a divorce, and is cruelty of the most flagrant kind.

However, the mere fact that the wife is found infected with this disease after marriage is not in itself sufficient to justify the court in granting a divorce. In Holthoefer v. Holthoefer, 47 Mich. 260, 643, 11 N. W. 150, it is said, in substance, that the evidence from the physician and nurses attending disclosed that the complainant was afflicted with a venereal disease. No charge was made and no suspicion suggested against the chastity of the complainant. On the other hand, there is no evidence against the defendant except the single fact that his wife was found to be diseased. If it were impossible that a virtuous wife should contract such cruel and inhuman treatment—communicating venereal disease.

Divorce—

—effect of existence of disease.

a disease otherwise than from the husband, perhaps the facts already stated should, under the circumstances, be sufficient proof of his guilt. But it is conceded that the wife may innocently acquire the disease in other ways, and the wife's case must be supported by negative testimony that she was not in any manner exposed.

So we turn our attention to the evidence touching the physical condition of the defendant prior to the marriage.

Dr. Ida MacKeen testified that on the 26th or 27th of October she informed the defendant that his wife was suffering with gonorrhea. The defendant said: "My God, where did she get it?" The doctor replied: "You ought to know." He answered that he had a eugenic examination prior to his marriage to know that he was absolutely clean. The doctor replied that that might be, but probably somewhere in his long life he had contracted a germ that might have remained dormant or quiescent, and on finding virgin soil became rejuvenated and she was affected. He responded by saying that he was infected slightly twenty-two years ago.

Another witness, E. H. Farin, testified that he overheard a conversation between the defendant and one Fisher, in which the defendant told Fisher that he had been in to Chicago with some friends, making the rounds of the sporting houses; told of a number of different stunts that the girls pulled off; heard him tell about a visit to New York city, in which he said that he made the rounds of the sporting houses and had a good time. This conversation occurred about eighteen years ago.

One Davis testified that in August, 1916, about two months before the marriage, he saw the defendant in a roadhouse with women, near Sioux City, but had no conversation with him. The place was considered a fast place. Defendant was then under the influence of liquor. At another time he heard the defendant tell of having women in his room at a hotel; heard him tell about parties with ladies in the hotel. In 1914 or 1915 the witness testifies that Holmes asked him about a prescription for gonorrhea, and was told that one Hecklin had a recipe that was good for that. The witness further testified that about August or September, 1916, defendant asked him where he could find Hecklin; that he wanted to get that recipe.

Hecklin testified that he met the defendant in Sioux City with Davis. Davis asked him for a certain prescription he had for gonorrhea, and wanted to know if a friend could get a copy. He told him "Yes," and he gave him the prescription. The same witness testified that afterwards, in the Jackson Hotel at Sioux City, sometime in September, 1916, the defendant asked him if he was the man that gave him the prescription through Davis, and was informed that he was, but that he had lost the prescription. He then asked the defendant if the prescription helped him, and he said "Yes," he wanted to get it filled again; that he saw him at the roadhouse at the same time Davis testified to, sometime in July, 1916.

Dr. Lawrence, called for the defendant, testified that on September 3d preceding the marriage, the defendant came to him and told him he had made up his mind to have an operation. "I knew he had a fistula before that. I examined him at that time with reference to the operation for fistula. I advised him to be circumcised. I told him that he would be cleaner. I said nothing about infection, and never thought of infection at that time or anything of that kind. Germs of various kinds may get under the foreskin. I made no examination at that time to determine whether he had gonorrhea or not, or whether he ever had it. I never made any such an examination of his private parts. I only examined him for the purpose of circumcision. I circumcised him then."

Defendant was asked this question concerning the circumcision:

Didn't you tell your wife you had been examined to see that you were free from disease?

A. I did not. I told her I had a circumcision, that I might come to her a clean, perfect, physical man.

The defendant denies that he ever had any of the symptoms of gonorrhea; denies that he was ever examined or treated for gonorrhea before his wife accused him of communicating it to her; that after her accusation he was examined by several physicians. These physicians testified that they found nothing to indicate that he ever had gonorrhea. Defendant denies practically all the matters testified to by the plaintiff's witnesses touching his admissions and previous conduct. It is true some of the witnesses against him do not come with very clean records, but a summing up of the testimony shows these facts, we think, fairly well established. The plaintiff is a pure, virtuous woman, and never copulated with anyone but her husband, and never was exposed to gonorrheal affection, except as it may be found in these acts of copulation; that immediately after copulation she was afflicted with gonorrhea. The defendant was about forty-two years of age; had traveled a good deal over the country, and visited some of the larger cities; was vigorous physically, and had on several occasions visited sporting houses and consorted with lewd women, and at some time during his life had been afflicted with gonorrhea. The testimony further shows that one may carry the gonococci in a latent form, lying dormant some place in the prostate or in the urethra or some of the sexual organs, and not have any test show it; that he may carry it for several years, and that he may communicate it after it has lain apparently dormant for two years. Circumcision is not a Christian rite. It is unusual for Christian men to be circumcised. Even among those who consider circumcision proper, it is performed in the early life of the child. No doubt circumcision is conducive to cleanliness. Christian men, however, do not ordinarily resort to circumcision to secure cleanliness. Something must have been in the mind of the defendant, or in the mind of his physician, at the time of the circumcision, that indicated that there were unusual conditions requiring cleanliness in this defendant.

The record discloses that the plaintiff and the defendant had been acquainted for a great many years, though the plaintiff knew nothing of the defendant's habits of life. He proposed marriage to her some fifteen years before, and at intervals thereafter, but had been either turned down or laughed down by the plaintiff. At least, she seems not to have taken his proposition seriously until the 12th day of August, 1916, when the engagement to marry was entered into. Immediately he began to clean up. Why clean up? Why did he need cleaning up? Why was it deemed necessary that he be circumcised that he might present himself "a clean, sound man" to his wife on the marriage day? He says he had never been exposed and never had been affected with any venereal disease. Why, then, immediately after he had engaged himself to marry this plaintiff, whose hand he had so long sought and desired, did he begin to clean up? Why this circumcision? The question suggests the answer—he thought he needed cleaning up; that there were conditions that required remedying before the marriage was consummated. This circumstance has great probative force, both on his condition, and his knowledge of his condition, immediately before the marriage. He may have hoped to avoid the effect that usually follows copulation when those conditions exist. It was, however, a reckless and wanton exposure of the woman to consequences most serious to her life and happiness. We think the two communication of disease—

Evidence—
sufficiency.

propositions are established, to wit:
That he was affected with gonorrhea at the time of the marriage, and communicated it to his wife; and, second, that he knowingly, wantonly, and recklessly indulged his passion without due care for her safety. In Boardman v. Boardman, L. R. 1 Prob.

Divorce—knowingly communicating disease.

& Div. 233, 14 Week. Rep. 1024 (1866), it was held that, if the husband knew that he was in such a state of health that having connection with his wife would be a reckless act, the communication of the disease would amount to cruelty; and that one who does an act likely to produce injury, and the injury follows, cannot excuse himself by saying that he hoped the probable consequences might, by some peculiar good fortune, not follow. Ordinarily, the state of a man's health is within his own knowledge. Here we have proof that the state of his health prior to the marriage was within his own knowledge.

In Cook v. Cook, 32 N. J. Eq. 475, it was said: "If a husband, knowing that he is in such a state of health that, by having connection with his wife, he will run the risk of communicating venereal disease to her, recklessly has connection with her, and thereby communicates the disease to her, he is guilty of cruelty, and the presumption is that he knew his own state of health and the probable result of the connection. . . . The proof of the wilfulness of the act may reasonably be sought in surrounding circumstances, in the condition of the husband, and the probabilities of the case."

See also Carbajal v. Fernandez, 130 La. 812, 58 So. 581; Canfield v. Canfield, 34 Mich. 519.

We find, therefore, that the plaintiff's case was proven by that degree of evidence which the law requires, and she was entitled to the decree which she obtained.

II. It is contended, however, that the court had no jurisdiction of the parties at the time of the commencement of this suit and at the time the decree was entered.

It will be noted from what has been said before that, prior to her marriage, the plaintiff resided in Minneapolis, Minnesota, the defendant in Sioux City, Iowa; that soon after the marriage they moved to Minnesota; that when this trouble arose the plaintiff left Minneapolis, took all her furniture with her, and moved to Oelwein, and took up her residence with her uncle, Judge Bane, intending never to live with defendant again. She came to Oelwein about the 2d of December. The notice of this action was served on the 7th of December, 1916. The showing by her is that on or about the 2d of December, as soon as it became certain that she was afflicted with this disease, she packed up her furniture and belongings and moved to Oelwein, Fayette county, arriving there the same day, with the full intention of residing there and making her residence in that county; that her father and mother resided near Westgate, Fayette county, until her father's death, in 1912; that her mother resided with her in Minneapolis until her death. She said it was her intention to reside in Fayette county, where she could look after her farm in that county near Westgate; that she had no intention to make any other place her home than in Fayette county, and that her presence there was in good faith. A motion was made to transfer the cause to Woodbury county. This motion was overruled, and this is assigned as error.

Section 3171 of the Code of 1897 provides: "The district court in the county where either party resides has jurisdiction of the subject-matter of" divorce. Now it is certain that no length of time is necessary to fix the residence contemplated by this statute. The very nature of the action shows that the rule of unity of domicil does not apply. The length of time is not controlling. If, at the time the action is commenced, the plaintiff is living within the county in which the divorce suit is instituted, with the intention

Courts—jurisdiction—action for divorce.

then to permanently remain in the county, the right to maintain the action in that county is complete. This is the showing here. See Sylvester v. Sylvester, 109 Iowa, 401, 80 N. W. 547.

Upon the whole record we think the case should be, and is, affirmed.

Ladd, Ch. J., and Preston and Stevens, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied May 21, 1919.

ANNOTATION.

Venereal disease as ground for divorce or annulment of marriage.

This note is designed to supplement that published in 5 A.L.R. at page 1016.

While the reported case (HOLMES v. HOLMES, ante, 1534) was decided prior to the writing of the original note, the decision therein was not then final because of the pendency of a motion for a rehearing. It is held in that case that for a man, having reason to believe himself to be afflicted with a venereal disease, to have marital intercourse with his wife and communicate the disease to her, is cruel and inhuman treatment entitling her to a divorce. See in this connection, Holmes v. Holmes (1920) — Iowa, —, 176 N. W. 691, wherein the court affirmed a decision sustaining a demurrer to a petition to set aside, for fraud and perjury, the divorce granted in the reported case.

Apparently the only other recent case passing on the right to divorce because of one of the spouses contracting a venereal disease is Dowling v. Dowling (1920) — N. J. Eq. —, 110 Atl. 39. In that case it appeared that both spouses had the disease in question, and each claimed to have contracted it from the other. The court held that the evidence was insufficient to show that the wife had contracted the disease in adulterous intercourse, and denied the prayer of the husband for a divorce. With respect to the wife's bill for a divorce for adultery, based on the theory that he first contracted the disease, the court held that relief was barred by a decree against her in a suit wherein she sought a divorce on the claim that the husband, by infecting her with the disease, compelled her to leave him, and was therefore guilty of constructive desertion. The court said by way of dictum: "Of course, if she contracted a venereal disease from him she was justified in leaving him." W. A. S.

EX PARTE G. W. PATTERSON, Appt.

Arkansas Supreme Court — November 10, 1913.

(110 Ark. 94, 161 S. W. 173.)

Contempt — power of mayor to punish.

A mayor acting with power and jurisdiction of a justice of the peace cannot punish for contempt not committed in his presence, or in disobedience of process, unless power to do so is expressly conferred by statute.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1543.]

APPEAL by petitioner from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Searcy County (Reed, J.) dismissing his petition for certiorari to review a judgment of the Mayor of the town of Marshall, adjudging him to be in contempt of court for publishing in a newspaper an article criticizing the mayor on account of his rulings in a certain case. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. A. Y. Barr for appellant.

Mr. Grover C. Bratton for appellee.

McCulloch, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant, G. W. Patterson, was by the mayor of the incorporated town of Marshall adjudged to be in contempt of court, for publishing in a newspaper an article criticizing and ridiculing the mayor on account of his rulings in a certain case, which had been pending in his court against one Lindsay, for alleged violation of an ordinance of the town. The case against Lindsay had been disposed of by judgment imposing a fine, which had been paid, and the matter was thus ended. We pass over consideration of the question raised by appellant as to whether or not the article published amounted in fact to contempt, and proceed to the initial question of the jurisdiction of the mayor of an incorporated town to punish for contempt not committed in the presence of the court, or in disobedience of its process. Appellant applied to the circuit court for certiorari to bring up the record, which was done, but the court, on hearing the cause, dismissed the petition, and an appeal to this court has been prosecuted.

There is no statute in this state expressly authorizing the mayor of an incorporated town to punish for contempt; but by statute that officer is declared to be a conservator of the peace throughout the limits of the corporation, with "all the power and jurisdiction of a justice of the peace in all matters, civil or criminal, arising under the laws of the state, to all intents and purposes whatever." Kirby's Dig. § 5586. The power of justices of the peace to punish for contempt is limited by statute to misconduct committed in the presence of the court, or in disobedience of any process issued by the court requiring the attendance of a witness. Kirby's Dig. § 726.

It is seen, therefore, that there is no statutory authority to punish for contemptuous conduct committed other than in the presence of the court, or in disobedience of the court's process. It is contended, however, that a mayor or justice of the peace, as well as all other courts, possesses inherent power to punish for contempt. The case of State v. Morrill, 16 Ark. 384, is relied on in support of this contention. This question was not raised in the Morrill Case, for it involved the question of contemptuous conduct toward the supreme court.

It seems to be very generally settled at common law, and also in this country, that inferior courts do not possess the power, in the absence of statute expressly conferring it, of punishing for contempt, except that committed in the presence of the court, or in disobedience of process. That rule is stated in the Cyclopedia of Law, vol. 9, p. 28, and numerous authorities cited in support.

The case of Reg. v. Lefroy, 8 L. R. Q. B. 134, involved the power of the county court to punish an attorney for contemptuous conduct committed, not in the presence of the court, by publishing a statement derogatory to the judge of the court. Chief Justice Cockburn, delivering his opinion as one of the judges on appeal, said: "I think that the judge of the county court has no authority to punish for contempt not committed in the face of the court. It is perfectly true that it is laid down by authority, and reason shows the correctness of the rule, that all courts of record have power to fine and imprison for any contempt committed in the face of the court, for the power is necessary for the due administration of justice, to prevent the court being interrupted. But it is quite another thing to say that every inferior court of record shall have power to fine or imprison for contempt of court, when that contempt is committed out of court, as the writing or publication of articles reflecting on the conduct of the judge. There are other remedies for such proceedings. The power to commit for contempt is fully gone into by Blackstone and Hawkins; but, though this power is recognized in the superior courts, it is nowhere said that an inferior court of record has any power to proceed for contempt out of court; and there is an obvious distinction between the superior courts and other courts of record. . . . No case is to be found in which such a power has ever been exercised by an inferior court of record, or, at all events, upheld by a decision of the superior courts."

Mr. Rapalje, in his work on Contempt, § 4, says: "The power to punish by commitment for contempt is a power belonging only to judges of certain courts, and does not arise from the mere exercise of judicial functions. The power, so far as it may be exercised by judicial officers, is an incident to a court, belonging alike to civil and criminal jurisdictions, but not extending, at the common law, below such as are courts of record recognized by the common law."

The same rule is stated in another textbook on the subject, where it is said that "the jurisdiction of inferior courts of record (such as a court of quarter sessions, the mayor's court, and a county court) is confined to such contempts as are perpetrated in facie curiæ, and does not extend to such as are committed out of court, unless by virtue of some statutory enactment." Oswald, Contempt of Court, p. 11.

In a well-considered opinion of the New Jersey supreme court we find the law on this subject thoroughly reviewed, and the doctrine is shown to be well established that, in the absence of statute, the power to punish for contempt is not possessed by inferior courts not of record, except for contemptuous conduct committed in the presence of the court, or in disobedience of its process. That case involved the power of the recorder of a municipality to punish for contempt. The learned judge delivering the opinion in that case said: "To punish by a commitment for contempt is a power belonging only to judges of certain courts, and does not arise from the mere exercise of judicial functions.

. . . That power, so far as it may be exercised by judicial officers, is an incident to a court, belonging alike to courts of civil and criminal jurisdictions, but not extending, at the common law, below such as are courts of record recognized in the common law. The general doctrine of the English law is that all courts of record may fine or imprison for contempts in the face of the court.

. . . A power to fine or imprison in such cases, although necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of a court not of an inferior jurisdiction, and for the maintenance of its independence and dignity, should not belong to all persons, bodies, or tribunals who may have a judicial duty to perform. The common law wisely did not recognize it in courts below those of record; and we would be doing violence to the liberty of the citizen to encourage its existence in any of our own courts, except those that, in their very nature, . . . are courts of record, with jurisdictions not beneath the character of those so treated in the common law." Re Kerrigan, 33 N. J. L. 344.

It is insisted by counsel for the municipality, while conceding the general doctrine thus stated, that it does not apply to justices of the peace and mayors in this state, because their creation is expressly authorized by the Constitution of the state. We do not see the force of that distinction, because it is merely a question of the legal existence of the court, whether created by express constitutional authority or merely by legislative authority.

The reason for the rule at all times has been that inferior courts not of record do not possess such power, unless expressly granted to it by the lawmakers. The courts will not construe the law to grant such inherent power to courts of that class.

The mayor being without jurisdiction to punish for the alleged contemptuous conduct specified in the information filed before him, the judgment rendered against appellant was void, and should have been quashed by the circuit court. The judgment of the Circuit Court is, therefore, reversed, and the Mayor's judgment is quashed.

Contempt—
power of mayor to punish.

Annotation.

What courts or officers have power to punish for contempt.

- I. In general, 1544.
- II. Particular courts:
  - a. Federal courts:
    1. In general, 1545.
    2. Circuit and district courts, 1546.
    3. Court of claims, 1547.
    4. Court-martial, 1547.
    5. Courts of District of Columbia:
      - (a) Supreme court, 1547.
      - (b) Juvenile court, 1548.
      - (c) Justice of the peace, 1548.
  - b. State courts:
    1. In general, 1548.
    2. Courts of last resort, 1549.
    3. Intermediate appellate courts, 1550.
    4. Courts of chancery or equity, 1551.
    5. Probate or surrogate courts, 1551.
    6. Circuit courts, 1553.
    7. District courts, 1556.
    8. Superior courts, 1558.
    9. Courts of common pleas, 1560.
    10. County courts, 1561.
    11. Municipal or city courts, 1562.
- II. b—continued.
  12. Police courts, 1564.
  13. Justices of the peace, 1566.
  - c. British courts:
    1. England:
      - (a) High court of justice, 1570.
      - (b) King's bench, 1570.
      - (c) Court of assize, 1570.
      - (d) Court of nisi prius, 1570.
      - (e) Court of general jail delivery, 1570.
      - (f) County court, 1570.
      - (g) Quarter sessions, 1571.
      - (h) Justice of the peace, 1571.
      - (i) Leet, 1571.
    2. Ireland:
      - (a) Court of assize, 1571.
    3. Canada:
      - (a) Supreme court, 1571.
      - (b) Queen's bench, 1571.
      - (c) Superior court, 1571.
      - (d) Division court, 1572.
      - (e) County court, 1572.
      - (f) Justice of the peace, 1572.
      - (g) Police magistrate, 1572.

II. c—continued.

4. Colonies:

(a) Supreme court of civil justice of British Guiana, 1572.

(b) Recorder's court of Sierra Leone, 1572.

III. Officers and boards:

a. Mayor, 1573.

b. Notary, 1574.

c. Referee:

1. In bankruptcy, 1575.

III. c—continued.

2. In supplementary proceedings, 1576.

3. Other referees, 1576.

d. Commissioner:

1. United States commissioners, 1577.

2. Other commissioners, 1578.

e. Grand jury, 1579.

f. Boards, 1580.

g. Miscellaneous, 1581.

Scope.

This annotation is confined in the main to cases that expressly discuss, or at least decide, the question whether the court or officer had power to punish for contempt, to the exclusion of cases in which the power was assumed and the question was as to whether or not the particular acts or conduct amounted to contempt. The acts or conduct of which the contempt was predicated have been referred to merely as indicating the character or kinds of contempt to which the power of the court or officer extends, and not at all for the purpose of showing what does or does not amount to contempt.

This note does not include cases treating of the power of the legislature, or committees thereof, to punish for contempt; nor the power of one court to punish contempts against another; nor a superior court's power to punish inferior courts, nor the power of a judge in chambers or vacation to punish for contempt. The question as to the punishment, e. g., fine or imprisonment, that may be imposed, is also beyond the scope of the note.

I. In general.

Constitutional courts, i. e., courts created by the Constitution, have inherent power, independently of statute, to punish for contempt, of which power they cannot be deprived by the legislature, in the absence of a constitutional provision authorizing it; but the power to punish contempts can be withheld, or taken from statutory courts by the legislature, whose creatures they are. Wyatt v. People (1892) 17 Colo. 252, 28 Pac. 961; People v. Gilbert (1917) 231 Ill. 619, 118 N. E. 196; Drady v. District Ct. (1905)

126 Iowa, 345, 102 N. W. 115; State ex rel. Coleman v. Rose (1906) 74 Kan. 260, 85 Pac. 803; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Gildersleeve (1909) 219 Mo. 170, 118 S. W. 86, 16 Ann. Cas. 749; Ex parte Sullivan (1914) 10 Okla. Crim. Rep. 465, 138 Pac. 815, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 719; Carter v. Com. (1899) 96 Va. 791, 45 L.R.A. 310, 32 S. E. 780, 11 Am. Crim. Rep. 303; State v. Frew (1884) 24 W. Va. 416, 49 Am. Rep. 257.

A superior court of general jurisdiction has inherent power to punish contempts. Burns v. Superior Ct. (1903) 140 Cal. 1, 73 Pac. 597; McDougall v. Sheridan (1913) 23 Idaho, 191, 128 Pac. 954; Rucker v. State (1908) 170 Ind. 635, 85 N. E. 356; Re Ellison (1914) 256 Mo. 378, 165 S. W. 987; State v. Markuson (1895) 5 N. D. 147, 64 N. W. 934; Re Evans (1913) 42 Utah, 282, 130 Pac. 217.

But inferior courts of limited jurisdiction have only statutory power, except, perhaps, as to contempts committed in the face of the court. Re Monroe (1891) 46 Fed. 52; Farnham v. Colman (1905) 19 S. D. 342, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1135, 117 Am. St. Rep. 944, 103 N. W. 161, 9 Ann. Cas. 314.

The power to punish for contempt is inherent in courts of record. State v. Howell (1908) 80 Conn. 668, 125 Am. St. Rep. 141, 69 Atl. 1057, 13 Ann. Cas. 501; Flannagan v. Jepson (1916) 177 Iowa, 393, L.R.A.1918E, 548, 158 N. W. 641; Morrison v. McDonald (1842) 21 Me. 550; Langdon v. Judge of Wayne Circuit Ct. (1889) 76 Mich. 358, 43 N. W. 310; State ex rel. Metcalf v. District Ct. (1916) 52 Mont. 46, L.R.A. 1916F, 132, 155 Pac. 278, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 985; Hawes v. State (1895) 46 Neb. 149, 64 N. W. 699; Re Merrill (1917) 88 N. J. Eq. 261, 102 Atl. 400;

Cress v. State (1918) 14 Okla. Crim. Rep. 521, 173 Pac. 854; Re Taber (1900) 13 S. D. 62, 82 N. W. 398; State ex rel. Nicomen Boom Co. v. North Shore Boom & Driving Co. (1909) 55 Wash. 1, 103 Pac. 426, 107 Pac. 196.

Appellate courts have inherent power to punish for contempt. The fact that an appellate court has no jurisdiction to examine witnesses does not take away its power to punish indirect contempts. State v. Anderson (1915) 6 Tenn. C. C. A. 1.

Courts of equity have the same power as courts of law to punish contempts. Kirk v. Milwaukee Dust Collector Mfg. Co. (1885) 26 Fed. 501; Howard v. Durand (1867) 36 Ga. 346, 91 Am. Dec. 767; Rudd v. Rudd (1919) 184 Ky. 400, 214 S. W. 791; Cartwright's Case (1873) 114 Mass. 230; Re Merrill (1917) 88 N. J. Eq. 261, 102 Atl. 400; Rowley v. Feldman (1903) 84 App. Div. 400, 82 N. Y. Supp. 679, 13 N. Y. Anno. Cas. 173; Smith v. Smith (1918) 81 W. Va. 761, — A.L.R. —, 95 S. E. 199.

Civil courts, though without criminal jurisdiction, have power to punish criminal contempts, since a proceeding for criminal contempt is not a criminal prosecution. Merchants' Stock & Grain Co. v. Board of Trade (1912) 120 C. C. A. 582, 201 Fed. 80; Middlebrook v. State (1876) 43 Conn. 257, 21 Am. Rep. 650; State v. Howell (1908) 80 Conn. 668, 125 Am. St. Rep. 141, 69 Atl. 1057, 13 Ann. Cas. 501; Smith v. State (1915) 12 Okla. Crim. Rep. 513, 159 Pac. 941.

II. Particular courts.

a. Federal courts.

1. In general.

Under the Judiciary Act of September 4, 1789, chap. 20, § 17, the courts of the United States were given power to punish by fine or imprisonment, at the discretion of the court, all contempts of their authority in any cause or hearing before them. This power was exercised until the passage of the Act of March 2, 1831, which limited this power of the Federal courts, and prescribed the cases in which it might be exercised. This act became § 725 of the United States Revised Statutes, and § 725 was re-enacted without change in § 268 of the Judicial Code, Act of March 3, 1911, chap. 231, 36 Stat. at L. 1163, Comp. Stat. § 1245, 5 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. p. 1009. Section 268 of the Judicial Code provides as follows: "The said courts shall have power to impose and administer all necessary oaths, and to punish by fine or imprisonment, at the discretion of the court, contempt of their authority: Provided, That such power to punish contempts shall not be construed to extend to any cases except the misbehavior of any person in their presence, or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice, the misbehavior of any of the officers of said court in their official transactions, and the disobedience or resistance by any such officer, or by any party, juror, witness, or any other person to any lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree, or command of the said court." Ex parte Buskirk (1896) 18 C. C. A. 410, 25 U. S. App. 613, 72 Fed. 14; Boyd v. Glucklich (1902) 53 C. C. A. 451, 116 Fed. 131; Cuyler v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. (1904) 131 Fed. 95.

This statutory provision, in terms, applies to all the Federal courts; whether it can be held to limit the authority of the Supreme Court, which derives its existence and powers from the Constitution, may, perhaps, be a matter of doubt, but that it applies to the circuit and district courts there can be no question. These courts were created by act of Congress. Their powers and duties depend upon the act calling them into existence, or subsequent acts extending or limiting their jurisdiction. Ex parte Robinson (1873) 19 Wall. 505, 22 L. ed. 205; Cuyler v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. supra.

The power of the courts of the United States to punish for contempt and imprison for nonpayment of money judgments is circumscribed and controlled by the laws of the states, and where, by the laws of a state, proceedings cannot be had as for a contempt for the nonpayment of money ordered by the court to be paid, when the payment can be enforced by execution, an order of a Federal court, made in the progress of a cause, of the character, in substance, of a judgment or decree for the payment of money, cannot be enforced upon the theory that disobedience is a contempt. Mallory Mfg. Co. v. Fox (1884) 20 Fed. 409.

2. Circuit and district courts.

The circuit court had power to punish for contempt the following acts or omissions:

- refusal of clerk of court to pay over money due from him in his official capacity, Re Pitman (1852) 1 Curt. C. C. 186, Fed. Cas. No. 11,184;

- neglect to attend court as witness after having been duly subpoenaed, Re Ellerbe (1882) 4 McCrary, 449, 13 Fed. 530;

- forcible resistance in presence of court to lawful order, Ex parte Terry (1888) 128 U. S. 289, 32 L. ed. 405, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 77;

- violation of injunction, Merchants' Stock & Grain Co. v. Board of Trade (1912) 120 C. C. A. 582, 201 Fed. 30;

- perjury on the witness stand, Re Ulmer (1913) 208 Fed. 461.

But it was held in Ex parte Poulson (1835) Fed. Cas. No. 11,350, that the Act of March 2, 1831, took away from the circuit court the power to punish for contempt the publishing of articles relating to a pending suit, or to the suitors therein.

In United States v. Holmes (1842) 1 Wall. Jr. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 15,383, the judge, on taking his seat, refused to allow reporters to enter the court room, except on condition of suspending all publication until after the conclusion of the trial, stating that the court had power to regulate the admission of persons to the court room, although it no longer had the power to punish for contempt the publication of testimony pending the trial, since the enactment of the Act of March 2, 1831.

The circuit court had no power to punish as for contempt the violation of a stipulation made by the attorneys of the parties in open court, or the disobedience, before its entry, of an order nunc pro tunc. Ex parte Buskirk (1896) 18 C. C. A. 410, 25 U. S. App. 613, 72 Fed. 14.

The power of the circuit court at common law to punish as for a contempt a misstatement of its own decision was taken away by § 725 of the United States Revised Statutes Comp. Stat. § 1245, because it is within none of the exceptions contained in the proviso. Asbestos Shingle Slate & Sheathing Co. v. H. W. Johns-Manville Co. (1911) 189 Fed. 610.

The circuit court was abolished and its powers transferred to the district court, by the Judicial Code, enacted March 3, 1911, §§ 289, 291, 36 Stat. at L. 1087, chap. 231, Comp. Stat. §§ 1266, 1268, 5 Fed. Stat. Anno. 2d ed. pp. 1082, 1083.

The district court has power to punish for contempt the following acts:

- disobedience of habeas corpus commanding one to produce bodies of colored persons claimed as slaves, Williamson's Case (1855) 26 Pa. 9, 67 Am. Dec. 374;

- contempt by offer of money to witness, while in witness room or hallway of court room, to deter him from testifying, Re Sabin (1889) 131 U. S. 267, 33 L. ed. 150, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 699;

- assault upon court officer while yet in office, induced by his performance of duty in a past case, Ex parte McLeod (1903) 120 Fed. 130;

- attempt to corrupt jurors expected to be called upon criminal prosecution, Kirk v. United States (1911) 112 C. C. A. 531, 192 Fed. 278;

- statement by attorney in address to jury that he does not expect them to render a verdict in his client's favor, even if the evidence warrants it, Re Maury (1913) 123 C. C. A. 642, 205 Fed. 626;

- publication of newspaper articles in reference to pending action, tending and intended to provoke public resistance to an injunctive order, if one should be made, and constituting an attempt to intimidate, or at least unduly influence, the district judge in making his decision, Toledo Newspaper Co. v. United States (1916) 150 C. C. A. 636, 237 Fed. 986;

- publication in newspaper of article pending criminal prosecution, containing statements prejudicial to defendant, Re Independent Pub. Co. (1917) L.R.A.1917E, 703; 153 C. C. A. 585, 240 Fed. 849, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 1084.

But it is held in Cuyler v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. (1904) 131 Fed. 95, that the district court has no power to punish for contempt an editor of a daily newspaper, who published an editorial criticizing the conduct of the court in appointing a receiver in a pending action, and reflecting on the official integrity of the court, because the misbehavior of the editor was not in the presence of the court, or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice.

The district court has no power to punish for contempt a grand juror who discloses the evidence upon which an indictment was founded, after the grand jury has been finally discharged. Atwell v. United States (1908) 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1049, 89 C. C. A. 97, 162 Fed. 97, 15 Ann. Cas. 253.

As a court of bankruptcy, the district court has power to punish for contempt a bankrupt who fails to turn over to his trustee, when ordered, property in his possession belonging to the bankrupt estate. Re Purvine (1899) 37 C. C. A. 446, 96 Fed. 192; Ripon Knitting Works v. Schreiber (1900) 2 N. B. N. Rep. 899, 101 Fed. 810.

And in Boyd v. Glucklich (1902) 53 C. C. A. 451, 116 Fed. 131, holding that a court of bankruptcy cannot punish for contempt the failure of a bankrupt to comply with an order to deliver property to his trustee, when such property is not in the bankrupt's possession or under his control, it is said by the court that § 41 of the Bankruptcy Act does not invest courts of bankruptcy with broader and larger powers to punish for contempt than are possessed by other United States courts; that this section does not, in express terms, confer on the court of bankruptcy the power to punish for contempt; that the reference to the power to punish for contempt in § 41 was not to confer the power on the court of bankruptcy, but was to make it plain that the power was not conferred on referees in bankruptcy, and to confer the power on the judge of the court of bankruptcy, who could not exercise the power in the absence of the statute expressly conferring it; that no new or enlarged jurisdiction is conferred, and no power to impose a punishment which might not rightly and lawfully be imposed, on a similar state of facts, by any other United States court; and that any act, matter, or thing which any United States court may punish as a contempt may be punished as such by a court of bankruptcy, and any act, matter, or thing which cannot be punished as a contempt by other United States courts cannot be punished as such by a court of bankruptcy.

3. Court of claims.

It appears from the case of Elting v. United States (1892) 27 Ct. Cl. 158, that the United States court of claims has power to punish for contempt.

4. Court-martial.

A court-martial has no power to punish for contempt a civilian for refusing to testify (U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1342, 86th Article of War, Comp. Stat. § 2308a), its authority over him in that regard being limited to a certification of the facts to the United States district attorney (Act of Congress, March 2, 1901, chap. 809, 31 Stat. at L. 950, 951, Comp. Stat. § 2308a). United States v. Praeger (1907) 149 Fed. 474.

5. Courts of District of Columbia.

(a) Supreme court.

The supreme court of the District of Columbia is a court of the United States within the meaning of § 725 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, Comp. Stat. § 1245, which provides that the courts of the United States shall have power to punish by fine or imprisonment, at the discretion of the court, contempts of their authority, provided that such power to punish contempts shall not be construed to extend to any cases except the misbehavior of any person in their presence, or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice, the misbehavior of any of the officers of said court in their official transactions, and the disobedience or resistance by any such officer, or by any party, juror, witness, or other person to any lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree, or command, of the said court (attempt to influence jury in murder case, by addressing them as they pass along the street in charge of an officer of the court). Moss v. United States (1904) 23 App. D. C. 475.

(b) Juvenile court.

The juvenile court of the District of Columbia has power to punish for contempt, under the Act of Congress of March 19, 1906, 34 Stat. at L. 73, chap. 960, creating such court, which confers power upon that court to punish for contempt, and this power is not limited to contempts committed in the presence of the court, but extends to those which tend to obstruct the administration of justice therein. United States ex rel. Alward v. Latimer (1915) 44 App. D. C. 81 (advice and aid by attorney to client, to absent himself from jurisdiction of court, and thus evade process and orders of court). Juvenile Ct. v. Hughlett (1915) 44 App. D. C. 59.

(c) Justice of the peace.

A justice of the peace has power, under the common law, to punish contempts committed in his presence, but he has no power to punish other contempts, unless such power is expressly conferred by statute. Section 725 of the United States Revised Statutes, Comp. Stat. § 1245, does not apply to justices' courts in the District of Columbia, and the only statute upon this subject is § 1005 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the District of Columbia, which provides that a justice of the peace in the District has power to compel the attendance of witnesses by attachment, and to punish them for contempt for refusing to obey a summons to appear. As the power of a justice to punish contempts committed out of his presence depends upon statute, and the statute confines this power to disobedience of summons to appear as witness, he has no power to punish for contempt an effort to prevent the execution of a writ of fieri facias issued by him. Re Carson (1898) 26 Wash. L. Rep. 152.

But it appears from the cases of Washington v. Dawson (1846) 1 Hayw. & H. 236, Fed. Cas. No. 17,227, and Ex parte Gorman (1835) 4 Cranch (C. C.) 572, Fed. Cas. No. 5,628, that a justice of the peace in the District of Columbia had no power to punish for contempt a witness who refused to obey a summons issued by him, under the Act of Maryland 1791, chap. 68, § 8, which provided that, where witnesses do not attend according to summons, the justice before whom such witnesses ought to have attended shall enforce obedience to his process by attachment of contempt, to be returnable before the justices of the next county court, who shall take cognizance thereof, and shall at their discretion fine the offender.

b. State courts.

1. In general.

While the name of a court is not always an accurate index of its essential characteristics and rank in the judicial scheme, and courts of the same name in different states are sometimes found to vary considerably in these respects, it has been thought that in general the name of the court is sufficiently suggestive to form the basis of the classification of the cases from the different states for the purposes of the question under annotation. An exception, however, has been made as to courts which are in effect probate or surrogate courts, and which, though variously designated as "orphans' courts," "courts of ordinary," "prerogative courts," etc., have been grouped under the heading "probate or surrogate courts." So courts of last resort and intermediate appellate courts have been grouped, respectively, under those headings, irrespective of the particular names by which they are known.

So far as it has been possible to determine the point from the cases, an attempt has been made to refer the decisions to the inherent power of the court, or to its statutory powers, as the case may be; and, in the latter event, to indicate the scope and terms of the statute. This, however, has been found to be impossible in many instances, because of the meagerness of the reports.

2. Courts of last resort.

The highest courts of the several states are possessed of inherent power to punish contempts of every kind or character.

Arkansas.—State v. Morrill (1855) 16 Ark. 384.

Colorado.—People ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. News-Times Pub. Co. (1906) 35 Colo. 253, 84 Pac. 912.

Florida.—Re Hayes (1916) — Fla. —, L.R.A.1917D, 192, 73 So. 362, Ann. Cas. 1918B, 936.

Idaho.—McDougall v. Sheridan (1913) 23 Idaho, 191, 128 Pac. 954.

Illinois.—People v. Wilson (1872) 64 Ill. 195, 16 Am. Rep. 528, 1 Am. Crim. Rep. 107.

Kansas.—State ex rel. Coleman v. Rose (1906) 74 Kan. 260, 85 Pac. 803.

Massachusetts.—Cartwright's Case (1873) 114 Mass. 230.

Missouri.—State ex rel. Crow v. Shepherd (1903) 177 Mo. 205, 99 Am. St. Rep. 624, 76 S. W. 79.

Nebraska. — Kregel v. Bartling (1888) 23 Neb. 848, 37 N. W. 668; Re Dunn (1909) 85 Neb. 606, 124 N. W. 120.

North Carolina.—Re Moore (1869) 63 N. C. 397.

Ohio.—Randall v. Pryor (1831) 4 Ohio, 424.

Oklahoma. — Ex parte Sullivan (1914) 10 Okla. Crim. Rep. 465, 138 Pac. 815, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 719; State ex rel. Tucker v. Davis (1913) 9 Okla. Crim. Rep. 94, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1083, 130 Pac. 962.

West Virginia. — State v. Frew (1884) 24 W. Va. 416, 49 Am. Rep. 257.

The Arkansas supreme court, being created by the Constitution, is not limited in its power to punish for contempt by the statute on the subject of contempts, which declares that every court of record shall have power to punish as for criminal contempt persons guilty of the following acts and no other: First, disorderly, contemptuous, and insolent behavior, committed during its sitting, in its immediate view and presence, and directly tending to interrupt its proceedings, or to impair the respect due to its authority; second, any breach of the peace, noise, or disturbance, directly tending to interrupt its proceedings; third, wilful disobedience of any process or order lawfully issued or made by it; fourth, resistance wilfully offered by any person to the lawful order or process of the court; fifth, the contumacious and unlawful refusal of any person to be sworn as a witness, and, when so sworn, the like refusal to answer any legal and proper interrogatory. The Constitution contains no provision relating to the power of the court to punish for contempt, but the power to punish contempt of its authority is impliedly given to it as a necessary incident to the exercise of its expressed powers (publication of newspaper article intimating that court was induced by bribery to make the decision in case previously decided). State v. Morrill (Ark.) supra.

The supreme court of Colorado has inherent power to punish for contempt (publication of criticism of court). People ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. News-Times Pub. Co. (Colo.) supra.

The Florida supreme court has, independently of statutory authority, inherent power to punish for contempt of court (publication in newspaper, during pendency of cause, of article reflecting upon efficiency and integrity of court). Re Hayes (Fla.) supra.

The power to punish contempt is inherent in the supreme court of Idaho (newspaper criticism). McDougall v. Sheridan (Idaho) supra.

As the supreme court of Illinois has power to punish all contempts, a statute providing that it shall have power to punish contempts offered by any person to it while sitting does not restrict the exercise of such power to contempts in the presence of the court (newspaper article reflecting upon action of court in pending case, impeaching its integrity, and seeking to intimidate it in respect to its action in such case by threat of popular clamor). People v. Wilson (Ill.) supra.

The supreme court of Kansas is a constitutional tribunal with inherent power to punish for contempt (violation of judgment of ouster from office). State ex rel. Coleman v. Rose (Kan.) supra.

The Massachusetts supreme court has inherent power to punish for contempt (failure of receiver, when ordered, to turn over property to coreceiver). Cartwright's Case (1873) 114 Mass. 230.

The supreme court of Missouri has inherent power to punish contempts, both civil and criminal, direct and constructive (newspaper article charging court with having stultified itself in decision, and designating it as a venal court, and as having been bought by a railroad company). State ex rel. Crow v. Shepherd (1903) 177 Mo. 205, 99 Am. St. Rep. 624, 76 S. W. 79.

The supreme court of the territory of Montana has power to punish as for a contempt the making of a wager upon the decision of a pending suit, and the publication that such person had made such wager that, owing to the influence of certain claimants, the supreme court would reverse their former decision, under a statute limiting the common-law jurisdiction to punish for a contempt of such supreme court to specified acts, including disorderly, contemptuous, or insolent behavior toward the judge while holding court, tending to interrupt the due course of a trial or other judicial proceedings, which provision is held to embrace the contempt in question. Territory v. Murray (1887) 7 Mont. 251, 15 Pac. 145.

The Nebraska supreme court possesses inherent power to punish for contempt. Kregel v. Bartling (1888) 23 Neb. 848, 37 N. W. 668 (violation of injunction); Re Dunn (1909) 85 Neb. 606, 124 N. W. 120 (language insulting to court in petition for rehearing).

The power of the supreme court of North Carolina to punish as for contempt a publication signed by members of the bar, tending to impair the respect due to the court, is not taken away by a statute defining all matters of contempt, which does not embrace the contempt in question. Re Moore (1869) 63 N. C. 397.

The Ohio supreme court has inherent power to punish contempts (neglect and refusal to comply with decree). Randall v. Pryor (1831) 4 Ohio, 424.

The supreme court of Oklahoma has inherent power to punish for contempt (scandalous, and scurrilous recitals in exhibit filed in support of motion). Ex parte Sullivan (1914) 10 Okla. Crim. Rep. 465, 138 Pac. 815, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 719.

And the criminal court of appeals of the same state, independently of authority granted by statute, has inherent power to enforce obedience to its orders by contempt proceedings (refusal of sheriff to obey order directing him to permit prisoner to consult privately with his attorney). State ex rel. Tucker v. Davis (1913) 9 Okla. Crim. Rep. 94, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1083, 130 Pac. 962.

The supreme court of appeals of West Virginia has constitutional power summarily to punish both direct and constructive contempts (newspaper editorial charging political motives in decision of case). State v. Frew (1884) 24 W. Va. 416, 49 Am. Rep. 257.

3. Intermediate appellate courts.

The intermediate appellate courts of the several states generally have the same powers as to contempt as the ultimate appellate courts. Re Fite (1912) 11 Ga. App. 665, 76 S. E. 397; State v. Anderson (1915) 6 Tenn. C. C. A. 1.

The Georgia court of appeals, a constitutional court having the same powers as to contempt as the supreme court, has inherent power to punish contempts, not only those committed in the presence of the court, or criticisms relating to pending cases, but also criticisms of cases no longer pending (criticism by trial judge of reversal of his decision by court of appeals, in newspaper article reflecting upon their honesty and judicial integrity). Re Fite (Ga.) supra.

The court of civil appeals of Tennessee has inherent power to punish for contempt (violation of injunction). State v. Anderson (Tenn.) supra.

4. Courts of chancery or equity.

While the powers as to contempt of the courts of chancery or equity of the several states are to some extent inherent, they are to a great extent statutory. Ex parte Walker (1854) 25 Ala. 81; Ex parte Hamilton (1874) 51 Ala. 66; Callan v. McDaniel (1882) 72 Ala. 96; Ex parte Dickens (1909) 162 Ala. 272, 50 So. 218; Rudd v. Rudd (1919) 184 Ky. 400, 214 S. W. 791; Graham v. Williamson (1913) 128 Tenn. 720, 164 S. W. 781; McCormick v. Phillips (1918) 140 Tenn. 268, L.R.A.1918F, 791, 204 S. W. 636; Sanders v. Metcalf (1873) 1 Tenn. Ch. 419.

The chancery court of Alabama is given power by the Code to punish for contempt, among other things, disobedience of any person to any lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree, or command of the court. Ex parte Walker (Ala.) supra (refusal to pay over money to receiver); Ex parte Hamilton (1874) 51 Ala. 66 (violation of injunction); Callan v. McDaniel (1882) 72 Ala. 96 (violation of injunction); Ex parte Dickens (1909) 162 Ala. 272, 50 So. 218 (failure to deliver property to receiver).

The circuit court of Kentucky, when exercising equity jurisdiction, has power to punish for contempt disobedience of its orders or decrees, where the party ordered occupies a fiduciary position, or has dealt with the court as an officer of the court in an action and becomes debtor to the court, and in cases in which it is authorized by statute (disobedience by executor de son tort of order to pay money into court). Rudd v. Rudd (1919) 184 Ky. 400, 214 S. W. 791.

The special term of the New York supreme court has inherent power to punish for contempt, and is given such power by statute (failure to pay alimony pursuant to order). Brinkley v. Brinkley (1871) 47 N. Y. 40; Hayes v. Hayes (1912) 160 App. Div. 842, 135 N. Y. Supp. 225, affirmed in (1913) 208 N. Y. 600, 102 N. E. 1104.

Such special term has power to punish for contempt the disobedience of its order, which prejudices the rights of a party, under a statute conferring the power upon courts of record to punish a violation of duty, or other misconduct, by which a right or remedy of a party to a civil action may be defeated, impaired, impeded, or prejudiced. People ex rel. Platt v. Rice (1894) 144 N. Y. 249, 39 N. E. 88.

A county chancery court of Tennessee has inherent power to punish for contempt a violation of an injunction granted by it. Graham v. Williamson (1913) 128 Tenn. 720, 164 S. W. 781.

The same appears from McCormick v. Phillips (1918) 140 Tenn. 268, L.R.A.1918F, 791, 204 S. W. 636, where it was held that the court had lost this power by an appeal from the decree granting the injunction.

A special judge of such court has power, both inherent and statutory, to punish for contempt the disobedience by an officer of the court of an order made by it. Sanders v. Metcalf (1873) 1 Tenn. Ch. 419 (refusal by clerk of court to obey order to appear before the court, and bring his books and papers).

5. Probate or surrogate courts.

The probate or surrogate courts of the several states generally have broad powers as to contempt, partly inherent, and partly derived from statutes.

Arkansas.—Welsh v. Lloyd (1848) 5 Ark. 367.

Georgia.—State v. White (1807) T. U. P. Charlt. 123.

Idaho.—Re Niday (1908) 15 Idaho, 559, 98 Pac. 845.

Kansas.—Re Hanson (1909) 80 Kan. 783, 105 Pac. 694; Re Moran (1910) 83 Kan. 615, 112 Pac. 94.

Maine.—Bradley v. Veazie (1860) 47 Me. 85.

Mississippi.—Moore v. Judge of Probate (1828) Walk. 310; Watson v. Williams (1858) 36 Miss. 331.

New Jersey.—Re Merrill (1917) 88 N. J. Eq. 261, 102 Atl. 400.

Ohio.—Ex parte Lilliland (1879) 7 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 659, 4 Ohio L. J. 733.

Oklahoma.—Re Abbott (1898) 7 Okla. 78, 54 Pac. 319.

Pennsylvania.—Donaldson v. Miller (1899) 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 393, 9 Pa. Dist.

R. 282; Gilchrist's Estate (1877) 6 Luzerne Leg. Reg. 57.

The probate court of Arkansas was held in Welsh v. Lloyd (Ark.) supra, to have power to compel, by attachment and imprisonment, a person to appear before the court, and disclose whether he had property in his possession belonging to the estate of a decedent, a section of the Administration Law giving the probate court authority to issue process, and compel the attendance of persons, by attachment and imprisonment.

A court of ordinary of Georgia, being a court of record established by the Constitution, has the power to punish for contempt (refusal of dismissed clerk of court to deliver up to his successor records, documents, and papers in his custody). State v. White (Ga.) supra.

The probate court of Idaho has power to punish for contempt a witness who refuses to answer interrogatories before a commissioner, when ordered to do so by the court. Re Niday (Idaho) supra.

Every probate court in Kansas is a court of record, and has inherent power to punish summarily for contempt persons who, in open court, refuse to comply with its lawful orders, or in any manner impede or embarrass the orderly transaction of its business; and this power exists independently of any statute (refusal of witness to answer pertinent question). Re Hanson (Kan.) supra.

Such a court has power to punish for contempt a person refusing to comply with its order to return to the administrator property embezzled or concealed by such person, belonging to the estate. Re Moran (Kan.) supra.

A probate judge is given by statute, in Maine, power to punish for contempt one who, appearing before him in proceedings to disclose property belonging to a decedent's estate, refuses to answer any lawful interrogatory. Bradley v. Veazie (Me.) supra.

The probate court is expressly given by statute, in Mississippi, power to punish for contempt disobedience of its orders and decrees. Moore v. Judge of Probate (Miss.) supra (non-compliance by administrator with order of distribution of estate); Watson v. Williams (Miss.) supra (failure or refusal of guardian, when ordered, to make account of his guardianship).

The prerogative court of New Jersey, a probate court, though not a court of record, as the inheritor of the jurisdiction of its prototype, the English ecclesiastical court, has power to punish contempts, both direct and consequential, and it is given power to enforce its decrees by a statute providing that, if any person shall neglect or refuse to obey any sentence or decree of the judge of the probate court, it shall be lawful to cause such person to be taken and imprisoned until he shall obey and perform such sentence or decree (letter by party to ordinary to influence his decision in pending case). Re Merrill (N. J.) supra.

By the New York Code of Civil Procedure, the surrogate's court is made a court of record, and is given power to punish for contempt as follows: To punish any person for a contempt of his court, civil or criminal, in any case where it is expressly prescribed by law that a court of record may punish a person for a similar contempt, and in like manner. In any of the following cases, a decree of a surrogate's court directing the payment of money, or requiring the performance of any other act, may be enforced by serving a certified copy thereof upon the party against whom it is rendered, or the officer or person who is required thereby, or by law, to obey it; and if he refuses or wilfully neglects to obey it, by punishing him for a contempt of court: Where it cannot be enforced by execution, as prescribed in the last section; where part of it cannot be so enforced by execution, in which case, the part or parts which cannot be so enforced may be enforced as prescribed in this section; where an execution issued as prescribed in the last section to the sheriff of the surrogate's county has been returned by him wholly or partly unsatisfied; where the delinquent is an executor, administrator, guardian, or testamentary trustee, and the decree relates to the fund or estate, in which case the surrogate may enforce the decree as prescribed in this section, either without issuing an execution, or after the return of an execution, as he thinks proper. New York Code Civ. Proc. § 2490, subd. 7, and § 2554.

The surrogate has no power under the Code to enforce the payment of costs by contempt proceedings. Re Humfreville (1897) 154 N. Y. 115, 47 N. E. 1086 (failure of removed executor to pay costs awarded to petitioners); Re Grant (1909) 130 App. Div. 706, 115 N. Y. Supp. 288 (failure of temporary administrator to pay costs awarded to special guardian and to objectors to account).

There was a conflict in the cases as to the power of the court, before the passage of the Code, to enforce its decrees by contempt proceedings. It was held to have the power in the following cases: Dunford v. Weaver (1881) 84 N. Y. 445 (failure of administrator to pay over money of estate to person entitled); Seaman v. Dur-yea (1854) 11 N. Y. 324 (failure of guardian to turn over ward's property to succeeding guardian); Re Hahlin (1877) 53 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 501 (failure of executor to pay money as directed on accounting); People v. Marshall (1877) 7 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 380 (refusal of executor to pay over fund in his possession); Re Watson (1872) 5 Lans. (N. Y.) 466 (failure of executor to pay over money as directed); Saltus v. Saltus (1870) 2 Lans. (N. Y.) 9 (neglect of executor to pay money as directed on accounting); Doran v. Dempsey (1851) 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 490 (refusal of executor to pay over money).

But in the following cases it was held that it did not have the power: Watson v. Nelson (1877) 69 N. Y. 536 (failure of executor to comply with order directing payment of money generally); Seaman v. Whitehead (1879) 18 Hun (N. Y.) 64, reversed on another point in (1879) 78 N. Y. 306 (failure of executor to pay money as required); Re Seaman (1849) 7 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 70 (refusal of guardian to pay over to ward amount found due on final accounting).

8 A.L.R.—98.

The probate court of Ohio has power to punish for contempt the refusal of a defendant in proceedings in aid of execution, to turn over to the sheriff, as ordered by the court, property in his possession, under the statute relating to proceedings in aid of execution, providing that if a person, party or witness, disobey an order of the judge or referee, he may be punished as for contempt. Ex parte Lilliland (1879) 7 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 659, 4 Ohio L. J. 733.

A judge of probate is given power by statute in Oklahoma to punish a witness for contempt, who, having been duly subpoenaed before him for that purpose, refuses to be sworn, or to give his deposition. Re Abbott (1898) 7 Okla. 78, 54 Pac. 319.

The orphans' court of Pennsylvania has both inherent and statutory power to punish for contempt the failure of a guardian to pay over, as directed, a certain sum on his accounting to his ward's estate. Donaldson v. Miller (1899) 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 393, 9 Pa. Dist. R. 282.

Such court also has power to punish for contempt the failure of an administrator to pay over money of the estate, as ordered by the court. Gilchrist's Estate (1877) 6 Luzerne Leg. Reg. (Pa.) 57.

The probate court of Vermont has power to punish for contempt, but it has no power to imprison an executor until he complies with and pays a final order for the payment of money, since that is an imprisonment for debt, which has been abolished by the statute. Re Leach (1878) 51 Vt. 630.

6. Circuit courts.

The circuit courts of the several states generally possess inherent power to punish contempt, but their power appears to be limited in some instances by statute.

Alabama.—Powell v. State (1872) 48 Ala. 154.

Arkansas.—Turk v. State (1916) 123 Ark. 341, 185 S. W. 472.

Illinois.—Schmidt v. Cooper (1916) 274 Ill. 243, 113 N. E. 641; O'Neil v. People (1904) 113 Ill. App. 195.

Indiana.—Taylor v. Moffatt (1830) 2 Blackf. 805; Ex parte Smith (1867)

28 Ind. 47; Holman v. State (1886) 105 Ind. 513, 5 N. E. 556; Hawkins v. State (1890) 125 Ind. 570, 25 N. E. 818; Rucker v. State (1908) 170 Ind. 635, 85 N. E. 356.

Kentucky.—Arnold v. Com. (1882) 80 Ky. 300, 44 Am. Rep. 480.

Michigan.—Langdon v. Judges of Wayne Circuit Ct. (1889) 76 Mich. 358, 43 N. W. 310; Re Dingley (1914) 182 Mich. 44, 148 N. W. 218.

Mississippi.—Ex parte Adams (1853) 25 Miss. 883, 59 Am. Dec. 234.

Missouri.—State ex rel. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Bland (1905) 189 Mo. 197, 88 S. W. 28, 3 Ann. Cas. 1044; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Gildersleeve (1909) 219 Mo. 170, 118 S. W. 86, 16 Ann. Cas. 749; Re Ellison (1914) 256 Mo. 378, 165 S. W. 987; State ex rel. Caldwell v. Cockrell (1919) — Mo. —, 217 S. W. 524; State ex rel. Thatcher v. Horner (1884) 16 Mo. App. 191; Fiedler v. Bambrick Bros. Constr. Co. (1912) 162 Mo. App. 528, 142 S. W. 111.

Oregon.—State v. Bourne (1891) 21 Or. 218, 27 Pac. 1048.

Virginia.—Wells v. Com. (1871) 21 Gratt. 500; Carter v. Com. (1899) 96 Va. 791, 45 L.R.A. 310, 32 S. E. 780, 11 Am. Crim. Rep. 308.

West Virginia.—State v. McClaugherty (1889) 33 W. Va. 250, 10 S. E. 407.

Wisconsin.—Re Milburn (1883) 59 Wis. 24, 17 N. W. 965; Re Rosenberg (1895) 90 Wis. 581, 63 N. W. 1065, 64 N. W. 299.

In Powell v. State (Ala.) supra, where the action of the circuit court in causing another juror to be selected in the place of one who had been accepted, and who, without being excused by the court, left the court room, was held to be reversible error, the court said that the power to punish for contempt was inherent in the circuit court, but that in Alabama the exercise of this power was limited to certain specified cases, seven being enumerated in the Revised Code, the first of which was defined in the following words, namely, disrespectful, contemptuous, or insolvent behaviour in court, tending in any wise to diminish or impair the respect due to judicial tribunals, or to interrupt the due course of the trial; and that the circuit court, therefore, had power to punish such juror for contempt.

The Arkansas Constitution provides that the general assembly shall have power to regulate by law the punishment of contempt not committed in the presence or hearing of the court, or in disobedience of process. It would appear, then, that contempt in the presence of the court cannot be regulated by statute, so that the power to punish such a contempt is inherent in the courts. The circuit court was held empowered to punish for contempt the action of the defendant in a pending suit, who accosted the plaintiff on his way to the courthouse on the day the case was set for trial, and by threats induced him not to appear in court and prosecute the action. Turk v. State (Ark.) supra.

The power to punish for contempt is inherent in the circuit court of Illinois, independent of statutory provisions. Schmidt v. Cooper (1916) (Ill.) supra (refusal of witness to obey order requiring him to testify before master in chancery); O'Neil v. People (Ill.) supra (solicitation of bribe by juror).

The Indiana circuit court has inherent power to punish for contempt, and is vested by statute with power to punish all contempts of its authority and process in any matter before it, or by which the proceedings of the court, or the due course of justice, are interrupted. Taylor v. Moffatt (Ind.) supra (disobedience of injunction); Ex parte Smith (1867) 28 Ind. 47 (statements by attorney in entry on docket for purpose of dismissing action, reflecting upon integrity of court); Whittem v. State (1871) 36 Ind. 196 (assistance by defendant to plaintiff to get away and not testify against him held not contempt, but that abduction of plaintiff by defendant for such purpose would be contempt); Holman v. State (1886) 105 Ind. 513, 5 N. E. 556 (insulting language and defiant manner by attorney to judge in open court); Cheadle v. State (1887) 110 Ind. 301, 59 Am. Rep. 199, 11 N. E. 426 (newspaper comment on trial held not contempt, because case had terminated); Hawkins v. State (1890) 125 Ind. 570, 25 N. E. 818 (resistance to officers in execution of process); Rucker v. State (1908) 170 Ind. 635, 85 N. E. 356 (newspaper articles concerning action of judge in appointing prosecuting attorney, and in instructing grand jury).

A special judge of such court has power to punish the violation of an injunction. Mowrer v. State (1886) 107 Ind. 539, 8 N. E. 561. But he has no power, after the case has been ended by the rendition by him of a decree awarding a permanent injunction, to subsequently punish for contempt a violation of such injunction, since such special judge, when he rendered the final decree, had exercised the jurisdiction he was called upon to entertain, and if jurisdiction was again to be put into exercise it must be done by the court through the regularly acting judge. Kissel v. Lewis (1901) 27 Ind. App. 302, 61 N. E. 209.

The judge of a circuit court in Kansas has power to punish as for contempt disobedience of a lawful order duly made by such court (refusal of defendant to turn over to plaintiff property of latter in possession of defendant, when ordered to do so by court). Re Wolf (1893) 52 Kan. 866, 34 Pac. 1048.

A circuit court of Kentucky has power to punish as for a contempt an assault in open court upon the attorney for the commonwealth, while engaged in the prosecution of a trial. Arnold v. Com. (1882) 80 Ky. 300, 44 Am. Rep. 480.

The circuit court is given power by statute in Michigan, and has inherent power, independent of the statute, to punish criminal contempts. Langdon v. Judges of Wayne Circuit Ct. (1889) 76 Mich. 358, 43 N. W. 310 (attempt by bribing juror to bring about disagreement of jury); Re Dingley (1914) 182 Mich. 44, 148 N. W. 218 (newspaper article charging circuit judge with using grand jury as a club to attack prosecuting attorney).

The circuit court of Mississippi has power to punish contempts. It is given such power by a statute providing that circuit courts shall have power to fine and imprison any person guilty of a contempt while either in the presence or hearing of the court, and it also has inherent right to punish for contempt, independent of the statute (refusal of witness to answer questions asked him by the grand jury). Ex parte Adams (1853) 25 Miss. 883, 59 Am. Dec. 234.

The circuit court of Missouri, being a constitutional court of record of general jurisdiction, has inherent power to punish contempts, and is given by statute power to punish as for criminal contempt persons guilty: First, of disorderly, contemptuous, or insolent behavior committed during its session in its immediate view and presence, and directly tending to interrupt its proceeding or to impair the respect due to its authority; second, any breach of the peace, noise, or other disturbance, directly tending to interrupt its proceedings; third, wilful disobedience of any process or order lawfully issued or made by it; fourth, resistance wilfully offered by any person to the lawful order or process of the court; fifth, the contumacious and unlawful refusal of any person to be sworn as a witness, or, when so sworn, to refuse to answer any legal and proper interrogatory. State ex rel. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Bland (1905) 189 Mo. 197, 88 S. W. 28, 3 Ann. Cas. 1044 (violation of injunction); Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Gildersleeve (1909) 219 Mo. 170, 118 S. W. 86, 16 Ann. Cas. 749 (violation of injunction); Re Ellison (1914) 256 Mo. 378, 165 S. W. 987 (attempt to influence juror); State ex rel. Caldwell v. Cockrell (1919 — Mo. —, 217 S. W. 524 (refusal of clerk to make entries on court records, as directed by court); State ex rel. Thatcher v. Horner (1884) 16 Mo. App. 191 (refusal of officers of corporation to obey order to make transfer of stock); Fiedler v. Bamdrick Bros. Constr. Co. (1912) 162 Mo. App. 528, 142 S. W. 111 (violation of injunction).

An Ohio county circuit court has power to punish for contempt disobedience of its orders (held, that circuit court, on appeal, directing receiver to pay over money in his hands, could punish him, although it was not the court that appointed him receiver). Eichert v. Eichert (1908) 30 Ohio C. C. 825, 11 Ohio C. C. N. S. 525.

The circuit court of Oregon has inherent power to punish for contempt disobedience or resistance to its process and orders (disobedience of subpoena issued by court to witness, to attend before commissioner appointed by court of another state to take testimony to be used in that state). State v. Bourne (1891) 21 Or. 218, 27 Pac. 1048.

The circuit court of Virginia has inherent power to punish for contempt. Wells v. Com. (1871) 21 Gratt. (Va.) 500 (advising and aiding client to prevent execution of decree); Carter v. Com. (1899) 96 Va. 791, 45 L.R.A. 310, 32 S. E. 780, 11 Am. Crim. Rep. 303 (false telegram of illness by party to obtain continuance).

The power of the circuit court to punish contempts is limited by statute, in West Virginia, to direct contempts (publication in newspaper of false and libelous charge against judge in respect to his official conduct held a constructive contempt, and therefore not punishable by the court). State v. McClaugherty (1889) 33 W. Va. 250, 10 S. E. 407.

The circuit court of Wisconsin has power, partly inherent and partly derived from the common law and from statutes, to punish for contempt. Re Milburn (1883) 59 Wis. 24, 17 N. W. 965 (disobedience of order in supplementary proceedings, requiring payment of money or delivery of property by judgment debtor); Re Rosenberg (1895) 90 Wis. 581, 68 N. W. 1065, 64 N. W. 299 (refusal of witness, when ordered, to produce books and papers).

It appears from State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Circuit Ct. (1897) 97 Wis. 1, 38 L.R.A. 554, 65 Am. St. Rep. 90, 72 N. W. 193, that such court has no power to punish for contempt the publication in a newspaper of articles charging corruption in the trial of cases, where the cases have terminated; but would have the power if the cases were pending.

7. District courts.

The district courts of the several states have, in general, extensive inherent power as to contempt, though in some cases the power to punish contempt rests on statute.

California.—People ex rel. Lamby v. Dwinelle (1866) 29 Cal. 632.

Colorado.—Cooper v. People (1889) 13 Colo. 337, 6 L.R.A. 430, 22 Pac. 790.

Iowa.—Brady v. District Ct. (1905) 126 Iowa, 345, 102 N. W. 116; Flannagan v. Jepson (1916) 177 Iowa, 393, L.R.A.1918E, 548, 158 N. W. 641.

Kansas.—Re Millington (1880) 24 Kan. 214.

Louisiana.—State ex rel. Barthet v. Houston (1885) 37 La. Ann. 852; State ex rel. Phelps v. Judge of Civil Dist. Ct. (1898) 45 La. Ann. 1250, 40 Am. St. Rep. 282, 14 So. 310.

Montana.—State ex rel. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Min. Co. v. Clancy (1904) 30 Mont. 193, 76 Pac. 10.

Nebraska.—Hawes v. State (1895) 46 Neb. 149, 64 N. W. 699; Back v. State (1906) 75 Neb. 603, 106 N. W. 787.

Nevada.—Phillips v. Welch (1877) 12 Nev. 158.

North Dakota.—State v. Markuson (1896) 5 N. D. 147, 64 N. W. 934.

Oklahoma.—Burke v. Territory (1894) 2 Okla. 499, 37 Pac. 829; Smith v. State (1916) 12 Okla. Crim. Rep. 518, 159 Pac. 941.

Texas.—Taylor v. Goodrich (1897) 25 Tex. Civ. App. 109, 40 S. W. 515; Ex parte Morgan (1906) 48 Tex. Crim. Rep. 108, 86 S. W. 755.

Wyoming.—Mau v. Stoner (1904) 12 Wyo. 478, 76 Pac. 584.

The district court of the territory of Arizona had power to punish for contempt (publication of newspaper editorial relating to pending proceedings, and tending to influence such proceedings, and to obstruct justice). The power of the court to punish contempts is not taken away by a Code provision that, after its adoption, no act is punishable, except as authorized by statute or ordinance, where another section provides that the Code shall not affect any power conferred by law upon any tribunal to punish for contempt. Hughes v. Territory (1906) 10 Ariz. 119, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 572, 85 Pac. 1058.

It is stated in People ex rel. Field v. Turner (1850) 1 Cal. 152, that by the common law every court has the power to punish for contempt, and that the 13th section of the act organizing the district court of California is merely declaratory of the common law, and provides that such court shall have power to punish in a summary manner, by fine and imprisonment, or either, for contempt offered to it while in session, or to any process, writ, rule, or order of said court, issued and made, or for disobeying any writ, process, or order thereof, or for obstructing or preventing the execution of the same.

It is stated also in Re Cohen (1855) 5 Cal. 494, that it cannot be doubted that such court has power to punish for contempt of their process.

Such court has power to punish for contempt one who re-enters upon a tract of land, after having been dispossessed therefrom under an execution issued on a judgment of such court, under an act for the punishment of contempt and trespasses, which provides that every person who shall have been or who shall be hereafter dispossessed or ejected from any parcel of land by the judgment or process of any court of competent jurisdiction, and who, not having legal right so to do, shall re-enter into or upon such land, shall be deemed guilty of a contempt of the court by which such judgment or decree was rendered, or from which such process issued. People ex rel. Lamby v. Dwinelle (Cal.) supra.

The district court of Colorado has inherent power to punish for contempt those responsible for articles published in a newspaper in reference to a pending cause, when such articles are calculated to interfere with the due administration of justice in such case. Cooper v. People (Col.) supra.

The Iowa district court, as a constitutional court of record, has inherent power to punish for contempts. Drady v. District Ct. (1905) 126 Iowa, 345, 102 N. W. 116 (attempt to improperly influence juror; punishable also by statute); Flannagan v. Jepson (1916) 177 Iowa, 393, L.R.A. 1918E, 543, 153 N. W. 641 (violation of injunction).

The district court of Kansas, as a court of record, has inherent power to punish for disorderly conduct in the court room, resistance of its process, or any other interference with its proceedings, which amounts to actual contempt (newspaper article criticizing action of judge in pending case). Re Millington (1880) 24 Kan. 214.

A district court of Louisiana has power to punish contempts (violation of injunction). State ex rel. Barthet v. Houston (1885) 37 La. Ann. 852.

The civil district court for the parish of Orleans, created by the Constitution, is a court of record having original general jurisdiction, and is not an inferior court in the technical sense of that term, and has power to punish contempts, both direct and constructive. The court said that if a direct legislative grant from the legislature were necessary to confer upon it such powers as have been usually held to be inherent in all such courts, it would be found in the statute which declares that all judges possess the powers necessary for exercise of their respective jurisdictions, though the same be not expressly given by law, and in the statute providing that all the judges of the supreme, district, and parish courts have the power to punish all contempts of their authority (newspaper criticism of pending case). State ex rel. Phelps v. Judge of Civil Dist. Ct. (1893) 45 La. Ann. 1250, 40 Am. St. Rep. 282, 14 So. 310.

The district court of the territory of Montana is given by statute all the chancery powers which properly belong to the chancery courts in England, and therefore has power to punish contempts (disobedience of order to pay alimony). Zimmerman v. Zimmerman (1887) 7 Mont. 114, 14 Pac. 665.

And the power to punish for contempt is inherent in the district court of the state of Montana. State ex rel. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & S. Min. Co. v. Clancy (1904) 30 Mont. 193, 78

Pac. 10 (violation of injunction); State ex rel. Metcalf v. District Ct. (1916) 52 Mont. 46, L.R.A.1916F, 132, 155 Pac. 278, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 985 (newspaper criticism of case, vilifying judge, held not contempt because case had terminated).

The district court of Nebraska has inherent power to punish contempts (violation of injunction). Back v. State (1906) 75 Neb. 603, 106 N. W. 787.

And it is also given by statute power to punish as for criminal contempt persons guilty of disorderly or insolent behavior towards the court or any of its officers, in its presence. Hawes v. State (1895) 46 Neb. 149, 64 N. W. 699.

A district court of Nevada has power to punish for contempt a violation of an injunction granted by it. Phillips v. Welch (1877) 12 Nev. 158.

The North Dakota district court had inherent power to punish for contempt (violation of injunction). State v. Markuson (1895) 5 N. D. 147, 64 N. W. 934.

The district court of Oklahoma has inherent power to punish contempts. Burke v. Territory (1894) 2 Okla. 499, 37 Pac. 829 (newspaper publication in reference to pending matter reflecting upon integrity of court); Smith v. State (1916) 12 Okla. Crim. Rep. 513, 159 Pac. 941 (violation of injunction).

A district court is given by statute, in Texas, power to punish contempts. Taylor v. Goodrich (1897) 25 Tex. Civ. App. 109, 40 S. W. 515 (county attorney inciting publication of newspaper article criticizing court for discharging alleged murderers); Ex parte Morgan (1905) 48 Tex. Crim. Rep. 108, 86 S. W. 755 (violation of injunction).

The district court of the territory of Utah, while exercising the powers of a district court of the United States, has the power to punish for contempt, given to the United States courts by § 725 of the United States Revised Statutes, Comp. Stat. § 1245 (inducing witness, duly subpoenaed to appear before the grand jury, to leave the territory so as not to testify). Re Whetstone (1893) 9 Utah, 156, 36 Pac. 633.

The district court of Wyoming has inherent power to punish for contempt disobedience of its orders. Man v. Stoner (1904) 12 Wyo. 478, 76 Pac. 584.

S. Superior courts.

The superior courts of the several states generally have inherent power to punish contempt, and their power in some cases is derived from the Constitution.

California.—Burns v. Superior Ct. (1903) 140 Cal. 1, 73 Pac. 597; Crocker v. Conrey (1903) 140 Cal. 213, 73 Pac. 1006; Ex parte Creely (1908) 8 Cal. App. 713, 97 Pac. 766; Drew v. Superior Ct. (1919) — Cal. App. —, 185 Pac. 680.

Connecticut. — State v. Howell (1908) 80 Conn. 668, 125 Am. St. Rep. 141, 69 Atl. 1057, 13 Ann. Cas. 501.

Georgia.—Howard v. Durand (1867) 36 Ga. 346, 91 Am. Dec. 767; Obear v. Little (1887) 79 Ga. 384, 4 S. E. 914; Swafford v. Berrong (1889) 84 Ga. 65, 10 S. E. 593; Bradley v. State (1900) 111 Ga. 168, 50 L.R.A. 691, 78 Am. St. Rep. 157, 36 S. E. 630; Crawford v. Manning (1912) 12 Ga. App. 54, 76 S. E. 771.

Massachusetts.—Hurley v. Com. (1905) 188 Mass. 443, 74 N. E. 677, 3 Ann. Cas. 757.

North Carolina.—Re Brown (1915) 168 N. C. 417, 84 S. E. 690.

Ohio.—Ironmoulders' Union v. I. & E. Greenwald Co. (1906) 4 Ohio N. P. N. S. 161.

South Carolina.—State v. Williams (1843) 29 S. C. L. (2 Speers) 26.

Washington.—State ex rel. Nicomen Boom Co. v. North Shore Boom & Driving Co. (1909) 55 Wash. 1, 103 Pac. 426, 107 Pac. 196; State ex rel. Sargent v. Superior Ct. (1913) 71 Wash. 495, 128 Pac. 1077; Re Anderson (1917) 97 Wash. 683, 167 Pac. 70.

The source of the power of the superior court of California to punish for contempt is not statutory, but is derived from the Constitution which created the court, and thereby invested it with all the powers incidental to courts of common law and courts of equity, of which it is the successor. Burns v. Superior Ct. (Cal.) supra.

Such court has power to punish for contempt one who in passing the jury, after they had retired to deliberate upon their verdict in a criminal action, calls out to them not to convict the defendant. Ex parte Creely (Cal.) supra.

And a judge of such court has power to punish for contempt a witness who disobeys a subpoena issued by him to appear before him to give his deposition. Crocker v. Conrey (1903) 140 Cal. 213, 73 Pac. 1006.

But such court has no power to punish for contempt one who refuses to turn over to a receiver in insolvency property held by him adversely to the insolvent debtor, where he is neither an officer of the court nor a party to the proceedings in insolvency. Ex parte Hollis (1881) 59 Cal. 405.

And it was held in Re Shortridge (1893) 99 Cal. 526, 21 L.R.A. 755, 37 Am. St. Rep. 78, 34 Pac. 227, that such court had no power to punish for contempt the editor and publisher of a newspaper article containing a true report of the testimony of the witnesses in a divorce case, upon the commencement of which the court had made an order that during the trial all persons be excluded from the court room except the officers of the court, the parties, and their counsel, and that no public report or publication of any character of the testimony in the case be made. A recent act of the legislature had provided that no speech or publication reflecting upon or concerning any court or any officer thereof should be treated or punished as a contempt of such court, unless made in the immediate presence of such court while in session, and in such manner as actually to interfere with the proceedings. The court said: "No authority has been found which denies the inherent right of a court, in the absence of a limitation placed upon it by the power which created it, to punish as a contempt an act, whether committed in or out of its presence, which tends to impede, embarrass, or obstruct the court in the discharge of its duties," but it was held that the article in question did not tend to impair, impede, or obstruct the administration of justice.

The power to punish for contempt is inherent in the superior court of Connecticut (newspaper article assuming to state evidence to be produced by witnesses upon trial, with improper comment thereon, and reflecting upon parties to action, and improperly expressing opinion as to right of controversy, with purpose of discouraging defendant's defense and intimidating his witnesses. State v. Howell (Conn.) supra).

The superior court of Georgia is a constitutional court of record with inherent power to punish for contempt, and is also given power by statutes to preserve and enforce order in its immediate presence, and as near thereto as is necessary to prevent interruption, disturbance, or hindrance to its proceedings, and to inflict summary punishment for contempt upon any party to a case who disobeys or resists any lawful process, order, or command. Swafford v. Berrong (1889) 84 Ga. 65, 10 S. E. 593 (assault by defendant upon witness during trial, in presence of court, and insulting and abusive language to court); Bradley v. State (1900) 111 Ga. 168, 50 L.R.A. 691, 78 Am. St. Rep. 157, 36 S. E. 630 (approaching, during adjournment, attorney engaged in trial, and offering illegally to influence juror to obtain favorable verdict or mistrial); Howard v. Durand (1867) 36 Ga. 346, 91 Am. Dec. 767 (violation of injunction); Obear v. Little (1887) 79 Ga. 384, 4 S. E. 914 (failure of trustee to pay over money for support of cestui que trust); Crawford v. Manning (1912) 12 Ga. App. 54, 76 S. E. 771 (refusal of grandparents to whom custody of minor child is awarded, to comply with order to surrender child to father at stated intervals).

The superior court of Massachusetts has inherent power to punish contempts (attempt to influence and corrupt jury, and to induce attorney engaged in trial to corrupt jury). Hurley v. Com. (1905) 188 Mass. 443, 74 N. E. 677, 3 Ann. Cas. 757.

The superior court of North Carolina has inherent power to punish contempts (publication in newspaper defaming judge, because made after adjournment of court, and after all matters referred to concerning the official conduct of the judge have terminated, held not contempt). Re Brown (1915) 168 N. C. 417, 84 S. E. 690.

The superior court of Ohio has inherent power to punish for contempt the violation of an injunction. Iron-moulders' Union v. I. & E. Greenwald Co. (1906) 4 Ohio N. P. N. S. 161.

The South Carolina superior court has power to punish for contempt (held, that statute making habitual drunkenness of constable indictable did not take away power of court to punish constable for contempt for same cause). State v. Williams (1843) 29 S. C. L. (2 Speers) 26.

A county superior court of Washington has power, partly inherent and partly statutory, to punish for contempt. State ex rel. Nicomen Boom Co. v. North Shore Boom & Driving Co. (1909) 55 Wash. 1, 103 Pac. 426, 107 Pac. 196 (violation of judgment); State ex rel. Sargent v. Superior Ct. (1913) 71 Wash. 495, 128 Pac. 1077 (refusal of party to comply with judgment); Re Anderson (1917) 97 Wash. 683, 167 Pac. 70 (failure of guardian to pay over, as ordered, money to ward).

9. Courts of common pleas.

The courts of common pleas of the several states have power, in some instances inherent, and in other instances statutory, to punish for contempt. Middlebrook v. State (1876) 43 Conn. 257, 21 Am. Rep. 650; People ex rel. Mitchell v. New York County (1859) 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 622; Kahn's Case (1860) 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 147; Hale v. State (1896) 55 Ohio St. 210, 36 L.R.A. 254, 60 Am. St. Rep. 691, 45 N. E. 199; Steube v. State (1888) 3 Ohio C. C. 383, 2 Ohio C. D. 216, affirming (1886) 10 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 199, 19 Ohio L. J. 181; Jack v. Twyford (1899) 10 Pa. Super. Ct. 475; Greason v. Cumberland R. Co. (1913) 54 Pa. Super. Ct. 595.

The court of common pleas of Connecticut has inherent power, and is empowered by statute, to punish direct contempts. The statute provides that every person who shall, in the presence of the court, either by word or action, behave contemptuously or disorderly, may be punished by the court (assault by party upon attorney during trial). Middlebrook v. State (1876) 43 Conn. 257, 21 Am. Rep. 650.

The court of common pleas of New York had power to punish for contempt the refusal of a witness to answer a question which he was directed by the court to answer on a trial. People ex rel. Mitchell v. New York (1859) 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 622.

It also had power to punish as for contempt failure to pay a personal property tax, under the statute providing that the neglect or refusal to pay such a tax shall be held and deemed to be a neglect or violation of duty, or misconduct, within the meaning of the provision that every court of record shall have power to punish any neglect or violation of duty, or misconduct, by which the rights or remedies of a party in a cause or matter pending in such court may be defeated, impaired, or prejudiced. Kahn's Case (1860) 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 147.

An Ohio county common pleas court has inherent power to punish contempts, both direct and constructive. Hale v. State (1896) 55 Ohio St. 210, 36 L.R.A. 254, 60 Am. St. Rep. 691, 45 N. E. 199 (removal of witness from county of residence to prevent his appearing on day of trial); Steube v. State (1888) 3 Ohio C. C. 383, 2 Ohio C. D. 216, affirming (1886) 10 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 199, 19 Ohio L. J. 181; Ex parte Morris (1906) 28 Ohio C. C. 611 (held, that court could not punish summarily refusal of assistant prosecuting attorney, when ordered, to prepare and present nolle prosequi, as statute required notice).

The court of common pleas of Pennsylvania has power to punish for contempt one refusing to obey a final decree of such court in a proceeding in equity (refusal of party ordered to restore to former position frame building wrongfully removed from another's property). Jack v. Twyford (1899) 10 Pa. Super. Ct. 475.

Such court also has power to punish for a constructive contempt, an attempt to influence a juror in a pending case. Greason v. Cumberland R. Co. (1913) 54 Pa. Super. Ct. 595.

10. County courts.

The county courts of the several states, generally, have inherent and statutory powers as to contempt.

Colorado.—Hughes v. People (1880) 5 Colo. 436; Wyatt v. People (1892) 17 Colo. 252, 28 Pac. 961.

Illinois.—Ex parte Thatcher (1845) 7 Ill. 167; People v. Gilbert (1917) 281 Ill. 619, 118 N. E. 196.

Indiana.—Little v. State (1883) 90 Ind. 338, 46 Am. Rep. 224; Ray v. State (1917) 186 Ind. 396, 114 N. E. 866.

Missouri.—Ex parte Stone (1916) — Mo. —, 183 S. W. 1058.

New Jersey.—Re Cheeseman (1886) 49 N. J. L. 115, 60 Am. Rep. 596, 6 Atl. 513; Croasdale v. Court of Quarter Sessions (1916) 88 N. J. L. 506, 97 Atl. 285, affirmed on opinion below in (1916) 89 N. J. L. 711, 99 Atl. 1070; Re Verdon (1916) 89 N. J. L. 16, 97 Atl. 783, reversed on another point in (1917) 90 N. J. L. 494, 102 Atl. 66, 157, and (1918) 91 N. J. L. 494, 104 Atl. 317.

Oklahoma.—Waugh v. Dibbens (1916) — Okla. —, L.R.A.1917B, 360, 160 Pac. 589; Cress v. State (1918) 14 Okla. Crim. Rep. 521, 173 Pac. 854.

South Dakota.—Re Taber (1900) 18 S. D. 62, 82 N. W. 398.

The county court of Colorado has power to punish for contempt a party to an action who fails to appear personally, as required by a citation; and who, in his answer, makes statements untrue, scandalous, impertinent, and disrespectful to the judge, and, in an affidavit for a change of venue, makes grossly scandalous, untrue, and impertinent allegations, and outrageously insulting imputations against the judge. The Civil Code provides that the following acts or omissions shall be deemed contempt: First. Disorderly, contemptuous, or insolent behavior toward the judge while holding court or engaged in his judicial duties and at chambers, or toward referees or arbitrators, while sitting on a reference or arbitration, tending to interrupt the due course of a trial, reference, arbitration, or other judicial proceedings; second, a breach of the peace, boisterous conduct, or insolent disturbance in the presence of the court, or in its immediate vicinity, tending to interrupt the due course of a trial or judicial proceeding; third, disobedience or resistance to any lawful writ, order, rule, or process, issued by the court or judge at chambers; fourth, disobedience of a subpoena duly served, or refusing to be sworn, or answer as a witness; fifth, rescuing any person or property in the custody of an officer by virtue of any order or process of such court or judge at chambers. The court stated that such a statutory enumeration, when applied to the ever-varying facts and circumstances out of which questions of contempt arise, cannot be taken as the arbitrary measure and limit of the inherent power of the court for its own preservation, and for that proper dignity of authority which is essential to the effective administration of law. Hughes v. People (Colo.) supra.

And the criminal court of a county has inherent power to punish for contempt. Wyatt v. People (Colo.) supra.

The county court of Illinois is a constitutional court, and though a court of limited jurisdiction, has inherent power to punish contempts, not only those committed in its presence, but also one consisting in the publication of a newspaper article concerning a pending case, which reflects upon the judicial integrity of the court. People v. Gilbert (Ill.) supra.

And the county commissioner's court has power to punish for contempt the refusal of its clerk to enter up its order, where the statute provides that it shall have power to enforce its orders, decrees, and judgments by attachment or other process, and shall have all the power necessary to the right exercise of the jurisdiction which is, or may be, vested in it according to law. Ex parte Thatcher (Ill.) supra.

The power to punish for contempt is inherent in a county criminal court of Indiana. Little v. State (1883) 90 Ind. 338, 46 Am. Rep. 224 (soliciting money from father of accused to bribe jurors or prosecuting attorney); Ray v. State (1917) 186 Ind. 396, 114 N. E. 866 (newspaper editorial charging judge with political motives as basis of his action).

A parish judge of Louisiana has authority to punish contempts, under the statute giving judges express power to punish all contempts of their authority, and even without this statutory authority he has inherent power to repress disorder and punish infractions of his discipline (disobedience of administrator of order to file account). State ex rel. Farmer v. Judge of Parish Ct. (1879) 31 La. Ann. 116.

It is held in Ex parte Stone (1916) — Mo. —, 183 S. W. 1058, that while the county court of Missouri, being a court of record, has power to punish as for a criminal contempt persons guilty of wilful disobedience of any process or order lawfully issued or made by it, and of the contumacious and unlawful refusal of any person to be sworn as a witness, the authority of a county court to commit for contempt must be explicitly given by statute, or necessarily implied from some power expressly conferred to the exercise of which its authority is an essential incident, and therefore it has no power to punish for contempt a person refusing to be sworn as a witness, where it appears that no subpoena has been issued and served upon him.

The county court of quarter sessions of New Jersey has power to punish contempts committed either in or out of its presence (publication in newspaper of editorial criticizing action of county prosecutor at a quarter session, in criminal matter). Croasdale v. Court of Quarter Sessions (1916) 88 N. J. L. 506, 97 Atl. 285, affirmed on opinion below in (1916) 89 N. J. L. 711, 99 Atl. 1070.

The power of such court to punish contempts is derived wholly from the common law, which has been neither altered nor enlarged by statute in this state (newspaper publication). Re Verdon (1916) 89 N. J. L. 16, 97 Atl. 783, reversed on another point in (1918) 91 N. J. L. 494, 104 Atl. 817.

Since the superior courts of New Jersey, which are modeled after the English superior courts of common law, have power to punish for contempt for any words uttered by speech, by writing, or by printing, outside of the regular course of litigation, which are designed to bring contempt on the courts in the exercise of their judicial functions, or to pervert, in a pending cause, the due administration of justice, a county oyer and terminer court has power to punish as for contempt the publication in a newspaper of an article intended to cast discredit upon the members of the grand jury that had indicted the publisher, upon the sheriff who had summoned the jury, and upon the judge who had presided at his trial. Re Cheeseman (1886) 49 N. J. L. 115, 60 Am. Rep. 596, 6 Atl. 513.

A judge of the county court, while taking a deposition, is given power by statute, in Oklahoma, to commit a witness for contempt for refusing to answer a material question. Wagh v. Dibbens (1916) — Okla. —, L.R.A. 1917B, 360, 160 Pac. 589.

And a county court has power to punish for contempt an attorney who instructs a witness not to be sworn, and to refuse to give testimony in a pending action when ordered by the judge to do so. It was held in this case that there was no contempt, because the county judge was sitting as an examining magistrate, and that he lost jurisdiction on the filing of an affidavit for a change of venue, and that all proceedings by him thereafter were void. Cress v. State (1918) 14 Okla. Crim. Rep. 521, 173 Pac. 354.

The county court of South Dakota, being a court of general jurisdiction in respect to all probate matters, and being created by the Constitution, has inherent power to punish all criminal contempts (refusal of special administrator to obey order of court directing him to turn over to the administrator all papers, effects, and assets in his hands, belonging to the estate). Re Taber (1900) 13 S. D. 62, 82 N. W. 398.

11. Municipal or city courts.

In general, a municipal or city court, unless a court of record, is dependent on statute for power to punish contempt, and its power is limited by the statute.

Connecticut.—McCarthy v. Hugo (1909) 82 Conn. 262, 135 Am. St. Rep. 270, 73 Atl. 778, 17 Ann. Cas. 219; Goodhart v. State (1911) 84 Conn. 60, 78 Atl. 858, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1297.

Georgia.—Hewitt v. State (1913) 12 Ga. App. 168, 76 S. E. 1054.

Illinois.—People v. Seymour (1916) 272 Ill. 295, 111 N. E. 1008; People v. Samuel (1916) 199 Ill. App. 294.

Maine.—Morrison v. McDonald (1842) 21 Me. 550.

Michigan.—Nichols v. Judge of Superior Ct. (1902) 130 Mich. 187, 89 N. W. 691.

Minnesota.—State ex rel. Bullard v. McDonough (1912) 117 Minn. 173, 134 N. W. 509.

New York.—Buchsbaum v. Laue (1909) 63 Misc. 374, 118 N. Y. Supp. 419.

Porto Rico.—People v. Freyre (1908) 14 P. R. R. 799; Ex parte Pesquera (1911) 17 P. R. R. 706.

Texas.—Ex parte Hubbard (1911) 63 Tex. Crim. Rep. 516, 140 S. W. 451.

Vermont.—Rudd v. Darling (1892) 64 Vt. 456, 25 Atl. 479.

Wisconsin.—State ex rel. Long v. Keyes (1889) 75 Wis. 238, 44 N. W. 13.

A town court of Connecticut has the power to punish for contempt by a sentence and imprisonment, which a justice of the peace is authorized to inflict, by § 506, Gen. Stat., providing that any court may punish by fine and imprisonment any person who shall in his presence behave contemptuously or in a disorderly manner (substituting bottle of ginger ale for bottle of whisky in presence of court, on prosecution for selling liquor in violation of law). McCarthy v. Hugo (Conn.) supra.

The city court of New Haven is a court of record, and has the inherent right to punish contempts committed in its presence (untruthful statements by counsel for defense in criminal case to secure admission of certain evidence). Goodhart v. State (Conn.) supra.

The city court of La Grange is a statutory court without inherent power to punish for contempt, and its power to punish contempts is limited to those specified in § 4643 of the Civil Code of 1910. Hewitt v. State (Ga.) supra.

The municipal court of Chicago has inherent power to punish contempts committed in its presence (making of motion for change of venue on ground of prejudice, based on untrue affidavits). People v. Samuel (Ill.) supra.

Such court, in the absence of statutory authority, has power to punish any interference with its orders in the administration of justice (advice by attorney to client, after dispossession, to repossess herself of premises by force, and to withhold possession from plaintiff and bailiff, acted upon by client). People v. Seymour (Ill.) supra.

The municipal court of the city of Bangor, being a court of record, has the power to punish contempts which is incident to all courts of record (refusal of recorder, when ordered by judge, to desist from exercising duties of office, after having been duly removed therefrom). Morrison v. McDonald (Me.) supra.

The municipal court of Grand Rapids, being given by statute the same power in that respect as is possessed by the circuit courts, has power to punish contempts (subornation of perjury in a criminal case by attorney). Nichols v. Judge of Superior Ct. (Mich.) supra.

A judge of a municipal court of Minnesota has power to punish for contempts committed in open court (attempt by justice of peace appointed by mayor, to take chair of duly elected, qualified judge of municipal court). State ex rel. Bullard v. McDonough (1912) 117 Minn. 173, 134 N. W. 509.

The city court of New York is given by statute power to punish as for contempt the disobedience by the judgment debtor of the injunction prohibiting the transfer of his property, in an order by the city judge for the examination of said debtor supplementary to execution. Buchsbaum v. Laue (1909) 63 Misc. 374, 118 N. Y. Supp. 419.

A municipal court is given by statute, in Porto Rico, power to punish contempts committed in its presence. People v. Freyre (1908) 14 P. R. R. 799; Ex parte Pesquera (1911) 17 P. R. R. 706 (objection by attorney to judge questioning witness).

A city corporation court is given by statute, in Texas, power to punish for contempt one who keeps witnesses from attending the court. Ex parte Hubbard (1911) 63 Tex. Crim. Rep. 516, 140 S. W. 451.

The municipal court of Bennington is declared to be a court of record by the statute creating it, and has inherent power to punish for contempt the refusal of a witness to answer proper questions. Rudd v. Darling (1892) 64 Vt. 456, 25 Atl. 479.

A judge of a municipal court in Wisconsin, acting as a committing magistrate, has power, given by statute, to punish for contempt the refusal of the witness to be sworn. State ex rel. Long v. Keyes (1889) 75 Wis. 288, 44 N. W. 13.

12. Police courts.

A police court is generally given power by statute to punish contempts, and the statute further prescribes in what cases such power may be exercised.

United States.—Re Monroe (1891) 46 Fed. 52.

Georgia.—Faircloth v. Macon (1905) 122 Ga. 795, 50 S. E. 915.

Illinois.—Newton v. Locklin (1875) 77 Ill. 103.

Kansas.—Re Palmeter (1897) 58 Kan. 809, 51 Pac. 288.

New Jersey.—Re Mindes (1915) 88 N. J. L. 117, 95 Atl. 743.

New York.—People v. Hicks (1853) 15 Barb. 153.

Ohio.—Meek v. McGorray (1908) 16 Ohio C. C. N. S. 9.

South Carolina.—State v. Barnett (1914) 98 S. C. 422, 82 S. E. 795.

Tennessee.—State v. Galloway (1868) 5 Coldw. 326, 98 Am. Dec. 404.

A police judge has power to punish for contempt a police officer who refuses to execute a process of commitment issued by the judge, where the police court is made by statute a court of record, and another statute provides that every court of record shall have power to punish as for criminal contempt persons guilty of the following acts: First, disorderly, contemptuous, or insolent behavior, committed during its sitting, in its immediate view and presence, and directly tending to interrupt its proceedings or to impair the respect due to its authority; second, any breach of the peace, noise, or disturbance directly tending to interrupt its proceedings; third, wilful disobedience of any process or order lawfully issued or made by him. Re Monroe (Fed.) supra.

The recorder of a city, given by its charter the same power to punish for contempt as a judge of the superior court, has power to punish contempts without reference to whether he is sitting for the trial of offenses against the municipal ordinances, or as a court of inquiry for the investigation of offenses committed against the state within the limits of the city (attempt by one, brought before recorder charged with gaming, to procure, while case was pending, prosecutor to leave city). Faircloth v. Macon (Ga.) supra.

A police magistrate and justice of the peace has power to punish for contempt one using abusive and insolent language, under a statute providing that every person who shall appear before a justice of the peace when acting as such, or who shall be present at any legal proceeding before a justice, shall behave himself in a decent, orderly, and respectful manner, and for failure to do so such person shall be fined by the said justice for contempt. Newton v. Locklin (Ill.) supra.

The power of a police judge to imprison for contempt cannot rest on mere implication or inference, but must be clearly expressed in the statute. The general welfare clause, which authorizes a city council to enact such ordinances as may be deemed expedient for maintaining the peace, good government, and welfare of the city, and its trade and commerce, does not authorize the city council to confer power upon the police judge to adjudge a person guilty of contempt, and to imprison him therefor. Re Palmeter (Kan.) supra.

A police judge of a city of the third class, in Kansas, has no power to punish indirect contempts (refusal of witness to obey subpoena). Re Rich (1900) 10 Kan. App. 280, 62 Pac. 715.

A judge of the criminal court of Newark has power to punish for contempt threatening language by an attorney to the judge in open court. Re Mindes (1915) 88 N. J. L. 117, 95 Atl. 743.

The recorder of a city has no power to punish for contempt the use of insulting language to him while sitting at the trial of persons who have violated a city ordinance, where his powers are derived from the city charter, which provides that he shall have all powers in criminal matters that justices of the peace for the several counties of the state have, and like powers with the mayor, to cause to be arrested and committed without process any person guilty, or that he may have reason to believe guilty, of any crime or misdemeanor or breach of the peace, and to try all causes and complaints arising from the violation of any city ordinance, and also power to inflict such fines on such persons as shall be brought before him charged with vagrancy, disorderly conduct, or breach of the peace, or, in his discretion, to order the person committed to the county jail. The court said: "It will thus be seen that the recorder has certain ministerial powers in criminal matters, the same as a justice of the peace, and certain powers of a judicial nature as to violations of city ordinances, and vagrancy, and other light offenses. He has no power to hold a court for the trial of small causes, and although some of his proceedings are to be conducted in analogy to those in that court, yet he is not empowered to hold a court of even that limited jurisdiction. To punish by a commitment for contempt is a power belonging only to judges of certain courts, and does not arise from the mere exercise of judicial functions. . . . That power, so far as it may be exercised by judicial officers, is an incident to a court, belonging alike to courts of civil and criminal jurisdiction, but not extending at the common law, below such as are courts of record recognized in the common law." Re Kerrigan (1869) 33 N. J. L. 344.

A city recorder, authorized by the city charter to punish for contempt the refusal of a witness to be sworn, or to answer proper questions, has no power to punish a witness who refuses to produce books and papers. People ex rel. Webster v. Van Tassell (1892) 64 Hun, 444, 19 N. Y. Supp. 643, affirmed on opinion below in (1892) 135 N. Y. 638, 82 N. E. 646.

The recorder of the city of New York has power to punish as for a criminal contempt the refusal of a witness to be sworn and testify upon a criminal complaint before the recorder, the statute respecting criminal proceedings giving express power to any magistrate to punish for contempt in like cases, and in like manner as is permitted to justices of the peace in civil cases, and as to such justices it is provided that where a witness attending before any justice shall refuse to be sworn, and the party at whose instance he attended shall make oath that the testimony of such witness is so far material that without it he cannot safely proceed in the trial of such cause, such justice may, by warrant, commit such witness to the county jail. People v. Hicks (1853) 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 153.

A police justice is given by statute, in Ohio, power to punish for contempt committed in his presence, and the court stated that without the statute he would have inherent power to do so. Meek v. McGorray (1908) 16 Ohio C. C. N. S. 9.

A magistrate's court is given by statute, in South Carolina, power to punish for contempt (statements, in affidavit for change of venue, that magistrate directed his constable to influence a juror, and that he was instigated by malice and improper motives in his rulings). State v. Barnett (1914) 98 S. C. 422, 82 S. E. 795.

The criminal court of Memphis has no power to punish as a contempt any other act than those specified in the Code, which are as follows: First, the wilful misbehavior of any person in the presence of the court, or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice. Second, the wilful misbehavior of any of the officers of the court in their official transactions. Third, the wilful disobedience or resistance of any officer of the court, party, juror, witness, or any other person to the lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree, or command of the court. Fourth, the abuse of, or unlawful interference with, a process or proceeding of the court. Fifth, wilfully conversing with jurors in relation to the merits of the cause in the trial of which they are engaged, or otherwise tampering with them. Sixth, any other act or omission declared a contempt by law. It is held in this case that the publication of an editorial article purporting to give the particulars, and denouncing the judge of the court as guilty of official corruption in discharging upon bail a prisoner under indictment in the court for a felony, does not come within any of the foregoing subdivisions of the statute, and is, therefore, not punishable by such court. State v. Galloway (1868) 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 326, 98 Am. Dec. 404.

13. Justices of the peace.

The power of a justice of the peace to punish contempt is generally a matter of statute, though in a few states he has some inherent power.

Alabama.—Early v. Fitzpatrick (1909) 161 Ala. 171, 185 Am. St. Rep. 123, 49 So. 686.

California.—Ex parte Latimer (1873) 47 Cal. 131.

Connecticut.—Holcomb v. Cornish (1831) 8 Conn. 375; Church v. Pearne (1903) 75 Conn. 350, 53 Atl. 955.

Georgia.—Ormond v. Ball (1904) 120 Ga. 916, 48 S. E. 383.

Illinois.—Clark v. People (1830) Breese, 266, 12 Am. Dec. 177.

Indiana.—Murphy v. Wilson (1874) 46 Ind. 537; State v. Newton (1878) 62 Ind. 517.

Iowa.—Robb v. McDonald (1870) 29 Iowa, 330, 4 Am. Rep. 211.

Kentucky.—McBurnie v. Sullivan (1913) 152 Ky. 686, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.)

186, 153 S. W. 945; Marksberry v. Beasley (1886) 8 Ky. L. Rep. 534.

Massachusetts.—Clarke's Case (1853) 12 Cush. 320.

Nebraska.—Re Button (1908) 83 Neb. 636, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1173, 120 N. W. 203.

New Hampshire.—Burnham v. Stevens (1856) 33 N. H. 247; State ex rel. Welsh v. Towle (1861) 42 N. H. 540; Robertson v. Hale (1896) 68 N. H. 538, 44 Atl. 695.

New York.—Onderdonk v. Ranlett (1842) 3 Hill, 323; People ex rel. Deal v. Williams (1900) 51 App. Div. 102, 64 N. Y. Supp. 457; People ex rel. Mallory v. Benjamin (1853) 9 How. Pr. 419; Bowen v. Hunter (1873) 45 How. Pr. 193; Rutherford v. Holmes (1876) 66 N. Y. 368; People v. Webster (1857) 8 Park. Crim. Rep. 503.

Ohio.—Rehburg v. Hirstius (1910) 17 Ohio C. C. N. S. 199.

Philippine.—Narcida v. Bowen (1912) 22 Philippine, 365.

South Carolina.—Lining v. Bentham (1796) 2 S. C. L. (2 Bay) 1; State v. Johnson (1802) 2 S. C. L. (2 Bay) 385, 3 S. C. L. (1 Brev.) 155.

Texas.—Ex parte Robertson (1889) 27 Tex. App. 628, 11 Am. St. Rep. 207, 11 S. W. 669.

Vermont.—Re Cooper (1858) 32 Vt. 253.

It is held in Early v. Fitzpatrick (Ala.) supra, that it is too well settled in Alabama to need extended argument, that a justice of the peace has power to punish for contempt.

A justice of the peace, in California, has power to punish for contempt one who, in proceedings supplementary to execution, refuses to obey an order to deliver to an officer of the court property liable to execution. The Code of Civil Procedure, defining what shall constitute contempt of courts of justice, enumerates, among others, the "disobedience of a lawful judgment, order, or process of the court." Another provision of the same Code makes applicable to justices' courts those provisions of the Code which are in their nature applicable to the organization, powers, and force of proceedings in justices' courts, and the court held that, under this section, the provisions of the Code as to contempt were applicable to justices' courts, and stated that if there was any doubt on the point it would be removed by reference to the 4th subdivision of § 128 of the same Code, which provides that every court shall have power to compel obedience to its judgments, orders, and processes, and to the orders of a judge out of court in an action or proceeding pending therein. Ex parte Latimer (Cal.) supra.

But he has no power to punish for contempt one who disobeys a subpoena issued by the justice to appear before him to give his deposition, the power to punish for such contempt being in the superior court in which the proceeding was pending, of which the taking of the deposition was a part. Gay v. Thorpe (1905) 1 Cal. App. 312, 82 Pac. 221.

A justice of the peace has power to arrest and fine, and commit until the fine is paid, without previous complaint or warrant, one who curses him in his hearing and presence, under a statute providing that a justice of the peace who shall have plain view or personal knowledge of any person being guilty, among other things, of profane swearing, may make up a judgment against such person. Holcomb v. Cornish (1831) 8 Conn. 375.

The Connecticut statute, Gen. Stat. 1902, § 506, providing that any court may punish by fine and imprisonment any person who shall in its presence behave contemptuously, or in a disorderly manner, relates only to acts of contempt committed in the presence of the court, and leaves all others to be dealt with according to the course of the common law. The court said: "It necessarily implies that a justice of the peace has power to deal with such acts committed in his presence while holding court, but we do not decide whether he has power to punish for acts not committed in his presence" (refusal and neglect of selectman having charge of town hall to have said town hall unlocked and open for purpose of continuing trial). Church v. Pearne (1903) 75 Conn. 350, 53 Atl. 955.

In Georgia, a justice of the peace is both a civil and a criminal magistrate. His civil jurisdiction is derived from the Constitution, while his criminal jurisdiction is derived from statute. When presiding over the constitutional court, or over the statutory court called the court of inquiry, he may, although neither court is a court of record, punish contempts, but he cannot punish as for a contempt of court the refusal to surrender to an arresting officer, upon a warrant lawfully issued by the justice, one accused of crime, because the court of inquiry does not, under the statute, come into existence until the accused has been legally arrested and brought before the justice, and a court has been organized for the purpose of examining into the accusations. Ormond v. Ball (1904) 120 Ga. 916, 48 S. E. 383.

A justice of the peace has power to punish contempts committed in his presence, under an act providing that every person who shall appear before a justice of the peace when acting as such, or who shall be present at any legal proceeding before a justice, shall demean himself in a decent, orderly, and respectful manner, and for failing to do so, such person shall be fined by the justice for contempt. Clark v. People (1830) Breese (Ill.) 266, 12 Am. Dec. 177.

A justice of the peace, in Indiana, has power to punish for contempt jurors who, without his permission, leave before arriving at a verdict. Murphy v. Wilson (1874) 46 Ind. 537.

He has also power to punish for contempt a witness who refuses to obey a subpoena in a criminal case, under the statute providing that justices shall have power to subpoena witnesses and enforce their attendance by attachment and fine, and to enforce order when judicial proceedings are in progress before them, as this statute applies both to criminal and civil cases. State v. Newton (1878) 62 Ind. 517.

A justice of the peace, in Iowa, has power, upon the application of a person desirous of obtaining the affidavit of another, to punish for contempt the refusal of the latter to obey a subpoena of the justice, or to answer when brought before him. Robb v. McDonald (1870) 29 Iowa, 330, 4 Am. Rep. 211.

Justices' courts in Kentucky are courts of record, and have the same power as such courts to punish for contempts (insulting language by witness to justice). McBurnie v. Sullivan (1913) 152 Ky. 686, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 186, 153 S. W. 945.

And a justice of the peace in that state has power to punish disobedience of his orders. Marksberry v. Beasley (1886) 8 Ky. L. Rep. 534.

A justice of the peace is given by statute, in Massachusetts, the same power to punish for contempt as courts of record have, and they have the power to punish for contempt a witness, who, when duly subpoenaed, refuses to attend, but the justice of the peace has no power to punish a witness for failure to attend after the case has been terminated by final judgment. Clarke's Case (1853) 12 Cush. (Mass.) 320.

And he has no power to punish for contempt, when taking the deposition of a witness, the refusal of the latter to answer questions put to him. Lawson v. Rowley (1904) 185 Mass. 171, 69 N. E. 1082.

A justice of the peace, in Michigan, holding an examination to determine whether one charged with crime shall be committed for trial or held to bail, has no power to commit a witness for refusing to testify on such examination, no power to do so being expressly conferred by statute. Re Farnham (1860) 8 Mich. 89.

A justice of the peace in Nebraska has power to punish for contempt the refusal of a witness to be sworn and to testify, when duly subpoenaed to give his deposition, the power to take depositions and commit for refusal to testify being expressly conferred by statute. Re Button (1908) 83 Neb. 636, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1173, 120 N. W. 203.

A justice of the peace has power to punish for contempt the failure of a witness to obey a summons to appear and give a deposition, under a statute providing that every justice before whom any witness has been summoned to appear and testify, or to give a deposition, may bring any witness refusing or neglecting to appear and testify, or give a deposition, by attachment before him, and if on examination he has no reasonable excuse, may punish him by a fine. Burnham v. Stevens (1856) 33 N. H. 247.

And he has power under the same statute, to punish for contempt the refusal of a witness duly summoned to give a deposition, to answer proper questions. State ex rel. Welsh v. Towle (1861) 42 N. H. 540.

The same statute confers upon a justice power to punish for contempt a witness who, after giving his deposition, fails to appear at an adjourned day to sign it. Robertson v. Hale (1896) 68 N. H. 538, 44 Atl. 695.

A justice of the peace in New Jersey, sitting in the course of a trial of small causes, has no power to commit for a contempt committed in the presence of the court, while engaged in the trial of a civil cause (commanding a witness under examination to leave the court room, and calling the justice names). The justice's court is a statutory court, and its powers are limited to those expressly conferred by statute, and a statute making the justice's court a court of record, and giving it all the powers that are usual in courts of record, does not confer upon it power to punish contempts, since, although under the common law all courts of record possess the power to punish for contempts, only the courts of New Jersey which are modeled after the courts which possess such power at common law have the power to punish contempts, and courts created by an act of the legislature with limited and special statutory jurisdiction do not have such power, unless specially conferred by statute. Rhinehart v. Lance (1881) 43 N. J. L. 311, 39 Am. Rep. 592.

A justice of the peace in New York state has no power to punish for contempt, save in a case stated in the statute law. Rutherford v. Holmes (1876) 66 N. Y. 368.

He is given by statute power to punish as for a criminal contempt, the following acts, and no others: First, disorderly, contemptuous, or insolent behavior toward the justice while engaged in the trial of a cause, or in the rendering of any judgment, or in any judicial proceeding, which shall tend to interrupt such proceedings, or to impair the respect due to his authority. Second, any breach of the peace, noise, or other disturbance, tending to interrupt the official proceedings of the justice. Third, resistance wilfully offered by a person, in the presence of the justice, to the execution of any lawful order or process made or issued by him. Another statute provides as follows: "When a witness attending before a justice, in any cause, shall refuse to be sworn, in any form prescribed by law, or to answer any pertinent and proper question, and the party at whose instance he attended shall make oath that the testimony of such witness is so far material that without it he cannot safely proceed in the trial of such cause, such justice may by warrant commit such witness to the jail of the county." Onderdonk v. Ranlett (1842) 3 Hill (N. Y.) 323 (boisterous conduct and insulting language by party during trial); People ex rel. Deal v. Williams (1900) 51 App. Div. 102, 64 N. Y. Supp. 457 (creation of disturbance tending to interrupt proceeding); People ex rel. Mallory v. Benjamin (1853) 9 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 419 (refusal of attorney to produce papers held not contempt under third subdivision of statute); Rutherford v. Holmes (1876) 66 N. Y. 368 (refusal of witness to answer proper questions); People v. Webster (1857) 3 Park. Crim. Rep. (N. Y.) 503 (refusal of witness to be sworn in special proceeding under prohibitory act, to ascertain violators of act, held not punishable, because second statute not applicable to such proceeding).

But it is held in Bowen v. Hunter (1873) 45 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 193, that a justice of the peace holding a court of special sessions has power, under the common law, to punish as for a criminal contempt, a witness duly sub-pœnaed, who wilfully and contemptuously refuses to be sworn.

In Ohio, a justice of the peace has power to punish for contempt the refusal of a witness to answer a proper question in a civil action before the justice. Rehburg v. Hirstius (1910) 17 Ohio C. C. N. S. 199.

In Pennsylvania, justices of the peace derive all their judicial powers from legislation, and they exercise no common-law powers, and no statute gives them the power to punish contempts (insulting and contemptuous language to justice during proceeding before him held not so permissible). Albright v. Lapp (1856) 26 Pa. 99, 67 Am. Dec. 402.

A justice of the peace is given power by statute, in the Philippine Islands, to punish direct contempts only, and has no power to punish as for contempt the disobedience of a subpoena. Narcida v. Bowen (1912) 22 Philippine, 365.

In South Carolina, a justice of the peace has inherent power to punish contempts in his presence (insulting, abusive, and disrespectful language to justice to his face). Lining v. Bentham (1796) 2 S. C. L. (2 Bay) 1; State v. Johnson (1802) 2 S. C. L. (2 Bay) 385, 3 S. C. L. (1 Brev.) 155.

But he has no inherent power, nor is power given to him by statute, to commit for contempts committed out of court (held, that he could not commit constable for contempt in not returning execution and paying money collected thereon). State v. Applegate (1822) 13 S. C. L. (2 M'Cord) 110.

In South Dakota, a justice of the peace, sitting as a committing magistrate, has no power to punish for contempt a witness who refused to obey a subpoena duces tecum, as the statute giving such magistrate power to punish a witness for refusing to testify does not authorize him to punish for failure to obey such a subpoena. Farnham v. Colman (1905) 19 S. D. 342, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1185, 117 Am. St. Rep. 944, 108 N. W. 161, 9 Ann. Cas. 314.

A justice of the peace, in Texas, has statutory power to punish for contempt the refusal of a constable to execute a writ for sequestration issued by the justice. Ex parte Robertson (1889) 27 Tex. App. 628, 11 Am. St. Rep. 207, 11 S. W. 669.

In Vermont, justices of the peace are courts of record, and have inherent power to punish for contempt (insulting language by attorney to justice). Re Cooper (1858) 32 Vt. 253.

o. British courts.

1. England.

(a) High court of justice.

The high court of justice has power to punish for contempt the publication in a newspaper of matter tending to interfere with the fair trial of one charged with an offense, although at the time of the publication the person charged had not yet been committed for trial. Rex v. Parke [1903] 2 K. B. 432, 72 L. J. K. B. N. S. 839, 67 J. P. 421, 52 Week. Rep. 215, 89 L. T. N. S. 439, 19 Times L. R. 627.

(b) King's bench.

The King's bench has power to punish for contempt an interference with the administration of justice, or acts tending to prejudice the fair trial of one accused of an offense. Re Johnson (1887) L. R. 20 Q. B. Div. 68, 52 J. P. 280, 57 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 1, 58 L. T. N. S. 160, 86 Week. Rep. 51 (use by solicitor of grossly abusive expressions and threatening gestures to opposing solicitor, on their way from the judge's chambers to entrance gate of building); Reg. v. Castro (1878) L. R. 9 Q. B. 219, 28 L. T. N. S. 222, 12 Cox, C. C. 371 (making of speeches at public meetings during pendency of criminal case to effect that defendant is not guilty, and that there is a conspiracy to prevent his having a fair trial); Rex v. Clarke [1910] 103 L. T. N. S. 686, 27 Times L. R. 82 (publication in newspaper of facts concerning trial which tend to prejudice fair trial of accused); Rex v. Davies [1906] 1 K. B. 32, 75 L. J. K. B. N. S. 104, 93 L. T. N. S. 772, 54 Week. Rep. 107, 22 Times L. R. 97 (publication of newspaper articles tending to interfere with fair trial of accused, although he may never be tried before King's bench).

(c) Court of assize.

A court of assize, being a superior court, has power to punish for contempt the refusal of a witness to answer questions. Ex parte Fernandez (1861) 10 C. B. N. S. 3, 142 Eng. Reprint, 349, 7 Jur. N. S. 571, 4 L. T. N. S. 324, 9 Week. Rep. 832, 15 Eng. Rul. Cas. 1.

(d) Court of nisi prius.

A court of nisi prius has power to punish as for contempt the indecorum of the defendant in addressing the jury on his trial under an indictment for publication of blasphemous libel, with statements, irrelevant to the issue, concerning the Christian religion and derogatory to the character of judges and barristers. Rex v. Davison (1821) 4 Barn. & Ald. 329, 106 Eng. Reprint, 958, 23 Revised Rep. 295.

(e) Court of general jail delivery.

A court of general jail delivery has power to punish for contempt the publication in a newspaper of the proceedings of a trial, in violation of an order of the court prohibiting the publication of such proceedings pending the trials of several persons charged by the same indictment. Rex v. Clement (1821) 4 Barn. & Ald. 218, 106 Eng. Reprint, 918, 23 Revised Rep. 260, 25 Revised Rep. 710.

(f) County court.

A county court, being an inferior court of record, had no power to punish for a contempt committed out of court, and its power was limited by statute to contempts committed in the face of the court (writing of letter published in newspaper, reflecting on conduct of court not within its power to punish). Reg. v. Lefroy (1873) L. R. 8 Q. B. 134, 42 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 121, 28 L. T. N. S. 132, 21 Week. Rep. 332.

But it was given power by a later statute to enforce obedience to its orders by commitment to prison. Richards v. Cullerne (1881) L. R. 7 Q. B. Div. 623 (disobedience on order of reference by consent, of directions to attend on certain date, and to produce books and papers); Ex parte Martin (1879) L. R. 4 Q. B. Div. 212 (disobedience of injunction); Martin v.

Bannister (1879) L. R. 4 Q. B. Div. 491, 48 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 76, 28 Week. Rep. 143 (disobedience of injunction).

(g) Quarter sessions.

A quarter sessions, being a court of record, has inherent power to punish for contempt an insult to a juror by a barrister. Ex parte Pater (1864) 5 Best & S. 299, 122 Eng. Reprint, 842, 33 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 142, 10 Jur. N. S. 972, 10 L. T. N. S. 376, 12 Week. Rep. 823, 9 Cox, C. C. 544, 15 Eng. Rul. Cas. 141.

(h) Justice of the peace.

A justice of the peace may punish for contempt one who, in his presence, says that he is a rogue and liar. Rex v. Revel (1760) 1 Strange, 420, 93 Eng. Reprint, 609.

And he also has power to commit to prison one who was a material witness upon a charge of felony brought before him, but refuses to appear at the sessions to give evidence, or to enter into a recognizance for his appearance, since such power is inferred from the statute giving the justices authority to bind witnesses by recognizance to appear at the trial to give evidence against the party indicted. Bennet v. Watson (1814) 3 Maule & S. 1, 105 Eng. Reprint, 512, 15 Revised Rep. 373.

But he has no power to punish for contempt the refusal of a witness to give evidence concerning a breach of the public peace, where there is no information upon oath, or any person charged with the offense, so as to render necessary the examination of witnesses. Cropper v. Horton (1826) 8 Dowl. & R. 166.

(i) Leet.

A leet is a court of record, and the steward is a judge thereof, and therefore has power to punish for contempt committed in the face of the court (refusal of one chosen at leet to be constable of a manor, being present in court, to take the oath of office, and his departure in contempt of court). Griesley's Case (1588) 8 Coke, 38a, 77 Eng. Reprint, 530.

2. Ireland.

(a) Court of assize.

A court of assize, sitting under a commission of oyer and terminer for the purpose of a general jail delivery, is a superior court, and has power to punish for contempt the publication in a newspaper of articles reflecting upon the trial of a case in such court. Re M'Alcece (1873) Ir. Rep. 7 C. L. 146.

3. Canada.

(a) Supreme court.

It is assumed in Meriden Britannia Co. v. Walters (1915) 24 Can. Crim. Cas. 864, 34 Ont. L. Rep. 518, 9 Ont. Week. N. 87, 25 D. L. R. 167, that the Ontario supreme court has power to punish contempts, it being stated, on a motion on behalf of a plaintiff in a pending case for an order for the punishment for contempt of a newspaper editor for writing an article commenting on the case, that the disciplinary power of the court to punish for contempt should be sparingly and carefully exercised, and that it should be exercised to punish one publishing an article commenting upon a pending case, only when such article is likely to prejudice the proper conduct of the case.

And in Reg. v. Ellis (1889) 28 N. B. 497, it is assumed that the supreme court of New Brunswick has power to punish for contempt, the case holding that a newspaper publication, charging that a judge of such court was actuated by dishonest and corrupt motives in granting an order, constituted a contempt punishable by the court. Appeal dismissed in Ellis v. Baird (1888) 16 Can. S. C. 147.

(b) Queen's bench.

The court of Queen's bench has power to punish for contempt the writer of a letter published in a newspaper, reflecting on one of the judges of the court, and tending to prejudice the defense in a pending prosecution. Re Houston (1877) 41 U. C. Q. B. 42.

(c) Superior court.

The superior court has inherent power to punish contempts, and therefore has power to punish for contempt the publication of newspaper articles scandalizing the court, though the cases in regard to which they were written are not pending, but have been finally determined. Fournier v. Atty. Gen. (1910) Rap. Jud. Quebec 19 B. R. 431, 17 Can. Crim. Cas. 108.

(d) Division court.

The power of punishing contempts by a fine is given by statute to the judge of a division court (insult by barrister to judge on a motion). Re Recorder & Judge of Division Ct. (1864) 23 U. C. Q. B. 376.

Such court also has power to punish for contempt the disobedience of its judgment ordering a street railway company to furnish a city annual statements. Toronto v. Toronto R. Co. (1917) 12 Ont. Week. N. 111.

(e) County court.

A county court has power to punish for contempt insulting words by a barrister to the court. Ex parte Lees (1874) 24 U. C. C. P. 214.

But a judge of a county court, in removing an assignee for creditors under the authority of 48 Vict. chap. 26, § 6(O), is not exercising the powers of the county court, but an independent statutory authority conferred upon it, and therefore has no power to punish for contempt the refusal of the assignee to comply with an order directing him to turn over to his successor the insolvent's property. Re Pacquette (1886) 11 Ont. Pr. Rep. 463.

(f) Justice of the peace.

A justice of the peace, while sitting in discharge of his duties, examining parties upon a criminal charge, has power to protect himself from insult, and to repress disorderly conduct, by committing for contempt a person who shall violently or indirectly interrupt his proceeding, or conduct himself insultingly towards him (insulting language to justice by spectator at trial). Re Clarke (1849) 7 U. C. Q. B. 223.

And a justice, acting judicially in a proceeding in which he has power to convict, fine, and imprison, is a judge of record, and has power to punish for contempts in the face of the court (insulting expressions by accused to justice). Armstrong v. McCaffrey (1869) 12 N. B. 525.

But a justice of the peace, acting as such under the provisions of the Summary Convictions Act, has not the power summarily to punish contempts in facie curiæ, at any rate without a formal adjudication and a warrant setting out the contempt (action of attorney before a justice on a trial in continually, after being told by the justice not to do so, objecting to improper questions by the justice to his client, held not a contempt, but that if it amounted to a contempt, the justice could punish him therefor only by issuing his warrant). Young v. Saylor (1892) 23 Ont. Rep. 513, affirmed without opinion in (1893) 20 Ont. App. Rep. 645.

(g) Police magistrate.

A police magistrate has power to punish for contempt the refusal of a witness to answer a material question on a preliminary investigation, under a section of the Criminal Code providing that where a witness refuses to answer such questions as are put to him, without offering any just excuse for his refusal, the justice may commit the witness so refusing to jail. Re Ayotte (1905) 15 Manitoba L. R. 156, 9 Can. Crim. Cas. 133.

4. Colonies.

(a) Supreme court of civil justice of British Guiana.

The supreme court of civil justice of British Guiana is a court of record, and as a court of record has power to punish for contempt the publication of an article in a newspaper containing matters scandalously reflecting upon a judge of the court, therein tending to defame and obstruct the administration of justice. McDermott v. Beaumont (1868) L. R. 2 P. C. 341, 38 L. J. C. P. N. S. 1, 20 L. T. N. S. 74, 5 Moore, P. C. C. N. S. 466, 16 Eng. Reprint, 590, 17 Week. Rep. 352.

(b) Recorder's court of Sierra Leone.

The recorder's court of Sierra Leone is a court of record, and hence has power to punish for contempt (insolent and disrespectful conduct by an advocate to court). Rainy v. Sierra Leone (1852) 8 Moore, P. C. C. 47, 14 Eng. Reprint, 19.

III. Officers and boards.

Officers or boards, not being or holding courts in the true sense of that term, do not possess inherent power to punish contempt, and, though frequently power is conferred upon them by statute to punish contempt, they often are required to resort to the courts to secure the punishment of those guilty of contemptuous acts or conduct.

United States. — Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson (1893) 154 U. S. 447, 38 L. ed. 1047, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 545, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1125; Ex parte Perkins (1887) 29 Fed. 900; Re Mason (1890) 43 Fed. 510; Elting v. United States (1892) 27 Ct. Cl. 158; Re Purvine (1899) 37 C. C. A. 446, 96 Fed. 192; Johnson v. Southern Bldg. & L. Asso. (1899) 99 Fed. 646; Re Perkins (1900) 100 Fed. 950; Ripon Knitting Works v. Schreiber (1900) 2 N. B. N. Rep. 899, 101 Fed. 810; United States v. Beavers (1903) 125 Fed. 778; Re Romine (1905) 138 Fed. 837; Bank of Ravenswood v. Johnson (1906) 74 C. C. A. 597, 143 Fed. 463; United States v. Tom Wah (1908) 160 Fed. 207, affirmed without discussion of this point in (1908) 90 C. C. A. 178, 163 Fed. 1088; Re Magen (1910) 179 Fed. 572, reversed on another point in (1911) 108 C. C. A. 531, 186 Fed. 675; Re Haring (1912) 193 Fed. 168, affirmed without discussing this point under the name Re Holden (1913) 121 C. C. A. 435, 203 Fed. 229.

Alaska.—United States v. Pratt (1907) 3 Alaska, 400.

California.—Re Gannon (1886) 69 Cal. 541, 11 Pac. 240.

Colorado.—Wyatt v. People (1892) 17 Colo. 252, 28 Pac. 961.

Connecticut.—Re Clark (1894) 65 Conn. 17, 28 L.R.A. 242, 31 Atl. 522.

Idaho.—Re Niday (1908) 15 Idaho, 559, 98 Pac. 845.

Indiana.—Burt v. Pyle (1883) 89 Ind. 398; Langenberg v. Decker (1892) 131 Ind. 471, 16 L.R.A. 108, 31 N. E. 190.

Iowa.—Brown v. Davidson (1882) 59 Iowa, 461, 13 N. W. 442.

Kansas.—Re Sims (1894) 54 Kan. 1, 25 L.R.A. 110, 45 Am. St. Rep. 261, 37 Pac. 135; Re Huron (1897) 58 Kan. 152, 36 L.R.A. 822, 62 Am. St. Rep. 614, 48 Pac. 574.

Kentucky. — Roberts v. Hackney (1900) 109 Ky. 265, 58 S. W. 810, modified on rehearing without affecting this question in (1900) 109 Ky. 269, 59 S. W. 328.

Missouri.—State ex rel. Haughey v. Ryan (1904) 182 Mo. 349, 81 S. W. 435.

New York.—People ex rel. Phelps v. Fancher (1874) 2 Hun, 226, 4 Thomp. & C. 467.

Pennsylvania. — Llewellyn's Case (1893) 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 126, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 631.

Texas.—Johnson v. State (1908) 54 Tex. Crim. Rep. 113, 111 S. W. 743.

Utah.—Re Harris (1884) 4 Utah, 5, 5 Pac. 129.

a. Mayor.

A mayor of a town or city, while holding a quasi court, does not generally have power to punish contempt, unless conferred upon him by statute. EX PARTE PATTERSON (reported herewith ante, 1541; Roberts v. Hackney (1900) 109 Ky. 265, 58 S. W. 810, modified on rehearing without affecting this question in (1900) 109 Ky. 269, 59 S. W. 328.

The mayor of a town, acting with power and jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, cannot punish for contempt not committed in his presence, or in disobedience of process, unless power to do so is expressly conferred by statute. No statute giving it, he has no power to punish for contempt the publisher of a newspaper article, criticizing and ridiculing him on account of his rulings in a case previously decided by him. EX PARTE PATTERSON (reported herewith) 1541.

The mayor of a city cannot punish contempts, where the Constitution vests the judicial power of the state in certain specified courts, which do not include the mayor's court (refusal to testify). Roberts v. Hackney (1900) 109 Ky. 265, 58 S. W. 810, modified on rehearing without affecting this question in (1900) 109 Ky. 269, 59 S. W. 328.

But, in North Carolina, a mayor's court is given by statute power to punish for contempt the publication of a grossly inaccurate account of the proceedings of the court. Re Deaton (1890) 105 N. C. 59, 11 S. E. 244.

And has inherent, as well as statutory power to punish for contempt the disobedience of a subpoena by a witness. State v. Aiken (1893) 113 N. C. 651, 18 S. E. 690.

b. Notary.

A notary is commonly given power by statute to punish contempts committed in connection with the taking of depositions by him. Coleman v. Roberts (1896) 113 Ala. 323, 36 L.R.A. 84, 59 Am. St. Rep. 111, 21 So. 449; Ex parte McKee (1853) 18 Mo. 599; Ex parte Krieger (1879) 7 Mo. App. 367; Re Nitsche (1883) 14 Mo. App. 213; Dogge v. State (1887) 21 Neb. 272, 31 N. W. 929; De Camp v. Archibald (1893) 50 Ohio St. 618, 40 Am. St. Rep. 692, 35 N. E. 1056; Ex parte Schoepf (1906) 74 Ohio St. 1, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 325, 77 N. E. 276; Re Sims (1879) 4 Ohio L. J. 457; Burnside v. Dewstoe (1886) 9 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 589, 15 Ohio L. J. 197; Ex parte Langford (1886) 15 Ohio L. J. 267; Ex parte Woodworth (1893) 6 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 19, 29 Ohio L. J. 315.

In Alabama, a notary public, exercising the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, has power to punish a bystander or spectator for conduct constituting contempt. Coleman v. Roberts (Ala.) supra.

But a notary public sitting as an examiner, and taking a deposition of a witness in Alaska, is not a court, and has no power to punish a witness who disobeys a subpoena to appear and give testimony, but should report such disobedience to the court wherein the action, suit, or proceeding is pending. United States v. Pratt (1907) 3 Alaska, 400.

So, in Indiana, a notary public in taking a deposition has no power to punish for contempt a witness who refuses to testify, or answer proper questions. Burt v. Pyle (1883) 89 Ind. 398.

In Re Abeles (1874) 12 Kan. 451, however, it was held that a notary public may punish for contempt the refusal of a witness to testify when attending before him, after being duly subpoenaed to testify in a cause by giving his deposition.

And it was held in Re Merkle (1888) 40 Kan. 27, 19 Pac. 401, that a notary public has power to punish for contempt the refusal of a witness to answer certain questions, for no other reason than that he was instructed by counsel not to do so, on his examination before the notary after having been duly subpoenaed to testify in a cause by giving his deposition.

But it is held in Re Huron (1897) 58 Kan. 152, 36 L.R.A. 822, 62 Am. St. Rep. 614, 48 Pac. 574, that a notary public has no power to commit for contempt a witness, who, having been duly subpoenaed before him for that purpose, refuses to be sworn, or to give his deposition, and that a statute purporting to confer such power upon him is invalid. The reason given for this holding is that the notary public is not a judicial officer, nor a court, and that the power to punish for contempt cannot be conferred upon an executive officer. The court said: "It is true that in Re Abeles (Kan.) supra, it was stated that a notary might commit a recusant witness for contempt, but it does not appear that the constitutional phase of the question received much consideration, and the decision is not deemed to be controlling. It has since been accepted without serious dispute, and has been followed in other cases without much discussion. It is, therefore, the view of the court that the question has not before been authoritatively settled."

In Missouri, a notary public taking a deposition has power to punish for contempt a witness refusing to answer proper questions. By statute notaries are given power to take depositions, and the same powers for that purpose are given to them as are conferred on a justice of the peace, and justices of the peace are given power to issue subpoenas to witnesses to appear and testify, and to compel their attendance in the same manner and under like penalties as any court of record, and a further statute provides that a person summoned as a witness and attending, who shall refuse to give evidence which may lawfully be required, may be committed to prison by the court or other person authorized to take his deposition or testimony. Ex parte McKee (1853) 18 Mo. 599; Ex parte Krieger (1879) 7 Mo. App. 367.

In Re Nitsche (1883) 14 Mo. App. 213, it appears that a notary public has power to punish for contempt a witness who refuses to testify when duly summoned to give his deposition, under the statute which provides that every officer required to take depositions or examinations of witnesses in pursuance of the statute, or by virtue of a commission issuing out of any court of record in the state, or any other government, shall have power to issue subpoenas for witnesses, and to compel their attendance in the same manner and under like penalties as any court of record of the state. In this case the notary was held not to have power to punish the refusal of a witness to testify in a case pending in another state, before the notary received the commission from such other state.

But a notary public in taking a deposition has no power to punish for contempt the refusal of a witness to produce books and papers under a subpoena duces tecum, since the power of notaries in taking depositions is strictly statutory, and there is no power given to an officer taking depositions to commit a witness for refusing to produce books. Ex parte Mallinkrodt (1855) 20 Mo. 493.

In Nebraska, a notary public has power to commit for contempt a witness who refuses to give his deposition in a proper case. Dogge v. State (1887) 21 Neb. 272, 31 N. W. 929.

But a notary public has no power to punish as for a contempt one who, while he is taking a deposition, repeatedly indulges in vulgar and profane language in the presence of the notary, since the power of the notary to punish contempts is strictly limited to that given by the statute, which provides that a notary is empowered to issue summonses, and command the presence before him of witnesses, and to punish witnesses for neglect or refusal to obey such summons, or for refusal to testify when present, by commitment to the jail of the county for contempt. Courtney v. Knox (1891) 31 Neb. 652, 48 N. W. 763.

In Ohio, a notary public, taking a deposition, is given power by statute to punish for contempt the refusal of a witness, duly subpoenaed, to appear, or to testify, or to answer proper questions. De Camp v. Archibald (1893) 50 Ohio St. 618, 40 Am. St. Rep. 692, 35 N. E. 1056; Ex parte Schoepf (1906) 74 Ohio St. 1, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 325, 77 N. E. 276; Re Sims (1879) 4 Ohio L. J. 457; Burnside v. Dewstoe (1886) 9 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 589, 15 Ohio L. J. 197; Ex parte Langford (1886) 15 Ohio L. J. 267; Ex parte Woodworth (1893) 6 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 19, 29 Ohio L. J. 315.

It was held in Re Sims (1879) 4 Ohio L. J. 457, that, under the statute then in force, a notary public taking a deposition had no power to punish for contempt the refusal of a witness to obey a subpoena duces tecum.

But it appears from Ex parte Schoepf (1906) 74 Ohio St. 1, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 325, 77 N. E. 276, that a notary public before whom a deposition is being taken is empowered by a later statute to punish as for contempt any person who refuses to obey an order to produce a document.

In Texas, a notary public taking a deposition has no power to punish for contempt the refusal of a witness to answer interrogatories. Johnson v. State (1908) 54 Tex. Crim. Rep. 113, 111 S. W. 743.

c. Referees.

1. In bankruptcy.

It appears from the following cases that a referee in bankruptcy has no power to punish for contempt, but that he is required by § 41 of the Bankruptcy Act to certify the facts to the district court, which will punish the contempt as though it had originally arisen therein. Re Purvine (1899) 37 C. C. A. 446, 96 Fed. 192; Ripon Knitting Works v. Schreiber (1900) 101

Fed. 810; Re Romaine (1905) 138 Fed. 837; Bank of Ravenswood v. Johnson (1906) 74 C. C. A. 597, 143 Fed. 463; Re Magen (1910) 179 Fed. 572, reversed on another point in (1911) 108 C. C. A. 531, 186 Fed. 675; Re Haring (1912) 193 Fed. 168, affirmed without discussing this point under the name Re Holden (1918) 121 C. C. A. 435, 203 Fed. 229.

2. In supplementary proceedings.

A referee appointed to conduct the examination of a judgment debtor concerning his means and ability to pay the judgment has power to punish such debtor for contempt, upon his refusal to answer proper questions, since the referee is a referee appointed in pursuance of "an order of reference," upon whom power to commit for contempt is conferred by statute. State ex rel. Ames v. Barclay (1885) 86 Mo. 55.

But it appears from the case of Re Backus (1904) 91 App. Div. 266, 86 N. Y. Supp. 638, affirmed on opinion below in (1904) 179 N. Y. 571, 72 N. E. 1139, that a referee in proceedings supplementary to execution has no power to punish as for a contempt a judgment debtor who appears before him but refuses to answer questions and to obey directions of the referee, under a statute providing that a person who refuses to obey an oral direction given directly to him by a judge or referee in the course of the special proceeding may be punished by the judge or by the court out of which the execution was issued as for a contempt.

And in North Carolina a referee in proceedings supplementary to execution has no power to punish as for a contempt the refusal of a witness to answer questions, since such examination is not a trial within the meaning of the statute providing that a referee has power to enforce obedience to his rulings on a trial of the issues before him, just as a court would have upon a trial before it. La Fontaine v. Southern Underwriters Assn. (1880) 83 N. C. 132.

3. Other referees.

A referee appointed to report testimony and his opinion thereon, in an incidental issue, has power to punish for contempt the refusal of a witness to answer proper questions, under § 2272 of the New York Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that an order to show cause may be made, or a warrant may be issued, by a referee appointed by the court, where the offense is committed upon the trial of the issue referred to him, or consists of a witness's nonattendance, or refusal to be sworn or to testify before him, and that the order or warrant may, in the discretion of the referee, be made returnable before him, or before the court, and that, where it is made returnable before the referee, he has all the power and authority of the court, with respect to the motion or special proceeding instituted thereby. People ex rel. Baldwin v. Miller (1894) 9 Misc. 1, 29 N. Y. Supp. 305.

In Milton v. Richardson (1897) 21 Misc. 380, 47 N. Y. Supp. 735, the court stated that a referee directed to take and state an account had power to punish as for a contempt a disobedience of his order to file an account.

A referee appointed for the examination of persons claimed by an administrator or executor to be withholding property of the estate from him appears, from the case of Re Husted (1902) 37 Misc. 237, 75 N. Y. Supp. 252, to have power to punish for contempt a witness who refuses to answer proper questions, under the statute providing that a refusal to attend, or be sworn, or to answer a question which the surrogate determines to be proper is punishable in the same manner as a like refusal by a witness subpoenaed to attend a hearing before the surrogate.

In Re Seeley (1858) 6 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 217, note, where the contemptuous act consisted in an assault during the trial before a referee, and the referee reported the matter to the court, it was held that the court had power to punish the contempt committed before the referee, although the offense was one that, by statute, the referee had power to punish.

And on an appeal, in an action by one partner against his copartner for an accounting, from an order made at a special term, denying the plaintiff's motion to punish the defendant for a contempt in refusing to obey the order and direction of the referee to whom the whole issues in the action were referred, which order of the referee required the defendant to make and file an account, the denial of which motion was made upon the ground that the referee should determine whether defendant had been guilty of a contempt or not, since he had the power to punish for alleged contempt under the statute providing that a referee, upon the trial of an issue of fact or an issue of law, exercises the same power as the court to preserve order and punish the violation thereof, and that, upon the trial of an issue of fact, the referee exercises also the same powers of the court to compel the attendance of witnesses by attachment, to punish a witness as for a contempt of court, for non-attendance, or refusal to be sworn, or to testify, it was held in Naylor v. Naylor (1884) 32 Hun (N. Y.) 228, reversing the order denying the motion, that, assuming that the statute under which the proceedings to punish for contempt were instituted conferred upon the referee power for that purpose, it gave concurrent jurisdiction to the court, and that it was the duty of the court to have considered and passed upon the alleged contempt.

A referee, appointed by the court to hear the evidence and determine the matters considered, has power to punish for contempt the refusal of a witness, when directed, to produce books, and the interruption of the proceeding by the attorney for the witness by instructing the witness not to answer questions. Heerdt v. Wetmore (1864) 2 Robt. (N. Y.) 697.

But it was held in Bonesteel v. Lynde (1853) 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 226, affirmed on opinion below in (1853) 8 How. Pr. 352, that a referee to whom an action was referred, to hear and decide the same, had no power to punish as for a contempt the failure of a witness, served with a subpoena duces tecum, to produce books and papers.

d. Commissioner.

1. United States commissioners.

A United States commissioner has no power to punish for contempt. Such power is nowhere expressly conferred on such commissioners. They are not, and do not hold, a court, in the proper sense of that term, but are officers of, and a part of, the court appointing them, and they have to resort to such court for the punishment of contempts against their process or authority. Ex parte Perkins (1887) 29 Fed. 900; Re Mason (1890) 43 Fed. 510; Re Perkins (1900) 100 Fed. 950; United States v. Beavers (1903) 125 Fed. 778; United States v. Tom Wah (1908) 160 Fed. 207, affirmed without discussion of this point in (1908) 90 C. C. A. 178, 163 Fed. 1008.

It was contended in Ex parte Perkins (1887) 29 Fed. 900, and in Re Mason (1890) 43 Fed. 510, that the provision of § 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, Comp. Stat. § 1674, that offenders against the United States may be arrested, imprisoned, or bailed by the officers therein named (among whom are commissioners), agreeably to the usual mode of process against offenders in the state where they are found, confers on commissioners the power to punish for contempt possessed by state officers, but the court said in both cases that it is not essential to the due exercise of the power given by § 1014 that commissioners should have authority to punish for contempt, for they can refer the contumacy of witnesses to the court, as they do in taking depositions, and as masters in chancery and registers in bankruptcy are required to do, and that it was the intention of Congress to assimilate the proceedings before commissioners and other officers mentioned in § 1014, for holding accused persons to answer before the courts of the United States, to the proceedings for similar purposes in the states where such proceedings are had, but that it was a stretch of language to say that the punishment of a witness for contempt by a commissioner was a necessary part of the "usual mode of process against offenders," or essential to the exercise of any power that is expressly conferred on him by the Federal law. Ex parte Perkins (1887) 29 Fed. 900 (refusal to be sworn as a witness).

In Ex parte Doll (1870) 7 Phila. 595, Fed. Cas. No. 3,968, discharging the relator in habeas corpus proceedings because of the irregularity of the proceedings before the commissioner appointed by the circuit court of the United States, who ordered the relator's commitment, where it appeared that an assessor summoned the relator to appear and bring certain books and papers and, on the disregard of such summons, made complaint to the commissioner, who ordered the relator to appear on a certain day or be committed for contempt, and on the relator's failure to appear committed him, the district court stated that he very much doubted the power of Congress to invest a commissioner with the authority, in a proceeding regularly instituted before him, summarily to commit a citizen for an alleged contempt, and that this was an exercise of the judicial power of the United States, which, under the Constitution, could not be intrusted to an officer appointed and holding his office in the manner in which the commissioners were appointed and held their offices.

A master commissioner, appointed by the district court of the United States to take an account of the assets of an insolvent corporation, has no power to determine that a party to the cause, or other person, is in contempt of the order of the court whose decree the master is executing, and on that ground refuse to allow such party, or person, to appear before him by counsel; but such power is conferred on the court alone by § 725 of United States Revised Statutes, Comp. Stat. § 1245. Johnson v. Southern Bldg. & L. Asso. (1899) 99 Fed. 646.

It is stated in the case of Elting v. United States (1892) 27 Ct. Cl. (Fed.) 158, that a commissioner of the court of claims has no power to punish for contempt.

2. Other commissioners.

It appears from the case of Re Niday (1908) 15 Idaho, 559, 98 Pac.

845, that a commissioner taking a deposition has no power to punish for contempt a witness who refuses to attend or testify, since the statute provides that in such case the commissioner shall report such fact to the probate or district court of the county, and that such court shall order the witness to attend and testify, and on his failure to do so such witness shall be dealt with as for a contempt.

A commissioner appointed by a court of another state to examine witnesses in Ohio has no power to punish for contempt a witness who, appearing, refuses to be sworn. Re Goodman (1900) 1 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 360.

A commissioner or examiner to take a deposition is given by statute power to punish for contempt the disobedience of a subpoena by a witness. Com. v. Newton (1857) 1 Grant, Cas. (Pa.) 453.

And a city alderman, appointed commissioner to take a deposition by a court of record, is given by statute power to punish for contempt the refusal of a witness to be sworn. Com. ex rel. Rathvon v. Roberts (1841) 2 Clark (Pa.) 340.

In Peabody v. Harmon (1854) 3 Gray (Mass.) 113, the court said, in effect, that a commissioner of insolvency had no power to punish for contempt a creditor who refused to answer questions concerning his claim against the estate of an insolvent debtor.

A commissioner in chancery has no power to punish for contempt a witness who refuses to testify before him. The commissioners of chancery appointed by the chancellor derive their powers solely from the statute under which they are appointed; they are officers of the court for a particular purpose, and, their powers being prescribed by the statute under which they are appointed, they cannot transcend those powers. Marsh v. Williams (1834) 1 How. (Miss.) 132.

In Bradley Fertilizer Co. v. Taylor (1893) 112 N. C. 141, 17 S. E. 69, where a commissioner appointed by the court for the examination of a party before trial, on the refusal of the witness to answer proper questions, certified such matter to the court, it was held that, if the power to punish for contempt a witness refusing to answer was given by the statute to the commissioner, it was not given exclusively to him, but that he might invoke the aid of the judge appointing him. The statute provided that commissioners appointed by the court to take depositions, arbitrators, referees, and all persons acting under commission issuing from any court of record, are hereby empowered to issue subpoenas, and to administer oaths to witnesses to the end that they may give their testimony, and any witness appearing before any of the said persons, and refusing to give his testimony on oath upon matters concerning which it may be lawfully required of him, shall be committed, by warrant of the person before whom he shall so refuse, to the county jail until he may be willing to give his evidence.

A commissioner of the supreme court of a territory has no power to punish for contempt the publication and circulation of newspaper articles, criticizing the commissioner's court. People ex rel. Pierce v. Carrington (1888) 5 Utah, 531, 17 Pac. 735.

A court commissioner of Wisconsin has no power to punish for contempt, except in those cases where such power is expressly conferred by statute. Haight v. Lucia (1874) 36 Wis. 355.

He was not originally authorized by statute to take jurisdiction of supplementary proceedings, or to make an order for the payment of money and the appointment of a receiver, or to punish for a contempt a person who disobeyed those orders. Re Remington (1858) 7 Wis. 643.

But it is stated in Haight v. Lucia (1874) 36 Wis. 355, that subsequently the legislature conferred upon court commissioners the powers there denied them.

A court commissioner, upon the examination of a party before trial, has no power to punish for contempt his refusal to answer questions, since such power is not specially conferred by statute. Stuart v. Allen (1878) 45 Wis. 158.

He has no power, it not being given by statute, to punish for contempt the refusal of a witness to answer questions propounded to him, when giving his deposition as a witness before the commissioner in an action pending in court. State ex rel. Lanning v. Lonsdale (1879) 48 Wis. 348, 4 N. W. 390.

And it is held in Haight v. Lucia (Wis.) supra, that he has no power to punish the violation of an injunction granted by him.

It appears from Nieuwankamp v. Ullman (1879) 47 Wis. 168, 2 N. W. 131, that, under the statute increasing his powers in supplementary proceedings, a court commissioner has power to punish for contempt the violation of an injunction granted by him in such proceedings, the case holding that his jurisdiction was not exclusive of that of the circuit court, which had power, on report of the proceedings to it, to punish for such contempt.

While a district court commissioner is given by statute power to punish for contempts committed during hearings before him, the statute provides that he has power to punish constructive or indirect contempts only where the district judge at chambers is invested by law with such power; and therefore he has no power to punish for contempt an interference with the discharge of the duties of a water distributor appointed by him. Mau v. Stoner (1904) 12 Wyo. 478, 76 Pac. 584.

Commissioners of oyer and terminer have power to punish contempts offered to them in open court. Dawe v. Broom (1823) Newfoundl. Sel. Cas. 438.

e. Grand jury.

A grand jury has no power to punish contempts, as it is merely an adjunct or appendage to the court. The usual mode of procedure, where witnesses refuse to testify, or legitimate action of the body is obstructed, is, unless otherwise provided by statute, to report the matter to the court, which will punish the contempt. Re Gannon (1886) 69 Cal. 541, 11 Pac. 240; Wyatt v. People (1892) 17 Colo.

252, 28 Pac. 961; Re Clark (1894) 65 Conn. 17, 28 L.R.A. 242, 31 Atl. 522; People ex rel. Phelps v. Fancher (1874) 2 Hun (N. Y.) 226, 4 Thomp. & C. 467; Re Harris (1884) 4 Utah, 5, 5 Pac. 129.

f. Boards.

A board of police commissioners, created under an act giving them, among other powers, power to discharge or suspend officers and summon witnesses, is, when sitting for the trial of charges preferred against a police officer, a court within the meaning of a statutory provision empowering every court to punish for contempt committed in its immediate presence, or so near thereto as to interrupt, disturb, or hinder its proceedings, to compel obedience to its judgments, orders, and process, and to control the conduct of its officers and all other persons connected with a judicial proceeding before it. Plunkett v. Hamilton (1911) 136 Ga. 72, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 583, 70 S. E. 781, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1259.

A board of county commissioners has power to punish contempts consisting of the refusal to obey orders lawfully made by them, under a statutory provision that they shall have power to preserve order when sitting as a court, to punish contempts, and to enforce obedience to all orders made by them by attachment, or other compulsory process (refusal of attorney to return to county auditor report of reviewers to the board of county commissioners). Garrigus v. State (1883) 93 Ind. 239.

A county board of equalization has power to commit for contempt a witness who, after being duly subpoenaed, refuses to testify or to produce the books and papers called for by the subpoena, in relation to the property of a taxpayer. In this case, where it was conceded that there was no statute conferring upon the board, in express terms, the power to commit for contempt, it was held that such power was conferred upon the board by implication, for the following reasons: First, because of statutory provisions imposing upon the board the duty to hear and investigate the truthfulness of all matters brought before it regarding the assessment and equalization of taxes, and empowering it to send for books and papers after subpoenaing witnesses; second, because of the great importance of proper assessment of property and equalization of values for the purpose of taxation, to both the state and her citizens; and, third, because of the rule of statutory construction that, when a power is given by statute, everything necessary to make it effectual or requisite to attain the end is necessarily implied. Re Sandford (1911) 236 Mo. 665, 139 S. W. 376.

A canal investigating commission, given by statute authority to issue subpoenas, compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of books and papers before it, and, on failure of any witness to obey its mandates, power to issue attachments, with the like penalties as courts of record, has power to punish for contempt a witness, duly subpoenaed to appear before such commission and to produce certain books, who appears and brings such books, but refuses to produce them, without giving any reason or making any excuse. People v. Learned (1875) 5 Hun (N. Y.) 626.

But, in Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson (1893) 154 U. S. 447, 38 L. ed. 1047, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 545, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1125, upholding a statute authorizing the Commission to invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books and papers, it is stated that the question of punishing the defendants for contempt could not arise before the Commission, for in a judicial sense there is no such thing as contempt of a subordinate administrative body, that no question of contempt could arise until the issue of law in the circuit court was determined adversely to the defendants, and they refused to obey, not the order of the Commission, but the final order of the court.

The power to punish contempts is essentially a judicial one, and an attempt to confer it on a state board of tax commissioners, which has power to take testimony, is in violation of a constitutional provision that no person charged with official duties under either the legislative, executive, or judicial department of the government shall exercise any of the functions of another department, since such board belongs to the executive or administrative department. Langenberg v. Decker (1892) 131 Ind. 471, 16 L.R.A. 108, 31 N. E. 190.

A visiting committee of insane asylums, provided for by a section of the Code which empowers them to send for persons and papers, and to examine witnesses on oath, to ascertain whether any of the inmates are improperly detained in the asylums, or unjustly placed there, and whether the inmates are humanely treated, with full power to correct any abuses found to exist, have no power to punish for contempt a refusal to be sworn or to testify, where there is no statute specifically granting such power, and while such committee exercises quasi judicial powers, they are not a court, nor judicial officers acting in the discharge of an official duty, within the meaning of a section of the Code conferring general authority upon the courts of the state and upon any judicial officer acting in the discharge of an official duty, to punish for contempts. Brown v. Davidson (1882) 59 Iowa, 461, 13 N. W. 442.

The chairman of a board of trustees of a town has no power to punish for contempt the refusal to testify, of one summoned before him for examination, as to names of persons selling intoxicating liquors in the town contrary to law, since the Constitution vests the judicial power of the state in certain specified courts, and the statute vesting the power to punish for contempt in the chairman of the board of trustees of a town, is in conflict with this constitutional provision, and therefore void. Roberts v. Hackney (1900) 109 Ky. 265, 58 S. W. 810, modified on rehearing without affecting this question in (1900) 109 Ky. 269, 59 S. W. 328.

A board of mediation and arbitration, which is not a court, nor possessed of judicial powers, cannot be clothed by the general assembly with the power to punish contempts, since all the judicial power in the state is, by the Constitution, vested in certain courts therein named, and the general assembly has no authority to create any other tribunal and vest it with judicial power (refusal of witness, duly subpoenaed, to attend and testify before the board). State ex rel. Haughey v. Ryan (1904) 182 Mo. 349, 81 S. W. 435.

g. Miscellaneous.

It appears from Kuhlman v. Superior Ct. (1898) 122 Cal. 636, 55 Pac. 589, that, by statute, power is conferred on a coroner to punish for contempt a witness who refuses to testify at an inquest held by him.

A statute making it the duty of a county attorney, when notified of any violation of the prohibitory law, to issue his subpoena commanding witnesses to appear before him, to swear such witnesses, examine them, reduce their testimony to writing, and cause it to be subscribed by such witnesses, and expressly authorizing him to punish for contempt any witnesses disobeying his process, or refusing to answer questions, is unconstitutional and void, so far as it attempts to confer on county attorneys the power to commit witnesses for contempt on account of a refusal to be sworn or to testify, since the legislature has no power to confer on an executive officer, charged with the duty of searching out violations of the law, inquiring into the facts, and instituting and carrying on prosecutions for violations of the criminal laws of the state, the power at the same time, and as ancillary to the performance of his duties as a prosecuting officer, to commit persons to jail as for a contempt of his authority. Re Sims (1894) 54 Kan. 1, 25 L.R.A. 110, 45 Am. St. Rep. 261, 37 Pac. 135.

Borough auditors have no power to punish for contempt a witness who refuses to answer a question in relation to the misconduct of certain borough officers. Llewellyn's Case (1898) 13 Pa. Co. Ct. 126, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 631.
G. V. I.

STATE OF MINNESOTA EX REL. ROBERT PEERS, Appt.,
v.
WILLIAM FITZGERALD, Court Officer of the City of Virginia, Respt.

Minnesota Supreme Court—November 12, 1915.

(131 Minn. 116, 154 N. W. 750.)

Municipal corporation — power to punish for contempt.

1. The constitutional and legislative provisions relative to home rule charters of villages and cities do not authorize a city to grant its city council the right to punish a witness called before it for contempt. Such power is not to be inferred, but must be clearly granted either by the Constitution or by statute.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1586.]

Contempt — failure to produce immaterial evidence.

2. Even had the city possessed such power, it clearly appears in this case that the invoices called for, and which the witness refused to produce, were not pertinent to a legitimate subject of investigation before the city council.

Headnotes by HOLT, J.

APPEAL by relator from an order of the District Court for St. Louis County (Hughes, J.) discharging a writ of habeas corpus to secure his release from custody to which he had been committed for contempt, for refusing to produce and submit to the city council for inspection his invoices, showing the purchase of products used in the meat business carried on by him. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. George F. Shea, for appellant:

Neither house of the state legislature may punish anyone not a member, for contempt, for his refusal to give testimony or produce documents in any inquiry in aid of legislation.

Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S. 168, 26 L. ed. 377; Re McDonald, 66 How. Pr. 487; People ex rel. Sabold v. Webb, 23 N. Y. S. R. 324, 5 N. Y. Supp. 855.

The state legislature cannot delegate or grant to any city council, or other person or body, the power to punish for contempt.

Ibid.

The city council of Virginia has no inherent or statutory power to punish for contempt.

Re McDonald, 66 How. Pr. 487.

Messrs. Montague & Montague, for respondent:

Legislatures have the power to punish witnesses for contempt for failure to testify in an investigation properly undertaken for the aid of intended legislation.

Anderson v. Dunn, 6 Wheat. 204, 5 L. ed. 242; People ex rel. McDonald v. Keeler, 99 N. Y. 475, 52 Am. Rep. 53, 2 N. E. 615; Ex parte Lawrence, 116 Cal. 298, 48 Pac. 124; State v. Matthews, 37 N. H. 453; Lowe v. Summers, 69 Mo. App. 649; Ex parte Nugent, Brunner, Col. Cas. 296, Fed. Cas. No. 10,375; Ex parte McCarthy, 29 Cal. 405; Re Davis, 58 Kan. 379, 49 Pac. 163; Ex parte Dalton, 44 Ohio St. 150, 58 Am. Rep. 801, 5 N. E. 138; Burnham v. Morrissey, 14 Gray, 225, 74 Am. Dec. 676; Ex parte Parker, 74 S. C. 470, 114 Am. St. Rep. 1011, 55 S. E. 124, 7 Ann. Cas. 874; Re Falvey, 7 Wis. 630; Ex parte Lawrence, 116 Cal. 298, 48 Pac. 124.

But even assuming the dicta of Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S. 168, 26 L. ed. 377, to be correct, the power of state legislatures to punish for contempt is based on different grounds than the power of Congress.

People ex rel. McDonald v. Keeler, 99 N. Y. 475, 52 Am. Rep. 53, 2 N. E. 620.

The power to punish for contempt may be conferred on a city charter.

Ibid.; Briggs v. Mackellar, 2 Abb. Pr. 30; Re Dunn, 9 Mo. App. 255.

Holt, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Relator was, by the city council of the city of Virginia, found guilty of contempt for refusing to produce and submit to the council for inspection his invoices, showing the purchase of products used in the meat business carried on by him in the city. Failing to pay the fine imposed, he was placed in respondent's custody. He sought liberty through a writ of habeas corpus. From the order discharging the writ, and remanding him, he appeals.

The city of Virginia is under a home rule charter which contains these provisions:

"Section 87. . . . The city council, and any of its committees authorized by it so to do, shall have the power to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, papers and other evidence at any of its meetings, or before such committee, and for that purpose may issue subpoenas or attachments in any case of inquiry or investigation, to be signed by its president, or the chairman of such committee as the case may be, which shall be served and executed by any officer or person authorized by law to serve subpoenas and other processes.

"Section 88. . . . If any witness shall refuse to testify to the facts within his knowledge, or to produce any books or papers in his possession, or under his control, the city council shall have the power to fine or commit him for contempt."

The council is empowered to license and regulate butcher shops and slaughterhouses, to provide for inspection and prevent the offering for sale of unwholesome meats and fish, and to establish and regulate the location of markets and market houses. A resolution was duly adopted by the city council to investigate matters pertaining to the purchase, sale, and handling of meats, fowl, and fish, with a view to determine whether conditions were such as to require the city to establish a municipal slaughterhouse, whether meat dealers should be licensed, whether any pool or illegal combination had been formed to control the prices on meats and fish in the city, who were in such combination, if it existed, and what effect it had on prices, and the qualities of meats, and how the prices on these products compared with the prices in other cities. Under subpoena duces tecum relator came before the council, pursuant to the resolution, was sworn, and gave testimony. However, while announcing a willingness to answer any proper question, he refused to produce his invoices showing the wholesale prices paid by his firm for meats during a certain month, being the documents called for by the subpoena. For this refusal he was adjudged guilty of contempt by the council, and a fine of $20 imposed.

The relator claims that municipal corporations have not been granted the power to incorporate such a provision, as the above set out, in a home rule charter. It is conceded that the legislature has the power to require witnesses to attend and give pertinent testimony upon a subject legitimately before that body for investigation, and in case of contumacy to punish as for contempt. Anderson v. Dunn, 6 Wheat. 204, 5 L. ed. 242; Ex parte Lawrence, 116 Cal. 298, 48 Pac. 124; People ex rel. McDonald v. Keeler, 99 N. Y. 463, 52 Am. Rep. 49, 2 N. E. 615; Re Davis, 58 Kan. 379, 49 Pac. 160; Ex parte Dalton, 44 Ohio St. 142, 58 Am. Rep. 800, 5 N. E. 136; Ex parte Parker, 74 S. C. 466, 114 Am. St. Rep. 1011, 55 S. E. 122, 7 Ann. Cas. 874. But the courts, upon habeas corpus or other proper proceeding, will examine into the matter and determine whether the conviction was lawful. People ex rel. McDonald v. Keeler, 99 N. Y. 463, 52 Am. St. Rep. 49, 2 N. E.

615; Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S. 168, 26 L. ed. 377.

It is argued by the respondent that, since the legislature possesses this power, a city has the right, under the Constitution, to adopt a home rule charter giving its city council the same power, its possession being as necessary to efficient performance of the functions of its legislative body as to that of the state's; and, further, it is claimed that the legislature, pursuant to § 36, art. 4, of the Constitution, by § 1345, Gen. Stat. 1913, has given to cities and villages full power to adopt "any scheme of municipal government not inconsistent with the Constitution, and may provide for the establishment and administration of all departments of a city government, and for the regulation of all local municipal functions, as fully as the legislature might have done before the adoption" of the constitutional amendment forbidding special legislation, and that this confers the power to coerce obedience by the use of contempt proceedings the same as is employed by courts of record.

Under the common law in England, a municipal corporation had no authority to punish for contempts, unless Parliament had expressly granted the same. The well-considered opinion in Whitcomb's Case, 120 Mass. 118, 21 Am. Rep. 502, holds that the Bill of Rights in the Constitution of that commonwealth, essentially the same as ours, precludes the legislature from granting a city council the power to punish as for contempt. It is therein said: "The legislature may also provide for the punishment, upon indictment and trial in the courts of justice, of any person who, being duly summoned, refuses to appear and testify before any board or tribunal upon a matter which it is authorized by law to investigate or decide. But the legislature cannot delegate to or confer upon municipal boards or officers that are not courts of justice, and whose proceedings are not an exercise of judicial power, the authority to imprison and punish, without right of appeal or trial by jury."

On the other hand, the courts in Missouri have held that the power to punish a contumacious witness as for contempt is a necessary incident to the authority to call witnesses, and is lodged with every legislative body, administrative board, or officer clothed directly or indirectly with power to investigate or decide matters upon testimony. Re Dunn, 9 Mo. App. 255; Re Sanford, 236 Mo. 665, 139 S. W. 376.

Without determining which of these opposing views ought to be adopted, we may concede, for the purpose of this case, that by law administrative boards and officers, including the governing board or council of municipal corporations, may be invested with authority to punish a contumacious witness who refuses to respond to proper inquiries concerning a subject which such board, council, or officer is required to act upon. But we do hold, in view of our constitutional guaranties and the trend of legislation, that such power is not to be implied or inferred. That the citizen shall not be deprived of his liberty without due process of law has always been a cherished idea of framers of constitutions and laws in this country. The legislature of this state has carefully defined what constitutes contempt of its own authority and limited the punishment it may inflict (Gen. Stat. 1913, §§ 38 and 39), and also undertaken to define what shall constitute contempt of court, prescribe the procedure to be followed by the courts in adjudications upon contempts, and limit the punishment. When the legislature has been so careful by explicit statutory provisions to guard the liberties and rights of the citizen as against its own power and that of the courts in matters relating to contempt, we cannot conclude that villages and cities were intended to have free hand to vest the great coercive power to punish for contempt, so readily converted into an instrument of oppression, in its councils, or administrative boards, or officers, ordinarily composed of or being persons of limited legal knowledge and experience.

We also find statutes wherein the legislature has conferred the power to call witnesses and punish for contumacy, thus showing that this right to punish is not left to inference. See § 5136, Gen. Stat. 1913, in case of state fire marshal. It would almost seem that the legislature here had some doubt concerning the power, for in the next section it is provided that the marshal, instead of himself meting out punishment upon a witness, may apply to the court to have it done. And in § 3236, Gen. Stat. 1913, the public examiner is given the powers possessed by the courts in the matter of securing testimony, thus conferring judicial authority to be exercised in the manner prescribed for courts. By §§ 2293, 4020, 4184, Gen. Stat. 1913, the attorney general, the board of control, and the Railroad and Warehouse Commission are given express authority to subpoena and examine witnesses; nevertheless contumacy may not be passed upon or punished by the attorney general or the two chief administrative boards of the state, but must be referred to the courts. And we take it that the enforcement of the authority to obtain testimony conferred by such sections as 3942, 3907, 3911, and 9288, Gen. Stat. 1913, must go to the district court, if there be contumacy.

We are also of the opinion that no necessity exists for an inference of a power in municipal corporations to determine and punish as for contempt the refusal of a person to testify or produce private documents in investigations relating to municipal affairs. Where any body, board, or officer of a village or city has the right to hear testimony, the right may be enforced under §§ 8370 and 8373, Gen. Stat. 1918. Minneapolis v. Wilkin, 80 Minn. 140, 14 N. W. 581; Wolf v. State Medical Examiners, 109 Minn. 360, 123 N. W. 1074. Grant that a city council may have express or implied authority to examine witnesses and inspect documents, the enforcement thereof through the aid of courts under the last-cited sections will safeguard the rights of the citizen against unlawful inquisitions, and at the same time give the municipality all legitimate aid in the performance of its proper governmental and administrative functions. Authority to punish for contempt should not be left to inference, but must be expressly granted. Noyes v. Byxbee, 45 Conn. 382; Brown v. Davidson, 59 Iowa, 461, 13 N. W. 442; Re Davis, 58 Kan. 379, 49 Pac. 160.

But, even could the correctness of the conclusion we have reached be questioned, it is entirely clear that the city council had no lawful right to demand that relator produce the invoices called for. It is not the function of city councils to procure evidence for the attorney general for prosecution

Contempt—failure to produce immaterial
evidence.

of illegal combinations. Grant that municipal corporations have the power to license butchers, employ inspectors to prevent the sale of unwholesome meats, and regulate market places, we fail to see the connection between any of these matters and the price at which relator in the past had bought his wares. A city or village surely has no right to fix prices, or limit the profits of merchants engaged in lawful business. If the city of Virginia is to embark in the meat business, it must do so as any private concern in like business. No private person, desirous of engaging in the meat or slaughter business, can by lawful means compel those already in the business to disclose the price at which their merchandise is bought or sold. Under such decisions as People ex rel. McDonald v. Keeler and Kilbourn v. Thompson, supra, and Ex parte Conrades, 185 Mo. 411, 85 S. W. 160, the invoices of relator were not pertinent to any investigation which the city council could legitimately pursue.

Relator is unlawfully deprived of his liberty.

Order reversed.

ANNOTATION.

Power of municipal councils to punish for contempt.

Municipal councils have no inherent power to punish for contempts, and their power to punish contempts must be derived from either constitutional or statutory provisions. There is apparently no doubt but that such power can be conferred upon them by the Constitution, but there appears to be a conflict in the cases as to whether the legislature can give them such power. The weight of authority, however, seems to sustain the grant of such power by statute.

It is stated in Whitcomb's Case (1876) 120 Mass. 118, 21 Am. Rep. 502, that it is universally admitted that by the law of England a town or city council had no power, without express act of Parliament, to commit for contempt of its authority.

It was held in Whitcomb's Case, that the common council of the city of Boston had no power to commit and punish for contempt one who refused to answer a certain question before a special committee of the council, appointed with full power to investigate and report upon a specified subject; and that a statute undertaking to confer the power to punish for contempt upon either branch of a city council, or upon the selectmen of a town, is inoperative and void, because it is a violation of the Constitution of the commonwealth, and contrary to the law of the land. The provision held to be violated was the twelfth article of the Declaration of Rights prefixed to the Constitution, which states that no subject shall be arrested, imprisoned, despoiled, or deprived of his property, immunities, or privileges, put out of the protection of the law, exiled, or deprived of his life, liberty, or estate, but by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land.

The court, in Whitcomb's Case, said:

"The legislature may also provide for the punishment, upon indictment and trial in the courts of justice, of any person who, being duly summoned, refuses to appear and testify before any board or tribunal upon a matter which it is authorized by law to investigate or decide. But the legislature cannot delegate to or confer upon municipal boards or officers that are not courts of justice, and whose proceedings are not an exercise of judicial power, the authority to imprison and punish, without right of appeal or trial by jury." "The city council is not a legislature. It has no power to make laws, but merely to pass ordinances upon such local matters as the legislature may commit to its charge, and subject to the paramount control of the legislature. Neither branch of the city council is a court, or, in accurate use of language, vested with any judicial functions whatever. Nor are its members chosen with any view to their fitness for the exercise of such functions. To allow such a body to punish summarily by imprisonment the refusal to answer any inquiry which the whole body, or one of its committees, may choose to make, would be a most dangerous invasion of the rights and liberties of the citizen."

In Re Yard (1891) 48 Phila. Leg. Int. (Pa.) 288, affirmed in (1892) 148 Pa. 509, 24 Atl. 63, upholding a statute giving a certain court power to compel witnesses to be sworn and testify before an investigating committee of a city council, where it appeared that the clerk of the common council of Philadelphia, pursuant to the statute, reported to the court the refusal of a witness to testify before a subcommittee of the finance committee of the council, neither the council nor its committee asserting that they had the power to punish such witness for contempt, it was stated that the exercise of a power to punish for disobedience belongs to the judicial department of the government, and that unless there is authority given by the Constitution to some other department or tribunal to punish for this cause, such punishment cannot be imposed.

On a similar report by the clerk of the councils of the city of Philadelphia, under the same statute, it was held in Simon's Case (1895) 16 Pa. Co. Ct. 353, that a witness before an investigating committee of such councils could not be compelled by process for contempt to answer an irrelevant question. It was stated in this case that before the passage of such statute, investigations by committees of councils were futile, because witnesses could not be compelled to answer; and that to remedy this evil the act was passed.

But it was held in Re Dunn (1880) 9 Mo. App. 255, that the house of delegates of the municipal assembly of St. Louis had power to punish for contempt a witness who appeared before a committee of such house, but refused to produce a book called for by a subpoena duces tecum, under a charter providing that the assembly or either house shall have power to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers relating to any subject under consideration, and under an ordinance passed in pursuance of such charter provision, authorizing either house of the municipal assembly to punish for contempt any person who, when duly subpoenaed, fails to appear before a committee or refuses or fails to answer any question propounded to him by the committee, or fails to produce any book or paper required by them. It was further held in this case that such charter provision was, as required by the Constitution, in harmony with the Constitution and laws of the state, and that it did no violence either to the declared law, or to the policy or manifest governmental purposes of the state, as shown in her Constitution and statutory amendments, and that such charter and ordinance provisions did not violate the constitutional guaranties against unreasonable searches and seizures, against depriving any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, and in favor of a trial by jury, since such guaranties have no application to commitment for contempt by any tribunal lawfully acting in its quasi judicial capacity.

It is stated in the Dunn Case that the legislature cannot possibly perform its whole duty to the public without sometimes doing acts of a judicial nature, that it must investigate and decide upon facts, that it cannot do this with effect without the power to examine witnesses and to compel their attendance, and that in all such matters a municipal legislature differs in nothing from any other, except in so far as its powers are defined by the charter of its creation.

When municipal councils are invested by the legislature with power to punish for contempt, such power must be expressly granted, and should not be left to inference. The reported case (STATE EX REL. PEERS v. FITZGERALD, ante, 1582); Re Palmeter (1897) 58 Kan. 809, 51 Pac. 288.

Statutes conferring such power are strictly construed, and any fair reasonable doubt as to the existence of such power is resolved against the council. Re Cole (1896) 16 Misc. 134, 38 N. Y. Supp. 955.

And the power cannot be extended beyond the limit imposed by the law. People ex rel. Webster v. Van Tassell (1892) 64 Hun, 444, 19 N. Y. Supp. 643, affirmed on opinion below in (1892) 135 N. Y. 638, 32 N. E. 646.

It is stated in Re Sanford (1911) 236 Mo. 665, 139 S. W. 376, that in many of the states the power to punish for contempt has been conferred upon city councils.

It was held in Re Holman (1917) 197 Mo. App. 70, 191 S. W. 1109, that the board of aldermen of St. Louis had power to issue a warrant for the commitment of a witness who refused to testify before a committee of the board, after being duly subpoenaed to attend an investigation to secure information for legislation within their jurisdiction. The city charter contained the provision that the board of aldermen should have power, and may delegate it to any committee, to subpoena witnesses and order the production of books and papers relating to any subject within its jurisdiction, and to arrest and punish by fine or imprisonment, or both, any person refusing to obey such subpoena or order. The opinion in this case was adopted by the supreme court on a petition in the latter court for a writ of habeas corpus. (1917) 270 Mo. 696, 195 S. W. 711.

And it was held in Re Conrades (1904) 112 Mo. App. 21, 85 S. W. 150, that the house of delegates, a branch of the municipal assembly of the city of St. Louis, had power to punish for contempt a witness who refused to produce books required by a subpoena duces tecum before a committee of such house, appointed in pursuance of resolutions of such house to investigate tax dodging, which directed the committee to investigate the books, records, and accounts in the several city departments wherein returns were made of taxes, and empowered them to subpoena witnesses and to send for persons and papers. The city charter provided that the assembly, or either house, should have power to compel the attendance of witnesses, and the production of papers relating to any subject under consideration in which the interests of the city were involved, and an ordinance, enacted by virtue of such provision, provided that whenever either of the houses of the municipal assembly shall by resolution authorize a committee to make an investigation of any question or matter on which such house may lawfully take action, and shall empower such committee to send for persons and papers, the committee shall thereupon have authority to issue subpoenas and subpoenas duces tecum, and that such house shall, upon the report by the committee of the refusal of a witness to testify or to produce books or papers, issue a warrant for the arrest of the accused witness, and shall have him before the house to answer for contempt. One of the judges dissented, mainly upon the ground that the resolution did not authorize the committee to compel the production of the books in question, and asked that the cause be certified to the supreme court. The supreme court in (1904) 185 Mo. 411, 85 S. W. 160, without passing upon the question whether or not the house of delegates had the power to punish for contempt, held that the action of the committee in requiring the production of the books in question was beyond the scope of its authority under the resolution of its creation, and ordered the witness discharged from custody.

A town council, made by its charter a court for the trial of violations of its ordinances, has power to punish for contempt committed in its presence, under provisions of the Code declaring that every court has power to preserve and enforce order in its immediate presence, and as near thereto as is necessary to prevent interruption, disturbance, or hindrance to its proceedings; and that the judicial power of the state is vested in such tribunals as are created by the Constitution and such other inferior courts as are or may be established by law, and such persons as are or may be specially invested with powers of a judicial nature. Swafford v. Ber-rong (1889) 84 Ga. 65, 10 S. E. 593.

But it is held in the reported case (STATE EX REL. PEERS v. FITZGERALD, ante, 1582) that a statute, passed pursuant to a provision of the Constitution relative to home rule charters of villages and cities, giving full power to adopt any scheme of municipal government not inconsistent with the Constitution, and to provide for the establishment and administration of all departments of a city government, and for the regulation of all local municipal functions, does not authorize a city to grant its city council power to punish a witness called before it for contempt.

So, a general welfare clause, which authorizes a city council to enact such ordinances as may be deemed expedient for maintaining the peace, good government, and welfare of the city and its trade and commerce, does not authorize the city council to confer power upon the police judge to adjudge a person guilty of contempt and to imprison him therefor. Re Palmer (1897) 58 Kan. 809, 51 Pac. 288. The court said: "Where the power to imprison for contempt rests upon statute, as in this case, it is generally held that it is not to be inferred, but must be clearly expressed. There is certainly room to doubt whether the legislature can delegate to a city council the power to create a tribunal and vest it with judicial power of this character, but however that may be, it is clear to us that no such power is delegated by the general welfare clause above referred to."

A city charter provision, authorizing the imprisonment of a witness before the common council, who refuses to be sworn or to answer proper questions, does not authorize the punishment of a witness for contempt who refuses to produce books and papers before an investigating committee of the council. People ex rel. Webster v. Van Tassell (1892) 17 N. Y. Supp. 938, affirmed in (1892) 64 Hun, 444, 19 N. Y. Supp. 643, which is affirmed on the opinion below in (1892) 135 N. Y. 638, 32 N. E. 646.

A committee of inquiry and investigation, appointed by a municipal corporation of Quebec, in issuing a rule declaring in contempt of such committee one who failed to appear and give testimony, was held to have exceeded its powers, and to have assumed to act as a court, and to have exercised judicial functions. Lussier v. Maisonneuve (1898) Rap. Jud. Quebec 15 C. S. 45.

In Briggs v. Mackellar (1855) 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 30, under a statute providing that the clerk of either board of the common council may issue subpoenas to compel the attendance of witnesses before any committee of such board, that a witness so subpoenaed may be required to testify in respect to any matters pending before the committee, and that on his refusal to answer any proper questions, a justice of the supreme court, or the judge of the common pleas, shall, on application, issue an order requiring him to show cause why an attachment should not issue against him, and shall compel him to testify, and punish disobedience as if the matter were legally pending in court, an application for an attachment was granted against persons subpoenaed as witnesses before a committee of the board of aldermen of New York city, for their refusal to answer questions on an inquiry into the state and condition of the police department, and the court stated that the common council, independent of the statute, as a municipal corporation clothed with legislative powers, had the right inherent in either board, of investigating municipal matters in the ordinary legislative mode, together with the power not only of summoning witnesses to appear and testify, but also the power of enacting ordinances imposing pecuniary penalties upon witnesses neglecting to attend, or refusing to testify, and that whether the provisions in Magna Charta, incorporated in our Bill of Rights, that no one shall be imprisoned except by due process of law, would, as has been held repeatedly in respect to municipal corporations, deprive either board of the common council of the power of imprisoning a disobedient witness, it was not necessary in this case to inquire, since the statute had provided a mode by which the disobedience of the witness might be punished by imprisonment, if necessary.

It appears from the case of People ex rel. Steitz v. Rice (1890) 57 Hun, 62, 32 N. Y. S. R. 7, 10 N. Y. Supp. 270, that a committee of a county board of supervisors has no power to punish as for contempt refusal of a witness, duly subpoenaed, to testify before it, such committee having power by resolution to investigate certain matters, with full power to employ counsel and examine witnesses concerning such matters, since such committee in this case reported the refusal to answer to the court under a provision of the statute that whenever a person duly subpoenaed shall refuse to answer any question before the board of supervisors, which a majority thereof shall decide to be proper and pertinent, he shall be deemed guilty of contempt, and it shall be the duty of the chairman of the board, or of the committee, to report these facts to a specified judge or court, who shall thereupon issue an attachment.

It likewise appears from the case of Re Westchester County (1896) 6 App. Div. 144, 39 N. Y. Supp. 878, that a committee of a board of supervisors has no power to punish for contempt the disobedience of a subpoena issued by such committee. The court said that under the Code of Civil Procedure as first enacted, §§ 855 and 856 empowered the body issuing a subpoena to issue its warrant to the sheriff, commanding him to arrest the defaulting witness, and bring him before it, or, in case of a refusal to testify, it might commit such defaulting witness to jail until he submitted to testify, or was discharged according to law; but that such sections have been so amended as to take from the body issuing the subpoenas the power to issue a warrant, and that can now be done only by a judge. G. V. L.

---

WILLIAM F. O'NEIL, Deputy Chief of Police,
v.
PROVIDENCE AMUSEMENT COMPANY.

Rhode Island Supreme Court — January 29, 1920.

(— R. I. —, 108 Atl. 887.)

Constitutional law — due process — requiring employee at fixed salary.

1. Compelling a theater proprietor to employ one to guard audiences from fire danger at a salary fixed by the statute deprives such proprietor of his property without due process of law.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1628.]

Theater — character of business.

2. The carrying on of a theater or place of amusement is a private business.

[See 26 R. C. L. 710.]

— right to conduct.

3. The amusement business, being private, may be exercised under the police power of the state, which is subject to the limitations and provisions of the Constitution.

[See 26 R. C. L. 696.]

Court — assumption as to exercise of legislative power.

4. The court cannot, in passing upon the constitutionality of a law imposing upon theaters the duty of employing an approved person at a specified salary to guard against fires, assume that the legislative power has been properly exercised.

[See 6 R. C. L. 241.]

Constitutional law — fixing salary of theater employee — validity.

5. Provisions in a statute for the protection of theater patrons, fixing the wages of an employee whom the theater is compelled to employ for fire protection, forbidding his discharge without approval of the fire commissioners, and forbidding any reduction in his salary, are unconstitutional as depriving the proprietor of the theater of his liberty of contract.

[See 6 R. C. L. 271.]

Statute — unconstitutional in part — effect.

6. A statute for the protection of theater employees is not rendered void by the invalidity of provisions requiring the employment of one to protect audiences against danger from fire, at a fixed salary which cannot be reduced without permission of the fire commissioners, who must also consent to his discharge.

[See 6 R. C. L. 121 et seq.]

(Rathbun and Sweetland, JJ., dissent.)

CERTIFICATION by the District Court for the Sixth Judicial District for determination by the Supreme Court of questions arising upon motion by defendant to dismiss a complaint charging him with violation of an act regulating the salary to be paid to one employed to guard theaters against danger from fire, which resulted in a denial of the motion and finding him guilty. Questions answered and case sent back.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Elmer S. Chace, Henry C. Crain, and Ellis L. Yatman, for complainant:

Defendant was not deprived of its property without due process of law, as all property is held subject to the valid exercise of the police power.

Brown v. Keener, 74 N. C. 714; Pool v. Trexler, 76 N. C. 297; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 26, 32 L. ed. 585, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. § 801; Re Ten-Hour Law, 24 R. I. 608, 62 L.R.A. 612, 54 Atl. 602.

Acting under this power, the state has the right to regulate the operation of theaters.

Tannenbaum v. Rehm, 152 Ala. 494, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 700, 126 Am. St. Rep. 52, 44 So. 532; Waters v. Leech, 3 Ark. 110; Hartford v. Parsons, 87 Conn. 412, 87 Atl. 736, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1182.

The act in question is a proper regulation of the operation of theaters.

East Shore Land Co. v. Peckham, 33 R. I. 541, 82 Atl. 487; State v. Kofines, 33 R. I. 211, 80 Atl. 432, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1120; Cleveland v. Tripp, 13 R. I. 50.

The reasonable cost of special service in the regulation of theaters may be imposed upon the owners or licensees thereof.

Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Board of Health, 118 U. S. 455, 30 L. ed. 287, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1114; Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 96, 32 L. ed. 352, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 238, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18; Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 691, 26 L. ed. 238; New Orleans v. Hop Lee, 104 La. 601, 29 So. 214; Harrison v. Baltimore, 1 Gill, 264; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Tannenbaum v. Rehm, 152 Ala. 494, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 700, 126 Am. St. Rep. 52, 44 So. 532; Hartford v. Parsons, 87 Conn. 412, 87 Atl. 736, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1182.

Unjust discrimination is not shown against the defendant.

Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28

L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Lindsley v. Carbonic Acid Gas Co. 220 U. S. 61, 55 L. ed. 369, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 337, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 160; Finley v. California, 222 U. S. 28, 56 L. ed. 75, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 13; Selover, B. & Co. v. Walsh, 226 U. S. 112, 57 L. ed. 146, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 69; Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 53, 56 L. ed. 327, 347, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875; Keeney v. New York, 222 U. S. 525, 56 L. ed. 299, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1139, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 105; W. W. Cargill Co. v. Minnesota, 180 U. S. 452, 45 L. ed. 619, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 423; American Sugar Ref. Co. v. Louisiana, 179 U. S. 89, 45 L. ed. 102, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 43; Heath & M. Mfg. Co. v. Worst, 207 U. S. 338, 52 L. ed. 236, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 114.

Chapter 1780 of the Public Laws 1919 does not impair the obligation of contracts.

Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 388; New York & N. E. R. Co. v. Bristol, 151 U. S. 556, 38 L. ed. 269, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 437; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Louisiana Light & H. P. & Mfg. Co. 115 U. S. 650, 29 L. ed. 516, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 252; Austin v. Tennessee, 179 U. S. 349, 45 L. ed. 228, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 132.

Messrs. Alexander L. Churchill, Philip C. Joslin, and John E. Bolan, for defendant:

That portion of the act in question which compels the payment of $3 a day to the person employed to guard against danger by fire is unconstitutional, in that it deprives the defendant of liberty of contract, and deprives it of its property without due process of law.

Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co. (Cotting v. Godard) 183 U. S. 79, 46 L. ed. 92, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 31; Buenzle v. Newport Amusement Asso. 29 R. I. 23, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1242, 68 Atl. 721; Horney v. Nixon, 213 Pa. 20, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1184, 110 Am. St. Rep. 520, 61 Atl. 1088, 5 Ann. Cas. 349, 19 Am. Neg. Rep. 496; Collister v. Hay- man, 183 N. Y. 250, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1188, 111 Am. St. Rep. 740, 76 N. E. 20, 5 Ann. Cas. 344; Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Vosburg, 238 U. S. 56, 59 L. ed. 1199, L.R.A.1915E, 953, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 675; Buchanan v. Warley, 245 U. S. 60, 62 L. ed. 149, L.R.A.1918C, 210, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 16, Ann. Cas. 1918C, 1201; Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 31 L. ed. 650, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 24, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 737; Southern R. Co. v. Greene, 216 U. S. 400, 54 L. ed. 536, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 287, 17 Ann. Cas. 1247; Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 832, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427; Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 1, 59 L. ed. 441, L.R.A.1915C, 960, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161, 52 L. ed. 436, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277, 13 Ann. Cas. 764; Smith v. Texas, 233 U. S. 630, 58 L. ed. 1129, L.R.A.1915D, 677, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 420; Wilson v. New, 243 U. S. 332, 61 L. ed. 755, L.R.A.1917E, 938, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 298; Smith v. Texas, 233 U. S. 632, 58 L. ed. 1129, L.R.A.1915D, 677, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 420; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255.

The provision of the act in question is unconstitutional and void, because thereunder the defendant is deprived of the equal protection of the laws, contrary to § 1 of the 14th Amendment.

Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co. (Cotting v. Godard) 183 U. S. 79, 46 L. ed. 92, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 30; Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Southern R. Co. v. Greene, 216 U. S. 400, 54 L. ed. 536, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 287, 17 Ann. Cas. 1247; Wisconsin Asso. v. Weigle, 167 Wis. 569, 168 N. W. 883; Re Van Horne, 74 N. J. Eq. 600, 70 Atl. 986; Smith v. Texas, 233 U. S. 630, 58 L. ed. 1129, L.R.A.1915D, 677, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 420; Opinion of Justices, 220 Mass. 627, L.R.A.1917B, 1119, 108 N. E. 807.

The provision of the act forbidding discharge or reduction of salary by the proprietor of a theater in the city of Providence, without the consent of the board of fire commissioners, is unconstitutional and void, in that it deprives the defendant of liberty in violation of § 1 of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161, 52 L. ed. 436, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277, 13 Ann. Cas. 764; Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 1, 59 L. ed. 441, L.R.A.1915C, 960, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; Opinion of Justices, 220 Mass. 627, L.R.A.1917B, 1119, 108 N. E. 807.

Vincent, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case comes before us upon the constitutionality of § 5 of chapter 131 of the General Laws of 1909, as amended by chapter 1780 of the Public Laws of 1919, approved April 24, 1919. The act is entitled, "Of Diminishing Danger to Life in Case of Fire." The portion of the act which we are called upon to examine in the consideration of the questions presented to us is as follows: "The board of fire commissioners, or, in case there is no such board, the chief of the fire department of every city shall station in every theater during the time any audience is present therein a fireman, and the person or persons holding the license for the same shall pay such city for the attendance of such fireman the sum of two dollars, except in the city of Newport, where such person or persons holding the license shall pay such city for the attendance of such fireman the sum of three dollars, for every day during which any performance, show or exhibition shall be given therein: Provided, however, that in the city of Providence in lieu thereof the person or persons holding the license pertaining to such theater shall employ at a salary of not less than three dollars per day a suitable person, approved by the board of fire commissioners thereof, who shall be stationed in such theater during the time any audience is present therein, and who shall perform such duties as from time to time may be prescribed by said board to guard against fire, and to protect life and property in case of fire therein, and who shall not have any other duties and in case said board at any time shall withdraw its approval of any such person, another person approved by said board shall be employed in his stead; and no such employee approved as aforesaid shall be discharged by such licensee or licensees from his said employment nor his salary reduced except with the prior approval of said board; and said board from time to time may prescribe a distinctive uniform and badge to be worn by every such employee during the time he is performing such duties; and said board from time to time may assign any officers or members of the fire department thereof to inspect such theaters and see whether such persons are properly performing their said duties therein, and such officers or members at all reasonable times upon showing their credentials shall be admitted free of charge into all parts of all theaters in said city; and provided further, that in the cities of Woonsocket and Central Falls in lieu thereof the person or persons holding the license pertaining to such theaters shall employ a suitable person approved by the chief of the fire department thereof, who shall be stationed in such theater during the time any audience is present therein, and who shall perform such duties as from time to time may be prescribed by said chief of the fire department to guard against fire, and to protect life and property in case of fire therein, and in case said chief of the fire department at any time shall withdraw his approval of any such person, another person approved by said chief of the fire department shall be employed in his stead; and no such employee approved as aforesaid shall be discharged by such licensee or licensees from his said employment except with the prior approval of said chief; and said chief from time to time may prescribe a distinctive uniform and badge to be worn by every such employee during the time he is performing such duties; and said chief from time to time may assign any officers or members of the fire department thereof to inspect such theaters and see whether such persons are properly performing their said duties therein, and such officers or members at all reasonable times upon showing their credentials shall be admitted free of charge into all parts of all theaters in said cities."

A complaint issued by the district court of the sixth judicial district charged the defendant; holding a theatrical license in the city of Providence, with failure to pay $3 a day, pursuant to said § 5, to one Robert S. Gallagher employed by said defendant to guard against danger from fire in its theater located in said city. The defendant pleaded not guilty.

At the hearing in the district court, it appeared that the defendant had not paid the sum of $3 a day to the said Gallagher; that he had been employed for some two years, and still was employed, at $2 a day; that he was approved as competent for such employment by the board of fire commissioners of the city of Providence; and that such approval was in force at the date of the complaint. The defendant offered testimony as to the character of the contract of hiring, the seating capacity of the theater in question, and the seating capacity of the theaters in the various cities of the state, and then filed its motion to dismiss the complaint and to discharge the defendant on the ground that said act was unconstitutional. The defendant was found guilty, sentence was stayed, and the constitutional questions raised by the motion to dismiss were certified to this court for determination.

The act in question appeared originally as chapter 181 of the General Laws of 1909, and by § 5 of the said original act it was provided as follows: "Sec. 5. The board of fire commissioners, or, in case there is no such board, the chief of the fire department of every city shall cause to be installed and maintained in every theater therein a fire alarm box, and shall station in every theater, during the time any audience is present therein, a fireman, and the person or persons holding the license for the same shall pay such city for the attendance of such fireman the sum of two dollars for every day during which any performance, show, or exhibition shall be given therein. The board of police commissioners, or in case there is no such board, the chief of police, of every city shall cause to be installed and maintained in every theater therein a police call box.

Before noting the changes in this section brought about by the later amendatory acts, it may be well to bear in mind that the original act provided that a member of the fire department of each city in the state should be stationed by the fire commissioners or chief of the fire department in every theater, and that each theater in which a fireman was so stationed should pay to the city the sum of $2 per day for his attendance. At the January session of the general assembly, 1916, § 5 was amended by chapter 1366 of the Public Laws in respect to the theaters in Providence; the amendment providing that the licensee of the theater should employ a suitable person, to be approved by the board of fire commissioners, who should perform the duties which had previously devolved upon the fireman stationed therein, and that such person so employed could not be discharged by his employer without the consent of such board.

At the January session of the general assembly, 1919, the act was again amended by chapter 1718 of the Public Laws in respect to the theaters in the city of Newport, the amendment providing that the theaters in that city should pay the sum of $3 per day for the services of the fireman stationed therein. Later, at the same session, the act was further amended by chapter 1780 of the Public Laws. It is upon the act as finally amended that the questions now submitted to us arise. Under the provisions of the act as it now stands, in the cities of Newport, Pawtucket, and Cranston firemen must be stationed in theaters by the respective municipal authorities for which services the city of Newport is required to pay $3 per day, and the cities of Pawtucket and Cranston $2 per day. In the cities of Providence, Central Falls, and Woonsocket a person approved by the board of fire commissioners, or other municipal authority, must be employed by the person holding a theatrical license to guard against danger by fire, and cannot be discharged by his employer without the consent of the proper municipal authority. In the city of Providence such employee must be paid not less than $3 a day, while in Woonsocket and Central Falls no compulsory payment of any amount whatsoever is made necessary, and further, in Providence, the salary of such person cannot be reduced without the previous approval of the board of fire commissioners, while no such provision is in force as regards Woonsocket and Central Falls.

The defendant claims that § 5 of chapter 131, General Laws 1909, as thus amended, is unconstitutional, and raises the following questions:

(1) Does the provision compelling the holder of a theatrical license in the city of Providence to pay $3 a day to a person employed by him and stationed in the theater to guard against fire deprive the defendant of liberty and property without due process of law?

(2) Does such provision deny the defendant the equal protection of the law?

(3) Does the provision that the salary of the person employed to guard against fire shall not be reduced, except by consent of the board of fire commissioners, deprive the defendant of its liberty and property without due process of law?

(4) Does such provision deny the defendant the equal protection of the law?

(5) Does the provision that such employee cannot be discharged without the prior approval of the board of fire commissioners deprive the defendant of liberty and property without due process of law?

(6) Does the provision requiring the payment of $3 a day violate the obligation of any contract between this defendant and Robert S. Gallagher, mentioned in the complaint and warrant?

(7) Does the provision requiring the payment of $3 a day violate article 1, § 2, of the Constitution of Rhode Island, in that it does not distribute the burdens of the state fairly among its citizens?

The defendant advises the court in its brief and argument that it does not object to the provisions of § 5 of chapter 131, as amended by chapter 1780 of the Public Laws, in so far as they compel every person holding a theatrical license to employ a competent person to guard against fire in the theater to which such license pertains, nor to the provision requiring such employee to be approved by the board of fire commissioners, nor to those portions of § 5, as amended, which give power to officers of the fire department to inspect theaters and ascertain whether such employee is properly performing his duty, and therefore all discussion of those matters may be eliminated.

It may be further noted here that under § 8 of said chapter 131 of the General Laws of 1909 it is also provided that the license of any owner or lessee of any theater who shall neglect or refuse to comply with any obligations imposed by said chapter may be suspended or revoked by the authority having the power to grant the same, thus preventing such owner or licensee from giving any performance or entertainment therein.

The defendant claims, first, that the portion of the act which compels the payment of $3 a day to the person employed is unconstitutional, in that it deprives the defendant of liberty of contract, and deprives it of its property without due process of law, and is therefore in conflict with the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

That the carrying on of a theater or place of amusement is a private business has been

Theater—character of business.

clearly stated by this court in the case of Buenzle v. Newport Amusement Asso. 29 R. I. 23, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1242, 68 Atl. 721, in which the following language of the court in Horney v. Nixon, 213 Pa. 20, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1184, 110 Am. St. Rep. 520, 61 Atl. 1088, 5 Ann. Cas. 349, 19 Am. Neg. Rep. 496, was adopted and made a part of its opinion: "The proprietor of a theater is a private individual, engaged in a strictly private business, which though for the entertainment of the public, is always limited to those whom he may agree to admit to it. There is no duty, as in the case of a common carrier, to admit everyone who may apply and be willing to pay for a ticket, for the theater proprietor has acquired no peculiar rights and privileges from the state, and is therefore under no implied obligation to serve the public. When he sells a ticket, he creates contractual relations with the holder of it, and whatever duties on his part grow out of these relations he is bound to perform, or respond in damages for the breach of his contract."

And the opinion further holds that no analogy can be drawn between a place of entertainment and a corporation affected with a public duty. Such, therefore, is the law of this state, and it would be useless to pursue further the discussion of this particular point in the case. Reference, however, may be made to Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161, 52 L. ed. 436, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277, 13 Ann. Cas. 764, and Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 1, 59 L. ed. 441, L.R.A. 1915C, 960, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240, which sustain the proposition that, while the duties of the person so employed may have to do with the public safety, his employment remains a private relationship in its legal and constitutional aspects. Under the very terms of the act he is employed by the licensee of the theater, and from such licensee he receives his wages. He has no claim against anyone else for compensation for his services. The power of the board to pass upon his competency, prescribe his duties, and scrutinize their performance are only matters of supervision in the interest of public safety.

The sole purpose of the act in question, as its title indicates, is to diminish the danger from fire to those who may assemble in places of amusement, a danger which not only arises from fire itself, but also from the panic which is apt to seize upon an assemblage of people whose individual freedom of movement is more or less restricted. The act provides that every person holding a theater license shall employ a suitable person approved by the board of fire commissioners, who shall be stationed in the theater during the time any audience is present therein; that such person shall perform such duties as may be prescribed by said board to guard against fire; that such person shall have no other duties; that said board may at any time withdraw its approval of any such person, when another person approved by said board shall be employed in his stead; and that said board may assign any officer or member of the fire department to inspect the theaters for the purpose of ascertaining whether the persons employed are properly discharging their duties. These provisions fully meet all the purposes and requirements of the act, which are to protect the audience from the dangers of fire, and to such provisions the defendant offers no objection. The act, however, goes further, and provides that the licensee of the theater employing such a person shall pay him a wage of not less than $3 per day, and that no such employee shall be discharged by such licensee from his employment, nor his salary reduced, except with the prior approval of the board.

In the case at bar it appears that one Robert S. Gallagher had been for a long period an employee of the defendant at its theater in Providence, charged with the duty of protecting the premises from the dangers of fire, his employment in that capacity had been approved by the board of fire commissioners, and such approval had never been withdrawn, and that the defendant paid to the said Gallagher for his services the sum of $2 per day. This arrangement between the defendant and Gallagher continued without interruption from the time when the latter was employed by the defendant down to April 24, 1919, when chapter 1780 of the Public Laws was approved. Thereafter, upon the neglect or refusal of the defendant to raise the pay of its said employee to $3 per day, the complaint was instituted under which the constitutional questions now before us have arisen. The defendant contends that these provisions, compelling the payment of $3 per day, forbidding the discharge of the employee without the approval of the board of fire commissioners, and forbidding any reduction in the salary of such employee, are unconstitutional, being in violation of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

These provisions seem to us to be unrelated to the purposes of the act. The safety of the public is amply provided for without them. If these provisions are eliminated, the act would still effectively provide for the safety of the people who may compose the audience, and the degree of safety is neither increased nor diminished by the amount of wages paid to the employee, nor does it depend upon depriving the employer of the right to discharge his employee or to reduce his wages. Whatever may be the amount of the wages paid to the employee, and whoever may be empowered to reduce his salary or bring about his discharge, the fact remains that all the elements of the act bearing upon the safety of the public still remain in full force and effect. A man whose competency is approved by the board of fire commissioners must be on duty whenever an audience is present, and at all times under the supervision of said board, which may prescribe his duties and, through inspection, see that he discharges them properly, and which may in its discretion withdraw its approval, thus compelling the licensee to employ another person in his stead, who likewise can only act with the approval of said board. Any failure on the part of the licensee to have an approved man on duty would bring about the cancellation of his license, without which he could not continue his business.

As the amusement business is a private business, and not a business affected with a public interest, it may be exercised under the police power of the state.

But the police power of the state is subject to the limitations and provisions of the Federal Constitution, as the Supreme Court of the United States has held in several cases. In Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431, the court said: "The question of constitutional law to which we have referred cannot be disposed of by saying that the statute in question may be referred to what are called the police powers of the state, which, as often stated by this court, were not included in the grants of power to the general government, and therefore were reserved to the states when the Constitution was ordained. But as the Constitution of the United States is the supreme law of the land, anything in the Constitution or statutes of the states to the contrary notwithstanding, a statute of a state, even when avowedly enacted in the exercise of its police powers, must yield to that law. No right granted or secured by the Constitution of the United States can be impaired or destroyed by a state enactment, whatever may be the source from which the power to pass such enactment may have been derived. 'The nullity of any act inconsistent with the Constitution is produced by the declaration that the Constitution is the supreme law.' The state has undoubtedly the power, by appropriate legislation, to protect the public morals, the public health, and the public safety; but if by their necessary operation, its regulations looking to either of those ends amount to a denial to persons within its jurisdiction of the equal protection of the laws, they must be deemed unconstitutional and void."

See also Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Vosburg, 238 U. S. 56, 59 L. ed. 1199, L.R.A.1915E, 953, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 675; Buchanan v. Warley, 245 U. S. 60, 62 L. ed. 149, L.R.A. 1918C, 210, 38 Sup. Ct. Rep. 16, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 1201.

The 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States provides: "Nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

The meaning of this provision has been interpreted and defined by the Supreme Court of the United States in a number of cases. In Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 832, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427, the court said: "The liberty mentioned in that amendment means not only the right of the citizen to be free from the mere physical restraint of his person, as by incarceration, but the term is deemed to embrace the right of the citizen to be free in the enjoyment of all his faculties, to be free to use them in all lawful ways, to live and work where he will, to earn his livelihood by any lawful calling, to pursue any livelihood or avocation, and for that purpose to enter into all contracts which may be proper, necessary, and essential to his carrying out to a successful conclusion the purposes above mentioned."

And in Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 1, 59 L. ed. 441, L.R.A.1915C, 960, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240, the word

—right to conduct.

"liberty," as used in the 14th Amendment, is defined as follows: "Included in the right of personal liberty and the right of private property—partaking of the nature of each—is the right to make contracts for the acquisition of property. Chief among such contracts is that of personal employment, by which labor and other services are exchanged for money or other forms of property. If this right be struck down or arbitrarily interfered with, there is a substantial impairment of liberty in the long-established constitutional sense."

And to the same effect are the cases of Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161, 52 L. ed. 436, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277, 13 Ann. Cas. 764, and Smith v. Texas, 233 U. S. 630, 58 L. ed. 1129, L.R.A.1915D, 677, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 420.

In the case of Adair v. United States, supra, the court said: "While, as already suggested, the rights of liberty and property, guaranteed by the Constitution against deprivation without due process of law, are subject to such reasonable restraints as the common good or the general welfare may require, it is not within the functions of government—at least, in the absence of contract between the parties—to compel any person in the course of his business, and against his will, to accept or retain the personal services of another or to compel any person, against his will, to perform personal services for another. The right of a person to sell his labor upon such terms as he deems proper is, in its essence, the same as the right of the purchaser of labor to prescribe the conditions upon which he will accept such labor from the person offering to sell it."

The case of Wilson v. New, 243 U. S. 332, 61 L. ed. 755, L.R.A.1917E, 938, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 298, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 1024, is referred to in the brief of the complainant, and also in the brief of the defendant. It involves the constitutionality of an act of Congress popularly known as the Adamson Act (U. S. Comp.

Stat. §§ 8680a-8680d, Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1918, pp. 754-756). We do not deem it necessary to discuss that case at great length. The act provided, among other things, that pending, the report of a commission to investigate and deal with the wages of trainmen on interstate railroads, the then-existing rate of compensation should "not be reduced below the present standard day's wage." It differs materially from the case at bar, in that it was a temporary expedient, resorted to in the face of an emergency. It did not undertake to fix a permanent wage, but to retain the already existing wage for a limited period of thirty days, until, through an investigation then progressing, certain rights might be determined, "leaving employers and employees free as to the subject of wages, to govern their relations by their own agreements after the specified time." The act was intended as an exercise of governmental power over a matter of interstate commerce or a business affected with a public interest. The act was passed to meet an emergency arising from a nation-wide dispute over wages between railroad companies and their train operatives, in which a general strike was threatened, which would bring about commercial paralysis and grave loss and suffering; the parties concerned being unable to agree. It was designed to bridge over a limited period within which the parties might reach an agreement. The question in that case, as stated by the court in its opinion, was: "Did Congress have power under the circumstances stated,—that is, in dealing with the dispute between the employers and employees as to wages, . . . to create by legislative action a standard of wages to be operative upon the employers and employees for such reasonable time as it deemed necessary to afford an opportunity for the meeting of the minds of employers and employees on the subject of wages? Or, in other words, did it have the power, in order to prevent the interruption of interstate commerce, to exert its will to supply the absence of a wage scale resulting from the disagreement as to wages between the employers and employees, and to make its will on that subject controlling for the limited period provided for?"

The difference between the Adamson Law and the act which we are considering, which fixes a permanent wage in the absence of any emergency, is so apparent that it need not be specifically pointed out. That the court recognizes a distinction between employment in a private business and an employment in a business charged with a public interest, and that its decision is not intended to apply to the former, is fully evidenced in the opinion itself, wherein it is stated: "Whatever would be the right of an employee engaged in a private business to demand such wages as he desires, to leave the employment if he does not get them, and by concert of action to agree with others to leave upon the same condition, such rights are necessarily subject to limitation when employment is accepted in a business charged with a public interest."

And it may be fairly said that the court confined itself solely to dealing with an employment charged with a public interest, for the opinion states: "It is also equally true that, as the right to fix by agreement between the carrier and its employees a standard of wages to control their relations is primarily private, the establishment and giving effect to such agreed-on standard is not subject to be controlled or prevented by public authority."

And, further, that "there is no question here of purely private right, since the law is concerned only with those who are engaged in a business charged with a public interest."

In Smith v. Texas, 233 U. S. 630, 58 L. ed. 1129, L.R.A.1915D, 677, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 420, the court, in passing upon a statute forbidding the employment of any person as a passenger conductor, unless such person had had two years' experience as a brakeman or conductor of a freight train, declared that "the liberty of contract is, of course, not unlimited; but there is no reason or authority for the proposition that conditions may be imposed by statute which will admit some who are competent, and arbitrarily exclude others who are equally competent, to labor on terms mutually satisfactory to employer and employee."

In Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255, the court said: "While good faith and a knowledge of existing conditions on the part of a legislature are to be presumed, yet to carry that presumption to the extent of always holding that there must be some undisclosed and unknown reason for subjecting certain individuals or corporations to hostile and discriminating legislation is to make the protecting clauses of the 14th Amendment a mere rope of sand, in no manner restraining state action."

We have already pointed out that it is obligatory upon the licensee, under the provisions of the act, to employ a person who shall attend at the theater during the time when an audience is present, for the purpose of guarding against fire; that such person must be approved by the board of fire commissioners; that such approval may be withdrawn, compelling the licensee to employ another man; that said board may prescribe the duties to be performed; that the said board may direct some member of the fire department, whose duty it shall be to make an inspection for the purpose of determining whether the person so employed is properly discharging his duties; and that these provisions of the act are not objected to by the defendant.

The act goes further, and dictates a minimum wage, and seeks to take away from the employer the right to discharge or reduce the wages of the employee whom he has em-played in the conduct of his private business. Neither of these last-named provisions are essential, or have any relation to the protecting features of the act, which are its sole object and purpose.

We cannot assume that the legislative power has been properly exercised. It does not follow that, because the general assembly has enacted a law, it must have had some good and sufficient reason for so doing, although such reason may not be apparent. The court of appeals of New York (Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636), in a carefully considered and well-reasoned opinion, has satisfactorily disposed of that question, holding that, while generally it is for the legislature to determine what laws are required to protect and secure the public health, comfort, and safety, under the guise of police regulations, it may not arbitrarily infringe upon personal or property rights; and its determination as to what is a proper exercise of the power is not final or conclusive, but is subject to the scrutiny of the courts, and that when the legislature passes an act ostensibly for the public health, but which does not relate to the purpose sought to be carried out, and which destroys the property or interferes with the rights of the citizens, it is within the province of the court to determine that fact and to declare the act unconstitutional.

Other portions of the opinion in the Jacobs Case seem to have a substantial bearing upon the questions now before us. The court in stating the facts says: "The relator at the time of his arrest lived with his wife and two children in a tenement house in the city of New York, in which three other families also lived. There were four floors in the house, and seven rooms on each floor, and each floor was occupied by one family, living independently of the others, and doing their cooking in one of the rooms so occupied.

The relator at the time of his arrest was engaged in one of his rooms in preparing tobacco and making cigars, but there was no smell of tobacco in any part of the house, except the room where he was thus engaged. These facts showed a violation of the provisions of the act."

The court then proceeded to quote the provisions of the act; the first section thereof being as follows: "Section 1. The manufacture of cigars or preparation of tobacco in any form on any floor, or in any part of any floor, in any tenement house is hereby prohibited, if such floor or any part of such floor is by any person occupied as a home or residence for the purpose of living, sleeping, cooking or doing any household work therein." N. Y. Laws 1884, chap. 272.

The title of the act was: "An Act to Improve the Public Health by Prohibiting the Manufacture of Cigars and Preparation of Tobacco in Any Form in Tenement Houses in Certain Cases, and Regulating the Use of Tenement Houses in Certain Cases."

This law, by its title and otherwise, purports to be designed to promote the public health, and the court says, in respect to that: "When a health law is challenged in the courts as unconstitutional, on the ground that it arbitrarily interferes with personal liberty and private property without due process of law, the courts must be able to see that it has at least in fact some relation to the public health, that the public health is the end actually aimed at, and that it is appropriate and adapted to that end. This we have not been able to see in this law, and we must therefore pronounce it unconstitutional and void."

The court further says: "This law was not intended to protect the health of those engaged in cigar making, as they are allowed to manufacture cigars everywhere, except in the forbidden tenement houses. It cannot be perceived how the cigar maker is to be improved in his health or his morals by forcing him from his home and its hallowed associations and beneficent influences, to ply his trade elsewhere." "It is . . . plain that this law interferes with the profitable and free use of his property by the owner or lessee of a tenement house, who is a cigar maker, and trammels him in the application of his industry and the disposition of his labor, and thus, in a strictly legitimate sense, it arbitrarily deprives him of his property and of some portion of his personal liberty."

The opinion also quotes with approval from the cases of Austin v. Murray, 16 Pick. 121, 126, and Watertown v. Mayo, 109 Mass. 315, 319, 12 Am. Rep. 694. In the first-mentioned case the court said: "The law will not allow the right of property to be invaded, under the guise of a police regulation for the preservation of health, when it is manifest that such is not the object and purpose of the regulation."

And in the last-mentioned case the court said: "The law will not allow rights of property to be invaded under the guise of a police regulation for the preservation of health or protection against a threatened nuisance; and when it appears that such is not the real object and purpose of the regulation, courts will interfere to protect the rights of the citizen."

So, in the case at bar, as we have already demonstrated, the purpose of the act is to protect the public from the dangers of fire, and that the degree of protection for which the act provides can be neither increased nor diminished by fixing the wages of the person employed in carrying out its provisions. The defendant argues that, if the lawmaking power can fix the wages of such employee, it could with equal propriety fix the wages of motormen, telegraph operators, and of those engaged in a variety of other employments. We think there is much logic in that argument. In the Jacobs Case, supra, the court said: "Such legislation may invade one class of rights to-day and another to-morrow, and if it can be sanctioned under the Constitution, . . . we will not be far away in practical statesmanship from those ages when governmental prefects . . . regulated the movements and labor of artisans, the rate of wages, the price of food, the diet and clothing of the people, and a large range of other affairs, long since in all civilized lands regarded as outside of governmental functions."

In Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 49 L. ed. 987, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133, it was held that a statute of New York, providing that no employees shall be required or permitted to work in bakeries more than sixty hours in a week, or ten hours a day, is not a legitimate exercise of the police power of the state, but an unreasonable, unnecessary, and arbitrary interference with the right and liberty of the individual to contract, in relation to labor, and as such is in conflict with, and void under, the Federal Constitution.

People ex rel. Rodgers v. Coler, 166 N. Y. 1, 52 L.R.A. 814, 82 Am. St. Rep. 605, 59 N. E. 716, is another case decided by the court of appeals of New York. A contractor having performed his contract for grading a public street, and having received from the proper authorities a certificate that the contract price had been earned, it was held that he may compel the city to pay the amount due by mandamus, although he has failed to comply with the Labor Statute regulating the amount of wages to be paid his employees, on the ground that such Labor Law, in such respect, invades rights of liberty and property in that it denies to the city and the contractor the right to agree with their employees upon the measure of their compensation, and compels them to pay an arbitrary and uniform rate, and, further, that in effect it imposes a penalty upon the exercise by the city or by the contractor of the right to agree with their employees upon the terms and conditions of the employment.

And it was held in the case of Tannenbaum v. Rehm, 152 Ala. 494, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 700, 126 Am. St. Rep. 52, 44 So. 532, that a fireman assigned to duty at a theater under an ordinance requiring the assignment, and providing that the manager of the theater shall pay for such attendance, may bring his action against such manager for compensation for his services. The main contention in that case, however, was that the actual cost of the services could be collected—a point not involved here. It cannot be reasoned from this case that a property owner may be compelled to pay an amount in excess of cost, and we need not consider the cases which deal with the right to reimbursement for the services of a fireman appointed to duty at a theater from the regular force of the city.

In Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 96, 32 L. ed. 352, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 238, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28, the court held that a state statute which requires locomotive engineers and other persons, employed by a railroad company in a capacity which calls for the ability to distinguish and discriminate between color signals, to be examined in this respect by a tribunal established for the purpose, and which exacts a fee from the company for the service of examination, does not deprive the company of its property without due process of law. In that case such provisions were not only closely related to the purposes of the act, but were absolutely essential if the act was to be effective. As the court said in its opinion: "Color blindness is a defect of a vital character in railway employees.

Ready and accurate perception by them of colors . . . is essential to safety of the trains, and, of course, of the passengers and property they carry."

And the court further held that "requiring railroad companies to pay the fees allowed for the examination of parties who are to serve on their railroads . . . is not depriving them of property without due process of law. It is merely imposing upon them the expenses necessary to ascertain whether their employees possess the physical qualifications required by law."

The difference between that case and the case at bar is too apparent to require elucidation.

In Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McGuire, 219 U. S. 549, 55 L. ed. 328, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 259, the question presented was as to the validity of an act precluding the railroad company from making the defense that recovery was barred by the acceptance of benefits under a contract of membership in its relief department. The defendant in error, while acting as a brakeman in the service of the railroad company, had received injuries for which he had recovered judgment. The railroad company claimed that, the defendant in error having received the benefits to which he was entitled from the relief fund, the payment and acceptance thereof subsequent to the injury constituted a full satisfaction of his claim. The statute involved in that case is as follows: "Every corporation operating a railway shall be liable for all damages sustained by any person, including the employees of such corporation, in consequence of the neglect of the agents, or by any mismanagement of the engineers or other employees thereof, and in consequence of the wilful wrongs, whether of commission or omission of such agents, engineers, or other employees; when such wrongs are in any manner connected with the use and operation of any railway on or about which they shall be employed and no contract which restricts such liability shall be legal or binding. Nor shall any contract of insurance relief, benefit or indemnity in case of injury or death, entered into prior to the injury, between the person so injured and such corporation or any other person or association acting for such corporation, nor shall acceptance of any such relief, benefit or indemnity by an injured, his widow, heirs or representatives after the death of such corporation, person or persons, shall not constitute any bar or defense to any cause of action arising under the provisions of this act. No provision contained hereafter shall be construed to prevent or delay the settlement for damages between the parties subsequent to the injuries received."

Code Supp. Iowa 1913, § 2071.

The railroad company contended that the statute attempts to prohibit the making of a contract for settlement "by acts done after the liability had become fixed." The court, however, rejected that view, holding that, while the acceptance of benefits was, of course, an act done after the injury, the legal consequences sought to be attached to that act were derived from the provision in the contract of membership, and that the stipulation which the statute nullifies is one, made in advance of the injury, that the subsequent acceptance of benefits shall constitute full satisfaction. The full import of the case is that it is within the power of the legislature to provide that contracts entered into prior to the injury, and designed to exempt the employer from liability, shall not be legal or binding, and that the statute cannot be abrogated by such a contract. The opinion itself excludes its application to the case at bar when it says, quoting from the case of Frisbie v. United States, 157 U. S. 165, 166, 39 L. ed. 658, 659, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 636, 588: "The possession of this power by government in no manner conflicts with the proposition that, generally speaking, every citizen has a right freely to contract for the price of his labor, services, or property."

The weight of authority is well stated in 6 R. C. L. § 258, as follows: "Since an employee cannot be compelled to work against his will, it is generally recognized that he is at liberty to refuse to continue to serve his employer. In this respect the rights of the employer and the employee are equal. Any act of the legislature that would undertake to impose on an employer the obligation of keeping one in his service whom, for any reason, he does not desire, would be a denial of his constitutional right to make and terminate contracts and to acquire and hold property."

It may be here observed that the act before us seeks to deprive the licensee of the free exercise of his right to discharge his employee, but does not attempt to place a similar restriction upon the right of the employee to leave the service of his employer.

We think that the provisions compelling the payment of $3 per day, forbidding the discharge of the employee without the prior approval of the board of fire commissioners, and forbidding the reduction of his salary take away that freedom and liberty of contract to which the defendant is entitled under the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and are, therefore, unconstitutional and void.

We do not think, however, that the elimination of these provisions tends to nullify the act as a whole, but that the other requirements thereof remain in full force and effect.

Under the provisions of the act, if the defendant fails to pay $3 per day, its license will be refused or taken away by the board of police commissioners, and the defendant's business, otherwise lawful, will forthwith cease. It appears in the case at bar that the defendant, prior to the objectionable enactment, employed a person approved by said board, at $2 per day, down to the time that the act fixing the wage at $3 was passed. Such fixing of the price is made without regard to the market price of such services, or whether employer and employee fix a lower rate. It seems to us that this is depriving the defendant of his property without due process of law, and is, therefore, unconstitutional and void under the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Constitutional law—fixing salary of theater employees—invalidity.

Statute—unconstitutional in part—effect.

As the city of Providence does not furnish any of its employees to guard against fire in any of its theaters, we need not discuss a number of cases cited in the briefs bearing upon the question as to whether the city could legally claim reimbursement for such services.

The defendant further claims that the act deprives it of equal protection of the laws, contrary to § 1 of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States; in other words, that the law which is applicable to all cities in the state imposes upon the owners or lessees of theaters in Providence a greater burden than is imposed upon others carrying on a similar business in other portions of the state, and the defendant points out that in the cities of Pawtucket and Cranston the act provides that firemen from the city force must be stationed in each theater, to be paid $2 per day for their services, and that in Providence the person employed by the owner or lessee of a theater shall receive for his services not less than $3 per day, while in Woonsocket and Central Falls the act does not fix any wage to be paid to the person employed, but leaves owners and lessees in the two cities last named to contract for such service in their discretion.

We do not think it necessary for us to discuss this question, in view of the conclusions which we have already reached regarding the fixing of wages. With that portion of the act eliminated which seeks to fix the wages of such employees, the question of equal protection under the law disappears and becomes purely academic. With such elimination, all parties will stand upon an equal footing, and be left to contract for such required service upon such terms as may be in accordance with their own judgment and wishes. If the employer and employee have a right to agree upon the terms of the employment, it naturally follows that such employment may be terminated by either party, without the interference or dictation of the board of fire commissioners, and such right is well settled by authority. Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161, 52 L. ed. 436, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277, 13 Ann. Cas. 764; Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 1, 59 L. ed. 441, L.R.A.1915C, 960, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240.

Our decision is that General Laws 1909, chapter 131, § 5, as amended by Public Laws, January Session, 1919, chapter 1780, is in violation of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, in so far as it undertakes (1) to fix the wages which a person holding a theatrical license shall pay to a person employed by him to guard against danger by fire; (2) to forbid the discharge of such person so employed without the consent of the board of fire commissioners; and (3) to forbid a reduction in the wages of such employee without the consent of the board of fire commissioners.

The papers in the case are sent back to the District Court of the Sixth Judicial District, with the decision of this court certified thereon, for further proceedings.

Rathbun, J., dissenting:

I am obliged to dissent from the opinion of the majority, and have, as I deem it my duty to do, without attempting to analyze said opinion in detail, here set out at length my opinion as to the legal principles involved in the constitutional question before us. I do this for the reason that the majority opinion appears to me to completely disregard the essential facts involved in the case, fails to make application of very elementary principles of the common law of contracts, and particularly because said opinion adopts a novel and surprising position, opposed to the uniform decisions of this court, and, so far as I can ascertain, to the decisions of all courts, as to the relative powers of the legislative and judicial departments of government.

The above-entitled proceeding is a criminal complaint, preferred against said respondent corporation in the district court of the sixth judicial district. The matter is before us upon the certification of a constitutional question. Said complaint charges that the respondent, "being the person and corporation holding the license pertaining to the Bijou Theater, unlawfully did neglect and refuse to pay to Robert S. Gallagher, a suitable person approved by the board of fire commissioners of said Providence, and employed by the said Providence Amusement Company, a corporation, and stationed in the said Bijou Theater pursuant to the provisions of § 5 of chapter 131 of the General Laws of 1909, as the same was amended by chapter 1780 of the Public Laws of 1919, the sum of $3 per day while employed as aforesaid, against the statute and the peace and dignity of the state."

To this complaint the respondent pleaded not guilty, and at the trial in said district court questioned the constitutionality of said § 5, chapter 131, General Laws 1909, as amended by chapter 1780 of the Public Laws, January Session, 1919. The respondent was adjudged guilty, sentence was deferred, and said constitutional question has been certified to this court for decision.

Said § 5, as amended, so far as the same relates to the question now before us, is as follows: "The board of fire commissioners, or in case there is no such board, the chief of the fire department of every city shall station in every theater during the time any audience is present therein a fireman, and the person or persons holding the license for the same shall pay such city for the attendance of such fireman the sum of two dollars, except in the city of Newport, where such person or persons holding the license shall pay such city for the attendance of such fireman the sum of three dollars, for every day during which any performance, show or exhibition shall be given therein: Provided, however, that in the city of Providence in lieu thereof the person or persons holding the license pertaining to such theater shall employ at a salary of not less than three dollars per day a suitable person, approved by the board of fire commissioners thereof, who shall be stationed in such theater during the time any audience is present therein, and who shall perform such duties as from time to time may be prescribed by said board to guard against fire, and to protect life and property in case of fire therein, and who shall not have any other duties and in case said board at any time shall withdraw its approval of any such person, another person approved by said board shall be employed in his stead; and no such employee approved as aforesaid shall be discharged by such licensee or licensees from his said employment, nor his salary reduced except with the prior approval of said board; and said board from time to time may prescribe a distinctive uniform and badge to be worn by every such employee during the time he is performing such duties; and said board from time to time may assign any officers or members of the fire department thereof to inspect such theaters and see whether such persons are properly performing their said duties therein, and such officers or members at all reasonable times upon showing their credentials shall be admitted free of charge into all parts of all theaters in said city; and provided further, that in the cities of Woonsocket and Central Falls in lieu thereof the person or persons holding the license pertaining to such theaters shall employ a suitable person approved by the chief of the fire department thereof, who shall be stationed in such theater during the time any audience is present therein, and who shall perform such duties as from time to time may be prescribed by said chief of the fire department to guard against fire, and to protect life and property in case of fire therein, and in case said chief of the fire department at any time shall withdraw his approval of any such person, another person approved by said chief of the fire department shall be employed in his stead; and no such employee approved as aforesaid shall be discharged by such licensee or licensees from his said employment except with the prior approval of said chief; and said chief from time to time may prescribe a distinctive uniform and badge to be worn by every such employee during the time he is performing such duties; and said chief from time to time may assign any officers or members of the fire department thereof to inspect such theaters and see whether such persons are properly performing their said duties therein, and such officers or members at all reasonable times upon showing their credentials shall be admitted free of charge into all parts of all theaters in said cities."

The respondent's various claims as to the unconstitutionality of said section are substantially as follows:

(1) That said section compelling the holder of a license pertaining to a theater in the city of Providence to pay $3 per day to the person employed to guard against fire and to protect life in case of fire in such theater, and in providing that the salary of the person so employed to guard against fire and to protect life in such theater shall not be reduced, except with the prior approval of the board of fire commissioners of the city of Providence, deprives the defendant of its liberty and property without due process of law, in violation of § 1 of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

(2) That said section, by imposing an unequal burden on the defendant as against the burdens imposed on other persons holding theatrical licenses in other cities in the state of Rhode Island, and in providing that the salary of the person employed to guard against fire and to protect life in a theater in the city of Providence shall not be reduced, except with the prior approval of the board of fire commissioners of the city of Providence, denies to the defendant the equal protection of the laws, in violation of § 1 of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

(3) That the provision of said section compelling the holder of a license pertaining to a theater in the city of Providence to pay $3 per day to the person employed by such holder to guard against fire does not distribute the burdens of the state fairly among its citizens, and is in violation of article 1, § 2, of the Constitution of the state of Rhode Island.

(4) That the provision of said section compelling the holder of a license pertaining to a theater in the city of Providence to pay $3 per day to the person employed by such holder to guard against fire and to protect life in such theater deprives the defendant of its liberty and property without the judgment of its peers, and is in violation of article 1, § 10, of the Constitution of the state of Rhode Island.

(5) That the provision of said section fixing the salary of the person employed to guard against fire in a theater in the city of Providence impairs the obligation of a contract existing between the defendant and Robert S. Gallagher, and is in violation of article 1, § 10, of the Constitution of the United States.

The section in question is plainly an attempt on the part of the general assembly, in the exercise of its police power, to legislate for the safety and welfare of the people. As was stated by this court in Re Ten Hour Law, 24 R. I. 608, 605, 61 L.R.A. 612, 54 Atl. 603: "There is also a common assent that the legislature has the right of control in all matters affecting public safety, health, and welfare, on the ground that these are within the indefinable, but unquestioned, purview of what is known as the police power. It is indefinable, because none can foresee the ever-changing conditions which may call for its exercise, and it is unquestioned, because it is a necessary function of government to provide for the safety and welfare of the people."

In Barbier v. Connolly, 118 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 929, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357, the court said: "But neither the amendment [the 14th Amendment], broad and comprehensive as it is, nor any other amendment, was designed to interfere with the power of the state, sometimes termed its police power, to prescribe regulations to promote the health, peace, morals, education, and good order of the people."

It is beside the mark for the respondent to claim that it is beyond the power of the general assembly to provide these regulations for the conduct of the theatrical business in this state, because the operation of a theater is a private business. The purpose of the statute is not, primarily to regulate the business of the holders of theater licenses, but to guard the safety of those who attend theatrical entertainments. In the city of Providence, upon every secular day, the audiences in the many theaters number thousands, a large proportion of whom are women and children. Experience has forcibly demonstrated the great hazard to which such audiences are subjected, in the absence of safeguards for their protection and constant vigilance that such safeguards are maintained. It has been shown in many instances that the maintenance of such regulations for the safety of audiences cannot prudently be left to the initiative or to the control of the theater managers or their employees. Although the operation of theaters may in law be regarded as a form of private business, the care for the safety of theatrical audiences clearly presents a field for the exercise of the police power of the state for the public welfare. Tannenbaum v. Rehm, 152 Ala. 494;

11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 700, 126 Am. St. Rep. 52, 44 So. 532; Hartford v. Parsons, 87 Conn. 412, 87 Atl. 736, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1182.

The respondent contends that said section, in requiring that it, as the operator of a theater in the city of Providence, should employ a fire guard or inspector at a salary of not less than $8 per day, and that said guard should not be discharged; nor his salary reduced, except with the approval of the board of fire commissioners, interferes with the respondent's right to freely contract with its servant, and thus deprives it of its liberty without due process of law. It has been held that the right to make contracts is embraced in the conception of liberty guaranteed by the 14th Amendment. This was pointed out by the court in Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 832, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427; Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 49 L. ed. 937, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133; Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161, 52 L. ed. 436, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277, 13 Ann. Cas. 764; Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 1, 59 L. ed. 441, L.R.A. 1915C, 960, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240.

It may be noted in passing that the respondent and the majority opinion place great reliance upon the authority of the cases just cited, but the legislation under review in those cases had no reference to health, safety, morals, or the public welfare; and it is in the regulation of those matters alone that the legitimate field is presented for the exercise of the police power. In Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 832, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427, the court was considering the application of a statute of Louisiana, regulating insurance upon property in said state, to a contract of insurance made in New York. In Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 49 L. ed. 937, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133, a statute of New York regulating the hours of labor of bakers was declared to have no relation to public health, and not an exercise of the police power. In Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161, 52 L. ed. 436, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277, 13 Ann. Cas. 764, an act of Congress making it an offense for a public carrier to discharge an employee because he was a member of a labor organization was held not to be within the power of Congress in the regulation of interstate commerce. In Coppage v. Kansas, the court was considering a statute of Kansas making it a misdemeanor for an employer to require an employee to agree not to become or remain a member of a labor organization during the time of the employment. Those cases, therefore, are not in point upon the question now before us. They all admit that, when the police power may properly be exercised for the preservation of public health and safety, as Mr. Justice Pitney says in Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 1, 59 L. ed. 441, L.R.A.1915C, 960, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240, "such police regulations may reasonably limit the enjoyment of personal liberty, including the right of making contracts."

Mr. Justice Hughes, in commenting upon these cases in Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McGuire, 219 U. S. 549, at page 567, 55 L. ed. 328, 338, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 259, 262, says: "But it was recognized in the cases cited, as in many others, that freedom of contract is a qualified and not an absolute right;" and further, that the right to make contracts "is subject also, in the field of state action, to the essential authority of government to maintain peace and security, and to enact laws for the promotion of the health, safety, morals, and welfare of those subject to its jurisdiction."

Said justice then cites, at page 568 of 219 U. S., a list of cases in the United States Reports which support the doctrine which he has enunciated.

In Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McGuire, supra, the court held that the "state has power to prohibit contracts limiting liability for injuries made in advance of the injury received, and to provide that the subsequent acceptance of benefits under such contract shall not constitute satisfaction of the claim for injuries received after the contract," and that "such a statute does not impair the liberty of contract guaranteed by the 14th Amendment."

In State v. Read, 12 R. I. 137, the defendant had been convicted on a complaint charging him with "keeping and exposing for sale certain drinks, food, and merchandise" in violation of the following statute: "Section 1. Whenever any religious society shall hold any camp, tent, grove, or other outdoor meeting, for any purpose connected with the object for which such religious society was organized, no person, without the consent of such religious society or of its proper officers, shall keep in any shop, tent, booth, wagon or carriage, or other place for sale, or expose for sale any spirituous or intoxicating liquors, or other drinks, or food, or merchandise of any kind, or hawk or peddle any such liquors, or merchandise within one mile of the place of such meeting: . . .

Provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent innkeepers, grocers, or other persons from pursuing their ordinary business at their usual place of doing business, nor to prevent any person from selling victuals in his usual place of abode." Laws R. I. 1877, chap. 629.

The defendant had leased land for the purpose of selling food, but the statute prohibited his enjoying the privileges provided for in his contract. He, as well as all landowners, except "innkeepers, grocers or other persons," "pursuing their ordinary business at their usual place of doing business," and a person "selling victuals in his usual place of abode," within 1 mile of the meeting, was by the act denied the liberty of acquiring property by making contracts for the sale of food and other merchandise. But this court held that the statute was constitutional as a valid police regulation.

In the case of Re Williams, 79 Kan. 212, 98 Pac. 777, the court upheld a statute which interfered with the petitioner's liberty of making contracts for the sale or delivery of black powder. The act provided as follows: "It shall be unlawful for any individual, firm or corporation to sell, offer for sale or deliver for use at any coal mine or mines in the state of Kansas, black powder in any manner except in original packages containing twelve and one-half pounds of powder, said package to be securely sealed," etc. Kan. Laws 1907, chap. 250.

The statute applied to no explosive except black powder, and was limited to coal mines; but the court held that the act was a valid police regulation, and did not violate the state Constitution or the 14th Amendment.

In Dayton Coal & I. Co. v. Barton, 103 Tenn. 604, 53 S. W. 970, the court upheld a statute which interfered with the obligation of contract, existing between employer and employee, that the employee should receive a certain portion of his wages in orders on the employer's store. The act provided: "That all persons using store orders to pay their employees shall, if demanded, redeem the same in the hands of the employee or a bona fide holder, in money." Tenn. Laws 1899, chap. 11, § 1.

The court held that the statute was a valid police regulation, and did not violate the state Constitution or the 14th Amendment.

And in Davis Coal Co. v. Polland, 158 Ind. 607, 92 Am. St. Rep. 319, 62 N. E. 492, where the statute required as a safety appliance that mines be propped up, and gave a right of action to employees for any injury occasioned by failure to comply with the provisions of the statute, the employee not only knew the risk, but had by contract with the mine owner waived the right provided by statute to have the mine roof propped up for his safety. The court held that the contract was unenforceable, and that the employee could recover for the injuries received by reason of the owner's failure to do that which the employee had agreed for a good consideration that the owner need not do. The court held that the act was a proper police measure, and not unconstitutional.

See People ex rel. New York Electric Lines Co. v. Squire, 107 N. Y. 593, 1 Am. St. Rep. 893, 14 N. E. 820. The city of New York had by contract given the electrical company the right to use the city streets. The statute requiring electrical conductors to be placed underground imposed a heavy financial burden upon the electrical company as a condition precedent to its enjoying the benefits to be derived from its contract. The New York court held that the act was a valid police measure, and was not unconstitutional as in violation of the contract wherein the electrical company obtained from the city the right to use the streets. On appeal the act was upheld by the United States Supreme Court. See New York ex rel. New York Elec. Lines Co. v. Squire, 145 U. S. 175, 36 L. ed. 666, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 880.

In Brick Presby. Church v. New York, 5 Cow. 540, an ordinance was held valid which prohibited the use for burial purposes of land which the city had previously conveyed to the plaintiff for church and cemetery purposes, by deed containing full covenants of warranty. The court held the ordinance to be a valid police measure.

In New York ex rel. Silz v. Hesterberg, 211 U. S. 31, 53 L. ed. 75, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10, an act prohibiting the purchase, sale, or possession of game during the closed season, even when the game was lawfully killed in a foreign country, was held to be a proper police regulation, and not in violation of the state Constitution or the 14th Amendment. In Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 40 L. ed. 793, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 600, an act was held valid as a police measure which prohibited the sale and shipment out of the state of game lawfully killed. To the same effect, see Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 1, 32 L. ed. 346, 2

Inters. Com. Rep. 232, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 6; Hall v. De Cuir, 95 U. S. 485, 24 L. ed. 547; Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 99, 23 L. ed. 819, and Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23.

In the following cases statutes limiting the right to contract have been held constitutional, as valid police measures: In Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 388, an act limiting labor in mines to eight hours a day; in Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 28 L. ed. 1145, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730, an act prohibiting work in laundries from 10 P. M. to 6 A. M., and to the same effect see Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 928, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77, an act fixing the maximum charge for storing grain and prohibiting contracts for a larger amount, and in Frisbie v. United States, 157 U. S. 160, 39 L. ed. 657, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 586, an act of Congress prohibiting attorneys from contracting for a larger fee than $10 for prosecuting pension claims.

In Opinion of Justices (Re House Bill No. 1230) 163 Mass. 589, 28 L.R.A. 344, 40 N. E. 713, the court held constitutional an act requiring all corporations, copartnerships, or individuals engaged in any manufacturing business and employing more than twenty-five employees to pay wages weekly, thus interfering with the right freely to contract.

In Gundling v. Chicago, 177 U. S. 183, 188, 44 L. ed. 725, 728, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 638, 635, the court said: "Regulations respecting the pursuit of a lawful trade or business are of very frequent occurrence in the various cities of the country, and what such regulations shall be, and to what particular trade, business, or occupation they shall apply, are questions for the state to determine, and their determination comes within the proper exercise of the police power by the state, and unless the regulations are so utterly unreasonable and extravagant in their nature and purpose that the property and the personal rights of the citizen are unnecessarily, and in a manner wholly arbitrary, interfered with or destroyed without due process of law, they do not extend beyond the power of the state to pass, and they form no subject for Federal interference."

We have at this length considered the respondent's claim that under the 14th Amendment there has been secured to the theater manager the absolute and unqualified right to contract as to the service and the compensation of the fireguard or inspector stationed at its theater, and that said § 5, in violation of the 14th Amendment, has undertaken to control the contract between it as a master and said inspector as a servant. In making this contention the respondent and the majority opinion completely lose sight of the fundamental principles underlying the relation of master and servant. These principles are too elementary to require statement, save for the fact they have been entirely disregarded by said argument and majority opinion. The relation of master and servant exists only when "the employer retains the right to direct the manner in which the business shall be done, as well as the result to be accomplished, or, in other words, not only what shall be done, but how it shall be done." 26 Cyc. 966.

"He is to be deemed a master who has the superior choice, control, and direction of the servant, and whose will the servant represents, not merely in the ultimate result of the work, but in the details." 26 Cyc. 965.

An examination of said § 5 unmistakably indicates that the relation there established between a theater operator and a fire inspector is entirely lacking in the elements essential to the relation of master and servant. Disregarding for the time those provisions the validity of which the respondent questions, viz., fixing a minimum salary and providing that the fireguard may not be discharged, or his salary reduced, "except with the prior approval of said board," it appears that in the city of Providence the licensee of a theater shall employ a suitable person, approved by the board of fire commissioners, who shall be stationed in such theater during the time any audience is present therein, who shall perform the duties prescribed by the board to guard against fire, and to protect life and property in case of fire in such theater, who shall not have any other duty, and in case said board at any time shall withdraw its approval of such person, another person, approved by said board, shall be employed in his stead. The theater licensee has neither the unrestricted choice, control, nor direction of the inspector. Such licensee can only employ an inspector approved by the board of fire commissioners. The period during which his services are to be performed is fixed by law. The licensee cannot prescribe his duty, such direction being vested in the fire commission; the licensee may not require or receive services from the inspector beyond the duties prescribed by said board. If said board is not satisfied with the manner in which the inspector performs his duties, he must be replaced by another inspector approved by the board; and the power is given to the board, and not to the licensee, to prescribe the uniform and the badge to be worn by such inspector.

Said section does use the word "employ" with reference to the appointment of such inspector. The respondent seizes upon said word as indicative of the nature of the inspector's service, and appears to assume that, since masters "employ" their servants, the employment of the inspector by the licensee makes said inspector the servant of the licensee. Such reasoning magnifies the use of a somewhat indefinite word into an indication of legislative intent contrary to and inconsistent with all the other provisions of said section. It is plain that the limit of the intention of the general assembly in the use of the word "employ" was to permit the theater licensee in Providence to nominate for the approval of the fire commissioners, or to select for their approval, the person who should act as fire inspector in the theater of such licensee; but the person so nominated, when approved by the board, did not become in the slightest particular the servant of such licensee, but became the person charged with the performance of a public duty under the direction of the board of fire commissioners. For the court to give the conclusive force to the word "employ" which the respondent urges would be to question the deliberate action of a co-ordinate branch of the government upon a mere verbal quibble, and to magnify what is clearly circumstantial into something essential and intrinsic.

Under the statute the nature of the duties to be performed by the theater fireguards in each of the cities of the state is the same, whether said fireguard be a member of the fire department of such city or a person selected by the theater licensee and approved by the board of fire commissioners or the chief of the fire department of such city, save that in the city of Providence it is specially provided that the duties of the fireguard shall be restricted to the public duty of guarding against fire, and protecting life and property in case of fire, and that he shall have no other duty. This provision would completely exclude the performance by the inspector of any service for the theater licensee in the ordinary conduct of its business as the operator of a theater. It is clear to us that the fireguard stationed in a theater is not the servant of the theater licensee, but a person charged with the performance of a public duty, and all the respondent's criticism of said § 5 as an attempt to interfere with its right to contract freely with its servant is without point or pertinency.

One of the tests which the respondent suggests, to establish that the fire inspector is his servant, is that the respondent would be responsible for the result of the inspector's negligence. A master may be compelled to respond in damages for the negligent act of his servant, but the theater manager would not be liable for the negligent act of the fireguard in the performance of his duties, because the manager cannot direct or control the acts of the fireguard. The board of fire commissioners has certified to the competency of the fireguard. The fireguard cannot be discharged by the manager without permission from the board of fire commissioners. The manager is not the master and the fireguard is not a servant. See Durkin v. Kingston Coal Co. 171 Pa. 193, 29 L.R.A. 808, 50 Am. St. Rep. 801, 33 Atl. 237, which was an action of negligence for injury to a coal miner, brought against the mine owner. The statute provided that no person "shall be permitted to act as mine foreman" until after examination by an examining board created by the state, and a certification as to qualification by the mine inspector appointed by the governor. The statute required all mine owners and operators to "employ" a certified mine foreman under penalty of a fine of $25 per day. The duties of the mine foreman are prescribed by the act, and the owners or operators of the mines cannot interfere with his duties. The act provides that "for any injury to person or property occasioned by any violation of this act or any failure to comply with its provisions by any . . . mine foreman a right of action shall accrue to the party injured against said owner or operator for any direct damages he may have sustained thereby." Act Pa. June 2, 1891 (P. L. 207) art. 17, § 8.

The court, holding that the mine owner was not liable in spite of the statute making him liable for the negligence of the certified mine foreman, said: "This statute, regarded as a whole, is an extraordinary piece of legislation. Through it the lawmakers say to the mine owner: 'You cannot be trusted to manage your own business. Left to yourself, you will not properly care for your own employees. We will determine what you shall do. In order to make it certain that our directions are obeyed, we will set a mine foreman over your mines with authority to direct the manner in which your operations shall be conducted, and what precautions shall be taken for the safety of your employees. You shall take for this position a man whom we certify to as competent. You shall pay him his salary. What he orders done in your mines you shall pay for. If, notwithstanding out certificate, he turns out to be incompetent or untrustworthy, you shall be responsible for his ignorance or negligence.'"

The statute was held to be unconstitutional, so far as it purported to make the mine owner liable for the negligence of the certified foreman.

The respondent contends that, if the provisions of § 5 are held to be valid, such determination will require us to approve the constitutional soundness of all legislation which may assume to fix by statute the wages of private employees, when the performance of their duties has any relation to public safety, as, for example, the wages of locomotive engineers, motormen, chauffeurs, and the like, and, finally, that we must approve legislative regulation of the wages of any class of workmen with which the general assembly may see fit to deal. Such argument is clearly specious. All such private employees and workmen are servants of a private master, performing such master's business in accordance with the master's direction. That the safety of the public frequently depends upon the proper performance of their duties is merely an incident of their occupation. A fire inspector stationed in a theater is not engaged in the service of a private master. He is performing the duties prescribed by law under the direction of a public board. His duty is to the public. The public is the master, and it is for the public, as represented by the lawmaking power of the state, to fix his compensation and to regulate the terms of his employment. No principle is better settled than that compensation for the performance of public duties may be fixed by law, whether such compensation is paid from the public treasury or charged against the business in relation to which it is to be performed.

The burden upon the theater manager consists in being obliged to pay the compensation of the fireman or fireguard stationed in his theater; it is a matter of no consequence to him, and it has no bearing upon the reasonableness of the charge or the constitutionality of the act whether he be required to pay said compensation to the city, and the city pay the fireman or inspector, or that the manager be directed to pay the fireman or inspector directly. The manner of payment is a matter of detail; the vital consideration is whether such manager should be compelled to pay the charge at all. There is a long line of decisions holding that, whenever any business or line of business affects the public health, safety, morals, or welfare, thereby becoming a proper subject for police regulation, the fees and charges for inspection, or otherwise for protecting the public against the dangers incident to such business, may be imposed upon the business itself, regardless of whether any special franchise or privilege had been conferred upon such business, or that it was one affected with a public interest, or was one merely of private interest.

In Willis v. Standard Oil Co. 50 Minn. 290, 52 N. W. 652, it was held that a statute requiring illuminating oil which was held for sale to be first inspected, and fixing the fees for inspection, was a valid exercise of the police power, and the court said: "On its face the act is a bona fide police regulation, a proper inspection law, and not a law levying a tax. What is a reasonable fee for inspection under such laws must depend largely upon the sound discretion of the legislature, having reference to all the circumstances and necessities of the case; and, unless it is manifestly unreasonable, in view of the purpose of the law, as a police regulation, the court will not adjudge it a tax."

In Consolidated Coal Co. v. People, 186 Ill. 134, 56 L.R.A. 266, 57 N. E. 880, the court held "that under the police power the legislature has the right to provide for the inspection of mines, and that it also has the right to place the burden of the expense of such inspections upon the mine owners," and that a law was not in violation of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, as one denying equal protection of the laws or taking property without due process of law, because it did not lay down proper rules for its impartial execution in fixing fees to be charged upon a basis of the number of men employed, size of the mine, or "some definite circumstance or condition," and fixing a reasonable number of inspections to be made annually, by which the exercise of an arbitrary discretion might be avoided. The inspection fee was fixed at not less than $6 nor more than $10 a visit. By statute, it became the inspector's duty to inspect "as often as he may deem necessary and proper," and "at least four times a year."

In New Orleans v. Kee, 107 La. 762, 31 So. 1014, the court held an ordinance constitutional which provided for inspection of laundries and required the laundry to pay the inspection fee. In Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Board of Health, 118 U. S. 455, 30 L. ed. 237, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1114, a statute was held to be valid which required steamship vessels to submit to inspection and pay a fee therefor.

In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Baldwin, 85 Ala. 619, 7 L.R.A. 266, 5 So. 311, an act made it a misdemeanor for any railroad to have in its employ any engineer, fireman, brakeman, conductor, gateman, signalman, etc., who did not "possess a certificate of fitness therefor in so far as color blindness and visual powers are concerned," issued by a medical examiner provided for by the act. The railroad company was obliged to pay the examination fee, fixed by the act at $3. The plaintiff brought suit to recover from the railroad his fees for examining, in his capacity as medical examiner, employees of the defendant. The court held that the act was not in violation of the 14th Amendment.

In People v. Harper, 91 Ill. 357, the court held an act constitutional which created a board with powers to fix the fees for inspecting grain. In Louisiana State Bd. of Health v. Standard Oil Co. 107 La. 713, 31 So. 1015, the court held that the act which required the plaintiff board to inspect coal oil throughout the state by reasonable implication conferred upon the board authority to exact an inspection fee from the dealer in oil. In Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 96, 32 L. ed. 852, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 288, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28, the court considered the provision of a statute requiring a railroad to pay a fee fixed at $3 for the examination of certain of its employees as to color blindness and visual powers, and held the same to be constitutional, as not depriving such railroad of property without due process of law. In Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465, 31 L. ed. 508, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 804, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564, the plaintiff in error, a locomotive engineer, had been convicted of operating a locomotive without a license prescribed in a statute which required all engineers to be examined by a state board of examiners as to their fitness to operate locomotives, and forbade the operation of a locomotive by an engineer, not possessing such license, on the main line for the purpose of hauling passengers or freight. The examination fee was fixed at $3, which was required to be paid by the engineer. The court held that the act did not contravene the Constitution of the United States, and that the statute was valid under the police power of the state. Upon the point now under consideration, see Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. v. Gibbes, 142 U. S. 386, 35 L. ed. 1051, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Daniels v. Hilgard, 77 Ill. 640, 15 Mor. Min. Rep. 280; People v. Smith, 108 Mich. 527, 32 L.R.A. 853, 62 Am. St. Rep. 715, 66 N. W. 382; People ex rel. New York Electric Lines Co. v. Squire, 107 N. Y. 593, 1 Am. St. Rep. 893, 14 N. E. 820; State v. Murlin, 137 Mo. 297, 38 S. W. 923; Com. ex rel. Williams v. Bonnell, 8 Phila. 534, 15 Mor. Min. Rep. 14; Davis Coal Co. v. Polland, 158 Ind. 607, 92 Am. St. Rep. 319, 62 N. E. 492.

A somewhat novel case of a law aiming to protect the public against the dangers incident to a business is considered in State v. Cassidy, 22 Minn. 312, 21 Am. Rep. 765. An act making it an offense to sell spirituous liquors without having a special license (in addition to all other licenses), for which a fee of $10 must be paid, "to establish a fund for the foundation and maintenance of an asylum for inebriates," was held to be a valid exercise of the police power. In Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104, 55 L. ed. 112, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1062, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 487, the court considered a statute of Oklahoma which provided for a levy upon all banks existing under the laws of the state of an assessment of a percentage of each bank's average deposits to pay the loss arising to depositors in banks which might become insolvent. The court sustained the constitutionality of this statute, and held that, when the legislature of Oklahoma declared that said regulation was a necessary safeguard to banking, the court cannot say that it is wrong. Upon petition for rehearing the court said (219 U. S. at page 580): "We fully understand the practical importance of the question, and the very powerful argument that can be made against the wisdom of the legislation; but on that point we have nothing to say, as it is not our concern."

It is no just criticism of the amount of compensation fixed by law for public office, or public servfee, that perhaps some person may be found in the community who will undertake to perform it for less. The provisions of § 5, wherein the general assembly in its legislative discretion has fixed $3 per day as the compensation of a fireguard cannot be regarded as unconstitutional because the respondent, before the passage of the act, was able to make an arrangement with Mr. Gallagher to act for $2 per day. Such a principle, if adopted by this court, would lead to a declaration of the unconstitutionality of a great number of acts of the general assembly in which a fee is fixed or compensation provided for the performance of some public act.

We have in this state many statutes providing for inspection and inspection fees. See the following chapters of General Laws 1909: Chapter 220 requires the insurance commissioner to examine insurance companies, and the insurance company to pay the commissioner the expense of such examination. Chapter 157 provides for the inspection and branding of beef and pork, and fixes the fees which are to be paid by the dealer and retained by the inspector, and imposes penalties in certain cases for sale without inspection. Said chapter 157 and § 6 of chapter 30 were amended by chapter 1026 of the Public Laws of 1914, by fixing a salary for the state inspector, and providing that the inspection fees should be turned over to the general treasurer; but the cities and towns may still elect inspectors of beef and pork and "provide for their compensation by salary or fees." Chapter 158 provides for the inspection of hides and leather, and fixes the inspector's fees, which are to be paid by the owner and retained by the inspector. Chapter 159 provides for the inspection of lime, fixes the inspection fees, to be paid by the burner of the lime and retained by the inspector, and imposes a penalty for selling or exporting lime not branded by the inspector. Chapter 160 provides for the inspection of fish, fixes the inspection fees to be paid by the owner and retained by the inspector, and imposes a penalty for selling fish not inspected and branded. Chapter 161 provides for the inspection and survey of lumber shipped into this state, fixes the fees, to be paid by the owner and retained by the inspector, and imposes a penalty for dealing in such lumber which has not been inspected and surveyed. Chapter 162 provides for the inspection of hoops, fixes the fees to be paid by the owner and retained by the inspector, and imposes a penalty for shipping hoops which have not been inspected. Chapter 163 provides for the inspection of scythe stones, fixes the fees, to be paid by the owner and retained by the inspector, and imposes a penalty for selling or exporting scythe stones which have not been inspected. Chapter 164 provides for the inspection of saleratus, soda, and cream of tartar, fixing a fee for inspection and certificate of analysis, which is to be paid by the dealer and retained by the inspector, and imposes a penalty for selling such articles when impure. Chapter 165 provides for the measure and sale of grain, meal, and salt, fixes the fees, to be paid by the owner and retained by the official measurer, and imposes a penalty for the sale of such articles from a vessel or railroad car in quantities greater than 25 bushels, without having the same duly measured and duly certified by the official measurer. Chapter 166 provides that "all cotton sold in this state, unless specially agreed, shall be weighed" by the official weigher. Said chapter fixes the fees, which are to be paid by the owner and retained by the weigher. Chapter 170 provides for the inspection, sale, and keeping of inflammable and explosive fluids, fixes the fees, to be paid by the dealer and retained by the inspector, and imposes penalties for keeping or selling certain petroleum oils and products thereof which have not been inspected. Chapter 171 provides for weighing of neat cattle, fixes the fees for weighing, one half of which shall be paid by the seller and one half by the buyer, to be retained by the town weigher, and imposes a penalty on persons "slaughtering or weighing any neat cattle, and being obliged to account for the same to the owner or seller thereof as aforesaid, who shall not weigh and account" for all "parts of such cattle denominated weighable as aforesaid." Chapter 194 provides for sealing of weights and measures, fixes the fees, which are to be paid by the owner and retained by the official sealer, and imposes a penalty for using weights or measures which have not been sealed. Chapter 195 provides for gauging, fixes the fees, to be paid by the owner and retained by the gauger, and imposes a penalty for selling commodities by gauge or gauge marks not made by an official gauger.

Perhaps the market man, like the theater manager, would prefer to have his business inspected and regulated by his own servant. We have no doubt that the market man could save a considerable expense by having his large number of weights and measures sealed by one of his employees possessing the requisite skill. It is probable that such market man could arrange with his employee to do the work for a compensation much less than the statutory fee of the public sealer. That fact, however, has no bearing upon the question of the constitutionality of the statute relating to the sealing of weights and measures. It is the policy of the law to surround a public official with a degree of independence, the better to enable him faithfully to perform his duties to the public.

My conclusion that § 5 provides for the performance by the fire inspector of a public duty, and not of a private service for the theater manager, is really determinative of the questions before us, because, as I have already said, it is undoubtedly within the power of the general assembly to fix the compensation and regulate the employment of this public inspector. I will, however, consider at length the contention of the respondent that the provisions fixing the compensation of this public servant at $3 per day, providing that his salary shall not be reduced by the theater manager, and that he may not be discharged by the theater manager, are entirely arbitrary, and have no reasonable relation to the protection of audiences in theaters in the city of Providence.

For the proper understanding of the cases in which a party has questioned the constitutionality of legislation purporting to be enacted under the police power, the distinction between the question of legislative power and the matter of legislative policy must always be borne in mind. Mr. Justice Hughes, in Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McGuire, 219 U. S. at page 569, 55 L. ed. 339, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 263, says: "The principle involved in these decisions is that, where the legislative action is arbitrary and has no reasonable relation to a purpose which it is competent for government to effect, the legislature transcends the limits of its power in interfering with liberty of contract; but where there is reasonable relation to an object within the governmental authority, the exercise of the legislative discretion is not subject to judicial review. The scope of judicial inquiry in deciding the question of power is not to be confused with the scope of legislative consideration in dealing with the matter of policy. Whether the enactment is wise or unwise, whether it is based on sound economic theory, whether it is the best means to achieve the desired result, whether, in short, the legislative discretion within its prescribed limits should be exercised in a particular manner, are matters for the judgment of the legislature, and the earnest conflict of serious opinion does not suffice to bring them within the range of judicial cognizance."

In McLean v. Arkansas, 211 U. S. 547, 53 L. ed. 319, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 208, the court said: "The legislature, being familiar with local conditions, is, primarily, the judge of the necessity of such enactments. The mere fact that a court may differ with the legislature in its views of public policy, or that judges may hold views inconsistent with the propriety of the legislation in question, affords no ground for judicial interference, unless the act in question is unmistakably and palpably in excess of legislative power."

Courts, as evidenced by their opinions in many cases, have scrutinized very carefully the claims that legislation in question before them was within the scope of the police power. When, however, it has been determined that the matter as to which regulation has been provided did have such a relation to the public health, safety, morals, and welfare as to present a proper occasion for the exercise of the police power, then it has been recognized that a very wide discretion rests in the legislature in determining the policy or the methods to be employed in its exercise. In Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, at page 397, 42 L. ed. 780, 792, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 388, 390, the court said: "Though reasonable doubts may exist as to the power of the legislature to pass a law, or as to whether the law is calculated or adapted to promote the health, safety, or comfort of the people, or to secure good order, or promote the general welfare, we must resolve them in favor of the right of that department of government."

In speaking of the limits of judicial discretion, the court in Wilson v. New, 243 U. S. 332, at page 359, 61 L. ed. 755, 778, L.R.A. 1917E, 988, 87 Sup. Ct. Rep. 298, 306, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 1024, said: "While it is a truism to say that the duty to enforce the Constitution is paramount and abiding, it is also true that the very highest of judicial duties is to give effect to the legislative will, and in doing so to scrupulously abstain from permitting subjects which are exclusively within the field of legislative discretion to influence our opinion, or to control judgment."

This principle has been adopted by this court without a contrary opinion, down to the present time. In East Shore Land Co. v. Peckham, 33 R. I. 541, at page 548, 82 Atl. 491, this court said: "All statutes are presumed to be valid and constitutional, and the burden of proving the unconstitutionality of any statute is upon the party raising the question; furthermore, the rule is that he must prove it beyond a reasonable doubt."

In State v. Kofines, 38 R. I. 211, at page 218, 80 Atl. 435, Ann. Cas. 1918C, 1120, the court said: "'A reasonable doubt is to be resolved in favor of the legislative action, and the act sustained. Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 252, and cases cited. 'Before an act is declared to be unconstitutional, it should clearly appear that it cannot be supported by any reasonable intendment or allowable presumption.' People ex rel. Burrows v. Orange County, 17 N. Y. 235, 241.' . . . Therefore it is incumbent upon the respondents to satisfy this court beyond all reasonable doubt that the act in question is unconstitutional in the particulars complained of."

The opinion of this court in Cleveland v. Tripp, 13 R. I. 50, at page 65, was as follows: "Our conclusion is that the complainants are not entitled to relief. We have reached this conclusion, not without much hesitation, but in obedience to the rule that a statute duly enacted, however questionable it may be in point of constitutionality, is not to be pronounced void for unconstitutionality until the court is clearly convinced of it."

In Re Ten Hour Law, 24 R. I. 603, 606, 61 L.R.A. 612, 54 Atl. 603, this court said: "Both this court in State v. Peckham, 3 R. I. 289, and the Supreme Court of the United States in Munn v. People, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77, have declared that the legislature is the exclusive judge of the propriety and necessity of legislative interference within the scope of legislative power. If a state of facts could exist which would justify legislation, it is to be presumed that it did exist."

We will now consider the policy or the method adopted by the general assembly in § 5, for the purpose of guarding the safety of audiences in theaters in the city of Providence. It would tend to a better understanding of this policy of the general assembly if we should note the historical development in this state of legislation of this character. By § 5, chap. 131, Gen. Laws 1909, it was provided that the board of fire commissioners, or, in case there was no such board, the chief of the fire department, in every city, should station in every theater during the time any audience was present therein a fireman, and the licensee of the theater should pay such city for the attendance of said fireman $2 for every day during which a performance should be given in such theater. By reason of the great increase in the number of theaters in the city of Providence, the demands upon the fire department by reason of the assignment of firemen for service in the theaters became so great that by chapter 1366, Pub. Laws 1916, it was provided that, instead of a fireman being stationed by the board of fire commissioners in each theater in the city of Providence, the licensee of such theater should "employ" a suitable person, approved by said board, who should be stationed in such theater, who should there perform the duties prescribed by said board, and who should have no other duties, whose continuance in service depended upon the continued approval of the board, and who should not be discharged by said licensee, except with the prior approval of said board. The next change came in the January session, 1919, when by chapter 1718 of the Public Laws it was provided that the proprietor of a theater in Newport should pay $3 per day, instead of $2 per day, to the city, for the services of a fireman stationed in a theater. By the provisions of chapter 1780, Public Laws 1919, § 5 was again amended to the form in which it now stands, the essential parts of which have been quoted above.

It cannot be questioned that by the original provisions of § 5 a city fireman stationed in a theater was not the servant of the theater manager, but was a person performing a public function, and for that public service it was within the power of the legislature to compel the theater manager to pay the city. This is in accord with the cases cited above. For the reasons that we have named, the city was relieved of the duty of assigning members of the fire department for service in theaters, and the theater manager was permitted to select a person who should act as a fireguard in his theater, but with great particularity the duties of the fireguard or inspector so selected are designated and his relations to the fire board are defined. It is clear that the legislature intended that in every respect, save in the method of selection, the fireguard should exactly take the place of the city fireman. Everything that the city fireman had formerly done the fireguard must do; and the exclusive oversight and control which the board of fire commissioners had over its fireman was continued in it over the fireguard selected by the theater manager. If, instead of permitting the theater manager to select a person for the approval of the board, the statute had provided that the theater manager should choose for service in his theater one from a body of theater fire inspectors first selected and established by the board of fire commissioners, would the situation have been different? In either case the manner of selection would be an immaterial circumstance.

The essential matter in determining the legal status of the fireguard in his relations to the theater manager is the nature of his service. It was unmistakably public service formerly performed by the public fireman. The inspector is exercising a public function and discharging a public duty. There can be no question that for that public duty the legislature might fix the compensation. At first in its discretion the legislature did not fix the compensation, but left it to such arrangement as should be made between the theater manager and the inspector. Later in its discretion the legislature saw fit to name the minimum amount of compensation which the fire inspector should receive for his public service, and further provided that the same should not be reduced without the prior approval of the board of fire commissioners. This court should not assume that these later provisions were enacted from any desire on the part of the legislature, either to benefit the person who might act as fire inspector, or to oppress the theater manager; but we should assume that such provisions, in the judgment of the general assembly, had a direct bearing upon the efficiency of the fire inspectors, and hence upon the safety of theater audiences in Providence. In accordance with the universally accepted doctrine, all presumptions must be in favor of the validity of legislative action, and if upon any view such action would be justified, it should be permitted to stand. That has always been the position of this court. It was said in Re Ten Hour Law, 24 R. I. 608, 61 L.R.A. 612, 54 Atl. 603: "If a state of facts could exist which would justify legislation, it is to be presumed that it did exist."

The determination as to the reasonableness of the provisions as to compensation, and whether they have a fair connection with the efficiency of fire inspectors, depends upon a knowledge of the facts regarding the situation, and what experience has shown to the public authorities in the city of Providence. This knowledge can be gained only by investigation. The legislature can make such investigation; this court cannot. People v. Smith, 108 Mich. 527, 32 L.R.A. 853, 62 Am. St. Rep. 715, 66 N. W. 382; Horton

v. Old Colony Bill Posting Co. 36 R. I. 507, 90 Atl. 822, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 911. After the general assembly has made its investigation, and determined upon the regulations which in its judgment are desirable and tend to promote the public safety, this court should not oppose to that judgment of the legislature, based upon such investigation, the court's conclusions founded entirely upon conjecture as to the situation. It was stated to us in argument that, at the hearing before the committee of the general assembly, it appeared that a certain theater manager in Providence desired to be relieved of the presence of an inspector, who appeared to said manager to be too zealous in insisting upon an observance of the directions which the fire board had made for the public safety, but whose conduct and service had the full approval of said board. The manager was unable to discharge the inspector directly, but accomplished the same indirectly by reducing his compensation to such a low figure that the inspector was forced to resign. Upon this the legislature, in its discretion, in order that the personal interests of an inspector should not make him seek the favor of a theater manager rather than zealously observe the directions of the fire board, fixed upon $3 per day as a fair and reasonable minimum compensation for such inspector in Providence, and provided that such compensation should not be reduced, save with the approval of the board of fire commissioners. Now we will not accept that statement made by counsel before us, although not contradicted, as being an exact statement of the facts, nor as representing the reason that caused the legislature to adopt said provisions, but we will receive it as part of an argument by the state, setting forth a possible situation which might confront the public authorities in Providence, and might appeal to the discretion of the general assembly. It is surely a state of facts which could exist, and, as we have said in

Re Ten Hour Law, supra, "if a state of facts could exist which would justify legislation, it is to be presumed that it did exist."

It has been suggested that the provisions as to salary, particularly the provision that the salary should not be reduced without the approval of the fire board, are entirely unnecessary provisions; that the object of the legislation, which is to protect the safety of audiences, would be as adequately secured if these provisions were omitted. It has been urged that, if an inspector appears to the board of fire commissioners to be unfaithful, it may require his removal and the selection of another man, and that to give to said board rather than to the theater licensee control over his salary is entirely unnecessary. The value of this method of protecting a theater audience depends upon the efficiency of the inspection. It requires no argument to establish the proposition that it will tend to that efficiency if the inspector is in every way dependent upon the board, and all his interests compel him to a faithful and painstaking observance of their directions, rather than that, as to his personal interest, he should look to the theater manager, whose notions of necessary regulation may not be in accordance with that of the fire board. If in that divided loyalty his desire to obtain the favor of his paymaster leads him to be lax in his duty to the public, it is not enough to say that for that laxity he may be removed, for before the inefficiency may be discovered by the board a serious tragedy may have occurred. The suggestion of a lack of necessity for any of these regulations is entirely irrelevant to the consideration of the constitutionality of the section in question. Whether or not a given regulation shall appear to a court to be necessary or unnecessary is not the criterion of constitutionality. The regulations which should be prescribed to effect a given purpose are matters addressed to the wide powers of discretion and judgment possessed by the general assembly, and it is no valid objection to a regulation that its necessity should not be apparent to some mind which is not fully informed as to the situation and the particular purpose which is behind the regulation. If it was for the members of a court to prescribe the policy and method of regulation, they might adopt an entirely different scheme. They might be of the opinion that the plan of the legislature is practically faulty and ill-advised; that it will quite likely fail of its purpose, or that some of its details are unnecessary; but for any or all of these reasons the legislation in question should not be declared unconstitutional unless the provisions are without doubt unrelated to the matter under consideration, and so clearly unreasonable and arbitrary as to be oppressive. Our fundamental test must be applied. If a state of facts could exist which would justify the regulation, it is to be presumed that it did exist.

In the case dealing with billboard advertising in the city of Providence, Horton v. Old Colony Bill Posting Co. supra, the ordinance under consideration was passed in accordance with the authority given by statute to the city council of Providence to regulate such outdoor advertising "in order to preserve the health, safety, morals, and comfort of the inhabitants of this state." This was a delegation to said city council of a part of the police power of the state. An examination of said ordinance discloses a number of regulations which are not apparently necessary for the preservation of the health, safety, morals, and comfort of the inhabitants of the state. As to a number of the provisions this court was not free from doubt, even as to their reasonableness; yet they were approved. The court held that in view of the fact that the lawmaking body has far more opportunity to ascertain and meet the public need than the court can have, and "in view of the wide latitude permitted the legislative branch in determining the public needs and the appropriate remedies, the court should uphold the limitations on size" of billboards, imposed by this section, which in our opinion are not clearly unreasonable, and the court quoted with approval the language of the opinion in Re Wilshire (C. C.) 103 Fed. 620, as follows: "I entertain a good deal of doubt in respect to the reasonableness of the maximum limitation placed upon the structures in question by the municipal authorities of the city of Los Angeles, but the fact that this doubt exists is sufficient reason for the court to decline to adjudge the ordinance invalid. It is only in clear cases that such a judgment should be given."

In the foregoing part of the opinion I have dealt with the respondent's various contentions that said § 5 deprives the respondent of its liberty and property without due process of law. We find no validity in any of them. They are all based upon its misconception that the relation of the theater licensee to the fire inspector is that of master and servant; whereas in fact and law the fire inspector is a public servant, performing public duties, which it was clearly within the power of the state to regulate, and for which it might fix a compensation, and charge the payment of the same upon the theater manager whose business was the subject of the regulations.

The respondent's contention is that, inasmuch as said § 5 does not operate uniformly upon all the theaters in the state, the act is therefore in violation of article 1, § 2, of the Constitution of Rhode Island, which declares that "the burdens of the state ought to be fairly distributed among its citizens," and is in violation of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which requires that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of its laws.

The respondent contends that said § 5 imposes an unequal burden on him in the conduct of his business—in other words, imposes a heavier burden upon his theater and all other theaters situated in the city of Providence than it imposes on the same business in other cities. It is not suggested that the act is invalid because it operates only as to cities, and does not apply to the towns, and yet some of our towns have thickly populated and congested centers in which theaters are conducted. In Providence, the largest city in the state, we have special provisions for supplying fireguards or fire inspectors for the theaters. No fireguard is required for theaters situated in towns. In the cities of Pawtucket and Cranston theaters must pay the city $2 per day for a regular fireman stationed in the theater; theaters in Newport pay the city $3 per day for a regular fireman; theaters in Providence and Newport pay the same amount. In Providence, Woonsocket, and Central Falls theater licensees must "employ" a suitable person, approved in Providence by the board of fire commissioners, and in Woonsocket and Central Falls by the chief of the fire department. In Providence, the theater must pay whatever price may be necessary, which shall not be less than $3 per day, to secure a competent person approved by the board of fire commissioners.

The statute makes three classes of theaters and imposes a slightly different burden on each class; Providence and Newport in one class, Pawtucket and Cranston in another class, and those in Woonsocket and Central Falls in a third class. The Providence class differs from the Woonsocket and Central Falls class, in that the Providence theater must pay the fireguard at least $3 per day and such fireguard is not permitted to have any other duties; whereas in the Woonsocket and Central Falls class no minimum fee is fixed and the fireguard is not forbidden to have other duties. It is to be noted that the act applies equally to all theaters in the city of Providence.

Said § 5 is not in conflict with the Constitution of Rhode Island (art. 1, § 2), which reads as follows: "All free governments are instituted for the protection, safety and happiness of the people. All laws, therefore, should be made for the good of the whole; and the burdens of the state ought to be fairly distributed among its citizens."

In the case of Re Dorrance Street, 4 R. I. at page 249, Ames, Ch. J., in discussing the last clause of the foregoing section, said: "We will not stop to notice the very general language and declaratory form of this clause, setting forth principles of legislation rather than rules of constitutional law—addressed rather to the general assembly, by way of advice and direction, than to the courts, by way of enforcing restraint upon the lawmaking power. We do not mean to say that a law, purporting to impose a tax or burden of some sort upon the citizen, may not be in its distribution of the burden, both in design and effect, so outrageously subversive of all the rules of fairness as not to come so far within the purview of this general clause as to enable the court to save the citizen from oppression by declaring it to be void. But evidently a wide discretion with regard to the distribution of the burdens of state amongst the citizens was intended to be reposed in the general assembly by the will of the people, as signified in this clause of the Constitution. The form is 'ought to be,' the word is 'fairly' distributed, not 'equally' even—unless equality be fair, which it is not always in any sense, and never is in some senses; and especially the words are not 'equally upon property,' or words to that effect, as in the Constitution of Louisiana. . . . All taxation is more or less unfair, and in any proper sense even unequal. Perfect fairness would be to make all those who are benefited by the burdens of the state to bear them, and to extend the burden in due proportion to every person according to this benefit."

Of course it is not only impracticable, but impossible, to frame and enforce laws which do exact justice to all. Our statute requiring motor vehicles to be registered and licensed is a good example. In order to maintain and improve our state highway system, a tax is imposed on motor vehicles; no similar tax is imposed on horse-drawn vehicles using and impairing the highways. And again the annual tax itself is graduated according to the horse power of the motor vehicle, without any reference whatever to the time or distance which motor vehicles travel on the highways; motor trucks, particularly those transporting heavy loads, probably do far greater damage to the highways than do pleasure motor vehicles, which are required to pay a registration fee (dependent upon horse power) ranging from $5 to $25, while commercial motor vehicles, and motor trucks, regardless of the horse power thereof, pay a fee of $7. But such legislation has been held to be not unconstitutional. Hendrick v. Maryland, 235 U. S. 610, 59 L. ed. 385, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140; Kane v. New Jersey, 242 U. S. 160, 61 L. ed. 222, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 30.

While the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution provides that no state shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of its laws, this provision has been uniformly held to be entirely consistent with the power of a state legislature to make classification as to the subjects of legislation, provided all members of a class are treated equally. The following language was quoted with approval by this court in Sayles v. Foley, 38 R. I. 491, 96 Atl. 840, 12 N. C. C. A. 949: "In Jeffrey Mfg. Co. v. Blagg, 235 U. S. 576, 59 L. ed. 368, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 7 N. C. C. A. 570, it is stated: 'This court has many times affirmed the general proposition that it is not the purpose of the 14th Amendment, in the equal protection clause, to take from the states the right and power to classify the subjects of legislation. It is only when such attempted classification is arbitrary and unreasonable that the court can declare 'it beyond the legislative authority.' In Kidd v. Alabama, 188 U. S. 730, 738, 47 L. ed. 669, 672, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 401, the court says: 'We need not repeat the commonplaces as to the large latitude allowed to the states for classification upon any reasonable basis'—citing cases.

See also Horton v. Old Colony Bill Posting Co. 36 R. I. 507, 90 Atl. 822, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 911; Miller v. Wilson, 236 U. S. 373, 59 L. ed. 628, L.R.A. 1915F, 829, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 342; Bosley v. McLaughlin, 236 U. S. 385, 59 L. ed. 682, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 345; Singer Sewing Mach. Co. v. Brickell, 233 U. S. 304, 58 L. ed. 974, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493; Keokee Consol. Coke Co. v. Taylor, 234 U. S. 224, 58 L. ed. 1288, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 856; International Harvester Co. v. Missouri, 234 U. S. 199, 58 L. ed. 1276, 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 525, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 859; St. John v. New York, 201 U. S. 633, 637, 50 L. ed. 896, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 554, 5 Ann. Cas. 909.

Mr. Justice Van Devanter, in discussing the power of the legislature to make classification, said in Lindley v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co. 220 U. S. at page 78, 55 L. ed. 377, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 840, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 160: "The rules by which this contention must be tested, as is shown by repeated decisions of this court, are these: (1) The equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment does not take from the state the power to classify in the adoption of police laws, but admits of the exercise of a wide scope of discretion in that regard and avoids what is done only when it is without any reasonable basis, and therefore is purely arbitrary. (2) A classification having some reasonable basis does not offend against that clause merely because it is not made with mathematical nicety, or because in practice it results in some inequality. (3) When the classification in such a law is called in question, if any state of facts reasonably can be conceived that would sustain it, the existence of that state of facts at the time the law was enacted must be assumed.

(4) One who assails the classification in such a law must carry the burden of showing that it does not rest upon any reasonable basis, but is essentially arbitrary"—citing Bachtel v. Wilson, 204 U. S. 36, 41, 51 L. ed. 357, 359, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 243; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Melton, 218 U. S. 36, 54 L. ed. 921, 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 84, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 676; Ozan Lumber Co. v. Union County Nat. Bank, 207 U. S. 251, 256, 52 L. ed. 195, 197, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 89; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 132, 24 L. ed. 77, 86; Henderson Bridge Co. v. Henderson, 173 U. S. 592, 615, 43 L. ed. 823, 831, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 553.

As was said in Heath & M. Mfg. Co. v. Worst, 207 U. S. at page 354, 52 L. ed. 243, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 119: "A classification may not be merely arbitrary, but necessarily there must be great freedom of discretion, even though it result in 'ill-advised, unequal, and oppressive legislation.' "

In State v. Read, supra, 12 R. I. 137, this court held valid a statute making a very novel classification in reference to the use of land within 1 mile of an outdoor meeting held by any religious society. The statute prohibited all persons other than the religious society, except "innkeepers, grocers, or other persons, from pursuing their ordinary business at their usual place of doing business," and persons selling victuals in their usual place of abode from selling food or other merchandise within 1 mile of such meeting. The act was unnecessary to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors, as at the time of its passage statutes were in force, with penalties more severe, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors. To sell food on one's property (except "in his usual place of abode") within 1 mile of an outdoor meeting held by any religious society is made a misdemeanor by the statute, unless the sale be made with the consent of the society. Had the society consented to the acts complained of, the defendant would have been guilty of no offense. Giving the society the right to consent to such sales might be regarded as tantamount to creating a monopoly in the sale of food, etc., and hence creating a favored class. The statute prohibited all persons other than the society, within 1 mile radius of the meeting, from using their property in a particular manner without consent of the society. The statute imposed an unequal burden upon one class of landowners. It says in substance: "Whenever a religious society shall spread its tent in a community and hold its meetings, or holds its meetings out of doors in such community, that all landowners within 1 mile of such meeting lose the right, while such meeting is being so held, to use their property in the same manner as they may lawfully use it before the meeting commenced and after it ended."

Shore resorts, county fairs, and even the same religious societies, when holding their meetings in a church edifice, are not similarly protected from encroachment. But as the act applied to all religious societies, it was upheld as a valid exercise of the police power of the state.

In American Sugar Ref. Co. v. Louisiana, 179 U. S. 89, 45 L. ed. 102, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 43, it was held that "a state statute imposing a license tax upon persons and corporations carrying on the business of refining sugar and molasses does not, by exempting from such tax 'planters and farmers grinding and refining their own sugar and molasses,' deny sugar refiners the equal protection of the laws within the 14th Amendment."

In Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383, an act limiting labor, in mines only, to eight hours a day, was held a valid exercise of the police power, and not in violation of the 14th Amendment.

In McLeen v. Arkansas, 211 U. S. 539, 53 L. ed. 315, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 206, the court refused to hold a legislative act, requiring coal to be measured for payment of miners' wages before screening, to be an unreasonable police regulation, and held that the act was not unconstitutional under the due process or the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment, and held that it was not an unreasonable classification to divide coal mines into those where less than ten miners are employed, and those where more than that number are employed, and that a state police regulation is not unconstitutional under the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment because applicable only to mines where more than ten miners are employed.

In Louisiana State Bd. of Health v. Standard Oil Co. 107 La. 713, 31 So. 1015, the court considered an act which required the inspection of coal oil "in every city and town of not less than 2,000 inhabitants, except the city of New Orleans." Inspection in the latter city had been provided for by a special act. The court assumed that there was no question as to the constitutionality of the act under consideration.

In Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 26, 32 L. ed. 585, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207, a statute providing that if live stock strayed upon railroad tracks, by reason of there being no fence where the railroad had the right to fence, and were injured or killed, the railroad should be liable for the damage, and if such corporation neglects to pay the value of damage done to such stock within thirty days after notice in writing, accompanied by an affidavit of such injury or destruction, "such owner shall be entitled to recover double the value of the stock killed or damages caused thereto,"—was held not to be in violation of the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment. And in Missouri P. R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 29 L. ed. 468, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110, a similar statute was held to be a valid police regulation, as it provided against accident to life and property.

In Mountain Timber Co. v. Washington, 243 U. S. 219, 61 L. ed. 685, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 260, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 642, 13 N. C. C. A. 927, the Washington Workmen's Compensation Act (Laws 1911; p. 345) provided for the creation of a state fund for compensation of workmen injured, and dependents of workmen killed, in employments classed as hazardous, and abolished (except in certain cases) the action at law by employees against employers for damage due to negligence. The different hazardous industries were classified. The scheme was to tax each employer engaged in a given class, in proportion to his pay roll, to meet the loss in such class. Held, that the act did not violate the 14th Amendment. To the same effect, see Sayles v. Foley, 38 R. I. 484, 96 Atl. 340, 12 N. C. C. A. 949.

In New York C. R. Co. v. White, 243 U. S. 188, 61 L. ed. 667, L.R.A. 1917D, 1, 37 Sup. Ct. Rep. 247, Ann. Cas. 1917D, 629, 13 N. C. C. A. 943, the New York Workmen's Compensation Act (Consol. Laws, chap. 67), requiring the employer to secure the compensation required by the act to injured employees and their dependents, by insurance or by deposit of securities with the state commissioner, was held valid as not denying the equal protection of the laws.

In Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104, 55 L. ed. 112, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1062, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 487, the court sustained an Oklahoma statute which levied upon all banks existing under the laws of the state an assessment of a percentage of the bank's average deposits, to pay the loss of the depositors in insolvent banks.

In Minnesota Iron Co. v. Kline, 199 U. S. 598, 50 L. ed. 322, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 159, 19 Am. Neg. Rep. 625, an act provided that, in actions of negligence for personal injuries against railroads, the negligence of a fellow servant was no defense. Held, not in violation of the 14th Amendment, and not class legislation. To the same effect, see Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161.

In New York ex rel. Lieberman v. Van De Carr, 199 U. S. 552, 50 L. ed. 305, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 144, a statute prohibiting the sale of milk without a permit from the state board of health was held not in violation of the 14th Amendment as depriving persons in that business of their property without due process of law, or denying them the equal protection of the laws.

In Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McGuire, 219 U. S. 549, 55 L. ed. 328, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 259, the court, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Hughes, considered the validity of a statute limiting the rights of railroads and their employees to contract. The act applied to railroad corporations only. It was held that the "state has power to prohibit contracts limiting liability for injuries, made in advance of the injury received, and to provide that the subsequent acceptance of benefits under such contracts shall not constitute satisfaction of the claim for injuries received after the contract," and that such a statute does not impair the liberty of contract, take property without due process of law, or deny equal protection of the law, in violation of the 14th Amendment.

In New York ex rel. New York Electric Lines Co. v. Squire, 145 U. S. 175, 36 L. ed. 666, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 880 (107 N. Y. 593, 1 Am. St. Rep. 893, 14 N. E. 820), it was held that an Electrical Commission Act, to regulate electric light, power, etc., companies, violated no contractual rights of the corporation and was not in violation of the 14th Amendment that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. The board of commissioners was authorized to assess the several corporations affected by the act, to pay the expenses and salaries of the board. The act was held to be not unconstitutional, notwithstanding the fact that it applied only to cities with a population of more than 500,000.

In the case of Re Williams, 79 Kan. 212, 98 Pac. 777, the petitioner was convicted of selling powder in violation of a statute which provided: "It shall be unlawful for any individual, firm or corporation to sell, offer for sale or deliver for use at any coal mine or mines in the state of Kansas, black powder in any manner except in original packages containing twelve and one-half pounds of powder, said package to be securely sealed," etc. Kan. Laws 1907, chap. 250.

The act applied to no explosive except black powder and was limited to coal mines; but the court held that the statute did not violate the state Constitution or the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment. The court quoted with approval from Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 26, 29, 32 L. ed. 585, 586, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207, 208, as follows: "But the clause [of the 14th Amendment] does not limit, nor was it designed to limit, the subjects upon which the police power of the state may be exerted. The state can now, as before, prescribe regulations for the health, good order, and safety of society, and adopt such measures as will advance its interests and prosperity; and to accomplish this end special legislation must be resorted to in numerous cases, providing against accidents, disease, and danger, in the varied forms in which they may come. The nature and extent of such legislation will necessarily depend upon the judgment of the legislature as to the security needed by society."

See, also, State v. Cassidy, 22 Minn. 312, 21 Am. Rep. 765; Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. v. Gibbs, 142 U. S. 386, 35 L. ed. 1061, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Davis Coal Co. v. Pollard, 158 Ind. 607, 92 Am. St. Rep. 319, 62 N. E. 492; State v. Marlin, 137 Mo. 297, 38 S. W. 928; Gundling v. Chicago, 177 U. S. 183, 44 L. ed. 725, 20

Sup. Ct. Rep. 633; Dayton Coal & I. Co. v. Barton, 103 Tenn. 604, 53 S. W. 970; Harbison v. Knoxville Iron Co. 103 Tenn. 421, 56 L.R.A. 316, 76 Am. St. Rep. 682, 53 S. W. 955; Daniels v. Hilgard, 77 Ill. 640; W. W. Cargil Co. v. Minnesota, 180 U. S. 452, 45 L. ed. 619, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 423; People v. Smith, 108 Mich. 527, 82 L.R.A. 853, 62 Am. St. Rep. 715, 66 N. W. 382; Opinion of Justices, 34 R. I. 191, 83 Atl. 3.

Suppose the legislature, instead of passing the act in question, classifying the theaters of the state according to cities, had passed a general enabling act authorizing the various cities to adopt ordinances for the protection of audiences in theaters against fire. Each city, pursuant to such authority, might adopt an ordinance to meet the needs of the particular city, different from that adopted for every other city, and yet each ordinance would be valid, provided it was fair and reasonable. It is axiomatic that the legislature can do that which it can delegate others to do. Each city would be permitted a wide latitude in determining its peculiar needs and appropriate remedy. Had each of our several cities passed an ordinance identical with the provisions of said § 5 as applicable to such city, could it be said that any one of such ordinances was clearly unfair and unreasonable?

Pub. Laws, chap. 542, passed at the January session, 1910, was "An Act Authorizing Cities and Towns to Regulate Certain Outdoor Advertising." Pursuant to this act, the city of Providence passed chapter 443 of the ordinances of the city of Providence, which ordinance provided with great detail for the regulation of billboards and outdoor advertising. Said ordinance did not affect all classes equally. It prohibited the advertising of intoxicating liquors within 200 feet of a schoolhouse or church. It required billboards on roofs of buildings to be constructed, in one section of the city, of incombustible materials, and contained no such requirement for other sections of the city. The enabling act, and the ordinance passed pursuant thereof, each defines the term "outdoor advertising," and provides that the term "shall not include advertising located upon private property and relating exclusively to the business conducted on such property, or the sale or rental thereof, or advertising in or upon the cars and stations of any common carrier." If it is unnecessary to regulate outdoor advertising relating to the business conducted on the property where the advertisement is located, it is not entirely clear why it should be necessary to regulate such advertising when it does not relate to the business conducted on such property; but the act affected equally all persons similarly situated, and in Horton v. Old Colony Bill Posting Co. 36 R. I. 507, 90 Atl. 822, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 911, this court held that the Enabling Act and ordinances were each valid, and were not obnoxious to either the Constitution of Rhode Island (art. 1, § 10) or the Constitution of the United States (art. 14 of Amendments, § 1), as depriving a person of his property without due process of law, nor as denying to a defendant the equal protection of the laws, in violation of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

Said § 5 operates alike upon all theaters in the city of Providence, and it can by no means be said to be clearly unfair or unreasonable in its provisions applying to theaters in the city of Providence. Indeed, with the present high price of wages, it would seem that the respondent is fortunate if he can obtain for $3 a qualified and duly approved fireguard to be in attendance on his theater throughout the day and evening performance.

The respondent's other claims of unconstitutionality in § 5 have been sufficiently answered in the foregoing. We may add that as to article 1, § 10, of the Constitution of Rhode Island, it has been held in numerous cases that it is a provision guarding the rights of persons accused of crime, and that the rights of property of other persons are guarded by other clauses of the Constitution of this state, or by the provisions of the Federal Constitution. State v. Keeran, 5 R. I. 497; State v. Armento, 29 R. I. 431, 72 Atl. 216; State ex rel. Grant v. Rosenkrans, 30 R. I. 374, 75 Atl. 491, 19 Ann. Cas. 824; State v. Hand Brewing Co. 32 R. I. 56, 78 Atl. 499; East Shore Land Co. v. Peckham, 33 R. I. 541, 82 Atl. 487. In Reynolds v. Randall, 12 R. I. 522, the court said that "grammatically, the provisions there seem to apply only in favor of persons accused of crime," yet in that case the court appears to give it a somewhat broader application.

In my opinion, said § 5 is not invalid for any of the reasons urged against it by the respondent.

Sweetland, J., dissenting:

I have examined the opinion of Mr. Justice Vincent and that of Mr. Justice Rathbun. From such examination it appears to me that the opinion of Mr. Justice Vincent fails to appreciate the legal nature of the relation between a theater licensee and a fire inspector which has been created by the statutory provision in question. Particularly is it to be regretted that in a vital matter, involving public safety, the majority should disregard the principles heretofore prevailing in this state, by which the constitutional validity of statutory enactments ought to be tested. The recognition and application of those principles appear to me to be essential to the preservation of the proper balance between the respective powers and functions of those co-ordinate departments of our government, the general assembly and the supreme court.

I unreservedly concur in the comprehensive opinion of Mr. Justice Rathbun.

ANNOTATION.

Constitutionality of statute or ordinance requiring proprietor of place of amusement to furnish fire or police protection at his own expense.

The validity of a statute requiring the owners or managers of theaters to furnish, at their own expense, fire or police protection during performances, has apparently received consideration in no case other than the reported case (O'NEIL v. PROVIDENCE AMUSEMENT Co. ante, 1590). In that case such an act is held to be valid in so far as it merely requires every person holding a theatrical license to employ a competent person to guard against fire in the theater to which such license pertains, but is held to be unconstitutional in so far as it undertakes (1) to fix the wages which a person holding a theatrical license shall pay to a person employed by him to guard against danger by fire; (2) to forbid the discharge of such person so employed without the consent of the board of fire commissioners; and (3) to forbid a reduction in the wages of such employee without the consent of the board of fire commissioners.

In a few cases, however, ordinances of a similar character have been before the courts, with the result that judicial opinion is apparently evenly divided as to their validity.

Thus, in Tannenbaum v. Rehm (1907) 152 Ala. 494, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 700, 126 Am. St. Rep. 52, 44 So. 532, the question was raised as to the authority of a municipality to enact and enforce an ordinance providing as follows: "It shall be the duty of the chief of the fire department to assign one fireman to all performances in any theater, said fireman to be stationed at the fire plugs located on the stage, who shall be paid by the manager, and whose duty shall be to have charge of the fire hose, and in case of fire to use every effort to extinguish the same. It shall also be the duty of said fireman to see that all fire apparatus is on hand, and in working order, prior to each performance; and the said fireman is hereby clothed with police authority to enforce all theater ordinances. Any violation of the foregoing clauses shall be punished by a fine of not more than $50, or less than $5." It was held that the city had authority to pass the ordinance by virtue of the power given it by the act under which it was incorporated, which provided that the general council should "have and exercise full police powers within the limits of the city of Mobile," and, in enumerating the duties of the general council, that it should also be their duty "to prevent crime and arrest offenders, to protect the rights of persons or property, to guard the public health, to preserve order." In reaching this conclusion the court said: "The ordinance cannot be said to be unreasonable, in that the city assumes to designate the man to perform the particular service, or imposes the cost of such service upon the manager. The duty of protecting the person or citizen from dangers of fire in the exercise of the police power would seem to carry with it the right to employ the most effective means to that end, and this would include the right of designating competent agents or servants for the performance of such duty. The doctrine as to the right of the municipality to impose the cost of the performance of such services by the fireman on the manager of the theater, as was done in the case at bar, was upheld in the case of New Orleans v. Hop Lee (1901) 104 La. 601, 29 So. 214, and in the case of Harrison v. Baltimore (1843) 1 Gill (Md.) 264. Of course such cost or expense must be fair and reasonable. We are of opinion that the ordinance in question was clearly within the police power of the municipality, and that it is not unreasonable. The ordinance expressly provides that the manager shall pay the fireman for the services rendered. The suit was, therefore, properly brought in the name of the party performing the service. The evidence was without dispute that the services were rendered, and that the compensation claimed was reasonable."

So, in Hartford v. Parsons (1913) 87 Conn. 412, 87 Atl. 736, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 1192, wherein a similar ordinance was considered, although it was held that the proprietor or owner of the particular theater in question was not liable for the wages of a fireman stationed at the theater, for the reason that the ordinance did not expressly impose the cost of such service on the owners or managers of theaters, yet the court expressly recognized the right of a municipality to enact an ordinance requiring the attendance of a policeman or fireman at theaters or other places of amusement, at the expense of the owner or management thereof. The court said: "The ordinance is on its face a proper and reasonable exercise of the police power of the city. It is, however, strictly a police regulation. The owner or manager of a theater is given no option as to whether he will or will not comply with it. It is a regulation imposed for the benefit of the public, and failure to comply with it is declared by the ordinance to be an offense. We have no doubt that the city of Hartford has authority, under its police power, to exact from the owner or manager of a theater, for every performance at which a fireman or policeman is required to be in attendance, a fee equivalent to his pay, and to make the payment of such fees a condition of the right to maintain a place of amusement, and to punish as an offense the giving of public performances without compliance with such provision. But exactions of this kind, however just and reasonable, are in the nature of an involuntary payment imposed upon the citizen. The intent to impose such a burden should be clearly expressed by the legislative department, which alone has power to impose it; and such intent should not first be discovered by a process of judicial construction. In this case the ordinance does not impose the cost of the service on the owners or managers of theaters. The duty to be performed by the city employees is the duty of seeing to the enforcement of the city ordinances regarding exits and fire escapes, and of reporting to the chief of the fire department. Whether such a service should be paid for by the city or by the owner of the theater is a matter upon which reasonable differences of opinion might exist; but, in the absence of any contractual obligation, the expense must rest upon the city until its common council, by express legislation, imposes it on the theater owner."

But in Chicago v. Weber (1910) 246 Ill. 304, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 306, 92 N. E. 859, 20 Ann. Cas. 359, it was held that a city ordinance which required every proprietor of a theater to furnish at its own expense a fireman detailed from the city fire department, whose duty it should be to attend every performance and guard against fire, was an unreasonable exercise of the city's police power, and therefore invalid. The court said: "In every building in the city where large numbers of people are employed, or where the public go in crowds, the safety of those in the building would be promoted by having a member of the fire department there, and if the cost of discharging the duty to the public who attend the theaters may be charged to the owner, the same requirement may be made of the owner of every other building where the public are invited or attend in numbers. The city has power to establish a fire department, to erect engine houses and provide fire engines and other implements for the prevention and extinguishment of fires, but that duty is a duty to the public. If there is power to charge the expenses of performing that public duty to the owner of a theater, there is also power to do the same thing with respect to other owners, and the members of the fire department could be parceled out and stationed in private buildings, so that practically the whole expense of the fire department would be paid by individuals or corporations. If the city has authority to do that, it could accomplish the same result with policemen, who are in the direct exercise of the police power, and they might be stationed in every building where disorder or violation of the law might occur, and the expense be charged to the owner; That the city cannot perform its duties to the public in that way is manifest."

Likewise, in Waters v. Leech (1840) 3 Ark. 110, the 4th section of the amendatory act under which the city of Little Rock was incorporated provided as follows: "The said mayor and aldermen, or a majority of them, shall have full power and authority from time to time, and at all times thereafter, to hold a common council in said city at such places as they may designate, and to make such by-laws, ordinances, and regulations in writing, not repugnant to the Constitution and laws of this state, and the same to enforce, revoke, or alter, as to them may appear necessary for the good order and government of the city and the inhabitants thereof; and to make, limit, and impose reasonable fines and amercements for all misdemeanors, disorders, neglects, and nuisances committed within the limits of said city, upon persons committing them therein, and for which the laws of the state have not provided an ample remedy." The 3d section of the same act made various provisions, all referring especially to "the better preservation of order and the enforcement of the laws of said city." The common council of the city passed an ordinance which provided that it should be the duty of the city constable "to attend every theater, menagerie, circus, exhibition, and show kept, opened, or exhibited in this city, on every night of such exhibition or performance, and to enforce order and suppress riot and tumult, for which services he shall be entitled to receive of the owner or exhibitor, for each night of his attendance, the sum of $2.50." Another ordinance provided for the payment of a license fee of $20 per month by every show, theater, etc. It was held that the city possessed such legislative powers, only, as were prescribed by its charter, and that the ordinance regarding the payment of the constable's salary by the proprietors of the theater was not within such powers. The court said: "That under the charter the corporation had power to make proper and reasonable by-laws, ordinances, and regulations for the preservation of the order and government of the city and its inhabitants cannot be doubted. But we are at a loss to determine by what name the imposition of the $2.50 to be paid to the city constable shall be called or known. The exhibition or performance mentioned certainly cannot be considered as either a misdemeanor or disorder, a neglect or nuisance; for by the payment of $20 per month the corporation had rendered it legal, and could therefore impose no fine or amercement unless there had been an actual violation of some known and established law of the land. It cannot be considered as a tax, because this power is limited to taxable property situate within the city, to a poll tax upon trading boats vending produce and merchandise at the landing of said city, and to licensing dram shops or drinking establishments. We have seen that the object of the charter is the preservation of good order within the city, but that the power by which this is to be effected is not only limited, but the means by which the funds are to be raised to meet the expense of so doing are expressly defined and pointed out; and that the exercise of these powers must not only be confined to such objects and purposes as are specially defined in the charter, but that they must be reasonably exercised. As previously remarked, no objection is raised to the $20 imposed by the first ordinance. But we are at a loss to know by what power, after authorizing the exhibition at the theater, and thereby rendering it lawful, an additional imposition of $2.50 for each performance should be ordered to be paid to the city constable by the owner or exhibitor, who is no party to the contract, and who did not require the services of the constable. Is it reasonable? The tax of $20 per month is $240 per annum, and if the performance should continue during the year it would add to the emoluments of the defendant in error $732.50, for which the other would derive no benefit or consideration. Suppose the corporation was to pass an ordinance that the city constable should attend every day upon each and every dram shop, or other drinking establishments, and that the owner or keeper thereof should pay such constable $2.50 per day therefor, would such an ordinance be considered within the proper and legitimate authority of the charter? Would this be a reasonable exercise of power? If the principle is admitted that under the general power of providing by ordinances and by-laws for the preservation of good order within the limits of the city, the corporation can do this, where, we would inquire, is the limit to their authority? They may, with the same propriety, make his duty extend to standing guard over dram shops and drinking establishments, and at the stores of the citizens, thereby rendering those laws and ordinances oppressive and injurious, under the specious pretense of suppressing riot or tumult which might or might not take place. It cannot be considered as a fee to the city constable for services performed, but an indirect tax levied upon the plaintiff in error, in contravention of the powers of the charter." W. F. F.

RE ESTATE OF OWEN J. EVANS, Deceased.

TAMAZINE M. EVANS, Appt.,

v.

MINNEAPOLIS TRUST COMPANY et al., Respts.

MARK M. EVANS et al., Appts.,

v.

TAMAZINE M. EVANS et al., Respts.

Minnesota Supreme Court—March 19, 1920,

(— Minn. —, 177 N. W. 126.)

Will — effect of subsequent long-term lease.

1. The testator, after making his will, whereby he devised the greater portion of his property in trust, made an enforceable contract to lease for one hundred years a portion of the property devised in trust, with an option in the lessee to purchase within ten years. It is held that this contract did not revoke the will by implication of law; and that the trusts can be carried out in substantially the manner directed by the will.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1638.]

Election — by widow — rights under will and statute.

2. The widow was not put to a statutory election by Gen. Stat. 1913, § 7239, which refers to the will of a parent, for the testator was not a parent; but if the devise in trust was not intended to be additional to the statutory one third, she was required to elect. Under the statute a gift to the wife is not treated as additional to the statutory right unless it clearly appears from the will that such was the testator's intent. It did not so appear and the widow was put to an election.

— devise of income.

3. The statute (Gen. Stat. 1913, § 7239) provides that "no devise or bequest to a surviving spouse shall be treated as adding to the right or interest secured to such survivor, . . . unless it clearly appears from the contents of the will that such was the testator's intent." A devise to a trustee, for the benefit of the surviving spouse, out of which a substantial income was to be paid, not intended by the testator to be additional to the statutory right, puts the spouse to an election as if the devise had been direct.

APPEALS by the widow and residuary devisees of Owen J. Evans, deceased, from a decree of the District Court for Hennepin County (Fish, J.), construing the will of deceased. Affirmed on appeal of widow. Reversed on appeal of the devisees.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. Francis B. Hart, for appellant
T. M. Evans:

The fourth subdivision of the will, devising the Anglesey property to the Minneapolis Trust Company, was revoked by the subsequent contract granting lease, with option to purchase, to the Paust Investment Company.

Swan v. Hammond, 138 Mass. 45, 52 Am. Rep. 255; Re McLarney, 153 N. Y. 416, 60 Am. St. Rep. 664, 47 N. E. 817; Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369; Booth's Will, 40 Or. 154, 61 Pac. 1135, 66 Pac. 710; Fransen's Will, 26 Pa. 202; Hulett v. Carey, 66 Minn. 327, 34 L.R.A. 384, 61 Am. St. Rep. 419, 69 N. W. 81; Donaldson v. Hall, 106 Minn. 502, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1073, 130 Am. St. Rep. 621, 119 N. W. 219, 16 Ann. Cas. 541.

At common law any alteration in the estate inconsistent with the dispositions made thereof in the will was a revocation.

4 Kent, Com. 528; Bosley v. Wyatt, 14 How. 390, 14 L. ed. 468; Newport Waterworks Co. v. Sisson, 18 R. I. 411, 28 Atl. 336; Sparrow v. Hardcastle, 3 Atk. 799, 26 Eng. Reprint, 1256; Re Dowd, 58 How. Pr. 107; Woerner, Administration, p. 88; Walton v. Walton, 7 Johns. Ch. 258, 11 Am. Dec. 456; Tebbutt v. Voules, 6 Sim. 40, 58 Eng. Reprint, 510; Cogdell v. Widow, 3 S. C. Eq. (3 Dessaus.) 346; Dieter v. Dieter, 3 Lev. 108, 83 Eng. Reprint, 601; Bullin v. Fletcher, 1 Keen, 369, 48 Eng. Reprint, 348; Ballard v. Carter, 5 Pick. 112, 16 Am. Dec. 377; Bennett v. Tankerville, 19 Ves. Jr. 178, 34 Eng. Reprint, 484; Brydges v. Chandos, 2 Ves. Jr. 434, 30 Eng. Reprint, 710; Williams v. Owens, 2 Ves. Jr. 595, 30 Eng. Reprint, 794; Donaldson v. Hall, 106 Minn. 502, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1073, 130 Am. St. Rep. 621, 119 N. W. 219, 16 Ann. Cas. 541; Graham v. Burch, 28 Am. St. Rep. 357, and note, 47 Minn. 171, 49 N. W. 697; Sprague v. Moore, 125 Mich. 357, 84 N. W. 293; Newport Waterworks v. Sisson, 18 R. I. 411, 28 Atl. 336.

The devise of the Anglesey property to the Minneapolis Trust Company was necessarily a specific devise, subject to ademption.

May v. Sherrard, 115 Va. 617, 79 S. E. 1026, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 1131; Plant v. Donaldson, 39 App. D. C. 162; Kaiser v. Brandenburg, 16 App. D. C. 310; King v. Shesby, 8 Leigh, 614; Boston Safe Deposit & T. Co. v. Plummer, 142 Mass. 257, 8 N. E. 51; Georgia Infirmary v. Jones, 37 Fed. 750, 39 Eng. Reprint, 260; Newbold v. Roadknight, 1 Russ. & M. 677, 39 Eng. Reprint, 260; Tamlyn, 492, 48 Eng. Reprint, 196; Page v. Leapingwell, 18 Ves. Jr. 463, 34 Eng. Reprint, 392, 11 Revised Rep. 234; 40 Cyc. 1914; Williams v. Owens, 2 Ves. Jr. 601, 30 Eng. Reprint, 797; Walton v. Walton, 7 Johns. Ch. 258, 11 Am. Dec. 456; Coulson v. Holmes, 5 Sawy. 279, Fed. Cas. No. 8,274.

The specific devise of the Anglesey building being revoked, and the option to purchase not having been exercised during the life of the testator, it descends to the widow and heir as intestate property.

Kerr v. Day, 14 Fa. 114, 53 Am. Dec. 526; Melin v. Woolley, 103 Minn. 498, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 595, 115 N. W. 654, 946; Johnson v. Holifield, 82 Ala. 123, 2 So. 758; 2 Woerner, Administration, § 437; Smith v. Loewenstein, 50 Ohio St. 346, 34 N. E. 159; Rockland-Rockport Lime Co. v. Leary, 203 N. Y. 469, L.R.A. 1916F, 352, 97 N. E. 48, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 62; Ness v. Davidson, 49 Minn. 469, 52 N. W. 46.

The provision for Mrs. Evans in the fourth clause of the will is a bounty, and not in lieu of dower.

40 Cyc. 1971; Van Arsdale v. Van Arsdale, 26 N. J. L. 404; 4 Kent, Com. p. 54; Re Gotzian, 34 Minn. 159, 57 Am. Rep. 43, 24 N. W. 920; McGowan v. Baldwin, 46 Minn. 477, 49 N. W. 251; 1 Jarman, Wills, 5th ed. p. 458; Konvalinka v. Schlegel, 104 N. Y. 125, 58 Am. Rep. 494, 9 N. E. 868; Wood v. Wood, 5 Paige, 596, 23 Am. Dec. 451; Re Smith, 1 Misc. 269, 22 N. Y. Supp. 1067; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1038; French v. Davies, 2 Ves. Jr. 575, 30 Eng. Reprint, 783; Sherman v. Lewis, 44 Minn. 108, 46 N. W. 318; Nester v. Nester, 68 Misc. 207, 118 N. Y. Supp. 1009, 124 N. Y. Supp. 974; Bentley v. Bentley, 112 Iowa, 625, 84 N. W. 676; Kinsey v. Woodward, 8 Harr. (Del.)

(— Minn. —, 177 N. W. 126.)

459; Sanford v. Jackson, 10 Paige, 266; Fuller v. Yates, 8 Paige, 325; Baldwin v. Zien, 117 Minn. 178, 134 N. W. 498.

Messrs. Lancaster & Simpson, for respondent Trust Company:

The execution of the contract for lease and option to purchase does not work a revocation.

1 Jarman, Wills, 6th ed. 162; 40 Cyc. 1208; Donaldson v. Hall, 106 Minn. 502, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1073, 130 Am. St. Rep. 621, 119 N. W. 219, 16 Ann. Cas. 541; Hoitt v. Hoitt, 63 N. H. 475, 56 Am. Rep. 530, 3 Atl. 604; Lefebvre's Estate, 100 Wis. 192, 75 N. W. 971; 2 Underhill, Wills, 971; Wagstaff v. Marcy, 25 Misc. 121, 54 N. Y. Supp. 1021; Hall v. Bray, 1 N. J. L. 212; Benson's Estate, 209 Pa. 108, 58 Atl. 135; Templeton v. Butler, 117 Wis. 455, 94 N. W. 306; Ostrander v. Davis, 111 C. C. A. 636, 191 Fed. 156; Watson v. McLench, 57 Or. 446, 110 Pac. 482, 112 Pac. 416; Page, Wills, § 279; Slaughter v. Stephens, 81 Ala. 418, 2 So. 145; Re Kelleher, 140 Minn. 409, 168 N. W. 586.

Mr. L. F. Lammers, for appellants and respondents Mark M. Evans et al.:

The construction of the will that the intent of the testator was to bequeath to his surviving spouse the $200 per month bounty, in addition to her right or interest secured by statute, was error.

Connelly v. McMahon, 122 Minn. 113, 142 N. W. 16; Howe Lumber Co. v. Parker, 105 Minn. 312, 117 N. W. 519; White v. White, 16 N. J. L. 202, 31 Am. Dec. 232; Van Arsdale v. Van Arsdale, 26 N. J. L. 404; Brokaw v. Brokaw, 41 N. J. Eq. 304, 7 Atl. 414, 40 Cyc. 1959, 1963; Farmington Sav. Bank v. Curran, 72 Conn. 342, 44 Atl. 473; Damuth v. Lee, 163 N. Y. 478, 57 N. E. 743; Washburn v. Van Steenwyk, 32 Minn. 336, 20 N. W. 324; Sherman v. Lewis, 44 Minn. 107, 46 N. W. 318; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1075; Sullivan v. McCann, 18 N. Y. S. R. 891, 2 N. Y. Supp. 198; Ashelford v. Chapman, 81 Kan. 312, 105 N. E. 534; Geiger v. Bitzer, 80 Ohio St. 65, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 285, 88 N. E. 134, 17 Ann. Cas. 151; Cunningham's Estate, 137 Pa. 621, 21 Am. St. Rep. 901, 20 Atl. 714.

No part of testator's will was revoked on account of the giving of the contract for a lease and an option to purchase the Anglesey property, which contract was given after the will was made.

40 Cyc. 1208; Donaldson v. Hall, 106 Minn. 502, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1073, 130 8 A.L.R.—103.

Am. St. Rep. 621, 119 N. W. 219, 16 Ann. Cas. 541; Hoitt v. Hoitt, 63 N. H. 475, 56 Am. Rep. 530, 3 Atl. 604; 1 Schouler, Wills, § 427; Re Lefebvre's Estate, 100 Wis. 192, 75 N. W. 971; Barney v. May, 135 Minn. 299, 160 N. W. 790.

Dibell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

By his will Dr. Owen J. Evans, of Minneapolis, after making a number of unimportant bequests, devised all of his property to the Minneapolis Trust Company, in trust, to pay from the rents and profits $200 per month to his wife during her life; and upon her death, with unimportant exceptions, the property remaining was to be sold and the proceeds distributed among his collateral blood relatives. After making his will, he made a contract for a lease of certain property in Minneapolis, which was the principal portion of the property devised in trust, for one hundred years, and in this contract, which was binding upon both parties, gave the lessee the option to purchase at any time within ten years at a stated price. The probate court held that the making of this contract did not revoke the will; that the gift of $200 per month to Mrs. Evans was not additional to her statutory right; and that she was put to an election. On her appeal to the district court it was held that the making of the contract did not revoke the will; that the gift of $200 per month during her life was additional to her statutory one third, and she was not put to an election; and that the gift of $200 per month was a charge upon the remaining two thirds. Mrs. Evans appeals from the decree, and the residuary devisees appeal. The arguments of counsel group themselves about these three questions:

(1) Whether the contract for a lease, with the option to the lessee to purchase, revoked the will by implication of law.

(2) If it did not, whether Mrs. Evans was put to an election; and this depends upon whether the gift of $200 per month was additional to the statutory one third given her by statute.

(3) Involved in the preceding question is the question whether the statute (Gen. Stat. 1913, § 7239), which provides that a devise to the wife shall not be deemed additional to her statutory interest unless it clearly appears from the will that such was the intent of the testator, applies when the devise is to a trustee for the wife's benefit, and not directly to her.

1. Dr. Evans died on October 17, 1916. His will was dated November 11, 1914. He then owned a property in Minneapolis known as the Anglesey Building, subject to a mortgage of $36,500. This property was worth something like $100,000, and was the principal part in value of his estate. He owned a quarter section in Cass county and some lands in other states, found by the court to be, all together, of the value of $14,000. The value of his personal estate was small. He bequeathed to various of his relatives articles of personal property of no considerable value, and not in controversy here. He devised the residue of his property to the Minneapolis Trust Company, in trust. It was directed to sell the property devised, except the Anglesey, and apply the proceeds in reduction of the $36,500 mortgage; to lease the Anglesey, and, after the payment of insurance, taxes, and interest, to pay $200 per month to Mrs. Evans during life, and apply the rest in reduction of the encumbrance; and, after the payment of the encumbrance, to invest and reinvest and hold as a part of the trust fund. Upon the death of Mrs. Evans the Anglesey was to be sold and the proceeds divided among the testator's nephews and nieces and grand-nephews and grandnieces. We omit mention of some of the provisions of the will, not material here, and refer to them in the connection in which they are important.

On September 16, 1916, Dr. Evans made a contract with the Benjamin A. Paust Company whereby he agreed to lease the Anglesey for one hundred years at an annual rental of $6,600, the lessee to pay taxes, insurance, and repairs. The lessee was to erect an additional building on the property, to cost not less than $4,000, within three years, and to further improve the property within ten years at an additional cost of not less than $8,000. The option was given the lessee to purchase within ten years for $110,000. If the purchase was made, enough cash was to be paid to discharge the $36,500 mortgage; and the balance was to be secured by a 6 per cent mortgage, running for twenty-five years, with the option to pay at any time after the death of Dr. Evans and his wife.

After the death of Dr. Evans, his executor executed a lease in conformity with the contract, in which Mrs. Evans joined, and it was approved by the probate court.

The claim of Mrs. Evans in this court, as in the court below, is that the making of this contract revoked the will, and that she took the whole estate as sole heir. The probate court, and the district court on appeal, found against her.

It was the common-law doctrine that land not owned by the testator at the time of his will, and continuously owned by him thereafter until his death, did not pass by a devise of it. "The law requires that the same interest which the testator had when he made the will should continue to be the same interest, and remain unaltered to his death. The least alteration in that interest is a revocation." 4 Kent, Com. 529. By consequence a conveyance of the land devised operated as a revocation of the will. It was said in such a case that there was a revocation by implication of law because of the alteration of the estate. The strict rule that the least alteration in the estate of the testator revoked the will, founded in part on the common-law conception of seisin, on which English real property law was bottomed, and the necessity of livery to a conveyance, led to bewildering refinements and confusing distinctions, often bringing absurd and harsh results of which the English judges complained; but the rule persisted. 1 Jarman, Wills, 161; Page, Wills, §§ 278, 279; 1 Redf. Wills, 331-342; 1 Woerner, Administration, 103; 1 Schouler, Wills, § 427; 4 Kent, Com. 528; Gardner, Wills, 246; Rood, Wills, §§ 366 et seq.; 30 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 652; 40 Cyc. 1205; Lang v. Vaughn, 137 Ga. 671, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 553, 74 S. E. 270, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 56; American Trust & Bkg. Co. v. Balfour, 138 Tenn. 385, L.R.A. 1918D, 538, 198 S. W. 70.

By statute, 1 Vict. chap. 26 (1837), the doctrine of implied revocation was abolished. Section 19 provided "that no will shall be revoked by any presumption of intention on the ground of an alteration in circumstances." Section 23 provided that no conveyance made after the execution of a will should prevent its operation with respect of the estate or interest the testator should have power to dispose of by will at the time of his death. Section 24 provided that every will should be construed with reference to the property mentioned in it to speak and take effect as if executed immediately prior to the testator's death, unless a contrary intention appeared. Some of the states have statutes similar to those mentioned. Some others, as may be noted from the authorities cited above, reach much the same result without the aid of a specific statute.

We have no statute following § 19 or § 23 of the English statute. We have a statute which provides that every devise of land shall convey all the estate of the testator unless it appears by the will that he intended a lesser estate. Gen. Stat. 1913, § 7263. This statute is easily referable to the quality of the estate transferred, so that, for instance, a fee may pass though heirs or assigns or others than the devisee are not mentioned, and so to refer to the construction of the will, rather than to bear on the question of implied revocation. See Re Oertle, 34 Minn. 173, 178, 57 Am. Rep. 48, 24 N. W. 924; Gleason v. Fayerweather, 4 Gray, 348; Burlingham v. Belding, 21 Wend. 463. But in Lefebvre's Estate, 100 Wis. 192, 75 N. W. 971, such a statute was considered to bear on implied revocation. Another statute, resembling § 24, provides that property acquired by the testator after the making of his will shall pass as if possessed by him when he made it, unless a different intention manifestly and clearly appears from the will. Gen. Stat. 1913, § 7264. This statute is not in harmony with the theory upon which the common-law revocation by alteration of estate was based.

The statute which defines the different methods of express revocation provides that "nothing in this section shall prevent the revocation implied by law from subsequent change in the condition or circumstances of the testator." Gen. Stat. 1913, § 7256. This has been construed to adopt the common-law doctrine of implied revocation, whether by change of status or by alteration of estate. Graham v. Burch, 47 Minn. 171, 28 Am. St. Rep. 339, 49 N. W. 697; Hulett v. Carey, 66 Minn. 327, 34 L.R.A. 384, 61 Am. St. Rep. 419, 69 N. W. 31; Donaldson v. Hall, 106 Minn. 502, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1073, 130 Am. St. Rep. 621, 119 N. W. 219, 16 Ann. Cas. 541. In the latter case it is said that "the tendency of the reported cases has been to restrict, rather than enlarge, its scope."

The rule is general that a conveyance of property devised revokes the will wholly or pro tanto, in the sense that the will cannot operate upon property conveyed after its execution. This is but the statement of a truism.

There is ample authority for holding under the common-law rule that a contract for the conveyance of real property, whereby the vendee takes the equitable title, and the vendor retains the legal title as security for the unpaid purchase money, operates as an implied revocation. Bennett v. Tankerville, 19 Ves. Jr. 170, 34

Eng. Reprint, 482; Gale v. Gale, 21 Beav. 349, 52 Eng. Reprint, 894; Walton v. Walton, 7 Johns. Ch. 258, 11 Am. Dec. 456; Donohoo v. Lea, 1 Swan, 119, 55 Am. Dec. 725; Re Bernhard, 134 Iowa, 603, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1029, 112 N. W. 86. It does not seem that a mere lease necessarily had such effect. Hodgkinson v. Wood, Cro. Car. 23, 79 Eng. Reprint, 625; Lamb v. Parker, 2 Vern. 495, 23 Eng. Reprint, 917; Brady v. Brady, 78 Md. 461, 28 Atl. 515.

Counsel relies upon Bosley v. Wyatt, 14 How. 390, 14 L. ed. 468, as holding that a lease coupled with an option in the lessee to purchase is a revocation. There the testator and his lessee agreed upon a purchase price, and a portion was paid in cash. A lease was given for ninety-nine years, renewable forever, at a ground rent equivalent to interest on the unpaid price, and with the right in the lessee to extinguish it by the payment of the unpaid portion of the purchase price. This was said to be a common form of contract in Maryland, from which the case comes, and nearly to have superseded the old form of contract for a conveyance or a bond for deed. The lease and option were held the equivalent of a contract of sale, and therefore to effect a revocation. We do not minimize the force of the argument based on this case, nor the force of the decision in Newport Waterworks v. Sisson, 18 R. I. 411, 28 Atl. 336, which is cited in connection with it.

The lease and option given by Dr. Evans did not take his legal title. The lessee acquired a chattel real, the lease, and an option to purchase the reversion, for which there was a consideration; but it took no equitable estate in fee, as in the case of a contract of sale. There was no conversion of real property into personalty. The other real property, which was a part of the trust, and found to be worth $14,000, and which was to be used in protecting the Anglesey, was not disturbed. The trust can be carried out in substance as the will directs. All the purposes which Dr. Evans had in view, and all the provision he chose to make for Mrs. Evans, and all the benefits which he wished to give his collateral blood relatives, can be given effect. See Forney's Appeal, 161 Pa. 209, 28 Atl. 1086; Connecticut Trust & S. D. Co. v. Chase, 75 Conn. 683, 55 Atl. 171. Under the circumstances recited the law should not imply a revocation. That Dr. Evans, when he gave the lease and option, had in mind revoking his will, or changing the provisions of the trust, is not to be thought. The law should not give that effect through the doctrine of implied revocation. By considering the land as passing in trust, subject to the benefits and burdens which attach because of the lease and the option, the will is easily given the substantial effect which Dr. Evans wished.

It may be noted that some cases refuse to apply the doctrine of an implied revocation by a subsequent contract of sale when thereby the apparent intention of the testator is thwarted. Stender v. Stender, 181 Mich. 648, 148 N. W. 255; Kirsher v. Todd, 195 Mich. 297, 162 N. W. 129; Lefebvre's Estate, 100 Wis. 192, 75 N. W. 971. And so in case of a deed subsequent to the will. Bills v. Putnam, 64 N. H. 554, 15 Atl. 138; Forney's Appeal, 161 Pa. 209, 28 Atl. 1086; Connecticut Trust & S. D. Co. v. Chase, 75 Conn. 683, 55 Atl. 171. And see Miller v. Klossner, 135 Minn. 377, 160 N. W. 1025. We do not discuss these cases, nor need we decide what the holding should be if there had been a contract of sale vesting the equitable title. We limit our decision to a holding that the execution of the lease containing the option of purchase did not revoke the will nor prevent the carrying out of its trusts.

2. Failing in her claim that the will was revoked by implication of law, Mrs. Evans contends that the trust devise is additional to her statutory one third; that she is not put to an election between the will and the provision of the statute; and that she takes her statutory one third with the $2,400 annuity charged on the remaining two thirds. The district court held with her.

Will—effect of subsequent long-term lease.

Mrs. Evans is not put to an election within six months by Gen. Stat. 1913, § 7239, which refers to a case where "the will of a deceased parent makes provision for a surviving

Election—by widow—rights under will and statute.

spouse in lieu of the rights in his estate secured by statute," for Dr. Evans was not a parent. Radl v. Radl, 72 Minn. 81, 75 N. W. 111; Tracy v. Tracy, 79 Minn. 267, 82 N. W. 635; Mechling v. McAllister, 135 Minn. 357, L.R.A.1917C, 504, 160 N. W. 1016. But unless that given by the will was intended as additional to that given by statute, she must elect. Re Gotzian, 34 Minn. 159, 57 Am. Rep. 43, 24 N. W. 920.

The earlier statute was that when any lands were devised to a woman, or other provision made for her in the will of her husband, she must make her election whether she would take the lands devised or the provisions made in the will; but she could not have both unless it plainly appeared by the will to have been so intended by the testator. Gen. Stat. 1866, chap. 48, § 18. This provision was repealed by Laws 1875, chap. 40, which abolished dower, and provided an estate of inheritance in lieu thereof. This left applicable the common-law rule, which was that the widow was entitled to both dower and the provision made in the will unless it plainly appeared from the will not to have been so intended. Re Gotzian, supra; McGowan v. Baldwin, 46 Minn. 477, 49 N. W. 251. It so continued until Laws 1893, chap. 116, § 5, when there was added a provision, now appearing in Gen. Stat. 1913, § 7239, in the following language: "And no devise or bequest to a surviving spouse shall be treated as adding to the right or interest secured to such survivor by statute unless it clearly appears from the contents of the will that such was the testator's intent."

It does not appear from the contents of the will that the trust devise was intended to be additional to the statutory one third. The contrary appears. The trust devise included all of the testator's property except some minor articles of personal property, largely personal belongings of no great value, bequeathed to relatives, apparently more as keepsakes than because of their value. He intended his wife to have $200 per month during her life, and had in mind that the Anglesey was the property which would secure it. To this end he put all of his property in trust, with directions that all except the Anglesey, which was revenue-producing, should be sold, and the proceeds used to protect it against the mortgage, and that the Anglesey should be charged with the payment of the income. He provided for burial for himself and his wife, and for the care of their cemetery lot. If his wife chose to give by her will $200 per year to her sisters for life, each of them was to have it; and the trust fund was to be preserved to insure its payment. There was then a bequest of $1,000 to a church fund; and the residue was to be distributed among his collateral blood relatives. It was not in his mind that his wife should have one third of all his estate, and that the remaining two thirds should be charged with the $2,400 annuity. The conclusion is irresistible that Dr. Evans intended his wife to have the specified income for life and the further provisions mentioned, and nothing more; and that when his estate had satisfied this charge, the residue should go to his collateral blood relatives. This was his will.

We hold that Mrs. Evans was not entitled to the annuity in addition to a statutory one third, and that she was put to an election.

3. The statute quoted refers to a "devise and bequest to a surviving spouse." Gen. Stat. 1913, § 7239. It is the contention of Mrs. Evans that since the devise was to the Minneapolis Trust Company, as trustee, and not directly to her, she is not within the provision of the statute that a devise shall not be deemed additional to the statutory interests unless it clearly appears that such was the testator's intention. In Van Arsdale v. Van Arsdale, 26 N. J. L. 404, one or more of the judges held to that effect, though the decision was rested upon another ground. At common law to bar the wife's right of dower by a jointure, the settlement must have been to the wife herself, and not to another, in trust for her. 4 Kent, Com. 5; 2 Bl. Com. 137-139; 1 Washb. Real Prop. § 490; Tiedeman, Real Prop. § 117; 1 Tiffany, Real Prop. 459; 2 Scribner, Dower, 391, 399. The effect of the Statute of Uses, 27 Hen. VIII. chap. 10, which transferred the use into a legal estate, was to make the wife dowable in estates of her husband executed by the statute, though before she was not dowable in estates held in trust for him. So the statute provided that when a jointure was made, the wife should not claim dower in other of her husband's lands. The statute, as it was construed, only had in mind such jointures as were settled upon the wife and, by force of the statute, barred dower; and a grant to a trustee for her was therefore not a legal jointure so as to bar her dower. It was upon this notion of a common-law jointure barring dower that the holding noted in the New Jersey case rests. We are far from common-law dower. There is nothing in the history or reason of the technical common-law rule, though it was entirely reasonable when applied to dower as it then was, which prompts us to apply it to the statute which determines when a devise shall be in addition to the statutory interest. Our statute gives dower in equitable estates.

Until dower was abolished in 1875 the statute referred to a case where lands were "devised to a woman, or other provisions made for her in the will of her husband;" and in such a case she was required to elect. Gen. Stat. 1866, chap. 48, § 18. From 1875 to 1893, when the present provision was adopted, there was nothing in the statute raising a presumption that a devise to the wife was or was not additional to the statutory right. When the legislature put the statute in its present form, dropping the words, "or other provisions made for her in the will of her husband," it was not its intention to make a rule in harmony with the rule when jointures barred dower, and so to make a provision for the <sup>devise of</sup> ~~income.~~ wife ineffectual to put her to an election unless there was a devise directly to her. The devise to the trust company gave the wife an equitable right or estate. She was a beneficiary of the trust. We hold that it was as effectual to put her to an election as if there had been a devise directly to her.

Upon the appeal of Mrs. Evans the judgment is affirmed, and on the appeal of the residuary devisees it is reversed; and the case is remanded for proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Judgment affirmed in part and reversed in part.

Petition for rehearing denied May 14, 1920.

ANNOTATION.

Lease of property as ademption or revocation of devise.

In the absence of controlling statutes to the contrary it seems that a lease for a definite term of years revokes pro tanto only a previous devise of the leased lands. It has been so held in the American cases of Herrington v. Budd (1848) 5 Denio (N. Y.) 321, and Skerrett v. Burd (1836) 1 Whart. (Pa.) 246. So it has been held that a lease of lands for life operates as a revocation of a prior devise of the lands quoad the term. Graves v. Sheldon (1824) 2 D. Chip. (Vt.) 71, 15 Am. Dec. 653.

And that the granting of a license to occupy devised lands on the payment of a periodical rental operates only as a revocation pro tanto of the devise, see Re Fuller (1898) 71 Vt. 73, 42 Atl. 981. In the Maryland case of Brady v. Brady (1894) 78 Md. 461, 28 Atl. 515, without reference to any statutory provision it was held that a specific devise of certain real estate was not adeemed by a subsequent lease thereof by the testator for ninety-nine years, renewable forever, with reversion in the lessor. This was upon the ground that the lease merely wrought a change in the tenure of the estate.

And in England it has been held that a lease of devised lands to a stranger for years, to commence after the testator's death, does not constitute a total revocation of the devise, but only quoad the term. Coke v. Bullock (1604) Cro. Jac. 49, 79 Eng. Reprint, 41 (dictum); Hodgkinson v. Wood (1625) 4 Cro. Car. 23, 79 Eng. Reprint, 625; Lamb v. Parker (1705) 2 Vern. 495, 23 Eng. Reprint, 917, affirmed in (1706) 3 Bro. Ch. 12, 1 Eng. Reprint, 1145. And see Perkins v. Walker (1682) 1 Vern. Ch. 97, 23 Eng. Reprint, 389.

On the other hand, an early English authority is to the effect that if the lease of the devised lands is to the devisee, to begin at death, the whole devise is revoked. Coke v. Bullock (1604) Cro. Jac. 49, 79 Eng. Reprint, 41. The court said that both of the estates could not stand in the devisee, and that since they were to begin at the same time, the testator's intent appears to have been altered so as to give the lessee a lesser estate. However, where the term of the lease is not postponed until after death, it has been held that at law a lease for a term of years to the same person to whom the grantor has previously devised the fee does not work a revocation of the devise, it having been said that in such a case the lease is merged in the inheritance. Villiers v. Villiers (1740) 2 Atk. 71, 26 Eng. Reprint, 444.

But applying the rule that if a lease is such as to alter the estate held by the testator, or his interest therein, or modify it by converting it into a different estate from the one held by him at the time of the devise, the devise is revoked or adeemed, it has been held that a change, such as granting a lease in fee, reserving a rent, with a clause of re-entry for condition broken, revokes a prior devise of the lands made by the grantor. Harrington v. Budd (1848) 5 Denio (N. Y.) 321; Skerrett v. Burd (1836) 1 Whart. (Pa.) 246; Mullock v. Souder (1842) 5 Watts & S. (Pa.) 198. So in England it has been held that a lease and release of a previously devised estate worked a revocation of the will. Pollen v. Husband (1712) 1 Eq. Abr. 412, 21 Eng. Reprint, 1142; Cave v. Holford (1798) 3 Ves. Jr. 650, 30 Eng. Reprint, 1203, affirmed in (1799) 7 Bro. Ch. 593, 3 Eng. Reprint, 384.

And in Bosley v. Wyatt (1852) 14 How. (U. S.) 390, 14 L. ed. 468, where a testator specifically devised certain real estate, and subsequently leased the same for the term of ninety-nine years, renewable forever, reserving a ground rent, payable partly in cash, and wholly extinguishable at any time by payment of a certain sum, it was held that the transaction so altered the condition of the property that it amounted to a revocation of the devise. But, as is pointed out in the reported case (RE EVANS, ante, 1631), this was upon the theory that the lease and option were the equivalent of a contract of sale. In fact, Mr. Justice Taney, in delivering the opinion of the court, expressly distinguished the case from those where the lessor retains the reversion without obligating himself to convey it to the lessee, pursuant to contract. Among other things he said: "In the case before us, the interest which the testator had in this land at the time of making his will was converted into money by his contract with Armstrong. It was a sale and an agreement to convey his whole interest in the land. It is therefore unlike the case of a lease for years, or of ninety-nine years, renewable forever, in which the lessor retains the reversion and does not bind himself to convey it on any terms to the lessee. The form of the contract adopted in this instance, between the testator and Armstrong, is in familiar use in the sale of lots in the city of Baltimore and the adjacent country. It has nearly, if not altogether, superseded the old forms of contract where the vendor conveyed the lands and took a mortgage to secure the payment of the purchase money, or gave his bond for the conveyance, and retained the legal title in himself until the purchase money was paid. And it has taken the place of these forms of contract because it is far more convenient, both to the seller and the purchaser, for it enables the vendee to postpone the payment of a large portion of the purchase money until he finds it entirely convenient to pay it; and at the same time it is more advantageous to the vendor, as it gives him a better security for the punctual payment of the interest; and while an extended credit is given to the vendee, it is to the vendor a sale for cash. For if his ground rent is well secured, he can at any time sell it in the market, for the balance of the purchase money left in the hands of the vendee. It will be observed that the rent reserved is precisely the interest on the amount of the purchase money remaining unpaid. And when it must be admitted that a sale in which a bond of conveyance is given, and the title retained by the vendor, to secure the payment of the purchase money, is in equity a revocation, there would seem to be no good reason for holding otherwise in the case before us, where the vendor is equally bound to convey when the whole purchase money is paid. A distinction between the cases would rest on a difference in form rather than of substance and principle. It would, moreover, make the revocation depend upon the will of a stranger, and not upon that of the testator. For if Armstrong had paid to him, in his lifetime, the whole amount of the purchase money, as he had a right to do under the contract, it is very clear that the devise would then have been revoked. And if the purchaser's omission to pay prevents the contract from being a revocation, the validity of the devise is made to depend, not upon the will or the act of a testator, but that of a stranger, over which the testator has no control. We think a distinction leading to that result cannot be maintained, and that the devise in question was revoked by the contract with Armstrong." And see Re Pyle [1895] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 724, 64 L. J. Ch. N. S. 477, 13 Reports, 896, 72 L. T. N. S. 327, 43 Week. Rep. 420, wherein the court seems to have been of the opinion that a lease with an option to purchase revoked a prior devise of the premises.

On the other hand, in the reported case (RE EVANS, ante, 1631), the court refused to adopt the general rule that the giving of a lease with an option to the lessee to purchase revoked a prior devise of the leased property, and this notwithstanding the court admitted that the Minnesota statutes had repeatedly been construed as adopting the common-law doctrine of implied revocation by alteration of estate. It will be remembered that this was upon the theory that the purposes of the testator could still be carried out, and that since it was clear that the testator had not intended to revoke the will, the law should not give that effect through the doctrine of implied revocation. In this connection it is of interest that intent is generally regarded as a necessary element of revocation, but that it is not essential to an ademption, all of which would seem to make it important to use the terms "ademption" and "revocation" advisedly. Of course, the generally accepted common-law rule was that the term "ademption" applied only to specific bequests of personalty, and had no application to devisees of real estate; but it has also been maintained that the question under consideration technically is one of ademption. At any rate, it seems safe to say that some of the apparent confusion is probably due to the indiscriminate use of these terms, some courts having used one term, some having used the other, and still others having employed both to express the same thing. However, the writer has seen no case wherein the court has expressly referred to the necessity or advisability of using one term in preference to the other when referring to transactions of the class under consideration herein.

In Joynes v. Hamilton (1904) 98 Md. 665, 57 Atl. 25, where certain land was specifically devised and subsequently leased for ninety-nine years, subject to an annual ground rent, but with an option in the lessee to redeem for a certain sum, which lease was followed by a codicil to the will which devised the ground rent to the devisee, and in effect revoked the original devise, and the lessee afterwards, but during the life of the testator, redeemed the rent and received a deed, it was held that the devise of the ground rent and its subsequent redemption by the lessee did not work an ademption of the devise. The reason assigned was that such was the clear intention of the testator, and that such intention must be carried out. G. J. C.

MARY S. WHITE, Admr., etc., of Gassaway H. White, Appt.,
v.
SAMUEL G. THOMPSON.

Kentucky Court of Appeals—March 16, 1920.

(— Ky. —, 219 S. W. 434.)

Fence — right to remove hedge.

1. One upon whose property is located a hedge which forms a division fence between himself and his neighbor may remove it and put another fence in its place, against the protest of the neighbor.

[See note on this question beginning on page 1644.]

Pleading — effect of reply to change allegation in petition.

2. The implied admission in a complaint for destroying a division fence that it was "on or near the line" is not affected by a denial in the reply that it was on defendant's property.

Estoppel — to complain of removal of hedge.

3. A property owner who remains silent after receiving notice from his neighbor of intention to remove a hedge from the division line between the two properties is estopped to claim damages for its removal.

Trespass — right to remove railing attached to house.

4. The right to remove a hedge on the division line between adjoining properties carries with it the right to take down a supporting railing, although it is attached to the neighbor's house.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Common Pleas Branch, Second Division, of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for alleged wrongful and unlawful destruction of a hedge fence on the boundary of plaintiff's property. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion of the court.

Messrs. Moorman & Woodward and Hardin H. Herr, for appellant:

It is proper to join the real and personal representatives of a decedent in an action for damages to real property.

Prescott v. Grimes, 143 Ky. 191, 33

L.R.A. (N.S.) 669, 136 S. W. 206; Chicago, M. & G. R. Co. v. Dodds, 167 Ky. 624, 181 S. W. 666.

There can be no estoppel by mere silence when it is not the duty of the party to speak.

16 Cyc. 681-761; Fitzpatrick v.

Baker, 155 Ky. 175, 159 S. W. 675; Ewart, Estoppel, 90; Johnson v. Elkhorn Gas Coal Min. Co. 176 Ky. 676, 197 S. W. 409.

Equity will not enjoin a trespass if adequate damages can be recovered.

Pom. Eq. Jur. 3d ed. § 221, p. 307.

There is no rule of law requiring the rightful owner of the premises to enter into an agreement with a wilful trespasser to save his rights. The owner of the premises can rely upon the law of the land.

Watson v. Dilts, 116 Iowa, 249, 57 L.R.A. 559, 93 Am. St. Rep. 239, 89 N. W. 1068, second appeal in 124 Iowa, 344, 100 N. W. 50; Strickler v. Midland R. Co. 125 Ind. 412, 25 N. E. 455; Woll v. Voigt, 105 Minn. 371, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 270, 117 N. W. 608; Leber v. Minnesota & N. W. R. Co. 29 Minn. 256, 13 N. W. 31.

Although a petition may allege an improper measure of damages, it is not a reason for sustaining a demurrer thereto.

Pulaski Stove Co. v. Miller's Creek Lumber Co. 138 Ky. 391, 128 S. W. 96.

Where the pleadings show that a plaintiff is entitled to any relief whatsoever, a lower court commits an error when he dismisses an action on the pleadings, and without having a trial of the cause.

Hazelden v. Thompson, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 303, 51 S. W. 1129; Magee v. Frazier, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1467, 49 S. W. 452; 13 Cyc. 178.

Mr. D. Moxley, for appellee:

The letter written by defendant to White gave him full opportunity to make any protest which he wished, and, having made none, he is estopped.

Trimble v. King, 131 Ky. 4, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 880, 114 S. W. 317.

Carroll, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In this suit by the administratrix of Gassaway H. White to recover damages in the sum of $500, it was alleged in the petition that he died the owner of a lot 30 feet wide and 150 feet deep in the city of Louisville, that adjoined a lot owned by the appellee, Samuel G. Thompson; that Thompson in September, 1916, "without right or authority, and against the will of the said Gassaway H. White and this plaintiff, entered upon the aforesaid property, and wilfully, wrongfully, and unlawfully tore down and destroyed a hedge fence that was on or near the western boundary line of said property of the plaintiffs, and further wilfully, wrongfully, and unlawfully tore off a wooden support and railing which was attached to the house of the plaintiff located on the above-described lot."

For an answer to the petition, Thompson, after denying the material averments, affirmatively set up by way of estoppel that, on or about the time referred to by the plaintiff in his petition, "there was a hedge fence on the property of this defendant, separating the property of this defendant from the property of the plaintiff, and this defendant says that he did take the said fence down, and erected an iron railing fence in its place on his own property, and in within about 3 inches of the property line of the plaintiff, and defendant says that, a few days before the hedge fence referred to in the petition was taken down and the iron railing fence erected near the property line of the plaintiff's property, this defendant wrote a letter to the plaintiff, Gassaway White, and notified and informed the said plaintiff in said letter that the said fence was on his property, and was a division fence between the property of the plaintiff and the defendant, and that it was in bad condition and ought to be taken down, and that he would proceed to take said fence down and erect a new fence on his own property, which would be a division fence between his property and the property of the plaintiff, and in said letter defendant notified the said plaintiff, if he had any objection to the removal of said fence, to state said objection. Defendant says that the said letter was received by the said Gassaway White, and that, after receiving said letter, said White saw defendant removing the said hedge fence and erecting said iron fence, and made no protest or objection or complaint of any kind or description, and defendant says that the said plaintiff is barred and estopped from claiming any damages because of the removal of said fence, by his action in not objecting thereto, and defendant pleads and relies on said facts as an estoppel against the claims of the plaintiff herein."

To this answer a reply was filed, denying that the hedge fence was on the property of Thompson, and that Thompson "took down any fence other than the hedge fence on the property that decedent, White, owned."

There was no denial of the allegation in the answer that Thompson wrote, or that White received, the letter set up in the answer of Thompson.

The lower court sustained a demurrer to the reply, and, the plaintiff declining to plead further, the petition was dismissed.

On the pleadings it will be seen that the lower court was of the opinion that the undenied plea of estoppel set up by Thompson in his answer was a bar to the recovery sought in the petition, and the sufficiency of this defense is the only substantial question in the case.

It will be observed that the petition alleged that the hedge fence torn down by Thompson "was on or near the western boundary line" of the property of the plaintiff, William White, while in the answer of Thompson the allegation was that the fence was on his property, and that the iron fence put in its place was also located on his property.

It will be noticed that the reply denies that the hedge fence was on the property of Thompson, but this denial in the reply cannot change the effect of the affirmative admission and averment in the petition that the hedge fence was "on or

Pleading—effect of reply to change allegation in petition.

near" the property line of White; and, construing the petition most strongly against the pleader, we must take it for confessed that the hedge fence, while on the line, was yet located on the property of Thompson.

If this hedge fence had been located on the property of the Whites they could easily have so averred, and the fact that they did not is virtually conclusive of the issue that it was not on their property, and especially are we authorized to so conclude by the failure to deny the allegation of the answer that the iron fence put up to take its place was located on the property of Thompson.

Taking this view of the case, Thompson had the right to take down the hedge fence on his own property and put in the place of it, on his own property, the iron fence.

Fence—right to remove hedge.

But if it should be admitted that the hedge fence was immediately on the line between the two lots, and partly on each, we think the Whites were estopped by their conduct from bringing this action to recover damages for its removal. The confessed allegations of the answer make it a

Estoppel—to complain of removal of hedge.

clear case of estoppel, under the authority of Trimble v. King, 131 Ky. 4, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 880, 114 S. W. 317; Johnson v. Elkhorn Gas Coal Min. Co. 176 Ky. 676, 197 S. W. 409.

If the letter written by Thompson to White does not, under the pleadings, constitute an estoppel, it would be difficult to find a state of facts that would. Here we have a short division fence that is either immediately on the line or on the property of an owner who wants to remove it and replace it by another and better fence. This owner writes a letter to the adjoining owner, saying to him that the fence was in bad repair, and he wanted to take it down and put in its place, on his own property, but on the line, a good fence at his own expense; also telling him that if he had any objection he wanted him to make it known. The adjoining owner gets the letter, but makes no objection or protest of any kind; he stands by and sees his neighbor tear down the old, and put up a new, fence at his own expense, and then sues him for damages.

It is further said for appellant that, even if he is estopped by the letter from seeking to recover damages on account of the fence, he should have a right to recover for the alleged wrongful act of Thompson in tearing off "a wooden support and railing which was attached to the house of plaintiff." This act on the face of it appears to be a very unsubstantial ground for damages, but, aside from its trivial nature, it is plain that this piece of wood was in some way a part of or attached to the hedge fence, and that in tearing down the fence it was also pulled down or removed.

This railing should go with the fence; the right to remove the fence carried with it the right to remove the railing.

The judgment is affirmed.

Trespass—right to remove railing attached to house.

ANNOTATION.

Right to remove or rebuild fence separating one's land from his neighbor's land.

I. In general, 1644.

II. Removal, 1644.

III. Reconstruction, 1646.

Scope.

This annotation is confined to cases involving fences which separate adjoining lands, but are not what are technically known as division or partition fences, since the rights and liabilities of adjoining landowners as to such latter fences are generally regulated by statute. Cases relating to fences along highways or along a railroad right of way, and spite fences, are also excluded from this note.

I. In general.

As a general rule, one has the right, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, to remove at his pleasure a fence separating his land from that of his neighbor, when such fence is located wholly upon his own land. The reported case (WHITE v. THOMPSON, ante, 1641); Jones v. Henry (1877) Man. Unrep. Cas. (La.) 65; Jeffries v. Burgin, (1874) 57 Mo. 327; Sims v. Field (1881) 74 Mo. 139; McAninch v. Smith (1885) 19 Mo. App. 240; Wright v. Brown (1912) 163 Mo. App. 117, 145 S. W. 518; Jones v. Derosset (1916) — Mo. App. —, 185 S. W. 239; Thayer v. Wright (1847) 4 Denio (N. Y.) 180; Ciowers v. Sawyers (1858) 1 Head (Tenn.) 156; Kimball v. Adams (1881) 52 Wis. 554, 9 N. W. 170; Scholl v. Kinitzer (1892) 83 Wis. 307, 53 N. W. 451; Bragg v. Rogers (1875) 25 U. C. C. P. 156.

And he may also rebuild such a fence. WHITE v. THOMPSON (reported herewith) ante, 1641; Thayer v. Wright (1847) 4 Denio (N. Y.) 180; Bragg v. Rogers (U. C.) supra.

II. Removal.

The general rule that a landowner has the right to remove a division fence located wholly upon his own property applies, whether such fence was erected by himself, as in Jeffries v. Burgin (1874) 57 Mo. 327, and in Bragg v. Rogers (1875) 25 U. C. C. P. 156, or by his predecessor in title, as in Sims v. Field (1881) 74 Mo. 139; McAninch v. Smith (1885) 19 Mo. App. 240, and Jones v. Derosset (1916) — Mo. App. —, 185 S. W. 239; or by the adjoining landowner, without any agreement between the parties as to a right of removal, as in Wright v. Brown (1912) 163 Mo. App. 117, 145 S. W. 518, Kimball v. Adams (1881) 52 Wis. 554, 9 N. W. 170, and Scholl v. Kinitzer (1892) 83 Wis. 307, 53 S. W. 451.

Where one incloses a farm by fences, which he deems to be on his line, whether the true line or not, and claims the fences and the land up to such line for nearly thirty years, and during such time has repaired and maintained such fences, another, who has subsequently improved an adjoining tract, cannot bring an action of trespass for the taking away of the rails by the former. McAninch v. Smith (1885) 19 Mo. App. 240.

And where one has planted a hedge fence with the intention of locating it near the dividing line, but wholly on his own land, and has done so according to an older fence supposed to be on his land, and for a number of years cares for it until it becomes a substantial fence, during such time claiming the fence as entirely his own, which claim is recognized by the adjoining owner, a grantee of such adjoining owner cannot recover damages from a successor in title of the planter of the hedge, for the removal of the fence and the manufacture of fence posts from the hedge trees. Jones v. Derosset (1915) — Mo. App. —, 185 S. W. 239.

But one cannot arbitrarily remove a division fence located wholly upon his own land, where he has permitted his neighbor to connect his fence with it; but in such case he must give his neighbor reasonable notice of his intention to remove the division fence, in order that the latter may protect his premises. Sims v. Field (1881) 74 Mo. 139.

And a statute making it unlawful for any person who is in any manner interested in any fence attached to or connected with any fence owned or controlled by any other person, to remove the same without first giving the notice therein provided, is violated by the removal of a fence which is a part of one continuous line of separating or dividing fences, of which the adjoining owner also owns a part, although the fence removed, as well as the land upon which it stands, belongs to the one by whom it is removed. St. Louis Cattle Co. v. Gholson (1895) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 30 S. W. 269.

And if one remove a portion of a fence separating his land from that of his neighbor, although the part removed is his own fence and upon his own land, at a time and under circumstances that would naturally cause his stock to go into his neighbor's pasture, he is liable for the resulting injury to his neighbor. Claunch v. Osborn (1893) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 28 S. W. 937; Jameson v.

Board (1914) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 171 S. W. 1037.

A landowner, who, as an act of neighborly accommodation, permits an adjoining owner to erect a division fence upon the former's property, may remove such fence, upon his neighbor's failure to do so after a reasonable notice, since such permission was a mere license, revocable at the pleasure of the giver. Wright v. Brown (1912) 163 Mo. App. 117, 145 S. W. 518.

And it was held in Kimball v. Adams (1881) 52 Wis. 554, 9 N. W. 170, that a division fence built as a permanent structure by one person upon the land of a neighbor, without any agreement as to the right to remove it, became a part of the land upon which it was erected, and the owner thereof might remove such fence and dispose of its materials at his pleasure; and that this was so, even though the fence was composed of rails which were not otherwise attached to the land than by their weight, and were placed upon the adjoining land by mistake. Two years later, however, the legislature enacted a statute providing that when any owner or occupant of land shall have built a fence before a boundary line shall have been established between him and any adjoining land by the county surveyor, and it shall prove, after the boundary line is so surveyed, that the fence is on the adjoining land, the party who has built the same, or, if the land is sold, the party who built the same or the purchaser of the land, shall be the owner of the fence, provided that the owner of the fence remove the same on the boundary line so established, upon a notice served upon him by the adjoining owner of land. And in Scholl v. Kinitzer (1892) 83 Wis. 307, 53 N. W. 451, one who had erected a division fence upon his neighbor's land sought, upon the ground that he was the owner of such fence under such statutory provisions, to recover damages for the removal of the fence by the owner of the realty upon which it was situated, but was defeated by the fact that the boundary line between the lands of the parties had been established by the county surveyor before the erection of the fence.

The owner of two adjoining city lots, after the sale of one of the lots with a division fence located wholly thereon, cannot remove such fence, since it is a part of the freehold and passes with the land on which it is built. Bast v. Mason (1912) 165 Mo. App. 718, 148 S. W. 398.

An act to enable persons to remove fences made by mistake on the land of other persons does not authorize one who has built a division fence upon adjoining public land by mistake, subsequently to remove the same, since such act does not apply to fences erected upon the lands of the United States, or of the state. Blair v. Worley (1835) 2 Ill. 178.

But one who incloses unimproved land with a rail fence, laying up the rails into a temporary fence because he does not know the exact location of the line, but expects at some future time, when the adjoining land is improved, to get a survey of the line and build his half of the line fence, may remove such fence, although it is wholly upon the land of the adjoining owner. Curtis v. Leasia (1889) 78 Mich. 480, 44 N. W. 500.

III. Reconstruction.

One upon whose land a division fence stands may, against the protest of his neighbor, replace it with a better fence. Bragg v. Rogers (1875) 25 U. C. C. P. 156.

Or with a fence of a different kind. For example, an iron railing in place of a hedge. WHITE v. THOMPSON (reported herewith) ante, 1641.

He may rebuild it on the same site, as in the reported case (WHITE v. THOMPSON).

Or he may reconstruct it in a new location, as in Bragg v. Rogers (U. C.) supra, where he moved it in further upon his own land, and placed it on a different angle from the old one, and in Thayer v. Wright (1847) 4 Denio (N. Y.) 180, where he removed it from within his land, to the division line.

But one landowner has no right to remove a line fence situated wholly upon the land of an adjoining owner, and out of the material rebuild the fence upon his own land, a number of feet from the boundary line, thus leaving an opening through which cattle may stray upon the adjoining land to the owner's damage. Botta v. Pene (1910) 15 West. L. R. (Can.) 508.

It was held, however, in Matson v. Calhoun (1869) 44 Mo. 368, that where one has erected a rail fence on a line believed by him to divide his land from an adjoining owner, and a subsequent survey shows that it was built upon the adjoining owner's land, a considerable distance from the true boundary line, he may reset the fence in its true position, upon the ground that the mere erection of a fence on the other's land in such circumstances did not operate to vest the title therein.

G. V. L.

COMBINED INDEX

TO

NOTES AND CASES.

---

ABANDONMENT.

Of operation of railways, see CARRIERS.
Of wife, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Constitutionality of statute or ordinance providing for destruction of abandoned animals. 8-67.

Of trust by personal representative. 8-170.

---

ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL

By dissolution of corporation, see CORPORATIONS.

By appointment of receiver, see RECEIVERS.

Pendency of prior action.

Effect of pendency of a former action by the owner of the other car to recover damages accruing to him from the collision to abate action for damages for injury growing out of an automobile collision. 8-690.

Revival.

Failure to perfect an appeal from an order denying a new trial of a motion to set aside a revivor as abatement of motion to revive. 8-163.

Necessity of motion for new trial to review ruling on motion to revive case in name of personal representative. 8-163.

---

ABUTTING OWNER.

Additional servitude as against, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

Liability of, for injury by defect in street or sidewalk, see HIGHWAYS.

ACCEPTANCE.

Of resignation of personal representative, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

---

ACCIDENT.

Presumption of negligence from, see EVIDENCE.

Injuries from accidental explosion, see EXPLOSIONS AND EXPLOSIVES.

To person in highway, see HIGHWAYS; NEGLIGENCE.

Insurance against, see INSURANCE.

Proximate cause of, see PROXIMATE CAUSE.

In general, see NEGLIGENCE; PERSONAL INJURIES.

---

ACCIDENTAL DISCHARGE.

Of firearm, see FIREARMS.

---

ACCIDENT INSURANCE.

See INSURANCE.

---

ACCOUNTANTS.

Public accountants, see PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS.

Bank accountant as a "laborer" within meaning of act penalizing importation of contract labor. 8-1438.

---

ACCOUNTING.

Between partners, see PARTNERS.

Effect of prayer for accounting to confer jurisdiction upon equity of action to collect unsatisfied judgment the amount of which is certain. 8-435.

ACCOUNTS.

Effect of filing of account by personal representative, denominated "final account," to terminate the trust. 8-170.
 Effect of a report made by an officer of a corporation as an account stated which precludes the corporation from denying its accuracy. 8-478.

ACCRETIONS.

See WATERS.

ACCOMULATIONS.

Right of trustee to accumulate income under will or other instrument directing him to use it. 8-915 (case p. 904).

ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

To interrupt Statute of Limitations, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Character as witness of officer authorized to take acknowledgments who attaches his official certificate to a will. 8-1075.

Effect of clerical error in name of clerk of court in certificate of acknowledgment by him. 8-489.

ACQUIESCENCE.

Estoppel by, see ESTOPPEL.

ACTION FOR DEBT.

Right to maintain, to recover damages for wrongful discharge of employee. 8-334.

ACTION OR SUIT.

In general.

Abatement or revival of, see ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL.

Appearance, see COSTS AND FEES.

Compromise of, see COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT.

Continuance of, see CONTINUANCE AND ADJOURNMENT.

By stockholder, see CORPORATIONS.

Costs and fees, see COSTS AND FEES.

Dismissal or discontinuance, see DISMISSAL OR DISCONTINUANCE.

Transfers between law and equity, see EQUITY.

Limitation of actions, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Effect of, on running of limitations, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Removal of, see REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

Suit against state, see STATE.

Suit against United States, see UNITED STATES.

Process, see WRIT AND PROCESS.

Effect of Federal control on right of action against public utility. 8-983.

Nature; kind.

Right to maintain action for debt to recover damages for wrongful discharge of servant. 8-334.

Civil or criminal. 8-1149, 1463.

Splitting.

Action by servant wrongfully discharged. 8-334.

ACT OF CONGRESS.

See STATUTES.

ACT OF GOD.

Liability of owner of dam for injuries caused by acts of God. 8-544.

ADDITIONAL SERVITUDE.

See EMINENT DOMAIN.

ADEMPITION.

Of devise or legacy, see WILLS.

ADHESIVENESS.

Experimental evidence as to. 8-45.

ADJOINING OWNERS.

As to fences, see FENCES.

ADJOURNMENT.

See CONTINUANCE AND ADJOURNMENT.

ADMINISTRATION.

Of decedent's estate, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

ADMINISTRATOR PENDENTE LITE.

Termination of authority of, by termination of litigation. 8-180.

ADMISSIONS.

Admissibility in evidence, see EVIDENCE.
By pleading or failure to plead, see PLEADING.

ADOPTION.

Of child, see PARENT AND CHILD.

ADULTERY.

Of wife as affecting prior separation agreement. 8-1452 (case p. 1447).

ADVERSE POSSESSION.

As to limitation of actions, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Sufficiency of showing of adverse title. 8-489.

AFFIDAVITS.

On appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Effect of statements in affidavits to cure lack of material averments in pleading. 8-290.

AFFRAY.

Experimental evidence as to possibility of seeing, as testified to by witness. 8-51.

AGE.

Constitutionality of statute as affected by discrimination in punishment for same offense based upon age. 8-854.

AGENCY.

See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

AGGRAVATED ASSAULT.

See ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

AGREED CASE.

Submission on agreed statement of facts or agreed case as waiver of defect in pleading. 8-1172 (case p. 1170).

Construction of word "also" in statement of agreed facts. 8-1014.

ALIENS.

Immigration.

Who is "laborer" within Federal acts excluding contract laborers. 8-1442 (case p. 1438).

Deportation.

Limitation of time for deportation of alien. 8-1236 (case p. 1232).

Deportation because of advocacy of unlawful destruction of property. 8-1282.

Sufficiency of warrant for arrest for deportation. 8-1282.

Fact that warrant for arrest for deportation is based upon one statute as rendering inapplicable later statute. 8-1282.

What may be considered by court in habeas corpus proceeding to review deportation order. 8-1282.

Effect of failure to inform alien of his right to be represented at hearing for deportation by an attorney until most of the testimony was taken. 8-1282.

Effect on validity of deportation proceedings of fact that record contained letters and clippings introduced without the knowledge of the alien where deportation was not based on anything contained therein. 8-1282.

ALIMONY.

See DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

AMBIGUITY.

Parol evidence to explain, see EVIDENCE.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

AMENDMENTS.

On appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.
Of pleading, see PLEADING.

AMMONIA.

Experimental evidence as to inflammability of. 8-45.

AMUSEMENTS.

Constitutionality of statute or ordinance requiring proprietor of place of amusement to furnish fire or police protection at his own expense. 8-1628 (case p. 1590).

Carrying on of place of amusement as a private business. 8-1590.

ANARCHIST.

Limitation of time for deportation of alien anarchist. 8-1289.

ANESTHETICS.

Experimental evidence as to impurity of. 8-46.

ANIMALS.

In general.

Injury to, by railroad trains, see RAILROADS.

Constitutionality of statute or ordinance providing for destruction of abandoned animals. 8-67.

Injury by.

Recovery under Workmen's Compensation Act for injury by dog bite. 8-930.

Running at large.

Constitutionality of statute or ordinance providing for destruction of certain animals running at large. 8-74, 79.

Diseased animals.

Constitutionality of statute or ordinance providing for destruction of diseased animal. 8-69.

ANSWER.

See PLEADING.

ANTI-TRUST LAW.

Combinations in violation of, see MONOPOLY AND COMBINATIONS.

APARTMENT HOUSES.

Excluding apartment houses from restricted residence district under power of eminent domain. 8-585.

APPEAL AND ERROR.

Appellate jurisdiction generally.

Effect of statute denying writ of error to judgment for contempt because of nonperformance of or disobedience to a judgment, decree, or order. 8-1149.

— finality of decision.

Appealability of probate proceeding to remove administrator de bonis non. 8-170.

Judgment for contempt. 8-1149.

Effect of appeal.

Waiver of statute or court rule requiring nonresident plaintiff to give security for costs where application therefor is not made until after appeal. 8-1526, 1533.

Record — amending.

Amendment of action against railroad company so as to substitute the Director General of Railroads as defendant. 8-964.

— affidavits.

Necessity that affidavit presenting for review statements made during the trial, which the trial judge refused to require the stenographer to take down, should show that such statements had reference to the cause on trial and might properly be made part of the case made. 8-59.

— evidence.

Refusal of appellate court to review rulings as to instructions where evidence does not appear in the record. 8-59.

— objections and exceptions.

Necessity for exceptions to instructions. 8-544, 1426.

Necessity of exception to evidence. 8-760.

— raising question by motion or other mode.

Necessity of motion for new trial to review ruling on motion to revive case in name of personal representative. 8-163.

Discretionary matters.

Discretion of trial court as to admission of experimental evidence as affected by similarity or dissimilarity of conditions. 8-24 (case p. 1).

Exclusion of evidence of experiments. 8-1.

Questions not raised below.

Questioning for first time on appeal failure of trial court to allow interest. 8-198.

Raising defense of fellow servant for first time on appeal. 8-1426.

Objection that case was tried on the wrong theory. 8-1426.

Review of facts.

Refusal to disturb verdict on conflicting evidence if it cannot be said that evidence preponderated in favor of losing party. 8-544.

Review of damages awarded in eminent domain proceeding. 8-1290.

— of findings by referee, commissioners, etc.

Review of findings of Workmen's Compensation Commission, see WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

Conclusiveness of finding of referee approved by trial judge. 8-1081.

Conclusiveness of finding of commissioner appointed to determine prejudice of judge. 8-1226.

What errors warrant reversal.

Discrepancy in summons in stating amount of bail bond. 8-363.

— admission or exclusion of evidence. Erroneous admission of harmless evidence. 8-1477.

Refusal to reverse because of admission of incompetent evidence in absence of proof that such action caused miscarriage of justice or violation of constitutional or statutory right. 8-163.

Admission of evidence of expert having no logical effect in the case. 8-11.

Admission by counsel for defendant in criminal case. 8-1331.

Exclusion of immaterial evidence. 8-1161.

Exclusion of evidence in homicide case that accused had told witness that decedent had threatened his life. 8-1357.

— as to instructions.

Refusal to reverse for technical inaccuracies. 8-544.

Refusal to reverse where charge considered as a whole is correct, though some expressions standing alone may be erroneous. 8-1214.

Omission of words "from the evidence" in charging the jury that if accused has failed to satisfy the jury they must make a certain finding. 8-1214.

— remarks of judge.

Statement by judge that evidence is admitted "for what it is worth." 8-1034.

— as to jury.

Court's refusal to sustain challenge for cause to juror who is afterwards excused on peremptory challenge. 8-1084.

— as to verdict.

Amount of verdict. 8-1116.

Judgment.

Affirming in part and reversing in part. 8-163.

— effect of decision.

Erroneous decision as law of the case on a subsequent appeal. 8-1033 (case p. 1023).

Right of parties to litigation to disregard mandate of court of appeals and ask trial court to enter judgment according to agreement between them. 8-938.

---

APPEARANCE.

Effect of appearance as waiver of privilege against arrest. 8-757.

---

APPOINTMENT.

Of receiver, see RECEIVERS.

---

ARBITRATION.

Improper attempt by influencing or by attempting to influence decision as ground for revocation of arbitration, or for avoidance of award thereunder. 8-1082 (case p. 1051).

---

ARGUMENT.

Of counsel, see TRIAL.

---

ARMY AND NAVY.

Induction of principal into military or naval service as exonerating his bail for his nonappearance. 8-371 (case p. 363).

ARREST.

Release from, on bail, see BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

Privilege from, see WRIT AND PROCESS.

Time at which right to discharge from arrest is to be determined. 8-750.

Sufficiency of warrant for arrest for deportation of alien. 8-1282.

ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

In attempting to prevent elopement. 8-660 (case p. 656).

Firearm used as a bludgeon as a deadly weapon. 8-1319 (case p. 1316).

Liability of master for assault on servant by superintendent. 8-1426.

Striking one preparing to make an attack on the arm with a pistol so that blow glances and makes a slight wound on his head as an aggravated assault. 8-1316.

Putting to physician hypothetical question not based on particular facts of case. 8-1316.

ASSESSMENTS.

For insurance, see INSURANCE.

Of taxes generally, see TAXES.

ASSIZE.

Power of court of, to punish for contempt. 8-1570.

ASSOCIATIONS.

Religious societies, see RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

Capacity to act as trustee of library. 8-904.

Right of unincorporated association to take property given it by will. 8-904.

ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

By servant, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

ATTACHMENT.

Sale under, see JUDICIAL SALE.

Effect of appointment of receiver for corporation upon enforcement of attachment lien. 8-459.

ATTESTATION.

Of will, see WILLS.

ATTORNEY GENERAL.

As proper party to bring suit. 8-679.

ATTORNEYS.

In general.

As to attorney general, see ATTORNEY GENERAL.

As to district and prosecuting attorneys, see DISTRICT AND PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS.

Evidence of admissions by attorneys, see EVIDENCE.

As to power of attorney, see POWER OF ATTORNEY.

Argument of, see TRIAL.

Fact that attorney for one of the parties to an arbitration agreement drafted the award as ground for setting it aside. 8-1089.

Application of Sunday laws to attorneys. 8-1356 (case p. 1353).

Effect of failure to inform alien of his right to be represented at hearing for deportation by an attorney until most of the testimony was taken. 8-1282.

Disbarment.

Disloyal acts or political opinions as ground for disbarment or suspension of attorney. 8-1262 (case p. 1259).

Purpose of disbarment. 8-1259.

Statutory provision that conviction in any jurisdiction of felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, whether the acts are so designated by local laws or not, shall be ground for disbarment. 8-1259.

False statements with intent to interfere with success of military or naval forces in time of war. 8-1259.

Right, in proceeding to disbar attorney because of conviction of crime, to inquire into his guilt or innocence of the crime. 8-1259.

Compensation.

Retainer fee and compensation for time spent in waiting in office at client's request. 8-1353.

Effect of performance of some work on Sunday on right to recover for the retainer and work done on secular days. 8-1353.

AUCTIONS.

Implied authority of auctioneer to receive payment for commodities which he is authorized to sell. 8-227.

AUDIBILITY.

Experimental evidence as to. 8-32.

AUTHORITY.

Presumption and burden of proof as to, see EVIDENCE.

AUTOMOBILES.

In general.

As to garage, see GARAGE.

Experimental evidence as to speed of. 8-33.

Liability of manufacturer of automobile to purchaser from middleman for injury from defects in car. 8-1023.

Negligence in use of; injuries by. Negligent driving generally, see NEGLIGENCE.

Experimental evidence in action for personal injuries by automobile as affected by similarity or dissimilarity of conditions. 8-33.

Liability for negligence of chauffeur furnished with a car hired for an extended period. 8-484 (case p. 480).

Opinion evidence as to speed of automobile; comparison with that of other car. 8-690.

Presumption of responsibility of owner of automobile for injury caused by chauffeur in operating it. 8-785.

Liability of owner for injury through negligent operation of car by one not in his employ nor engaged in his business. 8-785.

Effect of pendency of a former action by the owner of the other car to recover damages accruing to him from the collision, to abate action for damages for injury growing out of an automobile collision. 8-690.

AWARD.

Of arbitrators, see ARBITRATION.

BACILLI.

See BACTERIA.

BACTERIA.

Experimental evidence as to bacteria in ice. 8-40.

BAD FAITH.

See GOOD FAITH.

BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

In general.

Giving bail as waiver of privilege against arrest. 8-757.

Abolition of death penalty as affecting right to bail of one charged with murder in first degree. 8-1362 (case p. 1348).

Reversal of judgment on bail bond because of discrepancy in summons in stating amount of bond. 8-363.

Release of bail.

Induction of principal into military or naval service as exonerating his bail for his nonappearance. 8-371 (case p. 363).

Effect of insanity of principal to release surety. 8-363.

By arrest of principal by commonwealth for another offense. 8-363.

By arrest and confinement of principal in another state. 8-363.

By arrest and removal of principal by Federal government. 8-363.

By removal of infant principal by his mother from jurisdiction of the court. 8-363.

By confinement of principal by illness. 8-363.

By death of principal. 8-363.

BANANA PEEL.

Experimental evidence in action for injury by slipping on. 8-88.

BANK EXAMINERS.

See BANKS.

BANKRUPTCY.

Power of referee in bankruptcy to punish for contempt. 8-1575.

BANKS.

In general.

Power and duty of bank which has acquired a public service plant to continue its operation. 8-248 (case p. 242).

Examination and supervision of banks by public officers as impairment of charter rights. 8-898 (case p. 894).

Bank accountant as a "laborer" within meaning of act penalizing importation of contract labor. 8-1438.

Estoppel to plead want of power to operate street or interurban road. 8-242.

Officers and agents.

Evidence on question whether check made payable to bank cashier was to pay a note to the bank or a debt to the cashier. 8-298.

Liability of bank for misappropriation by bank cashier of proceeds of check made payable to him personally to satisfy a note held by the bank. 8-298.

Application of rule that one paying a note to an agent without demanding the production of the note does so at his own risk in case of payment to a bank cashier of note held by bank. 8-298.

BAR.

Of limitation, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

BARBERS.

Work of, on Sunday, see SUNDAY.

BASTARDY.

Presumption as to paternity of child, see EVIDENCE.

Marriage of mother of child to another man as defense to bastardy proceedings. 8-426.

BATTERY.

See ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

BENEFICIARIES.

In will, see WILLS.

BENEFITS.

Estoppel by receiving, see ESTOPPEL.

BEQUEST.

See WILLS.

BETTING.

See GAMING.

BIAS.

Disqualification of judge by, see JUDGES.

BILL OF PARTICULARS.

In general, see PLEADING.

BILLS AND NOTES.

In general.

Premium notes, see INSURANCE.

Payment of, see PAYMENT.

Effect of Negotiable Instruments Act on statute invalidating instrument given for gambling consideration. 8-314 (case p. 309).

Right to retain title to property sold where note is given for purchase price. 8-789.

Who are bona fide holders.

Presumption and burden of proof as to good faith of holder. 8-309.

Sufficiency of proof of good faith of holder. 8-309.

Actions and defenses.

Prior action on promissory note in which claim for breach of contract might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as barring or abating subsequent action for such breach. 8-710.

Effect of suit upon note taken for purchase price of property sold with retention of title for security, on the security. 8-789.

---

BIRTHS.

Registration of, see VITAL STATISTICS.

---

BLOW.

Experimental evidence as to force of. 8-83.

---

BLUE FLAG RULE.

Right of servant to rely upon performance by another of the duty, equally incumbent upon himself, to comply with the "blue flag rule." 8-870 (case p. 865).

---

BOARDS.

Board of health, see HEALTH.

Power of, to punish for contempt. 8-1578.

---

BOILER.

Explosion of, see EXPLOSIONS AND EXPLOSIVES.

---

BONA FIDE HOLDER.

Of note, see BILLS AND NOTES.

---

BONDS.

In general.

Bail bonds, see BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.
Security for costs, see COSTS AND FEES.
Of personal representative, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Obligee's concealment of facts or evasive answers as fraud against surety. 8-1486 (case p. 1477).

Corporate bonds.

Succession tax on bonds of domestic corporation owned by estate of nonresident and held at his residence. 8-863 (case p. 855).

BOOT.

Experimental evidence as to freezing of, to railroad track. 8-84.

---

BOUNDARIES.

Fence on boundary line, see FENCES.

---

BRAKE.

Experimental evidence as to effect of release of, to make car jump forward. 8-84.

---

BRIDGES.

Liability for injury on bridge at town, municipal, or county line. 8-1274 (case p. 1271).

---

BRITISH COURTS.

Power of, to punish for contempt. 8-1570.

---

BROKERS.

In general.

Authority of broker to receive payment for commodities which he is authorized to sell or for which he is to find a market. 8-210 (case p. 192).

Distinction between broker and factor or commission merchant. 8-192.

Burden of proof as to authority of broker to receive payment. 8-192.

When broker's relation to the transaction ceases ordinarily. 8-192.

Real estate brokers.

Constitutionality of statute or ordinance requiring real estate brokers to procure a license. 8-424 (case p. 418).

Liability of broker to purchaser for overstating lowest price at which owner is willing to sell. 8-1383 (case p. 1377).

Requiring applicant for license as real estate broker to file certificate of good character. 8-418.

Real estate broker as agent of property owner in fixing prices. 8-1377.

Employee of broker as subagent of owner of property. 8-1377.

Agent of real estate broker as acting within the scope of authority in naming to customer price fixed by broker as lowest price for which property can be had. 8-1377.

Liability of agent for real estate broker to customer for charging him in good faith an excessive price for the property named to him by the broker. 8-1377.

Liability of real estate broker who benefits by misrepresentations of his agent as to lowest sale price of property. 8-1377.

BUILDINGS.

Elevators in, see ELEVATORS.

Negligence of landlord as to condition of, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Tenant's right as to, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Lien on, see MECHANICS' LIENS.

Experiments to show stability of cornice. 8-34.

Imposing building restrictions in exercise of power of eminent domain. 8-594 (case p. 585).

BULLET HOLE.

Experimental evidence as to how bullet hole was caused. 8-34.

BURDEN OF PROOF.

See EVIDENCE.

BURNS.

Powder burns, see POWDER BURNS AND MARKS.

BUSINESS.

On Sunday, see SUNDAY.

CANADIAN COURTS.

Power of, to punish for contempt. 8-1571.

CANDLE.

Experimental evidence as to appearance given by light from. 8-40.

CAP.

Experimental evidence as to catching of, in shutting door. 8-36.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

Abolition of death penalty as affecting right to bail of one charged with murder in the first degree. 8-1352 (case p. 1348).

CAR INSPECTOR.

Right of, to rely upon performance by another of the duty, equally incumbent on himself, of complying with "blue flag rule." 8-870 (case p. 865).

Assumption by car inspector of negligence of fellow inspector in failing to place blue flag to protect train on which they are working. 8-865.

Question whether fellow servant to whom car inspector delegated the duty of placing blue flag required by rules was the servant of the inspector or of the railroad company. 8-865.

CARRIERS.

In general.

Injury to employee, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

Suit against railroad owned by, or in which interest is held by United States or state. 8-995 (case p. 990).

Passenger carriers.

Liability of carrier for giving misinformation to passenger as to running of train. 8-1183 (case p. 1178).

—injury to passenger.

Experimental evidence in action for injury to passenger. 8-34.

Instructions as to presumption and burden of proof in case of injury to passenger. 8-163.

Order of Director General of Railroads under Federal control, requiring actions for injuries to passengers to be brought against the Director General and not against the carriers. 8-959.

— ejection from train.

Liability of carrier to passenger for ejection from train which he has mistakenly boarded because of misinformation as to its destination. 8-1153.

— leaving at destination.

Liability of carrier for giving misinformation to passenger as to destination of train. 8-1153, 1158.

Carriers of freight.

Service of government as excuse for failure of carrier to discharge duty to individual. 8-163 (case p. 155).

Governmental control; rates; running of trains.

Regulation of interstate business of, see COMMERCE.

Federal control of common carriers. 8-969 (cases pp. 959, 964).

Relation between railroad and government after roads have been placed under government control. 8-964.

Defense that acts causing injury were not those of defendant railroad company but acts of the Director General of Railroads as an affirmative one. 8-964.

Order of Director General of Railroads under Federal control, requiring actions for injuries to passengers to be brought against the Director General and not against the carriers. 8-959.

Amendment of action against railroad company so as to substitute the director General of Railroads as defendant. 8-964.

Power of legislature to confer on Public Service Commission control of the schedules, routing, and style of cars of street railway company. 8-916.

Order of Public Service Commission changing schedules, routes, and types of cars of street railway company from those fixed by the ordinance under which the company is operating. 8-916.

— rates; discrimination.

Free passes to public officials or employees. 8-652 (case p. 679).

Limitation of time for suit by shipper to recover overcharges. 8-1254.

Contract by sheriff to perform legal service for company in exchange for free pass. 8-679.

Definition of free pass. 8-679.

— abandonment of operation.

Power of court to authorize discontinuation of railroad or street railway upon foreclosing a mortgage on its plant. 8-278 (case p. 282).

General rule as to right to abandon operation of railroad. 8-232.

Assumption by purchaser of street railway at judicial sale of obligation of original grantee of franchise to operate the road. 8-242.

---

CASE.

Liability of seller or manufacturer for injury due to defects in articles sold, see NEGLIGENCE.

---

CASHIER.

Liability of bank for misappropriation by bank cashier of proceeds of check made payable to him personally to satisfy a note held by the bank. 8-298.

Application of rule that one paying a note to an agent without demanding the production of the note does so at his own risk in case of payment to a bank cashier of note held by bank. 8-298.

Evidence on question whether check made payable to bank cashier was to pay a note to the bank or a debt to the cashier. 8-298.

---

CASH REGISTER.

Experimental evidence as to condition of. 8-34.

---

CATTLE.

See ANIMALS.

---

CAUSE.

Presumption and burden of proof as to, see EVIDENCE.

Of death of or injury to insured, see INSURANCE.

Proximate cause, see PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Experimental evidence as to cause of fire. 8-37.

---

CEMENT.

Experimental evidence as to grade of. 8-16.

CERTIFICATES.

Of acknowledgment, see ACKNOWLEDGMENT.
 Of birth or death, see VITAL STATISTICS.
 Requiring applicant for license as real estate broker to file certificate of good character. 8-418.

CHANGE.

Of name of corporation, see CORPORATIONS.
 Of domicil, see DOMICIL.
 Of judge, see JUDGES.
 Of venue, see VENUE.

CHARITY.

Works of, on Sunday, see SUNDAY.

CHARITIES.

Right of trustee of trust for benefit of charity to accumulate income under will or other instrument directing him to use it. 8-915 (case p. 904).

Capacity of unincorporated association to act as trustee. 8-904.

CHARTER.

Of corporation, see CORPORATIONS.

CHASTITY.

Unchastity of wife as affecting prior separation agreement. 8-1452 (case p. 1447).

CHATTEL MORTGAGE.

Right of grantee or transferee to be reimbursed for expenditures in payment of mortgage on property where conveyance or transfer is in fraud of creditors. 8-527 (case p. 523).

CHATTELS.

Mortgage on, see CHATTEL MORTGAGE.
 Sale of, see SALE.

CHAUFFEUR.

Negligence of, see AUTOMOBILES.

CHECKS.

Effect of Negotiable Instruments Law to repeal statute making void checks given for gambling debt. 8-309.
 Burden of proof of good faith of holder of check given for gambling debt. 8-309.
 Sufficiency of proof of good faith of holder of check given for gambling debt. 8-309.

CHEMICALS.

Experiments to show erasure of writing by use of chemicals. 8-40.
Applicability of "res ipsa loquitur" to explosion of. 8-500.

CHINESE.

Immigration of, see ALIENS.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.

Christian Scientist as a physician within meaning of statute in relation to vital statistics. 8-1072.

CHURCHES.

In general, see RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

CIRCUIT COURTS.

Power of, to punish for contempt. 8-1640, 1553.

CIRCULAR SAW.

Experimental evidence as to throwing of wood by. 8-34.

CITIZENS.

As to aliens, see ALIENS.

CITIZENSHIP.

As affecting right to remove cause to Federal court, see REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

OFFICES.

See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

CITY COURTS.

See MUNICIPAL COURTS.

CLAIMS.

Against decedent's estate, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

CLASSIFICATION.

By statute, see STATUTES.

CLAUSE.

In deed, extrinsic evidence to explain.
8-1335.

CLERK.

Clerk in steamship office as "laborer" within meaning of act penalizing importation of contract labor. 8-1438.

CLOUD ON TITLE.

Prior action to determine title to real property in which adverse claim might have been asserted by counter-claim, set-off, or cross petition as bar to subsequent independent action on such claim. 8-731.

Necessity that religious society establish its corporate capacity in order to maintain action to quiet title to the church property. 8-98.

COINCIDENCE.

Judicial notice of coincidence of the days of the week with the days of the month. 8-63 (case p. 59).

COLLATERAL ATTACK.

On judgment, see JUDGMENT.

COLLATERAL CONTRACTS.

Statute of Frauds as to, see CONTRACTS.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX.

See TAXES.

COLLECTORS.

Discrimination between collectors in statute requiring license of real estate brokers. 8-418.

COLLUSION.

Effect of collusion between parties to re-ceivership proceeding on right to bring action against corporation or prosecute pending action after appointment of receiver. 8-453.

COLONIAL COURTS.

Power to punish for contempt. 8-1572.

COLOR.

Constitutionality of statute as affected by discrimination in punishment for same offense based upon color.
8-854.

COMMERCE.

Effect of act of Congress conferring upon Interstate Commerce Commission authority to compel interstate railroads to provide shipping facilities for shippers tendering interstate shipments to deprive Public Service Commission of jurisdiction to require such road to furnish such facilities to shipper offering intrastate commerce.
8-155.

COMMERCIAL BONDS.

See BONDS.

COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS.

Authority of, to receive payment for commodities which he is authorized to sell. 8-214.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

Distinction between broker and factor or commission merchant. 8-192.

COMMISSIONS.

Conclusiveness of findings of commissioner, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Power of, to punish for contempt. 8-1577.

COMMON CARRIERS.

See CARRIERS.

COMMON PLEAS.

Power of courts of, to punish for contempt. 8-1560.

COMPENSATION.

Of attorney, see ATTORNEYS.

Of employee, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

Constitutional right to compensation on destruction by public authorities of diseased animal. 8-70.

Conferring power upon the head of one department to fix the salaries of his assistants, which power is not conferred upon the heads of other departments. 8-418.

COMPETENCY.

Of witness, see WITNESSES.

In general, see INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

COMPETITION.

Combinations in restraint of, see MONOPOLY AND COMBINATIONS.

COMPLAINER.

In criminal prosecution, see INDICTMENT, ETC.

In general, see PLEADING.

COMPOSITION WITH CREDITORS.

Obligee's concealment of facts as fraud against surety for debtor entering into composition agreement with creditors. 8-1507.

COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT.

Right of parties to litigation to disregard mandate of court of appeals and ask trial court to enter judgment according to agreement between them. 8-938.

Right of parties to suit to settle it at any time before or after final judgment. 8-938.

COMPULSORY VACCINATION.

See HEALTH.

CONCEALMENT.

As fraud, see FRAUD AND DECEIT.

Effect of, on running of limitations, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Experimental evidence as to existence of place of concealment. 8-56.

CONCLUSION.

Opinion as, see EVIDENCE.

Averment of, see PLEADING.

CONDEMNATION.

Of property, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

CONDITIONAL SALE.

See SALE.

CONDITIONS.

See COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.

CONFISCATION.

Of property, constitutionality of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

CONGRESS.

Acts of Congress, see STATUTES.

---

CONSENT.

As defense to crime, see CRIMINAL LAW.

Effect of consent of landlord to doing of act which results in injury to leased premises on liability of the wrongdoer to the tenant therefor. 8-612.

---

CONSIDERATION.

Of contracts generally, see CONTRACTS.

Of conveyance attacked for fraud, see FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

---

CONSPIRACY.

Combinations in restraint of trade, commerce, or competition, see MONOPOLY AND COMBINATIONS.

---

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

As to regulation of interstate commerce, see COMMERCE.

As to title of statute, see STATUTES.

Validity of statutes generally, see STATUTES.

Amendments.

Seventh amendment to Constitution preserving trial by jury as applicable only to Federal courts. 8-1463.

Delegation of power.

General delegation of power to guard against spread of contagious disease. 8-836 (case p. 831).

Right of legislature to confer right to exercise the police power upon agencies created by it. 8-916.

Delegating to Public Utilities Commission power to compel exercise of eminent domain to secure the public safety. 8-466.

To board of health. 8-831.

Separation of powers.

Judicial power to decide as to legislative acts, see COURTS.

Infringement of power of supreme judicial court by conferring final authority in election contests upon judges of the superior court. 8-1463.

Local self-government.

Effect of constitutional provisions relative to home rule charters of villages and cities to authorize city to grant its city council the right to punish a witness for contempt. 8-1582.

Rights of persons and property; equal protection; due process; police power.

Right to trial by jury, see JURY.

Special and local legislation, see STATUTES.

Meaning of phrases "law of the land" and "due process of law." 8-65.

— amusements.

Constitutionality of statute or ordinance requiring proprietor of place of amusement to furnish fire or police protection at his own expense. 8-1628 (case p. 1590).

Police power as to. 8-1590.

Fixing wages of employee whom theater proprietor is compelled to employ for fire protection, forbidding any reduction in his salary and forbidding his discharge without approval of the fire commissioners. 8-1590.

— animals.

Constitutionality of statute or ordinance providing for destruction of animals. 8-67 (case p. 65).

— banks.

Impairment of charter rights of, see infra,
Impairment of contract obligations.

— carriers.

Regulation of interstate business of, see COMMERCE.

Federal control of. 8-969 (cases pp. 959, 964).

Order of Public Service Commission regulating schedules, routing, and type of cars to be used by street railway company. 8-916.

— confiscation, destruction, or seizure of property.

Statute or ordinance providing for destruction of animals. 8-67 (case p. 65).

Constitutionality of statute providing for confiscation or destruction, without notice, of intoxicating liquors, and vehicles or other property used in connection with same. 8-888 (case p. 874).

— criminal matters; penalties.

Discrimination as regards degree of penalty or punishment for violation of Sunday law. 8-566 (case p. 563).

Constitutionality of statute as affected by discrimination in punishment for same offense based upon age, color, or sex. 8-854 (case p. 848).

Power of legislature under police power to impose penalty for violation of Sunday law. 8-563.

— elections.

See infra, Officers and elections.

— eminent domain.

Constitutional provision against taking private property for public use without compensation, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

— guaranties of justice.

Impairment of right of successful candidate for office to obtain justice freely by requiring him to go to another county to contest an election contest. 8-1463.

— impairment of contract obligations.

Examination and supervision of banks by public officers as impairment of charter rights. 8-898 (case p. 894).

Supervision of public utilities in exercise of police power. 8-916.

Power of state to place under control of the Public Service Commission private contracts for the purchase and sale of water for the irrigation of land. 8-249.

Order of Public Service Commission changing schedules, routes, and types of cars of street railway company from those fixed by the ordinance under which the company is operating. 8-916.

Regulating rates fixed in water certificates of irrigation company. 8-249.

— intoxicating liquors.

Constitutionality of statute providing for confiscation or destruction without notice, of intoxicating liquors, and vehicles or other property used in connection with same. 8-888 (case p. 874).

— license.

Discrimination in license tax, see LICENSE.

Constitutionality of statute or ordinance requiring real estate brokers to procure a license. 8-424 (case p. 418).

— municipal matters.

Validity as against city having interest in net earnings of street railway company and an option to purchase the railway, of order of Public Service Commission as to schedules, routes, and type of cars. 8-916.

— notice and hearing.

Notice and opportunity of hearing as necessary to constitute due process of law. 8-65.

Necessity of, before condemnation and destruction of property. 8-65.

Sufficiency of opportunity for hearing before some tribunal other than judicial. 8-65.

Sufficiency of rehearing upon application of one not made a party to a proceeding before a Public Service Commission which results in an order affecting his interests. 8-916.

— officers and elections.

As to voters and elections generally, see ELECTIONS.

Providing disqualification for office and disfranchisement only for successful candidates for public office who are guilty of corrupt practices. 8-1463.

Exempting from Corrupt Practices Act town officers elected in towns of less than ten thousand inhabitants. 8-1463.

Requiring election contests to be heard only in one county of the state. 8-1463.

Right to hold office and to vote as property within the meaning of the 14th Amendment. 8-1463.

— osteopaths.

See infra, Physicians and surgeons.

— penalties.

See supra, Criminal matters; penalties.

— physicians and surgeons.

Constitutionality of separate classification of osteopaths and regular physicians. 8-1066.

— public service corporations.

See also supra, Carriers.

Validity of measures for Federal control of public utilities. 8-969.

Regulation of public utilities in exercise of police power. 8-916.

— Sunday law.

See supra, Criminal matters; penalties.

— theaters.

See supra, Amusements.

---

CONSTRUCTION.

Of contracts generally, see CONTRACTS.

Of insurance policy, see INSURANCE.

Of lease, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Of pleading, see PLEADING.

Of statutes, see STATUTES.

Of will, see WILLS.

CONSTRUCTIVE SERVICE.

Doctrine of, as applied to wrongfully discharged servant. 8-338 (case p. 334).

CONTAGIOUS AND INFECTIOUS DISEASES.

Of animals, see ANIMALS.

As to venereal disease, see VENEREAL DISEASE.

General delegation of power to guard against spread of. 8-836 (case p. 831).

CONTEMPT.

Statute expressly or impliedly denying power to enforce by process of contempt, order, judgment, or decree, for money, as applicable to order or decree for alimony. 8-1156 (case p. 1149).

What courts or officers have power to punish for contempt. 8-1543 (case p. 1541).

Power of municipal councils to punish for contempt. 8-1586 (case p. 1582).

Nature of contempt proceeding, as civil or criminal. 8-1149.

Appealability of judgment for contempt. 8-1149.

Power of equity to commit litigant for contempt for refusal to obey decree, by an order entered upon its own records under the style of the case in which such decree was pronounced. 8-1149.

Effect of constitutional provisions relative to home rule charters of villages and cities to authorize city to grant its city council the right to punish a witness for contempt. 8-1582.

Effect of statute to deny to courts of equity power to enforce decrees for payment of money by process of contempt. 8-1149.

CONTINUANCE AND ADJOURNMENT.

Application for continuance as waiver of right to dismissal because of plaintiff's failure to furnish security for costs. 8-1528.

CONTRACT LABOR.

Importation of, see ALIENS.

CONTRACTS.

Impairment of obligation of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Of corporations, see CORPORATIONS.

Effect of custom on, see CUSTOM AND USAGE.

For separate support and maintenance, see DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

As to insurance contract, see INSURANCE.

As to mortgage, see MORTGAGE.

Consideration.

Consideration of conveyance attacked for fraud, see FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

Statute of Frauds.

Parol evidence to vary written contract, see EVIDENCE.

Validity of oral promise by stockholder to pay debt of corporation. 8-1198 (case p. 1195).

Signature with lead pencil. 8-1839 (case p. 1335).

When promise to pay debt of another is regarded as original. 8-1195.

Treating promise as collateral though new consideration moves to the promisor and is beneficial to him. 8-1195.

Construction.

Parol evidence as to meaning of parties to contract, see EVIDENCE.

Construction of insurance policy, see INSURANCE.

Of language of instrument as against one preparing it. 8-760.

—entirety.

When contract is indivisible so that invalid portion cannot be separated. 8-1353.

Validity; public policy.

Formal requisites, see supra.

Validity of insurance contract, see INSURANCE.

Free passes to public officials or employees. 8-682 (case p. 679).

Partial invalidity. 8-1353.

—gambling contracts.

Effect of Negotiable Instruments Act on statute invalidating instrument given for gambling consideration. 8-314 (case p. 309).

—restraint of trade.

Combinations between several persons or corporations in restraint of trade or commerce, see MONOPOLY AND COMBINATIONS.

Performance.

Necessity that one who offers scrap iron, which he has accumulated for sale, deliver the estimated quantity, when estimate of quantity is made by agent of buyer. 8-745.

Breach.

Measure of damages for breach, see DAMAGES.

Actions.

Effect of bill of particulars in action on contract. 8-551.

Prior action in which claim might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as barring or abating subsequent independent action thereon. 8-698, 714, 716, 720.

CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

See NEGLIGENCE.

CONVERSATION.

Experimental evidence as to possibility of overhearing. 8-34, 48.

CONVERSION.

See TROVER.

CONVEYANCES.

In general, see DEEDS.

Fraudulent conveyances, see FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

CONVICTS.

Extradition of, see EXTRADITION.

COPLAINTIFFS.

Right of one of several complaintiffs to dismiss action, see DISMISSAL OR DISCONTINUANCE.

CORNICE.

Experimental evidence as to safety of. 8-34.

CORPORATIONS.

As to associations, see ASSOCIATIONS.

Bonds of, see BONDS.

Impairment of obligation of contract as to, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Right to exercise power of eminent domain, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

Illegal combinations by, in restraint of trade, commerce, and competition, see MONOPOLY AND COMBINATIONS.

Religious societies, see RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

Service of process on, see WRIT AND PROCESS.

Name.

Estoppel of corporation to take advantage of having acted under a wrong name after receiving the consideration. 8-579.

Effect on validity of contracts of fact that they were entered into under a name which the corporation had assumed without authority. 8-579.

Power to change name. 8-579.

Charter.

Impairment of charter rights, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Contracts.

Effect on validity of contracts of fact that they were entered into under a name which the corporation had assumed without authority. 8-579.

Officers and agents.

Power of directors to change time for regular meetings of stockholders. 8-678 (case p. 678).

Personal liability of officers for debts of corporation which has made an unauthorized change in its name. 8-583 (case p. 579).

Effect of a report made by an officer of a corporation as an account stated which precludes the corporation from denying its accuracy. 8-478.

Authority of president to promise to pay debt. 8-478.

Stock and stockholders.

Disqualification of judge by relative's ownership of stock in corporation which is party to action or proceeding. 8-295 (case p. 290).

Effect of recital that a judge had stated that he had disposed of all his stock in a corporation as an allegation of the fact of his ownership. 8-290.

Liability of public accountant making audit of books of corporation for loss sustained by one relying on audit in purchasing stock. 8-461.

—rights of stockholders; actions.

Right of one purchasing stock after corporation has dismissed a pending suit and conveyed its property to a trustee for the purpose of winding up its affairs, to undo what the corporation has done. 8-938.

Right of stockholder suing on behalf of himself and other stockholders to dismiss the action without prejudices. 8-938.

—liability of stockholders.

Validity of oral promise by stockholder to pay debt of corporation. 8-1198 (case p. 1195).

Personal liability of stockholders for debts of corporation which has made an unauthorized change in its name. 8-583 (case p. 579).

—stockholders' meetings.

Power of directors to change time for regular meeting of stockholders. 8-678 (case p. 676).

Necessity of notice of meeting. 8-676.

Dissolution; insolvency.

Appointment of receiver for corporation generally, see RECEIVERS.

Right to bring action against corporation or prosecute pending action as affected by the appointment of a receiver for the corporation. 8-441 (case p. 435).

Right of one purchasing stock after corporation has dismissed a pending suit and conveyed its property to a trustee for the purpose of winding up its affairs, to undo what the corporation has done. 8-938.

CORRUPT PRACTICES ACT.

See ELECTIONS.

COSTS AND FEES.

Waiver of statute or court rule requiring nonresident plaintiff to give security for costs. 8-1510 (case p. 1508).

Charging trustee of fund with costs, for awaiting the judgment of the court in dispute as to beneficiary. 8-904.

Allowance as costs of mileage within the state of witnesses voluntarily attending, upon request, from another state. 8-11.

COTENANCY.

Tenancy by entirety, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

COUNSEL.

See ATTORNEYS.

COUNTERCLAIM.

See SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

COUNTIES.

Courts of, see COUNTY COURTS.
Liability for injury on defective bridge, see BRIDGES.
Liability for injury on defective highway, see HIGHWAYS.

COUNTY ATTORNEY.

See DISTRICT AND PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS.

COUNTY COURTS.

Power of, to punish for contempt. 8-1561, 1570, 1572.

COURT OF CLAIMS.

Power to punish for contempt. 8-1547.

COURT RULE.

Waiver of court rule requiring nonresident plaintiff to give security for costs. 8-1510 (case p. 1508).

COURTS.

In general.

Constitutional guaranty of justice in, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Contempt of, see CONTEMPT.

Jurisdiction of divorce suit, see DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

Judicial notice by, see EVIDENCE.

As to judges, see JUDGES.

Mandamus to, see MANDAMUS.

Prohibition to restrain, see PROHIBITION.
As to removal of causes, see REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

Process of, see WRIT AND PROCESS.

The dash in each citation stands for A.L.R.

Power of court to authorize discontinuation of public service corporation upon foreclosing a mortgage on its plant. 8-238 (case p. 232).

Jurisdiction of action by or against public utility under Federal control. 8-987.

Relation to other departments of government.

Review of findings of Public Service Commissions, see PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS.

Review of findings of Workmen's Compensation Commission, see WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

Review of findings of health officer. 8-831.

— legislative department.

Encroachment on judicial power, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

As to validity of statutes generally, see STATUTES.

Assumption that legislative power has been properly exercised. 8-1590.

Inquiring into wisdom of legislation. 8-65.

Review of propriety and necessity of taking property for public use. 8-585.

Jurisdiction over religious societies.

Determination by the civil courts of property rights between contending factions of an independent or congregational church. 8-105 (cases pp. 98, 102).

Legislative power as to.

Infringement of power of supreme judicial court by conferring final authority in election contests upon judges of the superior court. 8-1463.

State courts.

Jurisdiction of election contests, see ELECTIONS.

— transfer of cause.

Duty of disqualified judge to grant motion to transfer the cause to another judge instead of calling in another judge. 8-290.

COURTS-MARTIAL.

Power to punish for contempt. 8-1547.

COURTS OF COMMON PLEAS.

See COMMON PLEAS.

COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.

Condition of right to maintain action to remove cloud from title, see CLOUD ON TITLE.

Condition in pardon or parole, see CRIMINAL LAW.

In insurance contract, see INSURANCE.

In lease, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Conditional new promise to pay barred claim, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

COWS.

Constitutionality of statute or ordinance providing for destruction of diseased cows. 8-69.

CREDIBILITY.

Of witness, see WITNESSES.

CRIMINAL LAW.

Whether action is civil or criminal, see ACTION OR SUIT.

District attorney, see DISTRICT AND PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS.

Violation of Corrupt Practices Act, see ELECTIONS.

Extradition, see EXTRADITION.

As to false pretenses, see FALSE PRETENSES.

Abandonment of wife, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Violation of Sunday law, see SUNDAY.

See also FALSE PRETENSES; HOMICIDE; LARCENY; ROBBERY.

Capacity to commit crime.

Drunkenness as affecting existence of elements essential to murder in second degree. 8-1052 (case p. 1034).

General rule as to effect of insanity. 8-1214.

Degree of insanity necessary to render one incapable of understanding nature of crime. 8-1214.

Irresistible impulse or moral insanity. 8-1034.

Instigation or consent to crime.

Conviction of attempt to obtain goods by false pretense although owner is not deceived but pretends to be for purpose of entrapping the guilty party. 8-652.

Procedure.

Bail and recognizance, see BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

Presumption and burden of proof, see EVIDENCE.

Admissibility of evidence, see EVIDENCE.

Sufficiency of proof, see EVIDENCE.

Sufficiency of indictment, see INDICTMENT, ETC.

Disqualification of judge, see JUDGE.

Right to trial by jury, see JURY.
 Instructions, see TRIAL.
 Venue, see VENUE.
 Impeaching or discrediting witness, see
WITNESSES.

Effect of bill of particulars on proof in prosecution for crime. 8-556.

Failure to object to predicate question propounded to accused as estopping him from objecting to admission of testimony which is immaterial.
 8-1357.

Punishment.

*Constitutionality of discrimination as regards degree of penalty or punishment for violation of Sunday law.
 8-506 (case p. 503).*

Constitutionality of statute as affected by discrimination in punishment for same offense based upon age, color or sex. 8-854 (case p. 848).

Parole.

*Extradition of one who violates parole.
 8-908 (case p. 901).*

---

CROPPERS.

See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

---

CROES.

Evidence on question of injury to, see
DAMAGES.
 Tenant's right as to, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

---

CROSSINGS.

Injury at railroad crossing, see RAIL-ROADS.

---

CURVE.

*Experimental evidence as to effect of.
 8-35.*

---

CUSTOM AND USAGE.

Evidence of, generally, see EVIDENCE.

Custom or previous dealing as imposing an obligation upon party to contract to accept something else in lieu of cash. 8-1268 (case p. 1264).

Negligence of employee in following a custom with respect to interpretation of a rule. 8-865.

---

DAMAGES.

In general.

Review of, on appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Relevancy of evidence as to. 8-595.
 Prejudicial error as to measure of.
 8-1116.

For discharge of servant.

*Doctrine of "constructive service."
 8-388 (case p. 384).*

Stipulated salary for such period as discharged employee is entitled to recover damages, less any amount actually received or which might have been received during such period after discharge, as measure of recovery.
 8-334.

In condemnation proceedings.

Reduction of damages, see infra.

Time for which recoverable, see infra.

Measure of compensation to owner of fee when telegraph or telephone line is erected along railroad right of way or highway. 8-1298 (case p. 1290).

Right of appellate court to review damages. 8-1290.

Time for which recoverable.

Right to assess permanent damages to owner of fee for construction of telegraph line along railroad right of way. 8-1290.

Reduction.

Effect on amount of damages to be allowed owner of fee for construction of telegraph line on railroad right of way of fact that construction of additional railroad tracks may impair the enjoyment of the telegraph company. 8-1290.

---

DAMS.

Liability for injury by bursting of.
 8-544.

---

DANGEROUS AGENCY.

Explosives, see EXPLOSIONS AND EXPLO-SIVES.

Employment of incompetent, inexperienced employee to handle, as independent ground of negligence toward one other than an employee. 8-577.

DEADLY WEAPON.

Firearm used as a bludgeon as a deadly weapon. 8-1319 (case p. 1319).

DEATH.

As to limitation of time for action for, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Proximate cause of, see PROXIMATE CAUSE.
Registration of deaths, see VITAL STATISTICS.

Effect on competency of witness, see WITNESSES.

Effect of death of lessee to terminate lease. 8-1142.

Release of bail by death of principal. 8-363.

DEATH PENALTY.

See CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

DEBT.

Action for, see ACTION FOR DEBT.

Of personal representative to decedent's estate, liability for, on bond. 8-84 (case p. 79).

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

Composition with creditor, see COMPOSITION WITH CREDITORS.

Creditors of decedent, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Conveyance fraudulent as to creditors, see FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

As to exemptions, see HOMESTEAD.

Insolvency of debtor, see INSOLVENCY; RECEIVERS.

DECEDENTS.

Administration of estates of, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

DECEIT.

See FRAUD AND DECEIT.

DECLARATIONS.

Admissibility in evidence, see EVIDENCE.

DEDICATION.

Presumption of dedication. 8-249.

DEEDS.

Acknowledgment of, see ACKNOWLEDGMENT.

Parol evidence as to, see EVIDENCE.

Presumption of undue influence on grantor, see EVIDENCE.

Tax deeds, see TAXES.

Effect of conveyance of real estate to a partnership in the name of which only the surname of one partner is mentioned. 8-489.

DEFENSES.

To liability for abandonment or non-support of wife, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.
In action to recover damages for nuisance, see NUISANCES.

DEFINITIONS

See WORDS AND PHRASES.

DEGREES.

Of homicide, see HOMICIDE.

DELAY.

Effect of, as waiver of statute or court rule requiring nonresident plaintiff to give security for costs. 8-1510 (case p. 1508).

DELEGATION OF POWER.

Constitutionality of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

DELIVERY.

Injury while making delivery as arising out of and in the course of employment within meaning of Workmen's Compensation Act. 8-935 (case p. 930).

DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE.

See EVIDENCE.

DEMURRER.In general, see PLEADING.
To evidence, see TRIAL.DEPARTMENTS.

Of government, see GOVERNMENTAL DEPARTMENTS.

DEPORTATION.

Of alien, see ALIENS.

DEPUTY SHERIFF.

See SHERIFFS.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.As to rights in estate by entirety, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.
Tax on right to take property by, see TAXES.DESCRIPTION.Of parties in deed, see DEEDS.
Of property in lease, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.
Of parties in pleading, see PLEADING.
Of beneficiary in will, see WILLS.DESERTION.

Criminal liability for desertion of wife, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

DESTINATION.

Leaving passenger at, see CARRIERS.

DESTRUCTION.

Constitutionality of statute or ordinance providing for destruction of property, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

DEVISE.

In general, see WILLS.

DIRECTION OF VERDICT.

See TRIAL.

DIRECTOR GENERAL OF RAILROADS.

Orders of, see CARRIERS.

DISABILITY.

Effect of, on running of limitations, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

DISBARMENT.

Of attorney, see ATTORNEYS.

DISCHARGE.Of firearm, see FIREARMS.
Of employee, see MASTER AND SERVANT.
Of trust, see TRUSTS.DISCIPLINE.Master's liability for injury of one servant by another in enforcing discipline. 8-1432 (case p. 1426).DISCONTINUANCE.Of operation of railways, see CARRIERS.
Of action, see DISMISSAL OR DISCONTINUANCE.DISCREDITING.

Of witness, see WITNESSES.

DISCRETION.

Review of, on appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

DISCRIMINATION.

Constitutionality of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.
In license tax, see LICENSE.

DISEASE.

Diseased animals, see ANIMALS.
Contagious or infectious disease, see CONTAGIOUS AND INFECTIOUS DISEASES.

DISINFECTION.

Power to require, under general delegation of power to guard against spread of contagious disease. 8-838.

DISLOYALTY.

As ground for disbarment or suspension of attorney, see ATTORNEYS.

DISMISSAL OR DISCONTINUANCE.

Application for continuance as waiver of right to dismissal because of plaintiff's failure to furnish security for costs. 8-1528.

Right of plaintiff to dismiss an action brought in behalf of himself and other persons. 8-950 (case p. 938).

Mandamus to compel dismissal of action. 8-938.

Effect of dismissal without prejudice. 8-938.

Right of parties of record to suit to agree to dismissal at any time. 8-938.

Right of one purchasing stock of corporation after motion to dismiss an action in which the stockholders are interested, to prevent such dismissal. 8-938.

DISQUALIFICATION.

Of judge, see JUDGES.

Of executor or administrator as affecting his removal. 8-181.

DISSIMILARITY.

See SIMILARITY.

DISSOLUTION.

Of corporation, see CORPORATIONS.

DISTANCE.

Experimental evidence as to. 8-35.

DISTRICT AND PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS.

As to attorney general, see ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Admissibility of threats by accused against prosecuting attorney in criminal case. 8-1861.

District attorney as proper person to bring suit against sheriff for forfeiture of his office. 8-679.

DISTRICT COURTS.

Power of, to punish for contempt. 8-1546, 1556.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Power of courts of, to punish for contempt. 8-1547.

DIVISION FENCE.

See FENCES.

DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

Prior action for divorce in which claim for divorce might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as bar to subsequent action for divorce. 8-721.

Effect of divorce on right of spouse or child to compensation under Workmen's Compensation Act. 8-1113 (case p. 1110).

Venereal disease as ground for divorce. 8-1540 (case p. 1534).

Residence of plaintiff for jurisdictional purposes. 8-1534.

Alimony.

Power to issue writ of ne exeat to prevent decree for alimony from becoming ineffective. 8-327 (case p. 326).

Right of wife to dispose of property awarded to her as support for herself and child. 8-651 (case p. 645).

Statute expressly or impliedly denying power to enforce by process of contempt, order, judgment, or decree for money as applicable to order or decree for alimony. 8-1156 (case p. 1149).

Separation agreements.

Unchastity of wife as affecting prior separation agreement. 8-1452 (case p. 1447).

DOGS.

Liability for injury by, see ANIMALS.

DOMICIL.

Effect of removal of administrator from state appointing him to vacate his letters of administration. 8-163.

DOOR.

Experimental evidence as to catching of cap in shutting door. 8-36.

DOWER.

Election between legacy and dower, see WILLS.

Prior action in equity in which claim for dower might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as barring subsequent independent action for dower. 8-717.

DRUGS AND DRUGGISTS.

See also CHEMICALS.

Experimental evidence in action for negligence in sale of. 8-36.

DRUNKENNESS.

As affecting criminal responsibility, see CRIMINAL LAW.

Taking property from drunken person by stealth as robbery. 8-359, 361 (case p. 357).

Intentionally getting drunk a material witness for the adversary as ground for revocation of arbitration agreement. 8-1081.

DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

DYNAMITE.

In general, see EXPLOSIONS AND EXPLOSIVES.

EASEMENTS.

Right of owners of parcels into which dominant tenement has been divided, to use a right of way. 8-1363 (case p. 1363).

Improvement of dominant estate which increases use of easement. 8-1343.

EJECTION.

Of passenger, see CARRIERS.

EJECTMENT.

Prior action for possession in which claim might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as bar to subsequent independent action thereon. 8-719, 720.

Laches as defense to action. 8-489.

Effect of allegation in complaint as to the time of defendant's possession to bind plaintiff so far as it relates to defendant's plea of limitations. 8-489.

Transfer of action to equity on ground that reformation of deed is necessary, in absence of pleading showing defect in deed and prayer for equitable relief. 8-489.

Effect of plea of limitations to raise an issue upon which plaintiff is entitled to jury trial. 8-489.

ELECTION.

Between legacy and dower, see WILLS.

ELECTION OF REMEDIES.

Transfers between law and equity, see EQUITY.

ELECTIONS.*Right to vote.

As property within meaning of the 14th Amendment. 8-1463.

Corrupt practices.

Providing disqualification for office and disfranchisement only for successful candidates for public office who are guilty of corrupt practices. 8-1463.
Exempting from Corrupt Practices Act town officers elected in towns of less than ten thousand inhabitants. 8-1463.

Contests.

Election contest as a criminal proceeding within constitutional provision preserving jury trial in such proceedings. 8-1463.

Sufficiency of description of petitioners in election contest to show their right to vote for the officers whose election is contested. 8-1463.

Power of legislature to require all election contests to be tried in one county. 8-1463.

Jurisdiction. 8-1463.

Infringement of power of supreme judicial court by conferring final authority in election contests upon judges of the superior court. 8-1463.

Assignment by chief justice of judges to hear election contests as contravening constitutional provision that all judicial officers shall be appointed by the governor. 8-1463.

ELECTRICITY.

Conferring power of eminent domain upon corporation organized to supply electricity to public. 8-466.

ELECTRIC TRANSFORMER.

See TRANSFORMER.

ELEVATORS.

Employment of incompetent or inexperienced or negligent operator as independent ground of negligence toward one other than an employee. 8-576.

ELOPEMENT.

Homicide or assault in attempting to prevent an elopement. 8-660 (case p. 659).

EMERY.

Experimental evidence as to direction taken by flying particles of. 8-86.

EMINENT DOMAIN.*In general.

Delegation to Public Utilities Commission power to compel exercise of power of eminent domain to secure the public safety. 8-466.

Sufficiency of title of statute creating restricted residence districts in cities of first class under power of eminent domain. 8-585.

Review of legislative decision as to. 8-585.

Who may exercise.

Conferring power upon light and power company. 8-466.

Sufficiency of title of statute conferring upon public service corporations power of eminent domain. 8-466.

Effect of general corporation acts to confer right to acquire property by eminent domain. 8-466.

For what purpose.

Power to condemn against particular use of property. 8-594 (case p. 585).

Establishment of restricted residence district under power of eminent domain. 8-585.

Procedure.

What is sufficient attempt to agree on compensation. 8-471 (case p. 466).

Necessity of attempting to negotiate with other joint owner upon failure to agree with one joint owner. 8-466.

Taking of or injury to property; right to compensation.

As to what constitutes additional servitude, see infra.

Amount of recovery, see DAMAGES.

Constitutional right to compensation on destruction of diseased animals. 8-70.

Right to compensation in case of condemnation of particular use of property. 8-594.

Supervision of public utilities as a taking of property without compensation. 8-916.

Order of Public Service Commission regulating schedules, routing, and type of cars of street railway company as a taking for public use of the property of the company or of the city having an interest in its net earnings. 8-916.

Increasing rates for water for irrigation to those having easement in the system for the supplying of their quantum of water as an unauthorized taking of private property for public use. 8-249.

Additional servitude.

Right and measure of compensation to owner of fee when telegraph or telephone line is erected along railroad right of way or highway. 8-1293 (case p. 1290).

Limitation of time for action for damages because of additional burden by construction of telegraph line along railroad right of way. 8-1290.

EMPLOYEES.

Rights, duties, and liabilities of, generally, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

See MASTER AND SERVANT.

ENCUMBRANCES.

Right of grantee or transferee to be reimbursed for expenditures in payment of encumbrances on property where conveyance of transfer is in fraud of creditors. 8-527 (case p. 523).

ENGINE.

See LOCOMOTIVES.

ENGINEER.

Negligence of, in operation of train, see RAILROADS.

ENGLISH COURTS.

Power of, to punish for contempt. 8-1570.

ENTIRETY.

Of contract, see CONTRACTS.
Estate by, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

EQUALITY.

Of license tax, see LICENSE.

EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL.

See ESTOPPEL.

EQUITY.

In general; jurisdiction.

As to injunction, see INJUNCTION.

Limitation of actions in, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Jurisdiction to issue writ of ne exeat, see NE EXEAT.

Relief under prayer, see PLEADING.

As to reformation of instruments generally, see REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

Power of courts of equity to punish for contempt. 8-1551.

Prior action on contract in which claim in equity might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as barring or abating subsequent independent action on such claim. 8-718.

Prior action for possession in which claim in equity might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as bar to subsequent independent suit on such claim. 8-719.

Prior action in equity in which claim on contract might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as bar to subsequent independent action on contract. 8-716.

Prior action in equity in which claim in tort might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as bar to subsequent action in tort. 8-717.

Prior action in equity in which claim for foreclosure might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as bar to independent action for foreclosure. 8-718.

Prior action in equity in which claim in equity might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as bar to subsequent action on such claim. 8-718.

Jurisdiction of suit to enforce judgment lien. 8-435.

Effect of prayer for accounting to confer jurisdiction upon equity of action to collect unsatisfied judgment the amount of which is certain. 8-435.

Effect of statutory abrogation of remedy afforded by general equity jurisprudence. 8-1149.

- retaining jurisdiction.

For purpose of authorizing the owner of the road to discontinue its operation where jurisdiction has been taken for purpose of enforcing the performance of a contract to operate a street or interurban railroad. 8-242.

Transfers between law and equity.

Transfer to equity of action to recover possession of real estate on ground that reformation of deed is necessary, in absence of pleading showing defect in deed and prayer for equitable relief. 8-489.

Equity principles.

Right of grantee or transferee to affirmative equitable relief for expenditures in payment of taxes or encumbrances on property where conveyance or transfer is set aside as in fraud of creditors. 8-527 (case p. 528).

Equitable relief against award of arbitrators obtained by fraud or unfair means. 8-1083.

ERRONEOUS DECISION.

As law of the case on subsequent appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

ESTATE.

By entirety, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

ESTOPPEL.*In general.

By suing on part of claim, see ACTION OR SUIT.

Effect of statute on equitable estoppel. 8-750.

Estoppel to claim exemption from arrest. 8-750.

Of married woman.

Of married woman masquerading as a single one, to set up statutory exemption of married woman from arrest. 8-750.

As to corporate powers.

Estoppel of national bank by its purchase and temporary operation of street railway to plead its want of power to operate such road. 8-242.

By laches, silence, or acquiescence.

Laches as bar to action, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Silence of property owner after receiving notice from his neighbor of intention to remove a hedge on the division line. 8-164.

By receiving benefits.

Estoppel of corporation to take advantage of having acted under a wrong name after receiving the consideration. 8-579.

ETHER.

Experimental evidence as to impurity of. 8-45.

EVIDENCE.

Necessity for exception to, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Review of discretionary rulings, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Reception of, on trial, see TRIAL.

Demurrer to, see TRIAL.

Instructions upon, see TRIAL.

Judicial notice.

Judicial notice of the coincidence of the days of the week with the days of the month. 8-63 (case p. 59).

Acts of Congress. 8-964.

Proclamations of the President. 8-964.

Presumptions and burden of proof.

Instructions as to, see TRIAL.

Validity of statutes. 8-1066, 1590.

- concerning persons.

Presumption as to paternity of child conceived or born before marriage. 8-427 (case p. 426).

Authority of broker to receive payment. 8-192.

Authority of superintendent to use some force to compel obedience to rules by employees. 8-1426.

Good faith of purchaser of note. 8-309.

Undue influence. 8-1091.

Innocence. 8-1034.

- cause.

Cause of death of or injury to insured. 8-318.

- negligence.

Applicability of "res ipsa loquitur" to explosion of gases or chemicals. 8-500 (case p. 493).

Effect of doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" to dispense with requirement that one alleging negligence must prove it. 8-493.

Presumption of responsibility of owner of automobile for injury caused by chauffeur in operating it. 8-785.

— as to official acts.

Burden of showing invalidity of tax sought to be enjoined. 8-792.

— as to contracts, instruments, and property.

Good faith of holder of note. 8-809.

Presumption of dedication of property to public use. 8-249.

Documentary evidence.

Admissibility in favor of writer of unanswered letter not part of mutual correspondence. 8-1168 (case p. 1161).

Demonstrative evidence.

Experimental evidence as affected by similarity or dissimilarity of conditions. 8-18 (cases pp. 1, 11).

Review of discretion as to. 8-1.

Photographs. 8-1084.

Evidence of experiments to determine number of hogs that could be loaded in wagon of certain dimensions. 8-11.

Parol and extrinsic evidence concerning writings.

As to oral contracts, generally, see CONTRACTS.

Admissibility of parol evidence as to amount of commodity specified in written contract of sale. 8-747 (case p. 745).

As to purpose for which property was conveyed to religious society. 8-102.

To explain clause in deed. 8-1335.

Intent of parties to lease of house by street number. 8-669.

Intent of testator. 8-904.

Opinions and conclusions.

Weight of opinion evidence, see infra.

Hypothetical question not based on the particular facts. 8-1316.

Reversible error as to. 8-11.

Nonexpert opinions as to insanity of accused. 8-1034.

Opinion of sheriff as to insanity of one accused of murder. 8-1214.

Speed of automobile; comparison with that of other car. 8-690.

Right of witness to testify that a certain thing could not have happened without his seeing it as a conclusion of fact. 8-11.

Admissions.

Admissibility in favor of writer of unanswered letter not part of mutual correspondence. 8-1168 (case p. 1161).

Admissibility of statements by attorney out of court as to probability of verdict or decision adverse to client. 8-1334 (case p. 1331).

Failure of addressee to reply to letter as evidence of facts therein stated. 8-1161.

Hearsay; declarations, res gestae.

Declarations of person indicating a particular state of mind where that is a relevant fact. 8-1214.

— declarations of accused.

Threats by accused, see infra.

Evidence of declarations of accused on issue of insanity. 8-1219 (case p. 1214).

Admissibility of voluntary and noncommittal statement by accused as to transaction upon which charge is based. 8-1084.

Voluntary statements to officer by one in custody or in jail. 8-1214.

Declarations of accused to show the state of his mind. 8-1214.

— of deceased person.

As to effect of death on competency of witness, as to transaction with deceased, see INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

— threats.

Admissibility of threats by accused against jury or prosecuting attorney in criminal case. 8-1361 (case p. 1357).

— telephone conversation.

Admissibility in prosecution for attempting to secure goods in name of credit customer by telephoning an order for them, of the telephone conversations, although accused has not been directly connected with them. 8-652.

Relevancy and materiality.

Under particular pleadings, see infra.

Evidence of results of experiment as affected by similarity or dissimilarity of conditions. 8-18 (cases pp. 1, 11).

Evidence of experiments to determine number of hogs that could be loaded in wagon of certain dimensions. 8-11.

Permitting witness to describe wounds in body of victim of homicide and state that some were in the back. 8-1357.

— custom.

Evidence in action for injury to person in boiler room of cotton gin, of custom to permit persons to enter that room. 8-760.

— intent; fraud.

Evidence on question whether check made payable to bank cashier was to pay a note to the bank or a debt to the cashier. 8-298.

Fraud. 8-1477.

— damages.

Diminution of usable value of land to tenant by lowering of water table. 8-595.

— care; negligence.

Evidence of custom, see supra.
Similar acts or facts in negligence cases, see infra.

— circumstances.

Proof of surrounding circumstances upon prosecution for homicide in attempting to prevent elopement. 8-656.

— similar acts or facts.

Similarity of conditions attending accident and experiments. 8-1.
Condition at other times. 8-1, 760.

Weight, effect, and sufficiency.

Instructions as to, see TRIAL.
Credibility of witness, see WITNESSES.

Dissimilarity of conditions as affecting weight of experimental evidence. 8-26.

Disregarding uncontradicted testimony in civil action. 8-796 (cases pp. 785, 789, 792).

Weight of evidence as question for jury. 8-874.

Conclusiveness of testimony of justice of the peace who certifies on a will the character of the signatures that he did not sign as a witness. 8-1073.

Good faith of holder of check. 8-809.

Incompetency or inexperience of street car operatives. 8-569.

Communication of venereal disease by husband to wife. 8-1534.

To support conviction for murder. 8-1034.

Reasonable doubt. 8-656, 1034.

Under particular pleadings.

Effect of bill of particulars on proof. 8-550 (case p. 544).

Under general denial. 8-964.

Variance.

Proof of tenancy by sufferance as variance from election of monthly tenancy. 8-1508.

EXAMINATION.

Of bank, see BANKS.

EXCAVATIONS.

Experimental evidence as to visibility of excavations in highway. 8-36.

EXCEPTIONS.

See APPEAL AND ERROR; TRIAL.

EXECUTION.

Of writing required by Statute of Frauds, see CONTRACTS.

Exemptions, see HOMESTEAD.

Sale under, see JUDICIAL SALE.

Of will, see WILLS.

Effect of appointment of receiver for corporation upon enforcement of execution lien. 8-459.

Defense in action to remove a fraudulent conveyance from the path of an execution, that claim on which the judgment was entered and on which the execution was issued was invalid or inequitable. 8-523.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Revival of action in name of personal representative, see ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL.

As to devise or legacy generally, see WILLS.

Competency of witness in action by or against, see WITNESSES.

Appointment; removal; termination of trust.

What effects removal of executor or administrator. 8-175 (cases pp. 163, 170).

What constitutes collateral attack on appointment. 8-163.

Appealability of probate proceeding to remove administrator de bonis non. 8-170.

Removal from state of administrator as ipso facto revoking his letters of administration. 8-163.

Necessity of formal acceptance of resignation to confer jurisdiction to appoint successor. 8-170.

Abandonment of trust by personal representative. 8-170.

Effect of filing of account by personal representative denominated "final account" to terminate the trust. 8-170.

Powers and liabilities.

Bond of executor or administrator as covering debt due from principal to decedent. 8-84 (case p. 79).

Option of executor of tenant to keep the property or sublet it, or surrender it to landlord. 8-1142.

General rule as to liability of surety on bond. 8-79.

Indebtedness; claims against estate.

Rent accruing under lease after death of lessee as preferred claim or cost of administration. 8-1146 (case p. 1142).

What included in costs and charges of administration which statute makes a preferred claim. 8-1142.

EXEMPTIONS.

Homestead exemption, see HOMESTEAD.
From arrest, see WRIT AND PROCESS.

EX PARTE COMMUNICATIONS.

With arbitrators as ground for relief against award. 8-1088.

EXPERIMENTAL EVIDENCE.

See EVIDENCE.

EXPERT ACCOUNTANTS.

See PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS.

EXPERT TESTIMONY.

In general, see EVIDENCE.

EXPLANATION.

Parol evidence for purpose of, see EVIDENCE.

EXPLOSIONS AND EXPLOSIVES.

Of gas, see GAS.

Proximate cause of injury by, see PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Applicability of "res ipsa loquitur" to explosion of gases or chemicals. 8-500 (case p. 498).

Experimental evidence as affected by similarity or dissimilarity of conditions. 8-45.

EXPLOSIVES.

See EXPLOSIONS AND EXPLOSIVES.

EXTENSION OF TIME.

Waiver of statute or court rule requiring nonresident plaintiff to give security for costs where application therefor is made after extension of time to answer. 8-1511.

EXTRADITION.

Extradition of one who violates parole. 8-903 (case p. 901).

General rule as to extradition of convict. 8-901.

Duty of authorities of state where arrest is made to show facts justifying issuance of warrant. 8-901.

Issuance of warrant as prima facie authority to hold one against whom it is issued. 8-901.

EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE.

As to writing, see EVIDENCE.

EYESIGHT.

Compensation for loss or impairment of eyesight under Workmen's Compensation Act. 8-1324 (case p. 1322).

FACTORS.

Implied authority of factor to receive payment for commodities which he is authorized to sell. 8-227.

Distinction between broker and factor or commission merchant. 8-192.

FACTS.

Review of, on appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

FALSE PRETENSES.

Conversion by telephone as false pretense. 8-656 (case p. 652).

Admissibility in prosecution for attempting to secure goods in name of credit customer by telephoning an order for them, of the telephone conversations, although accused has not been directly connected with them. 8-652.

Conviction of attempt to obtain goods by false pretense although owner is not deceived and pretends to be for purpose of entrapping the guilty party. 8-652.

FEDERAL COURTS.

Power to punish for contempt. 8-1545.

FEDERAL EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ACT.

See MASTER AND SERVANT.

FEEs.

See COSTS AND FEES.

FELLOW SERVANTS.

See MASTER AND SERVANT.

FENCES.

Right to remove or rebuild fence separating one's land from his neighbor's land. 8-1644 (case p. 1641).

Effect on implied admission in complaint for destroying a division fence, that it was on or near the line, of denial in the reply that the fence was on defendant's property. 8-1641.

Right to remove hedge on division line as carrying with it right to take down a supporting railing attached to the neighbor's house. 8-1641.

Estoppel of property owner to claim damages for removal of division fence by adjoining owner. 8-1641.

FINALITY OF DECISION.

For purpose of appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

FIREARMS.

Firearm as a deadly weapon, see DEADLY WEAPONS.

Evidence of experiments with. 8-37, 41, 58.

FIRE INSURANCE.

See INSURANCE.

FIREs.

Proximate cause of loss or injury by, see PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Liability of railroad for, see RAILROADS.

Experimental evidence as to cause of. 8-37.

Constitutionality of statute or ordinance requiring proprietor of place of amusement to furnish fire protection at his own expense. 8-1628 (case p. 1590).

Negligence of owner of carload of gasoline in permitting ground along switch track to become saturated therewith, where fire is subsequently set to it by boys, to the injury of property in the neighborhood. 8-1243.

FLASH.

Possibility of recognizing person by flash from gun or pistol. 8-58.

FLAVOR.

Experimental evidence as to. 8-45.

FLOOD.

Liability for causing, see WATERS.

FLYING PARTICLES.

Experimental evidence as to direction taken by. 8-38.

FOOT.

Experimental evidence as to catching of, in railroad track. 8-38.

FOOTBOARD.

Experimental evidence as to catching of footboard of locomotive at track intersections. 8-88.

FORCE.

Of blow, see BLOW.
As necessary element of crime of robbery, see ROBBERY.

FORECLOSURE.

Of mechanic's lien, see MECHANICS' LIENS.
Of mortgage, see MORTGAGE.

FORFEITURE.

Confiscation of property, see CONFISCATION.
Of insurance contract, see INSURANCE.
Of public office, see OFFICERS.

FORGERY.

Experiments to show erasure of writing by use of chemicals. 8-40.

FORMER SUIT PENDING.

As ground for abatement, see ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL.

FRAUD AND DECEIT.

Statute of Frauds, see CONTRACTS.
Evidence as to, generally, see EVIDENCE.
Transfers in fraud of creditors, see FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.
Effect of, on running of limitations, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

False representations as to status as waiver of privilege against arrest. 8-760.

Effect of collusion between parties to receivership proceeding on right to bring action against corporation or prosecute pending action after appointment of receiver. 8-463.

Liability of broker to purchaser for overstating lowest price at which owner is willing to sell. 8-1383 (case p. 1877).

Fraudulent concealment of facts from arbitrators as ground for avoiding award. 8-1087.

Obligee's concealment of facts or evasive answers as fraud against surety. 8-1486 (case p. 1477).

Effect of rule prohibiting parol evidence to vary written contract to preclude admission of such evidence to establish fraud in making the contract. 8-745.

Sufficiency of complaint based on negligence to sustain judgment based on fraud. 8-1023.

When suppression of truth or concealment constitutes fraud. 8-1477.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

Right of grantee or transferee to be reimbursed for expenditures in payment of taxes or encumbrances on property where conveyance or transfer is in fraud of creditors. 8-527 (case p. 523).

Defense in action to remove a fraudulent conveyance from the path of an execution, that claim on which the judgment was entered and on which the execution, was issued was invalid or inequitable. 8-523.

Effect of valuable consideration where intent is to defraud creditors. 8-523.

Effect of purchaser's notice of transferee's fraud. 8-523.

FREEZING.

Experimental evidence as to freezing of boat to railroad track. 8-88.

Liability under accident policy for injury or death from freezing. 8-231 (case p. 222).

FREIGHT CARRIERS.

See CARRIERS.

FUGITIVES.

Extradition of, see EXTRADITION.

FUMES.

Experimental evidence in action for injury by. 8-88.

FURNACE.

Evidence of experiment to determine possibility of fire originating from. 8-37.

GAMING.

Validity of gaming contract, see CONTRACTS.

Burden of proof of good faith of holder of check given for gambling debt. 8-309.

Sufficiency of proof of good faith of holder of check given for gambling debt. 8-309.

GARAGE.

Right of lessee of house by street number to enjoin erection by landlord of garage on rear of lot. 8-669.

GAS.

As to oil and gas leases, see MINES.
See also FUMES.

Experimental evidence as to inflammability of. 8-46.

Applicability of "res ipsa loquitur" to explosion of gas. 8-500 (case p. 493).

Conferring power of eminent domain upon gas company. 8-466.

GASOLENE.

In general, see EXPLOSIONS AND EXPLOSIVES.

Liability for fire started by, see FIRES.

Proximate cause of injury by explosion of, see PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Right of lessee under oil lease who contracts to sell to another the gas produced from oil wells on the premises to be used in the manufacture of gasoline, to stimulate the flow of oil, although as a result thereof the gas may lose some of its gasoline properties. 8-414.

GATE.

Experimental evidence as to safety of gate on street car. 8-38.

GENERAL DENIAL.

Evidence admissible under, see EVIDENCE.

GIFT.

By will, see WILLS.

GLANDERS.

Constitutionality of statute or ordinance providing for destruction of horses affected with. 8-89.

GOOD CHARACTER.

Requiring applicant for license as real estate broker to file certificate of good character. 8-418.

GOOD FAITH.

Presumption and burden of proof as to, see EVIDENCE.

Sufficiency of evidence as to, see EVIDENCE.

GOVERNMENT.

Service of government as excuse for failure of carrier to discharge duty to individual. 8-162 (case p. 155).

GOVERNMENTAL DEPARTMENTS.

Conferring power upon the head of one department to fix the salaries of his assistants which power is not conferred upon the heads of other departments. 8-418.

GRAND JURY.

Power of, to punish for contempt. 8-1579.

GRASS.

Right of tenant to recover damages from third person for injury to. 8-605.

GUARANTY.

Statute of Frauds as to, see CONTRACTS.

Obligor's concealment of facts or evasive answers as fraud against guarantor. 8-1485 (case p. 1477).

GUEST.

Breach of lessor's covenant to repair as ground of liability for damages for personal injury to guest of tenant. 8-769.

GUMMED PAPER.

Adhesiveness of, see ADHESIVENESS.

GUN.

See FIREARMS.

GUNPOWDER.

In general, see EXPLOSIONS AND EXPLOSIVES.

HABEAS CORPUS.

Right of one isolated at state institution to discharge because he is able to provide himself with proper treatment at an isolated place in locality of his residence. 8-831.

Right of court reviewing deportation proceedings to weigh the testimony upon which deportation order was based. 8-1282.

Statute requiring court to dispose of the party as law and justice require. 8-1282.

HALLWAY.

Experimental evidence as to amount of light in. 8-58.

HARMLESS ERROR.

See APPEAL AND ERROR.

HEADLIGHT.

Experimental evidence as to amount of light cast by. 8-57.

HEALTH.

In general; board of health.

As to vital statistics, see VITAL STATISTICS.

Review by courts of findings of health officers. 8-831.

Delegation of power to health board. 8-831.

Regulations to protect health.

Regulations as to diseased animals, see ANIMALS.

General delegation of power to guard against spread of contagious disease. 8-836 (case p. 831).

Presumption of validity of health statute. 8-1066.

Providing for isolation of men infected with venereal disease. 8-831.

Right of one isolated at state institution to discharge because he is able to provide himself with proper treatment at an isolated place in locality of his residence. 8-831.

Effect of misnomer of state institution on validity of isolation order. 8-831.

--vaccination.

Right to require vaccination under general delegation of power to guard against spread of contagious disease. 8-841.

HEARING.

Necessity of, to constitute due process of law, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

HEARSAY.

See EVIDENCE.

HEDGE.

Division hedge, see FENCES.

HEEL.

Experimental evidence as to catching of, upon steps. 8-39.

HEIRS.

Devise or bequest in favor of, see WILLS.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

Power of, to punish for contempt. 8-1570.

HIGHWAYS.

Additional servitude on, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

Use of.

Authority of abutting owner to eject from sidewalk children using it for roller skating. 8-1455.

Defects; liability for injuries to travelers.

Liability for injury on defective bridge, see BRIDGES.

Liability for injury due to negligent driving, see NEGLIGENCE.

Injury by trains at crossing, see RAILROADS.

Experimental evidence in action for injury in highway. 8-39.

Liability for injury on highway at town, municipal, or county line. 8-1274 (case p. 1271).

Experimental evidence as to formation of ice upon sidewalk. 8-39.

— contributory negligence.

Of person injured by street car, see STREET RAILWAYS.

Experimental evidence as to visibility of defect or obstruction in highway. 8-50.

HOGS.

Constitutionality of statute permitting the destruction of hogs found running at large on or near public levees. 8-79.

HOLIDAYS.

As to Sunday, see SUNDAY.

HOME RULE.

As to local self-government, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

HOMESTEAD.

On public land, generally, see PUBLIC LANDS.

Creditors' rights.

Liability under enlarged Homestead Act of 1909 for debts of homesteader contracted before issuance of patent. 8-631.

Antecedent debts; construction of statute as to. 8-843.

HOMICIDE.*In general.

Prejudicial error in admission of evidence, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Assault with intent to murder, see ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

Right of one accused of murder to bail, see BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

Effect of insanity or irresistible impulse, see CRIMINAL LAW.

Effect of intoxication, see CRIMINAL LAW.

Experimental evidence in prosecution for. 8-39.

Effect on liability of one inflicting personal injury on another who dies, of fact that negligence, mistake, or lack of skill of physician or surgeon contributed to the death. 8-510.

Right of one accused of homicide to every reasonable doubt. 8-656.

Proof of surrounding circumstances upon prosecution for homicide in attempting to prevent elopement. 8-656.

Admissibility of photograph of scene of crime containing white spots to indicate places where victims fell. 8-1034.

Nonexpert opinion evidence as to sanity of accused. 8-1034.

Permitting witness to describe wounds in body of victim of homicide and state that some were in the back. 8-1357.

Sufficiency of evidence to support conviction. 8-1034.

Instructions in prosecution for. 8-1034.

Excusable or justifiable homicide.

Effect of intoxication, see CRIMINAL LAW.

Homicide in attempting to prevent elopement. 8-660 (case p. 656).

Taking life in defense of son. 8-656.

— self-defense.

Experiments to determine from what distance pistol or gun was fired as bearing upon issue of self-defense. 8-47.

HORSES.

In general, see ANIMALS.

Constitutionality of statute or ordinance providing for destruction of diseased horses. 8-69.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.*In general.

As to divorce, see DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

Estoppel of married woman, see ESTOPPEL.

Disqualification of judge by wife's ownership of stock in corporation which is party to action or proceeding. 8-295 (case p. 290).

Effect of marriage to terminate authority of executrix or administratrix. 8-181.

Property rights.

As to dower, see DOWER.

Estates by entirety in personal property. 8-1017 (case p. 1014).

Effect of entry by husband and wife into partnership with entirety funds to change the character of the estate. 8-1014.

Right of surviving wife as against husband's administrator to store property purchased with funds derived from property held by entireties. 8-1014.

Actions; personal injuries.

Breach of lessor's covenant to repair as ground of liability for damages for personal injuries to wife of tenant. 8-767.

Abandonment of wife.

Criminal responsibility of husband for abandonment or nonsupport of wife, who refuses to live with him. 8-1314 (case p. 1312).

Meaning of term "wilful" in statute providing punishment for desertion of wife and children. 8-1312.

Sufficiency of husband's contribution to support of wife and children to prevent conviction for desertion. 8-1312.

---

HYPOTHETICAL QUESTION.

To expert, see EVIDENCE.

---

ICE.

In street or on sidewalk, liability for injury by, see HIGHWAYS.

Experimental evidence as to bacilli in. 8-10.

---

IDEM SONANS.

See NAME.

IDENTITY.

Applicability of provisions of insurance contract as to injury intentionally inflicted where insured is injured because of mistake of identity. 8-322.

---

ILLEGITIMACY.

As to proceedings in bastardy, see BASTARDY.

Presumption as to, see EVIDENCE.

---

ILLNESS.

See SICKNESS.

---

IMPAIRMENT OF OBLIGATIONS.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

---

IMPEACHMENT.

Of witnesses, generally, see WITNESSES.

---

INADEQUACY.

Sale under power in mortgage or trust deed as affected by inadequacy of price. 8-1001 (case p. 999).

---

INCOME.

Right of trustee to accumulate income under will or other instrument directing him to use it. 8-915 (case p. 904).

---

INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

Competency to commit crime, see CRIMINAL LAW.

Opinion evidence as to insanity, see EVIDENCE.

Sufficiency of proof of incompetency, see EVIDENCE.

As to married women, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Testamentary capacity, see WILLS.

Incompetency of witness, see WITNESSES.

Experimental evidence as to effect of liquor to produce insanity. 8-45.

Statute rendering witness incompetent because of death of other person as applicable to latter's mental condition. 8-1097 (case p. 1091).

Effect of insanity of principal to release surety on bail bond. 8-363.

Burden of showing invalidity of tax sought to be enjoined. 8-792.
Effect of excessive prayer for relief. 8-595.

---

I. W. W.

Limitation of time for deportation of alien I. W. W. 8-1289.

---

INK.

Experiments to show erasure of writing by use of chemicals. 8-40.

---

INEXPERIENCE.

Sufficiency of proof of. 8-569.

---

INNOCENCE.

Presumption of, see EVIDENCE.

---

INFANTS.

Effect of infancy on running of limitations, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.
Adoption of, see PARENT AND CHILD.

---

INSANITY.

See INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

Termination of authority of administrator appointed to act during minority of next of kin by latter's coming of age. 8-180.

Intervening act of child as affecting question of proximate cause of damage to person or property of third person by fire or explosion. 8-1250 (case p. 1243).

---

INSOLVENCY.

Of corporation, see CORPORATIONS.
As to receivers, see RECEIVERS.

Insolvency of insurer or employer as affecting liability for compensation under Workmen's Compensation Act. 8-1346 (case p. 1342).

Release of bail by removal of infant principal by his mother from jurisdiction of the court. 8-363.

Ejection of children using sidewalk for roller skating. 8-1455.

Effect of insolvency of personal representative of estate on liability on his bond for debt due from him to decedent. 8-79.

---

INFLAMMABILITY.

Experimental evidence as to. 8-45.

---

INSPECTORS.

Car inspector, see CAR INSPECTOR.

---

INHERITANCE TAX.

See TAXES.

---

INSTRUCTIONS.

See TRIAL.

---

INJUNCTION.

Injunction against sale under execution. 8-631.

Right to test reasonableness of order of Public Service Commission in proceeding to enjoin its enforcement. 8-916.

Injunction to prevent collection of tax assessed against property which taxpayer does not own. 8-792.

---

INSURANCE.

The policy or contract generally.
Provision for insurance for a period covered by each successive payment of assessments, terminating at the end of such period, to be revived for a like period by a new payment. 8-378.

Construction.
General rule as to construction. 8-318.

Conditions.

As to vacancy or occupancy of property. 8-373.

Forfeiture for nonpayment of premiums.

Effect of estoppel or waiver, see infra.

Provision suspending insurance during default in payment of premiums or assessments as affected by failure of insurer to declare a suspension before loss. 8-395 (cases pp. 378, 380, 391).

When payment of overdue premium by mailed check is effected. 8-391.

Duty of secretary of local camp of benefit society who has advanced assessments for member to continue making such advancements. 8-378.

Duty of company holding premium note under contract that it may collect such portion of it as equals the earned premiums to the date of lapse of the policy, to return the note in order to be entitled to rely on suspension of policy before loss, for nonpayment of an instalment when due. 8-391.

Reinstatement.

Power of local camp officers of mutual benefit society to waive provisions as to reinstatement. 8-380.

Requiring express warranty of present sound bodily health as condition of reinstatement. 8-380.

Payment of premium after loss as reviving policy. 8-391.

Premiums.

Forfeiture for nonpayment, see supra.

Waiver by demand, acceptance, and retention of premium, see infra.

Payment of premium after loss as reviving policy. 8-391.

Waiver; estoppel.

Waiver of one condition as evidence of waiver of another condition. 8-373.

Estoppel or waiver as affected by power of agent. 8-378, 380.

By knowledge or notice. 8-378, 380.

Establishment of custom to waive default in payment by single accommodation of holder of policy in permitting him to make overdue payment. 8-391.

Indorsement on policy that interest of insured is that of fee simple in remainder as waiver of condition avoiding the policy in case of vacancy of premises. 8-373.

Proofs of loss.

Conclusiveness against insured of proofs furnished. 8-318.

Risks and causes of loss, injury, or death.

Liability under accident policy for injury or death from freezing. 8-231 (case p. 229).

Applicability of provisions as to injuries intentionally inflicted where insured is injured because of mistake of identity. 8-322 (case p. 318).

Burden of proof as to cause of death. 8-318.

Injury to one person by another which is not the result of misconduct or provocation by the injured person and is unforeseen by him as an "accident." 8-318.

---

INTENT.

Parol evidence as to, see EVIDENCE.

Evidence as to, generally, see EVIDENCE.

Of testator, see WILLS.

---

INTENTIONAL INJURIES.

To insured, see INSURANCE.

---

INTEREST.

Disqualification of judge by, see JUDGES.

Disregarding uncontradicted testimony of interested witness in civil action. 8-314.

Questioning for first time on appeal failure of trial court to allow interest. 8-198.

---

INTERMEDIATE APPELLATE COURTS.

Power to punish for contempt. 8-1550.

---

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

See COMMERCE.

---

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

Effect of act of Congress conferring upon Interstate Commerce Commission authority to compel interstate railroads to provide shipping facilities for shippers tendering interstate shipments to deprive Public Service Commission of jurisdiction to require such road to furnish such facilities to shipper offering intrastate commerce. 8-155.

INTERURBAN RAILROADS.

Power of national bank to obligate itself to operate. 8-242.
 Estoppel of bank to plead want of power to operate. 8-242.
 Retaining jurisdiction for purpose of authorizing the owner of the road to discontinue its operation where equity has taken jurisdiction for purpose of enforcing the performance of a contract to operate an interurban railroad. 8-242.

INTERVENING AGENCY.

Effect of, on proximate cause, see PROXIMATE CAUSE.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Experimental evidence as to effect of liquor to produce insanity. 8-45.
Constitutionality of statutes providing for confiscation or destruction, without notice, of intoxicating liquors, and vehicles or other property used in connection with same. 8-888 (case p. 874).

Failure to extend prohibition against intoxicating liquor to that used for sacramental purposes. 8-874.

INTOXICATION.

See DRUNKENNESS.

IRRESISTIBLE IMPULSE.

As defense to liability for crime, see CRIMINAL LAW.

IRRESPONSIBILITY.

Of person committing crime, see CRIMINAL LAW.

IRRIGATION.

As to irrigation districts and companies, see WATERS.

JANITOR.

Liability of employer for acts of. 8-1458 (case p. 1455).

JOINT TENANTS.

Estate by entireties, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

JUDGES.

In general.

Prejudicial error in remarks or conduct of, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Mandamus to, see MANDAMUS.

Assignment by chief justice of judges to hear election contests as contravening constitutional provision that all judicial officers shall be appointed by the governor. 8-1463.

Disqualification; change.

Disqualification of judge by relative's ownership of stock in corporation which is party to action or proceeding. 8-295 (case p. 290).

Prohibition to prevent prejudiced judge from proceeding with case. 8-1238 (case p. 1226).

Interest of judge. 8-1226.

Bias; prejudice. 8-1226.

Change of judge as a change of venue within rule that state is not entitled to change of venue. 8-1226.

Right to change of judge because of prejudice against the state. 8-1226.

Duty of disqualified judge to grant motion to transfer the cause to another judge instead of calling in another judge. 8-290.

JUDGMENT.

In general.

Finality of, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

On appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Waiver of statute or court rule requiring nonresident plaintiff to give security for costs by failure to apply therefor until after judgment. 8-1525.

Effect; conclusiveness.

Pendency of one suit as abatement of another, see ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL.
 Judgment for part of claim as bar to further suit, see ACTION OR SUIT.

On appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Effect of decree for alimony, see DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

— collateral attack.

Collateral attack on appointment of administrator, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Defense in action to remove a fraudulent conveyance from the path of an execution, that claim on which the judgment was entered and on which the execution was issued was invalid or inequitable. 8-523.

— what matters concluded.

Prior action in which claim might have been asserted by counterclaim set-off, or cross petition, as barring or abating subsequent independent action thereon. 8-694 (cases pp. 685, 690).

Effect of judgment against storage warehouse for injury to stored property on right to recover compensation for storage which was not set up as a counterclaim in the first action. 8-685.

— as to parties.

Judgment against seller of chattels for breach of warranty as conclusive upon prior warrantor. 8-667 (case p. 663).

Lien.

Priority as between judgment lien and lien of mortgage, see MORTGAGES.

Equity jurisdiction of suit to enforce lien. 8-435.

Enforcement.

Effect of appointment of receiver for corporation on enforcement of judgment lien. 8-459.

Effect of prayer for accounting to confer jurisdiction upon equity of action to collect unsatisfied judgment the amount of which is certain. 8-435.

Vacation; opening.

Waiver of statute or court rule requiring nonresident plaintiff to give security for costs by failure to apply therefor until after judgment has been opened to permit defendant to plead. 8-1525.

---

JUDICIAL NOTICE.

See EVIDENCE.

---

JUDICIAL POWER.

Encroachment on, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

JUDICIAL SALE.

Injunction against, see INJUNCTION.

Foreclosure of mortgage, see MORTGAGE.

For taxes, see TAXES.

Assumption by purchaser of street railway at judicial sale of obligation of original grantee of franchise to operate the road. 8-242.

---

JURISDICTION.

In general, see COURTS.

On appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Of election contests, see ELECTIONS.

Of equity, see EQUITY.

Retaining, see EQUITY.

---

JURY.

In general.

Prejudicial error as to, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Experiments before jury, see EVIDENCE.

Questions for, see TRIAL.

Admissibility of threats by accused against jury in criminal case. 8-1361 (case p. 1357).

Placing witness in charge of jury. 8-656.

Right to trial by.

Right to jury trial in proceeding for removal of public officer. 8-1476 (case p. 1465).

Trial by jury as essential to due process of law within meaning of the 14th Amendment. 8-1463.

Seventh Amendment in Constitution preserving trial by jury as applicable only to Federal courts. 8-1463.

Election contest as a criminal proceeding within constitutional provision preserving jury trial in such proceedings. 8-1463.

Effect of plea of limitations in action to recover possession of real estate to raise an issue upon which plaintiff is entitled to jury trial. 8-489.

---

JUSTICE.

Guaranty of, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

---

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

Prior action in justice's court in which claim might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as bar to subsequent independent action on such claim. 8-735.

Power to punish for contempt. 8-1548, 1566, 1571, 1572.

Justice of the peace who certifies upon a will the character of the signatures as a witness to the will. 8-1073.

---

JUVENILE COURTS.

Power to punish for contempt. 8-1548.

---

KEROSENE.

See EXPLOSIONS AND EXPLOSIVES.

---

KING'S BENCH.

Power of, to punish for contempt. 8-1570.

---

LABORERS.

Contract laborers, see ALIENS.
In general, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

---

LACHES.

Effect of, to bar action, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

---

LAMP.

Experimental evidence as to injury sustained in attempting to light. 8-40.

---

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

In general.

Relation between railroad and government after roads have been placed under government control as that of landlord and tenant. 8-964.

One working his wife's land by her permission and receiving the proceeds thereof as a tenant at will. 8-595.

Lease.

Oil and gas leases, see MINES.

Property included in a lease of premises described by street number. 8-673 (case p. 669).

Lease of property as ademption or revocation of devise. 8-1638 (case p. 1631).

Parol evidence upon construction of lease. 8-669.

Sufficiency of description of leased property. 8-1335.

—covenants in.

Effect of breach of covenant to repair on liability for personal injury, see infra.

Prior action for rent in which claim for breach of covenant might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as barring subsequent independent action for such breach. 8-709.

Prior action for breach of covenant in which claim for rent might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as barring subsequent independent action for rent. 8-710.

—terms.

Proof of tenancy by sufferancy as variance from election of monthly tenancy. 8-1508.

—termination.

Effect of death of lessee to terminate lease. 8-1142.

Rights and liabilities of parties.

Right of tenant to recover damages from third person for injury to premises. 8-600 (case p. 595).

Option of executor of tenant to take the property or sublet it, or surrender it to landlord. 8-1142.

Right of lessee of house by street number to enjoin erection by landlord of garage on rear of lot. 8-669.

Right of lessee of building by street number to use yard in rear. 8-669.

Right of lessee of house by street number to use of walk leading to alley in rear. 8-669.

Right of tenant at will to recover diminished annual value of property because of lowering of water level. 8-595.

Evidence on question of damages to tenant by lowering of water table under land. 8-595.

—as to fixtures or property on premises.

Tenant's right to recover damages from third person for injury to buildings. 8-609.

Right of tenant to recover damages from third person for injury to crops or grass. 8-605.

—liability of landlord for defective or dangerous premises.

Breach of lessor's covenant to repair as ground of liability for damages for personal injuries to tenant, or one in privity with latter. 8-765 (case p. 760).

Presumption of negligence of landlord from wrecking of building, to injury of employee of tenant, by explosion from unknown cause, where all explosives in the building were under the landlord's control. 8-493.

Rent:

Prior action for rent in which claim for breach of covenant might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as barring subsequent independent action for such breach. 8-709.

Prior action for breach of covenant in which claim for rent might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as barring or abating subsequent independent action for rent. 8-719.

Rent accruing under lease after death of lessee as preferred claim or cost of administration. 8-1146 (case p. 1142).

Re-entry; recovery of possession.

Proof of tenancy by sufferance as variance from allegation of monthly tenancy. 8-1508.

Notice to quit. 8-1508.

LARCENY.

Larceny by false pretenses, see FALSE PRETENSES.

Experimental evidence in prosecution for. 8-40.

Effect of Federal control on liability of employee of carrier who stole property being transported. 8-989.

LAST CLEAR CHANCE.

See NEGLIGENCE.

LAW.

Judicial notice of, see EVIDENCE.

LAW OF THE CASE.

Decision on former appeal as, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

LAW OF THE ROAD.

See NEGLIGENCE.

LAWYER.

See ATTORNEYS.

LEAD PENCIL.

Signature with lead pencil. 8-1339 (case p. 1335).

LEASE.

In general, see LANDLORD AND TENANT. Of railroad, see RAILROADS.

Lease of property as redemption or revocation of devise. 8-1636 (case p. 1631).

LEET.

Power of steward of, to punish for contempt. 8-1571.

LEGACY.

In general, see WILLS.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES.

See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

LEGISLATURE.

Relation of courts to, see COURTS.

Powers.

Delegation of power by, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Power as to courts, see COURTS.

Power as to public service corporations, see PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATIONS.

Validity of statutes, see STATUTES.

Right to recall power delegated to one agency and confer it upon another. 8-916.

LETTERS.

Admissibility in evidence, see EVIDENCE. Failure of addressee to reply to letter as evidence of facts therein stated. 8-1161.

LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION.

See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

LEVEES.

Constitutionality of statute permitting the destruction of hogs found running at large on or near public levees. 8-79.

LEVY AND SEIZURE.

Sale under, see JUDICIAL SALE.

Levy of execution on railroad property under Federal control. 8-988.

LIBERAL CONSTRUCTION.

Of pleading, see PLEADING.

Of statutes, see STATUTES.

LIBRARIES.

Capacity of unincorporated association to act as trustee. 8-904.

LICENSE.

In general.

Partial invalidity of license act. 8-418.

Arbitrary power to refuse license; when conferred. 8-418.

Right to regulate lawful business; test of validity of limitation imposed. 8-418.

— on what business.

Constitutionality of statute or ordinance requiring real estate brokers to procure a license. 8-424 (case p. 418).

Requiring applicant for license as real estate broker to file certificate of good character. 8-418.

Discrimination.

Discrimination as to amount of license fee between real estate brokers and mere salesman in broker's employ. 8-418.

Excepting certain people from statute requiring real estate brokers to secure license. 8-418.

LIENS.

Of attachment, see ATTACHMENT.

Execution liens, see EXECUTION.

Of judgment, see JUDGMENT.

Mechanics' liens, see MECHANICS' LIENS.

Of mortgage, see MORTGAGES.

For storage, see WAREHOUSEMEN.

Right of grantee or transferee to be reimbursed for expenditures in payment of liens on property where conveyance or transfer is in fraud of creditors. 8-527 (case p. 523).

Reversing that part of a judgment which attempts to fix an unauthorized lien on the property of defendant to secure a money judgment and affirming the rest of the judgment. 8-163.

LIFE INSURANCE.

See INSURANCE.

LIFE TENANTS.

As to dower, see DOWER.

Liability of insurance company under policy issued to remaindermen for loss where property had been vacant for a longer period than that provided for in policy. 8-373.

LIGHT.

Experimental evidence as to. 8-49, 55, 57, 58.

LIGHT AND POWER COMPANY.

Conferring power of eminent domain upon. 8-466.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

In general.

Expiration of statutory period for settling an estate as affecting removal of executor or administrator. 8-178.

Limitation of time for deportation of alien. 8-1286 (case p. 1282).

Effect of allegation in complaint to recover possession of real estate as to the time of defendant's possession to bind plaintiff so far as it relates to defendant's plea of limitations. 8-489.

Effect of plea of limitations in action to recover possession of real estate to raise an issue upon which plaintiff is entitled to jury trial. 8-489.

Laches.

Laches as defense to action to recover real estate. 8-489.

When statute runs.

Applicability to limitation prescribed by statute which creates cause of action for death, of exceptions, express or implied, which attach to general statute of limitations. 8-145 (cases pp. 134, 141).

—fraud; concealment.

Applicability to limitation prescribed by statute which creates cause of action for death, of general rule as to effect of concealment of right of action. 8-151.

—suits relating to real property.

Action for damages for imposing additional burden on fee by constructing telegraph line along railroad right of way. 8-1290.

—absence from state.

Applicability to limitation prescribed by statute which creates cause of action for death, of rule tolling the general statute of limitations in case of non-residence. 8-149.

—infancy.

Applicability to limitation prescribed by statute which creates cause of action for death, of rule as to effect of infancy to toll general statute of limitations. 8-150.

When action is barred.

Applicability to limitation prescribed by statute which creates cause of action for death of exceptions, express or implied, which attach to general statute of limitations. 8-145 (cases pp. 134, 141).

Effect of statute authorizing attorney general to sue for recovery of excessive freight charges and permitting shippers to participate in the funds recovered on presentation of their claims to the state on time within which suit by a shipper to recover such overcharges shall be brought. 8-1254.

Interruption of statute; removal of bar.

Applicability to limitation prescribed by statute which creates cause of action for death, of general rule as to right to bring new action after prior failure although limitation period has expired. 8-148.

Amending complaint, after limitation period has expired, so as to come within Federal Employers' Liability Act as changing the cause of action. 8-1405 (case p. 1386).

General acknowledgment or promise in statement addressed to public as removing bar of limitation. 8-1253 (case p. 1254).

Necessity that new promise identify the debt. 8-1254.

Effect of condition in new promise. 8-1254.

---

LINE FENCE.

See FENCES.

---

LIS PENDENS.

Abatement by pendency of action, see ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL.

---

LIVE STOCK.

See ANIMALS.

---

LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

---

LOCOMOTIVES.

Setting of fire by sparks from, see RAILROADS.

Experimental evidence as to amount of light cast by locomotive headlight. 8-57.

---

LOSS.

Proof of loss insured against, see INSURANCE.

---

LYING IN WAIT.

Experimental evidence of impossibility of concealment as negating. 8-56.

---

MACHINES.

Evidence of experiments with. 8-41.

---

MAGISTRATE.

See JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

MAIL.

See POSTOFFICE.

MAINTENANCE.

Agreement for separate maintenance of wife, see DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

MAJORITY.

Power of, in religious societies, see RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

MALPRACTICE.

See PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

MANDAMUS.

To compel trial court to dismiss a pending action and enter a judgment which has been agreed upon between parties. 8-938.

MANSLAUGHTER.

See HOMICIDE.

MANUFACTURER.

Liability for injury due to defects in articles manufactured, see NEGLIGENCE.

MARKS.

Experimental evidence as to distance within which powder burns and marks will be produced by discharge of weapon. 8-41.

MARRIAGE.

As to divorce or separation, see DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

Effect of, to terminate authority of executrix or administratrix. 8-181.

Venereal disease as ground for annulment of marriage. 8-1540 (case p. 154).

Marriage of mother of child to another man as defense to bastardy proceedings. 8-426.

MARRIED WOMEN.

Estoppel of, see ESTOPPEL.

In general, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

MASTER AND SERVANT.

In general.

Presumption as to authority of servant, see EVIDENCE.

Landlord's liability for injury to servants of tenant, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Disregarding testimony of defendant's implicated employees in negligence case. 8-820.

When relation exists.

Liability for negligence of chauffeur furnished with a car hired for an extended period. 8-484 (case p. 480).

For purpose of holding master liable for servant's acts. 8-785, 885.

Compensation; wages.

Validity of statute fixing wages of employee whom theater is compelled to employ for fire protection and forbidding any reduction in his salary. 8-1590.

Discharge.

Measure of damages for discharge, see DAMAGES.

Wrongful discharge of servant—doctrine of "constructive service." 8-338 (case p. 334).

Right to maintain action for debt for wrongful discharge. 8-334.

Successive actions for wrongful discharge. 8-334.

Forbidding discharge of employee whom theater proprietor is compelled to employ for fire protection without approval of the fire commissioners. 8-1590.

Master's liability for injury to servant. Effect of release by employee, see RELEASE.

Recovery under Workmen's Compensation Act for injury to servant, see WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

Liability of master whose negligence causes injury to employee for injury resulting from mistake of surgeon. 8-503.

—Federal employers' liability act.

Amending complaint, after limitation period has expired, so as to come within Federal Employers' Liability Act, as changing the cause of action. 8-1405 (case p. 1386).

Sufficiency of pleading in action under. 8-1386.

Effect of, on common-law liability of railroad for injury to employee in intrastate commerce. 8-1386.

Federal Employers' Liability Act as governing right to recover for injury to employee engaged in interstate commerce. 8-1386.

— assumption of risk.

Assumption by car inspector of negligence of fellow inspector in failing to place blue flag to protect train on which they are working. 8-865.

— contributory negligence.

Disobedience of rules, see infra.

Right of servant to rely upon performance by another of the duty, equally incumbent upon himself, of complying with the "blue flag rule." 8-870 (case p. 865).

Effect of negligence of injured employee on right to recover for injuries to which negligence of a fellow servant contributed. 8-865.

— disobedience of rules.

Right of servant to rely upon performance by another of the duty, equally incumbent upon himself, of complying with the "blue flag rule." 8-870 (case p. 865).

Duty of employees to obey rules issued by railroad company. 8-865.

Negligence of employee in following a custom with respect to interpretation of a rule. 8-865.

— fellow servants.

Assumption of fellow servant's negligence, see supra.

Master's liability for injury of one servant by another in enforcing discipline. 8-1432 (case p. 1426).

Raising defense of fellow servant for first time on appeal. 8-1426.

Question whether fellow servant to whom car inspector delegated the duty of placing blue flag required by rules was the servant of the inspector or of the railroad company. 8-865.

Effect of negligence of injured employee on right to recover for injuries to which negligence of a fellow servant contributed. 8-865.

Use of expression "apparent authority" instead of "implied authority" in instruction in action against master for assault by one employee upon another. 8-1426.

Liability of master for act of superintendent in enforcing obedience to rules where he acts wantonly and recklessly. 8-1426.

Presumption of authority of superintendent to use force to compel obedience to rules. 8-1426.

Assault by superintendent upon servant. 8-1426.

Liability of master for acts of servant.
When relation exists, see supra.

Employment of incompetent, inexperienced, or negligent employee as independent ground of negligence toward one other than an employee. 8-574 (case p. 560).

Liability of employer for acts of janitor. 8-1458 (case p. 1455).

Authority of janitor of apartment building to eject from sidewalk in front thereof children using walk for roller skating. 8-1455.

---

MATERIALITY.

Of evidence, see EVIDENCE.

---

MAYOR.

Power of, to punish for contempt. 8-1573 (case p. 1541).

---

MEANING.

Parol evidence as to, see EVIDENCE.

---

MECHANICS' LIENS.

Prior action on contract in which claim on mechanic's lien might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as bar to subsequent action to foreclose lien. 8-714.

---

MEETINGS.

Of stockholders, see CORPORATIONS.

---

MENTAL CAPACITY.

In general, see INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

---

MILEAGE.

Allowance as costs of mileage within the state of witnesses voluntarily attending, upon request, from another state. 8-11.

MINES.

Recovery under Workmen's Compensation Act for injury to employee in, see WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

Right of lessee under oil lease who contracts to sell to another the gas produced from oil wells on the premises to be used in the manufacture of gasoline to stimulate the flow of oil, although as a result thereof the gas may lose some of its gasoline properties. 8-414.

MINORITY.

Rights of, in religious societies, see RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

MINORS.

See INFANTS.

MISAPPROPRIATION.

By cashier of bank, see BANKS.

MISINFORMATION.

Liability of carrier for giving misinformation to passenger as to running of train. 8-1183 (case p. 1178).

MISNOMER.

See NAME.

MISTAKE.

Of identity, see IDENTITY.

MONOPOLY AND COMBINATIONS.

The Steel Corporation Case and the Sherman Anti-trust Act. 8-1140 (case p. 1121).

Duty of court when asked to dissolve a corporation to consider not what the corporation did or had power to do, but what it now has power to do and is doing. 8-1121.

Refusal to dissolve corporation where court cannot see that public interests will be served by so doing. 8-1121.

Validity of holding corporation which unites under one control competing companies but does not check monopoly. 8-1121.

MORTGAGE.*In general.

Right of grantee or transferee to be reimbursed for expenditures in payment of mortgage on property where conveyance or transfer is in fraud of creditors. 8-527 (case p. 523).

Effect of appointment of receiver for corporation on mortgage lien. 8-460.

Excepting trustee selling under deed of trust from statute requiring real estate brokers to secure licenses as discrimination against other trustees. 8-418.

Effect of prior law imposing conditions and limitations upon mortgages. 8-435.

Priority.

Priority of lien of judgment for personal injuries over prior mortgage under statute giving such lien priority over judgments, executions, and attachments levied upon the property. 8-435.

Foreclosure.

Power of court to authorize discontinuation of public service corporation upon foreclosing mortgage upon its plant. 8-238 (case p. 232).

Right to bring action against corporation or prosecute pending action as affected by the appointment of receiver in a mortgage foreclosure proceeding against the corporation. 8-453.

Prior action in equity in which claim for foreclosure might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as bar to independent action for foreclosure. 8-719.

Prior action for foreclosure in which claim might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as bar to subsequent action on such claim. 8-720.

Appointment in one state of receiver pendente lite in foreclosure proceedings as affecting pending suit in a court of another state to recover damages for personal injuries. 8-435.

— sale.

Sale under power in mortgage or trust deed as affected by inadequacy of price. 8-1001 (case p. 999).

Effect on validity of sale of absence of bidders other than a representative of the mortgagee. 8-999.

Liability for damages.

Liability for injury on defective bridge, see BRIDGES.

Liability for injury on defective highway, see HIGHWAYS.

MOTIONS AND ORDERS.

Raising question for consideration on appeal by motion, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

What constitutes abatement of motion to revive. 8-163.

Setting aside order to revive action in name of personal representative of plaintiff because of irregularities in procuring it as a final determination of the right to revive. 8-163.

What constitutes final determination of right to revive action which will prevent further action on motion to revive. 8-163.

MOTOR.

Evidence as to test of. 8-41.

MOTORMAN.

Negligence of, in operation of street car, see STREET RAILWAYS.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

In general.

As to local self-government, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

License from, see LICENSE.

Municipal courts, see MUNICIPAL COURTS.

Validity as against municipality having an interest in the net earnings of street railway company and an option to purchase the railway of order of Public Service Commission as to schedules, routes, and type of cars. 8-916.

Ordinances.

Effect of violation of, see VIOLATION OF LAW.

Validity of ordinances as to animals, see ANIMALS.

Power as to licenses, see LICENSE.

Constitutionality of ordinance requiring proprietor of place of amusement to furnish fire or police protection at his own expense. 8-1638 (case p. 1590).

When ordinance is in conflict with statute. 8-690.

MUNICIPAL COUNCIL.

See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

MUNICIPAL COURTS.

Power of, to punish for contempt. 8-1562.

MURDER.

See HOMICIDE.

NAME.

Of corporation, see CORPORATIONS.

Effect of misnomer of state institution on validity of isolation order. 8-831.

Names McPherson and McPherson as idem sonans. 8-1357.

NATIONAL BANKS.

Power to obligate itself to operate a street or interurban railroad. 8-242.

NATURAL GAS.

In mines, see MINES.

NECESSITY.

Easement by, see EASEMENTS.

Works of, on Sunday, see SUNDAY.

NE EXEAT.

Power to issue writ of ne exeat to prevent decree for alimony from becoming ineffective. 8-327 (case p. 325).

How functions of writ are to be ascertained. 8-325.

NEGLIGENCE.*In general.As to bridges, see BRIDGES.As to elevators, see ELEVATORS.Presumption and burden of proof as to, see EVIDENCE.Relevancy of evidence as to, see EVIDENCE.Sufficiency of proof of, see EVIDENCE.As to condition of highway, see HIGHWAYS.Bar of Statute of Limitations, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.Of master or servant, see MASTER AND SERVANT.Of physician or surgeon, see PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.As to proximate cause of injury, see PROXIMATE CAUSE.Of public accountant, see PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS.In operation of railroad train, see RAILROADS.Release from damages for injury by, see RELEASE.Liability of one causing personal injury for consequences of negligence, mistake, or lack of skill of physician or surgeon. 8-506 (case p. 503).

Sufficiency of complaint based on negligence to sustain judgment based on fraud. 8-1023.

General rule as to basis of liability for negligence. 8-351.

Dangerous agencies.As to explosives, see EXPLOSIONS AND EXPLOSIVES.As to fires, see FIRES.As to gas, see GAS.—Liability of manufacturer or seller.

Liability of manufacturer for injury due to defects in articles manufactured. 8-1023.

Liability of manufacturer of automobile to purchaser from middleman for injury from defects in car. 8-1023.

Dangerous premises.Liability of landlord for, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.Liability of former owner of real estate because of a violation of statute or ordinance relating to condition of premises. 8-356 (case p. 351).

Liability of former owner for injury due to failure to make installation of a gas heater comply with municipal ordinance. 8-351.

On highway.In operation of automobile, see AUTOMOBILES.Injury at railway crossing, see RAILROADS.

Ordinance prescribing which of two vehicles crossing intersecting streets shall have the right of way as in conflict with statute fixing right of way in case of vehicles turning into one street from another. 8-690.

Contributory negligence.Of person injured by defect in highway, see HIGHWAYS.Of employee, see MASTER AND SERVANT.On street car track, see STREET RAILWAYS.—last clear chance.In case of injury by street car, see STREET RAILWAYS.

Necessity of knowledge of one accused of negligence as to the peril of person injured to bring into operation doctrine of last clear chance. 8-569.

NEW PROMISE.To interrupt Statute of Limitations, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.NEW TRIAL.Raising question for review on appeal by motion for, see APPEAL AND ERROR.NISI PRIUS.

Power of court of, to punish for contempt. 8-1570.

NONOCCUPANCY.Of insured property, see INSURANCE.NONRESIDENTS.Running of limitations in favor of nonresidents, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Succession tax on bonds of domestic corporation owned by estate of nonresident and held at his residence. 8-363 (case p. 355).

Waiver of statute or court rule requiring nonresident plaintiff to give security for costs. 8-1510 (case p. 1505).

NONSUPPORT.Of wife, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

NOTARY PUBLIC.

Power of, to punish for contempt.
8-1574.

NOTICE.

Necessity of, to constitute due process of law, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.
Of stockholders' meeting, see CORPORATIONS.
Of fraud in conveyance, see FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.
To insurance company, estoppel by, see INSURANCE.
Before forfeiture of insurance policy, see INSURANCE.
To tenant to quit, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.
Necessity of, to bring into operation doctrine of last clear chance, see NEG-LIGENCE.
Sufficiency of, to confer jurisdiction, see WRIT AND PROCESS.
Imputing to street railway company knowledge of presence of person on track. 8-569.

NUISANCES.

Right of tenant to recover damages from third person for injury to premises by nuisance. 8-611.
Liability of former owner of real estate because of a violation of statute or ordinance relating to condition of premises. 8-356 (case p. 351).
Constitutionality of statutes providing for confiscation on destruction, without notice, of intoxicating liquors, and vehicles or other property used in connection with same, on theory of nuisance. 8-888.
Effect of fact that nuisance existed at time of execution or renewal of lease on right of tenant to recover damages from third person for injury by nuisance. 8-614.

NUMBER.

Street number, see STREET NUMBER.

OBJECTIONS.

To raise question on appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.
In general, see TRIAL.

OBSTRUCTION.

Of water, see WATERS.
Of view of train, experimental evidence as to. 8-55.

OCCUPANCY.

Of insured property, see INSURANCE.

OCCUPATION TAX.

See LICENSE.

ODORS.

Permitting jury personally to test odor.
8-18.

OFFICERS.

In general.
Taking of acknowledgment by, see AC-KNOWLEDGMENT.
Of private corporations generally, see CORPORATIONS.
Presumption and burden of proof as to acts of, see EVIDENCE.
As to judges, see JUDGES.
Free passes to public officials or em-ployees. 8-682 (case p. 679).
Right to hold office as property within meaning of the 14th Amendment. 8-1463.
Eligibility to office.
Providing disqualification for office and disfranchisement only for successful candidates for public office who are guilty of corrupt practices. 8-1463.
Disqualification for office of one guilty of corrupt practices. 8-1463.

Term; expiration.

Expiration of term of office as terminat-ing authority of officer to act as ad-ministrator. 8-182.

Resignation or removal.

Resignation of officer as terminating his authority to act as administrator. 8-182.

Right to jury trial in proceeding for re-moval of public officer. 8-1476 (case p. 1463).

Who should bring suit for forfeiture of office. 8-679.

OFFSETS.

In general, see SET-OFF AND COUNTER-CLAIM.

OIL.

As to oil mines, see MINES.

OPENION.

As evidence, see EVIDENCE.

ORAL CONTRACTS.

In general, see CONTRACTS.

ORAL EVIDENCE.

As to writing, see EVIDENCE.

ORDER OF PROOF.

See TRIAL.

OSCILLATION.

Experimental evidence as to oscillation of hanging scaffold. 8-41.

OSTEOPATHS.

Osteopath as a physician within meaning of statute in relation to vital statistics. 8-1070 (case p. 1066).

Constitutionality of separate classification of osteopaths and regular physicians. 8-1066.

Validity of statute denying to osteopaths right to furnish birth and death certificates. 8-1066.

OWNERSHIP.

Allegations as to, see PLEADING.

PARENT AND CHILD.

Presumption as to paternity of child, see EVIDENCE.

As to infants generally, see INFANTS.

Right of children of an adopted child to take the share which the parent would have taken under a will if he had survived the testator. 8-1012 (case p. 1010).

Right of man to take life in defense of his son. 8-656.

PAROL CONTRACTS.

In general, see CONTRACTS.

PAROLE.

Of one convicted of crime, see CRIMINAL LAW.

PAROL EVIDENCE.

As to writing, see EVIDENCE.

PARTIAL INVALIDITY.

Of contract, see CONTRACTS.

Of statutes, see STATUTES.

Of tax assessment, see TAXES.

PARTICULARS.

Bill of, see PLEADING.

PARTIES.

To deed, description of, see DEEDS.

Who is affected by judgment, see JUDGMENT.

Description of parties in pleading, see PLEADING.

Plaintiffs.

Action by attorney general, see ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Defendants.

Liability of state to suit, see STATE.

Liability of United States to suit, see UNITED STATES.

Order of director general of railroads under Federal control, requiring actions for injuries to passengers to be brought against the director general and not against the carriers. 8-959.

Substitution.

Substitution of parties on appeal. 8-964.

PARTNERSHIP.

Liability of corporate stockholders as partners, see CORPORATIONS.

Prior action for accounting or to settle partners' affairs in which adverse claim might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as bar to subsequent independent action on such claim. 8-788.

Effect of entry by husband and wife into partnership with entirety funds to change the character of the estate. 8-1014.

Effect of conveyance of real estate to a partnership in the name of which only the surname of one partner is mentioned. 8-489.

PASSENGER CARRIERS.

See CARRIERS.

PASSES.

Validity of pass issued by carrier, see CARRIERS.

PAYMENT.

Making paper payable to agent as charging drawer with loss due to agent's misappropriation. 8-304 (case p. 298).

Authority of agent to receive payment for commodities which he is authorized to sell, or for which he is to find market. 8-208 (cases pp. 192, 198).

Custom or previous dealing as imposing an obligation upon a party to a contract to accept something else in payment in lieu of cash. 8-1268 (case p. 1264).

Instruction that law presumes that money paid by one person to another was due to the latter. 8-298.

When payment sent by mail is effected. 8-391.

Burden of proof as to authority of agent to receive payment. 8-192.

Payment to authorized agent as discharging indebtedness although he misappropriates the money. 8-198.

Rule that one paying a note to an agent without demanding the note does so at his risk. 8-298.

Effect of fact that owner assists agent in making a sale to destroy the agent's authority to collect the purchase money. 8-198.

Payment to lessee of a mill who is authorized to market stock on hand when it is finished. 8-196.

PEACE OFFICER.

Recovery under Workmen's Compensation Act for death of or injury to peace officer employed in private plant. 8-190 (case p. 187).

PENALTIES.

Constitutionality of discrimination as regards degree of penalty for violation of Sunday Law. 8-566 (case p. 563).

PENDENCY.

Of action to abate suit, see ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL.

PENDENTE LITE.

Termination of authority of administrator pendente lite by termination of litigation. 8-180.

PERFORMANCE.

Of contract, see CONTRACTS.

PERJURY.

Relief against award of arbitrators obtained by perjury. 8-1088.

PERSONAL INJURIES.

By animal, see ANIMALS.

By automobile, see AUTOMOBILES.

On bridge, see BRIDGES.

Evidence in action for, see EVIDENCE.

By explosion, see EXPLOSIONS AND EXPLOSIVES.

On highway, see HIGHWAYS; NEGLIGENCE.

To insured, see INSURANCE.

Landlord's liability for, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

To employee, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

Proximate cause of, see PROXIMATE CAUSE.

On leased railroad, see RAILROADS.

Release from liability for, see RELEASE.

In general, see NEGLIGENCE.

Admission in action for, of experimental evidence as affected by similarity or dissimilarity of conditions. 8-18 (case p. 1).

Effect of bill of particulars on proof in action for. 8-555.

Priority of lien of judgment for personal injuries over prior mortgage under statute giving such lien priority over judgments, executions, and attachments levied upon the property. 8-435.

Appointment in one state of receiver pendente lite in foreclosure proceedings as affecting pending suit in a court of another state to recover damages for personal injuries. 8-435.

PERSONAL PROPERTY.

Sale of, see SALE.

Estate by entirety in. 8-1017 (case p. 1014).

PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES.

See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

PHOTOGRAPHS.

Admissibility in evidence, see EVIDENCE. As to X-ray pictures, see X-RAY.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

In general.

Who is a physician or surgeon within statute in relation to vital statistics. 8-1070 (case p. 1066).

Constitutionality of separate classification of osteopaths and regular physicians. 8-1066.

Negligence; malpractice.

Liability of one causing personal injury for consequences of negligence, mistake, or lack of skill of physician or surgeon. 8-506 (case p. 503).

Liability of master whose negligence causes injury to employee for injury resulting from mistake of surgeon. 8-503.

Effect of release by injured employee of his employer to release a surgeon from liability for operating on the wrong side of the injured person. 8-503.

PIPE LINE COLLARS.

Experimental evidence as to nonconformity to standard. 8-41.

PISTOL.

See FIREARMS.

PLEADING.

Evidence admissible under, see EVIDENCE. Variance between pleading and proof, see EVIDENCE.

In criminal case, see INDICTMENT, ETC.

Construction.

Liberal construction of answer not attacked by pleadings to uphold judgment based upon it. 8-1170.

Conclusions.

Allegations of negligence resulting in personal injuries which are in effect mere conclusions of law. 8-493.

Defects waived or cured.

Submission on agreed statement of facts or on agreed case as waiver of defect in pleading. 8-1172 (case p. 1170).

Effect of statements of counsel in argument or statements in affidavits to cure lack of material averments in pleading. 8-290.

Bill of particulars.

Effect of bill of particulars on proof. 8-550 (case p. 544).

Relief under pleadings.

Refusal of court to consider irregularities charged against assessment which are not alleged in the petition. 8-660.

Sufficiency of complaint based on negligence to sustain judgment based on fraud. 8-1023.

Effect of excessive prayer for relief. 8-595.

Admissions.

Effect of allegation in complaint to recover possession of real estate as to the time of defendant's possession to bind plaintiff so far as it relates to defendant's plea of limitations. 8-489.

Effect on implied admission in complaint for destroying a division fence that it was on or near the line of the denial in the reply that the fence was on the defendant's property. 8-1641.

Amendments.

Amendment as affecting limitation of action, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Amendment to include additional items of injury. 8-544.

Striking out.

Effect of motion to strike out pleading upon its legal sufficiency. 8-79.

Declaration or complaint.

Sufficiency of description of petitioners in election contest to show their right to vote for the officers whose election is contested. 8-1463.

Effect of recital that a judge had stated that he had disposed of all his stock in a corporation as an allegation of the fact of his ownership. 8-290.

Action to recover under Federal Employers' Liability Act for injury to servant. 8-1386.

Pleas and answer.

Construction of answer, see supra.

Waiver of statute or court rule requiring nonresident plaintiff to give security for costs by failing to apply therefor until after answer. 8-1512, 1530.

— what must be pleaded.

Defense that acts causing injury were not those of defendant railroad company but the acts of the director general of railroads. 8-964.

Reply.

Effect of denial in reply on admissions in complaint, see supra.

Demurrer.

Demurrer to evidence, see TRIAL.

Waiver of statute or court rule requiring nonresident plaintiff to give security for costs by failing to apply therefor until after demurrer. 8-1512, 1520.

Right to consider facts not stated in the petition, although pertinent to its prayer, in considering a cause upon demurrer to the petition. 8-290.

Effect of overruling of demurrer to declaration on motion for directed verdict at close of evidence. 8-351.

POCKETBOOK.

Experimental evidence as to possibility of removal of, through out in cases. 8-40.

POLICE.

Free passes to. 8-682 (case p. 679).
Constitutionality of statute or ordinance requiring proprietor of place of amusement to furnish police protection at his own expense. 8-1028 (case p. 1590).

POLICE COURTS.

Power to punish for contempt. 8-1564, 1572.

POLICE POWER.

See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

POLITICAL OPINIONS.

As ground for disbarment or suspension of attorney, see ATTORNEYS.

POSSESSION.

Right of tenant not in possession to recover damages from third person for injury to premises. 8-630.

POSTOFFICE.

Sending payment by mail; when effected. 8-391.

POWDER.

In general, see EXPLOSIONS AND EXPLOSIVES.

POWDER BURNS AND MARKS.

Experimental evidence as to. 8-41.

POWER COMPANY.

Conferring power of eminent domain upon. 8-466.

POWER OF ATTORNEY.

Excepting from statute requiring real estate brokers to secure licenses, person holding a duly executed power of attorney from the owner. 8-418.

POWERS.

Foreclosure under, see MORTGAGE.

As to power of attorney, see POWER OF ATTORNEY.

---

PREJUDICE.

Disqualification of judge by, see JUDGES.

---

PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

See APPEAL AND ERROR.

---

PREMIUMS.

Insurance premiums, see INSURANCE.

---

PRESIDENT.

Of corporation, powers of, see CORPORATIONS.

Judicial notice of proclamations of President. 8-964.

---

PRESUMPTIONS.

In general, see EVIDENCE.

---

PRICES.

Conspiracy to control, see MONOPOLY AND COMBINATIONS.

---

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

As to brokers, see BROKERS.

As to agents of corporation, see CORPORATIONS.

When relation exists.

Real estate broker as agent of property owner in fixing prices. 8-1377.

Employee of broker as subagent of owner of property. 8-1377.

Agent's authority; liability of principal.

Power of corporate agent, see CORPORATIONS.

Presumption and burden of proof as to authority of agent, see EVIDENCE.

Power of insurance agent to estop company, see INSURANCE.

Imputing agent's knowledge to insurance company, see INSURANCE.

Authority of agent to receive payment, see PAYMENT.

General rule as to. 8-198.

Agent of real estate broker as acting within the scope of authority in naming to customer price fixed by broker as lowest price for which property can be had. 8-1377.

— agent's fraud or wrong.

Making paper payable to agent as charging drawer with loss due to agent's misappropriation. 8-304 (case p. 298).

Payment to authorized agent as discharging indebtedness although he misappropriates the money. 8-198.

Throwing loss upon principal who has clothed his agent with apparent authority where he or another innocent person must suffer. 8-198, 298.

Liability of real estate broker who benefits by misrepresentations of his agent as to lowest sale price of property. 8-1377.

Liability of agent.

Liability of agent for shrinkage or shortage in commodity purchased for principal. 8-1120 (case p. 1116).

Liability of agent of real estate broker to customer for charging him in good faith an excessive price for the property named to him by the broker. 8-1377.

---

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

Surety on bail bond, see BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

Liability on executor's or administrator's bond, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Obligee's concealment of facts or evasive answers as fraud against surety. 8-1485 (case p. 1477).

---

PRIORITY.

Of claims against decedent, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Of mortgage, see MORTGAGE.

---

PRIVATE BUSINESS.

Carrying on of theater or place of amusement as. 8-1590.

PRIVILEGE TAX.

See LICENSE.

PRIVITY.

Between seller or manufacturer and person injured, see NEGLIGENCE.

PROBATE.

Of will subsequently discovered as effecting removal of administrator. 8-177.

PROBATE COURTS.

Power to punish for contempt. 8-1551.

PROCEDURE.

In eminent domain proceeding, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

For removal of officers, see OFFICERS.

PROCESS.

See WRIT AND PROCESS.

PROCLAMATIONS.

Judicial notice of, see EVIDENCE.

PROHIBITION.

Prohibition to prevent prejudiced judge from proceeding with case. 8-1288 (case p. 1286).

Fact that jurisdiction of appeals in equity case is vested in a particular court as prohibiting another court from taking jurisdiction of proceeding to prohibit a trial court from proceeding to hear an equity cause. 8-290.

Prohibition to prevent court taking jurisdiction because subpoena was made returnable later than the date prescribed by statute where tribunal before which the proceeding is pending had not passed upon that objection. 8-1468.

PROMISE.

As affecting limitation of actions, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

PROOF OF LOSS.

See INSURANCE.

PROPERTIES OF SUBSTANCES.

Experimental evidence as to. 8-45.

PROPERTY.

Destruction or forfeiture of, without notice, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Condemnation of, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

Right to hold office and to vote as property within the meaning of the 14th Amendment. 8-1463.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS.

See DISTRICT AND PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS.

PROSPECTIVE DAMAGES.

See DAMAGES.

PROSTITUTION.

Limitation of time for deportation of alien prostitute. 8-1288.

PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Liability of one causing personal injury for consequences of negligence, mistake, or lack of skill of physician or surgeon. 8-506 (case p. 503).

Intervening act of child as affecting question of proximate cause of damage to the person or property of third person by fire or explosion. 8-1250 (case p. 1243).

Negligence in permitting ground along switch track to become saturated with gasoline as proximate cause of loss from fire caused by boys throwing lighted matches into the gasoline. 8-1248.

Misinformation to passenger as to time of departure of train, as a result of which he misses it, as proximate cause of discomfort and inconvenience endured during automobile trip to his destination. 8-1178.

PUBLIC.

Recovery under Workmen's Compensation Act for injury to workman representing public. 8-1064 (case p. 1058).

General acknowledgment or promise in statement addressed to public as removing bar of limitation. 8-1258 (case p. 1254).

PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS.

Liability of public accountant. 8-463 (case p. 461).

PUBLIC LANDS.

As to rights of creditors in homestead on, see HOMESTEAD.

Enlarged Homestead Acts of 1909 and 1910. 8-635 (case p. 631).

PUBLIC OFFICERS.

See OFFICERS.

PUBLIC POLICY.

As affecting contract, see CONTRACTS.

PUBLIC PURPOSE.

Justifying exercise of right of eminent domain, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS.

In general.

Delegation of power to, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Effect of act of Congress conferring upon Interstate Commerce Commission authority to compel interstate railroads to provide shipping facilities for shippers tendering interstate shipments to deprive Public Service Commission of jurisdiction to require such road to furnish such facilities to shipper offering intrastate commerce. 8-155.

Power of Public Service Commission to change rates specified in the water certificates for water furnished by irrigation company. 8-249.

Sufficiency of title of statute conferring upon Commission power to require additions, repairs, or improvements to or changes in existing plant or facilities of public utility. 8-466.

Sufficiency of rehearing upon his application to protect one not made a party to a proceeding which results in an order affecting his interests. 8-916.

Right to test reasonableness of order of Commission in proceeding to enjoin its enforcement. 8-916.

Effect of interest of municipality in, or option to purchase, street railway on authority of the Public Service Commission over the company. 8-916.

Power of legislature to confer on Commission control of the schedules, routing, and style of cars of street railway company. 8-916.

Review of findings of.

Refusal of courts to review findings of fact by Commission based on evidence. 8-155.

Review by courts of finding of Commission that a corporation whose rates it attempts to regulate is a public utility. 8-249.

PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATIONS.

Power over, of Public Service Commission, see PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS.

Service of process on, see WRIT AND PROCESS.

See also CARRIERS; RAILROADS; STREET RAILWAYS; WATERS.

Power and duty of bank which has acquired a public service plant to continue its operation. 8-248 (case p. 242).

Power of court to authorize discontinuation of public service corporation upon foreclosing a mortgage on its plant. 8-228 (case p. 232).

Irrigation company as a public utility. 8-268 (case p. 249).

Federal control of public utilities. 8-969 (cases pp. 959, 964).

What necessary to constitute a public utility through the devotion of property to public use. 8-249.

Sufficiency of title of statute conferring upon public service corporations power of eminent domain. 8-466.

Power of legislature to regulate and control. 8-916.

Regulation of public utilities in exercise of police power. 8-916.

Supervision of public utilities as impairing obligation of contract. 8-916.

PUBLIC UTILITIES.

See PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATIONS.

RUBBER WATER SERVILE.

See WATERS.

PUNISHMENT.

For crime, see CRIMINAL LAW.

PURPOSE.

Relevancy of evidence as to, see EVIDENCE.

QUALIFICATIONS.

Of judge, see JUDGES.

For office generally, see OFFICERS.

QUARANTINE.

Regulations as to, generally, see HEALTH.

Power to provide for, under general delegation of power to guard against spread of contagious disease. 8-836, 889 (case p. 881).

QUARTER SESSIONS.

Power to punish for contempt. 8-1571.

QUEEN'S BENCH.

Power to punish for contempt. 8-1570, 1571.

QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

See TRIAL.

QUIETING TITLE.

See CLOUD ON TITLE.

RAILROAD COMMISSION.

See PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS.

RAILROADS.

In general.

For all questions involving the duty and liability of a railroad company as a carrier to its patrons or the public, or governmental control of railroad companies, see CARRIERS.

Abandonment of operation of, see CARRIERS.

Condemnation of property for, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

Additional servitude on railroad right of way, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

Rights and duties as to employees, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

Suit against railroad owned by or in which interest is held by United States or state. 8-995 (case p. 990).

Priority of lien of judgment for personal injuries over prior mortgage under statute giving such lien priority over judgments, executions, and attachments levied upon the property. 8-435.

Lease.

Liability of company leasing its property to another for the latter's negligent acts. 8-964.

Injuries to persons on or near track.

Injury to employee, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

Experimental evidence as to possibility of seeing persons on or near track. 8-52.

Accidents at crossing.

Experimental evidence in action for injury at crossing. 8-46.

Injuries to animals by trains.

Experimental evidence as to possibility of seeing live stock on railroad track. 8-55.

Disregarding uncontradicted testimony of defendant's employees in action for killing stock by railroad train. 8-823.

Fires.

Experiments to show that cinders of sparks may be larger than meshes of spark arrester. 8-46.

RAILROAD TIE.

Experimental evidence as to possibility of brakeman stepping upon, in swinging from car. 8-46.

RATES.

Of carriers, see CARRIERS.
Irrigation rates, see WATERS.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS.

See BROKERS.

REAL PROPERTY.

Adverse possession of, see ADVERSE POSSESSION.
Evidence of damage to, see DAMAGES.
Dedication of, see DEDICATION.
As to deeds, see DEEDS.
Dower, see DOWER.
Estoppel as to, see ESTOPPEL.
Rights of husband and wife in, see HUSBAND AND WIFE.
Mortgage on, see MORTGAGE.
Of partnership, see PARTNERSHIP.
Of religious societies, see RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.
Devise of, see WILLS.

REASONABLE DOUBT.

Doctrine of, in criminal case, see EVIDENCE.
Instructions as to, see TRIAL.

REASONABLENESS.

Of order of Public Service Commission, see PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSIONS.

RECEIVERS.

Right to bring action against corporation, or prosecute pending action, as affected by the appointment of a receiver for the corporation. 8-441 (case p. 435).

RECOGNITION.

Experimental evidence as to possibility of recognition of person by flash of gun or pistol. 8-51.

RECOGNIZANCE.

See BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

RECORDS AND RECORDING LAW.

On appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.
Registration of births and deaths, see VITAL STATISTICS.

REDUCTION.

Of damages, see DAMAGES.

RE-ENTRY.

By landlord, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

REFERENCE.

Conclusiveness on appeal of findings by referee, see APPEAL AND ERROR.
As to arbitration, see ARBITRATION.

Power of referee to punish for contempt. 8-1575.

REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

Transfer to equity of action to recover possession of real estate on ground that reformation of deed is necessary, in absence of pleading showing defect in deed and prayer for equitable relief. 8-489.

Necessity of reformation of tax deed because of error in the name of the clerk of court in the certificate of acknowledgment. 8-489.

REFRIGERATING SYSTEM.

Experimental evidence as to inflammability of gases generated by explosion of. 8-46.

REIMBURSEMENT.

Of grantee or transferee for expenditures in payment of taxes or encumbrances on property where conveyance or transfer is in fraud of creditors. 8-527 (case p. 528).

REINSTATEMENT.

Of insured, see INSURED.

RELEASE.

Of surety on bail bond, see BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

Experimental evidence as to effect of release of brake to make car jump forward. 8-46.

Effect of release by injured employee of his employer to release a surgeon from liability for operating on the wrong side of the injured person. 8-503.

RELEVANCY.

Of evidence, see EVIDENCE.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

Determination by the civil courts of property rights between contending factions of an independent or congregational church. 8-105 (cases pp. 98, 102).

Preference to certain religious denominations by failure to extend prohibition against intoxicating liquor to that used for sacramental purposes. 8-874.

Necessity that religious society establish its corporate capacity in order to maintain action to quiet title to the church property. 8-98.

Parol evidence as to purpose for which property was conveyed to religious society. 8-102.

REMAINDERMEN.

See LIFE TENANTS.

REMOVAL.

Of executor or administrator, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Of officer, see OFFICERS.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

Change of venue, see VENUE.

Effect of Federal control of public utility on removal of cause to Federal court. 8-988.

RENT.

In general, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

REPAIRS.

Liability of landlord for personal injury caused by failure to repair, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.

REPEAL.

Of statutes, see STATUTES.

REPETITION.

Of instructions, see TRIAL.

REPLEVIN.

Recovery of shipment by replevin against carrier under Federal control, 8-988.

REPLY.

In general, see PLEADING.

REPORTS.

Effect of a report made by an officer of a corporation as an account stated which precludes the corporation from denying its accuracy. 8-478.

REPRESENTATIONS.

By insured, see INSURANCE.

RES GESTÆ.

See EVIDENCE.

RESIDENCE.

See DOMICIL.

RESIGNATION.

Of executor or administrator, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.
Of officer, see OFFICERS.

RES IPSA LOQUITUR.

See EVIDENCE.

RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR.

See MASTER AND SERVANT.

RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

See MONOPOLY AND COMBINATIONS.

RESTRICTED RESIDENCE DISTRICT.

Power to create, under power of eminent domain. 8-585.
Sufficiency of title of statute creating restricted residence districts in cities of first class under power of eminent domain. 8-585.

RETAINING JURISDICTION.

By equity, see EQUITY.

REVERSIBLE ERROR.

See APPEAL AND ERROR.

REVERSION.

Right of tenant to recover damages from third person for injury to the reversion. 8-620.

REVIVAL.

Of action, see ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL.

REVOCATION.

Of submission to arbitration, see ARBITRATION.
Of letters of administration, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.
Of legacy, see WILLS.

REVOLVERS.

See FIREARMS.

RIPARIAN OWNERS.

Rights of, generally, see WATERS.

RISK.

Insured against, see INSURANCE.
Assumption of, by employee, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

ROBBERY.

Taking property from the person by stealth as robbery. 8-359 (case p. 357).

Definition of robbery. 8-357.
Force as essential element of crime of robbery. 8-357.

ROLLER SKATING.

Ejection of children using sidewalk for roller skating. 8-1455.

RULES.

Of court, see COURT RULES.
Disobedience of, by servant, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

Master's liability for injury of one servant by another in enforcing rules. 8-1432 (case p. 1426).

RUNNING.

Possibility of hearing noise made by person in running. 8-16.

RUNNING AT LARGE.

Of animals, see ANIMALS.

SACRAMENTAL WINES.

Failure to extend prohibition against intoxicating liquor to that used for sacramental purposes. 8-874.

SALE.

In general.
Judicial sale, see JUDICIAL SALE.
On foreclosure, see MORTGAGE.
Seller's liability for injury by defects in articles sold, see NEGLIGENCE.
Sale for taxes, see TAXES.

Obligee's concealment of facts or evasive answers as fraud against surety in bond for performance of contract of sale. 8-1593.

Experimental evidence in action between parties to sale. 8-46.

Prior action for breach of contract in which counterclaim for purchase price might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as barring or abating subsequent action for purchase price. 8-709.

Admissibility of parol evidence as to amount of commodity specified in written contract of sale. 8-747 (case p. 745).

Custom or previous dealing as imposing an obligation on seller to accept something else in lieu of cash. 8-1268 (case p. 1264).

Necessity that one who offers scrap iron which he has accumulated for sale, deliver the estimated quantity, when estimate of quantity is made by agent of buyer. 8-745.

Conditional sale.

Right to retain title to property sold where note is given for purchase price. 8-789.

Effect of suit upon note taken for purchase price of property sold with retention of title for security, on the security. 8-789.

Warranty.

Judgment against seller of chattels for breach of warranty as conclusive upon prior warrantor. 8-667 (case p. 663).

Prior action by seller in which claim for breach of warranty might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as barring or abating subsequent independent action for such breach. 8-706.

Right of remote vendee to benefit of warranty by original vendor. 8-663.

SALESMEN.

Discrimination as to amount of license fee between a real estate broker and a mere salesman in his employ. 8-418.

SANITY.

See INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

SAW.

Experimental evidence as to throwing of wood by. 8-47.

SCAFFOLD.

Experimental evidence as to safety of. 8-47.

SCRAP IRON.

Necessity that one who offers scrap iron, which he has accumulated for sale, deliver the estimated quantity, when estimate of quantity is made by agent of buyer. 8-745.

SEAMEN.

Liability of owner of vessel for injury of one servant by another in enforcing discipline. 8-1436.

SEARCH AND SEIZURE.

Seizure of property without notice to owner, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Right to seize property under general delegation of power to guard against spread of contagious disease. 8-840.

SECOND APPEAL.

See APPEAL AND ERROR.

SECRET COMMISSION.

Obligee's concealment of, as fraud against surety. 8-1505.

SECURITY.

For costs, see COSTS AND FEES.

SEEING.

See VISIBILITY.

SELF-DEFENSE.

Commission of homicide in, see HOMICIDE.

SELF-GOVERNMENT.

Local self-government, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

SENTENCE.

For crime, see CRIMINAL LAW.

SEPARATION.

See DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

SERVANTS.

See MASTER AND SERVANT.

SERVICE.

Of writ, see WRIT AND PROCESS.

SERVITUDE.

Additional servitude, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

Prior action in which claim might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as barring or abating subsequent independent action thereon. 8-694 (cases pp. 685, 690).

SETTLEMENT.

See COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT.

SEX DISCRIMINATION.

Constitutionality of statute as affected by discrimination in punishment for same offense based upon sex. 8-884.

SHERIFFS.

Compensation under Workmen's Compensation Act for death of deputy sheriff employed in private plant. 8-187.
Contract by sheriff for free pass on railroad. 8-679.

Who should bring suit against sheriff for forfeiture of his office. 8-679.

SHERMAN ANTI-TRUST ACT.

See MONOPOLY AND COMBINATIONS.

SHIPS.

Where wrecked vessel taxable. 8-663 (case p. 660).

SHOOTING.

See FIREARMS.

SHORTAGE.

Liability of agent for shortage in commodity purchased for principal. 8-1120 (case p. 1116).

SHOT.

Experimental evidence as to scattering of shot. 8-47.

SHOT FIRER.

Shot firer in mine representing miners as an employee of the owner within meaning of Workmen's Compensation Act. 8-1058.

SHOTGUNS.

See FIREARMS.

SHRINKAGE.

Liability of agent for shrinkage in commodity purchased for principal. 8-1120 (case p. 1116).

SICKNESS.

Release of bail by confinement of principal by illness. 8-363.

SIDEWALK.

Liability of abutting owner for injury due to defects in, see HIGHWAYS.

SIGNAL.

Experimental evidence as to visibility of. 8-56.

SIGNATURE.

To writing required by Statute of Frauds, see CONTRACTS.
Of attesting witness, see WILLS.

SILENCE.

Estoppel by, see ESTOPPEL.

SIMILARITY.

Experimental evidence as affected by similarity or dissimilarity of conditions. 8-18 (cases pp. 1, 11).

SITUS.

For purpose of taxation, see TAXES.

SKATING.

See ROLLER SKATING.

SMALLPOX.

As to compulsory vaccination, see HEALTH.

SMELLS.

See ODORS.

SOUNDS.

Experimental evidence as to possibility of hearing. 8-48.

SPACE.

Experimental evidence as to. 8-48.

SPARK ARRESTERS.

See RAILROADS.

SPARKS.

From railway locomotive, see RAILROADS.

SPEAKING.

Experimental evidence as to possibility of overhearing conversation. 8-48.

SPECIAL LEGISLATION.

See STATUTES.

SPEED.

Opinion evidence as to, see EVIDENCE.

Experimental evidence as to. 8-48.

STABILITY.

Experimental evidence as to. 8-48.

STAINS.

Experimental evidence as to. 8-48.

STALE DEMAND.

See LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

STATE.

Right of state to change of venue, see VENUE.

Suit against railroad owned by or in which interest is held by state. 8-995.

Change of judge because of prejudice against the state. 8-1226.

STATE COURTS.

Power to punish for contempt. 8-1549.

STATE'S ATTORNEY.

See DISTRICT AND PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS.

STATISTICS.

Vital statistics, see VITAL STATISTICS.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

See CONTRACTS.

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

See LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

STATUTES.

In general.

Charter of corporation, see CORPORATIONS.

Review of, by courts, see COURTS.

Judicial notice of, see EVIDENCE.

Effect of violation of, see VIOLATION OF LAW.

Definition of supplemental act. 8-631.

Validity generally.

Validity of statutes on various particular subjects, see those subjects.

Presumption and burden of proof as to validity, see EVIDENCE.

Right to declare law void because unnecessary or inexpedient. 8-65.

Partial invalidity. 8-418, 1590.

Entitling; expression of subject.

Effect of constitutional provision to prohibit passage of act containing provisions not fairly embraced in the title. 8-466.

Sufficiency of title indicating a single general subject where statute contains many provisions diverse but not inconsistent with the general subject. 8-466.

Statute conferring upon Commission power to require additions, repairs, or improvements to or changes in existing plant or facilities of public utility. 8-466.

Statute conferring upon public service corporations power of eminent domain. 8-466.

Statute creating restricted residence districts in cities of first class under power of eminent domain. 8-585.

Plurality of subjects.

Effect of constitutional provision to prohibit passage of act relating to different subjects embraced in the title. 8-466.

Local or special legislation.

Conferring power upon the head of one department to fix the salaries of his assistants, which power is not conferred upon the heads of other departments. 8-418.

Construction.

Construction of statutes relating to particular subjects, see those subjects.

Rule that express mention of one thing implies the exclusion of other similar things. 8-435.

Term "wilful" in statute providing punishment for desertion of wife. 8-1312.

— strict or liberal construction.

Workmen's Compensation Act. 8-930, 1058.

Repeal; amendment.

Implied repeal by Negotiable Instruments Act of statute invalidating instrument given for gambling consideration. 8-314 (case p. 309).

Amending statute by adding new provisions. 8-631.

Intention of Congress as determining whether act of Congress is or is not an amendment. 8-631.

STEAM.

Experimental evidence as to time necessary to raise, in boiler. 8-46.

STEEL CORPORATION.

The Steel Corporation Case and the Sherman Anti-trust Act. 8-1140 (case p. 1121).

STEP.

Experimental evidence on action for injury involving. 8-49.

STOCKHOLDERS.

See CORPORATIONS.

STOPPING TRAIN.

Experimental evidence as to distance within which train could be stopped. 8-49.

STORAGE.

See WAREHOUSEMEN.

STONE.

Experimental evidence as to possibility of seeing into, from street. 8-49.

STRAT.

Experimental evidence as to possibility of accidental strangling by. 8-49.

STREET LAMPS.

Experimental evidence as to amount or conditions of light given by. 8-49.

STREET NUMBER.

Property included in a lease of premises described by street number. 8-673 (case p. 669).

STREET RAILWAYS.

In general:

Abandonment of operation of, see CARRIERS.

As to interurban railways, see INTERURBAN RAILWAYS.

Power of national bank to obligate itself to operate. 8-242.

Assumption by purchaser of street railway at judicial sale of obligation of original grantor of franchise to operate the road. 8-242.

Retaining jurisdiction for purpose of authorizing the owner of the road to discontinue its operation where equity has taken jurisdiction for purpose of enforcing the performance of a contract to operate a street railroad. 8-242.

Power of legislature to confer on Public Service Commission control of the schedules, routing, and style of cars of street railway company. 8-916.

Effect of option of municipality to purchase street railway on authority of the Public Service Commission over the company. 8-916.

Negligence in operation.

As to injury to passenger on street car, see CARRIERS.

Experimental evidence in action for injury on street railway track. 8-49 (case p. 1).

Imputing to 'street railway' company knowledge of presence of person on track. 8-569.

Sufficiency of proof of incompetency or inexperience of street car operatives. 8-569.

Effect of employment of incompetent operators on liability for injury to person asleep on track. 8-569.

Application of doctrine of 'last clear chance.' 8-569.

STREETS.

See HIGHWAYS.

STRICT CONSTRUCTION.

Of statutes, see STATUTES.

STRIKING OUT.

Of pleading, see PLEADING.

SUBMISSION OF CONTROVERSY.

On agreed statement of fact, see AGREED CASE.

To arbitrators, see ARBITRATION.

SUBPOENA.

SUBSCRIBING WITNESS.

To will, see WILLS.

SUBSTITUTION.

Of parties, see PARTIES.

SUBSURFACE WATERS.

See WATERS.

SUCCESSION TAX.

See TAXES.

SUCCESSIVE SUITS.

See ACTION OR SUIT.

SUCTION.

Experimental evidence as to suction of passing trains. 8-49.

SUFFRAGE.

Right of, see ELECTIONS.

SUICIDE.

Experimental evidence bearing upon question of. 8-49.

SUMMONS.

See WRIT AND PROCESS.

SUNDAY.

Constitutionality of discrimination as regards degree of penalty or punishment for violation of Sunday Law. 8-566 (case p. 563).

Application of Sunday laws to attorneys. 8-1356 (case p. 1353).

Power of legislature under police power to impose penalty for violation of Sunday Law. 8-563.

Validity of Sunday Law imposing upon barbers a more severe penalty for working on Sunday than that imposed by the General Sunday Act. 8-563.

Power of legislature to provide that keeping barber shops open on Sunday is not work of necessity. 8-563.

Effect of performance of some work by attorney on Sunday on his right to recover for retainer and work done on secular days. 8-1353.

SUPERIOR COURTS.

Power of, to punish for contempt. 8-1558.

SUPERVISION.

Of bank, see BANKS.

SUPPLEMENTAL ACT.

Definition of. 8-681.

SUPPLEMENTARY PROCEEDINGS.

Power of referee in, to punish for contempt. 8-1576.

SUPPORT.

Of wife, see DIVORCE AND SEPARATION; HUSBAND AND WIFE.

SURROGATE COURTS.

Power to punish for contempt. 8-1551.

SUSPENSION.

Of attorney, see ATTORNEYS.
Of insurance, see INSURANCE.

SWITCH.

Experimental evidence as to distance at which switch could be seen. 8-56.

TAKING.

Of private property for public use, what constitutes, see EMINENT DOMAIN.

TAX DEED.

See TAXES.

TAXES.

In general.

Injunction against, see INJUNCTION.
As to license generally, see LICENSE.

Right of grantee or transferee to be reimbursed for expenditures in payment of taxes on property where conveyance or transfer is in fraud of creditors. 8-527 (case p. 523).

Where taxable.

Where wrecked vessel taxable. 8-663 (case p. 660).

Assessments.

Refusal of court to consider irregularities charged against assessment which are not alleged in the petition. 8-660.
 Partial invalidity of assessment. 8-792.

Sale; deed.

Effect of error in name of clerk of court in certificate of acknowledgment by him to tax deed. 8-489.

Succession tax.

Succession tax on bonds of domestic corporation owned by estate of nonresident and held at his residence. 8-868 (case p. 855).

The succession and not the thing inherited as the subject of tax. 8-855.

TELEGRAPHS.

Right and measure of compensation to owner of fee when telegraph or telephone line is erected along railroad right of way or highway. 8-1292 (case p. 1299).

TELEPHONES.

Proof of telephone conversations, see EVIDENCE.

Conversion by telephone as false pretense. 8-656 (case p. 652).

TEMPORARY ADMINISTRATOR.

Issuance of regular letters of administration as effecting removal of temporary administrator. 8-179.

TENANTS.

See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

TERMINATION.

Of lease, see LEASE.
 Of trust, see TRUST.

TERM.

Of tenant, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.
 Of office, see OFFICERS.

TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY.

See WILLS.

TESTATORS.

See WILLS.

THEATERS.

Constitutionality of statute or ordinance requiring proprietor of theater to furnish fire or police protection at his own expense. 8-1628 (case p. 1590).

Carrying on of theater as a private business. 8-1590.

Partial invalidity of statute for protection of theater employees. 8-1590.

Fixing wages of employees whom theater proprietor is compelled to employ for fire protection, forbidding any reduction in his salary, and forbidding his discharge without approval of the fire commissioners. 8-1590.

THREATS.

Admissibility of, in evidence, see EVIDENCE.

TIME.

For deportation of alien, see ALIENS.

For meeting of stockholders, see CORPORATIONS.

*Experimental evidence as to. 8-35, 59.
 Judicial notice of coincidence of the days of the week with the days of the month. 8-63 (case p. 59).*

Liability of carrier for giving misinformation to passenger as to time of departure or arrival of train. 8-1186 (case p. 1178).

Time at which right to discharge from arrest is to be determined. 8-750.

From which will takes effect. 8-1010.

TITLE.

Of statute, see STATUTES.

Prior action to determine title to real property in which adverse claim might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as bar to subsequent independent action on such claim. 8-731.

TOBACCO.

Liability of one contracting to purchase tobacco for another for shrinkage in weight of tobacco bought. 8-1116.

TORTS.

As to limitation of time for action for, see LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Master's liability for, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

Liability of United States for, see UNITED STATES.

Effect of bill of particulars on proof in action for tort. 8-554 (case p. 544).

Prior action on contract in which claim in tort might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as barring or abating subsequent independent action for the tort. 8-712.

Prior action in tort in which claim on contract might have been asserted by set-off, counterclaim, or cross petition as bar to subsequent independent action on contract. 8-714.

Prior action in equity in which claim in tort might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as bar to subsequent action in tort. 8-717.

Prior action for possession in which claim in tort might have been asserted by counterclaim, set-off, or cross petition as bar to subsequent action in tort. 8-720.

TOWNS.

Liability for injury on defective bridge, see BRIDGES.

Liability for injury on defective highway, see HIGHWAYS.

TRADE.

Combinations in restraint of, see MONOPOLY AND COMBINATIONS.

TRAINS.

Injury by, see RAILROADS.

TRANSFER.

Between law and equity, see EQUITY.
Of cause, see REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

TRANSFER TAX.

See TAXES.

TRANSFORMER.

Experimental evidence as to condition of. 8-51.

TREES.

Right of tenant to recover damages from third person for injury to. 8-608.

TRIAL.

In general.

Submission on agreed statement of facts, see AGREED CASE.

Continuance, see CONTINUANCE AND ADJOURNMENT.

Judicial notice by court or jury, see EVIDENCE.

Matters as to jury, see JURY.

As to witnesses, see WITNESSES.

Placing witness in charge of jury. 8-656.

Reception of evidence.

Order of proof. 8-477.

Statements and argument of counsel.

Sufficiency of statements of counsel in argument to cure lack of material averments in pleading. 8-290.

Objections and exceptions.

Consideration of, on appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Failure to object to predicate question propounded to accused as estopping him from objecting to admission of testimony which is immaterial. 8-1857.

Remarks of court.

Prejudicial error in, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Submitting case to jury generally.

Effect of claim by counsel that uncontradicted testimony is not true to require submission of the case to the jury. 8-789.

Questions of law or fact.

Credibility of testimony of uncontradicted witness. 8-801.

Question for jury as to whether firearm used as a bludgeon is a deadly weapon. 8-1821.

Weight of evidence as question for jury. 8-874.

Question whether suspicions of drawer of check to order of bank cashier to take up note payable to the bank were, or should have been, aroused by fact that cashier made demand at drawer's place of business for a check payable to himself. 8-298.

Direction of verdict.

Direction of verdict for party on contradicted evidence in his favor. 8-302 (case p. 789).

Effect of overruling of demurrer to declaration on motion for directed verdict at close of evidence. 8-351.

Demurrer to evidence.

General rule as to how evidence should be treated upon demurrer thereto. 8-318.

Instructions.

Necessity for exceptions, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Prejudicial error as to, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Refusal of appellate court to review rulings as to instructions where evidence does not appear in the record. 8-59.
Repetition of. 8-1034.

— on evidence and facts.

Instruction on question of fact. 8-298.
Instruction that law presumes that money paid by one person to another was due to the latter. 8-298.

Presumption of innocence in criminal case. 8-1034.

Weight or amount of evidence. 8-1034.

Credibility of witness. 8-1034.

Reasonable doubt. 8-1034.

— correctness of instructions.

Prejudicial error as to instructions, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

As to presumption and burden of proof in case of injury to passenger. 8-163.

Use of expression "apparent authority" instead of "implied authority" in instruction in action against master for assault by one employee upon another. 8-1426.

As to measure of care owed by carrier to passenger. 8-1687.

In prosecution for homicide. 8-1034.

As to effect of intoxication at time of trial. 8-1034.

Verdict.

Direction of verdict, see supra.

Review of verdict on appeal, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

Prejudicial error as to, see APPEAL AND ERROR.

TRUCK.

Conversion by cashier of bank, see BANKS.

Conversion by telephone as false pretense. 8-656 (case p. 652).

TRUCK.

Experimental evidence as to speed of. 8-51.

TRUST DEEDS.

See MORTGAGE.

TRUSTEES.

In general, see TRUSTS.

TRUSTS.

In general.

Monopolistic trusts, see MONOPOLY AND COMBINATIONS.

Excepting trustee selling under deed of trust from statute requiring real estate brokers to secure licenses as discrimination against other trustees. 8-418.

Termination.

Termination of trust of personal representative, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Trustees.

Capacity of trustee in charitable gift, see CHARITIES.

Right of trustee to accumulate income under will or other instrument directing him to, see it. 8-915 (case p. 904).

Charging trustees of fund with costs, for awaiting the judgment of the court in dispute as to beneficiary. 8-904.

Right of trustees of fund, income of which is to be used for benefit of association, to expend the income themselves instead of turning it over to the association. 8-904.

TUBERCULOSIS.

Constitutionality of statute or ordinance providing for destruction of cow affected with. 8-79.

UNCHASTITY.

See CHASTITY.

UNDERGROUND WATERS.

See WATERS.

UNIFORMITY.

Of license tax, see LICENSE.

UNINCORPORATED ASSOCIATIONS.

See ASSOCIATIONS.

UNITED STATES.

Suit against railroad owned by or in which interest is held by United States. 8-995 (case p. 990).

Liability for tort committed by officers in discharge of their official duties. 8-990.

UNLIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

Prior action in justice's court in which claim for unliquidated damages might have been asserted by set-off, counterclaim, or cross petition as bar to subsequent independent action on such claim. 8-738.

USAGE.

See CUSTOM AND USAGE.

USURY.

Obtainer's concealment of, as fraud against surety. 8-1505.

VACANCY.

Of insured property, see INSURANCE.

VACCINATION.

Requirement as to, generally, see HEALTH.

VARIANCE.

See EVIDENCE.

VEHICLES.

Constitutionality of statute providing for confiscation or destruction, without notice, of vehicles used in connection with intoxicating liquors. 8-886 (case p. 874).

VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

As to deeds, see DEEDS.

As to fraudulent conveyances, see FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

Rights and duties of purchasers at judicial sale, see JUDICIAL SALE.

Sale for taxes, see TAXES.

Liability of former owner of real estate because of a violation of statute or ordinance relating to condition of premises. 8-356 (case p. 351).

VENEREAL DISEASE.

As ground for divorce or annulment of marriage. 8-1540 (case p. 1534).

Sufficiency of proof of communication of, by husband to wife. 8-1534.

Conclusiveness on court of finding of health officer that person is infected with. 8-831.

Validity of ordinance and rules of board providing for isolation of men infected with. 8-831.

VENUE.

In general.

What constitutes venue. 8-1226.

Power of legislature to require all election contests to be tried in one county. 8-1463.

Change of.

Change of judge as a change of venue within rule that state is not entitled to change of venue. 8-1226.

VERDICT.

See TRIAL.

VESSEL.

Where wrecked vessel taxable. 8-663 (case p. 660).

VIBRATION.

As occasioning fall of object, experimental evidence as to. 8-51.

VIEW.

See VISIBILITY.

VIOLATION OF LAW.

Liability of former owner of real estate because of a violation of statute or ordinance relating to condition of premises. 8-356 (case p. 351).

VISIBILITY.

Experimental evidence as to. 8-51.

VITAL STATISTICS.

Who is a physician or surgeon within meaning of statute in relation to vital statistics. 8-1070 (case p. 1066).

Right of legislature to determine method to be employed in obtaining. 8-1066.
Validity of statute denying to osteopaths right to furnish birth and death certificates. 8-1066.

VOLUNTARY DISMISSAL.

See DISMISSAL OR DISCONTINUANCE.

VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.

See ELECTIONS.

WAGERS.

Validity of wagering contract, see CONTRACTS.

WAGES.

In general, see MASTER AND SERVANT.

WAIVER.

Of defects in pleading, see PLEADING.

Waiver of privilege against, or nonliability to, arrest in civil action. 8-752 (case p. 750).

Waiver of statute or court rule requiring nonresident plaintiff to give security for costs. 8-1510 (case p. 1508).

Effect of statute on. 8-750.

WALKING.

Experimental evidence as to time necessary to cover given distance. 8-58.

WAR.

Service of government in war time as excuse for refusal of carrier to furnish shipping facilities to individual. 8-155.

WAREHOUSEMEN.

Effect of setting up lien for storage in action for conversion of property stored to render judgment denying the lien res judicata of right to recover compensation for the storage. 8-685.

Effect of judgment against storage warehouse for injury to stored property on right to recover compensation for storage which was not set up as a counterclaim in the first action. 8-685.

WARRANTY.

On sale of personalty, see SALE.

WATER.

See also WELLS.

Water rights as between individuals. Existence of common law as to riparian rights. 8-636.

—accretions.

Right to follow accretions across division line previously submerged by action of water. 8-640 (case p. 636).

—obstruction.

Liability for injury by bursting of dam; duty to provide against floods. 8-544.

—subterranean waters.

Right of tenant at will to recover diminished annual value of property because of lowering of water level. 8-595.

Public water supply.

Water company as a public service corporation. 8-249.

Conferring power of eminent domain upon water company. 8-466.

—irrigation companies.

Irrigation company as a public utility. 8-268 (case p. 249).

Power of corporation which has sold real estate and undertaken to furnish water for its irrigation to declare itself a public utility and submit to jurisdiction of Public Service Commission. 8-249.

Effect of declaration in charter of water company which has sold land under contract to supply it with water for irrigation, that it is organized inter alia to supply the inhabitants of towns with water, as constituting a dedication of its property to a public use. 8-249.

Increasing rates for water for irrigation to those having easement in the system for the supplying of their quantum of water as an unauthorized taking of private property for public use. 8-249.

Changing rates fixed in water certificates as impairment of obligation of contract. 8-249.

Power of Public Service Commission to change rates specified in the water certificates for water furnished by irrigation company. 8-249.

---

WEAPONS.

Deadly weapon, see DEADLY WEAPONS.

---

WELLS.

Experimental evidence as to condition of water in. 8-58.

Comparison of water from different wells. 8-59.

---

WIDOW.

Dower of, see DOWER.

Election by, between legacy and dower, see WILLS.

WILLS.

In general.

Parol evidence as to, see EVIDENCE.

Matters concerning executors and administrators, see EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Tax on gifts by, see TAXES.

Creation of trust by will, see TRUSTS.

Annulment of, as effecting removal of executor or administrator. 8-177.

Right of children of an adopted child to take the share which the parent would have taken under a will if he had survived the testator. 8-1012 (case p. 1010).

Right of unincorporated association to take property given it by will. 8-904.

When will takes effect. 8-1010.

Execution; attestation.

Experimental evidence as to possibility of testator seeing and hearing attesting witnesses. 8-59.

Character as witness of one who signed will for another purpose. 8-1075 (case p. 1073).

In what attestation of will consists. 8-1078.

Revocation.

Revocation of devise or legacy, see infra.

Who may make; capacity.

Effect of guardianship of adult on testamentary capacity. 8-1375 (case p. 1370).

Degree of mental capacity. 8-1370.

Probate.

Parol evidence as to meaning of will, see EVIDENCE.

Description of beneficiaries; who may take.

Parol evidence as to intent of testator. 8-904.

Lawful heirs. 8-1010.

Election.

Effect of statute providing that no devise or bequest to a surviving spouse shall be treated as adding to the right secured to such survivor unless it clearly appears that such was testator's intent to put the spouse to an election. 8-1631.

Ademption; revocation.

Lease of property as ademption or revocation of devise. 8-1638 (case p. 1631).

WITNESSES.*In general.

Opinions and conclusions of, see EVIDENCE.
To will, see WILLS.

Allowance as costs of mileage within the state of witnesses voluntarily attending upon request from another state. 8-11.

Placing witness in charge of jury. 8-656.
Intentionally getting drunk a material witness for the adversary as ground for revocation of arbitration agreement. 8-1081.

Competency.

Statute rendering witness incompetent because of death of other person as applicable to latter's mental condition. 8-1097 (case p. 1091).

Impeaching; discrediting.

Experimental evidence as to possibility of witness having heard sounds or conversation to which he testified. 8-59.

Contradiction on immaterial matter. 8-1357.

Credibility.

As to discrediting witness, see supra.

Disregarding uncontradicted testimony in civil actions. 8-796 (cases pp. 785, 789, 792).

Rule that one calling a witness certifies to his credibility. 8-785.

Credibility of witness where facts demonstrate falsity of testimony. 8-792.

Instructions as to. 8-1034.

WORDS AND PHRASES.

Also. 1014.

Approaches. 8-1280 note.

Capital. 8-1348.

Capital crime. 8-1348.

Free pass. 8-679.

General agent. 8-192.

Laborer. 8-1442 note.

Liberty. 8-1590.

Master. 8-1590.

Real estate broker. 8-418.

Robbery. 8-357, 359 note.

Supplemental act. 8-631.

Venue. 8-1226.

Wilful. 8-1312.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.*In general.

Insolvency of insurer or employer; as affecting liability for compensation. 8-1846 (case p. 1842).

Construction of act generally.

Liberal construction. 8-1058.
Resolving doubt as to right to recover in favor of the employee or his dependents. 8-930.

Review of decisions.

Finding that injured person was not an employee of the one from whom compensation is sought. 8-1058.

Who are employees.

Workman representing employees, or public. 8-1064 (case p. 1008).

Review of finding of commissioners that injured person was not an employee. 8-1058.

What injuries are within provisions of act.

Compensation for loss or impairment of eyesight within Workmen's Compensation Acts. 8-1324 (case p. 1322).

Injury while making delivery as arising out of and in the course of employment. 8-935 (case p. 930).

Compensation for death of or injury to peace officer employed in private plant. 8-190 (case p. 187).

Liberal interpretation of provisions as to injury "arising out of and in the course of employment." 8-930.

Effect on right of employee to recover of fact that the public is exposed to the same hazard as that out of which the injury arose. 8-930.

Injury by dog bite while one employed to deliver packages is making a delayed delivery before beginning of working hours. 8-930.

Who entitled to compensation.

Effect of divorce on right of spouse or child to compensation. 8-1118 (case p. 1110).

WORKS OF NECESSITY AND CHARITY.

On Sunday, see SUNDAY.

WOUNDS.

Experimental evidence as to. 8-59.

WRIT AND PROCESS.

Estoppel to claim exemption from arrest.
8-750.

Service on corporation.

Effect of Federal control of public utilities on service of process. 8-987.

Privilege.

X-RAY.

Waiver of privilege against or nonliability to arrest in civil action. 8-754 (case p. 750).

Admissibility of X-ray photograph as affected by similarity or dissimilarity of conditions. 8-59.

---

Heavy italic type is used for annotations; roman type for cases.

